HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SECOND SESSION—TWENTY SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

16 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME III, 1967

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY FIFTH DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1967, TO THE TWENTY FIFTH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1967, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1967

27053—152½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 25, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

MESSAGE OF CONGRATULATIONS FROM UGANDA AND JAMAICA NATIONAL ASSEMBLIES

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that during the recess I received from the national assemblies of Uganda and Jamaica a message and resolution extending congratulations to Canada on the occasion of our centennial.

VACANCIES

Mr. Speaker: I also have the honour to inform the house that the following vacancies have occurred in the representation:

Of Cyril F. Kennedy, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Colchester-Hants, by resignation.

Of Hon. John Whitney Pickersgill, member for the electoral district of Bonavista-Twillingate, by resignation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF ALISTAIR FRASER AS CLERK

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that the governor general in council has appointed Alistair Fraser, Esquire, B.A., LL.B. as Clerk of the House in the place of Léon-J. Raymond, Esquire, O.B.E., LL.B., retired.

THE LATE HON. GUY FAVREAU

EXPRESSIONS OF REGRET ON PASSING OF FORMER MINISTER

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with leave of the house I should like to call attention, and I do it with great sadness, to the fact that since this house adjourned in July one of our former colleagues who, as the house knows, had resigned a few weeks earlier because of ill health, has passed away. I refer to Hon. Guy Favreau, as fine and great hearted a man, as unselfish and sincere a patriot as I have ever known in my public life. He was a man with no trace of meanness or pettiness, a big man in every sense of the word. Mr. Favreau made great sacrifices to serve, in parliament and in politics, a country he loved. He worked untiringly and unselfishly at the expense first of ill health and ultimately of his life. Our country can ill spare men of his kind, especially at this time in our history.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of this party I wish to say to the Prime Minister through you that we join in the sympathies which have been extended to the family of the late Mr. Favreau. I also wish to say that in my opinion he served his country well on the treasury benches of this parliament. He was one of those men who endeavoured to bring about unity in this country and played an important part in its ultimate success. We all miss him, and we wish to extend our deepest sympathy to the members of his family.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I would like to associate ourselves with the Prime Minister in expressing our deep and profound regret at the passing of a former member of this house, Mr. Favreau. It was only a few months ago when he was elevated to the bench that we bade him farewell and expressed our appreciation of his services to this country. We little thought at that time that he would soon pass from amongst us.

I should like to place on record our great admiration for the qualities he displayed in his public life, and to express the hope that you, Mr. Speaker, will convey to the members of his family our sincere condolences at the great loss they have suffered, as well as the great loss that all Canada has suffered in the passing of a man who gave so much to the service of his country.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I join the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the representatives of the various parties in the house in expressing our deepest sympathy to the family of the Hon. Guy Favreau.

Those who had the pleasure of knowing the hon. Mr. Favreau knew that he put the interests of the Canadian people far above those of political partisanship. For this reason, I think we must recognize that the Hon. Guy Favreau was a great Canadian and that both his family and the Canadian parliament have suffered a great loss.

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like very briefly to say that we also share in the sorrow that has been expressed over the passing of a man who I believe was one of the most congenial and friendly individuals in the House of Commons. We also join in the expressions of sympathy to his family.

[Translation]

Mr. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this house will appreciate how much I wish to endorse the words spoken by the Prime Minister and members of opposition parties in their eulogy of the man I had the very great privilege of serving for almost three years and whom I replaced as member for Papineau.

Hon. Guy Favreau entered politics at a difficult period in the history of his country. Need I recall that bombs were exploding in Quebec at the time? But Mr. Favreau firmly believed in Canadian unity; he served his country and his fellow citizens with conviction and courage. Unfortunately, his devotion to duty exceeded his physical strength.

It is fitting that this house, which was not always gentle with him, pay today to that great Canadian the last tribute he well deserved.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OLSON—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGE IN PARTY AFFILIATION

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to inform you, sir, that due to a number of actions and subsequent developments since the last sitting of this house I have resigned from this group in the house. Further I wish to advise you that I have made application to join, and have been accepted by, that group in this house who support the government.

I should also like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for all the courtesies you have shown to me in the past, and I hope you will be able to see me from time to time on the other side of the house.

[Mr. Caouette.]

THE MINISTRY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES DURING RECESS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house of certain changes in the ministry since the house recessed on July 7.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill has submitted his resignation as Minister of Transport and has taken up new duties in the public service as president of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Hon. Paul Hellyer has been appointed Minister of Transport. Hon. Léo Cadieux, the former associate minister of national defence, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Hellyer as Minister of National Defence. Hon. Allan MacEachen, the house leader on this side, has been assigned ministerial responsibilities for the Atlantic Development Board.

I have recommended to His Excellency that Mr. Charles Granger, who resigned today as minister of Labrador affairs in the Newfoundland government, be appointed at this time as a member of the administration without portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFERENCES TO RETIREMENT OF OPPOSITION LEADER AND CABINET CHANGES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to call attention to the fact that there is one vacancy in the house today, though only a temporary one, that is very much in our minds. The place occupied in the House of Commons by the Leader of the Opposition is for the moment unfilled, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert has relinquished that post and his successor has not yet entered parliament.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to say much about the right hon. gentleman who sat directly opposite me for some years, because he remains a member of this house and will be back with us shortly to exercise that influence on our debates and proceedings which has made him for so many years a powerful and dynamic parliamentary personality. If I said more, Mr. Speaker, it might sound too much like a valedictory, and that impression I certainly do not wish to create.

It will I confess, Mr. Speaker, be passing strange for me, and indeed for all of us, not to see the right hon. gentleman rise first on orders of the day and with transfixing gaze and minatory gesture launch a penetrating question to the selected target on this side, usually me.

As to the hon. gentleman who has been chosen as successor to the right hon. member for Prince Albert as leader of his party, I have already conveyed to him—and I repeat them here—my personal congratulations and good wishes. I wish him health and strength as he faces the great responsibilities of his very important office. While we both have duties to perform which will bring us often and no doubt vigorously into opposite sides of debate and discussion, I am encouraged to think that as Canadians with the same objective of service to our country we will be able to co-operate to the maximum possible extent in respect of matters which are above partisan politics.

Mr. Herridge: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), now sitting opposite me, who has been chosen as Acting Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: He is an old friend and a doughty foe. We on this side—and I am sure this is true of members of the house on whatever side they may sit—appreciate his quiet, sincere and effective service to his party, to parliament and to his country. In short, he is a good man and a fine public servant.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: There is also, as I have already indicated, a gap in the ranks on this side as a result of the resignation of Jack Pickersgill from the House of Commons. He also, if I may put it in this way, was a Rupert of debate and a devoted and dynamic man of the Commons. I have known him almost from the beginning of my appearance on the Ottawa scene and I have always had a very great admiration for his ability, his loyalty and his encyclopaedic knowledge—I shall certainly miss that. Indeed, I shall miss him greatly as will all members on this side of the house and, I think, of the house as a whole. He was a stimulating and stirring parliamentarian, and while a staunch party man he never allowed his friendships to be limited by party considerations. Perhaps the house will give me permission to table the exchange of letters which took place between Mr. Pickersgill and myself on his resignation and allow that exchange to appear today as an annex to Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of documents referred to above, see appendix.]

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): First I wish to thank the Prime Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, for his kind words toward me; I hope the things he has said about me will continue to apply in the future—with his co-operation.

His announcement of the decision of the former member for Bonavista-Twillingate to leave the treasury benches does, of course, represent a loss not only to the Liberal party but to the House of Commons and to this institution of parliament. He was a very articulate member of this house; he was well versed in its procedure and, particularly in opposition, he was at times devastating. His notable career in the service of a former prime minister is known to all of us as well as to the people of this country. He even tried his talents in the fields of law and of authorship. I am sure he will be as greatly missed on this side of the house, as he will be by the government and its supporters. We wish him well in his new position.

As far as the other changes are concerned, we only hope that the former minister of national defence who is moving to the Department of Transport as minister will not try to bring about another unification measure there. As for the new Minister of National Defence, we wish him well. He is well thought of in this House of Commons and I feel sure that at the helm of national defence he will prove a great asset to his department. To the leader of the house we extend our good wishes as he undertakes new duties in addition to those which already fall within his responsibility.

I am sure all members on this side of the house are grateful to the Prime Minister for his words about our former leader, the right hon. member for Prince Albert. It is hoped on this side of the house that he will remain in the ranks of the Commons so that his wisdom, energy and experience of parliament will not be lost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: I am sure if our new leader were in his place at this moment he would express gratitude to the Prime Minister for his good wishes. However, I wish to bring to the attention of the house that our new leader is in the gallery now, watching with a great deal of interest the proceedings in this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: He is a man of integrity, thoughtfulness and reason, one who has projected his image in a most acceptable way in Canada, and the members of this party in this chamber as well as throughout Canada are looking forward to his entry into the House of Commons as soon as possible. I must say emphatically that we are all united behind him to form an effective and forceful opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister has commented on changes of personnel in the government and House of Commons which will undoubtedly have far reaching repercussions on the political life of this country.

I am sure all of us are pleased at the honour which has been given to hon. Mr. Pickersgill in his appointment as chairman of the Canadian Transportation Commission. I think it was Senator Chubby Power who said that a member of parliament could only get out of politics in one of two ways, either by dying or by being defeated, and the first was so final and the second so humiliating. However, Mr. Pickersgill has managed to find a third way. It is not every member who can write his own ticket or draft the bill for his own final haven of rest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: I only hope that not too many other ministers will try to emulate him in that regard, but we wish him well in the high post to which he has been appointed.

We also wish the other new ministers, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux), well in the responsibilities which they are now assuming. The appointment of Mr. Granger as Minister without Portfolio will cause some disappointment to those from the province of Newfoundland who had hoped one of the present members of the house would be selected for that post, but I have no doubt the Prime Minister has very sound reasons for the decision he has taken.

It would not be appropriate at this time to make any comment about the former leader of the opposition because, like the Prime Minister, I do not want anything I say to sound like a valedictory. We are all hoping he will continue in the house. I think we will all agree that the fact he is no longer leader of the opposition will make this a much less interesting and colourful place, but we do hope he will continue to occupy his seat and give the house the benefit of his long experience.

I would like to congratulate the Acting Leader of the Opposition and to say how pleased we are that this honour has been conferred upon him by his party. From experience we know he will discharge his responsibilities with great ability and with conscientiousness. Of course I would remind him of the old slogan "Big Brother is watching you."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: He will, of course, be expected to conduct himself according to the party's strategy.

With reference to the new leader of the Conservative party, may I say I hope we will have the opportunity of welcoming him into the house before too long, and at that time we will be able to express our appreciation of the work he has done and to extend our congratulations on the honour which has been conferred upon him by the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we wish sincerely to congratulate the new appointees to the federal departments made public over the week-end. As the right hon. Prime Minister, we regret the departure of the former leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. John Diefenbaker) whom we have all learned to know in various ways in this chamber.

In fact, the hon. member for Prince Albert has been in this house for many years. Personally, I came to know him when I was a very young member, in 1947, that is, 20 years ago. At the time, the former leader of the opposition was only 52. He was then already a determined fighter, a hard worker as he has shown himself to be throughout his political life.

Everyone agrees that he brought colour to parliament and he was a true leader. He had his own opinions, he sought to make them known, to have them understood, and mostly to make them prevail as much as he could.

Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member for Prince Albert has, within the house and outside, set an example of hard work. He had the courage of his convictions and of his opinions. He did not fear to express them before anyone.

The Prime Minister was perfectly right when he said a while ago that the hon. member for Prince Albert was a dynamic parliamentarian. Surely, he made charges and he was even accused of obstruction in the House of Commons. To a certain extent, it was also true. On the other hand we always knew what he thought and we always knew what he intended to do to convince the House of Commons that he was right. That does not imply that we all supported him. Far from it, we have fought him and we shall probably fight him again as much and as long as he is sitting in this house. But, as far as the leader of the opposition is concerned, we must recognize that he had great qualities as a leader.

Mr. Speaker, he is temporarily replaced by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) whom we also had the opportunity to hear very often in the course of the various debates that have arisen in the house.

I had the pleasure of travelling with him two years ago when the Canadian parliamentary delegation went to Czechoslovakia and Russia. The member for Ontario attends the sittings of the house regularly; he is a man of duty and even a pleasant travelling companion. He therefore has several qualities.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the new leader of the Conservative party, I shall wait till he sits in the house to appreciate his behaviour and his contribution to the whole of Canada. We all know he was a provincial premier for several years. But the provincial arena is not quite the same as the federal arena. And so, I want to see him in the federal arena before expressing any opinion about him. There is one sure thing: he is not of the same stamp as the former Conservative leader. He seems as calm, reserved, moderate as the other was fiery and impetuous. He has met the Prime Minister, possibly to seek his advice, or to find out how a leader of the opposition must act in the house, but I do not know for sure. In any case, we will be able to appreciate him when he sits here with us.

Mr. Speaker, since we are talking about departures, that of the former minister of transport (Mr. Pickersgill), the former member for Bonavista-Twillingate, whom we also knew very well in this house, leaves a gap. Whatever our political allegiance, it was always a pleasure to get in touch with him. There was no need to wear white gloves and a dress-suit to see him. In fact, it was possible to see him anywhere and he always welcomed us kindly. He dealt personally with matters we put to him and heaven knows how many there have been in the last six years.

We now congratulate the newcomers in this house and wish them a great deal of success.

With regard to one of our friends on this side of the house who now sits on the other side, as someone said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that is not surprising to us since the government supported him a few years ago.

We have nothing else to add now except that we hope that parliament becomes more and more efficient so that it can better serve the people whom we represent and whom we must serve for the welfare of Canada as a whole.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL

TABLING OF REPORT ON CONSUMER AFFAIRS AND REGISTRAR GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with leave I should like to table copies in English and French of the report on consumer affairs and the Department of the Registrar General which was published in July 1967 by the Economic Council of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Does the parliamentary secretary have leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PUBLIC SERVANTS SPEAKING ONLY FRENCH OR ENGLISH

Question No. 49—Mr. Irvine:

1. How many people who speak English only are employed in all federal government departments?

2. How many people who speak French only are employed in all federal government departments?

Questions

3. How many people who are bilingual (speaking French and English) are employed in all federal government departments?

4. How many people in each of the three aforementioned categories are employed in each of the crown corporations in Montreal and Quebec city?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The requested information is not available in personnel records. Furthermore, the required degree of bilingual proficiency varies for different kinds of occupations.

A system of objective tests of language skill, both French and English, is being devised by the Public Service Commission. When these tests have been completed they will be used as may be required for accurate verification of language knowledge of individual employees. This information will be fed progressively into the central personnel records system which is in the process of being developed. There will, however, inevitably be a considerable period before comprehensive statistics on this subject will be available.

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

Question No. 110—Mr. MacRae:

1. Is "O Canada" as of this date the national anthem of Canada?

2. If not, what steps are necessary to make "O Canada" the national anthem of Canada?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. The formal designation of "O Canada" as the national anthem of Canada has been under consideration by special joint committees of the House of Commons and the Senate.

The first such committee was set up during the last session and in its second report to the House of Commons on March 15th, 1967, it unanimously recommended, inter alia, that the government be authorized to adopt forthwith the music for "O Canada" composed by Calixa Lavallée as the music for the national anthem of Canada. This report was concurred in by the House of Commons on April 12th, 1967, and by the Senate on April 19th, 1967.

The second such committee was established on May 19th, 1967, when the House of Commons resolved, "That a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to consider and from time to time to report upon the question of lyrics of the national and royal anthems of Canada". This committee has not yet reported.

2. When the committee reports concerning lyrics consideration will be given, in the light of its report, to the question of such further action as may be desirable or necessary.

[Mr. Irvine.]

FRENCH SPEAKING FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 117—Mr. Allard:

1. Among federal civil servants receiving annual salaries of $5,000 or more, what percentage represent persons whose mother tongue is French?

2. How are these distributed, in percentages, among the following federal departments and agencies: Agriculture, Manpower and Immigration, Defence Production, External Affairs, Finance, Labour, Energy, Mines and Resources, National Defence, National Health and Welfare, National Research Council, National Revenue, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Post Office, Public Works, Trade and Commerce, Transport, Veterans Affairs?

3. What is the total number of senior officials and the number of persons whose mother tongue is French among these officials in the following federal departments and agencies: Insurance, Export Credits Insurance Corporation, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., Industrial Development Bank, Bank of Canada, Canadian Wheat Board (Montreal branch), Canadian Arsenals Limited, Canadian National Railways, Trade and Commerce, Canadian Commercial Corporation, Farm Credit Corporation, Defence Construction Ltd., Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd., Atomic Energy Control Board, Finance, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, Fisheries Polymer Corporation Ltd., Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, National Research Council, National Health and Welfare, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Tariff Board, Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation, Air Canada, Transport, Air Transport Board, Labour, and Public Works?

4. What is the number of federal civil servants earning $14,000 or more annually, and what is the number in this group whose mother tongue is French?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The requested information is not available in personnel records. Furthermore, the required degree of bilingual proficiency varies for different kinds of occupations.

A system of objective tests of language skill, both French and English, is being devised by the Public Service Commission. When these tests have been completed they will be used as may be required for accurate verification of language knowledge of individual employees. This information will be fed progressively into the central personnel records system which is in the process of being developed. There will, however, inevitably be a considerable period before comprehensive statistics on this subject will be available.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT IN YUKON AND N.W.T.

Question No. 119—Mr. Orange:

1. Were funds allotted in the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development during the fiscal year 1966-67 for the purposes of community development in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories and, if so, what was the total amount involved by community?

2. What are the terms of reference under which a community may spend these monies?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In so far as the Northwest Territories are concerned the answer is as follows: 1. Yes. The following amounts were allotted to the community development fund for the Northwest Territories in the fiscal year 1966-67:

Arctic District

Frobisher region: Igloolik $11,000; Resolute Bay $1,000; Pond Inlet $4,000; Pangnirtung $11,000; Cape Dorset $5,000; Frobisher Bay $11,000; Queen Elizabeth Islands $1,000; Regional Reserve $6,000.

Keewatin region: Repulse Bay $3,000; Eskimo Point $10,000; Baker Lake $10,000; Rankin Inlet $14,000; Coral Harbour $8,000; Regional Reserve $5,000.

Mackenzie District

Frobisher region: Igloolik $11,000; Resolute Pelly Bay $6,200; Gjoa Haven $1,900; Coppermine $1,700; Thom Bay $500.

Inuvik region: Fort Good Hope $1,000; Aklavik $4,000; Tuktoyaktuk $3,500; Inuvik $2,500; Fort McPherson $1,500; Fort Norman $4,000.

Fort Smith region: Regional Reserve $9,600.

2. A community may spend such monies for local physical improvement projects and local economic development projects. Physical improvement projects are required to have a labour content of at least 70%. Departmental field officers authorize expenditures from the fund, within the limitations of the community budget, and after consultation with the local community councils, where such councils exist.

In so far as the Yukon Territory is concerned, the answer is as follows: 1. No. Funds for these purposes were held at Indian affairs branch headquarters and no allotments were specifically made for administrative regions in the 1966-67 estimates.

2. Not applicable.

FEATURE LENGTH FILMS, NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Question No. 141—Mr. Nugent:

1. How many feature length commercial films are now in production, or in planning, by the National Film Board?

2. What are the names of any such films, and what is the estimated cost of each one?

3. Has a coloured film "Waiting for Caroline" been produced or is such a film being produced and, if so, what was the original estimated cost of this film, and what is the anticipated cost now?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows: 1. Three.

2. The Ernie Game—estimated cost $300,000. Waiting for Caroline—$498,000. Le Grand Roc—$160,000.

3. Yes, it has been photographed and is now at the editing stage. The original budget estimate was $320,000. This was based on an 88 minute film. It has been decided to complete it at a length of 110 minutes and the anticipated cost is now $498,000. The additional length is one of the reasons for the increase in cost. Further, it should be understood that the figure of $320,000 did not include the normal contingency allowance as it is being produced on a shared cost basis with the C.B.C.

GRANTS TO TRAIN TEACHERS FOR INDIANS AND ESKIMOS

Question No. 165—Mr. Orlikow:

Are there government grants available for training teachers to work among Indians and Eskimos and, if so, what is the amount provided in the estimates, and how many people can be trained?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): While no specific amounts are provided in the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for grants which would be available for training teachers to work among Indians and Eskimos, teacher training is provided in other ways. For example, $35,000 is provided for a two week orientation course attended by approximately 125 teachers per year upon appointment. In-service workshops of one week are held each year at a cost of approximately $65,000 which are attended by over 400 teachers. An average of 25 teachers a year attend summer courses in specific subjects relating to the problems of northern teaching and workshops for the development of northern school programs at a cost of approximately $17,000. Also, in 1966-67 approximately $59,000 was spent in connection with educational leave for teachers to undertake further training particularly relating to the Eskimo and Indian cultures.

The department also offers training bursaries to prospective teachers enrolled in the intercultural education program at the University of Alberta. The students are employed during the summer months as student assistants at the student assistants' rates of pay. Those who agree to teach for Indian affairs branch for a minimum of one year receive further assistance. Their transportation to and from university and their tuition fees are paid by the branch. Provision was made for ten such bursaries for the fiscal year 1967-68. The average yearly cost per pupil is $2,000.

The government of the Northwest Territories provides grants and loans to any high school graduate in the Northwest Territories who wishes to attend university or a teacher training school and can qualify for admission. Because it is a territorial program and not limited to the training of teachers, neither the numbers of people to be trained nor the cost can be determined.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE OF INDIAN CHILDREN

Question No. 169—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many Indian children attend schools, elementary and secondary, and how many of these attend (a) purely Indian schools (b) integrated schools?

2. How does the percentage of Indian students attending schools, elementary and secondary, compare with the percentage of the whole population attending elementary and secondary schools?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The enrolment of Indian children as of January 1967, was as follows:

Elementary schools	51,431
Secondary schools	5,770
sub-total	57,201
Grade unknown	7,238
grand total	64,439

The 7,238 students for whom grades are unknown represent children who are living off reserve and attending provincial schools for whom details are not available.

Of the 64,439, 31,498 attended schools operated by the Indian affairs branch and 32,941 attended integrated schools.

2. Of the 57,201, the percentage of Indian students attending elementary schools is 90 per cent while the percentage attending secondary schools is 10 per cent. The percentage of the school population in Canada attending elementary schools is 74 per cent while the percentage attending secondary schools is 26 per cent.

[Mr. Laing.]

USE OF POISON GAS IN NORTHERN YEMEN

Question No. 199—Mr. Ormiston:

Has the government of Canada received any report or evidence of the alleged dropping of poison gas by the United Arab Republic on northern Yemen, since January 1, 1967?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The government has received reports on the alleged dropping of poison gas on northern Yemen. The Secretary General of the United Nations circulated on April 6, 1967 an exchange of communications between himself and the deputy permanent representative of Saudi Arabia to the United Nations as security council document S/7842. In this document Ambassador Baroody of Saudi Arabia alleges that United Arab Republic aircraft subjected an area of northern Yemen to a lethal gas raid.

In addition, on June 2, 1967, the international committee of the Red Cross in Geneva released a report which stated that a medical team, led by the head of the I.C.R.C. mission in the Yemen, had on May 15 and 16 visited a village in North Yemen, where, according to the survivors, many inhabitants of the village had died of asphyxiation after a bombing attack some days earlier. The report also stated that the Red Cross team had found various indications pointing to the use of poison gas. The United Arab Republic has not admitted the use of gas in any attacks in North Yemen.

The Canadian government does not have any official representation in the Yemen and is not, therefore, in a position to assess, on the basis of its own sources, the information contained in the reports noted above.

WATER SUPPLY, SPRINGHILL PENAL INSTITUTION

Question No. 202—Mr. Coates:

On what date was a satisfactory water supply secured for the young offenders penal institution at Springhill, Nova Scotia?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): A water supply was secured for the initial needs in January, 1967. On May 29, 1967, after testing well No. 4, the water supply was proven satisfactory for all future needs.

FEDERAL RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES IN QUEBEC

Question No. 215—Mr. Allard:

1. How much more or how much less did the federal government pay out than it received in the province of Quebec for the 1965-1966 fiscal year, taking into account, between the federal government and the province of Quebec, all the revenue received by the federal government (including direct and indirect taxes and other sources of revenue) and all the expenditures made in the province of Quebec (including conditional and unconditional grants to institutions and private individuals, all government expenses incurred by the Department of Public Works and others, plus the expenditures incurred by the federal crown corporations in that province), using in every case the same criterion, i.e., the destination of the dollar and not the percentage which the population of a province represents out of the entire population of Canada?

2. What are the comparative tables for each province?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. Information is not now available to provide an accurate answer to this question and the necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather the necessary information.

NAME OF LAKE AT KINGSMERE, QUE.

Question No. 254—Mr. Isabelle:

Is Mousseau or Harrington the official name of the lake situated near Kingsmere in Gatineau county?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In 1931 the name Harrington lake was approved by the Geographic Board of Canada when the names for a map of the area were being considered. There was no controversy at that time as the name Harrington was found to be firmly established on all maps examined.

In 1951 an article in the Ottawa Journal suggesting that a more historically appropriate name would be Lac Mousseau prompted an inquiry by the Canadian board on geographical names, the predecessor of the present Canadian permanent committee on geographical names. The matter was investigated much more thoroughly than in 1931. It was ascertained that the name Harrington appeared on many maps and plans dating back to 1850 on a surveyor's plan of the area. The name Harrington appears to have been applied by this surveyor and may have resulted from the land grant in 1827 to a Joseph Harrington of lot 19 in the 6th range of Hull, some six miles south of the lake, according to evidence furnished by the Public Archives of Canada. Additional evidence served to confirm that the Harrington family occupied land near the lake until after the middle of the century. Letters were received from local residents, mainly cottagers, supporting the name Harrington.

The name Lac Mousseau was promoted by others just as strongly stating that Louis Mousseau settled on the shore of the lake in 1867, his descendants retained title until at least 1905, and that most people have known the lake by this name for the past 50 to 60 years.

After a full review of the evidence and representations, the board decided in 1951 to retain the name Harrington. The decision was based mainly on the long establishment of the name on maps and plans as well as on demonstrated local usage. The board recognized that the name Lac Mousseau was also used, but they did not see fit to adopt the double name.

In Bill C-64, 1959, amending the Prime Minister's Residence Act, the lake is designated as Harrington lake (Lac Mousseau) in the English text and Lac Mousseau (Harrington lake) in the French text.

On September 5, 1962 a draft copy of topographic map 31 G/12d published by this department was forwarded to Quebec for a names check. On December 18, 1962, a letter was received from the secretary of the Quebec geographical board stating that the Quebec minister of lands and forests had approved the name Lac Mousseau (Lac Harrington). This name was ratified by the Canadian permanent committee on geographical names and is the official name of the lake.

Questions

HIRING PRACTICES, CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK

Question No. 280—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received a communication dated June 11, 1967, signed by the president and the secretary of branch No. 32, Royal Canadian Legion, Cheticamp, N.S., requesting an immediate investigation concerning hiring practices at the Cape Breton highlands national park and, if so, what was the nature of the reply provided?

2. Was a copy of such a communication received by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and, if so, what was the nature of the reply provided?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received a communication dated June 11, 1967 signed by the president and the secretary of branch no. 32, Royal Canadian Legion concerning the hiring of one man, for whom employment arrangements had already been made and who was taken on staff June 15.

2. Yes, a copy was received by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and in his reply assurance was given that a report on the matter would be sought.

TREATMENT IN VETERANS HOSPITALS

Question No. 281—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Since January 1, 1965, what has been the average monthly patient load by classification at Camp Hill hospital, Halifax, Nova Scotia?

2. What priorities are given to the admission of patients at the aforementioned hospital?

3. Did the Minister of Veterans Affairs, on April 24, 1967, when speaking in the House of Commons, make reference to veterans in receipt of war veterans allowance when outlining priorities?

4. Is priority given to treating such veterans and, if not, for what reason?

5. Under what section of veterans treatment regulations is there defined a responsibility for the Department of Veterans Affairs to treat patients referred by other departments of the federal government?

6. Who determined that such persons should have a priority over any class of veteran who may be admitted to a D.V.A. institution under veterans treatment regulations?

7. Were representatives of any veterans' organizations consulted by the federal government before adopting such a policy?

8. Under what sections of veterans treatment regulations are persons other than veterans admitted to D.V.A. institutions where such persons are not the responsibility of a federal government department?

[Mrs. Rideout.]

9. What types of facility or treatment are available in any D.V.A. institution which are not available in non-departmental hospitals in a particular area such as Halifax?

10. How many beds at Camp Hill hospital are held vacant or earmarked for possible admission of non-veterans?

11. How many veterans have been refused admission since January 1, 1965, and in what categories could they have been admitted?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. Classification under treatment regulations	Veterans	Average monthly patient load
Sections 5 and 6—treatment for pensioned disability		37
Section 11—treatment of former members of regular forces in Canada during post discharge year for a condition being treated in hospital at the time of discharge from the forces		1

Questions

APPLICATIONS TO MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Question No. 294—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many applications for grants to finance research projects did the Medical Research Council receive in each of the past three years?

2. What was the total dollar value of the projects requested from the Medical Research Council?

3. How many of the applications made to the Medical Research Council were approved in full?

4. How many of the applications were approved in part only?

5. How many applications for research grants were turned down in each of the last three years?

6. What were the reasons for the refusals?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as the National Research Council of Canada is concerned the answer is as follows: 1. Total number of grant applications: to the Medical Research Council: 1964-65, 687; 1965-66, 895; 1966-67, 1203.

2. Amount requested: 1964-65, $7,904,743.16; 1965-66, $11,040,860.76, 1966-67, $15,825,154.76.

3. Approved in full: 1964-65, 226; 1965-66, 347; 1966-67, 702.

4. Approved in part: 1964-65, 347; 1965-66, 385; 1966-67, 330.

5. Rejected: 1964-65, 114; 1965-66, 163; 1966-67, 171.

6. Many factors are taken into account when considering applications and it is not the policy of the Medical Research Council to give reasons for rejections.

RESEARCH COUNCIL SUPPLIES FOR UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 295—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money did the National Research Council provide for research equipment and supplies for Canadian universities last year?

2. How much was requested by the universities for such equipment and supplies from the National Research Council?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The grants awarded to university researchers in 1966-67 which include support for research equipment and supplies totalled $27,946,000. It is estimated that 64 per cent of these funds were used for research equipment and supplies.

2. For the grants awarded, $27,946,000, there was requested $45,332,700 by the universities.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE OF INDIAN STUDENTS

Question No. 298—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Of the Indian children attending elementary and secondary schools (a) how many are attending elementary schools (b) how many are attending secondary schools?

2. How does the percentage of Indian students attending secondary schools compare with the percentage of the whole population attending secondary schools?

3. How many Indian students are attending universities or other advanced educational institutions?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The enrolment of Indian children as of January 1967, was as follows:

Elementary schools	51,431
Secondary schools	5,770
sub-total	57,201
Grade unknown	7,238
grand total	64,439

The 7,238 students for whom grades are unknown represent children who are living off reserve and attending provincial schools for whom details are not available.

2. Of the 57,201, the percentage of Indian students attending secondary schools is 10 per cent while the percentage of the school population in Canada attending secondary schools is 26 per cent.

TRAINING GRANTS FOR EDUCATION IN WELFARE WORK

Question No. 299—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much money has been allocated under the welfare training grants to help pay for the education of people desiring to improve their qualifications in the field of social work?

2. How many people are now at recognized professional schools under the provisions of these grants?

3. What are the amounts of the bursaries provided?

4. Has any money been allocated for research projects in the field of social service?

5. Have any plans been developed for research into appropriate use of sub-professional staff in the field of social welfare?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In the fiscal year 1966-67 $235,763 was allocated to assist persons taking full time graduate social work training at schools of social work.

2. 155 persons.

3. The bursary, training grant, scholarship and fellowship provisions are used to assist persons taking social work training. Costs of bursaries and training grants are shared with the provinces. Scholarships and fellowships are 100 per cent federal responsibility.

The amount of bursary and training grant is determined by the provincial welfare authorities, with the federal share not to exceed $4,000 for a calendar year plus $500 for dependents. These grants are reduced proportionately for periods of less than one year. Necessary travel costs are also paid.

Scholarships and fellowships are awarded by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The maximum amount of a scholarship is $2,500 for a calendar year, plus $500 for dependents. The maximum amount of a fellowship is $4,000 for a calendar year, plus $500 for dependents. These awards are reduced proportionately for periods less than one year. Necessary travel costs are also paid.

4. In the fiscal year 1966-67 funds in the amount of $171,503 were expended in connection with a variety of welfare research projects, surveys and studies, priority being given to those projects which held promise of making significant steps forward in the organization, co-ordination and staffing of welfare services and in the development of new services focussed on meeting welfare needs and on the prevention of welfare problems and dependency.

5. Yes, through the technical and vocational agreements of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the national welfare grants program of the Department of National Health and Welfare, provincial departments received assistance in 1966-67 to undertake programs of training for sub-professional personnel, and these programs, which have advisory committees operating in conjunction with them, will be evaluated in terms of their effectiveness in producing competent personnel for the welfare field.

To date in the current fiscal year 1967-68, a grant was awarded to the Children's Aid Society of Vancouver to study the use of welfare aides in child welfare: an application from the Department of Public Welfare in Newfoundland for a study of the effectiveness of their in-service and undergraduate training for sub-professional welfare personnel is pending; and consultation has been provided to the department of social welfare, British Columbia, to develop a research project on staff utilization in public welfare services.

Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS BRANCH PLACEMENT OFFICERS

Question No. 301—Mr. Orlikow:

How many employment placement officers does the Indian affairs branch employ in each province and, of these, how many are of Indian descent?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): There are 32 employment placement officers in the Indian affairs branch as of June 23, 1967. None of these is of Indian status. The distribution of these officers by provinces is as follows:

Nova Scotia	2
New Brunswick	1
Quebec	4
Ontario	11
Manitoba	1
Saskatchewan	3
Alberta	3
British Columbia	7
Total	32

FUND FOR RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 303—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

1. Have regulations been enacted for the fund for rural economic development and, if so, on what date?

2. What are the terms of any such regulations?

3. What provinces or agencies have made applications to this fund, for what projects and for what amounts?

4. What allocations from this fund have been made, when and for what amounts?

5. Is it expected that allocations will be made for Prince Edward Island and, if so, when, for what amount and for what purposes?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. No.

2. See above.

3. Most provinces have shown interest and actual studies are under way in Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. There are indications that provinces may soon proceed to survey their needs. See also 4 below.

4. Agreements have been signed with New Brunswick and Manitoba for contributions under the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act. Programs in New Brunswick include the northeast New Brunswick federal-provincial rural development agreement with a contribution from the fund and from ARDA over a ten year period of $31.5 million and the Mactaquac agreement with a ten year FRED contribution of $9.4 million. Both these agreements were signed September 20, 1966.

In Manitoba the Interlake agreement was signed on May 16, 1967 with a total ten year contribution under FRED of $27.6 million.

5. Basic research in Prince Edward Island has almost been completed and discussions are under way with the province on the next phase. The amount of money is dependant upon the program to be undertaken and the area selected but to date no decisions have been made on any of the particular elements.

VISITS OF HEADS OF STATE TO EXPO '67

Question No. 306—Mr. Goyer:

1. How many heads of state or their representatives have visited Expo '67 to date and what countries did they represent?

2. In each case, were they accompanied on the Expo site by a minister or other representative of the federal government?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the commissioner general for visits of state 1967 as follows: 1. As of June 22, 1967, 17 heads of state or their representatives have visited Expo under the visits of heads of state program, representing Ethiopia, Mauritius, Belgium, Burma, Austria, Israel, Czechoslovakia, Netherlands, Great Britain, United States of America, Australia, Iran, Tunisia, Federal Republic of Germany, Korea, Ceylon, Thailand.

2. Yes, during the official portions of their stay in Montreal.

I am informed by the Department of Trade and Commerce as follows:

1. As of June 27, 1967, only one head of state, the Prime Minister of Bulgaria, visited Expo apart from the official visits program.

2. With the exception of Expo officials, he was not accompanied by a representative of the federal government.

BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 309—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What are the (a) total numbers (b) amounts (c) nature, of the bankruptcies that occurred in the province of Quebec, during the last five years, and who sustained the losses?

2. What are the (a) total numbers (b) amounts (c) nature, of the bankruptcies that occurred in Canada and in each of the other provinces, during the last five years, and who sustained the losses?

3. What is the forecast for 1967 and 1968?

4. What are the total numbers and the amounts of fraudulent bankruptcies, during the last five years, and who sustained the losses?

5. What is the forecast for 1967 and 1968 in the matter of fraudulent bankruptcies?

[Mr. Sauvé.]

COST OF FEDERAL SERVICES TO INDIANS

Question No. 313—Mr. Orlikow:

What were the costs to the federal government for services to Indians for health, welfare, education, and economic development, in each of the past five years?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the department of National Health and Welfare and Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows:

The expenditures for Indian health services in each of the past five years are:

HATCHING OF WHOOPING CRANE EGGS

Question No. 315—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Are any Canadians involved in the current program to hatch whooping crane eggs under controlled domestic conditions?

2. If so, who are they?

3. Has the advice and assistance of the eminent Canadian zoologist, Al Oeming, been sought on this project?

4. Who else is involved in this project?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The collection, hatching and rearing program for whooping cranes was developed jointly by scientists of the Canadian wildlife service and the United States bureau of sport fisheries and wildlife. The collection phase was carried out by biologists of both agencies. The incubation and rearing phases are being carried out by United States biologists at the Petuxent research centre following a program developed jointly by the two agencies concerned. No Canadian is presently located at the Petuxent research centre, Laurel, Maryland. All changes or modifications to the jointly developed program are discussed in advance by competent scientists of both governments. Progeny which will result from the present operation will not be available for distribution for the final phases of the program until 1980. The ultimate responsibility for the program is held by the directors of both agencies concerned.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

2. Dr. D. A. Munro, director, Dr. F. G. Gooch, staff specialist, Dr. N. S. Novakowski, staff specialist, Mr. Kuyt, biologist, all of the Canadian wildlife service.

3. No, because the birds are the responsibility of both governments and the scientists available are equally as competent as Mr. Oeming.

4. No person from the private sector is involved in the program. In addition to names listed in part two of this question, employees of the rare and endangered species division, bureau of sport fisheries and wildlife, Patuxent research centre, Laurel Maryland, are involved. The principal United States scientists are Dr. Ray Erickson and Dr. Glen Smart. They are assisted by 10 full time technicians as well as other specialists on constant call.

INVESTIGATION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMAL CASES

Question No. 323—Mr. Mather:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture received protests from the Ontario Humane Society over reported refusal by veterinarians of the department to co-operate with society inspectors in examining cases of animal cruelty?

2. If so, have such complaints been investigated and the situation resolved?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes.

2. A meeting to resolve any misunderstandings has been arranged.

EXERCISE OF FRANCHISE BY BRITISH SUBJECTS AND OTHERS

Question No. 326—Mr. Stanbury:

At the date of the last general election (a) how many British subjects, other than Canadian citizens, had been ordinarily resident in Canada for the preceding 12 months, and thereby were entitled to vote and be candidates for parliament (b) how many persons had been ordinarily resident in Canada for the preceding 12 months but were not British subjects, and therefore were not entitled to vote and be candidates for parliament?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows: (a) Apart from the requirement that a British subject who is not a Canadian citizen is required to be a resident in Canada for the 12 months immediately preceding polling day to be entitled to vote at a federal election and be a candidate for parliament, the Canada Elections Act does not make any distinction between these two categories, and consequently, this office has no information regarding this question. (b) The persons mentioned in this part of the question fall in the general category of those people not entitled to vote or be a candidate at a federal election and no records are kept in this office of the number of such persons.

*POPULATION OF NEW ELECTORAL DISTRICTS

Question No. 332—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. According to the 1966 census, are there any electoral districts established pursuant to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act which have a population which (a) exceeds the quotient established pursuant to that act by a greater extent than 25 per cent more, or (b) is less than the said quotient by a greater extent than 25 per cent less?

2. If so, how many are there in category (a) and category (b) and what are the names and populations of each such electoral district?

3. If the answers to part 1 and part 2 indicated that anomalies and discrepancies have already arisen under the new redistribution, will the government consider amendments to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to remove them?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows:

Since the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act provides for the review of electoral boundaries only after each decennial census, information such as is requested is not available from the representation commissioner. The government is not now considering any amendments to the act in respect of revisions based on the quinquennial census.

Questions

APPLICATIONS FOR PASSPORTS TO ISRAEL AND EGYPT

Question No. 341—Mr. Valade:

1. How many persons applied to the government of Canada and obtained passports or visas to enter Israel or Egypt during the recent war between Israel and Egypt?

2. Does the government of Canada consider such persons to be Canadian citizens who may return to Canada with privileges?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Department of External Affairs cannot say how many persons may have applied for passports for the specific purpose of entering Israel or Egypt during the recent war for the reason that Canadian passports are issued valid for travel to all countries and passport applicants are not asked to state the countries to which they plan to travel. Visas to enter Israel and Egypt are not issued by the Canadian Government but must be obtained from the Israeli and Egyptian authorities.

2. Not applicable.

BROADCAST GOVERNORS PARTICIPATING IN JUNE HEARING

Question No. 342—Mr. Smith:

Which members of the Board of Broadcast Governors participated in the hearings commencing June 20, 1967?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Board of Broadcast Governors as follows: All members of the Board of Broadcast Governors participated in the hearings commencing June 20, 1967.

PERSONNEL OF BROADCAST BOARD

Question No. 343—Mr. Smith:

What are the names, addresses, and dates of appointment of the members (full and part time) of the Board of Broadcast Governors?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Board of Broadcast Governors as follows:

Full time members: Dr. Andrew Stewart, Chairman, 2322 Hillary Avenue, Ottawa, Ontario; (appointed Nov. 18/58, re-appointed July 7/67). Mr. Pierre Juneau, Vice-Chairman, 911 Hartland Street, Outremont, P.Q.; (appointed Feb. 18/66). Mr. David Sim, 730 Island Park Drive, Ottawa, Ontario; (appointed Feb. 18/66).

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Part-time members: Mr. Joseph F. Brown, 2554 Wallace Crescent, Vancouver 8, B.C. (appointed Nov. 10/58, re-appointed Dec. 6/63). Mr. John M. Coyne, Room 1005, 77 Metcalfe Street, Ottawa, Ontario; (appointed Aug. 3/63). Miss Edouardina Dupont, P.O. Box 1106, Trois-Rivieres, P.Q.; (appointed Oct. 21/66). Mr. Claude B. Gagnon, 100, carré Youville, Quebec 4, P.Q.; (appointed Oct. 18/62). Mr. Joseph W. Grittani, Suite 304, 1801 Eglinton Avenue West, Toronto 10, Ontario; (appointed Sept. 12/63). Mr. F. G. Holmes, 211 Buckingham Drive, Windsor, Ontario; (appointed. Dec. 6/63). Mr. Major Reid, Rollo Bay West, Souris, P.E.I.; (appointed Oct. 21/66). Dr. Guy Rocher, 550, Champagneur, Outremont, P.Q.; (appointed Oct. 21/66). Mrs. Alan Sweatman, 266 Kingsway Avenue, Winnipeg 9, Manitoba; (appointed Dec. 6/63). Dr. Gordon W. Thomas, c/o International Grenfell Association Mission, St. Anthony, Nfld.; (appointed Oct. 21/66). Mr. George T. Urquhart, 824 Manawagonish Road, Saint John West, N.B.; (appointed Feb. 2/67). Mr. Ian Gordon Stott, 181 St. Peters Road, Sydney, N.S.; (appointed June 15/67).

FEDERAL PARKS

Question No. 344—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many federal parks are there in each of the provinces of Canada?

2. What is the area of these federal parks?

3. How much has the federal government spent on federal parks to date?

4. Do some provinces not have federal parks and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. British Columbia, 4; Alberta, 5; (including Wood Buffalo national park, partially in Alberta and partially in the Northwest Territories); Saskatchewan, 1; Manitoba, 1; Ontario, 3; Quebec, 0; New Brunswick, 1; Nova Scotia, 2; Prince Edward Island, 1; Newfoundland, 1.

2. Total area, 29,416.2 square miles.

3. $238,362,741 to the end of fiscal year 1966-67.

4. There are as yet no national parks in the province of Quebec. The addition to the national parks system of one or more outstanding examples of Quebec landscape would indeed be welcomed by my department. However, the establishment of new national parks is dependent upon the province concerned taking the initiative. Customarily the province invites the federal government to participate in a joint survey of potential park lands, followed by mutual agreement on a satisfactory area and subsequent action to transfer title to the lands, free of all encumbrances, from the provincial to the federal government. To date, no such invitation has been received from the Quebec provincial government.

STEPS TO MEET URANIUM DEMAND

Question No. 345—Mr. Caouette:

Has Eldorado Mining and Refining Ltd. taken any measures to fill the increasing demand for uranium and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes.

In the past year Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited has increased its annual uranium production from the Beaverlodge mine by 11 per cent and is bringing into production a new 250 ton per day mine located some eight miles from its present mining and milling operations.

Through press releases and annual reports, the corporation has repeatedly warned the Canadian uranium producers and the mining industry at large of the urgent need for increased exploration and development of new uranium deposits to meet the increasing world demand.

COST OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Question No. 348—Mr. Davis:

Has an estimate been prepared of the cost to the federal treasury of a guaranteed annual income for all Canadian families of $3,000 a year and, if so, what is this cost likely to be (a) in total (b) when demands which would otherwise be made on unemployment insurance, social assistance, etc., have been deducted?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No.

SECOND NATIONAL PARK IN SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 349—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

Has the federal government any plans for a second national park in Saskatchewan and, if so (a) what are they (b) what sites have been under investigation in Saskatchewan for this purpose?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes. A survey of potential national park sites was carried out during the summer of 1965. (a) The objective is to establish a prairie national park. (b) The survey concentrated on the area south of the trans-Canada highway. Precise locations cannot be announced until such time as boundaries and other factors have been negotiated in co-operation with the Saskatchewan provincial government.

CONTRIBUTIONS UNDER UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 354—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What was the maximum salary above which an insured person was not compelled to remain insured or pay weekly amounts in 1947, 1957 and 1967?

2. What was the maximum weekly contribution deducted from the maximum weekly salary of an insured person in 1947, 1957 and 1967?

3. What was the number of insured persons paying contributions to the unemployment insurance fund in (a) Canada (b) Ontario (c) the province of Quebec in 1947, 1957 and 1967?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission as follows: 1. 1947, $3,120. 1957, $4,800. 1967, $5,460.

2. 1947, $.36. 1957, $.60. 1967, $.94.

INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

Question No. 356—Mr. Davis:

1. What were the personal income tax payments to the federal government in total and on an average per capita basis, by province, for the fiscal year 1964-65?

2. What were the corporate income tax payments to the federal government in total and on an average per capita basis, by province, for the fiscal year 1964-65?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. Personal income tax payments to the federal government in total for the fiscal year 1964-65 were $2,903.9 million. The total includes old age security tax and provincial income tax collected by the federal government. Collection figures by provinces are not available because payments and refunds processed by the taxation data centre in Ottawa in 1964-65 relate to all provinces and district office collection figures, therefore, do not indicate correctly the amount collected in each province. The following table, based on an analysis of tax returns, shows the total tax payable by individuals in respect of the 1964 taxation year distributed by province of residence:

Province	Total tax payable $Million	Average per capita $
Newfoundland	26.5	53.97

Manitoba	119.8	125.05
Saskatchewan	108.1	114.63
Alberta	182.8	127.65
British Columbia	314.3	180.84

*Does not include taxes levied and collected by the province directly.

2. Corporate income tax payments to the federal government in total for the fiscal year 1964-65 were $1,804.5 million. The total includes old age security tax and provincial income tax collected by the federal government. Collection figures by province, based on the district office of filing, are shown in the following table:

Province	Total tax collected $Million	Average per capita $
Newfoundland	22.5	45.82
P.E.I.	2.6	24.30
Nova Scotia	18.6	24.47

3. What are the existing provisions for such access?

4. Are there any plans for new provisions for such access and, if so, what is the nature of such plans?

5. What is the present rule for access to public records now existing in (a) the United Kingdom (b) France (c) the United States?

6. What negotiations, if any, have been held with the governments of the nations mentioned in part 5, to arrange uniformity of rules of access among the nations, and with what result?

7. What problems, if any, arise for the Department of External Affairs and/or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police due to lack of uniformity of rules of access among such nations?

8. Has an advisory council on public records been appointed?

9. If so, what are the names, addresses and occupations of the members appointed to such council?

10. Since its establishment, on what dates has the council met?

11. In the preservation and custody of public records, what are the respective authorities and responsibilities of (a) the treasury board (b) Dominion Archivist (c) departments of government?

Return tabled.

PUBLIC SERVICE CLASSIFICATION REVISION PROGRAM

Question No. 335—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. In what occupational categories has the classification revision program of public servants been completed?

2. In what occupational categories is the program still incomplete and, in each case, when is completion anticipated?

3. In each of the occupational categories mentioned in parts 1 and 2 of this question, how many positions are affected?

4. How many positions in each occupational category were (a) "red-circled" (b) "green-circled" (c) converted to equivalent status?

5. Of those "red-circled" (a) how many applications for reviews were received (b) what disposition has been made of the applications?

6. How many persons in each occupational category have been removed by transfer, promotion or otherwise from the "red-circling" classification?

7. How many persons in each occupational category are still "red-circled", and what plans are there for the removal of these "red-circled" employees from such status?

Return tabled.

COST SHARING PROGRAMS

Question No. 355—Mr. Davis:

With regards to federal-provincial cost-sharing programs (a) how many are now in effect (b) what was the federal contribution, in total, and by program, for the fiscal year 1964-65 (c) what was the federal contribution, in total, and by program, in each province for the fiscal year 1964-65?

Return tabled.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been unable to find starred question No. 277 on the order paper. Could we have the number of the question which has been answered today?

Mr. Béchard: It is question No. 277.

HOUSING

STEPS TO MEET REPORTED CRISIS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance under standing order 26. The matter to which I refer would be contained within the motion, if leave is granted. The matter is:

—the deepening of the grave crisis in the house construction industry as the result of the government's failure to provide the necessary funds; the government's persistent failure to establish priorities in meeting the needs of citizens generally; the increasing serious lack of housing accommodation, particularly for most low income families;

the alarming increase in the cost of housing created by the shortage of accommodation and aggravated by the government's policy of retaining the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials; and the resultant disruptive effects on the retention of specialized and skilled labour in the building industry.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich kindly enlighten the Chair and the house on the question of urgency of debate? I take the liberty to caution the hon. member and others who might want to participate in the consideration of the matter of urgency that what is before the house at the moment is the question of urgency of debate, not urgency of the subject matter of the proposed motion.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, I shall try conscientiously to restrict my remarks to the question of urgency of debate. I shall try very hard not to infringe the rules. We had all expected, and I know a great number of Canadians across the country and the building industry had expected this, that today the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour would rise on motions and make a statement with regard to the serious question that arises in the country in respect of the housing shortage.

This has not been done, in spite of the fact that since the house rose 11 weeks ago a large number of organizations have made representations to the government on this important matter. Also, during this time the Economic Council has submitted its fourth annual review. According to that review it would seem that this year something between 180,000 and 190,000 new housing units will be required. It would also appear from estimates I have been able to obtain that there will be a shortage this year alone of something between 30,000 and 40,000 housing units.

The second point I make in support of urgency of debate of the question is that it is now 11 weeks since the house rose. During this time there has been ample evidence of the rapid increase in the cost of housing, an increase occasioned largely by the shortage of housing caused by government policies. Because there are several buyers for the same house, the cost of the house has gone up very considerably. In the Toronto area, for example, I have one estimate that the cost of an average new house has gone up by over $5,000 in the past year.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics indicates that between August 1966 and August 1967 the consumer price index for housing, which includes shelter and housing operation, increased from 145 to 152.2. This is an increase of 7.2 points in the cost of housing over the past year ending in August. Yet we have had no opportunity in the past 11 weeks to discuss this matter.

The third point I put before the house with regard to the question of urgency is that in spite of the clear warnings of the Economic Council in its previous reports and in its most recent, fourth annual review—some of the comments being almost startling, in spite of the reserved language used by the Economic Council—there is nothing on the order paper which will provide a vehicle for members of the house to discuss this matter which is reaching catastrophic proportions, namely the shortage of housing and the high cost of housing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chatterton: I am sure it is a matter of the gravest disappointment to millions of Canadians that there is no clear proposal by the government to solve or even ameliorate this question. During the past 11 weeks we have read statements made by the Minister of Labour, who I am sorry is not in the house today. I understand that today in the west he is still talking about housing, as he has been for the past year and a half. But no action has been taken. We have no indication, for example, of when the budget will come before the house for debate.

I maintain, therefore, that in view of the serious developments that have occurred during the past year, the further anticipated increase in the mortgage interest rate by October 1, and the freeze on mortgage funds for direct lending by the government, there is an urgent requirement for debate today by this house on this most important matter. For those three reasons, Mr. Speaker, I submit there is an urgent requirement for such a debate.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is every reason to agree on the urgency of debate on the subject which has been introduced. As a matter of fact I had such a motion ready to introduce, because I think this is a matter of the utmost importance. All the members of the house who have just come from their constituencies must know that the housing shortage in this country is now reaching critical proportions.

All the indications are that targets set will not be reached. The Economic Council of Canada said just recently that we ought to be building 190,000 houses a year. The government's original target was 170,000 houses, later cut to 150,000. According to the best reports we are able to obtain it is doubtful now that we will even reach the target of 150,000 housing starts this year.

This situation has been worsened by the announcement of the Prime Minister in August that the $300 million of additional funds that it was hoped would be made available for housing is not to be made available. The Economic Council in its fourth annual review is most critical of the application of a tight money policy to house construction.

The Prime Minister said in the middle of August that this whole question of additional funds for housing should be reviewed again in the fall. Some two months have elapsed and the government has had ample time to review this matter. It seems to me that it is the right of this house and of the people of Canada to know what the government's intentions are with respect to housing, whether or not they are going to make this $300 million available or whether we are going to continue to fall short of the targets with the results that are now apparent, namely that houses are becoming scarcer and rents are increasing. People in this very city of Ottawa are being evicted from homes at the present time. The situation has become such that one of the leading housing authorities in Canada has said that in 1968 we will face a housing crisis such as this country has never before experienced.

It is because the government has not announced any policy and has not put forward any program that we are entitled to a debate in order that we and the people of Canada may know what the government intends to do if anything. Surely there is nothing that can be more important than to have a full scale debate at this time in order that we may know the government's plans and whether or not the government intends to grant the $300 million additional mortgage funds which, it was hoped all along, would be made available.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put forward my own contribution to this debate and express the views of this group concerning the housing situation in the country. This is not a new problem. We have been faced with it many times prior to the adjournment of this session and it has been growing with increasing speed ever since then.

I do not intend at this time to debate the urgency of the matter because we all know that it is a very urgent one in view of the fact that the two most basic necessities of human beings are food and shelter. There need be no discussion of that. There is a need for housing and we all realize it.

So far as urgency of debate is concerned may I suggest that we refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 100 (2) which states that a matter "must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention". In my opinion there is no matter that is more pressing and more urgent that this one now. Public interest will definitely suffer from lack of housing and therefore it is our duty, if at all possible, to put a stop to the high cost and rising price of housing and to ensure that the house does its duty before this situation develops into a crisis.

Far too often we have waited in this house before acting on important matters. We have waited until the situation became critical, at which time it is very difficult and sometimes practically impossible to deal with it. In such cases the measures we take can only be very hasty ones and not necessarily the right ones.

I should like to refer the house to citation 100 (3) which states as follows:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

I will leave it to the government to establish the earliest opportunity at which a debate on this subject can take place. When I say "the earliest opportunity" I do not mean in a month's time or next week. I mean this week either tomorrow or the day after. I am of the opinion that this should be the first subject discussed in the house because housing is in a critical state at the present time.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, may I say in very few words that we believe there is a real urgency of debate on this matter and that the government should be given an opportunity to tell us exactly what are its plans so far as housing is concerned. The reason I say this is that I believe we have a twofold program: first is the problem of the housing situation and second are the inflationary pressures which exist in the country at present. A great deal of money poured into housing will bring about an increase in the inflationary pressures. We should like to hear from the government how it intends to combat the inflation resulting from higher prices and still meet the needs of housing which is a matter of great importance. On this point alone I think it is essential that we hear from the government and that you, Mr. Speaker, give an opportunity for a debate to take place so that the government can give us a clear picture of how they intend to meet the present situation where a great deal of money must be spent on housing and yet the inflationary pressures must not be allowed to continue.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the reason this matter is of urgency is that the period in which the situation can be corrected is very short because the construction season for this year will soon come to an end and by the end of this year, as a result of this government's lack of planning, close to 50,000 Canadian families will have inadequate housing to shelter them. This is a crisis. The government's housing program is actually running in reverse. In July we were given the last figures that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics makes available to the Canadian people. The number of housing starts in July was 7 per cent below the number of starts made in May and 14 per cent below the number of starts made in August. This situation is steadily worsening. It has approached crisis proportions. Even if the starts were maintained for the rest of the year at the rate of the July starts instead of decreasing further, as they have been doing for the past two months, by the end of this year we would still be able to produce only 146,000 housing starts instead of the absolute minimum of 190,000 housing starts which the Canadian Economic Council has told us is the minimum required for this country this year.

Therefore we must have a debate on this matter today. The government's plan is not a plan. As I said, it is running in reverse. We are producing less houses month by month and by the end of the year 50,000 Canadian families will be without shelter. Obviously the government has no plans to put forward. It is therefore the duty of the opposition to present plans to the government, which we intend to do, and to suggest what the government should do to get the 190,000 houses built in a year which the Canadian Economic Council has stated is the absolute minimum. Therefore a debate on housing should be proceeded with immediately and without delay.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, despite your request at the beginning of this debate that we confine our remarks to the urgency of the debate and not to the subject matter itself, every speaker who has taken advantage of Rule 26 has of course discussed and emphasized the fact that there is a housing shortage in this country. I should like to consider myself intellectually honest to the point that I agree there is a housing shortage in Canada at present, but unlike some of the hypocritical statements which I have just heard, particularly those made by the leader of the New Democratic party, I recognize that in this country there is the B.N.A. Act and that under the constitution of Canada housing is a provincial matter. Although the socialists preach in favour of particular status for one part of the country and not for another they have no hesitation in laying at the feet of the federal government the complete responsibility for the housing shortage, thus denying to the provinces their jurisdiction in this field.

I may be out of order, Mr. Speaker, but so was the leader of the New Democratic party. I wish to point out that I am not as concerned with the shortage of housing in this country for people in the $20,000 to $25,000 income bracket who need homes as I am about the shortage of low rental housing for people of average income. This is where the prime responsibility of the government lies, but requests for such housing must originate from civic and provincial authorities.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Far be it from me to attempt to give advice pertaining to the rules of this house. However, it is my understanding that the matter to be decided now is the necessity or urgency of debate at the present time. Is there or is there not a matter of urgency in and for the national interest relating to housing? In order to decide on the urgency of the debate I suggest a valued judgment must take place regarding how accurate and reliable are the reports of the economic council. If we assume that the advice of the economic council should be heeded—I for one believe that it should—then we need not only refer to the last and most recent report but we must refer to the previous reports made by this body a year ago. At that time a warning was issued to the government of an impending catastrophe in the housing situation. I submit that having largely ignored these warnings for well over a year the government has allowed a crisis of major importance to develop.

In view of the unpardonable delay, I suggest that there is now urgency of debate in regard to this matter of extreme national concern.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, normally at this stage of this kind of debate comments are expected to be restricted to the procedural point whether there is urgency of debate and whether the normal business of the house ought to be set aside so as to permit the house to deal with a matter that is not listed on the order paper for consideration by the house.

The discussion so far, Mr. Speaker, has, of course, been completely out of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: —because it has been directed entirely to the substance of the matter, namely, the housing situation in Canada.

I do not intend to go into the substance as fully as have hon. gentlemen opposite, but I should like to put on the record the fact that the government of Canada regards this matter as one of great importance and of great seriousness.

The government of Canada has taken action in the current year to add substantially to the development of a housing program in Canada. The Minister of Labour, who is responsible for housing, is unavoidably absent from the house today on public business, but in the past he has put on the record the facts with respect to the housing situation in Canada.

There will be opportunities very shortly to deal with this matter in an orderly way at a time when the minister is in the house.

Mr. Churchill: He should be here today.

Mr. MacEachen: There is on the order paper, Mr. Speaker, yet to be dealt with the estimates of the Department of Labour. These can be called at an appropriate time. We have the adjourned budget debate, with an amendment, and also a subamendment. One aspect of the subamendment opens up very clearly the field of housing. This must be dealt with by the house, and it will be at an early date. There are three supply motions to be considered by the house. Anyone of those can be chosen as an opportunity to deal with housing. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the situation has not changed in a way that would require the house to deal with this question today. I suggest that normal opportunities for debate will be available very shortly that will give members of the house an opportunity to deal with this very serious and important matter.

We have listed for consideration today other matters of public business, and these matters of public business are important. At a very early date, through one of the opportunities I have mentioned it will be possible for members of the house to express their concern about this important matter. The Minister of Labour will then be able to set on the record the facts with respect to housing and to outline the policy of the government.

If the motion for adjournment were accepted today, Mr. Speaker, it would be quite futile because the spokesman for the government who is normally present to deal with these matters would not be present.

Mr. Nielsen: Is he the only spokesman for the government?

Mr. Pearson: Same old gang.

Mr. MacEachen: How true, Mr. Speaker; it is the same old gang.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether hon. members want to pursue the debate. I might say that I have reached an opinion as a result of the arguments advanced by both sides of the house. However, I would not want to curtail this interesting discussion. I perceive the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre wishes to contribute to the debate and I will recognize him.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare began his remarks by saying that everyone who had spoken to this question was completely out of order. I suggest that practically all the members on this side of the house who have spoken to the question have addressed themselves to the urgency of debate. I would draw attention particularly to the fact that the hon. member for Mégantic read the portion of the citation that deals with this aspect of the problem. I think it is important and that the house should hear it again. Citation 100 (3) reads as follows:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself—

We all accept that.

—but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

That is the basis on which this request has been made by the official opposition, and it is the basis on which we intended to make the same request today. I point out to Your Honour that on some occasions when an attempt is made to adjourn the house under standing order 26 a spokesman for the government gets into the debate on the procedural question and indicates a definite time when the subject before us may be discussed. But today the government house leader has taken part in the debate and all he has given us is the assurance that it will be possible to discuss this matter some time soon. In light of the urgency of the situation, and in light of the need for discussion to take place so that the public interest will not suffer, we suggest it is not good enough to say that there will be a discussion of this matter soon.

In the course of a conversation I had with the government house leader this morning he was good enough to indicate to me the business for today and tomorrow and, for that matter, for the balance of this week. I suspect he has given that same information to the other house leaders. There is nothing in the list given to me that opens up the possibility of discussing the housing crisis this week.

[Mr. Pearson.]

I agree with all those who have spoken about the urgency of debate that the crisis is so serious that it is not proper for parliament to put it off week after week to that eventual day—some time soon. The crisis is here now. What is needed, and needed precisely within the terms of citation 100 (3), is debate now so that the public interest will not suffer.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that the minister responsible for housing the Minister of Labour, is not present. The Prime Minister has been able to make pronouncements on the question of housing. Surely this is a matter of government concern, despite the hon. member for Verdun who thinks it is a provincial matter. This matter is a federal responsibility. The whole country has been aware for the past two months of the growing nature of this crisis. Surely any prophet could have indicated that this question was going to be raised today. I submit that it is not a satisfactory excuse for the government to say that one particular minister is not here today to deal with the matter.

I am not discussing the urgency of the matter; we are all aware of that. I am saying that within the rules of the house there is urgency of debate, and that that debate ought to be allowed today.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has already taken part in this debate. Is he rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. MacEachen: I rose on a point of order and so stated, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to comment on the fact that the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister that it would not be conducive to reaching an early decision in this matter if we were to continue the argument on whether or not the point of view expressed by the minister is correct. If it will make the minister feel a bit better, I might tell him that generally speaking I tend to agree with the position he has taken.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Hon. members referred the Chair to paragraph 3 of citation 100 of Beauchesne, fourth edition. That is a well known citation and I am in full agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he quotes this citation and says that this is a matter of urgency and national importance. The wording, in part, is:

"Urgency"...mean "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough...

Of course, this is an entirely relative expression. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, as government house leader, says that some time soon, within a certain time, there will be an opportunity to discuss this important and obviously urgent matter. He has referred to the fact that an amendment to the budget motion is now before the house and that there are three supply motions to come before the house. I might add that one of these is to be brought forward very soon. I cannot say exactly when, unfortunately, but one motion has to be brought forward soon. There is also a third opportunity to which the minister referred.

My view would be, considering that this is the first day of the resumed session, that the best position to adopt might be to see whether some negotiations could not be entertained between the house leaders and for them to agree as to when would be the proper time, at an early date, to consider this important matter. If no such agreement is reached and if another motion were moved some time soon, the position of the Chair might be different then.

Perhaps I might read to hon. members part of paragraph 8 of citation 100 as found on page 91 of Beauchesne, fourth edition:

I do not think that, under the Standing Order... a motion on a subject of this kind, having such a very wide scope, was ever contemplated. What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs.

In their presentations hon. members have pointed to the fact that this is not a sudden emergency. It is perhaps a continuing emergency. I have some doubt, in view of this situation, whether this is the type of motion that can be and ought to be entertained under standing order 26. The citation continues:

—I do not think it was contemplated... that a question of very wide scope, which would demand legislation to deal with it in any effective manner—

Apparently that is the situation here.

—should be the subject of discussion on a motion for the adjournment of the House—

In view of these considerations I would tend to the conclusion that this motion cannot be entertained at this time but could be reconsidered by the Chair, to use the minister's words, some time soon.

TRADE

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED PRICE DECREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to address my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is absent, as it concerns his responsibility to the House of Commons on behalf of the wheat board. I might have directed it to the Minister of Finance but he is also absent. I shall therefore direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister explain to the house and country why wheat has dropped 22 cents per bushel since the announcement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce prior to the adjournment of the house that the price of wheat would increase by 20 cents a bushel following his report to the house on the Kennedy round of discussions?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is far too broad a question to be answered on orders of the day. I should be glad to take it as notice. There will be an opportunity very shortly to deal with the matter. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is away on official business. The Minister of Finance is attending the annual meeting of the world bank in Brazil. They will both be back in a few days. We shall have an early opportunity to discuss this important matter.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the international wheat agreement seems to have lapsed, did the Prime Minister or his government have any discussions with the United States at the ministerial level to avoid the decrease in wheat prices? Did discussions take place prior to the announcement by the United States that they were increasing the subsidy on their wheat, the effect of which would be to take our markets?

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Trade and Commerce has been in Washington during the course of the last month discussing this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the seriousness of this situation would the Prime Minister not agree to make a statement in the house on motions within the next day or two dealing with the matter?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That seems to be a good and reasonable suggestion. Perhaps we shall be able to do that tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the drop in the price of wheat could cost the prairie farmers over $100 million this year and as the international wheat agreement expired on July 31 and the new agreement will not be effective until the middle of 1968, would the Prime Minister say whether the government intends to take any steps in the near future to implement the promise he made to guarantee the farmers a payment of $2 a bushel f.o.b. Fort William?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the question of wheat prices is under consideration. Perhaps my hon. friend could have restricted his remarks to that and not gone back into old election controversies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would take a more broad minded, non-political attitude we could make more progress.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention to indicate by his remarks, that all his promises are to be treated as lightly as he has treated that one?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As we have already had four or five supplementary questions I suggest we move to another matter to allow other hon. members to ask questions. If there is time, and I assume there will be, we can return to the subject.

[Later:]

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is supplementary to one raised earlier by the hon. member for Bow River. I am sorry that the Chair did not look my way when I rose to speak. In reply to the hon. member the Prime Minister said that he would ask the minister concerned to report later in respect of the 22 cent drop in the price of wheat because he felt the question was important. Would the Prime Minister ask the minister to indicate when replying, why the international wheat agreement lapsed? I think this is the important question in this whole matter.

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I feel this question is properly addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the wheat crop in western Canada has been somewhat less than average but of extremely high quality, what measures is the government taking to see that this high quality wheat is moved into the markets of the world?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss this with the minister. I wish he were here today.

[Translation]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—CONSIDERATION OF NATIONAL UNITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister concerning the delicate situation now existing in the field of federal relations with Quebec.

Does the government intend to call a meeting of the federal members from the province of Quebec to discuss the problem of national unity and the Quebec situation in order to obtain from them a free non-partisan opinion to which the government might give consideration during federal-provincial conferences, should agreements be concluded? If so, when can we expect that such a meeting will be called?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that there will be an opportunity in parliament before long to discuss this important matter. That discussion, I am sure, will not be restricted to the federal members of parliament for Quebec.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO SETTLEMENT NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of reports that a few days ago a Canadian representative was in Hanoi to meet with officials of the government of North Viet Nam, can the Prime Minister indicate what if any progress is being made in efforts to begin negotiations to bring the conflict to a conclusion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian representative in question was the Canadian member of the international commission there and he was paying a regular visit to Hanoi, as he does from time to time. No particular significance, of course, is to be attached to that visit.

I cannot say that there has been any progress in regard to the opening of negotiations on this important matter. Certainly no substantial progress has been made since the house last met. The matter is continuously being examined, more particularly from the Canadian point of view by the Secretary of State for External Affairs who has had discussions in New York concerning it. The matter will be before the United Nations general assembly and perhaps the security council during the forthcoming weeks.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister not indicate to the house what steps the government intends to take to stem the rapid acceleration in the increase in the cost of living which has taken place during the three months since this house last met?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will not be possible to answer such a far reaching question on orders of the day. We shall be having a five-day budget debate very shortly, I hope, when my hon. friend and other members can go into this matter and the government will be able to reply.

Mr. Hees: Will the Prime Minister assure the house that when the budget debate does take place he will outline the steps the government intends to take to overcome, for example, the effects of the 2 per cent increase in the cost of living which has taken place in the last two months—an unbelievable acceleration?

Mr. Pearson: Most of the hon. gentleman's statements are unbelievable. I admit, though, that this is a very serious matter.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry in connection with a specific aspect of this problem. Can the hon. gentleman indicate whether the recent increase in the price of automobiles is due to the government's failure to cope with inflation or to the effects of the international automobile agreement?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question is argumentative.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN U.S. ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILE NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding the proposed construction by the United States of an anti-ballistic missile network. Is Canada in any way involved in this construction, will any part of this network be constructed on Canadian soil, and have any commitments been made or is there any prospect of any being made with regard to it?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. As already stated, we are not involved in this decision of the United States government to proceed with an anti-ballistic missile defence facility. We are not involved in any way, nor do I think we shall be involved in this particular project. Naturally, we are anxious to obtain all the information we can on such an important step and to deal with the situation as it may develop in the future in the best interests of Canada and of peace, but we are not involved with this particular project in any way nor do I have any information to indicate that the United States government will be asking us for facilities of any kind on our soil in this connection.

I might add, since there have been reports to the contrary which were inaccurate, that we were informed of the decision of the United States government in this matter before it was made public.

Mr. Douglas: In view of what happened in connection with the installation of the Bomarc missiles in Canada, may we have an assurance from the Prime Minister that no commitment will be made by the Canadian government before the matter has been referred to parliament and its members informed of any action which is contemplated by the cabinet?

Mr. Pearson: If a situation were to develop requiring such an important change in Canadian defence policy and, indeed, perhaps in foreign policy, as to call for participation in an operation of this magnitude, with all the complications and implications of such a decision, I think that if parliament was sitting parliament would be consulted first.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the decision of the United States to establish such an anti-missile system is not inconsistent with the NORAD Treaty, which was signed by Canada, to the effect that the United States should confer with Canada as regards North American defence?

Mr. Speaker: That question is argumentative and out of order.

[English]

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): A supplementary to the Prime Minister on this question of North American air defence. In view of statements from Washington that the United States defence department is considering going beyond the missile defence project announced last week toward a new form of bomber defence for North America, may I ask whether the right hon. gentleman has any information with respect to Canada's role in these circumstances?

Mr. Pearson: I know of no request or suggestion by the United States that we should alter the nature of our present participation in continental defence against manned bombers in any way. I will discuss this matter with the Minister of National Defence, however, before giving a definite response.

[Later:]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister and come back to a subject considered by the house a few minutes ago, and ask him whether the government intends to renew the agreement concerning the air defence of NORAD, which will be coming to an end shortly?

[Mr. Douglas.]

[English]

Mr. Pearson: That matter is under active examination, Mr. Speaker, and I hope it will be possible to make an announcement in the house with regard to it very shortly.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN PROPOSED PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to the constructive proposal of the prime minister of Ontario to hold a conference on the subject "Confederation for Tomorrow." Will the Prime Minister reconsider his position with regard to participation by the federal government and agree to be present himself or at least to have a senior federal minister participate so that the federal position may be presented in a positive and constructive manner?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for the Prime Minister of Canada to be present as an observer at a provincial conference called by the head of the government of one province not as a federal-provincial conference but as an occasion for provincial consideration. This was made clear by the prime minister of Ontario when he met with other heads of provinces and myself last July; he had in mind a provincial conference though he would welcome federal participation in an observer capacity. There will be federal observers at the conference.

Mr. Fulton: The Prime Minister seems to indicate that the representation at this conference will be non-ministerial. Will he tell us what the nature of the federal participation will be? At what level will the government be represented? Will there be participation and, if so, what instructions have been given with regard to the position to be taken? Or will the federal government be represented merely by an observer?

Mr. Pearson: We have undertaken to the province of Ontario to send observers and we shall send observers from an appropriately high level.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to delegate the hon.

Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau), who has definite ideas on the Canadian constitution, to this interprovincial meeting in Toronto and whether the hon. Minister of Justice will then speak for all the cabinet members or for himself only?

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform the house whether the representation at this conference will be merely at the level of back-room experts or civil servants or whether it will consist of members of this house?

Mr. Speaker: The question is a repetition of one which was asked previously.

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of recent statements made in Quebec by members of the Prime Minister's own government and party concerning constitutional matters affecting Canada's future, will the right hon. gentleman take an early opportunity to make known the position of his government on this important subject for the benefit of the house and of Canadians generally?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have made a great many statements on this matter in recent months and years. I hope an opportunity will soon arise in this house when we can discuss this most important subject, a matter which we all consider to be a serious one. At that time I hope to be in a position to make the kind of statement which the hon. gentleman is suggesting.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in deliberating over this question will the Prime Minister and his government reconsider the proposal which has been made a number of times and accepted in general principle by the right hon. gentleman himself, namely, that the whole subject of the constitutional future of Canada be referred to a special committee of the house?

Mr. Pearson: I said in this house last spring that I believed it would be important to have this question considered by hon. members, possibly by means of a special committee, but that I thought such consideration would be more useful if it came after the federal government had made up its own mind with regard to its own policy on this most important matter so that it could submit that policy to a committee of the house and to the house itself. Since that time, as the hon. member knows, we have been studying the question. We have set up a special branch in the Department of Justice for that purpose under a full-time senior official appointed for those duties. I hope this study will be completed before long. We will then be able to consider submitting the decision of the government to the kind of committee the hon. member has mentioned and obtain the views of others in this house on the question.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, when a discussion does take place in parliament can we be assured that the Minister of Justice will participate as a member of the cabinet and that his position will not be disavowed as it was by the Prime Minister and the rest of the Liberal caucus?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the final report of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission is about to be published and tabled in this house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that this is a supplementary question, but since it has been asked it will be allowed.

Mr. Grégoire: May I then ask the right hon. Prime Minister when the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission is to be tabled in this house and whether he himself has already received this report?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: No, I have not received the report yet, Mr. Speaker, but I have been assured that the first, or is it the second volume of the report of the commission—the second and very important volume of the report should be available before the end of November, and I hope that date will be kept.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASES IN PENSIONS AND DISABILITY ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the hon. and gallant Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of representations made by the Canadian Legion, other veterans organizations, the chairman of the standing committee on veterans affairs, other members of the committee and members of the house, on the urgent need for an increase in disability pensions and war veterans allowances, can the minister inform the house of the government's intention with respect to his urgent question?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice that he would ask this question today. Unfortunately I have no specific answer for him. The matter is still under consideration and no conclusion has been reached.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): As a supplementary question, can the minister advise whether the report of the departmental committee on the basis of establishing disability pensions has been received and, second, whether such an amendment will be provided by way of amendment to the Pension Act or by way of estimates?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first of this three-part question is that I have not yet received the report of the departmental committee. The answers to the other parts will depend on the circumstances at the time when a decision is reached.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FREEDMAN REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the newly appointed Minister of Transport, but in his absence perhaps I may ask the Prime Minister whether he will ask the Minister of Transport to use his powers relating to integration to see if he can possibly integrate the recommendations of the Freedman report into policy and make an appropriate announcement in regard thereto?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to take that up with the new minister, Mr. Speaker.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROVINCES ACCEPTING INVITATION TO ATTEND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is reported as having stated that five of the provinces have now accepted his invitation to the federal-provincial conference called for early next year. Could he tell us which provinces these are?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer, if possible, not to do that because I do not want to put the others, which have perhaps been delayed a bit, in an invidious position. I have reminded the other provinces today that I am hoping for replies shortly, and if my hon. friend would wait until the end of the week perhaps I may have ten replies.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have been invited to participate in that conference.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the Prime Minister did not hear my question, Mr. Speaker. Have either the government of the Yukon Territory or the government of the Northwest Territories, or both of them, been asked to participate in that conference?

Mr. Pearson: I shall have to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has completed its consideration of the unanimous report of the joint special committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the public service for an increase in pensions of retired public servants and, if so, whether high priority will be given to implementing legislation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer this question by simply stating that the government has not at this point completed its consideration of the matter.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Could the minister give any indication of when the consideration might be completed?

Mr. Benson: In due course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if we are going to get action on this matter or is it going to be put off indefinitely?

Mr. Benson: When the government has made its decision that decision will be made known to the house in the usual manner.

Mr. Knowles: Shame.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE BUDGET REVISION RESPECTING HOUSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the accelerating crisis in housing, the shortage of mortgage funds and rising interest rates, does the government intend to revise or amend the budget which was presented to us prior to the summer recess?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

WASKESIU, SASK.—POSSIBLE RETENTION OF TOURIST CABINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Could the minister inform the house whether his drastic plan to do away with the cabins at Waskesiu will be proceeded with or will he take into consideration the strong representations of tourists in Saskatchewan not to do this?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether this question is of immediate urgency. It is difficult for the Chair to decide.

Mr. Rapp: It is urgent.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SASKATOON—INQUIRY AS TO STATION CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the previous understanding that construction of the C.B.C. television station in Saskatoon would commence on or before September 1 of this year, and in view of reports that such construction has been stalled at cabinet level, can the Prime Minister tell the house when construction of the station in Saskatoon will be commenced?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest to the hon. member that that question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Brand: It would take just as long to get an answer that way as it has taken the government to act on this matter and if I could get an answer from the Prime Minister now it would save a great deal of time for the people of my constituency.

METHOD OF DEALING WITH ALLEGED SEPARATIST ELEMENTS

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Does he intend to bring shortly before parliament a resolution designed to rid the C.B.C. of the separatist elements which spread confusion among true Canadians?

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to introduce such a resolution? When can we expect to discuss the matter of the C.B.C., which is imperative at present in Canada?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the importance of this question but I am not able to deal with it on orders of the day.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he in a position today to advise the house of the names of those who will serve on the complement of the Cape Breton Development Corporation apart from those already announced?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker, but I hope to do so shortly.

Mr. Grafftey: What has the government been doing all summer?

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ROADS TO RESOURCES—INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. On several occasions during the past year and a half the Prime Minister informed me that the cabinet was studying the possibility of reinstituting the roads to resources program. Can the Prime Minister now say whether this important matter is still being considered and when a decision may be reached?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to make a statement on the matter today but I shall look into it right away.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether he has received any representations from the premier of Saskatchewan regarding the necessity of re-establishing the roads to resources program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this is the type of question that can be asked at this time. If there is no urgency the hon. member might place the question on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

P.F.A.A.—REQUEST FOR EARLY REPORTS BY INSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he assure the house and the many interested farmers of western Canada that P.F.A.A. inspectors will be told to get their reports on the various crop failures in many districts filed as soon as possible so that farmers will receive assistance payments at an early date?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that a very large number of P.F.A.A. inspectors have been appointed this year—

An hon. Member: Are they all Liberals?

Mr. Greene: —and have commenced their work. Many of them are relics of the 1957 to 1963 era.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. What is the government doing in respect of its promise to assist in any extradition proceedings taken against Hal Banks?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which is under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario and, as I understand it, that province is asking for extradition in this matter.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether this should be a supplementary question or a repetition of the previous question because my question to the Prime Minister was, what is the government doing in respect of its promise to assist in any extradition proceedings taken against Hal Banks?

Mr. Pearson: We will be very glad to assist the province in this matter in the appropriate way.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said that he will be very glad to give assistance. What assistance is he giving the provincial government, because no doubt the government is interested in getting Hal Banks back to serve his term in penitentiary?

Mr. Pearson: I do not know whether any assistance has been requested.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister and the government are inclined to leave this matter to the provincial authorities in Ontario, I wonder whether the Prime Minister takes exception to the remarks made by the defence counsel for Mr. Banks in New York to the effect that this proceeding is an effort to save face for the Canadian people and the Canadian parliament?

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR EARLY APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, it had been my intention to direct this question to the Secretary of State. I do not see her in the house at the moment, so possibly it might be taken as notice.

In view of the public concern at this time about the alleged shortage of Canadian content in broadcasting, would the Secretary of State arrange for an early meeting of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts so this matter can be considered?

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT RESPECTING SOCIAL MATTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since there appears to be some confusion about when the government will be dealing with the subject of abortion, can the minister advise the house whether the government will refer to a standing committee of the house at an early date the two private members' bills and other views on this subject?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Would my hon. friend permit me to answer that question tomorrow? I think we will be discussing the matter in cabinet tomorrow morning.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister is answering that question would he indicate to the house at what point in this session we might be dealing with other social matters such as divorce, birth control and capital punishment?

Mr. Pearson: I think perhaps it would be more useful if the house leader would get in touch with the house leaders of the other parties in an effort to work out a timetable for this session within the limits of unpredictability.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR PRESENCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I should like to preface it by noting that seven or eight ministers who hold major portfolios are absent on this opening day. Would the Prime Minister make an effort to have his ministers here during this first week of the adjourned session so that they will be able to answer questions which have arisen during the recess?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that all the ministers who are not here are away on important public business, with the exception of one who is ill. It would be of help if ministers could be given notice by members of any questions they wish to ask if they are indeed important ones.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIMS COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is he now in a position to inform the house when the long-awaited Indian claims commission will be set up?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the situation in respect of the Indian claims commission is the same as it was when the house rose for the summer vacation. Representations are still being made to us by the Indians of British Columbia that it not be introduced until they have been given an opportunity to discuss the British Columbia land question. I have again advised them that we cannot wait much longer and that I expect we will have to introduce the bill at least by next spring.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister be in a position to introduce the revised Indian Act at this session of parliament?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of priority. If the matters of first priority are dealt with quickly I think it is quite possible that the Indian Act could be dealt with. At the present time it is being discussed by my officials with representatives of the Indian Advisory Board of Canada.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Can the minister advise the house whether he would consider setting a deadline for the Indians of British Columbia to complete their representations so that the Indian claims commission could be set up?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, anything I have said to the Indians of British Columbia would make that quite possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question concerning the Indian Act. Does the minister intend to bring in the bill before the Christmas recess in view of statements made by the minister and the statement that the group of revolting Indians would not be able to kick their way out of a paper bag? I do not agree with this. If the bill to amend the Indian Act were brought in we might be able to eliminate some of these problems.

Mr. Speaker: Since the hon. member has referred to the Christmas recess, I think the question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Ten o'clock.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Is it still the intention to have the committee visit the Indian reserves across the country?

Mr. Laing: That would be my hope. In addition I would hope that copies of the bill would be distributed to the Indian people for purposes of consultation and advice. I would hope that the committee would be reinstituted so that it can continue its work which I believe is full of promise.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REACTION BY PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT BY GENERAL DE GAULLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister with regard to the visit to Quebec of the president of the French republic, General de Gaulle.

I should like to ask him how he can reconcile the fact that according to the statement he our Prime Minister himself, made during General de Gaulle's visit to Quebec, all the provinces are free while, at the same time, being shocked when General de Gaulle shouted "long live free Quebec".

Can the Prime Minister tell us how he was unable to see the inconsistency contained in that statement and does he intend to apologize to General de Gaulle for being discourteous with him?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Broadview—

Mr. Grégoire: Can the hon. Prime Minister answer the question?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not in order.

Mr. Grégoire: Perhaps an answer is impossible.

[Mr. Laing.]

HOUSING

TORONTO—COMPENSATION IN URBAN REDEVELOPMENT PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Labour. Have the Minister of Labour and the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved the formula of compensation devised by the city of Toronto and approved by the provincial authorities for home owners whose homes were expropriated in what is known as the Donmount urban renewal area in Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the question should be placed on the order paper.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION AS TO ADMISSION OF RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I hope I do not totally exhaust the Prime Minister on this opening day.

In light of the government's activity last fall at the session of the United Nations and the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs last night, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government will again press this fall for the seating of mainland China at the United Nations and take some definite action in that regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our policy in that regard has not changed. As the minister indicated last night—by the way, he is not here at the moment because he is on his way to New York—our policy has not changed and we think it is important to have the voice of mainland China at the United Nations as quickly as possible. This does not seem to be a very good moment to repeat the initiative we took last autumn, without success, but that does not mean our policy has changed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED EXCLUSION OF MINERS FROM MANPOWER RETRAINING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister inform the house whether early action can be anticipated to correct the situation whereby miners are excluded from the retraining and upgrading program that is available to all other workers in this country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have more details on this question because I do not agree with the hon. member's general statement. If he has particular cases in mind I should like to look into them.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary to the minister. In view of the present chaotic marketing situation for freshwater fish, does the minister now have specific plans for implementing the recommendations of the McIvor Commission to establish a freshwater fish marketing board?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this is a question of a very general nature and I doubt that it can be asked at this time.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION COUNCIL

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ADVISORY BOARDS, ETC.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a Canada Manpower and Immigration Council, of advisory boards and of regional and local manpower committees; to provide also for the appointment of the members thereof, their remuneration, allowances and other expenses; and to provide further that all expenditures for the purpose of the act shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament therefor.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the bill proposed in the resolution is to reorganize the structure of the advisory councils that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration may consult.

At present, three advisory boards have been transferred from the Department of Labour to the Department of Manpower and Immigration. They are the National Advisory Council on Technical and Vocational Training, the National Advisory Committee on the Rehabilitation of Disabled persons and the National Employment Advisory Committee. Regional and local committees also advise regional and local offices of the National Employment Service.

Those organizations have rendered valuable services, but none of them has been able to meet the full requirements of my department and in some respects, their duties are not as clearly defined as they should be.

[English]

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to rationalize the structure so as to give me the best possible benefit of outside advice about all of the department's activities. The bill provides for one council charged with the responsibility of looking at the field of manpower and immigration as a whole. This will be supported by four specialized boards in the major program areas of adult occupational training, vocational rehabilitation, the adjustment of immigrants to Canada and research on manpower and immigration. The bill also provides for continuing regional and local manpower committees.

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to underrate the importance of the present resolution; but I believe that, generally speaking, the opposition is surprised, to say the least, that it is the first item on the orders of the day when such ticklish problems as housing and the cost of living are our citizens' prime concern. We are still anxiously seeking what measures the government should introduce, and soon, to solve those problems efficiently.

With regard to the present resolution, we note that by creating advisory councils and regional and local committees for the manpower division, the hon. minister seems to further the application of a principle established by the national employment offices. These, had indeed been successful in interesting and involving local organizations such as the chambers of commerce, school boards, managers of the existing factories, municipal councils and so on in winter works projects, for example, and in manpower orientation.

Having personally taken part in the work of these committees in the Lachute region, in the county of Argenteuil-Deux Montagnes, I know that these committees can be very efficient, and it is to be hoped that we will be able to continue to rely on the initiative of managers and local authorities to provide real and not pretended service.

If that is the case, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) will have to be congratulated for this new initiative, as will also and especially the citizens who voluntarily lend their services to such enterprises without receiving full recognition for their contribution, without which no success would be possible.

On the other hand, there are some pitfalls to watch and that is surely what we will be looking for when the bill following this resolution is introduced.

First and most important is that the setting up of these various committees does not afford the minister an opportunity to avoid ministerial responsibility in the establishment of this policy on the plea that the whole thing is in the hands of committee members who will have to do their best and be responsible for the success or failure of their operations.

The main problem of the committees I have mentioned has precisely been the absence of direction and of overall planning in the alternatives to be offered. It is up to the minister, basically and exclusively, and to his departmental officials to constantly supervise the development and direction of these committees, and that is surely what we, on this side, will look for in the setting up of the principle and of the act.

Secondly, we have already emphasized on the introduction of the bill respecting the occupational training of adults, on page 15393 of Hansard, that lack of sufficient research not only among the local population to determine their tastes, their ambitions, their experiences, their willingness to move but also among industries and in new areas to determine their capacity to absorb these new elements.

What better example than that of Elliott Lake in the riding of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), Algoma East, where there has been a drop of 60 per cent in the enrolment of retraining classes in an area affected by unemployment for a long time.

There again we strongly insist on sociological as well as demographic research to ensure a balanced, progressive and especially lasting development.

Thirdly, the present government has the reputation, not very enviable, of multiplying everywhere and in an alarming way operating costs and bureaucracy. This is another opportunity of swelling the expenses and the number of employees beyong measure. It is time as early as the resolution stage to provide for a close co-ordination with existing services. It would have seemed at least possible, on this particular point, to prevent the passing of a new legislation entailing a separate administration, a separate budget, an increase of jobs, staff and expenses.

The minister is not without knowing surely that he is blamed in several places for providing very comfortable, not to say luxurious, accommodations which look more like monuments than workshops for research and training.

There is also some displeasure among the civil servants because the tasks are not clearly defined and circumscribed. Both blames stress the dangers we have mentioned: excessive spending and increased bureaucracy.

[English]

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we will also be watching the degree of closely-knit consultation with provincial and municipal authorities which is essential in developing these boards and committees.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The need for this preoccupation was underlined very early in the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, and I suspect that this is not the last time that the report will be quoted. I quote the following from the last paragraph on page 2 of the report:

> In Canada there is not only the problem of achieving greater cohesion and consistency in the making and implementation of policy within a particular government but also a larger challenge than exists in most other countries to achieve such cohesion and consistency among the three levels of government. Similarly, decision-making in the private sector of the economy is widely decentralized. Yet, because of the extensive and intricate interrelationships of a modern industrial society, the achievement of a cohesive and consistent appraisal of a wide range of problems and questions of policy facing both governments and private groups becomes increasingly important.

> Too frequently in the past, the economy has found itself in the midst of problems which could not be easily and quickly resolved once they emerged—education, shortages of skilled and professional manpower, business investment, public construction and urban development offer striking illustrations—but which could have been anticipated through a more effective use of available information and prior study, or even averted through more timely and concerted public and private policies.

Constant, complete and early consultation is therefore essential among the three levels of government and the private sector if this new initiative or new approach is to be successful.

Therefore, with reference to this resolution the official opposition awaits the presentation of the bill and will seek out evidence of proper research, local involvement, ministerial responsibility, excessive costs, superfluous staff, and full consultation with every sector involved.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, we in this group welcome the resolution and the statement of the minister proposing to set up an advisory committee or committees to help him lay down policy in the fields of manpower and immigration. We welcome it because we have been proposing such a policy for a number of years, as have organizations such as the Canadian Labour Congress. We welcome it also because the minister certainly needs some advice and needs it very quickly. The fact is that the results we expected from the changes made in the manpower training program following the government's decision last year to abandon the technical and vocational training program and take over manpower training, which we predicted would lead to a very sharp reduction in the number of people being retrained, have come about.

I have some figures I wish to put on the record which are, to say the least, disturbing if not disastrous. These figures may surprise members of the house and the public in general but I am sure the minister knows them as well as I do. The situation is not only as bad as members of the opposition said months ago it would be, not only as bad as people working in the field for some of the cities and in the provincial departments of education said it would be; it is even worse.

A very good summary of the arguments for and against the changes which the minister introduced after a good deal of discussion is contained in two articles which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on April 22 of this year. The first article summarizes the objections of the government of Ontario and its department of education. It was written by Barrie Zwicker. I will read a few of the points which Mr. Zwicker made:

> The key points in the new regulations exclude from allowances any person under 17 and any single person over 17 with fewer than three years of working experience. Before April, everyone was eligible.
> Among the persons who do not qualify are young dropouts (or graduates) who find in a year or two after leaving school that they have no marketable skill, childless widows who suddenly need to work . . .

Farther on he wrote the following about the minister:

> He wants to upgrade the nation's work force fast. But Ottawa is inexperienced at the education game and has been unwilling to listen to advice from the provinces.
> Another part lies in a liberal dose of what is described as bureaucratic arrogance by Ottawa, misunderstandings and some legislative bad luck.

At that time the Ottawa bureau of the Globe and Mail received answers from the department and from the minister which were published in an article that appeared on the same page. It was headed, "And Ottawa Points A Finger Right Back", and contained some of the defences and explanations. Part of it reads as follows:

> The change means that the federal government has taken on the full cost of training or retraining adults, leaving the provinces with the full cost of educating the young.
> The federal spokesman also said that newly arrived immigrants accorded landed immigrant status will be able to count their time spent in the labour force in their country of origin when applying for living allowances for job retraining here. This will place them in the same position as Canadian members of the labour force.
> The new regulations also make exceptions from the three-year rule for persons with dependents. Individuals who have been out of school for 12 months and have dependents will qualify for the training allowance.

Farther on it goes on to say:

> Federal officials explain that the reason for prohibiting school-age youths from qualifying is to prevent some from dropping out of school, collecting the training allowance and then returning to regular schooling.

I will not repeat what the minister and his parliamentary secretary have said already or what I said or what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said, but let me point out that we have now had some months in which to see what has happened. I took the trouble to write to the city of Toronto over a month ago. We now have the record. It is a pretty bleak one and the minister will see the need for giving us an explanation almost immediately. Here it is. In the last year the number of people taking retraining courses in the city of Toronto under the program now administered and paid for by the federal government has dropped disastrously. The figures are as follows: In February of 1967 the people who were taking training under programs 3, 4, 5 and 6 in the city of Toronto numbered 5,980. On March 31, 1967 the number of people taking training under these programs was 5,970. At the end of April the number was 5,440. By May 31, the number was 5,134. By June 30 the number had dropped to 4,526. By July 31 the number had dropped to 4,132, and by August 31 the number had dropped to 3,711. The number is down by 40 per cent. This is a disaster in a country which the Economic Council of Canada says needs to have a much more skilled work force.

These figures do not tell the whole story. They do not tell how serious the situation is. For example, amongst the 4,100 people in the city of Toronto who were taking training on July 31 of this year there were still a large number of people taking training who had registered and started their training before the new program took effect.

Let us look at the situation with regard to applications. In March, 1966 there were 1,235 applications in the city of Toronto. In March of this year there were 1,524 applications, an increase over last year. In April, 1966 there were 830 applications; in April of this year there were only 338 applications, a drop of more than 50 per cent. In May, 1966 there were 805 applications for training; in May of this year there was a slight increase, 971. In June, 1966—this is when the government's new program was beginning to bite and take effect—there were 830 applications in the city of Toronto; in June of this year there were 262. In July, 1966 there were 805 applications; in July of this year there was a grand total, Mr. Chairman, of 92. In August last year there were 995 applications; in August of this year there were 239. In September of last year there were 1,154 applications; in September this year there were 278 applications.

So, Mr. Chairman, the picture is clear. In the space of one year there has been in the city of Toronto, one of the two largest and most important employment and labour centres in Canada, a reduction of substantially more than 50 per cent in the number of applications. The government and the minister took on this job and told us they knew what they were doing, that the provinces were exaggerating their problems and difficulties. Yet here is the situation, and it is even worse than we predicted.

Is this true only of the city of Toronto, Mr. Chairman? No, it is not. I have been given to understand that the Vancouver city school board has virtually abandoned its English upgrading program because of the new policies and regulations which have been made under this program.

Let me refer for a moment to the situation in the city of Ottawa. In September, 1966 there were between 200 and 300 students who applied and registered for upgrading programs. These were people who were referred to the school in Ottawa by manpower officials in this city. Compared with the 200 to 300 who applied last year only 30 to 40 have applied this year. These are applications for upgrading programs involving study in grades seven, eight, nine and ten.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that I was not going to quote the minister, but during a debate some months ago he said that the new programs would permit people to take skill courses lasting up to one year. Although I have not been able to find the exact quotation, on one occasion his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Hamilton East, said that every Canadian who met the other qualifications would be eligible for one year's upgrading training and one year's skill training, or a maximum of two years of training.

I now understand—if I am wrong about this I should be glad to be corrected by the minister or his parliamentary secretary—that orders have gone out to the manpower counsellors to do their best to eliminate all students who want to take upgrading courses. I understand that the department has issued a directive to the effect that skill training which has been provided by the manpower department for the select few to whom I have already referred will be limited not to the one year program about which the minister talked but to a program lasting a maximum of 26 weeks.

As I have said on other occasions—and I do want to give credit where credit is due—the original program was begun under the former government by the then minister of labour, the hon. member for Ontario. It is a program under which the federal government has spent more than $600 million to help the provinces build technical and vocational training schools. In light of the annual reports that we have received from the Economic Council of Canada and in light of the speeches which have been made across the country by the minister and his departmental officials about the importance of manpower training, it seems incredible to me that instead of expanding the program it is being curtailed. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I think it is fair to say that the program is being strangled.

It seems to me that perhaps this new Advisory council will be able to provide some of the answers that we have not been able to get from the minister. We need to know whether the government has decided that the recommendations made by the Economic Council with regard to the retraining program and the upgrading of skills in the labour force of Canada are unacceptable and it is therefore cutting back, whether the minister now finds that the government does not have the money to pay for the large number of Canadian workers who are willing to take courses to upgrade their skills, or whether what we have is a bureaucratic morass under which the job simply cannot be done.

My colleague from Greenwood will be discussing the question of immigrants so I am not going into detail on the problem of immigration. However, I should like to repeat what I have said on other occasions. We in this party believe in an aggressive immigration policy. The party to which I belong agrees with a policy which brings more immigrants to this country every year who speak other than English or French. We have been following a policy of encouraging the coming to Canada of more people from Italy, Portugal and Greece each year, and I approve of that policy.

In light of all the advices given us to the effect that a working force which is not well trained will be unable to do the jobs required of it in coming years, surely we should be expanding our training facilities for new immigrants who wish to learn English. If I may refer to the situation in Toronto specifically, the Toronto board of education has a program called "Special English For New Canadians", but it is obvious that rather than expanding the program we are killing it.

Let me close by putting on the record some figures relative to what is happening. In February of this year there were 2,300 people taking the course, "Special English For New Canadians", which is held in Toronto. In March there were 2,290 people taking the course, in April 2,270, in May 2,060, in June 1,700, in July 1,479, and in August there were only 1,137 people taking the course.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the minister and his departmental officials will agree that if we are to encourage people whose native tongue is not English to come to Canada it is elementary that every single one of them should be persuaded to attend either day school or night school to learn English, or to learn French if they are living in the province of Quebec, and to learn the language as quickly as possible.

The figures I have given for Toronto could be duplicated for Montreal, Ottawa or Vancouver and show precisely the same situation.

Before I sit down may I say that since provincial departments of education have not been able to obtain the answers to these questions which are of utmost importance to the people of Canada and to the manpower needs of this country in the years to come, the advisory committees which the minister proposes to appoint should be enabled to obtain those answers which this country deserves to have.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be very brief at this time; as the bill is not available and the government policy is not clearly known yet, it is rather difficult at this point to dwell at length on the matter.

In any case, it seems to me that this bill is concerned mainly with the manpower problem in Canada, rather than immigration, although in my estimation both are rather closely related.

I think that a Canadian manpower council should be set up, as this is a relatively new area of concern for the Canadian government, and this is due, I think, to the technological explosion occurring not only in this country but throughout the world.

I think that if the council is asked to advise the government instead of being told by the latter what recommendations to make, it would be more effective because the government seems, by itself, unable to find the proper means of meeting the requirements of manpower relocation arising from the technical development of our industries.

And here I should like to urge the minister to invite the industry to participate as closely as possible in the manpower training program, not only by providing advice or facilities, but from a financial point of view. I think that industries, especially major industries, should have funds available for such a contingency in order to improve their production techniques.

Then, the burden of manpower development, which we must foresee, would not fall upon the Canadian taxpayer alone, but also on the big financiers, the capitalists who have also some responsibilities in the field of technological change.

So, Mr. Chairman, these are the comments I wished to make at this stage of the resolution. When the bill comes before us, we shall have a better understanding of what the government expects from this Canadian manpower and immigration council. I believe also, as I said before, that immigration is closely related to the manpower problem and that, therefore, the yearly influx of immigrants should be geared to our manpower needs.

I know that some people claim it is more economical to import skilled workers than to train them in Canada. Personally, I do not share this view. I think we must develop educational facilities in our own country so that we may find among our own countrymen the specialists needed by our industries to develop your country and to provide all consumers with the production and the finished products that we need.

Therefore, I think that we must be careful. The flow of immigration should be put under control when especially nowadays our unemployment rate is still too high. It should even be restricted to the fields were manpower is really needed where we cannot train rapidly enough skilled workers required by our industries.

When the bill is before us, we will be in a better position to discuss more clearly the aims of the government.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I will not speak at great length this afternoon on this resolution. The proposed manpower and immigration council may be most worth while and could operate on several levels. This is especially true of the advisory boards and the regional and local manpower committees.

In looking at this measure one suspects the possibility of another vast proliferation of civil servants. I hope that the functions performed by what I hope will be a limited number of such people will be worth while.

I expect that other members who have dealt with immigration problems have found, as I have, that they are interminable. Situations do not change. I hope that the recently announced regulations and the points system will improve that part of the immigration procedure. I hope that the council will have time and authority to look into immigration questions on a fairly broad basis. I think we are adopting a somewhat selfish policy when we take the cream from other countries in the world in the form of the best people they have to offer. We carry on a somewhat sanctimonious external aid program to countries that we are busily engaged in robbing of the very people they most need. What we imagine we are generously doing with the one hand, we undo with the other.

Perhaps the council might determine why in certain occupational areas we are so terribly short of Canadians to do certain jobs. As an example I mention teaching. In the province from which I come we obtain half the necessary teachers each year from outside the province, many of them coming from outside the country completely. At this time of year when school boards publish their acquisitions of new staff, one reads with amazement that people have come from Scotland, England, Ireland, Australia, the Philippines, India, Pakistan—indeed, from all over the world. People such as these who are coming to British Columbia and other parts of Canada I am sure are desperately needed in their own countries.

We obtain many of our skilled people from the British Isles, mainly because there is an inflow into the British Isles from the West Indies, Pakistan and India of others with similar qualifications. The outflow from Britain comes here. That has continued for some time and I do not know whether it is wisest or best for Canada or for the other countries that are losing their educated people to allow it to continue. The council might look at that aspect.

I hope that the local committees will have power to recommend on matters touching immigration for agricultural purposes. We must remember the needs of this important industry and be prepared to see people spend some years in agricultural work and then move to other occupations. That sort of policy would be wiser than a policy under which people are brought in almost as indentured labourers and sent home at the end of the season. Such a policy has never worked in any part of the world where it has been applied.

A local manpower committee would be able to assess the situation in the local area, and this applies particularly to agricultural areas. There may be a real possibility of bringing in people who are not the best educated and are not those most desperately needed back home. In this way we could possibly repair some of the damage done to countries which need the trained and expert people we so gladly receive in our own land.

As a young and developing nation we must, I feel, pursue an open immigration policy but I hope that through the wisdom of the council and the advisory boards it will be a just policy and one which will show consideration for the needs of the rest of the world as well as for our own immediate needs.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this resolution could be mere windowdressing, a hollow façade, or it could represent a move toward a constructive and intelligent community involvement in the significant work of the Department of Manpower and Immigration at the national, regional and local levels. The minister's brief and relatively uninformative statement this afternoon certainly gave us no indication which of these alternatives is likely to result from the resolution before us. Consequently it seems to me we must defer judgment and await the bill itself for a more elaborate explanation of its purpose before reaching a final conclusion.

I wish to make only two comments at this stage. The first is that the more community involvement there can be in government procedures at this level, the better it will be for government and the better it will be for manpower policy generally. We are in the days of big government—I fear this is inevitable—and it is more than ever important to get at local and regional levels a genuine committee involvement of dedicated persons who are prepared to give their time and energy in helping to formulate policy. This is important even at the staffing level.

One of the results of the creation of the new Canada manpower centres has been grave dissatisfaction on the part of the staff in some of these offices. I hope the minister will do something soon to remove the discrimination which exists as a result of the policies of his department and the policies of the Public Service Commission. I say to him this afternoon as we resume this session of parliament that unless decisive action is taken to remove discrimination against public servants in various offices of the manpower centres across the country he will have a tough time before the session ends.

With respect to the minister's observations about the local committees being involved in the adjustment of immigrants to Canada, I think the minister would agree with me that we have not done as much as we ought to have done in this connection nor has there been sufficient co-ordination at the provincial and municipal levels. I hope that settlement policies will in future be co-ordinated more closely than has been the case at any time in the past. I, for one, will be looking forward to what I hope will be constructive results from these local committees which are to deal, in the words the minister used, with the adjustment of immigrants to Canada.

The second point I should like to make is that I am concerned lest under this proposal for a Canada manpower and immigration council, immigration policy may become subordinate or subservient to manpower policy. This, the minister may remember, is precisely the fear I expressed at the time the reorganization bill was under discussion in the house when the Department of Manpower and Immigration was created—a fear lest immigration policy might become at all times conditioned exclusively to what might be the economic circumstances or the economic whims within this country during a particular period.

This committee and the house have listened frequently to my contention that immigration is a stimulus to the economy, that it is a genuine stimulus in a period of economic recession just as it is in a period of economic growth. I reject completely any tap on, tap off policy or any attempt to relate long-range immigration objectives to immediate changes in our economic climate. So the warning I give this afternoon as the minister introduces his resolution is clear and definitive. I hope he will give us his assurance, and I hope the council will remember, that it is not the intention of this house that immigration policy shall be merely subservient to manpower policy and that we should only bring in immigrants when there are precise places available for their employment.

I disagree with the view expressed a short time ago by the hon. member for Chapleau. I believe it is a shortsighted view, one which will not permit this country to grow as rapidly as it ought. We need to set targets and objectives for immigration and go forward to meet those goals in the belief that the very bringing in of immigrants in maximum numbers will provide employment for more people in this country by providing an important stimulus.

That is my confession of faith in relation to immigration. I hope the bringing together of manpower and immigration questions under this council will in no way make immigration policy subservient or subordinate to manpower policy.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, when the house was last meeting in July I had laryngitis and was unable to make my views heard. I do not suppose anything I have to say this afternoon will make the minister wish this condition had continued as a permanent affliction; nevertheless, there are some mild criticisms I should like to make and some reservations I should like to express, at least until we have the bill before us.

Here is a minister who spends over $300 million; he is the sixth ranking spender in the government heirarchy. Some of us have doubts about whether a young fellow, or at least one so young in parliamentary ways, should have so much spending money. I can tell him, however, that he has come here with a tremendous fund of good will on all sides, not only on the government side of the house, and we wish him well in his attempts to formulate new and important manpower policies in this technological age.

If we had any doubts they began with a bill that he brought before us in the spring. He had to introduce amendments to more than half its clauses, which gave a rather raffish air to the whole proceedings and at least suggested the legislation he presented has not really been thought out. However, since he is not a lawyer I will blame that shortcoming not on him but on his colleagues in government who should know better.

What has his policy accomplished to date? In an article in the Monetary Times of June, 1967, its Ottawa correspondent, Gordon Pape, had this to say, and I quote from page 31:

> Ask a Manpower official what's been achieved since the department came into de facto existence in January, 1966 (although things weren't made official until October), and he'll mention such things as a smoother seasonal farm program, slightly improved service in the Canada Manpower Centres (formerly National Employment Service offices)—

Mr. Munro: Would the hon. member please repeat the name of that magazine and the date of issue?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, certainly. The article was in the Monetary Times of June, 1967, and what I am quoting is found on page 31. I continue the quotation:

> —and aid to the economically-stricken residents of Newfoundland's Belle Isle. But impact on the Country as a whole? Virtually nil.
> To those who wanted instant action, it's a pretty poor show for a department that's due to spend almost $313,000,000 of the taxpayers' money during the current fiscal year—a figure that's exceeded by only five other ministries.

Our problem, sir, is the effective use of manpower in Canada or of manpower that is going to be attracted to this country. To the extent that the minister is able to make effective use of that manpower, to use it to increase our productivity and make us economically more healthy, he will have achieved the purposes of his policies.

One thing that pleases me in the setting up of this manpower council and immigration council is the fact that what used to be conflicting sides of the problem are in effect being melded. I have said "conflicting sides," and to make my point very quickly and perhaps very forcefully I point out that the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development observed last year:

> There is evidence that many Canadian employers have tended to neglect on-the-job training partly because they are accustomed to a large inflow of skill through immigration.

If the manpower and immigration council and the department live up to their responsibilities we hope that this shortcoming on the Canadian scene will be corrected.

I hope the council will have the power to provide a better welcome to those entering Canada as immigrants. I will look anxiously at the bill to see if the council has such power. I represent an area which is a port of entry for a large number of immigrants to Canada. I have heard complaints about the rosy heaven promised to these immigrants in other lands and the drab, gray, austere sort of welcome they receive, the barest opening of a door to let them into a grim and dingy shed where they may have to spend hours or days before going on somewhere else. That is the welcome given them by this country, and this is particularly true of Italian immigrants to Canada.

I would hope that the manpower and immigration council, together with the minister and his officials, would do something about that situation which results in Canada and my area in particular being given a very poor name. We have good hotels in Halifax and immigrants could be accommodated in them. They should not have to linger and loiter in and around immigration sheds until transportation is available to take them somewhere else. I note that one of the purposes which the minister mentioned is the adjustment of immigrants to Canada. I suggest that adjustment should start with a great, all-embracing welcome in happy surroundings at the moment they first set foot on the soil of this country.

What are the objectives of the minister and his department? I have read some of the addresses delivered by the minister and I think the philosophy he expresses can best be found in a speech titled "Careers In Canada—Today and Tomorrow" which he delivered at the opening of Careers Expo '67 at Peterborough, Ontario, on April 18 last.

The first point he mentioned in that speech in developing his concept of the new Department of Manpower and Immigration was:

> —leave the field of basic education and turn our attention to the occupational training of adults.

He included some riders with respect to government policy dealing with help at that level of education, but by and large the philosophy is to get out of the field of basic education and concentrate on occupational training of adults.

The weakness, if there is one, concerns a segment of our people most conspicuously represented by the hippies of Yorkville and of other parts of Canada, who have not really taken basic education and have no desire to take occupational training either. Since the hippie problem continues to grow I think the new manpower council might want to make some suggestions to the minister as to how one can utter the word "work" to a hippy without causing him to faint or to reach for a double dose of L.S.D.

The second point which the minister made in his Peterborough speech, dealing with his basic philosophy, was the new program to encourage manpower mobility. I make no comment on that as it is quite fitting in the world of rapid transport today.

His third point dealt with this development:

> —a manpower consultative service which helps industry work out manpower problems caused by changing technology, automation and other modern industrial facts of life.

The fourth cornerstone of his philosophy and program he stated as follows:

> —there is much that can be done to encourage that part of the immigration process that will contribute most effectively to our economic growth.

In fairness to the minister I should say that he did not leave out of his philosophy certain of the social aspects as well as the economic aspects of immigration into this country, but I think I have quoted him fairly as to his basic philosophy in setting up this department.

Sir, not having seen the bill I can only guess where its weaknesses may be, but I think there are three areas of possible criticism. This council seems to be so broadly conceived that it could almost be a substitute minister in suggesting policies that would cover the universal operations of his department. I do not know what he has in mind for the ladies and gentlemen who will man the council, how strong their personalities will be, and whether they will be confined to one side or the other of industry. I presume he will bring both management and labour into the picture but I hope that whatever he comes up with he will not let the council become the tail that wags the dog.

The second area of criticism arises from a point made by Jean-Real Cardin, director of the Industrial Relations Department at Laval University, who reported to the Economic Council of Canada in March as follows:

> Efforts to develop a truly effective manpower policy have been unsuccessful up to now and may well be futile in the future unless: employers and workers become better informed on the real issue; the scope of collective bargaining is greatly broadened; major changes are made in labour legislation; and there is a real change of attitudes, power structures and organization both in labour and management.

I think it is valid to mention those points here and also to note that the objectives the minister has for the Canada manpower and immigration council, it seems to me, do not go to the root of the problems that are mentioned by Monsieur Cardin.

I should like to make a third point but before I do so perhaps I might note the presence of the hon. member for Russell in the chair. I believe this is the first time he has honoured us as our chairman by his presence in his new uniform. I am glad to see that it fits so snugly. He seems to have had a good summer and I hope the salary is commensurate with the splendour of his garb.

Finally, my third suggestion to the minister in respect of his proposed council is: Let it be advisory, yes, but do not let it be an excuse for not fully developing manpower policies that will achieve the maximum good for Canada with economies which, at least to outside observers, are not apparent now.

Mr. O'Keefe: Mr. Chairman, possibly it is because of my hon. friend's laryngitis but I am not sure whether I heard him correctly. I thought he said that the effect of the manpower program on Bell Island in Newfoundland was almost nil. May I point out that nearly 2,000 people have been moved from Bell Island to places where they can obtain employment. The cost of this project was half a million dollars.

Mr. McCleave: The hon. member must have laryngitis of the ear because had he heard me correctly he would have known that I had praise for that program and no denigration of it whatever.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reiterate our general approval of the resolution and the proposal to create this particular council dealing with the problems of manpower and immigration. Indeed, it seems to us it is absolutely essential that in the administration of these two highly important subjects we have a council composed of the widest possible representation of knowledgeable people in Canada. We certainly believe that this council, composed I hope of people of a very high calibre, has a very valuable function to perform.

I should like to underline the point already made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North in respect of the personal tragedies and the grave economic loss involved in the lack of proper planning with regard to manpower policies as indicated by the legislation that was introduced and passed by this house in April. I should like to give some details to supplement what has been said already by my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

In the Globe and Mail of July 21 Mr. A. W. Fair, who is the co-ordinator of the program of the board of education for immigrants and for adult training, said:

> Toronto's adult retraining program will dwindle to an enrolment of a few hundred by Christmas, barring changes in the regulations governing it, the Toronto co-ordinator predicted yesterday.

The same press story in the Globe and Mail concluded with these words:

> The immigrants who were taking classes now are swamping the society's office looking for any kind of work. "They are discouraged. But they won't ask for welfare because of their pride. On humanitarian grounds alone, somebody's got to do something," he said.

He was referring to the situation created by the recent regulations which, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North pointed out, cut down substantially the number of those who can take retraining because of the particular qualifications required.

I have in front of me an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of July 15. I should like to read one paragraph:

> But now, not quite four months after introduction of the legislation, widespread discontent with the program is voiced by many Ontario educators. Comments on the program implementation range from "a potentially serious problem" to "a national scandal."

In the Toronto Star—I do not have the exact date but it was in the month of July—a long article appeared under the heading "Retraining Denied, Italian Immigrants Would Leave Canada". The first paragraph of the article reads as follows:

> Scores of Italian immigrants are considering leaving Canada because tough federal restrictions have cut them off from retraining funds, the administrator of the Italian Immigrant Aid Society said today.
> "Some of the newcomers who come to us are just walking around the streets," said Mrs. Isa Scotti. "They are in despair."

Farther down in the same story we find the following:

> The federal government's new regulations have already resulted in the closing of one adult retraining centre in Metro and two more will shut their doors Sept. 21 because of the lack of applicants. A. W. Fair, co-ordinator of manpower training for the Toronto Board of Education, said the number of trainees now enrolled in courses in Metro is about 4,000—a drop of more than 2,000 since the new rules came into force.

My friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, pointed out how the number has dropped even farther. The article continues:

> Forty teachers already have lost their jobs because of the decrease in students and another 70 will be let go before Christmas.

I should like to call the minister's attention to this sentence in the story:

> Provincial education officials met with Manpower Minister Jean Marchand on Tuesday to seek relief from the new federal government regulations, which went into effect April 1.
> At this week's meeting, Marchand denied—

He speaks rather familiarly of the minister.

> —immediate aid, but provincial officials came away optimistic that federal assistance would be forthcoming in a few months.

The result of this is well set out in an editorial in the Globe and Mail of July 24 under the heading, "A Rule That May Ruin A Good Program", in which the following is pointed out:

> There are few sounder investments in the nation's future than government spending on retraining programs. As the dropouts and unemployed re-enter the labour force with their new abilities, they provide a quick return on the taxpayer's dollar.

While there is agreement on this principle at all levels of government thousands of workers are already suffering directly (and all Canadians will suffer indirectly) because of a demarcation dispute between Ottawa and the provinces.

With its new adult training program, the federal government has sought to create a wide buffer zone between school education—a provincial responsibility—and the retraining of genuine dropouts from the school system.

It goes on to point out the following:

To qualify for federal subsistence allowances (from $35 to $90 a week) during retraining, an applicant must either have dependents or have been working or seeking work for the past three years.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The article goes on to point out that these new requirements were based upon a desire to deal with the loophole which allowed some teenagers to quit school and return to classes a few days later and apply for retraining. The article continues:

Ontario government officials said that about 7,000 persons stood to lose the living allowances that they were receiving during training.

Then it goes on:

Many of these reluctant dropouts are immigrants who have been picking up the basic English and the technical skills that would make them productive members of the community. Without the allowances, many single persons simply cannot afford to support themselves while going to day school.

The federal government has a particular responsibility toward the immigrants to whom it is now denying retraining opportunities. Immigration is a federal prerogative and Mr. Marchand and his colleagues have a clear duty to help the people they have brought into Canada until they are in a position to look after themselves.

I repeat to the minister that if this policy is based upon some so-called constitutional rule or argument that the federal government does not have responsibility in this field, he should get some better constitutional advisers because there is no question in the world that it is a constitutional responsibility of the federal government to assist in the retraining of immigrants. Indeed, it runs totally contrary to the whole theory behind the immigration policy which the minister has eloquently advanced from time to time, namely, that immigration is an economic necessity and that to meet it we are seeking people with skills who can make contributions to this country.

It does not make any sense, when we should be seeking to retrain and teach English to immigrants in our big cities—I have mentioned Toronto because I am more familiar with that city but it is only an example—if the courses are discontinued because this government does not accept responsibility in that particular field. I read one further paragraph from the editorial in the Globe and Mail:

In its second annual report, the Economic Council of Canada stated with great emphasis that a lack of skilled manpower was one of the major obstacles to be overcome in achieving a satisfactory rate of economic growth. Yet the new regulations have already succeeded in turning away thousands who are anxious to acquire new skills.

I plead with the minister to reconsider this matter because, as I said before, it not only affects the individuals who are denied the opportunity and are thereby perhaps thrown into unemployment and despair in the new country to which they have come but it represents a loss to our whole economy. It is in absolute contradiction to what I thought to be on the whole a very enlightened policy enunciated by the minister in regard to immigration to this country.

I do not believe for a moment that these sort of regulations would ever have been adopted had there been in existence strong advisory committees and a manpower council that could have told the minister ahead of time what would happen. I am sure it was not the minister's intention to destroy this excellent program but he has partially succeeded in doing so by reason of a lack of adequate advice. I believe this council will be very helpful in that regard.

I should now like to turn from the question of manpower to immigration generally. Many of us observed with very great interest the recently announced changes in the regulations, the points system, and so on. How these will work out will be seen in the course of time. I think this is a very genuine effort to give a more specific content to the rules for admission and as such it is to be commended and welcomed. But I say to the minister that this is only a small part of the problem. There is the whole question of the revision of the act itself. There is the whole question of how security procedures are denying us, contrary to the advice of many of the most loyal ethnic groups of this country, the ability to bring from the countries of eastern Europe skilled and loyal people who will make a real contribution to this country. That matter has not been dealt with.

I believe this immigration council will soon be able to provide or suggest the machinery whereby this obstacle can be overcome so that we will be able to bring from countries such as Poland, Rumania and Czechoslovakia people that we need in this country, people about whose loyalty we would not have the slightest need to worry. A great deal of the future usefulness of this council depends, of course, upon the type of persons appointed to it. I hope the bill will ensure that we will have on the council people with the broadest experience. Those of us who were members of the special parliamentary committee on immigration know the wisdom and experience that were available to us from those who had themselves been immigrants and were active members of various ethnic organizations, from social workers in the Canadian Welfare Council to organizations such as the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. I mention those organizations for the sake of achieving a balance. If groups such as these are represented on the council they will bring a wealth of information and advice to that body which will greatly assist us in achieving an intelligent immigration policy.

I conclude by saying that no matter how many councils we appoint and how effectively they do their job, this will not absolve parliament from its responsibility in this connection. I am not talking just about the department, because the minister is responsible for the administration of the department. I say that parliament will continue to have a responsibility for the careful surveillance of both these highly important fields, manpower and immigration.

One of the hon. members who spoke—I am not quite certain who it was—said that when the council was appointed we would perhaps not have to worry as much in this house about these problems. He said we would not have to worry so much about would-be immigrants and other problems of this sort. I think the hon. member is quite wrong. I believe it will continue to be necessary for members of this house, particularly those who come from industrial ridings in which most of the immigrants live, to continue to take an active interest in these matters. I believe there should be continuing activity by a parliamentary committee in reviewing the regulations from time to time and acting as a sort of corporate ombudsman.

I know there are many people on the government side of the house as well as on the opposition side who are experienced and capable of constructive criticism of the administration of the act and the rules and regulations that exist, which by no means have reached perfection although I believe we are going forward in this respect. I do not think the existence of this council will in any way absolve us of the responsibility of maintaining an active parliamentary committee to deal with this matter.

With those observations, Mr. Chairman, and saying that I believe progress is being made in this field, I repeat that we in this party will support this legislation. We hope it will be successful and we look forward to the appointment of members of the council who will make that body independent and widely representative of all groups concerned with this question. We hope that independent, qualified people will be appointed to the council, which will be of real assistance in the better administration of the important subjects of manpower and immigration.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, like many of the other speakers today I shall not spend a great deal of time dealing with the resolution inasmuch as the information that we have on the nature and functions of this advisory board and its related committees is not very great. Yet I appreciate the opportunity, as have other hon. members who have spoken, to speak specifically to the information that is before us and relate it to some of the activities that have already taken place with regard to the developing responsibilities of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

When we review the resolution as it is defined and the very short remarks of the minister we have something that seems imaginative in concept or, if not imaginative, at least necessary. But somehow we are tempted to suspect that it will be somewhat futile in its execution. The idea of councils being established to supply advice to various government departments is indeed most commendable. Certainly when one thinks about this government one has to agree that it is in great need of as much good advice as it can obtain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): However, whether the instruments that are defined here will do the trick for this department remains to be seen. I for one have not been greatly encouraged by the activities, as I have been able to observe them over the past few months, of the department in this field. I wonder whether, in spite of the fact that many such advisory groups might be created by the department, the department will indeed be willing to listen and listen closely to the advice that is brought forward.

I for one have been greatly disturbed by the way in which a number of local situations have developed. In many cases we have to refer to our own experience. The newly created manpower offices seem unable at times to grasp the realities in local situations. They seem unwilling to recognize what are indeed the real interests in these matters and they seem incapable of dealing with them in a way in which such problems could be effectively resolved.

In the past few years we have had an increasingly effective program in Prince Edward Island to assist people seeking to have themselves retrained either for new vocations or to improve the particular skills used in their present employment. Indeed, I can speak from very personal experience when I say that the previous program which was abandoned to a degree this year did a great deal this past spring for many of the rural residents of Prince Edward Island. However, we are discovering now that with greater activity on the part of the department of manpower there is a greater unreality or a movement away from the prospects for which we had hoped with regard to the gradual decrease of a hard core of continuing unemployment and sometimes seasonal unemployment. What this means in fact is that to date at least the department of manpower seems not to be listening more to what is happening in various regional situations but is listening less. If we are simply creating national boards and agencies that will do nothing more than provide a rubberstamp for the present direction of manpower policies and activities, we are certainly not going to improve the situation which currently exists.

It has struck me as well that apart from the very poor communications which have been established with the local communities concerning needs and possibilities there is a similar breakdown in communications with the various provinces. This afternoon facts and figures have been quoted which would indicate that as a result of this breakdown in communications the possibilities of activity which these offices might exercise have been greatly diminished. I hope that later in this debate the minister may be able to supply us with answers to such questions and will be able to explain why it is that instead of improved communications, instead of expanded opportunities, instead of greater hope for people who have lived for years with conditions of lingering poverty and dangerously high unemployment rates, we have in fact moved away from some very good results that were being achieved during the last few years. It seems to me that if committees and councils are to be established there must be a very firm indication that they will be in close touch with local communities and with the leaders in local communities who are in contact with the realities of the situation and that the closest possible liaison will be maintained with provincial governments and departments. My experience leads me to believe that to date this has not taken place.

Furthermore, I think we would be anxious to learn from the minister who are the people who will be appointed to the various councils dealing with adult training, vocational rehabilitation and the adjustment of immigrants to Canada. We must be very sure that we do not simply supply a number of loyal party supporters with the opportunity to be remunerated for their past good work but that we will make available to the department people with genuine expertise and experience who have something to contribute not only at the national level but also in the local areas, in provinces, regions and local communities. We would also like to know how much will be required of these people so that genuine thought can be given to the choice of the very best people to fill these positions.

I have also been concerned a little—I hope this will also be clarified as we proceed with this debate—whether or not most of this advice will simply be directed to what might be termed the head office in Ottawa or whether there will be established strong communication links and responsibility for decisions at local levels. The minister has indicated to the house that there will be a move away, in terms of some of the responsibilities of this department, from complete centralization. In other words, he said there will be a decentralization of many of the decision-making processes which will be necessary to make these programs effective. I hope that such will also be the case with the advisory committees operating at local levels and that they will not have to see their advice pertaining to local situations move all the way up the chain of command and communication to some omnipotent figure on the national scene who will decide in his great wisdom and from a great distance whether or not these recommendations are appropriate to small communities wherever they exist across the land.

Finally, I should like to echo the sentiments of the hon. member for Carleton that in all of this program the government will in fact allow for a great deal more community development by people who are dedicated and who will give the time and energy necessary to make these programs really effective. The dangers of bureaucracy are such—perhaps this need not be repeated—that there is a growing tendency to take away from people in a host of different ways a sense of responsibility and participation. It is important and fundamental in some areas related to vocational and occupational retraining and to matters that are closely related to livelihood and education that people be allowed the largest measure possible of self determination. I have not been happy with instances of bureaucratic interference which to me have seemed unwarranted and unnecessary in giving people a chance to control and to improve their own destiny. The minister will have a further opportunity when he speaks on second reading of the bill to clarify how many of the fears that have grown out of real situations may be alloyed through the setting up of these advisory councils.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt after listening to the discussion this afternoon on this resolution that the manpower department is facing serious difficulties in the implementation of its program. I do not intend at this stage of the discussion and at this late hour in the afternoon to enlarge upon the points that have already been made. We can draw the conclusion from the remarks that have already been made in the house that one of the reasons for the difficulty facing the manpower department arises from its failure to consult adequately first of all at the local community level and, second, to ensure the means for intergovernmental consultation, particularly between the federal and the provincial governments.

It would appear to me from the resolution we are discussing this afternoon that this is an attempt on the part of the minister and the government to close the gap which has become painfully obvious in recent months and has been pointed out by several speakers earlier in the debate this afternoon. At the time that the amendments were made last April I remember taking part in the discussion and pointing out to the minister that it was going to be extremely difficult for the provinces in particular to cope with the terms of the new legislation in time to meet the demands of enrolment for the new sessions at the vocational schools. I was aware that in the province of Manitoba, where they had very ambitious retraining programs under way and new schools were recently opened, there was a complete lack of communication between their officials and the officials at Ottawa over what exactly would be possible under the terms of the new legislation. In practice this has quite definitely proven to be the case.

I am not going to read from editorials, letters to the editor, or any newspaper comments on the subject because this fact was brought home to me quite forcibly as a result of personal exposure to the problem during the past few weeks in my home city of Brandon. We have there a new and elaborate vocational training school which completed its first full year's operation very successfully last year. I know from personal contact with my constituents and also from visits to the school that they are not going to be able to carry out this year the same kind of program that was carried out last year. For one thing their enrolment is going to be down. I have been besieged and beset by potential enrolees who anticipated enrolling on the same basis as last year and arrived at the school to take the program only to discover that the terms of reference, the regulations, the rules of the game, had been changed half way through. If there had been adequate consultation in connection with the new legislation I am sure that many misunderstandings would have been avoided.

Looking at the resolution it seems to me that this legislation is not going to bridge the gap that has occurred with reference to intergovernmental consultation. I know there is internal machinery to which it is possible to resort other than advisory councils of this nature, but I would point out to the minister that the expressions of dissatisfaction and unhappiness that have already arisen early in the new educational retraining year will increase in intensity unless very urgent attempts are made to resolve the difficulty of lack of communication between the federal and provincial authorities.

Most of this lack of communication arises as a result of the elimination of the Part V program under which it was possible even for the school authorities to deal directly with and process potential candidates for the program. Now, of course, this is not possible. More bureaucracy is involved, and I think the question can be resolved only if the problem of communication is dealt with on an urgent basis.

Second, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the question of setting up advisory councils and committees and so forth, I think there has been a gap in communication between the vocational and technical schools, the manpower program and the actual businesses operating in the different communities. This has resulted in a situation where there has actually been a shortage of manpower which has been created by the failure of the manpower offices to anticipate the actual work situation in a particular community. We have found workers returning to school for retraining or upgrading, for the acquisition of new skills and so forth, at a time when they are urgently needed in the labour market as it exists at that particular moment.

Again I think that this situation could be resolved if the minister would see to it in the implementation of the general ideas proposed in the resolution that there is some assurance in the legislation that there is going to be very close co-operation with the entrepreneurs in industry and in the general business community. These people would be much more happy with the program if they felt that they could have a determining influence through these consultative committees and councils.

There is one final point I should like to make; I do not want to prolong this discussion beyond six o'clock if it can be avoided because I know we are anxious to get on with the business of the house. I also hope that the minister will not ignore the work that has been done by voluntary committees in the field of immigration. I refer specifically to the Canadian Citizenship Council which ever since the end of world war II has been operating on a voluntary basis offering advice and assistance to immigrants arriving in this country, first under the direction of the late Mr. John Kidd and more recently under Mr. Alan Clarke, who was transported to the Company of Young Canadians. Perhaps he now wishes he was back with the Canadian Citizenship Council. Here we have a corps of citizens who have been working in this area on a voluntary basis over the years. I think that the experience of these people should be taken into consideration in setting up this new advisory council and these committees.

Much more can be said which will be said when we have the bill before us, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the committee will permit me to read the proceedings on the adjournment motion tonight.

It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for New Westminster—Water Resources, Ottawa River—Request for Pollution Control; the hon. member for Lotbinière—Transport, Turbotrains and the Safety of Grade Crossings; the hon. member for Carleton—Increases in Pensions for Retired Civil Servants.

Perhaps I could refer the committee at this time to standing order 15(4):

> On any Monday, Tuesday or Thursday, notwithstanding the provisions of section (3) of this standing order, the consideration of private members' business shall be suspended when an order for resuming the address debate or the budget debate, an order for a motion "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair" for the house to go into committee of supply, or an order to go into committee of the whole on a money resolution pursuant to standing order 61A, is set down as the first item of government business in any such sitting.

The present debate falls under standing order 61A, and I interpret this standing order as suspending private members' hour for today. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased at this early stage in the renewed session to have the opportunity to speak about this department. I wish tonight to raise two or three matters which call for the attention of the minister and his staff, and indeed, for the attention of other hon. members of the house, with regard to the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

The first matter I raised during today's question period. The minister said that he wanted further particulars, and I am pleased to be able to give them to him. During the summer recess on a number of occasions my attention was directed to miners who, on endeavouring to take advantage of this program to retrain and better their position in this country, were told that they, as miners, were excluded from this program of retraining and upgrading.

We ought to consider, for a moment, why miners would want to take advantage of a program such as this. In that connection I should like to give a couple of illustrations. One of them has to do with a man who came to my office last week. He is an immigrant who arrived in this country in 1951 and worked for some 17 years in the Timmins gold mines. At the age of 48, because of low wages prevailing in the gold mines, he wanted to make a change and thought that he should make it before his age prevented him from so doing. He went to British Columbia and obtained a job with the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada Limited. Some weeks after that he received a registered letter from the medical referee for silicosis for the health authorities of British Columbia, and owing to his condition was barred from working in the British Columbia mines. He returned to Ontario, was taken on by Dome Mines Limited, passed his X-ray to go underground and at the present time is working underground. Needless to say, the man, his wife and family were greatly perturbed. After working in mining for 17 years he finds that he cannot pass the basic minimum medical requirement of another province. Nevertheless, for some strange reason, in the province of Ontario he is considered fit to work underground.

I wish to give another example of a man who for some 11 years tried to establish a silicosis pension. He was told that, according to the act in force in Ontario, he did not have silicosis. After that he was killed in a motor car accident and the insurance companies became involved. His widow's legal representative received a letter from the lawyers representing the other party. It was to the effect that because the man had suffered from advanced silicosis, the settlement should be much smaller than otherwise it would have been as his earning capacity had been greatly reduced.

I have cited these two illustrations to show why miners should be the first to come under the umbrella of this measure. They should have the opportunity to upgrade themselves, to retrain themselves, before it is too late and their health suffers.

As I said, on several occasions this summer I heard of miners who had tried to take advantage of this program, only to be told that they were barred from it. I took up this question with local officials of a manpower office, and one of them said that mining is a very necessary industry for this country. There is a great shortage of miners and therefore they cannot be retrained for other jobs.

I cannot think of anything more unfair. Should a man, because he is silly enough in this day and age to become a skilled miner, be given a life sentence so far as this program is concerned? The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in the speeches he has made over the last year or two, appears to have recognized the situation in the mines. When the mine operators went to him, with a great hue and cry, asking that there should be brought into this country unskilled, untrained and uneducated men to fill the jobs in the mines, he told them that if they paid better wages and established proper working conditions there would be no shortage of miners. I could not agree more with the minister's estimate.

What have we under this program, Mr. Chairman? In effect, we have collusion—it is not intended, I know—between the mine operators and this department of government. The government is saying, by its attitude: "Okay, continue to pay low wages; continue to keep these dismal working conditions; we will exclude the miners from retraining programs so that they can better themselves." That, in effect, is what is happening. It is high time that this question was looked into and this situation corrected.

There is another program under the minister's jurisdiction that I wish to mention. I have brought this question to the minister's attention. It has to do with the mobility program.

Not long ago a mine in the Timmins area closed down. One of the men who was thrown out of work took advantage of this program and was moved from Timmins to Pickle Crow with the assistance of the department which paid, on his behalf, the sum of $370 to move his furniture. He worked in Pickle Crow for less than a year before the mine there closed down, when he was faced with the same situation as before. Again, this program took effect and he was moved to the Tri-Bag mine at Bachawana Bay. The distance between Timmins and Pickle Crow is some 184 miles further than the distance between Pickle Crow and Bachawana Bay, yet the cost of moving this man's furniture was $672 for the shorter distance compared with $370 for the longer distance. My point is this: while rules and regulations are needed in connection with these programs they should be guided by common sense and be sufficiently flexible to allow common sense to be used. The situation in Bachawana Bay is that no housing is available; employees moved there must live in trailers. Consequently, there was no space suitable for the storage of this man's furniture unless he decided to buy a tent and store it more or less in the open.

The employee concerned is within two years of retirement. He wanted to move his furniture to Toronto where he has children and where he intends to live on his retirement. He went to the department and asked whether the money it was prepared to pay on his behalf could be credited against the cost of moving his furniture to Toronto. He was willing to pay the balance. The officials told him this was not possible. Contract was signed with an outfit called Rember moving and the furniture would be moved to Bachawana Bay even if it had to be thrown into the street on arrival.

This raises two or three questions. First, I think we should know why the price charged for moving the furniture was doubled even though the distance was shorter by some 200 miles. Second, we should be told why a little common sense cannot be used in such circumstances.

The other matter I wish to raise has to do with the retraining and upgrading program. Again, I should like to bring up a particular case in order to illustrate the point I am making. It has to do with a woman who is the sole support of her four children and who had enrolled in a course designed to upgrade her education and train her as a bookkeeper. She wished to pass grade ten and become trained as a bookkeeper.

After she had enrolled it was discovered that this woman had exceptional ability. Although it had not been intended that she should receive this training she went on to attend the school for some two years during which time she passed not only grade 10 but grades 11 and 12. As a result she is within a year of getting a teaching certificate which would enable her to work to support herself and her children from that point on. This situation came to light about the same time as the government was putting on a big economy drive, and this woman, within a year of becoming a most useful citizen capable of looking after herself and her family, was turned out. Two years have been wasted and she will have to fall back on welfare payments for the support of herself and her family.

Various officials with whom I have discussed this matter were extremely sympathetic; they realize that this is an unusual case involving a woman of exceptional ability who should be given every opportunity. But they are bound by the regulations and cannot provide assistance in any way. They say, moreover, that the provinces are raising a furore about the danger of the federal government moving into the field of education.

To my mind this represents a "dog in the manger" attitude. If, in fact, the provinces are raising objections, it is a case of utter stupidity. If they are not prepared to supply this training themselves, why should they object if the federal government brings in a plan which will fill the gap and enable students to become valuable, contributing members of society?

As I said before, these programs are basically good programs and we shall certainly support this resolution. But let us, for heaven's sake, iron out some of the difficulties which have been encountered and, far from least, ensure that this program is applied with common sense. Let us remember the objective we are trying to attain; we are seeking to assist and train people so that they can take their places in society better equipped, and it is no part of that purpose to formulate a list of rules which defeat the very purpose of our endeavours.

Mr. Otto: I intend to direct my remarks to the subject of the resolution on the order paper which is intended, as I understand it, to introduce a measure to establish a Canadian manpower immigration task force—no, it is to be an immigration council; I thought "task force" was the new phrase and that no one used "council" or "advisory board" any more.

This is a resolution to provide for an immigration council, advisory boards and local manpower committees and it is within this context that I wish to address my remarks to the minister, particularly in reference to the part which says "to provide also for the appointment of the members thereof, their remuneration, allowances and other expenses."

I take it that these advisory committees will, in the end, be very similar to other such committees which advise not only ministers of immigration but ministers of industry, ministers of finance and other members of the government. Sometimes I wonder whether these bodies are really what they purport to be. We know there is always a considerable amount of trouble balancing the membership of these advisory committees by appointing appropriate numbers of representatives from unions, management and particular areas of the country, winding up, finally, with university types for whom I have a great respect, of course, and who seem to be acceptable to everyone.

There is nothing wrong with that, but committees being what they are, as most hon. members will know from their own experience, a powerful and experienced administrator is in most cases appointed as secretary; directly or indirectly he influences the committee until in reality what we have is a committee of one. I am sure this is not the intent of the resolution before us. I wish to applaud the minister's efforts in introducing new regulations affecting immigration.

As you recall, Mr. Chairman, recently the minister told of the new procedure whereby, through a system of marks, the administrators will be able to judge people who are eligible to be immigrants. This is a very good system because it draws a fine line between giving the administrators a guide line and, at the same time, allowing them enough discretion to do a good job.

In that respect, and dealing with the formation of these committees, I wish to say it is essential that they have the advantage of research. Research, to my way of thinking, is not taking the figures of the bureau of statistics, figures which have been accumulated over a period of time, and then saying, "Well, we now have so many thousand plasterers employed in Canada. There is so much construction and so much demand for plasterers." These figures can also be applied to service industries such as the restaurant business. That is not research; that is the accumulation of facts.

True research goes a little deeper than that. Applied research means that facts are accumulated and then projected. It is not a question of our having so many plasterers or bricklayers employed in Canada and then saying there is only room for so many. True research means finding out the numbers of plasterers and bricklayers that will be required in construction seven or ten years from now, and discovering the likelihood of the adoption of new methods of construction. The same applies to other qualifications and trades.

This will be an expensive undertaking. I urge the minister to make good research available to these committees. In order to do a first class research job their research facilities must be involved with all other phases of industry such as transportation, finance, the economy of the country, and the likes and dislikes of the consuming public. All these other factors enter into research. Research must take into account the current financial position and the likelihood of recessions. It will be an expensive and exacting business.

I know some of our government departments have instituted research branches, but whether these are truly qualified research efforts is another matter. It is very easy to say to people who are not doing anything and who know nothing, "Start a research department." That is the worst way to do things. I urge the minister to give serious consideration to the establishment of a good, efficient, knowledgeable research branch, one that will co-operate with other departments so that rather than being solely concerned with the department of immigration it will work along with the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Finance. I am sure that in that way it would do a better job.

The results of research should always be made available to these committees so that they can advise the minister on what immigration policies should be. Given good research, these committees can make a concerted effort to advise the minister not only on what is taking place today but on what will take place in the future.

In that way the criteria which the minister has publicized can be changed. If these criteria are allowed to stagnate they will become firmly fixed in the administration and 20 years from now the department will still be following them because normally it is difficult for administrators to change their minds. In order to make our immigration policy workable these criteria will have to be changed from time to time in accordance with what is happening in the country, and what will happen.

At the time that the administration of manpower was merged with the administration of immigration, I had sincere doubts about the advisability of the merger because it covered two completely separate policies, one dealing with immigration and one with manpower. I agree that they have to work together, but the question in my mind is which will govern which.

With all these advisory committees it seems to me there will be a tendency to take the easiest way and, of course, the easiest way would be to let manpower govern immigration policy. It would be easy to say, "We have only so many jobs available in so many trades, and therefore immigration will be cut down to so many people." That would not be proper immigration policy. Immigration policy has to be founded on other grounds in collaboration with manpower requirements, and in that way we will have a balance.

Recently I discussed this matter with some people who are very interested in immigration matters. They did not share my point of view at all. They thought there was only one criterion for immigration, and that was the number of jobs available. In other words, manpower should govern the whole sphere of immigration policy. If that were the case, then I suggest the minister should also have authority over birth control and other matters which can affect manpower.

In conclusion, I wish to say I was very gratified to note the criteria established by the minister in connection with immigration policy. Probably his department to some extent resisted these criteria, and I admire the way in which he has been able to establish them. This is the modern way to do things. I trust the bill will contain provision for adequate research to be made available to the advisory committees so that they can do a good job.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to make a long speech but I wish to deal with two things which have recently come to light in connection with the cost of government. When the minister makes his concluding speech on the resolution stage I hope he will tell us how his department has been cut.

I raise this point because of the much publicized undertaking by the Prime Minister and other ministers that they are going to slash government expenditures, and also because of the recent recommendations made by the Economic Council of Canada, of which the minister is well aware.

The resolution refers to the establishment of councils, boards and committees. Can the minister give us any indication whether his original plan for the establishment of these bodies has been materially cut?

In other words, I am looking toward the efficiency of the act that we will bring forth in this house as a result of the passage of this legislation. I do not wish to repeat myself or make a long speech. I should just like to mention these thoughts. As a result of the original bill, has the minister had cuts forced on him, perhaps by public opinion, which finally have made their impression on him and on the government. Has this resulted in the Prime Minister making his statement? Second, have the minister and the government been influenced perhaps as a result of reading and studying the report of the Economic Council of Canada.

I should like to know whether, as a result of anything that might have taken place, the efficiency of the bill which will follow the resolution has been restricted to a point of no return. In other words, does the minister feel that what he finally is putting forth will be effective? Perhaps the minister would let us know what he contemplates having in the estimates as a total expenditure as a result of the passage of this resolution and the bill which will follow it? Thank you.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on this resolution to establish a Canada manpower and immigration council, advisory boards and regional and local manpower committees, I should like to commend the minister for providing the type of machinery which I believe will assist him in improving the policies of his department.

I support this measure and look forward to its implementation without delay. Since the establishment of the Department of Manpower and Immigration many desirable policies and measures have been put into effect to meet the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada, to cope with the increasing importance of effective manpower development and the proper utilization of skilled and trainable people, to increase our productivity and to contribute thereby to the economic growth of our country.

Our unemployment figures today are the lowest in our history; our standard of living is the second highest in the world, and the increasing and unprecedented affluence of our society is the envy of the rest of the world. The manpower mobility and adult occupation training programs have contributed to this prosperity.

In social terms, the manpower policy seeks to provide our workers with the opportunity to meet the challenge of a swiftly changing technology. It also provides many immigrants with the opportunity to adjust themselves to our manpower needs. But, there still is a great need in Canada for skilled labour. The three tours I have made this summer to the northern and western regions of Canada have provided me with a good deal of evidence that our development could be improved further and faster if the necessary skilled labour were available today. The areas most in need of skilled labour today are in our far north, and especially in our mines. No doubt a review of the departmental policies would reveal to what extent these policies have been successful and what gaps still exist. Members of this house are hopeful that the council and boards which are to be established by the forthcoming legislation will assist in meeting any shortcomings and in filling the gaps.

In this great effort of our government to improve the living standard of our citizens, voluntary organizations in the past—and I hope this will continue in the future—have played a useful role. This has been a characteristic of the Canadian way of life. If past achievements are any guarantee for the future, it is safe to say that voluntary organizations in the field of education and counselling, of immigrants especially, will play a very helpful role in improving our society.

Basic to the success of the program of the department is the provision of adequate teaching facilities for the English or French languages and for the upgrading of the skills of the immigrant. I hope the minister soon will make a statement to clarify the future role of voluntary agencies which are doing a great service to our country. I should like to pay tribute to these organizations and the people behind them. I wish this evening to acknowledge the achievements of, and express my gratitude to Rev. Joseph Carraro of Toronto, the founder of "Costi" which is the term used in respect of the Italian Educational Centre. This centre was founded in 1961 and was granted a provincial charter in Ontario in 1962.

The president of "Costi" this year is Alderman Caccia of the city of Toronto. "Costi" has offices also in Hamilton and Oakville. An average of 7,000 people each year receive training and counselling services at "Costi". Its annual budget is approximately $145,000. A provincial grant of $6,000 annually has been matched by the federal government for the past few years. This year, however, the provincial grant to "Costi" will be $8,000. I hope the federal government grant will be given this year without any further delay.

The additional funds which are necessary to keep this worthy centre operating come from private donations, the Workman's Compensation Board and the Italian government. This centre is rendering services in the field of English language classes, apprenticeship training, upgrading of skills, rehabilitation and counselling, above all, to the special group of young people between the ages of 16 and 18 years. I should like to say that it is desirable that more federal funds be made available to such organizations.

I believe there are now in Canada 200 manpower centres of which approximately half a dozen are in Toronto. This evening may I draw to the attention of the minister the fact that there is a need to increase the professional staff in the Toronto manpower centres. There is still a great need for adequate translation services. There is also a need for sufficient people who have an inexhaustible patience and a great deal of sympathy for the poor immigrant who comes to the manpower centre for help. There is also need to tell Canadian industry it should not put too much stress on the necessity for immigrants to have Canadian experience.

I do not believe the policy or the philosophy of the Canada Manpower Act is so strict that the skills and education that the immigrant has acquired in his home country should be disregarded. When I interned at St. Joseph's Hospital in Toronto and at other hospitals I saw doctors, dentists and other skilled persons doing menial jobs. It is unfortunate that such skills and professional services are not used quickly and properly.

I hope these few remarks I have made this evening will reach the ears of the minister and that they will help him further improve his great program of Canada manpower centres which has contributed so much to our economy.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that now, when the bill on the Canada manpower and immigration council, together with advisory boards and regional and local manpower committees, is being introduced is the time we should draw to the attention of the minister, before things become too fixed in this new direction, those things which we discovered during the recess.

I think we all welcome the idea of closer co-ordination at the different levels of government. As a matter of fact, I have constantly felt that the big thing we have to achieve in the near future is very, very close co-operation and co-ordination among federal, provincial and local levels of government, and that until we can achieve a workable partnership we will not solve or even begin to solve any of the major problems facing this country today.

Therefore, if this new bill results in closer co-ordination among the different levels of government and the different regional authorities, I think it will be very helpful and very necessary. On the other hand, I believe we must make sure that this bill will not represent just a piling of machinery on machinery and will not be just another factor in making an administrative traffic jam that will lead to confusion and chaos rather than co-ordination.

When the going gets tough and it is impossible to achieve co-operation among different levels of government, we have frequently seen the federal government, in despair, form a task force, a committee, advisory board or something else. This is a very, very convenient way to attract attention away from the main difficulty, without achieving what should be achieved. It merely has the result of piling trouble upon trouble in the way of administrative machinery.

I know the minister does not want this to happen. I may put it badly, but I know very well the magnitude of the job the minister is undertaking. In Vancouver a great many organizations and individuals are very much concerned about certain facets of the manpower policy. I wish to deal with just one or two of them this evening. Ottawa is about 3,000 miles from Vancouver, but when you live in Vancouver and want something done in connection with a major problem, Ottawa seems at least 6,000 miles away. I hope that the new legislation and the way in which it is carried out, which is even more important, will resolve this difficulty. I hope we do not find that the Canada manpower and immigration council is composed of people recruited largely from central Canada, with a few university professors or other people removed from the difficulties which local bodies face when carrying out this work. In this connection I should like to see a very close co-ordination between the authorities at different levels.

This summer in Vancouver the members of parliament from the area had a great deal of discussion with the Vancouver Board of School Trustees and other organizations about the difficulties in connection with manpower. The Vancouver Board of School Trustees called a meeting of members of parliament for the Vancouver area, members of the provincial legislature and members of the city council. There were other people in attendance at the meeting, but these were the official people at the three levels of government. The Vancouver Board of School Trustees, as the educational body for Vancouver city, wanted to outline their difficulties in connection with manpower.

I wish to draw several of these difficulties to the attention of the committee because I consider it is the job of those of us who were at that meeting to draw them to the attention of the minister. As the minister is well aware, for many years the Vancouver Board of School Trustees has been working closely with the provincial government, with the financial assistance of the federal government, and has worked out a program of basic training for skill development, which is considered essential for vocational training and upgrading programs.

Admittedly, this program was quite selective and fell far short of meeting the full demands of the applicants. For this reason and others, the board welcomed the federal government's manpower program of support for the retraining of persons displaced by technical advances. The board commended the federal government for its proposals to increase the support of training and allowances provided in such cases. They made it clear that they welcomed this initiative on the part of the federal government.

However, we now find that in spite of the fact that this summer the board drew the difficulties to the attention of the federal government, the manpower training program has been reduced 50 per cent in the Vancouver area in terms of the numbers referred for training. Further, there is no assurance of any regular pattern whereby applicants will be referred for manpower training. The board just does not know what is going on in the Vancouver area and they are worried about it. They are worried because they can no longer plan properly; they do not have sufficient clear and definite information on which to plan. They established these basic training programs. They discovered from the 1961 census in the Vancouver area that 53 per cent of the work force had grade 10 education or less; therefore, the basic training that developed under the former agreement was embarked upon.

The Vancouver Board of School Trustees, through the provincial government, offered to expand its basic training program and to organize an experimental centre designed especially to concentrate upon improving techniques and content for the classes. Space was available in a public building at nominal cost for this program, but it had to be abandoned because of the sharp reduction in manpower referrals. The Vancouver Board of School Trustees held that instruction in basic training should be available through the manpower division both on a full time and a part time basis.

The minister was good enough to write to me last June, when he said:

> Under the occupational training for adults program both part time and full time instruction may be purchased, and my department intends to purchase part time or night school training in the Pacific region. The nature and extent of services of this kind which will be purchased have not yet been decided; however, discussions are currently under way with provincial officials on this and other matters.

That letter was written on June 27, but by the middle of August the Vancouver Board of School Trustees, which has been responsible for carrying out this upgrading and training program, complained to us that they still did not know what they would get in the number of referrals. There is not any consistent pattern that they know of which will allow them to plan for the services. They say:

> Unless manpower department provides opportunity for effective basic training, it is denying responsibility for a major problem area in the increasingly important field of technical skill development.
> In addition to a reduction in training opportunities, the irregular nature of the referral procedure has already resulted in discharge of some staff members and the inability to guarantee staff appointments for periods of more than four or five months. In today's market, good instructors are not interested in this type of appointment.
> Efficient organization of training programs depends on the ability of any training group to develop and keep a competent staff of technical instructors.

• (8:50 p.m.)

They are worried because if they are to have a good staff and good basic programs they must know in advance how many people they are going to get. They contend it is not good enough in the first place to give financial assistance only to persons and that in order to have good programs financial assistance must also be given to basic programs. Otherwise, programs cannot be properly planned and permanent instructors cannot be hired. I think this is a very important matter indeed. They say that the new legislation, based on purchase of services by manpower, presumes availability of training spaces, training facilities, professional staff, and an administrative organization ready to serve the demands of manpower. They explain:

> This is a false assumption; there needs to be a basic organization of services available to guarantee this.

Their first complaint is that the services should be available not only to persons but to programs.

The second matter about which they complain is that it is not good enough just to provide full-time manpower training with facilities and upkeep. They say that for many years in Vancouver there have been people working part-time and training part-time, and funds should be provided for part-time training in night schools and elsewhere which would afford people the opportunity of doing regular work during the daytime. It is not only the Vancouver school board that has said this. Around the middle of July, I received a letter from the Vancouver Board of Trade which reads in part as follows:

> The magnitude of the part time programmes needed in an urban area such as Vancouver, makes it quite unrealistic to attempt to provide direct federal support to individuals in such programmes.

They go on to point out that what we need to do is to support programs in night schools. They write:

> We hold the very strong opinion that the government of Canada should not only support people directly, as it does under the "Adult Occupational Training Act" but should provide support also for programmes as was the case under the "Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act".

We are talking about saving money and providing incentives. As is pointed out by the Vancouver Board of School Trustees, greater incentive would be provided if it were possible to train these people who are working part-time than simply to say "we will support only full-time trainees". I think that here they have raised an excellent point.

There is another point which I should like to make and which we all discussed at this particular meeting held in Vancouver. I believe it has been touched on earlier today by previous speakers. Recently under the manpower, division full-time classes in language instruction, for immigrants were organized in Vancouver, but for some reason or other the Vancouver board of education was directed to phase out these classes and was advised that manpower would not support a program of instruction in language that is, in English or French, for immigrants. I do not think there is much sense in bringing in immigrants to be upgraded in skills if we are going to phase out programs in the languages of this country which they need to use in obtaining jobs here. I know there are many people who immediately run into difficulties in obtaining jobs if they do not speak English or French. The Vancouver Board of School Trustees wants to know why in heaven's name they were advised to phase out these training classes in languages for immigrants. It does not seem to make sense.

These are some of the things to which I should like to have an answer from the minister because I know these people have been corresponding with the department and I know they are not dull of understanding. I know that when they say they do not know what is going on, they want to know; and when they ask for a definite answer, they mean business. I know the minister is reasonable and I hope he can give us a clear answer to these policies which do not sound too sensible.

I want to conclude my remarks on the subject of manpower training by saying that we all realize this is a tremendously difficult job but we hope that the new bill will provide for a close liaison not only with the local and regional people and the federal government but also, where possible, with the provincial government. There may be provinces in this country which do not want to co-operate in this program with Ottawa but ours is not one of them. In cases where the provinces wish to co-operate, I think we should work with the provincial people wherever it is possible to do so because every single thing we can do to upgrade and improve the skills not only of native born Canadians but also of recent immigrants should be done.

Now, I wish to say one word regarding the immigration side of this matter. Most of what I wish to say I will keep for the time when we will discuss the bill. I do hope that the new regulations to be promulgated on October 1 will take account of the fact that Canada owes something in the way of assistance to people who are struggling desperately in other countries to survive economically. I have in mind a young fellow from India whom I have tried very hard for nearly two years to bring into Canada. He has nobody in India but his old father who grows hardly enough vegetables on his poor little plot to feed himself. This lad has not been able to have much schooling because he has had to do hard, menial work. He has an uncle in Vancouver who has lived in British Columbia for many years and who is a naturalized Canadian citizen, as is his wife and his wife's sister. They are all here. This man is in a position to receive his young nephew, to send him to school here and to give him security until he obtains the kind of job which will be good for this country and good for this boy. I cannot for the life of me see why, in view of the misery, poverty and insecurity which exist in India, a bright boy who has had no opportunities over there and who has an uncle who is financially able and more than willing emotionally to bring the lad here, cannot be brought here. I do hope the new regulations will permit this to be done, not only on compassionate grounds but on the basis of the fact that in the long run this will help Canada and will help us to do our share internationally in trying to help others.

We welcome the bill but we also hope it will result, not in a piece of machinery ungeared to reality but in one that will make for close meshing among our different levels of government. I know all levels of government would be far happier if they could co-operate in this big job of manpower training.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I have listened attentively to everyone who has spoken on this resolution and all of them have been asking the minister questions. I can understand the necessity for these questions because the wording of this resolution is insufficiently detailed. The ordinary member does not know whether in voting for the principle of the resolution he is buying a pig in the poke or is doing the right thing. I hope the minister will give to the house a detailed explanation in answer to the questions which have been raised as well as the ones which I propose to raise myself. I should like to know what functions will be assigned to the new manpower and immigration council. Is it to be a policy-making body? Is it going to advise the minister on matters which he should either know himself or which should be decided by those officials immediately around him? Or is the council to have a purely advisory capacity? If that is the case, would the minister tell us why great cost has been incurred to set up an organization to make decisions of an advisory nature which those officials around him should make? These are matters which I think should be clarified before we vote on this particular resolution.

I should like to ask whether the council is to be given administrative duties. Are certain functions to be set down in law that the council must carry out? I should also like to know whether this body is to deal with matters such as the training of Indians to enable them to take their proper place in society. What funds are going to be made available to enable Indians to take this type of training. Is there any program sponsored by his department for the training of Indians? I have 8,000 Indians in my riding and they are asking me these questions. So far as I know very few, if any, of them have been offered any opportunity to take a training course in these new technical schools which have been set up across the country, and I think this is a shame.

I think that these people must be brought into industry by training them in these schools. It is the duty of the government to open up their program to the Indians, to familiarize them with it, in fact to take them by the hand and lead them if necessary so they are able to find new trades, to learn carpentry and other skills which would be of value to them.

I should also like to ask the minister whether this particular council will deal with such matters as bringing in foreign agricultural labour. I remember a couple of years ago some people were brought to Canada from Jamaica, and it was stated at the time that they would return to Jamaica. I am wondering whether any more have been brought to this country during the past year or whether the technological improvements in tomato picking in the form of the new machines being employed in California, if introduced into Canada, would dispense with the need for bringing in this type of labour.

Who is going to advise the minister on these matters, Mr. Chairman? Would it be this council or is the minister going to make up his own mind? He will have to make up his own mind eventually. I should like some answers to these questions before we vote on this resolution.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

[Mr. Kindt.]

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

And Mr. Speaker having resumed the chair:

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether we are going to have any answers to the points I raised before we vote on this resolution? I think the minister is ready to reply if the chair would give him the opportunity.

Mr. Marchand: I will give a reply on second reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Marchand thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-150, to establish a Canada manpower and immigration council.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (for Mr. Sharp) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to make capital expenditures and to supply the financial requirements of affiliated companies in amounts not exceeding, in the calendar year 1967, the amount of $264,800,000, and to make, in the calendar year 1968 prior to the 1st day of July, 1968, certain capital expenditures, by way of investing in the securities of Air Canada, not exceeding $135,000,000 and to make certain other capital expenditures and enter into certain contracts, prior to the 1st day of July, 1968, for the acquisition of equipment, additions and conversions not exceeding $94,000,000; to provide for the financial requirements of Air Canada in an amount not exceeding $122,000,000, either by means of loans from Her Majesty to the national company or by means of issues of securities of the national company, authorized and guaranteed as to interest and principal by Her Majesty, the cash proceeds by either method to be used only for the financial requirements of Air Canada, the capital needs of the national company itself being met entirely through the sale of preferred stock to Her Majesty and from reserves from depreciation and debt discount; to authorize Her Majesty to continue to purchase until December 31st, 1968, Canadian National Company 4 per cnt preferred stock in an annual amount not excedding 3 per cent of the gross revenues of the company; to extend until December 31, 1968, the moratorium on interest on the loan of $100,000,000 to the company authorized by the National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952; to authorize Her Majesty to make loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating reserves to June 30, 1968, any such loans to be repaid from revenues of the railway company and Air Canada or, if revenues prove insufficient, by subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, this resolution is that which usually precedes the introduction of the Canadian National Railways financing and guarantee bill. It is basically the same as in previous years, with the exception of the 1963 act which covered 1962 and 1963 and the 1966 act which covered 1965 and 1966.

The bill is intended to accomplish six main purposes, each of which is similar in form to those of preceding acts.

First, it is to authorize capital expenditures by the Canadian National Railways not exceeding $264,800,000 during the 1967 calendar year, including $67 million for investment in Air Canada. This level of expenditures compares to $192 million authorized previously for 1966 in which there was no amount included for investment in Air Canada. The bill also contains technical provisions authorizing Canadian National Railways to make expenditures not exceeding $135 million between January 1 and July 1, 1968 for obligations incurred prior to 1968, including $55 million for investment in Air Canada, and to enter into contracts before July 1, 1968 for capital expenditures not exceeding $94 million for which payment will not come due until after 1967.

Second, the bill provides for the continued purchase by the Minister of Finance of Canadian National Railway 4 per cent preferred stock through to the end of the calendar year 1968. This continues the practice of previous financing and guarantee acts; the 1965-66 financing and guarantee act extended to December 31, 1967 the expiry date of the authority granted by the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act 1952 for the purchase of such stock equivalent to 3 per cent of the company's gross revenue.

Third, and for the same reasons, the bill also will extend until the end of 1968 the moratorium on interest on the government loan of $100 million to the railway company authorized by the Capital Revision Act, 1952.

Fourth, the bill will provide for the interim financing requrements of Air Canada during the first six months of the calendar year 1968 in an amount not exceeding $55 million.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Fifth, as in previous years the bill—if the house adopts the resolution and it becomes one—will provide authority for the government to make temporary loans to the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating revenues up to June 30, 1968. Any such loan is repaid later from revenues of the C.N.R. and Air Canada or, if these prove insufficient, the loans are written off through parliamentary appropriation.

Sixth, the bill would provide for the appointment of the firm of Touche, Ross, Bailey and Smart of the cities of Toronto and Montreal, chartered accountants, as auditors of the C.N.R. for the calendar year 1968.

The nature of the provisions of the bill differs from those of earlier years in only one respect. The present bill makes no provision for enlargement of the C.N.R.'s authority to refund, which at present stands at $680 million and is considered adequate for the period covered by the bill.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, this resolution is routine. As the hon. parliamentary secretary said, there is little change, on the surface, from other years. I note that his explanatory remarks are almost the same as those of other occasions. I do not plan to dwell too long on anything this evening.

We have had considerable discussion in the last few years about the railways, Air Canada and the like. We have gone into the matter of the financing of the Canadian National and Air Canada extensively in the house and in committee. In this connection, may I say this evening that we are sorry that an old face, in the person of the former minister of transport, is not with us. It is difficult to feel sorry for him, when we know that he is reposing somewhere up there with a job that carries a salary of $40,000 a year.

An hon. Member: Which he created himself.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is the hon. member lonely?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Up to a point; as was alluded to this afternoon in the remarks about the cabinet changes, the former minister of transport, with his broad interest in history, created history himself by opening up this job and then accepting it. It is amusing to remember that when he left his position in the house he gave the impression that: "The changes and reforms in the Department of Transport and in the railways are now complete; my job is done; there is nothing left for me to do and so I shall go to greener fields."

I asked the former minister of national defence what he thought he would do, and he said: "I shall probably be a candidate at the next Liberal convention. I want a real challenge. I want a department that is all messed up, and where there is something for me to do."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): There is also the story that the former minister of national defence, having wiped out the navy—and some of us said something about this in a previous debate—learned that there were more ships in the Department of Transport, and so he decided that he had better get over to that department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Whether he unifies or disintegrates the department remains to be seen.

Mr. Byrne: Does the hon. member want a skipper?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We shall watch the changes which take place. Quite apart from personalities, though, one thing does worry me. A very active partisan politician, for whom many in the house have high respect, has been made head of a tribunal which is of a semijudicial nature. This tribunal will deal, day by day, with political problems in transportation throughout this country. I do not agree with this sort of appointment as a matter of principle, and I wish to register my objection this evening.

I do not intend to make extensive remarks about the financing of the Canadian National and Air Canada, as contained in this resolution. For many years we have heard that the Canadian National ought to be recapitalized. Attention to this matter has been paid in committee, but nothing concrete as yet has been forthcoming.

For some time I have felt that it would be proper for the Canadian National and Air Canada to make public their balance sheets so that a comparison can be made between them and their competitors. Canadian National officials have always said that they want full control of their own financial structure. My interest in the Canadian National and its recapitalization has changed. I know that there are two aspects that must be considered. First, there are the unprofitable services that the Canadian National is called on to perform and, second, there is the old debt structure that was brought into being by the unprofitable railway lines and by the depreciation methods that were used in the 1940's. Though not all unprofitable services have been eliminated, they will be looked after by Bill C-231 when it becomes law in this country. The remaining problem has to do with the old debt structure. Whether it is proper for the Canadian National to wipe it out, at some expense to the Canadian taxpayer so that that railway can give a different impression vis-à-vis the Canadian Pacific, I do not know.

The Canadian National has reduced its deficit by $9 million during this past full year. The deficit is only—and I say "only" advisedly—$24 million. It is predicted that by 1970 a profit will be shown. I do not know whether it is better to show a profit every year or for a slight deficit to hang over the heads of the officials, to stir them to greater economies and greater efficiency.

An hon. Member: And greater effort.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Yes, and greater effort. The other matter I shall deal with is Air Canada. In this resolution we are being asked for a greater amount than ever before, if my information is correct, to meet the financial requirements of Air Canada. These requirements are brought about by the great expense of the new Boeings, Douglases, and supersonic transports. Personally, I feel that there should be some accounting by Air Canada officials before a committee. I do not suggest that Air Canada be made a public corporation. It ought to be owned by the government. It might be appropriate to set up a separate bookkeeping system so that we might get a truer, up-to-date picture than we now have and so that we might compare it with Canadian Pacific Airlines now that the two air lines are in competition.

We must look back to the days of the late C. D. Howe for the explanation of why Air Canada was tied to the Canadian National. The reasons were valid then.

If an investigation were conducted by someone in the department, and by accountants or those who have the particular knowledge to set up a full balance sheet for Air Canada, I think it might be well worth while. The various amounts under various headings ought to be set out. According to officials, the net debt fund ratio is not correctly shown in our figures. The figures we have do not give a proper picture of this air line.

I think it has been well run, and I speak as one who has served on the committee, off and on, for many years. However, we do not really know the profit and loss situation of this company. That is the word of caution I have to offer. Financing of the C.N.R. does not now loom as large in my mind, since the deficit has been reduced, as does the Air Canada situation.

We shall be looking forward to the bill. I do not think there is any point in expressing thoughts on this general financial resolution in greater detail tonight, except to point out that we shall have to demand from the new minister the same assurances as were given us during the passage of the railway bill, and on various other occasions in the course of debates in this chamber. The former minister of transport promised us that a new bill would be brought in to deal with maritime transportation; we were asked for support on the basis of a promise that something would be done immediately to meet these problems.

We are still waiting. We now have a new minister, and the promise which was made to us has gone out of the window. Members who come from the west were given certain promises with respect to railway passenger services and the discontinuance of certain lines. Where do we stand now with regard to statements solemnly made in this house by the former minister?

This change of office has come about, in my opinion, at a very bad time not only from the standpoint of national defence but also from the standpoint of transport arrangements. We want to know where we stand with regard to the various promises the former minister made. In Newfoundland, the railway indicated it was their intention to do away with passenger service. How does the former minister stand with regard to this? Tonight he is attending a testimonial dinner and he has taken the new minister with him. I wonder who is going to be telling whom to do what about transport?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, there is one particular matter about which I should like to say a few words while this resolution is before us. If it is possible and appropriate for the parliament of Canada to provide sums of money for the C.N.R., as indicated in this resolution, it seems to me it is also proper and appropriate for us to make certain suggestions to the C.N.R. I think the time has come for the C.N.R. to be told that it has to improve the pension position of its retired employees.

I say frankly that I have refrained for some months from making pleas of this kind on the floor of the House of Commons because I thought it would be wise for us to concentrate our efforts on the case of retired federal civil servants. I made it clear, however, that as soon as we had won that battle I would be insisting that something similar be done for retired employees of the C.N.R. Hon. members who were here this afternoon when the hon. member for Carleton asked his question on the orders of the day will realize how I feel about this situation. It was made clear to us this afternoon that all the promises of last July that immediate attention would be given to the difficulties faced by retired civil servants were not worth the time it took to utter them in this house. Therefore, if I continue to wait until the case of the retired civil servants has been taken care of before I mention again the case of retired C.N.R. employees, many of those employees, like many civil servants, will have gone where they do not need pensions of the kind the people of Canada could provide.

I submit that the position of retired employees of the C.N.R. is analogous in every respect to that of retired civil servants. I submit that the case is becoming clearer and clearer as the months and the years go by that it is not good enough for us to expect people to spend all their years of retirement on the amount of pension they were awarded at the time they retired. We accepted the principle that there should be escalation of pensions after they had been put into pay when we passed the Canada Pension Plan and we have written it into the Old Age Security Act. I submit there are at least these two groups about which the government and the parliament of Canada could do something—the retired civil servants and the retired employees of the C.N.R.

Reference has been made a number of times today to the new Minister of Transport. I hope that on this score he will do a lot better than the previous minister. Despite all the plaudits which can be given to Jack Pickersgill with respect to his role as minister of transport, on this issue he has been a complete flop. All he ever did was send letters or copies of Hansard to the president of the C.N.R.; there was no evidence of any pressure, any urging, no matter how hard we pressed the case in parliament.

I hope the new Minister of Transport is a little more aware of the seriousness of this problem and of the need for something to be done about it, especially in view of the fact that it seems appropriate for us to provide the C.N.R. with the sums of money mentioned in the resolution tonight. Like the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, I do not think it is necessary at this time to enter upon a lengthy debate in connection with transportation matters in view of the time we have spent on this whole subject during the last couple of years. Nevertheless, I do urge that the new minister give early consideration to this question. Better still, he should act on it with the least possible delay.

Mr. Harkness: I wish to speak briefly on one particular point in connection with this resolution. A similar bill was brought before the house during the last session; I believe the parliamentary secretary mentioned tonight that it dealt with expenditures for both 1965 and 1966. Upon examination of that bill it was apparent that more than three-quarters of the expenditure for which parliamentary approval was sought had already been made. Indeed, some of this money had been spent over a year before the bill was passed and most of the rest had been spent long before the measure was introduced.

Looking at this resolution it would seem that the first amount mentioned, namely the $264,800,000 expenditure for the current year 1967, must also have been spent already since the calendar year is now three parts over.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The point I particularly wish to make is that this method of getting legislative authority for expenditure of the Canadian taxpayers' money after that money has actually been spent is contrary to our whole theory and practice of government financing. The ordinary practice which has to be followed by every department is that the minister responsible presents his estimates, they are approved by the house and the money is spent on the basis of the estimates. If expenditures go over the amount which has been approved by the house, then those expenditures cannot be made.

This method of financing the C.N.R. and Air Canada is not consistent with the general practice which is followed and which should be followed. When the bill was up for discussion last session we had a considerable amount of argument over this point but no satisfactory explanation of this method of doing business was given. On this occasion, I would hope that on second reading the minister, or the parliamentary secretary if it is he who is piloting the bill, will be prepared to give a reasonable explanation for the continuation of this particular practice.

Mr. O'Keefe: Mr. Chairman, as a representative of the province that brought not only Labrador to this Canada of ours but also a railway, I think the only province that did such a thing, may I register the strongest possible exception to the C.N.R. plan to abolish passenger services in Newfoundland and substitute bus services for them. We are told that a bus service would be better for us. We are told that train passenger service is uneconomic. May I ask where in Canada is train passenger service economic?

I asked Mr. MacMillan in the transport committee if any thought had been given to upgrading the passenger service in my province. I remember him saying that thought had been given to this. Then I asked him had any action been taken and he said no. Maybe at a later date I will have an opportunity to talk about this at greater length, but at the moment I wish to register the strongest objection to the C.N.R. abandoning passenger train service in my province, particularly during centennial year.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. MacEachen thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-151, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1967 to the 30th day of June, 1968, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order; house again in committee of supply, vote 1 of the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. This item will be found at page 572 of the bluebook, with the details at page 574.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

1. Departmental administration, $5,702,200.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Chairman, as is the custom these estimates have been carefully examined by the standing committee on veterans affairs and therefore my remarks will be very brief. I want to deal with only two items because of the widespread interest shown in them by veterans across Canada and by members of the house.

The Woods committee report will apparently be in my hands within a day or two, although not translated. It will be some weeks before the translation is completed. However, I hope to make arrangements with the chairman of the committee to enable the department and the Canadian Pension Commission to begin considering the report without waiting for its translation.

The second item is the study on pension rates which is not yet completed but which I am informed will be completed before very long.

As to the interim rates that I talked about last fall, I can only refer back to the question put by the hon. member for Kootenay West which I answered this afternoon. This is the main burden of my remarks this evening on these estimates. As I say, they have been carefully considered. Of course, I am available to answer any questions that arise out of consideration of them.

Mr. MacRae: As the minister has said, Mr. Chairman, the estimates of this department have been considered by the standing committee. During the committee hearings the chairman of the Pension Commission, the chairman of the War Veterans Allowance Board and all the officials were most co-operative and helpful. I feel a good job was done in that committee, and I wish to commend the chairman for his fairness in all matters.

It was my intention on orders of the day today to read a telegram for the benefit of the minister, a telegram from the Nova Scotia Command of the Royal Canadian Legion. However, as mentioned by the minister, the hon. member for Kootenay West beat me to the punch on this question and I decided to defer reading the telegram until these estimates were being considered. It is of such importance and is so pertinent that I would like to put it on the record now. I do not know whether the minister received a copy of it, but it will now be on the record for his perusal. It reads as follows:

> The officers and members of Nova Scotia Command of the Royal Canadian Legion do hereby protest the long delay by the present federal government in not giving veterans a pension commensurate with toady's cost of living. We also protest the delay in increased pensions to widows and dependents and do demand immediate action to rectify this situation at the present session of parliament. Your participation and co-operation is urgently solicited in this matter.

The telegram is signed by J. V. Brown, who is the president of the Nova Scotia Command, and by W. L. Huestis, provincial secretary. I think it speaks for itself.

I should also like to refer to the lead editorial in the last issue of the Legionary, which is the official organ of the Royal Canadian Legion. We members of parliament receive much material that we do not have time to read, but I feel every member of the house should read this editorial. It is well written and brings to the fore the plight of those men and women who, in time of war, offered their services to their country, so many of whom suffered grievously and so many of whom did not return.

As it has been in the past, the Royal Canadian Legion is headed by an excellent president, Ron MacBeath, of Moncton. He is giving the organization strong leadership and is not backward in pressing its just claims.

On August 21 Mr. MacBeath sent a letter to the Prime Minister. I should like to place that letter on the record of the House of Commons. I feel it is that important. The letter reads:

> We of the Royal Canadian Legion were greatly disturbed to find in the reports of your press conference on Tuesday, August 15, no mention whatsoever of action by the government to place war pension rates on an equitable basic formula or to at least grant interim increases immediately.
> On four occasions the Legion has set out, in presentations to the government, why we think such pension increases are urgently needed and fully justified. We feel that war pensions should be equated to certain salaries in the government services, as they were in 1920. The interim increase of last September was totally inadequate because the comparable civil servant now receives $1,392 a year more than the disabled pensioner.
> Recent Legion provincial command conventions have expressed bitter disappointment at the long delay in establishing an adequate pension rate.
> On March 13, 1967, in response to a question concerning the extension of the 15% increase to dependents of disability pensioners, the Minister of Veterans Affairs said:
> "First, the delay in adjusting the pensions of veterans is not because of the Woods Report; it is awaiting the report of another nature from another group in my department which is dealing specifically with pension rates.

Of course the minister has dealt with this in his earlier remarks. The letter and the statement by the minister continue:

I can assure the hon. member and the house that if the report does not come to hand in the fairly near future we shall perhaps have to consider making some adjustment in pension rates in the interim period. I am hoping the report will be to hand in time for this to be avoided, and for an adjustment to be made consistent with some logical basis."

Over five months have passed since the minister's statement, yet the government remains silent.

Mr. MacBeath's letter goes on:

It is highly regrettable that this seemingly insensitive attitude of the federal government does not enable the war disabled and the dependents of those who died to share fully in the glories of our centennial year.

The Royal Canadian Legion is being forced to the conclusion that the men whose sacrifices in war made our centennial possible have been forgotten. We would appreciate tangible evidence that this is not so.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that I hope the Prime Minister, the members of the government and especially the Minister of Veterans Affairs will take this letter of Mr. MacBeath's to heart, as well as the protests of the Royal Canadian Legion and the protests of the hundreds of thousands of veterans, so that something will be done for this very special class of citizen very very soon.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances I do not intend to take up too much of the time of the house. First of all, I must say I am sure all members of the house, particularly the members of the standing committee on veterans affairs, are interested to hear that the Woods Report is in the minister's hands. I trust that this report soon will be referred to the standing committee so that its contents can be considered as well as representations from the various organizations.

I must say that the minister's reply with regard to the possibility of an increase in pensions was disappointing. I am sure it will be disappointing to the members of the Royal Canadian Legion and other veterans' organizations just as it is to the members of this house and the members of the standing committee on veterans affairs who, I am very pleased to say, throughout the years have treated this question on a non-partisan basis. We have met together during the committee sessions and have discussed various questions related to pension rates, war veterans allowances, the administration of the Veterans Land Act, and so on, in a completely non-partisan manner. I believe this is indicated by the report the committee made to the house earlier this year when dealing with the question of the complaints of the Hong Kong veterans. I think that, generally speaking, the members of the committee were pleased with the efficient manner in which the officials of the Canadian Pension Commission dealt with this subject by reviewing all these cases.

I must say, however, that the minister's statement tonight was a great disappointment to many of us. I am sure it was a disappointment even to the chairman of the standing committee on veterans affairs in view of his strong plea before the house prior to the adjournment for an increase in these pension and war veterans allowance rates. The hon. member who just spoke quoted from an editorial in the Canadian Legionary of September. I will not repeat what he had to say. I do wish, however, to quote the remainder of that editorial which is entitled, "How Much Longer?":

To some these may seem strong words. They are, and justifiably so. If the Prime Minister and the Minister of Veterans Affairs will re-read the latter's statements in Hansard since the wholly inadequate and purely "interim" 15 per cent increase last November, they must understand why the Legion is frustrated, apprehensive and deeply disappointed.

There have been too many vague explanations and half-promises, and it is high time that action followed words. Obviously, the "logical basis" mentioned by Mr. Teillet has not yet been found and, as the "fairly near future" to which he referred has long since passed, the least the government can do during the coming session is to implement the D.V.A. minister's assurance that a further "interim" increase will be granted.

The fact that Prime Minister Pearson made no mention at his press conference of any such legislation being contemplated for the fall session is disturbing in the extreme. How much longer must our war disabled wait?

I am sure those sentiments have the support of a good majority of the members of this house regardless of party. I am sure the disappointment will be reflected in the minds of many veterans and their dependents across Canada at this time and all those in Canada who are interested in seeing that the veterans receive just treatment. I am sure all of us look forward to a later statement on this very important issue which we trust the minister will make in the very near future.

During my brief remarks I should like to make a reference to the visit by the members of the standing committee on veterans affairs to Europe between June 26 and July 17 of 1966. This was the first time a standing committee on veterans affairs from Canada visited Europe for the purposes mentioned. In addition to visiting all the memorials, laying wreaths at these memorials and visiting the various battle fields, the members of the committee had some very interesting and important visits. In France we were paid a visit by the officials of the World Veterans Federation and heard a brief on the objectives and work of this organization. Later, we heard a brief presented by the regional administrator of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission at the headquarters of that organization in Paris. At this time we were informed of the work of the commission, some of which is done under difficult circumstances, and the improvements they intend to make in the various cemeteries and particularly around the war memorial at Vimy. Then, naturally, we attended the Canadian, Commonwealth and allied ceremonies marking the 50th Anniversary of the Battle of the Somme. We also had the opportunity to visit and discuss matters with the officials of the government of Italy, the government of France, and also with representatives of the appropriate government departments of Great Britain.

During these visits we were well informed of the practices and procedures followed by these other organizations. This information will be very helpful in the drafting of legislation in the days ahead which will affect the veterans and their dependents. In Holland, we had an opportunity to hear the representations of certain Canadian veterans who are resident there. The same thing happened in France and Italy. In London we heard from representatives of Canadian veterans in Great Britain. We visited the British Commonwealth ex-Services League Convention and had a briefing on their work throughout the world. We visited the headquarters of the British Ministry of Pensions and National Insurance for a briefing on the British war pensions system and allowances.

In view of the money Canada has contributed, which I understand is about $500,000 a year—this is our quota to the British Commonwealth War Graves Commission—I am quite sure that our visit was welcomed by the commission, by the governments from which we heard representations and by the Canadian veterans in these various countries. I am sure the visits were well worth while and will be of value to the members of this house and the standing committee on veterans affairs when dealing with veterans' legislation in the years ahead.

I trust that in the near future the standing committee on veterans affairs will meet and will have the opportunity to listen to representations from the Royal Canadian Legion, other veterans organizations and that gallant little body, the War Pension Widows Association, which has appeared before the committee throughout the years. I hope that the result of our listening to their representations and the mellowing of the government's heart—I know the minister's heart is in the right place—will be that in the near future we will have amendments to the Canada Pension Act and the War Veterans' Allowance Act which will give justice to our veterans in so far as their pensions and allowances are concerned.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to know that the Woods report is being studied in detail. It was a most excellent report. I have a suggestion to make which I think will help the minister and satisfy everybody concerned.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might interrupt the hon. gentleman at this moment just to clarify a point. If I understood correctly, I believe the hon. member for Kootenay West said that I had the report on hand. I am expecting it momentarily; I do not yet have it on hand. I think that should be clearly understood. I apologize to the hon. member for interrupting him.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member mind if I apologized to the minister? I misheard the minister. It was quite unintentional on my part.

Mr. Bigg: I know that the minister has the main body of the Woods report. At least, that is my understanding. Is that correct?

Mr. Teillet: Yes, the evidence.

Mr. Bigg: The Woods report may have been delayed, but I am more concerned about the details of the program and the kind of justice we give to our veterans. I have a suggestion which I think may help the minister. I suggest that we make the payments to the veterans retroactive and that they be reasonable in accordance with what seems to be reasonable in other areas of our Canadian life. I suggest that we raise the veterans pension by 30 per cent and make it retroactive to last November, when we approved the increases in principle. Our veterans have suffered distress over the past few years. There has been a unanimous recommendation from the committee and all corners of the house, and we can undo some of the injustice done to these men by making the payments retroactive to last November. I am quite sure this would meet with the approval of the legion, the veterans themselves and all members of this house.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I understand there is a disposition to endeavour to conclude this evening the discussion on the estimates of this department. Therefore my remarks will be exceptionally brief. Perhaps my understanding of the situation is incorrect, but that it what I was led to believe.

Mr. Churchill: That is quite incorrect.

Mr. Patterson: We do not have any representative on the standing committee on veterans affairs, but when I had the opportunity of serving on that committee I discovered that partisan considerations had no place whatsoever in the work and activities of the committee. Therefore, I do not have any reason to believe tonight that any matter pertinent to the welfare of the veterans has been overlooked.

However, Mr. Chairman, there are several observations I should like to make in connection with the two matters the minister raised this evening. First of all, I would refer to the Woods commission report and then to the interim increases. All members of the house realize that these matters have been raised on many occasions in the past. Members from all parties, and this includes our party, have asked the minister questions with respect to the date on which he expected the Woods commission report to be tabled.

In spite of all the questions asked we have been unable to obtain a satisfactory answer. I suppose this was because the minister did not know. I believe it is unfortunate that the commission report has been delayed for this long. However, we all recognize the fact that there are many problems involved in this question and perhaps it is better that the commission take a little longer and be sure of its ground before tabling the report.

In the meantime, the veterans have been wondering just what has been going on and what they can hope for when the report of the commission is tabled. We are happy tonight to learn the minister expects to receive the report momentarily.

The other matter relates to interim increases. On several occasions the minister assured us that should the report of this commission be long delayed, further interim increases would be considered. During the summer recess I communicated with the minister, reminded him of the fact that the commission report had been long delayed and asked him to give consideration to the fulfilment of his commitment that consideration would be given to further interim increases. I was once again assured that this matter was under consideration. We have become used to this type of reply from many departments, but at least we are glad the matter is still under consideration and has not been forgotten.

The veterans are greatly disturbed about this delay. Reference has been made tonight to the attitude taken by the veterans organizations. The fact that the president of the Canadian Legion saw fit to write such a letter to the Prime Minister is indicative of the fact they are very disturbed about the whole situation. Therefore, I believe that in fairness to the veterans and in recognition of the promise the minister has made, further interim increases should be made without delay. Only this will prove to the veterans that the Department of Veterans Affairs, the minister and the government are concerned about the plight of the veterans.

There is just one other matter that I should like to mention. It concerns the effect on the pension levels of various other benefits that the veterans may receive. I refer to the income supplement payment and to compensation that may come from workmen's compensation boards, and so on.

It is my understanding that these benefits which accrue to the veterans in recognition of their services and sacrifices are something that the veterans have a right to expect. They were promised that these would be recognized. I do not believe that any other benefit, such as income supplement, compensation or anything else, should interfere in any way with the levels of benefit that the veterans are receiving under the pension rates. These are the matters which I wish to call to the attention of the minister at this time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I understood the house may be disposed to deal with these estimates tonight and I wonder if we might consider that idea. This was my understanding. Perhaps I am mistaken, but I thought if the house were disposed to sit a little longer so as to deal with these estimates it would help the work of the house. Of course, I leave it up to the house.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the house wish to give unanimous consent to sitting longer?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, no one has any idea how many hon. members may wish to speak. I notice there are two or three members rising on the government side. I think we have done a good day's work today and possibly we should call it ten o'clock at this time.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the government house leader what are the government's intentions concerning business of the house for tomorrow, and possibly Wednesday so that we can plan our work.

Mr. MacEachen: Tomorrow we will take second reading and committee stage of the bills which resulted from the passage of the resolution on the C.N.R. financing and manpower advisory boards. We will take the manpower and immigration advisory boards bill first and the C.N.R. financing bill second. If we complete these tomorrow at any stage, we will continue with the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. If we complete that, we will take the Department of the Registrar General. I hope that on Wednesday we will begin with one of the resolutions that will be available then. There are three or four resolutions that will be available, one dealing with the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, another with the Post Office Act, especially rates, and another with the establishment of the department of corporate and consumer affairs. I hope that the rest of the week will be filled with the consideration of these resolutions.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

WATER RESOURCES—OTTAWA RIVER—REQUEST FOR POLLUTION CONTROL

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, a few days before we adjourned for the summer recess I attempted on orders of the day to bring to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for affairs in the national capital area, the condition of the Ottawa river with regard to water pollution. Mr. Speaker ruled at that time that the question was not one which was appropriate for discussion on orders of the day and this is the first opportunity I have had to raise the matter again.

However, I should say that a few days after I tried to raise the question in the house on orders of the day I said a few words on a local radio station on this same issue, the pollution of the Ottawa river. Within three days I had received more than 360 letters from people in this area urging that some action be taken by any level of government to end the very serious pollution which existed then, and which I believe still exists, in the national capital area. All of the letters urged that it was needful from the point of view of health and welfare and the prestige of our national capital for some real and immediate action to be taken by a senior level of government.

Since that time, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the federal government has acted to encourage the Quebec and Ontario governments to study this very serious local situation of water pollution in the Ottawa river. I also understand that in some other areas of our country the federal government has undertaken to spend large sums of money to help the authorities combat the singular problem of water pollution.

Water pollution and air pollution are, of course, matters far beyond the competence of any little local authority. I think that in this age it is obvious that these problems require very active, major and early action on the part of the more senior level of government in a planned and co-operative way with the local authorities.

In raising this question again tonight I have in mind the situation in that part of Canada from which I come, the lower mainland of British Columbia, where another major Canadian river flows, the Fraser river. In that area water pollution is also a very serious problem; the Fraser river is becoming almost an open sewer.

I should like to ask two questions tonight. First of all, what is the federal government doing in the national capital area of Ottawa and Hull to fight water pollution? Second, what is the federal government doing in the many other areas of Canada where this same general problem exists to ensure that there should be a unified and effective effort made to combat this very serious modern problem?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for New Westminster asked two questions. The first was: What is the federal government doing in the Ottawa area to combat the very serious problem of pollution? It is doing several things. On behalf of the federal government, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) has offered at the recent meeting of the council of resource ministers, to pay most, and perhaps all, of the cost of a comprehensive study of the problem of pollution in the Ottawa river.

The federal government has also offered, as it has in many other situations, to help finance the cleaning up of the river through the construction of sewage treatment plants.

For some years now the federal government has put up two thirds of the cost of the construction of sewage treatment plants erected by municipalities. These loans have also included a forgiveness clause whereby 25 per cent of this money was later forgiven or cancelled. This amounts to an appreciable subsidy or reduction on the interest rate on money available for this purpose.

An incentive is also contained in legislation which was passed in 1965. The budget of that year gave an incentive with the rapid write-off for all new plant and equipment used for the treatment of liquid wastes leaving industrial plants. The municipalities on the Ontario side of the river have taken avantage of these provisions, both in respect of sewage and, to a lesser degree industrial waste.

On the Quebec side there has been less enthusiasm, despite pressure from provincial authorities for this to be done. In any case, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has written to Premier Daniel Johnson in Quebec and to hon. Mr. J. R. Simonett of Ontario offering to put up 100 percent of the cost of the comprehensive over-all study of the problems of control of the Ottawa river.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) also asked what the federal government is doing to deal with similar problem situations elsewhere in Canada. It is offering to pay for part or all the research involved in assessing problems in numerous areas. It is doing a great deal right here in Ontario. It is helping to build a research institute in Hamilton which will deal with problems on the great lakes. It is also offering to municipalities in other parts of Canada the forgiveness features on loans for cleanup plants for municipalities and rapid write-offs for industrial plant equipment.

TRANSPORT—INQUIRY AS TO PROTECTION AT LEVEL CROSSINGS

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is painful to bring back to memory the anniversary of a tragedy which shook the Canadian people in 1966. I am thinking of the railroad accident that occurred at Dorion. A few days hence, a year will have elapsed since the calamity took place in the province of Quebec.

I should like to renew my request once again, at the risk of being considered a bore by the most indulgent parliamentary secretary to the hon. Minister of Transport, the member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) who has always been kind enough to take into consideration whatever requests I have made to him about the improvements to railway crossings.

I insist again this year, Mr. Speaker, because, with the introduction of turbo-train service, which trains travel at extremely high and dangerous speeds, I must ask to what extent the organization responsible for ensuring public safety at grade crossings has considered a much more imaginative policy than that already being applied. The operation of turbo-trains poses a most serious problem and creates considerable difficulties with regard to the safety of the public.

I should also like to know to what extent innovations will be considered in that field. I should like to know to what extent the suggestions and recommendations made by various organizations concerned more particularly with public safety have been taken into consideration.

In my opinion, the situation that must be faced, due to modern technology which makes available to the public those dangerous devices that are becoming essential, is one which, on the other hand, gives rise to problems requiring a solution.

That is why I am appealing once again to the government authorities. I take this opportunity to urge them to show a bit more imagination and to take into account certain recommendations which could be quickly applied, recommendations made by worthwhile organizations, constantly interested in public safety. So, once again, I am asking the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) who might take this opportunity, since he is taking on new responsibilities, to give this problem serious consideration and to invent solutions, if he can. I ask him also to make the most of the fact that the former minister, the hon. Mr. Pickersgill, who also showed special interest in these questions when they were brought to his attention, has now become president of the transport commission.

So, Mr. Speaker, counting on the dispatch and the attention of government authorities, I think it is important to show some imagination in the field of public safety in view of the fact that these turbo-trains will surely create problems that will have to be faced.

[English]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I must take this occasion to compliment my hon. friend for his tenacity in pursuing this question of safety at railway level crossings. He was concerned about this matter long before the tragic accident at Dorion and I am sure that since he raised this subject on April 18 of this year greater attention has been paid by the C.N.R. in its planning for the implementation of the turbo-train between Montreal and Toronto.

A great deal of consideration has been given to this matter by the officials and the research committee of Canadian National Railways throughout the last several years. The hon. member mentioned that the former minister of transport interested himself a great deal in this question and it goes without saying that in his new position as president of the enlarged transport commission he will have this matter foremost in his mind. I am sure that he, together with our new and energetic Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), will make a combination which will solve this very serious problem.

The introduction of high speed trains will undoubtedly bring additional hazards. I think I said the last time this question was debated that it is unthinkable that we should leave an unguarded railway crossing, or for that matter an unguarded railway line, when trains will reach such high speeds as 120 or 150 miles an hour. I am sure that what the hon. member is doing will bring this more forcibly to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the government and the public at large, and again I want to congratulate him for his earnest attention to this matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE—LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, tonight on the subject of increases in pensions for retired public servants I speak rather crossly but very deliberately. With other hon. members of the house I have tried to achieve my objective by quiet persuasion and firm argument, but unsuccessfully. I confess to you, sir, that my patience with the government's unbelievable procrastination with respect to increases for retired public servants, members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. is totally exhausted.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): On this subject my mood has shifted from expectation to exasperation, to indignation, and then to anger. This is not a matter of partisanship in any way whatever. On the record are all the efforts of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), of the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard), of other hon. members and of myself to compel action on the part of the government.

What I cannot discover, what I am unable to understand is how to get the members of this dawdling, supine, slumbering, pottering ministry to take a simple, ordinary, straightforward decision—yes or no. The answer the government must give to the unanimous, and I stress unanimous, recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service that there be increases in pensions for retired public servants and equivalent persons is just that—either yes or no.

If it is yes, then bring in the legislation; do it now, and we will pass it in 24 hours or less. If it is no, then treat us as common sense persons and stop beating around the bush with silly evasions about "active consideration," "immediate study," "deep concern," "in due course" and other such sophistries and platitudes which relieve no hardship, and believe me, Mr. Speaker, there are many hardships on the part of retired public servants.

If the government deliberately and consciously intends to flout the will of a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons then let it have the courage to say so. At least, we will respect its honesty. We who believe in responsible and parliamentary government will then be ready to test the mood of this house. Any government which would so disregard the plight of so many of its former employees would, in my opinion, deserve ignominious and dishonourable defeat.

The unanimous recommendations of the joint committee presented to parliament on May 8, 1967, almost five months ago, were direct and simple. I read them as follows:

> In the committee's view, the government should do what it reasonably can to protect and preserve, or failing that to restore in some measure the original purchasing power of the contributory pensions which, under the Public Service Superannuation Act, and similar enactments, it has provided for its retired employees.
> With this consideration in mind, your committee recommends immediate action by the government, to up-date and extend the provisions of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act (1959).

Then on the next page I read:

> The committee recommends that any plan to improve the position of these retired employees ... should be capable of quick and early implementation in the form of legislation in the next session of this parliament—

That language is familiar to some members who are in the house tonight. In every particular the joint committee said "immediate," but the government's response has been the most fabulous procrastination of all time.

Where is my good friend, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), whose most important role is that of the hon. member for Ottawa West? Where does he stand on this issue? He is the key to the whole situation. He is the minister of the crown whose views are basically significant.

I invite him to get off his complacent posterior, to stand up for the people he represents, to force an immediate and favourable decision from cabinet. If he cannot get a decision favourable to the public servants, active and retired, of Ottawa West, then he should resign in protest from the cabinet. Deliberately I mix every metaphor to say to the hon. gentleman from Ottawa West that he cannot any longer straddle the fence with an ear to the ground, grinding an axe, until the rust eats into his soul and while his constituents suffer grave hardships.

Great Britain, France, the United States and most of our own provinces have succeeded in developing formulae to increase pensions of their former employees, without injustice to other citizens. What is wrong with us that we fiddle, faddle, dawdle, and delay? The time for final and decisive action has arrived.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken in terms indignant and angry. These are the moods I feel. I am sick, tired, and fed up to the teeth with evasion and, beyond anything else, I want action. That is the reason I have spoken with emotion and directness. I say to the hon. gentleman who is to reply tonight, do not give us any more of this run-around, this business of active consideration, or all the other types of evasive action. I say to him, come to grips tonight with the issues—tonight, not next January, not next June, not two years from next June, but tonight.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous parliamentary secretary I find myself unable to congratulate the hon. member who has just spoken. I am unable to congratulate him for his intemperate speech.

When the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) earlier today asked this question of the minister and received a straightforward, honest reply to the effect that the government was giving the matter the most serious and diligent attention I was sure that would completely satisfy the house and him. However, we have just heard—I knew what would happen tonight and this was written before I heard the hon. member—that such is not the case in so far as the hon. member is concerned.

I served on the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the public service along with the hon. member for Carleton who made a very valuable contribution to the deliberations of that committee. The members of the committee worked in harmony. We had the same objectives. As I say, I served on that committee with the hon. member and I now tell him something he already knows; no hon. member and no government is more determined and anxious to work out a feasible proposal which can be spelled out in legislation for the benefit of superannuated civil servants than this Liberal government and its supporters.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Do it.

Mr. Walker: There is no government that is more determined to work out a feasible, practical and helpful solution to this problem than the present Liberal administration. Surely, it is not necessary for me to remind anyone that this government has guaranteed to Canadians, including civil servants, that they will not receive less than $105 a month. No government has done as much for those in need as has this Liberal administration.

Mr. Speaker, pensions for superannuates are on the cabinet agenda. They have been discussed at length and with active concern. As soon as a decision is made on a suitable formula that is feasible, practical and helpful, it will be announced in the house.

Mr. Knowles: That was the answer we received on July 7.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

APPENDIX

EXCHANGE OF LETTERS ON RESIGNATION OF HON. J. W. PICKERSGILL

September 5, 1967

The Rt. Hon. L. B. Pearson, M.P.
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.
Dear Mike:

Some time ago, I discussed my possible retirement from public life with you and you were good enough to assure me that if I wished to be president of the Canadian Transport Commission when the time came to set it up, you would recommend my appointment.

As you are aware, the work preparatory to setting up the commission is now largely completed and it will be possible to proclaim part one of the National Transportation Act by mid September with the assurance that the commission can then begin to function immediately.

After a good deal of reflection, I have come to the conclusion that, if you are still of the same mind, I would like to become president of the commission. The position is one which I believe I can fill adequately, and which will give me the opportunity of continued public service for several years. While a demanding and responsible position, it would not involve the same pressures as there are upon a minister of the crown. Though my general health seems to be excellent, I have, as you know, found these pressures very great in the past three years.

I believe it would be in the public interest at this time to have a younger man assume the portfolio of transport and, happily, in the government and in the ranks of your supporters in the House of Commons, there are several who could fill that office as well as I can.

One of the main reasons I agreed to leave the public service and enter public life in 1953, was that I was persuaded by Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Smallwood that I could make some contribution to a smooth transition of Newfoundland from its earlier status to a full integrated Canadian province. Not only has confederation now been almost universally accepted in Newfoundland, but there are happily several men active in public life today who could represent Newfoundland effectively in the cabinet.

My main reluctance, therefore, in leaving public life is that, in doing so, I shall be breaking that close association I have had with you, in opposition and in government, since you became the leader of the Liberal party. While we have not always seen eye to eye on every public question, I have never faltered in my conviction that our party made a happy choice for Canada in 1958. I have been proud to be associated with you and our other colleagues in the government of our country, and in the indispensable work you have done to strengthen and broaden the foundations of a united Canada, which I believe history will recognize as the greatest of your many public achievements.

Despite my reluctance to sever this relationship which has been a happy one for me, I feel that I should accept the opportunity for somewhat less strenuous public service offered by the presidency of the Canadian Transport Commission and, if you agree, ask you to accept my resignation as Minister of Transport as soon as it is convenient for you to have the commission established.

In doing so, I want to express my deep appreciation of your unfailing understanding and support of my efforts in public life as one of your supporters, and my gratitude for your friendship.

Yours ever,
J. W. Pickersgill

.....

September 11, 1967.

The Honourable J. W. Pickersgill, Minister of Transport,
Ottawa.
My dear Jack:

I have already told you with what great regret I received your letter of September 5 indicating your desire to retire from the government and your willingness to accept the presidency of the Canadian Transport Commission, an appointment which I discussed with you some time ago.

While I know that this appointment is a most important and responsible one and will give you a further opportunity for public service, I cannot help but feel sad at the thought that it will mean your departure from the cabinet and from the political life of our country where you have played such an important role for so many years.

I don't suppose there is anybody who is in a better position than I am to appreciate the value of the contribution you have made as a member of the government; to our party when we were in opposition, especially in its parliamentary activities, and to the Canadian public service before that. No one knows better than I do, how much you have given of your great knowledge and outstanding talent; of your energy and your devotion, to the service of this country.

We have been colleagues for more than thirty years in public service and I have valued our close collaboration only less than I have the friendship that has grown up between us as we worked together.

My great regret at your departure, however, is reduced but not removed, by the assurance that our friendship will continue, as well as that close personal association which I value so much.

All the best in the days ahead,

As ever,
L. B. Pearson

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, September 26, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

DECLINE IN WHEAT PRICES—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely:

The critical situation facing Canadian wheat producers in consequence of the catastrophic decline in wheat prices; the absence at the present time of an international wheat agreement to provide an effective floor price; the sale of large quantities of United States wheat at prices considerably below the floor price stipulated in the proposed sixth international wheat agreement; the decline in orders for Canadian wheat in recent weeks; the increasing danger that the sixth international wheat agreement may not be ratified by reason of the government's failure to reach an agreement with Washington to maintain the price differential between Canadian and United States wheat until such time as a new agreement comes into force.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam kindly address the Chair and the house on the question of urgency of debate?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the fact that this question is of utmost urgency is best exemplified by the statement of Mr. Chas. W. Gibbings, president of the Saskatoon wheat pool, who said that the wheat producers of Canada now face a crisis greater than any they have faced in over 20 years. The fact is that we have been lulled into a false sense of security. Since April the price of wheat has dropped by some 22 cents a bushel. The farmers are not protected at the present time under an international wheat agreement. The fifth agreement expired on July 31 of this year; the new agreement, if it is ratified, will not be coming into effect until July 1, 1968. In the meantime the United States has been unloading wheat at prices as much as 8 cents a bushel below the floor price in the proposed new agreement.

In spite of this drop in price, orders for Canadian wheat have been declining. The most serious question of all which this house may have to consider is the distinct possibility that the new agreement, the sixth annual agreement, may not be ratified. The period for ratification is set for October 15 to November 30. With prices below the proposed minimum it will be difficult to persuade importing countries to ratify that agreement; yet if the agreement is not ratified the farmers of this country will be without any protection whatsoever, or without any effective protection.

Since this matter affects the whole agricultural economy, since what is involved can represent a serious decline in farm income and have widespread economic implications for Canada as a whole, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that a discussion ought to be held on this matter immediately.

It was said yesterday that the Minister of Trade and Commerce might make a statement on motions. I submit to Your Honour that a statement on motions merely permits a statement to be made by a member from each party. Such a procedure would not provide the opportunity for full debate. It would not give the minister the opportunity to close the debate, to answer questions and to give the house full information.

I think, therefore, this matter is of such urgent importance, not only to the prairie farmers but to the entire Canadian economy, that the business of the house ought to be adjourned to discuss it forthwith.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I say as a member of this party that we support the motion of the leader of the New Democratic party. The house may recall that yesterday the first question on orders of the day was directed by this party to the government benches, and it had to do with this very matter. Had we had a clear answer then the Chair and the house would not have been faced with a motion such as this. I say with the greatest respect to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he was absent yesterday. Now that he has returned no doubt a statement to the house, on behalf of the government, will be forthcoming.

Urgency of Debate on Wheat Prices

I agree with the leader of the New Democratic party about the urgency of debate in regard to this matter. A statement on motions would be totally inadequate. As the leader of the N.D.P. said, we would have statements by a spokesman from each of the parties and that, as you will appreciate Mr. Speaker, would not be a debate. That would be merely responses to a statement.

The Chair will have no trouble in making up its mind about the urgent public importance of this matter. There is no problem there. We know that in the last four or five years grain sales have been higher than at any previous time in the economic history of Canada. I submit that the question Mr. Speaker will have to consider as to urgency of debate is similar to that put to him yesterday, which also dealt with urgency of debate.

May I quote, as others did yesterday from Beauchesne, page 90, paragraph 3 of citation 100:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

This is a most important matter, which affects the economy not only of western Canada but of the whole country. We were led to believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that we should not at this point discuss the urgency of the matter itself but rather the urgency of debate; why this subject should be debated today rather than, say, a week from now; why we should adjourn the business of the house to discuss this particular topic. This is really the point to which the hon. member should address his contribution at this time.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate your bringing that point to my attention, Mr. Speaker. I was coming to that very point. Until now I have dealt with none of the facts relating to this subject except as they illustrate the urgency of debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: We had no opportunity to raise this matter earlier because the house has been closed for five or six weeks.

An hon. Member: Eleven weeks.

Mr. Woolliams: Eleven weeks. Looking at the list of business before the house it is clear that we shall have no opportunity to discuss this most important subject in the near future. Why is this matter so urgent at this time? In order to emphasize the urgency of debate it is necessary for me to answer that question briefly. It is urgent because until May of this year an international wheat agreement was in effect. On May 16, 1967, we were led to believe that this agreement would be continued. My hon. friend from Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale put a question to the minister at that time in reply to which the minister said that an international agreement was in force and would continue in force until 1968.

Since the house adjourned it has become apparent that there is no international agreement in operation at the present time. This is why the subject is so urgent; this is why it should be discussed today and not left until tomorrow. Moreover, it has now come to our attention that not only has the price of wheat dropped by 22 cents in the absence of a wheat agreement, but we are losing our markets for Canadian grain. The United States has moved into our export markets, as a result of which we have lost two thirds of our sales to one country alone, Japan.

These facts must be placed before parliament and an explanation given by the government. We are dealing with an industry which in itself makes one of the greatest contributions to our gross national product. It is urgent for that reason alone. There is a crisis in the agricultural industry and there is an economic crisis developing as far as the whole country is concerned because of the special position which wheat sales occupy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Not only western Canada is affected; the industrial centres of eastern Canada are equally concerned, since this is something which involves the purchasing power of our people. I have never risen to speak on a more urgent matter since I have been a member of parliament, and I ask that the business of this house be adjourned so the whole question to which I have referred can be discussed fully, enabling explanations to be given of statements such as were made on May 15 when the minister gave the impression that the agreement would continue in operation. The agreement has now lapsed, and its absence will cost the farmers of western Canada more than $300 million if the situation is not remedied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is understandable that following the summer adjournment there should be arising matters of public interest which deserve special attention in the early days of the resumed session. Yesterday there was a motion to discuss another serious matter affecting the welfare of Canadian citizens. A similar matter has been raised today.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The normal order of business set down for today involves consideration of two important bills, and we are ready to deal with those today. But if it is agreeable to hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker, in order to meet the problems posed by yesterday's question and the second one today, I would be agreeable to have the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce called tomorrow, which would permit a discussion of this matter.

Mr. Starr: I rise on a question of privilege. The government house leader met me earlier and I wanted to know the business of the house for the balance of the week. He intimated to me that the government was prepared to bring forward the estimates of the Department of Labour, vote 35, so we could discuss housing.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not think there is any misunderstanding here. I did suggest to the hon. member that tomorrow I would be ready to call resolutions, and if that is the wish of the house I would be glad to do that. But if it is necessary and desirable to discuss the price of wheat, tomorrow I will call the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and on Thursday I would be happy to call the estimates of the Department of Labour so the problems raised yesterday could be discussed then.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling on the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who has risen, I might bring to the attention of hon. members that in view of the statement made by the minister I think the situation is resolved and I certainly would have no hesitation in making a ruling. But I see there is great anxiety on the part of the hon. member for Edmonton West to offer some advice to the Chair, and I shall listen to the hon. member.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that while there appears to be a patina of generosity on the offer of the government house leader, tomorrow there will be only an hour and a half to deal with the whole situation regarding the international wheat agreement. That is the level of consideration that the government suggests be given to the matter.

Mr. McIlraith: We will sit tomorrow night.

Mr. Lambert: Tomorrow is a Wednesday. May I also point out, Mr. Speaker, that these offers to call estimates will mean dealing with these matters during opposition time, matters that should be dealt with by the government, because the time involved will count against the days left to the opposition for the consideration of estimates. Therefore in making these so-called generous offers the minister is giving the house nothing.

Mr. Speaker: I again bring to the attention of hon. members that in my view there is very little to be gained by continuing the debate at this time. I certainly do not wish to prevent hon. members who want to continue, but I remind the house that yesterday we spent 45 minutes debating whether we should have a debate, and we are engaging in the same type of debate today. If this is what hon. members want then I will recognize them. The hon. member for Rosthern.

Some hon. Members: The same old gang.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, it is quite interesting to hear the cat-calls from across the way today. On this occasion we have a legitimate complaint in regard to the order of business of the house so far as this particular matter is concerned. There is no more pressing problem to be brought before the parliament of Canada than the loss of sales and the loss in price that have been occasioned by the lack of consideration given this whole matter by the government, and the cavalier manner in which it has been dealt with.

The urgency of debate on this matter is emphasized by the fact that for the first time in six years the carryover of wheat and other grains in Canada has reached 590 million bushels. That is a six year high, and points up what has taken place during the last few years under the present administration.

There is another reason why we should adjourn the normal business of the house. It is one that bothers everyone from western Canada. During the last few days we have seen a member of the Social Credit party cross over to the government benches—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: —a member of the House of Commons who was opposed to the bulk sales to China—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nasserden: —which sales are necessary at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I find it difficult to relate the argument of the hon. member to the point at issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to carry on further in view of the reception from the other side of the house. I will say this, however. I was one of those who praised the minister for his attitude with regard to these things when he indicated during the pre-recess period that all was well and that we would be able to maintain prices in the interim period until the next agreement was signed. We took him at his word. We thought he spoke for this government. In the meantime we have had this sorry tale to hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): With respect to what you just said, Mr. Speaker, I feel there is one further point which should be brought to your attention at this time. In reading your decision of yesterday on a similar motion it seems to me that you stressed the matter of sudden emergency. I should like to bring to your attention that this matter of urgency does come under the heading of a sudden emergency. I believe the sudden emergency is the failure of the minister, through his United States counterpart, to state Canada's position clearly. You further stressed the fact that the whole thing might be a part of such a large subject that perhaps it should be held over for further legislation. But in this case I believe the emergency—the drop in the price of wheat and in wheat sales—demands that we have a full statement in the house and time now to debate the matter.

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I was very perturbed this afternoon to hear the members opposite shout "same old gang". In referring now to the urgency of the wheat situation in western Canada we feel there is no more urgent problem to discuss at the present time. This may not appear to be the case to a good many members of the government who are not familiar with the situation in western Canada. We believe, however, that we are involved in one of the most serious situations to have arisen in many years. I should like to refer today to a quotation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member for Assiniboia as gently as I can, and with all good will, that again we are having a discussion which is out of order. This debate is entirely against the spirit of the rules of the house. Standing order 26 provides for a debate if the matter is recognized by the Chair as being of such national urgency that it warrants adjournment of the ordinary business of the house. What hon. members are invited to do at the present time, for the guidance of the Chair, is to indicate whether it is essential that we should set aside the ordinary business of the house for the purpose of discussing this particular matter.

I point out to the hon. member that the statement has been made by the government that time will be made available to discuss this matter. The time allotted may not be as much as hon. members feel should be made available to them for the consideration of this urgent situation, but I must suggest to the hon. member for Assiniboia and others who might wish to follow him that we should make an honest effort to limit these contributions to the matter of urgency of debate and not consider the essence of the subject matter of the motion.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): I appreciate your remarks very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief. I should like merely to quote a few figures to back up my belief that this is a very urgent matter. At the present time in western Canada we have no wheat quotas, and we are having one of the shortest crops in a good many years. In May of this year a statement was made in the house to the effect that the price of wheat was going to go up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not like to interrupt hon. members, but there must be order in the house and we must attempt to run our business in an orderly way. It seems to me that the type of speech the hon. member has now embarked upon is exactly the same as he might make if the motion were accepted. Certainly at that time the hon. member would be addressing himself to the subject matter of this motion. I submit for the consideration of the hon. member and his colleagues that the representations he is making are precisely those he would make when the estimates of this department are before the house as proposed by the minister. I should like to ask the hon. member to kindly confine his remarks to the question of the urgency of this debate at this time.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel I have had an opportunity to impress upon Your Honour and members of the house the real urgency of this matter. I should like to state that because we were led to believe last May that the price of wheat would go up, and because the price of wheat has actually gone down, the farmers of western Canada are facing a very urgent situation at this time. This is a matter which should be debated at the earliest possible moment.

I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the house, but I assure you that the members from western Canada will be anxiously awaiting a debate on this subject tomorrow.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, in view of my impression that you regard as reasonable the offer made by the house leader, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), namely that this subject matter be discussed tomorrow during our consideration of the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, I should like to say that I hope you are not of the opinion that there is no urgent need for debate at the earliest possible opportunity. The question of urgency does occur not only because of the magnitude of the matter, and this is very important, but also results from the limited time left before ratification of the wheat agreement negotiated last July and August in Rome, namely 14 days.

I might add that there would be no urgency of debate if in the past two weeks the government through its responsible minister had given some clear indication that it was prepared to take some special action regarding this matter. To assist Your Honour to gain some perspective of the urgency, let me point out that in the United States, where wheat production is of less importance to the economy than in Canada, the secretary of agriculture and his colleagues have convened emergency meetings, and the congress of that country has already enacted emergency legislation in respect of this particular matter.

Here in Canada we have had no such indication, only an admission that recent price levels in respect of wheat were "a bit soft". It is this kind of nonchalant treatment of a very important matter that impels many of us here to demand that we debate this matter within 24 hours.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about this matter, though they do not necessarily relate to its urgency. It is my belief that if the suggestion proposed by the house leader today should be followed the whole purpose of this standing order will be placed in jeopardy. The minister's suggestion and his remarks were not related to the point of order. It is my belief that the order of the business of this house should be decided in some other way than on the basis of standing order 26.

The motion of the hon. member today was made under that standing order, and if this motion is to be decided on the basis of the suggestion of the minister, then standing order 26 will not serve its purpose. I suggest that Your Honour should not accept this suggestion in reaching your decision in respect of this motion under the standing order. If we follow this practice, similar to the practice followed yesterday, in deciding the order of the business of this house I suggest we will experience a great deal more disorder than we have experienced up to this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will have sensed that in the opinion of the Chair an alternative has been offered by the government, namely an opportunity to discuss the very urgent and important matter raised by this motion during the discussion of the estimates tomorrow. I do not suggest that the time offered is in keeping with the time hon. members of the opposition feel they should have, but in view of standing order 100(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition I feel I have no alternative but to reject the motion at this time.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL

REQUEST FOR TABLING AND DISTRIBUTION OF FOURTH REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In the past when an important committee has made a report to the government it has been normal practice to table that report so the distribution office could make copies available to members of the house almost immediately. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will table the fourth report of the Economic Council of Canada in order that the distribution office may make copies available to members, and will he do so this afternoon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatsoever to tabling this report, though I should say that this is not the kind of report that is customarily tabled. However, I see no reason why the request should not be granted, and I will look into the matter.

Mr. Starr: This is the normal practice. Could this be done this afternoon?

Mr. Pearson: I will look into this matter right away.

TRADE

WHEAT—SITUATION RESULTING FROM LACK OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that tomorrow is a short sitting day, though if there is unanimous consent perhaps we could sit tomorrow evening to discuss this matter of widespread interest regarding the price and marketing of wheat and its effect on farm income, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will consider calling the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce this afternoon. I understand that we are to consider the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs, but perhaps it would be possible to substitute the other estimates in order that members would then have at least the major part of a day during which to debate what appears to most to be a very important matter.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has already been indicated that two pieces of legislation are to come before the house this afternoon. I see no reason why we should not proceed with those bills and consider the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce tomorrow. If at the conclusion of the debate on those estimates tomorrow at six o'clock the discussion has not been completed, and the house leaders agree this afternoon to sit tomorrow evening, perhaps this would afford a further opportunity.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Perhaps I should direct this related question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Are discussions going on with the secretary of agriculture of the United States regarding the maintenance of a differential between Canadian and United States wheat prices similar to that which obtained under the previous agreement, which it was felt would be obtained under the new agreement?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members know I visited Secretary Orville Freeman in Washington. At that time I spoke to him and his officials about the minimum price that was agreed upon at Geneva. As a result of that meeting I think a stronger trend has returned to world markets. The price of wheat has gone up some $2\frac{3}{4}$ cents since that time. We are endeavouring to implement measures to maintain that trend in the price, and I will have more to say about this tomorrow.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I think may help to clarify this matter. On June 5, 1967 as reported at page 1134 of Hansard, the Minister of Trade and Commerce left the impression that the old world wheat agreement was still in operation and would continue until July 31, 1968. I should like to ask whether there is an international wheat agreement in operation now and will there be any such agreement governing, controlling and stabilizing the price next year?

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Speaker; and I think the record is clear in this regard.

The price provisions of the international wheat agreement have lapsed. When I was discussing the Kennedy round earlier this year I made it clear that there would be no agreement covering wheat until the new agreement is ratified next year. In the statement I made at that time I did deal with what I anticipated would be the price of wheat in the meantime. But I made it very clear that world conditions of supply and demand would govern, as indeed they do for most commodities.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in view of the ministers' reply I rise on a question of privilege. The minister was asked this question on June 5, 1967, by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp).

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question and should be answered right now, for the simple reason that the farmers in the west have planted their wheat and are waiting to know where they stand in light of the new wheat agreement.

The answer given by the minister was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer this very briefly. On June 1 our ambassador in Washington did sign on behalf of the government of Canada a protocol extending the administrative articles of the 1962 wheat agreement until July 31, 1968, with provision for earlier termination in the event of a new agreement covering wheat—

I would ask the minister to explain what he means by those two answers.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the minister would insist on replying to the argument raised by the hon. member for Bow River. This is obviously not a question of privilege; it is a form of argument which might be raised when this debate is before the house. I suggest that the matter be allowed to rest there until the minister has been given an opportunity to make a statement.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I think I should rise on a question of privilege, if I may, to clear that very point. While the framework of the international agreement was continued by that protocol, I made it clear at the same time that this did not apply to the price structure because we in Canada did not agree to a continuation of that low price structure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that all these questions of privilege might be considered tomorrow.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT MORE MORTGAGE MONEY BE MADE AVAILABLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour. Is it his intention to give a satisfactory answer to the many requests he has received from house builders associations throughout Canada, asking for an increase in mortgage credits to meet the rising demand of the public?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that is not a question which I can answer on the orders of the day. I shall be glad to deal with it when the estimates of the Department of Labour come before the house on Thursday.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE LOANS FOR AGRICULTURAL FAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statements made by the minister in western Canada some time ago and misunderstandings that have arisen from those statements, I should like to ask whether the government proposes to introduce legislation at this session covering loans for agricultural fair purposes.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is no intent to bring it in at this session, but subject to the economic and financial dictates of the nation it is hoped that we can bring it in during the spring session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF UNDERGROUND MOVEMENT IN WORLD WAR II

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might have the indulgence of the house for one minute to point out that today we have as guests in Your Honour's gallery 14 valorous people, seven ladies and seven gentlemen, representative of 4,000 similar people from eight countries in Europe who during world war II suffered torture and risked death to help several thousand allied airmen escape from occupied Europe.

These people have been brought to Canada for three weeks as the centennial project of the Canadian branch of the Royal Air Forces Escaping Society. I believe the chamber would wish to acknowledge the presence of these noble people who have personally done so much to preserve the democratic freedoms we in Canada all enjoy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: On behalf of my colleagues of the House of Commons, I take great pleasure in addressing a warm welcome to these distinguished visitors.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the Registrar General was reflecting government position or policy last night when he referred to the possibility of introducing a split-level economy and preparing one set of rules to be applicable to large corporations and another to smaller corporations.

Mr. Knowles: So what's new?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the Registrar General said this was a subject worthy of consideration by the government, and so it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. At what point will ministerial statements be accepted by the Prime Minister, and at what point will they be repudiated? I ask this question in view of the fact that this is the second occasion on which this suggestion has been made.

Mr. Pearson: We believe in giving public opinion a chance to express itself on these matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED EFFORTS TO PERSUADE INSURANCE COMPANIES TO INVEST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the recently reported success of President Johnson of the United States in persuading the insurance companies of that country to invest $1 billion in low cost housing, does the Prime Minister intend to approach the life insurance companies of this country with a similar aim in view?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter the Minister of Labour would be glad to discuss on Thursday.

Mr. Hees: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Labour.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I will be glad to discuss it on Thursday, Mr. Speaker, but I would like—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: Where does the buck stop?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister give consideration to speaking to the large financial institutions of this country to persuade them that they have a national duty to invest a sufficiently large proportion of their investment portfolios in housing to ensure that the housing needs of this country are adequately met?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the increase in the interest rate on government loans it appears that in accordance with the government's formula, the N.H.A. interest rate will go up on October 1. My question is this. Is the government considering changing this formula for automatic revision of the N.H.A. interest rate?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to restrain his curiosity until Thursday.

TRADE

POTASH—ALLEGED DUMPING BY CANADA ON U.S. MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for our genial Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister yet in a position to report on the alleged dumping of Canadian potash on the United States market, and if and when the report of the United States treasury department is available will he kindly report to the house?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I take the question as notice, and I will report on Wednesday.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—ALLEGED DELAY IN FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that Hon. W. A. C. Bennett, premier of British Columbia, is publicly condemning the government of Canada for failing to pay the $12 million owed to British Columbia for completion of the Duncan lake dam July 31 of this year according to the agreement between the federal and provincial governments with respect to the Columbia river treaty, can the minister inform the house of the facts with respect to this intriguing question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question might be answered tonight.

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO REIMBURSEMENT FOR INDIVIDUAL LOSSES UNDER LOGEXPO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I trust it will not be answered on Wednesday; I hope to receive an answer today. The question concerns the problems that have arisen during the recess of the house with respect to the Logexpo situation, the dismissals that have been taking place and the charges of fraud that have been made. Has the government any intention, either alone or in co-operation with the Expo authorities, of reimbursing those who have lost money on reservations that have been made at Logexpo?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I think this question should be put on the order paper.

[English]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I think this question is still under consideration and being debated by the Expo authorities. Therefore we should like a government opinion on the question.

[Translation]

USE OF SITE ON CONCLUSION OF EXHIBITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Dollard): I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Has the government reached a decision on the use of the Expo site after it is closed?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question should be put on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CENTENNIAL TELEVISION SERIES ON PROCESS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Prime Minister. By way of preface may I remind the right hon. gentleman that before the summer recess he clearly indicated to the former leader of the opposition that arrangements would be put in motion to film the proceedings of this parliament as a centennial series on the part of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

May I ask the right hon. gentleman three short questions. First, where are the cameras? Second, what arrangements have been made to initiate the series? And last, why the delay?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question is under consideration now by Your Honour, and I am sure you will be glad to deal with it at the earliest possible date, not later than Friday.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF NEW ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State or perhaps it is more a related question. In view of the considerable disquiet that has existed for many months now in the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I wonder how soon we may have the new Broadcasting Act brought before this house.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that in order to alleviate all sorts of discomfort on that side the Broadcasting Act will be seen early next week—not on Friday, Thursday or Wednesday of this week, but perhaps next week.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister will be good enough also to assure all members of the house that such an important piece of legislation will be referred to the broadcasting committee after first reading.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is likely that the act will be referred back to the committee. As is known by hon. members, some six months were occupied with the question of broadcasting. It may very well be that the clause by clause study will be held in committee in substitution for the house, if that meets with the agreement of the house. However, since the matter has been gone into so exhaustively, and since the committee will be asked to deal with the question of E.T.V. almost simultaneously, it is expected that the house will deal with a matter of such great importance without the legislation having to go back to committee.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): A further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would give consideration to this matter with his colleagues in light of the interest of many parties who are directly involved with broadcasting and are anxious to deal with the specific legislation before the broadcasting committee when that legislation is brought into this house, if this is to be done next week.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss the matter with the Secretary of State. However, as my hon. friend knows the committee has gone into this matter in great detail, and I believe witnesses have been called. It might meet the wish of the house to deal with the legislation in committee of the whole, but I will be glad to discuss the matter with the Secretary of State.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since the right hon. gentleman and the Secretary of State appear to be settling most of the problems for the C.B.C., perhaps he can tell me today when they will be building that television station in Saskatoon.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said on this matter yesterday, which I think was not very satisfactory to my hon. friend. However, I hope to make a more satisfactory statement before long.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of increases that have taken place in the cost of living, and in view of the amendment respecting this matter which was written into the Old Age Security Act in 1965, has it been determined that there will be an increase in old age pensions this coming January and, if so, by what amount?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is much too general in nature, and I do not think it can be asked at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): I wish to put a question to the Minister of Labour in reference to several grievances raised by the C.N.T.U. as a result of a ruling by the Canada Labour Relations Board.

Is the minister in a position to inform the house whether the government intends to introduce a bill to amend federal legislation on units of negotiations?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, during the summer adjournment I did announce on behalf of the government that it was our intention at the resumed session this fall to introduce a bill proposing certain amendments to the Canada labour relations act. It is our intention to do so, and we hope the bill will be before the house in the not too far distant future. Its contents will be disclosed at that time.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION COUNCIL

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ADVISORY BOARDS, ETC.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-150, to establish a Canada manpower and immigration council.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, there is a very glaring deficiency in the bill now before us. I had hoped that the minister would speak first in the debate and indicate that this weakness would be cured. Since he did not do so I draw it to the attention of the minister of the house immediately so that we may deal with it when we consider the bill in committee.

The weakness is that there is no connection whatever between the operations of this new and somewhat sprawling bureaucracy being created by the bill and this House of Commons, parliament itself. This should be cured, and I hope that the minister will accept the cure when at a later stage I move on behalf of the official opposition that the new manpower and immigration council be required to report to parliament, the source of its power, the source of the funds which will keep it in existence, on what it is doing and what sort of policies it is advising the minister to follow. In short, Mr. Speaker, I intend to see that we follow the orthodox practice in establishing a creature of parliament, namely, of retaining some control over that creation. This, to me, is a fatal weakness in the bill as it now stands. According to past and present practice, bodies such as this council which are set up in this way pass from our jurisdiction forever. Only indirectly would we be able to assess its work on the basis of whatever the minister himself chose to report to us.

In my remarks at the resolution stage yesterday I wondered whether the minister had cured some of the previous defects in operation and was bringing in legislation that could properly stand the scrutiny of parliament or whether it was one of those hit or miss efforts that would have to be endlessly corrected before the council could become viable. Alas, Mr. Speaker, my fears are realized. The bill does contain this very glaring omission, one that I think it is the duty and responsibility of each member of parliament to correct. Otherwise we whittle away large chunks of our authority, fail to represent our electorate properly and lose control over government and government bodies.

We tend to leave more and more power to be exercised according to the discretion of ministers and ministerial advisers and less in our own hands. This is a weakness. At the appropriate time I hope to persuade the minister and the house that it is a weakness that must be corrected. Accordingly, to avoid the surprise of a last minute amendment I give notice that I intend to move an amendment at the end of the clause by clause consideration. In this regard I have in mind that part of the Economic Council of Canada Act which requires that body to lay its reports before parliament. The change to be made in this bill, in the clause to which I have reference, will strike out the word "economic" and substitute therefor the words "manpower and immigration". I have said this to give the minister and his advisers information about the type of amendment I shall be moving.

No small step is being taken through this measure. The minister tried to make it appear in his brief intervention that it was a small step. By failing to make a statement on second reading and by failing to answer questions which were quite properly raised by hon. members at the resolution stage, he tried to make it appear that it was indeed a small step.

Here we do not have a small group of people, nor small boards or councils with unimportant functions. In this measure we have a body that will deal with the whole field of manpower and technology. One body is to advise the minister on everything over which he has power to preside. This bill will establish a council of 16 members; it will establish four advisory boards each having 12 members, or 48 persons in all. Under these two categories alone 64 persons are involved. In addition there are the regional and local manpower committees. Their number is not specified. Conceivably the sky could be the limit as to the numbers involved. This government has a reputation for multiplying bureaucracy. By this measure it could proliferate bureaucracy, through these boards or councils or committees that are to be set up, in increasing measure.

I also quarrel with the minister because nowhere are we given an idea of the costs involved. Under the British parliamentary tradition, at the resolution stage we ought to learn the dollars and cents that are involved. We should find out what will be a burden on the treasury. I hope that the minister may be cajoled into making a speech this afternoon and giving us this important information.

Another point worthy of consideration—undoubtedly this is in the minister's mind as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) brought it to his attention yesterday—is that this measure may involve the downgrading of experienced employees who are already serving in the minister's department. I know from experience, and the hon. member for Carleton has mentioned this, that employees who were with the department in its national employment service days have been pushed into the background in the operations of the new department. These people may not be the best educated in the world and that is why they have been downgraded. Yet they have played their part. For 20 years or more, in some instances, they have dealt with the serious problems involved in finding jobs for Canadians. Surely their on-the-job training merits a more distinguished fate than that being meted out to them in the manpower offices across Canada.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): They are being treated ruthlessly.

Mr. McCleave: As my learned and hon. friend from Cape Breton North and Victoria says, they have been treated ruthlessly. I think that is so. Morale in the department will suffer if such persons continue to feel that their functions are being usurped or if they feel they are being ignored. I hope the minister will come to grips with these problems of employees who have given long and loyal service. I hope he will make sure that, despite Bill C-150, the incentive of the personnel of the department to come to grips with the technological and other problems the department is facing will not be sapped. The minister and his department should not be absolved from their responsibilities because of the step we are taking this afternoon.

Another fault of the bill—this is almost standard and can be only partly cured by an amendment such as I have suggested—is that it gives an increasing measure of discretionary power. Discretionary powers increasingly appear in the legislation that comes before this house. More and more we are being asked to give our blessing to measures which give wide areas of discretion to ministers of the crown. This is a trend, I suppose, at this point in our history and one cannot completely reverse the tide. Nevertheless, the powers to be given to the minister and the council should be as specific as possible in order that all those serving in this proliferation of councils, boards and committees will know that the parliament of Canada is concerned about what they do and how they recommend that the taxpayers' money be spent.

Finally, sir, I have to say another word about the field of discretion. The minister is going to ask certain bodies to choose members for the council, the boards and perhaps the regional committees. I am wondering what the minister is going to do when it comes to picking certain people from his own province. Will he go to the Confederation of National Trade Unions or the Canadian Labour Congress? Will he send a letter to these bodies, flip a coin, or go to somebody else? I submit that the minister may find himself in a bind on this point.

I repeat, sir, that at the appropriate stage I shall move, seconded by the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Régimbal), that a new clause be added to this bill so that the council to which the boards must report will be required to lay a report of its proceedings before us. In that way we shall know whether the objectives of this legislation are being met. If I may also borrow a parallel from the Economic Council of Canada, which is not the happiest jewel in the Liberal crown but is a very useful jewel for Canada, I suggest that the council might publish studies and reports as it sees fit for the guidance of the public in the difficult and tremendous problems facing us in the technological decades of the twentieth century.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister had intended to speak at the beginning of this debate but was beaten to the gun by the hon. member for Halifax. Could there not be unanimous consent to let the minister speak now, while still leaving it open for others to speak afterwards should they wish to do so?

Mr. Speaker: If that is the wish of the house, unanimous agreement is first required in order to dispense with the rule.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he does not close the debate.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps I should apologize to the minister for being slightly spryer in getting to my feet than he was.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The only thing it proves is that the hon. member for Halifax is probably slightly younger than I am.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, speaking on the resolution preceding the bill now before us, I said that the purpose of the bill is to reorganize the structure of the advisory councils which my department has inherited. The three current organizations which, on the whole, meet only part of the requirements of my department, will be replaced by a single council, the structure and membership of which will correct the failings of the existing organizations.

The legislation provides for the establishment of one main council to advise the minister in all areas under his responsibility. The council shall be made up of one chairman and of a maximum of 15 members appointed for a maximum of three years. Obviously, my hope is to select competent and representative people from their own environment. We shall consult representatives of the principal organizations and of the groups particularly interested in the aims we are seeking to achieve.

The hon. members will note that the role of the council is in no way restricted or limited. Its job will consist in advising the minister on all matters pertaining to the efficient use and development of manpower resources in Canada, including immigrants and their integration into Canadian life.

I consider myself fortunate in that I can bank—and the same goes for the officials of the department—on the wise counsels of those Canadians who act outside the department. It will facilitate the drawing up of an efficient program to develop an ever greater awareness in management of the ceaseless transformations in manpower needs across the country.

The bill authorizes me to refer to the council any subject whose study is imperative and the council will, of its own initiative, express its views on the important matters it will study. The bill provides for the setting up of four specialized advisory boards which will pass judgment on the work of the department in its main spheres of endeavour, namely vocational training of adults, integration of immigrants into Canadian life, the co-ordination of rehabilitation services and manpower and immigration research.

Moreover, from time to time additional advisory boards will be appointed to deal with special topics falling within the scope of my responsibilities.

[English]

The advisory boards will have a chairman and a maximum of 11 other members representave of the major interests concerned with these programs. The chairmen of the specialized advisory boards will also be members of the advisory council, in order to ensure an effective link between the work of the specialized boards and the council.

To ensure that advice on specialized matters is considered within the total framework of manpower and immigration policy, each of the advisory boards will report its conclusions to the council which will pass them to the minister with any comments it feels to be appropriate. The council may, on its initiative, refer matters to any of the advisory boards for their study and advice.

The regional committees now in existence are concerned with the functions of the Canada manpower division in each of the regions. Similarly, the local advisory committees are concerned with the work of the Canada manpower centres. The bill provides for the continuation of such regional and local committees for the purpose of advising and assisting the department in carrying out the functions of its manpower service.

The effectiveness of a public advisory organization depends on providing adequate professional and technical support for their work. My department is currently establishing an advisory council and liaison branch, and a major responsibility of this branch will be to service the advisory council and the specialized advisory boards. It will also ensure that all parts of the department assist in and are informed of the work of the council and boards.

This is a very simple measure, but I believe it will help to increase the sensitivity of government programs and administration to qualified outside opinion. To do that is of special importance to a department dealing as closely with people and their problems as it is the responsibility of the Department of Manpower and Immigration to do. Now I would like to comment on a few of the observations which were made yesterday by certain members of the house.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said—I believe by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) or for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—that the number of retrained workers, had decreased under the new manpower training program. And we were given figures.

To give any weight to these statistics, I think it would have been advisable to compare them with those of the preceding years. The hon. member for Greenwood and the member for Winnipeg North would undoubtedly have realized that during the summer period there is always a decrease in the number of workers who follow those courses. There are two reasons for this: first of all because it is summer, and then very often provinces do not offer all the courses they offer during the winter and, second, because of the employment situation, of job opportunities.

Everybody knows that, in Canada, especially in the past years, summer employment has almost reached a peak, especially in certain areas such as Toronto. Now, every time you have employment, that is every time the level of employment gets close to the maximum, fewer workers attend courses. I can assure the hon. members that under the new program, not only there will be—and I hope we shall all be here next winter—as many workers attending classes, but I am convinced their number will be much higher than last year.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Therefore, the explanation is quite simple, Mr. Speaker, and I do not feel it can be inferred from the fact that the figures have decreased in June, July and August that the new manpower and training program for workers is defective.

Now, I must point out, so as to complete the picture, that certain provinces have shown some reluctance with regard to the new manpower program. Not only was there opposition, but a degree of inaction was also deliberately provoked in some areas, probably to secure some negotiating power with the federal government. This was done not only locally, but the press was also used to show that much discontent existed, that the new manpower program, deemed unacceptable in some areas or in some provinces, would be a disaster for the country as a whole. This is not so, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that relations have now returned to normal.

On July 18, I held a meeting with the provincial ministers, and we agreed on practically all the most important details. In fact, the co-operation which was alluded to in this house yesterday, is an actual fact, and I am sure that it will continue to prevail.

It is obvious that, according to the new policy, Mr. Speaker, we no longer wish and no longer consent to take care at the federal level of tasks which fall under provincial jurisdiction. And I should like one day to see some logic in the policies or political theories advocated by the parties in this house during their conventions. There is nothing wrong in their talking about provincial jurisdiction or provincial autonomy, the two nations concept or the desire of Quebec to be in full control of matters under its jurisdiction, but I would rather they did not criticize the government when it adopts a policy which respects precisely those theories which are exploited more or less everywhere.

But I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that this new manpower program shall help the workers, and that more of them will profit by it.

The question of language training has been raised, Mr. Speaker, and we certainly do not intend to go systematically into academic or formal training. This field is under provincial jurisdiction, and if some people here want the government to enter this field, they should not only move to amend the constitution to put this under federal jurisdiction, but also have the gumption to do so openly, before the country. However, as long as the constitution remains unamended, we shall leave the educational field under provincial jurisdiction.

This, however, Mr. Speaker, does not mean that we are going to deny to the immigrants the benefits of our laws as to the study of languages, especially French and English. Not only will these benefits not be denied them but we have moreover advised all our manpower offices to comply with any request that might be made to them, provided these requests conform to the aims of our manpower, that is, when the teaching of the language is necessary to enable the applicant to fill a job in Canada. In other terms, this means that all our policy is related to the employment market and to the workers' needs in finding employment; we want them to become able, from a professional or language viewpoint, to obtain remunerative employment in Canada. Therefore, immigrants who need one of the two languages to get a job can take advantage of our programs. For those who want to improve their knowledge of English or French because they live in a bilingual country with two official languages, that is the responsibility of the provinces, and I hope that they will fully assume this responsibility.

Therefore, there is no question of discrimination against immigrants.

Someone mentioned—I think it is the member for Timmins (Mr. Martin)—that some workers were excluded from the manpower training program. No class whatsoever of workers is excluded from our manpower training programs and that is true for miners as for others. However, it will be understood, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot agree automatically every time a worker requests retraining.

That program is designed to enable the workers who are unemployed to find employment and those who have an inferior job to improve their income and develop fully. That is the program's aim. Otherwise, tomorrow a million workers would say: Well, I am a carpenter but I would like to become a welder; or, I am a welder and I would like to become a maintenance man or a millwright. That would not make sense. Thus there must be a demand on the labour market and the individual must be in a position to benefit from our courses. There is no doubt that some workers will be rejected, namely a worker who has a steady job will not be accepted, except for serious reasons, for another course because otherwise it is easy to see what it would mean on the financial level.

In any case, therefore, I feel that this program is comprehensive and that the grievances aired in this house are unfounded, at least in that respect.

Yesterday, I heard members of the opposition express the most conflicting views. First of all, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr.

Bell) rightly urged that the councils should be truly rooted in the population and that the department should not merely be a bureaucracy, but that the people be integrated in the administration of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I agree with him but, on the other hand, one of his colleagues said that the minister is being deprived of his responsibilities and wants those responsibilities to be shifted on to intermediate bodies or to boards of his own making. Now, I should like to know what is really the policy of the opposition in that field.

As suggested by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), a great number of persons will surely be called upon to sit on those committees. In answer to the hon. member for Carleton, I must say that if the people are to be really represented on those bodies, they must be sought where they are, in the localities, the small towns, in the various areas, and our advisory committees are set up in such a way that all those people may be represented.

I would then suggest to the hon. member for Carleton, and to the hon. member for Halifax, that they might meet to try to determine exactly what their aims are and to see whether they have anything in common as far as manpower policy is concerned.

When I said that this was a rather simple bill, I did not mean to imply that it is not important. Quite the opposite, it is important. It is important, but in substance, that is, as far as the thinking behind it is concerned there is nothing new. Not only is there nothing new but as far as the number of people is concerned, if this can be a relief to the hon. member for Halifax, I do not think there are that many more people sitting on our advisory committees than there were under the former legislation or even under the former government.

When we consider the number of people sitting on the advisory committee of the National Employment Service, the regional offices, the local offices, the Vocational Training Advisory Council, the National Advisory Committee on the Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons, if you add them all together, I hardly believe that we are adding very many people to what existed before. The only thing we are doing is that we are consolidating all these committees so that they may work together.

Mr. Speaker, those manpower problems cannot be kept completely apart. We have employment and training problems, the problem of mentally retarded or disabled persons; there is also the problem of immigration and adjustment of immigrants in this country. All of them constitute a whole and we have been in a position to establish advisory committees which are brought together at a given time to discuss the manpower problem as a whole and not under its various aspects. I believe that is an improvement.

For the establishment of those boards, we took the advice—and this is not an unprecedented fact—of representative bodies.

The member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) seems to have discovered a problem with regard to the difficulty of choosing between a member of the Confederation of National Trade Unions and a representative of the Canada Labour Congress and he wonders what we are going to do. It has been done here, in Ottawa, for the last 25 years, under every government. When you want someone from the CNTU, you go to the CNTU; if, at the same time, you want someone from the CLC, you ask the CLC to appoint a representative. On the other hand, if you want someone from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, you go to the officials of that association. Indeed, if that is the only problem the minister has to solve this year, I can assure you we will solve it rapidly. The member need not worry; there are precedents, the way is paved and I need not even strain my imagination to give him that assurance.

Now, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) raised an important question with which we are deeply concerned. However, at this time, I think the problem is solved and the information she has obtained was undoubtedly provided before July 18 last; at least, I suppose so because had she secured this information later than July 18, it would mean that the people who provided her with the information were not aware of the agreements arrived at with the provincial governments.

Let us say that on that date of July 18, we came to an agreement with the provinces, so that they will advise us what training they will be providing to the workers.

There is a list of agreements and, for our part, we have undertaken to fill a given number of places which have been determined through negotiation with the provinces.

So, if there is, shall we say, 50 places in one course, and we have undertaken to take over 40, we will be paying for these places whether they are occupied or not, that is to say we will be giving the school boards and the municipalities the kind of security that was being asked for yesterday and which they need in order to organize the courses.

So, this important problem is solved. Now, there might be a lack of communication between the province and the school boards. That is possible. But anyway, as far as we are concerned, communication has been established and this problem has been solved.

As for my friend from York East (Mr. Otto) he has raised problems concerning research and knowledge of the environment and he was wondering whether we would be on time with the necessary data concerning changes in the labour market.

As he will realize, there is an advisory committee specially dealing with research and we are trying to set up within the department—unfortunately, it cannot be done overnight, everyone will understand that—possibly one of the best research service in the field of manpower, so that employers may quickly know what the situation is, the workers may know what is the employment problem and whoever is giving the training may know what vocational training to give to meet the requirements of the market.

Therefore, all that is in effect; his remarks have been taken into consideration and I have every reason to believe that he will not complain about the results which we will have.

In general, the matter of cost has been raised. There are nevertheless certain customs in Canada. I know that the trade union people as well as leaders of the employers associations are used to the way of paying people attending meetings of advisory committees. That will be done approximately on the same basis, I think, with the adjustments that may arise from time to time. There is nothing new in that and I see no source of scandal or any other danger for the financial resources of the Canadian government. I do not think that is where abuses might occur.

As far as civil servants are concerned, there has been a change in that department. I apologize for talking a little about the policy of that department as a whole, but very few hon. members talked about the bill yesterday, they talked instead about the manpower and immigration policies, etc. There is no doubt that there were grievances and that some employees were moved.

Integrating the whole department has meant moving people and some were not pleased. Some people had to be transferred from one place to another. Some grievances were justified, others less so. We are doing whatever we can and hon. members can rest assured that it is a problem about which I am rather concerned and that I try to deal with the real grievances, that is to find a solution.

Now, I should like to deal with a point raised by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) concerning this close link, or so-called close link, between the needs of manpower and immigration.

If the hon. member for Carleton has read closely the new regulations which will be in force on October 1, he will no doubt find that the immigration policy is linked in a certain way with the manpower policy, but not in an entirely, automatic or direct way. That is, a certain number of points may be allowed for future immigrants who have already secured employment or whose professional services are needed in Canada, but that is only a number of points and some people may come to Canada even if their services are not needed providing they get a sufficient number of points on other items.

While there exists a certain link, it is not such as to limit our immigration policy strictly to our manpower needs in Canada.

Everything will depend on how this policy will be administered. I think that our criteria, our basic principles are sound. Besides, I have every reason to believe that the people of Canada will be satisfied with this policy, if we have the wisdom to follow it properly.

Mr. Speaker, I have not probably answered all the criticisms that have been formulated, but I did at least answer some of them. I had taken notes, but they are so general—I know that it will be possible to complete them when my estimates are discussed because several topics already dealt with will be taken up again. Bill C-150 is obviously an improvement, Mr. Speaker. This bill has nothing revolutionary about it, nothing that is not already known to labour unions, employers' organizations, governments or the public at large. Everything involved is known already.

The last point the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) has mentioned is that this council should report directly to the government. All depends on the character of the council. As we see it, this council will advise the department, and this in order that the population, the people concerned, may convey quickly their views to the department on the various problems that may occur, if the matter has to do with internal economy.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if all the documents, all the reports made by the local or regional committees, the specialized committees and the council were to be laid here before parliament, not only would this constitute an enormous mass of paper, but it could also paralyse the operations of the committees.

The employer and labour union representatives on those committees usually sit behind closed doors and their associations, the ones which they sent there, have full powers, rights, privileges to communicate directly with the government, with the members of the house, to make known their general policy. I think that nobody is being frustrated. This is a committee appointed to give advice and counsel to the minister and I think that from the moment you require all the reports to be tabled in the House of Commons, we are changing its character, and from that time on, there will be some rigidity in the reports, in the discussion, which will not benefit the Canadian people.

That is why we believe such a structure, which was always based upon those principles, is still worth while. It is acceptable, it is actually accepted by all union and professional organizations, and when something works well, I think that the hon. members, just like anybody else, would not be interested in changing it just for the sake of making a change. This fact is well recognized.

This is what I had to say, Mr. Speaker, about the criticism which has been expressed. In view of the important matters which will be brought to the attention of this house, even those with which the departments may be concerned, I hope that not too much time is spent on a bill known to the house and which, on the face of it, is quite imperative, I think, and should be approved as quickly as possible.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the minister first entered the house some of us regretted the fact that he did so on the government side, but because of his past record as a fighter for civil rights and as a leader of the working people in an important trade union in his province I think it is fair to say that he came here with more good will on the part of members on both sides of the house than any other minister I can remember in my experience in public life. We were prepared to listen to the minister, give him the benefit of any doubts we had and give him time to implement the very fine expression of principles he enunciated during the early months of his attendance in the house. Let me indicate to the minister that we feel the speech he made today was partisan and obviously in defence of everything his department has done. He ignored all our legitimate questions and criticisms. If he does not intend to take any greater action than he indicated, then any honeymoon there may have been has ended.

My colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) asked a series of questions which were directed to her and other members of parliament including Liberals from Vancouver. These questions were not directed to these members by the Social Credit government of British Columbia and I think the minister should realize that my colleague has no particular reason to defend that government. The minister ignored completely the questions she raised and no explanations have been given.

The questions I asked were not directed to me by the Conservative government of Ontario and I have no desire or intention to defend them. I received these questions from officials and others who work for the school board of Ottawa and the board of education in the city of Toronto. They made it very clear to me that they did not wish to become involved in a political battle and I respect their desire in this regard. I made it clear to them that I wanted the official information which they had presented to their boards of education and which is available to every citizen of Canada. That is the kind of information which I presented yesterday.

What did we hear from the minister in this regard? I suggest that all we heard was a defence of three—

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I never suggested the hon. member's figures were wrong.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister did not quite say they were wrong, but he did say I used figures for the wrong months and that had I not done so the picture would have been different. I will have more to say in that regard.

First of all, the minister again referred to the constitutional situation and suggested to members that if we were suggesting the bringing of education within the federal responsibility we would then be debating a different thing. None of us made that suggestion yesterday. When we were debating the changes in the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, established by the former government, which this government decided last year to get out of, we made certain proposals. Members of our party have suggested time and again that we believe there is nothing in the constitution which prevents the government of Canada in co-operation with the provinces from participating in a technical and vocational training program.

It was our belief at that time, and it is still our belief, that it was a disastrous mistake for the government of Canada to get out of this field. However, this government made that decision. The minister spoke very proudly when he stated that the government intended to assume not only 50 per cent but 100 per cent of the responsibility for manpower retraining. He said this was the government's job and that it would be fulfilled. Yesterday I asked how the government intended to fulfil that responsibility.

The minister said that education was the responsibility of the provinces, and I agree. I suggest to the minister, as I have on a number of occasions, that as long as immigration is the responsibility of the federal government and as long as this government follows an aggressive policy of encouraging people to come to Canada from countries in which the native language is not English or French, it is the responsibility of the government of Canada to encourage every single one of these individuals to learn to speak English or French, depending on the area in which they live. This is not the responsibility of the provincial governments, local boards of education, or local school boards. These immigrants should be encouraged to learn to speak English or French as quickly as possible. In this regard the federal government should put its money where its mouth is and indicate to the provinces and local boards of education and school boards that it is prepared to pay for such education.

I am sure the minister has the immigration figures at his fingertips. I do not have them with me but I am sure that this year there has been more immigration to Canada than in any other year since world war II. I note that the Registrar General (Mr. Turner) is as pleased with that situation as I am, but let me repeat that although more people have come to Canada from countries such as Italy, Greece, Portugal, Spain and Germany than ever before, the number of these people attending classes where they may learn to speak English or French has decreased. This is certainly indicated by the figures I received from the Toronto board of education for 1967, and the decrease has not occurred only during the summer months.

One of the explanations the minister has put forth for the decrease in the number of people attending retraining classes is that there is more employment. I suggest that is a very weak argument. Speaking from memory—I am sure I am not far out in my percentages—I would say that the number of unemployed in Canada this year compared with last year is down but the decrease in the percentage of unemployed is less than half of 1 per cent in comparison with last year. Surely the minister's explanation has no bearing on the number of immigrants who are attending retraining classes to learn English or French. In fact, in view of the number of immigrants to Canada last year there should be substantially more attending these classes, but the figures show the exact reverse of that situation.

Let me repeat the figures very quickly. In the city of Toronto as of January 31, 1967 there were 2,081 individuals attending the special English for new Canadians classes. In February of the same year the figure was 2,347. In March there were 2,290, in April, 2,271, in May, 2,067, in June, 1,701, in July, 1,479 and in August, 1,137. Although the number of immigrants has increased, these figures represent a decrease of almost 50 per cent.

The minister says we are talking about different months and that in the summer months the numbeer attending goes down. I do not know whether the minister was not listening to me yesterday or his very competent assistants did not take the trouble after we rose to read Hansard. I will give the minister the figures for new applications in the city of Toronto from April to September, 1966 and 1967, month by month. Then he cannot say I am comparing apples with oranges; I am comparing the good employment months of this year with the bad employment months of last year.

Let us take these figures month by month and compare 1966 with 1967. In April of 1966 there were 830 applicants for retraining courses in the city of Toronto; in April of this year there were 338. I am not too good at arithmetic, certainly not at rapid calculation, but that looks to me to be a reduction of about 60 per cent. In May of last year there were 805 applicants; this year the number was up to 971. In June of last year—I hope the parliamentary secretary is listening carefully because this is when the program was beginning to take hold—there were 830 applicants for retraining in Toronto. In June of this year there were 262. In July of last year there were 805 applicants; in July of this year there were 92. That is a reduction of about 85 per cent. In August of last year there were 995 applicants for retraining; this year there were 239. In September of last year there were 1,154 applicants; in September of this year there were 270. So when we were giving the figures we were not pulling them out of the air. We were not trying to doctor them or make the government look bad. We were giving the figures month by month.

I spoke about Ottawa. Let me put those figures on the record again. It should not take the parliamentary secretary very long to check my facts if he wants to do so. Privately I will be very happy to give him the name and telephone number of the person who gave me this information. At the retraining school in Ottawa in September of last year there were between 200 and 300 applicants for retraining courses. In September of this year there were between 30 and 40. That is a reduction of 85 per cent.

There is the situation, Mr. Speaker. We are not saying this because we are happy. We are not saying it because we will gain political capital out of it. We are telling the minister and the government these facts which have been brought to our attention in order that the problem may be alleviated. I know that hon. members on this side of the house will report on their own areas. Other areas have not yet been discussed but the figures there are just as bad as those for Ottawa which I have given. I am sure that when I can contact the proper person in my own city of Winnipeg I will discover that that city has just the same kind of report to make.

We are pointing out these facts to the minister because we have believed for years that the retraining of manpower and the upgrading of the skills of the work force of Canada are of the utmost importance. We thought the situation would improve when the reorganization took place, the department was changed and the minister was given, so far as this house was concerned, virtually a blank cheque to hire the kind of people with the skills that the old national employment service never had, the economists, statisticians and sociologists who are required in any modern manpower program. The minister has been very successful in building up his staff. When the government asked for and obtained the approval of parliament to pay the people who took training courses a living allowance, we hoped this would permit them to continue to take the courses in their entirety without having to stop in the middle because they could not afford to continue, as happened so frequently in the past. We hoped the situation would change. The situation has changed but instead of changing for the better, as most of us expected and as all of us hoped, it has changed for the worse.

I genuinely regret that the minister, having being given the facts as he was yesterday—and I think we gave them in a very straightforward, factual way without any real criticism of the minister or his department—did not come here with answers which would reassure not only the members of the house but the people working in the field, the teachers and principals in charge of the schools who are not concerned about the natural and to be expected wrangles and differences which take place among political parties but want to see a job done. I say with all sincerity that I do not think the teachers, principals and counsellors give two hoots whether the program is being operated or financed by the federal government, the provincial government, the local board of education or the local school board. They are interested in seeing that the people who need assistance in upgrading their skills get that assistance. I tell the minister and the government that these people are heartsick. They do not know what is happening. They do not know why it is happening. All they know is that a program for which they had a great deal of hope has turned sour.

I tell the minister that his explanation today is completely unacceptable to me. When we get to the minister's estimates, at which time we can discuss these matters in considerable detail, we will expect, indeed we will do more than expect, we will demand and insist upon detailed explanations. We do not want the excuses, the glossing over, the brushing under the rug that we got from the minister today. We want a hard, factual explanation from him and the department as to why the number of people who are being retrained in our manpower training centres has gone down so disastrously.

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say one or two things in speaking to this legislation. I will be reasonably brief. The first matter arises from a question asked a few moments ago by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave). It seems to me that the minister missed the point of the question of that hon. member.

The hon. member asked about the provision for and guarantee of some kind of close parliamentary, financial supervision over the work, operations and expenditures of this new council.

One infers from the remarks of the minister a few moments ago that the four advisory boards being established under the new council—perhaps there will be more than four; I know that part II of the legislation provides for the establishment of additional boards —will in fact be responsible at some stage of their annual operations for making their expenditures known and available to the scrutiny of this house. But the point of the question of the hon. member for Halifax, I believe, was that the over-all council that is being established by this legislation is the agency that should be responsible for making such a report.

Our suggestion, which was contained in the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax, is not that the four advisory boards report to parliament but that the council itself report annually to parliament. The council itself should be required to table its report in the house annually so that strict financial and supervisory control by the members of this house and the people of Canada over the expenditures of this new agency is possible. The people of Canada want to know where their money is being spent today, a fact that I should not think needed underlining in wake of the recent report of the Economic Council of Canada.

This, Mr. Speaker, was the essence of the appeal that was made by the hon. member for Halifax a few moments ago and which I feel has perhaps escaped the attention of the minister. I know that all members on this side of the house, or at least the members of this party, will welcome an answer to this question before we move beyond this stage of the proceedings on this legislation.

I think I am quoting the minister correctly, albeit rather loosely, when I say that he said that the entire program envisioned under this legislation will be linked to the employment needs of the country. This is a welcome announcement. However, I wonder whether the program will be linked even further to the social and economic aspirations of this country. In my view and in the view of many of us it would be helpful, and indeed very reassuring, if some provision could be made which would guarantee a kind of regional representation on this new Canada manpower and immigration council, a provision which would guarantee that various regions of this country which at this time feel that they do not share equitably in immigration and in industral productivity exercises and operatons could aspire to a fair and equitable share of the progress that will no doubt be accomplished nationally in this country in the next few years.

This is not the first time in remarks I have made in this chamber that I have referred to the inequity of regional development in this country, to the fact that various parts of the country are given the opportunity, inadvertently or by design, to benefit to a greater degree economically and socially than other regions such as the prairie region which I represent and regions in the maritime provinces. Therefore I would urge that careful attention be paid to this aspect of Canadian life, both economic and social. I would urge that this new council or agency be specifically charged with the responsibility of obtaining and attaining for itself a fair and equitable geographic representation across the country.

I further urge that some attention be given to extremely close consultation between the new council and the various departments of industry in the provinces of this land, with a view to promoting industrial and economic well-being in individual provinces and regions.

The minister has said that the program is linked to the employment needs of the country. I suggest that the employment needs of the country cannot always be interpreted in surface terms or on the basis of job opportunities which are available or are lacking at the specific time of examination. There are certain known needs in this country. There is a very serious and urgent need for attention to be given to the lagging productivities and economies of specific regions which have not shared so far to their fullest potential in their just desserts and in the prosperity of the country at large.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when the members of the council and of these advisory committees are concerning themselves with the manpower, employment and immigration problems in a given community or region, they could also take into account the future requirements and the future hopes and aspirations of that region. This can only be done if they work in close consultation with, as I have suggested, the department of industry in the province concerned. I do not think it is too much to hope in this day and age of enlightenment in Canada, this age of progress and relative prosperity, that we can think ahead in terms of economic and employment needs in regions so that, although they do not perhaps exist at the moment, they can be met adequately and responsibly in the future. This is possible only if some preplanning and anticipatory work is done at this stage. This would mean that in a province like my own, the province of Manitoba, which aspires to supporting a substantial complex of light and medium manufacturing, we could look forward to a pool and well of personnel who would be available to perform certain jobs and staff plants and be able to supply the necessary muscle for industries and other productive enterprises when those enterprises presented themselves.

I think the over-all necessity in regions such as the one I am discussing, others similar to Manitoba, is for an enlightened view or attitude toward the future on the part of this council and all those concerned with manpower and immigration policies in the government of Canada. For it is a vicious circle, Mr. Speaker. When one region attempts to improve its status but lacks both the financial resources and the available manpower to do so, then the one lack feeds the other. In those circumstances a province finds itself in the position of being unable to attract industry because it has not got the manpower and at the same time unable to attract manpower because it has not got the industry. In such a situation, Mr. Speaker, what is necessary is a close and dedicated exercise in co-operation among the provinces, this new council and the advisory bodies which will be set up and which will function under that council, in order to provide for future expansion and to anticipate the future ambitions of regions such as those to which I have referred. I hope that the minister incorporates the same philosophy in the work of the council and of his department.

There are one or two aspects of the conflict with private industry and business to which I should like to refer at this point. I share the anxiety of the hon. member for Halifax who spoke of the proliferation of bureaucracy which is exemplified in the establishment of agencies such as this. I think the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) put the case well yesterday with his references to the sovereignty, if you like, of the individual, individual responsibility and the desire of most men and women to care and provide for themselves, and the general attitude prevailing in the country at the present time in relation to big government paternalism. I think there is a tendency in the establishment of agencies such as this toward a climate of paternalism that is more negative than positive in its effects on Canadian enterprise. I would therefore call on the minister to take pains, through his department and through this agency, to co-operate in so far as it is possible and to the greatest degree possible with the private employment services which operate in this area.

In my own city there is located the head office of one of the main private employment agencies of North America and perhaps of the world. Two or three other private employment services also have offices there. I am therefore familiar to some degree with the anxiety which these private companies have felt since the new Department of Manpower and Immigration was organized several months ago. I raise this question. To what degree will the activities of such private agencies be inhibited or to what degree will their freedom be encroached upon by this extension of governmental manpower responsibility and manpower authority?

The private employment agencies, as I am sure the minister would agree, have performed a considerable service in supplying necessary manpower, womanpower and muscle for businesses and industries across this country. One is moved to ask now what the role of these private agencies will be. What will be their future role in an economy which to a greater extent with each passing year, it seems, becomes more and more a guided and managed economy, an economy in which the government has an increasingly large and authoritarian influence and in which the private enterpriser, the private entrepreneur, has, unfortunately, a correspondingly diminishing influence. I wonder whether an attempt has been made on the part of the officers working under the minister to work out with these private agencies a system whereby the private agencies may contribute to the role that the minister envisions his department may perform to improve the manpower situation of the country.

I hope my remarks in this area do not give me the appearance of having been suckled on a creed outworn. In the view of many, particularly in this party, this creed is not yet outworn. A creed that speaks out for an asks for the encouragement of private enterprise at this stage in the development of the Canadian economy is a timely one.

We hope, as the hon. member for Prince suggested yesterday, that this new program is not one of regimentation, authoritarianism and control. We hope that there will not be regimentation of those persons who will be seeking direction and guidance from the officers of the new offices that are to be established. We hope that any direction to be manifested under this new body will be the kind of direction that will benefit the country as a whole and lead to new opportunities for those individual regions of the country that at the moment lag behind economically. In that way those regions may enjoy their fair share of the national prosperity.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, those of us in this house who are not on the government team quite often enjoy finding flaws or weaknesses in our legislation. Those who devised our parliamentary system, and who wanted it to include an opposition were probably justified in asking the opposition to watch over the measures taken by the government in order to protect the interests of the people who send us here. However, quite often, by dint of opposing the government, a complex seems to develop against all measures proposed.

It is a disease to which we, the independents, are more immune, at least this is so in my case; indeed I must distinguish between the three independents who are in this house, because I have been sent here by my constituents in an effort to co-operate with the government which was elected on November 5 or November 8, 1965—had it been the Conservative government, my attitude would have been the same—to make suggestions as freely as can be done by anyone who does not have to follow the party discipline, who does not have to obey instructions to vote for or against any measure; it is in that frame of mind that I should like to make a few brief remarks to the minister.

I shall, at the outset, make a few laudatory remarks. His earlier statement with regard to the co-operation which he has established between the federal and the provincial governments on matters of education—to use an expression unknown in my time—is groovy. The minister is on solid ground. In short, I consider it as conventional and I think that it will be recognized and supported by the leaders of every province in particular by those of my own province who intend to retain their rights over education, even at the adult level.

And the minister's statement was so clear and straightforward that it might help clarify also any ambiguity which resulted from all those discussions on semantics in which we have indulged for some time, without any efforts being made to define the words so as to be absolutely sure that we understand one another and that we are talking about the same thing.

I should also like to add another remark which I think the minister will enjoy. I had the opportunity in my own city, in my riding, particularly during the last three months, to witness the operation of the new manpower office where there are thirty or thirty-five employees. And I will tell the minister that our office at home, in Trois-Rivières, is operating with extraordinary efficiency. It is under the direction of competent people who fulfill their role with the kind of zeal I would call missionary.

I was personally struck because for the 20 years I have been in public life, I have had the opportunity to deal almost constantly with the problem of unemployment and I believe that in those 20 years, this is the first time that I find a truly efficient organization doing something to improve the fate of the jobless. I am mentioning my own area but I suppose the same thing occurs elsewhere.

I should nevertheless like to make a few suggestions to the minister. I would like to call to his attention a weakness that is often noticeable on government committees dealing directly with the public. It is not more noticeable at the federal level than at the provincial or the municipal levels; in fact, it occurs in almost all committees dealing directly with the public on such human, urgent and basic problems as livelihood, for instance.

On several occasions, I have noted that on the long run, the members of those organizations become indifferent, so to speak, tired of listening to sad stories all day long; they are sometimes annoyed at finding that the applicants—our constituents—are not always properly attired and are not always duly considerate of those officials who are doing their best, and we happen to learn that the latter fail to meet the most elementary requirements of what I would call human relations. Because of their indifference, they quite often treat their customers as intruders. They forget sometimes that they are dealing with human beings entitled to some consideration, and they sometimes treat them in a cavalier way. Others, having had a thorough explanation of the legislation, go out of their way to try to find in the acts some fine points which would preclude a solution to the problem of the applicant, instead of exerting every possible means to help him.

Therefore, I think that private enterprise has tried to meet that difficulty in having its employees attend courses in salesmanship, self-achievement, human relations, because it knows that if it treats its customers inconsiderately it will lose them to its competitors. On the other hand, the official in municipal, provincial or federal undertakings comes to think that he is appointed for life; he is sure that he will not lose his customers because he operates in an exclusive field, and too often he fails to meet basic responsibilities in the field of human relations. It is obvious in several places; in fact, I have noticed it in unemployment insurance and in welfare offices. I am not saying this, Mr. Speaker, to blame anyone, much less the people in my own riding, since I have just praised them, but I know that happens quite frequently and that is why expressions like "bureaucrat" and "red tape" and all the others which discredit the public servant before public opinion were invented, although in some cases they are justified because the public servant becomes bored, of course, especially when he has to listen to tales of woe all day long.

And now I should like to make a suggestion to the minister—I do not know under what department it could fall, but I think that it should be a service which could have repercussions in all departments—that some human relations courses should be established, which these civil servants would take at least every second or third year; thus they would not tend to act as robots and forget that they are dealing with human beings who have their own pride, their own sensitivity and who, after all, constitute their clientele, in short, with the voters and taxpayers who pay the civil servants their salaries.

Government services or branches too often lack this basic tact. I think we should try to correct this as much as possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I often wonder why we always link manpower with immigration.

It seems to me that these are two fields of activity, each of them very broad. I do not deny that there can be some relationship between the two—for instance, for the rehabilitation of immigrants, I am sure there is—but these are two fields of action which are very broad. I will even go further, and though it is none of my business, I will tell the minister that it is too big a burden for him.

Yesterday I heard people praise the late Hon. Guy Favreau. I had read all kinds of comments in the papers, listing the various tasks which were heaped upon Hon. Guy Favreau, and which might have had something to do with his early demise.

We happen to know that the present minister has had health problems in recent months. I wonder if wanting a solution to the manpower problem as well as the immigration problem, two major problems, is not too much to be expected from one man, in addition to what is evidently asked of him, which matter is not official here in the house.

I wonder whether two departments are not indicated because integrating immigrants is quite a job, in that it means teaching them the rudiments of Canadian history, and at least one of the two languages of the two founding peoples, and then watching over them for a few years to help them solve their problems because they may be a bit confused and somewhat like exiles in another land.

The same goes for the manpower problem. It is rather complex. I suggest to the powers that be that two departments should be set up as soon as possible.

Moreover, I see in the government a large number of brilliant young members who would be delighted to accept the responsibility of a ministry. And they would be pleased I believe if there was a diversion. They would like to display their zeal, their ability to deserve eventually some promotions. In my opinion, there would be sufficient work for two ministers and perhaps the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) would then avert the fate of others. I apologize if I seem a little gloomy, Mr. Speaker, but once again those are things of which I can speak as an independent member, but perhaps everybody could not do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I see in this bill that the following is stated in connection with the powers of the boards:

> The Advisory Board on Adult Occupational Training shall consider and report to the council on any matter within the minister's responsibilities in relation to adult occupational training in Canada.

Now, I would like to call the attention of the minister to one problem which is not being examined enough, I believe, and it is the one concerning people who are too old to find work in manufactures.

And when I say "too old", the minister knows as well as I do, and my colleagues also, that old age begins fairly early nowadays. From the age of 40 or 45, one already finds it difficult to get employment in plants. On the other hand, some people from 60 to 65 years old become pensioners on account of certain requirements on the part of collective agreements, pension plans, people who are still full of vigour and have experience, who could be useful to this country and who could add to its productivity but whom we condemn to unemployment and inaction, to idleness, with all the evil results that can have on a man's mind and body.

And I would like to see included in the instructions which will be given to this board, one calling for an examination of all questions coming under the jurisdiction of the minister in the field of professional training of adults; I would like to see included an instruction recommending them to take special care of those labourers belonging to the 40, 45, 50, 55 years old or more group, who are still able to work but who, for all kinds of reasons I have no time to indicate here, like automation for example, are unemployed.

I believe tentative experiments have been conducted in this field: people aged 60, 65 and 70 still enjoying a good health and with considerable experience have been successfully working at their jobs, with the result that they can give useful service to their country. In my opinion, we should give those instructions so that this board would deal with this particular problem.

I would like to mention, among others, the duties imparted to the Advisory Board on the Adjustment of Immigrants, and I quote para. 2 of clause 20 in Bill C-150.

> The board shall examine any matter pertaining to the minister where adjustment of the immigrants to Canadian life is concerned and shall report to the council on the aforesaid matter.

I wish to point out a special case which occurred in my own constituency, of which the minister has at least some knowledge, and I imagine that it might very well occur elsewhere.

In my constituency, there was a young immigrant, and in fact he is still there, who come to this country as a student. He attended a course in electricity, at the end of which he had to have six months' training on the job, as required by provincial legislation; otherwise, he would not get his licence as an electrician.

Now, the immigration office has refused him the right to work. I have been involved in this matter for about four or five months now, and I have yet to find out what went wrong, Mr. Speaker. Yet, it seemed so simple to me. I thought at one time that perhaps the immigrant had not clearly explained his position at first; at another time, I thought that the immigration official was so conscientious that he could not grant this student the right to work on account of something he had found somewhere. However, it seems that this six months on the job training period is part of the skill that he sought to acquire here, and if he is sent home without being allowed to work during those six months, he will not be able to leave with some diploma, some certificate of qualification, in brief, any certificate that would allow him to return to his country and be able to show that he is qualified. In any case, there is no lack of jobs for him, as several employers have requested his services.

I mention that case, Mr. Speaker, even though it is a special one that could have been settled in private, because I imagine the same thing could happen in other ridings, in other areas, and I suppose that this advisory board will see to it that organizations providing at least some right of appeal are established, if certain officials prove to be over-zealous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may not be in order to raise the following matter, but I crave your indulgence, since it deals nevertheless with unemployment and manpower.

My riding is faced with a problem which must probably exist elsewhere and which results in several persons being unemployed. Such unemployment could be remedied with greater latitude; I am now speaking of the so-called designated areas. In order to be designated, I know that areas must meet several criteria.

Now, in my riding, those conditions are drawn up bearing in mind that the area is urbanized, first of all the city of Trois-Rivières itself and the vast surrounding district. In Trois-Rivières itself salaries are quite high, because we are amongst the largest producers of newsprint in the world. On that basis, it is claimed that the area cannot be declared a designated area.

Now, here is what happens: certain industries could settle around Trois-Rivières, for instance, at Yamachiche, Pointe-du-Lac, Baie-Jolie, Saint-Étienne, and even at Sainte-Marthe-du-Cap which does not lie within my riding but in which I am interested as is my colleague for Champlain (Mr. Matte); but it seems those districts cannot be recognized as designated areas.

If this were achieved, there are a number of concerns which would like to operate in those localities. This would absorb a fair amount of manpower and would reduce the cost of unemployment insurance while helping the manpower staff to place a rather large number of those who will need their services.

I think that instead of setting up standards for a whole constituency, there should be a readiness to subdivide the constituencies and to study each case on its own merit and then decide that even on the outskirts of a prosperous city, industries could be allowed to benefit from all the advantages accruing the designated areas and to establish themselves at least a few miles from the limits. I am thinking in particular of Trois-Rivières which is at a great disadvantage today because industries which normally would settle there are going very far away.

Without being an underdeveloped area for the time being, I believe, we are nevertheless suffering from an intolerable wave of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, the question was raised a while ago of requiring the committee to report to the government or parliament. I feel that additional work should not be placed on parliament, which is already sitting nine or ten months a year, and the way things are going, sometimes eleven and soon, twelve months a year. I am satisfied that this committee should report to the minister and it is safe to say that we will be getting the report just as we are getting those of all the committees. We will surely have the opportunity to criticize when the departmental estimates come before us. I feel it would not be practical and that it would only be an opportunity to play politics to discuss every year the internal operations of an organization like the manpower council.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that my remarks were made in as constructive a way as possible and that, on the whole, I find that the setting up of this commission is an excellent thing; indeed it has already shown its usefulness even before it came into being through the offices that had been set up. The results will be better known one year from now and we may have the opportunity to make further improvements but, for the time being, I congratulate the minister who directed the drafting of this legislation in which is reflected his long years of experience with labour organizations and which was helpful in securing practical legislation.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on Bill No. C-150 will be very brief. First, I must say, that under the present circumstances, I am in favour of the bill which establishes the Canadian council on manpower and immigration as well as the boards connected with it, the advisory boards, and finally the regional and local manpower committees. Besides, those committees existed already. It is simply a duplication, I think, of the committees which existed before which were called unemployment committees and which have become manpower committees. Therefore, in the present circumstances, we cannot object to the principle of the bill.

Of course, if we were not dealing with a central government which continues to take over all provincial powers, taxation powers, we would say: since the field of education is a provincial matter, let us leave it to the provinces. But, since the federal government gets the lion's share of taxes in the provinces, some expedient must necessarily be devised in order to give back to the provinces a few crumbs.

Mr. Speaker, the minister has given us a masterful outline of his bill, and he is certainly qualified to do so, but he did not manage to convince and dazzle those who know how to get down to bed-rock. I believe that even if we have every reason to be satisfied with this bill, it certainly offers food for thought with regard to the future of education in the provinces.

I have always been told that whoever pays the piper calls the shots. This bill allows the provinces to have their say in the sense that they will rent the classrooms and the government will pay the rent, but the government will be the one to decide on the methods used and the courses taught. In other words, the federal government says: if you do as you are told, we will pay. That is the level at which it is said that the federal government encroaches upon the powers of the provinces, particularly in the field of education.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, this bill contains something which is thought provoking for, in the present circumstances, it will certainly be of some benefit to our population.

The council will include 16 paid members, four advisory boards, probably composed of about 60 members, as well as regional committees. I see there quite a large army of advisers to the minister because that is what they are called.

I am sure the minister will be well advised with all that well-paid army—even though I do not know what salaries will be paid. But, as always, that will be decided by the government or the minister. The salaries will be determined and all those people will be handsomely paid. I do not want to seem naïve, but I wonder who will appoint that well-paid group.

In his speech, the minister put partisan considerations aside—as always, I must add—but if you look at the bill closely you will find that it is full of political undertones.

A Canada manpower and immigration council, consisting of a chairman and 15 members, that is 16 members in all, is established. The chairman is appointed to hold office during pleasure for a term not exceeding three years. The members of the council, other than the chairman of the council and the chairmen of the advisory boards must be appointed after consultation with such representative organizations as the governor in council deems appropriate.

All that fine print, after the word consultation, means that politics will have power of veto over the appointment of the chairman and the other members of the council.

We have the same thing here in the case of the advisory boards, all four of them: the advisory board on adult occupational training; the second, the advisory board on the adjustment of immigrants; the third, the advisory board on the co-ordination of rehabilitation services for disabled persons and the advisory board on manpower and immigration research.

Let us have a look at the appointments and be honest with ourselves. I do not hold it against the minister; that is how things have always been done in the house. In the final analysis, the appointments are always political. It is all very well to say that consultations are taking place, but we know what is going on in our ridings. This is nothing new. In my opinion, all commissions previously established, even the unemployment insurance commissions, the former employment and guidance services provided for the unemployed, are so many fine opportunities for a political party to find good positions for its supporters and to run everything.

I would be very happy if once and for all, a new procedure could be devised in order to free those boards from politics and enable them to work conscientiously.

Some of them, even though appointed by the party in power, are conscientious. As a matter of fact, they are staffed by honest people. But others take every opportunity to indulge in what is called petty politics. The first condition for any kind of work to be accepted—and I saw this myself—is that it bears the hallmark of the party.

I mention this to the hon. minister although he is well aware of the situation. I am saying that we want this to stop. Let us look for another method. Today, we have the present minister, things will be different tomorrow, partners will change as well as employees and this will have repercussions throughout Canada. And the province of Quebec is far from being an exception, as the hon. minister knows well enough.

I know that as far as appointments are concerned, there is a lot of work to do. This protection must be eradicated from our laws.

All those who were listening to the hon. minister this afternoon for the first time thought the act was wonderful. But beyond the words of the hon. minister—and he is quite convincing—when the concept of the law is considered we still have this same fear that a skilled person will be passed over and an incompetent person appointed. I know that the hon. minister is aware of this. I know that he is interested in this matter and well aware of the situation, because inefficient people are appointed over the heads of qualified people, as the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said a while ago, people who are completely devoid of tact, who have no social notion whatsoever, and who assume responsibilities for such delicate matters as social welfare laws which we are advocating today.

I should now like to say a word about the committees, especially the adult vocational training committee. This is all very well, we are all quite pleased. This commission now bears a new name for it used to deal with the training of unemployed people. When I was the chairman of the school board in my region, I was the first to set up and implement the first training courses for unemployed people. The terms of reference of the commission have been modified year after year. It is still not perfect—at the start it was not perfect but it was a beginning—it is still not ideal, there are abuses still, but I am sure that the more we amend the law, the more hardship those who need it will suffer.

I noticed it again last year, when senior citizens 62 years of age were being taught grade 3 and 4 French. Between you and me, it would have been just as well to pay them a salary for staying home quietly in their rocking chair.

We, the legislators, just seem a little ridiculous because the effects of our legislation cannot be felt immediately and when we go back to our constituencies and discuss the matter with our constituents in order to learn about the impact of that legislation, sometimes we feel like laughing in view of the possible effects of the legislation.

Insofar as the adult vocational training is concerned, I think that something should be done with regard to the number of courses. Someone might say that guidance in that respect is a provincial responsibility, but since it is done, an overall view of the matter could still be taken. For instance, in my area, instead of holding all the classes in Chicoutimi, some should be held north of the lake so that our people should not have to travel over a long distance; in fact, that would be possible since there are groups of 25 to 30 adults who could attend those classes, and who are now forced to go out of their way in order to do so. I think the attention of the minister should be drawn to this state of affairs, in order to prevent ridiculous situations of this sort. Imagine a worker forced to travel 50 miles to attend his classes, when it could be taught in Saint-Félicien, in Dolbeau, in Roberval, in short, somewhere near so as to accommodate all those interested and save them an unreasonably long trip.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word here concerning the regional committees. As elsewhere, many do their best and others do not. It reminds me a little of the last elections and of the $50,000 or $75,000 which the government had given to the Economic Development Council which was managed in part by the regional committees and which had used this money for purely political ends in the lower Mistassini region. But the minister is not responsible for this, since he did not even know about it.

That is to say that close supervision will have to be exerted so that the purpose of the legislation may be achieved. I am sure that this object would be achieved if less emphasis were placed on political considerations. Even though we do not speak about that any more, parties are still playing politics. The Liberals argue that they do not play politics, but every initiative taken by politicians is politically oriented, and I think this is very bad, when a bill is introduced and especially when people entrusted with the administration of that legislation are people appointed for political considerations, who are often anxious to work for the party concerned.

It is hoped that this bill will achieve its objects and will be to the advantage of the whole working class.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay unduly the passage of this bill to establish the Canada manpower and immigration council. I listened with interest this afternoon to the comments of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) as he outlined some of the responsibilities of the council and the advisory boards which can be set up under this bill. It seems to me that some of his remarks could readily be related to problems that come entirely within the authority of the provincial governments. The government has a role to fulfil but I personally believe it can best strengthen confederation if it legislates within its sphere of authority and does not unnecessarily interfere with the rights of the provinces.

There is one aspect of the bill which is of great concern to me. I refer to the right granted to the minister to set up from time to time additional advisory boards as he deems appropriate to deal with any subject within his responsibilities. On the one hand we have heard that the Prime Minister (Mr. Perason) is concerned about government expenditures and is asking the cabinet to curtail unnecessary spending. This is understandable when we consider that despite our present high taxes we still have a budget deficit estimated to amount to some $740 million. Yet here we have a bill which gives the minister carte blanche to set up additional boards whose chairmen must be paid and whose members will be paid a per diem allowance for each day he or she is absent from his or her ordinary place of residence. How many boards are to be established?

Clause 12 of the bill states:

(1) The minister shall establish

(a) an advisory board on adult educational training;

(b) an advisory board on the adjustment of immigrants;

(c) an advisory board on the co-ordination of rehabilitation services for disabled persons; and

(d) an advisory board on manpower and immigration research.

(2) The minister may, from time to time, establish additional advisory boards as he deems appropriate to deal with any subject within his responsibilities as minister.

This would indicate that these boards with 12 members each will have a total of 48 members. In my view this is not the way to cut down government expenditure; this is not the way in which to curtail government bureaucracy. Let me put my thoughts on record in this regard.

There are 48 appointments to be made which will put these people on the government payroll. This bill is too broad in its scope and the minister is being given powers which I believe to be too wide. Surely the minister has sufficient staff at the present time to advise him on all matters affecting the utilization and development of manpower resources in Canada, including immigrants to Canada and their adjustment to Canadian life, without adding to the number of people on the government payroll. We already have too many officers, if I may use that term, and not enough crew. We already have too many people cutting bait, as we would say in Queens or Lunenburg Counties, and not enough out fishing. I believe that upgrading of our manpower and the retraining of individuals in other skills in order to take advantage of technological changes in our country is necessary, but I caution the minister that overexpanding his department unnecessarily, which could increase the load upon the taxpayers, might create more problems than this measure is designed to solve.

Private enterprise is obviously concerned about the growth of government boards in recent years. There is obviously an overlapping of responsibility between government and industry, and it might well be that the government could utilize the facilities established by private enterprise before expanding into this field of greater control and direction of our economy.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that at this time we have reached a watershed in the debate on manpower. I felt reasonably confident that the minister although he was not in a position to say to the house that all the problems involved in manpower and retraining have been solved, at least was keeping a reasonably open mind about them. We had expectations that he would examine the suggestions we were making and that he would come up with some answers. Certainly no one is better qualified to find those answers and to carry out the objective of a meaningful manpower policy in this country.

In asking myself what is happening at the present time and why a loss of confidence is taking place I can only believe that the government is floundering because of its inability to solve federal-provincial problems. Much of what is going wrong with the manpower policy seems to be the direct result of the attitudes adopted in respect of federal-provincial relationships. The government seems to be trying to create a no-man's land between what is federal jurisdiction and what is provincial jurisdiction.

[Mr. Crouse.]

We can understand that there is a substantial problem in respect of the province of Quebec but we do not know how extensive that problem is. We do not know what the local approach is to such problems. We do know that in the other provinces of Canada this difficulty does not exist to the same degree. There does not seem to be a problem in respect of the other provinces working with the federal government toward a meaningful program.

The attempt to segregate in regard to retraining is disastrous and meaningless. To ask the provinces to assume some narrow definition of education as their responsibility, while the federal government assumes some narrow definition of retraining as its responsibility, simply cannot work. There are a number of reasons for this. We know that in some of the provinces of Canada the effect of retraining and upgrading, whether it involves academic re-education, skills or any other type of education, will contribute to the migration from those provinces to other provinces of this country. In any country this sort of thing takes place. Some provinces are developing at a slower rate than others. Changes are taking place, whether they be in people moving from agriculture to industry or from one industry to another. In effect, by asking some of the provinces of Canada to accept this narrow definition the government is asking them to pay for the export of their people to the advantage of the provinces that receive them later. It just is not an acceptable solution.

The minister is certainly well aware of the fact that when these new regulations in respect of manpower training came into effect the province of Ontario was decidedly unhappy with them. In his speech today the minister suggested there was resistance to the program on the part of the provinces, that they were assuming a bargaining position. But the bargaining position between the federal government and the provincial governments is one that is hurting the very people who need this assistance. The inability of the federal government to come to grips with this problem and solve it will frustrate what is otherwise an opportunity for the development of a first class program.

I am sorry I had to rise and take more of the time of the house today in order to say these few words. I want to use some of my time to read to the minister an article from the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. I would not do this if I did not think it was important to bring it to the minister's attention, to reiterate what has been said in other areas of the country and to point out to him the seriousness of the problem, and that his somewhat cavalier attitude today that everything has been resolved and everything is under control is not warranted because this really is not the case.

The article points out that in the Kitchener-Waterloo area, including Galt, Hespeler and Preston, more immigrants settled last year than in any other Ontario city. I think this refers to the city of Kitchener and excludes some of the major cities such as Hamilton and Toronto. The article in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record goes on to say:

> This influx of newcomers, however, has created serious problems. Many immigrants are having difficulty learning the English language and consequently are employed at jobs not using the skills for which they were brought to Canada.

The article says in part that we have made very careful rules about the kind of immigrants that are acceptable to this country and qualifications regarding skills are contained in those rules. This is one of the great things for which we are looking in immigrants. Yet when immigrants come to this country, as the article documents, they are set to menial tasks. If this is the policy of the government, if we really want to set immigrants to menial tasks, surely if we are to be logical we should bring in unskilled immigrants for unskilled work, or if we bring in skilled people we should provide them with a sufficient opportunity to practise those skills which are essential to the economy of this country.

Mr. John Zaritsky, who is a young reporter for the Record, has done an outstanding job. I should like to read his article because I think it is very important in pointing up the difficulties that are being created by the present attitude of the department in respect of the manpower program. The article starts by saying:

> Sandor N., a recent immigrant to the Twin Cities, spoke not only for himself but for many other immigrants in his application form to attend night school English classes when he wrote:
> "I leave in Canada and here everybody speak in English. This language is very important in my work. I am working in office as draftsman. If I no speak English, I cannot work. I am leaving in here Canada three mound ago."

The spelling and the syntax are Sandor's but the message is clear: Sandor needs to learn English quickly if he is going to practise his trade as a draftsman.

It's unlikely however that Sandor will learn fast enough, no matter how hard he studies. For, in the opinion of A. A. Yunker, an English language instructor at the adult education centre, it will take immigrants like Sandor "at least two or three years" to learn English adequately.

It's doubtful Sandor can afford to spend "two or three years" learning English without it being a personal hardship. More likely his language deficiency will force him to give up his present job and get another one as a labourer or something which doesn't require an ability to use English.

Unfortunately, Sandor is not alone in this predicament. There is Bert, a young Dutchman who was an electrician back home. Bert now works as a porter in a local hotel while he learns English.

Jaroslav M. attended university for four years back in his native Czechoslovakia. Jaroslav now is working as a labourer in a local factory.

John D. is another immigrant who attended university in his native Korea. For two years he specialized in biology and animal husbandry. He is now doing factory work.

Seigfried S. was a welder back in Germany. Today he is working on construction in the Twin Cities.

Henry R. was a school teacher in South America for two years before he came to Canada. Today he's a labourer in a local factory.

Pilar G. is another former teacher. For nine years she taught high school in Spain. The only work she does now is baby-sitting.

Hans K., a qualified plumber with a grade 12 education in Germany, is a labourer. Also a labourer is Jaszai M. who attended university for one year in his native Austria.

An air-conditioning engineer prior to immigrating to Canada, Jorg B. is now a mechanic. Chow T. completed secondary school in China but today he washes dishes as a kitchen helper.

Paolo P. was a mechanic back in Italy. He is presently employed as a labourer.

Anna P. worked for five years as an editor of a sports magazine in Poland. Prior to that, she was an office manager. Today she is looking for a job.

Another Pole, Edward M. was a bookkeeper and accountant. He now is a lab technician. Another bookkeeper, with seven years experience, Horst Z., a native of Germany, now does factory work. Also doing factory work is Erika Z., formerly an office clerk in Switzerland.

Dieter K., a baker for six years in Germany, is now a metal polisher. Ioannidis A. worked as an electrician for 12 years in Greece; today he is doing factory work.

Klaus P. was an IBM operator in Germany. He now is a machine operator in a local factory.

All the names listed are immigrants to Canada. Most of them have arrived in the Twin Cities within the last six months. They arrived with different and varying degrees of skills from countries around the world.

But most, because of an inability to speak and understand English, are not now able to work at the trade or occupation they were trained in.

Usually they have been forced to take lower-paying low-skill or labouring jobs. And all have expressed a desire and willingness to learn English.

Mr. Yunker and the staff at the adult education centre sympathize with these immigrants. Mr. Yunker, with 12 years experience teaching English to immigrants, knows how tough it will be for them to learn English.

He knows that many of them will attend the two and a half hour classes three nights a week tired and hungry after working 8 to 12 hours.

"A lot of them don't have time to go home after work. They come here right from work in their work clothes without having eaten supper. It's pretty rough to concentrate under those circumstances."

The article continues:

The advantages of day school classes are numerous. Students spend four times as much time in classes than in night school. There is more continuity between lessons. Day students get less discouraged because they are progressing rapidly.

And because the immigrants are "exceptionally conscientious and well motivated," they learn quickly.

Since its inception, the program has proved to be very successful, said Mr. Yunker. He cited numerous examples of immigrants who, having completed the five-month course, were able to get good jobs which they couldn't have held prior to taking the English classes.

And the costs for such a program are more than made up for by the economic benefits which occur when an immigrant works at a skilled trade or profession.

"If these people are brought to Canada for a purpose, then our job should be to put them into that field as soon as possible. The sooner we get them into the proper field, the sooner they'll be an asset to the country."

• (5:40 p.m.)

But since March 21, the local manpower office, which must refer immigrants to the adult education centre for day English classes, has not sent one immigrant to the centre.

Mr. Yunker and the staff at the centre can't understand why.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that neither can the rest of the country. The article goes on to point out another difficulty that immigrants to this country are encountering. It is documented in this way, and I quote from the Record again:

A few months ago, an immigrant arrived in the Twin Cities. There was nothing unusual or special about the immigrant, he was just an average sort.

The immigrant, a man in his early 20's, was full of ambition and was willing to do anything to build a future in Canada for his wife and two small children.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

And although he didn't speak or understand English, the immigrant did succeed in finding a job in a local factory shortly after he arrived.

Two and one half months later, disaster struck. The immigrant got caught in a punch press he was operating. Both of his hands had to be amputated.

Company safety officials investigating the unfortunate tragedy believe the accident was caused in large part by the immigrant's inability to understand English.

These things happen, Mr. Speaker, and have happened in this country before. We all know of instances where French Canadians have gone to work in factories where the signs were posted in English and, not understanding the English language, experienced similar difficulties. We are very much concerned about this problem today. As a matter of fact, we are paying a terrible price in national unity today because we did not anticipate and do something about the problem 20 or 30 years ago when it should have been tackled. Let us not make the same mistake with immigrants who come to this country. Surely we have learned something from our history.

I realize that the minister does have some difficulties. I do not know what they are exactly but he must not be complacent about them. I suggest to the minister that he not only investigate further the articles to which I have referred today but that he look at the remainder of these seven articles which document the experiences of immigrants in the twin city area. It does not make very pleasant reading. I suggest that unless something is done about this situation our whole manpower and immigration policy in this country will be seriously jeopardized. We will also lose that great degree of sympathy which now exists for the work that has been undertaken in this direction.

I suggest to the minister that he rethink this problem, that he not be tied to the idea that because one province feels it cannot go along with a certain program every other province in Canada must take the same medicine. Surely such an approach is not the answer. There must be some way to satisfy the natural and legitimate aspirations of a province which is different, one which has different objectives and outlooks from other provinces in Canada, without forcing the provinces which wish to co-operate with the federal government in a combined program to adopt a similar stand. This to me does not seem to be the way to get a good manpower policy or to strengthen confederation. This to me seems to be an abdication of the responsibility of the federal government in this field and a very convenient way of saying that the provinces are trying to gain a bargaining position with the federal government. I hope that the minister will not think I am so naïve as not to recognize that a certain amount of jockeying does take place not only among the provinces themselves but between the provinces and the federal government. We recognize that as a fact of life. But again that is not the issue.

We think that the federal government has not provided leadership in this field, that it has been somewhat irresponsible in bringing immigrants to this country and not following through in a way which is clearly within the jurisdiction of the federal government and certainly within the area of its moral obligation. This applies not only to retraining; it applies to housing, to the kind of promises which are made, the advertising which takes place and the recruiters that we are sending to other countries in the world. We are not being fair. I suggest that it is time for fairness in this country and time for leadership on the part of the government in the whole field of manpower and immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I will start by answering the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman). I do not think I said—I was speaking French at the time and there might have been some slight difference in the English translation —that everything in my department was perfect, that there were no frictions or deficiences at all, because I know that there are. We cannot make changes of the magnitude of those we have made without encountering some trouble somewhere or making adaptations.

This new program came into effect only on April 1, 1967, not five years but six months ago. In the field of adult training, we are still operating under the old agreement for another year, so I think it is a little soon to state in the house that this program is a failure simply because during the last five or six months it did not correspond exactly to what hon. members had in mind. So many things had to be changed that I am ready to accept that there are some well-founded grievances concerning our training program.

I do not know how many times I will have to repeat this, Mr. Speaker, but may I say to the hon. member for Waterloo South that if it is true that a skilled immigrant cannot use his skill in Canada because he cannot speak one of the two official languages, then that person is entitled to apply for a course under this retraining program. If this policy is not adopted by any particular centre then it is not following the instructions which have been given to it. This is our policy, and we are ready to assume the expenses incurred and to pay allowances if such an immigrant needs language instruction before he can use his skill.

Mr. Saltsman: Tomorrow we will put it to the test.

Mr. Marchand: Yes. If hon. members want me to repeat that in French so that it is very clear I am ready to do so. However, I think we have a good translation service here. As I say, this program is not perfect. Probably no one will ever produce a perfect program of this sort. But I think it is a sound program and that it will achieve the objectives that are outlined in the legislation.

I do not think that the problem of federal-provincial relations at this stage has anything to do with the development of this program. I think that all our differences were settled at the last conference which was held in July, and I have every reason to believe that the program will go down well with all provinces, including the hon. member's province. I know that in Newfoundland they are happy. Hon. members may say that they have to be happy anyhow but nevertheless they are happy. That is so in many other provinces. In Quebec we have formed a consultative committee for training adults, and everything will be all right. I think within a few months the program will take shape. It will not be perfect; one must remember that. There will still be grievances. We shall have grievances all the time, but it will really become the program that I thought it would be.

Concerning the private agencies may I say that it is not the purpose of my department to kill such private agencies. But I do want our placement offices and our Canada manpower centres to do an efficient and good job. If the private agencies cannot compete it means that they do not have the spirit of private enterprise. We are not going to kill them. That is not our intention. They have their roles and I think some of them are useful to the country. I am sure they can compete very successfully with our Canada manpower centres. As a result they will continue serving. We do not intend to destroy them but we do want efficient manpower centres to give the service for which employers and employees are waiting.

With regard to expenses there is an amount in my estimates of $120,000 for the council and the advisory boards. This is the limit. We cannot spend more money than that. If we want more we must come back to the house and explain why. So there is no limitless provision in the bill which would authorize the minister or anybody else to spend any amount of money.

We have indicated in the bill that we want authority to set up special boards. Let us look at it this way. Suppose we have problems with the mobility grants program; you and I may agree that we should have a special board to deal with them within the limits which are indicated in the estimates. I do not see why, because there are certain provisions giving certain powers, it should be said that the government has a blank cheque. That is not so. We are limited and if I want to set up new boards I must take into account the amount of money that is left in the authorization given by the house. There is no such danger as the hon. member sees. Everything is under control. The Auditor General has the authority to supervise and look into these expenses as well as other expenses.

Mr. Nielsen: After the money is spent.

Mr. Marchand: It is the usual procedure. If the hon. member wants to change the whole structure of government I have no objection. Perhaps we shall be in agreement.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister will be welcome.

Mr. Marchand: In any event, I do not think there is any specific danger concerning finance.

Someone else spoke about regional problems. There are regional problems; that is why we divided Canada into five regions. Each region has the maximum autonomy. We have taken into account the specific problems of each region of Canada.

[Translation]

I thank the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) for what he said about the bill and the department. Old people, at least those we call old people, are a problem and I think that within the framework set up by this bill it is possible to study and give special consideration to that problem as well as to that of young people, and to all the special problems which arise in the field of manpower.

Now, about training, I must say that most of the difficulties—I fail to recall the case he mentioned—stem from the fact that training comes under provincial jurisdiction as well as all the professional associations and associations, and it happens that immigrants have difficulties not because of us but because of the regulations concerning training or membership in professional associations.

Now, with regard to the member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) who fears political appointments, Mr. Speaker, I feel that those who know the bill and all those who have held the post I am now filling know full well that it is impossible to pull political strings. A while ago, it was pointed out to me that it was a good place for friends. Indeed, it is a very poor one, in fact the worst one of all. If the C.L.C. is to be represented, it will not accept that we appoint its representative; the congress will do so themselves. The same applies to the Confederation of National Trade Unions, as well as to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It is really not the place for patronage. If there is any place where it is impossible to have patronage this is it, this is the type of representative council; free organizations in our land will not allow the government to appoint their representatives. This is not true under this government any more than it was under the former government.

However, I think the hon. member for Roberval, who is not here, unfortunately, is mistaken. Those who believe that the growing number of councils will give the government more opportunities for patronage, do not understand the workings of such bodies, and I think that if they consulted with the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), they would not doubt the veracity of my statement.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, we are faced, I think, with a bill that may not be altogether perfect but that provides the utmost guarantee under the circumstances and improves on what was previously available. In my estimation, the house should approve it, and after a while, we could see if it fulfils our hopes.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL

TABLING OF FOURTH ANNUAL REVIEW

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may we revert to motions in order to table the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, as requested by the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the minister have leave to table the document now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock the house will proceed with the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before you call any of the items may I raise a point of order. I draw your attention to an anomaly on the order paper with respect to the items under private bills. I do so because there is one entry which is perhaps in error. If there is an error it may well be we shall need to look more closely at the listing of the other items in order to find out whether there are errors in regard to them as well. I notice that item 8 under date of July 4, 1967 is listed as follows:

● (6:00 p.m.)

Second reading of Bill S-15, An Act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada—Mr. Cameron (High Park).

This is followed by an indication that the bill is printed in both English and French. If Your Honour will now look at item 11 under the same heading of business you will find there under date of July 7, 1967, the following.

Two Entries For Same Bill

Second reading of Bill S-15, An Act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada—Mr. Cameron (High Park).

Again there is an indication that the bill is printed in both English and French. This, Mr. Speaker, is a company which failed to secure a charter last session. Perhaps it wants to have two tries this time in the hope that one of these bills will get through.

I cannot believe that it is in order to have the same bill, and this is obviously the same bill, listed twice. I draw this matter to Your Honour's attention so that something may be done about it.

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Skeena is perfectly correct. An error has occurred. Accordingly, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury):

That as Bill S-15, an Act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada, was received irregularly in this House on July 4th last, the entry in Votes and Proceedings for that date, as well as item No. 8 under "Private Bills" on today's Order Paper in relation thereto, be deleted.

I think this will correct the error to which the hon. member for Skeena has referred.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for High Park needs leave of the house to move this motion. Does the house grant such leave?

Mr. Howard: Before leave is granted may I make a suggestion? I have no objection to the motion but as the hon. member who moved it is entitled to speak first on it I wonder whether in doing so he could explain to us how this error arose in order that we may be fully apprised of the circumstances.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): I am sorry, but I do not know how the error occurred. I noticed when I read the order paper yesterday that the bill was set down twice. Mistakes of this kind do occur occasionally, though we know that the branch which deals with private members' bills is very careful in what it does. This is one of those unfortunate errors which do occur and I would ask the house to give the necessary leave to present this motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give leave to the hon. member for High Park to move this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed

Two Entries For Same Bill

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would appear to the Chair that there has been a slight clerical error which could be corrected by the adoption of this motion.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I could rise to comment on this situation. Could I ask for a copy of the motion? We do not have it before us and there is a technical aspect which may require reference to Votes and Proceedings as one of the documents to which reference is made. In addition, a copy of the motion would be helpful to us because it may be our desire to move an amendment to it. I will take the liberty of reading the motion aloud so that we may know exactly what it says.

That as Bill S-15, an Act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada, was received irregularly in this House on July 4th last, the entry in Votes and Proceedings for that date, as well as item No. 8 under "Private Bills" on today's order paper in relation thereto, be deleted.

The first point I should like to raise with respect to this motion is that its contents are perhaps a little irregular inasmuch as the wording adopted incorporates within it reasons in favour of the motion. There is a sort of preamble incorporated within the motion itself and I am doubtful as to its regularity. I think it would be more in keeping with the procedure we follow if the motion were simply to ask that the entry in Votes and Proceedings as well as item No. 8 under private bills on today's order paper be deleted, thus removing the explanation that Bill S-15 was received irregularly in this house on July 4 last.

I do not wish to be picayune but I suggest this is a matter which should give the Chair cause for reflection. As I understand it, we do not follow the practice of including preambles in motions which are actually moved. It occurs to me that the mover of the motion might consider amending it so as to bring it in line with what I believe to be the standard practice here, namely, that a motion shall set out the decision of the house to do a certain thing without explaining the reasons for taking such action.

A Message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate had passed the following bills, to which the concurrence of this House is desired:

Reference is then made to several bills including "Bill S-15, An Act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada—Mr. Cameron (High Park)." The difficulty we encounter is that the last meeting of the house before the recess took place on July 7, the date on which a further message was received from the Senate in precisely the same words as the previous message. I quote from page 332 of Votes and Proceedings of July 7:

A Message was received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate had passed the following bills, to which the concurrence of this House is desired:

Among them appears the following:

Bill S-15, An Act to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada—Mr. Cameron (High Park).

In each case, both on July 4 and on July 7, the house made a decision that the bill was deemed to have been read a first time and ordered for second reading at the next sitting of the house pursuant to standing order 103(2). This is the way I see the situation. Because July 7 was the last day of the session before the summer recess, this matter escaped the notice of those who have any dealings with the preparation of the order paper and the receipt of information from the Senate. I attach no blame whatsoever to anybody with regard to the handling of this matter. It was one of those things that came in at the last minute. Perhaps all we can do now is correct the error in this way. However, this leaves suspect the operations of the Senate because presumably somebody in the Senate dispatched the messages on both July 4 and July 7 indicating that the Senate had taken certain action in respect of this bill on two separate days.

This puts a cloud over the proceedings with respect to the particular item before us. The absence of any explanation of the irregularity—the hon. member for High Park offered none even upon request, having indicated he did not know why the error took place—puts us in even more of a quandary and we are entitled to ask ourselves now whether the proper motion is before us. Should we be deleting the item under date of July 4 or the item under date of July 7? Which is the correct one? Did the Senate give third reading to the bill and send us a message? Presumably it did. In fact it duplicated its decision, but we are entitled to ask which is the correct decision of the Senate.

Was the correct message dispatched on July 4 or was the correct message dispatched on July 7? We have not been given any indication which is correct except that the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for High Park, has incorporated in his motion a reference to July 4 as being the incorrect date. But when he was asked to explain the irregularity he said he did not know the reason.

Perhaps this July 4 date came out of the air. Perhaps somebody placed it in the hands of the hon. member for High Park who, without explaining the reason why that date was chosen, simply by declaration in his motion says that the bill was received irregularly on that particular date.

I submit that before we make a decision about this matter we are entitled to know specifically why that message was received irregularly on July 4 and we are entitled to know if in fact it was received irregularly on July 4. Votes and Proceedings, which is our guide here in the absence of any other formal explanation or guidance, is clear. I do not intend to read it again but it indicates clearly that the house received a message from the Senate on July 4 with respect to Bill S-15 indicating that it had been passed by the Senate and asking this house to concur, which is the standard and formal way of doing business between the two houses so far as bills are concerned. Then on July 7 the house received an identical message from the Senate without any indication from the Senate that the previous message was incorrect.

I am not casting any reflections on the integrity of the hon. member for High Park with respect to this matter but I simply say that to ask the house upon his words, as expressed by way of this motion, to make a decision that it received something irregularly on a certain date, without any substantiation therefor and without any communication from the Senate, would in effect be saying to the Senate: You do not know what you are doing. I say there may be great validity in that on more than one occasion but in effect by adopting the motion we would be saying: You, the Senate of Canada, a portion of this legislative body, the parliament of Canada, which by precedence if nothing else has a higher standing than the House of Commons, made a mistake on July 4, 1967, with respect to a particular bill. We do not have any intimation from the Senate that this is the case.

Simply being presented with a motion declaring we received something irregularly on a particular date, without any formal communication between the two houses, leaves us in the position that we should either reject the motion and leave things as they are until the situation is cleared up or we should amend the motion to wipe both of the items off the order paper because one of them is irregular. I think our proper course is to amend the motion to include both dates and put the Senate back in the position of doing the thing correctly.

Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron):

> Strike out all words after the word "last" and substitute the following:
> "and the same bill was introduced on July 7 and appears as item No. 11 on the order paper for September 26, the entries in the Votes and Proceedings for the dates of July 4 and July 7 as well as the items Nos. 8 and 11 under "Private Bills" on today's order paper, in relation thereto, be deleted."

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have only one copy of the amendment in written form because we did not know what the formal motion would be. I hope you can read it. Perhaps we may dispatch the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands to assist you to interpret it because it is his draftmanship, but the essence of it is that both items on the order paper, Nos. 8 and 11 under the heading "Private Bills", be deleted from today's order paper, and also the entries in Votes and Proceedings for July 4 and July 7. If this amendment carries it will leave us in the position of not casting any reflection on the work of the Senate with respect to this irregularity, and the next communication we get from the Senate will put the matter back in its proper perspective.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The motion moved by the hon. member for High Park dealt particularly with the entry in Votes and Proceedings of July 4. The amendment which the hon. member for Skeena now proposes goes beyond the original motion and deals also with the entry in Votes and Proceedings of July 7. It is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the motion.

Let me read to the house citation 203(3), page 171 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, before you make your ruling, if I may I should like to read again what you have read:

> An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved.

Two Entries For Same Bill

I submit that if anything is germane or is in complete comport with the motion it is the amendment that has been moved, because the motion deals with a specific bill and deals with the date upon which it is claimed, simply by the hon. member for High Park and nobody else, that it was received irregularly.

The point of order on which I rose related to the fact that there are two such entries, one on July 7 and one on July 4. My point of order which I raised at the outset dealt with each of them. You did not rule on whether the point of order was valid. My point of order referred to the two dates on the order paper and when the hon. member for High Park moved the motion the motion contained in it a reference to the irregularity of the reception of a certain item on July 4.

I submit that without any formal communication between the other place and this house one cannot accept, on the simple statement of one hon. member, that something was done irregularly. Because each entry, that of July 4 and that of July 7, is germane to the other they thereby cannot be foreign. Therefore the citation which you use as the basis for your forthcoming ruling, I submit, cannot be supported. If there are any items which can be connected one with the other they certainly are the two dates, because they deal with exactly the same bill. There is nothing at all foreign to them.

I believe the only course to follow is to accept the amendment. I implore you to consider taking that course and giving the house an opportunity to permit the other place to make the decision it might wish to make under its rules. I say this without casting any aspersions on the other place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has examined the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for Skeena and also the motion moved by the hon. member for High Park. It is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment introduces a question that was not contained in the original motion and the Chair therefore rules that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is an unusual circumstance to be asked by a private member to rectify something when we are not fully aware of the implications of it. I believe this matter warrants some consideration and therefore I was very surprised by the ruling of the Chair in relation to the amendment. I too, like most other members, read the duplication on the order paper. I presumed that it was a duplication by the printer. However, when we checked we found that the dates of the two entries did not coincide. We then realized that there were really two entries. This in itself probably would raise some question, but when we received the motion of the hon. member for High Park, which indicates there was an irregularity in respect of one of them, I am surprised that Your Honour did not decide that there had been an irregularity, not on the part of our staff and not because of a misprint or a typographical error, and that the error must have occurred somewhere else and the logical thing to do would be to remove both items and have the other place make the decision whether or not this bill should be on the order paper at all.

If the bill was introduced irregularly once then the whole bill may be irregular, and it would not be unreasonable for someone to get up and say it was irregularly introduced the second time. I believe that by not allowing the amendment you may have further confused the matter and have cast some aspersions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have listened to the hon. gentleman for a few moments. The Chair is of the opinion now that the hon. member is entering into a criticism of a ruling by the Chair. I would refer him to standing order 12.

Mr. Peters: I did not intend to criticize the ruling. I only wished to mention the situation in which it now leaves us. It places us in the position of having to discuss a motion referring specifically to one bill which is being introduced while we have on the order paper a second one which is identical except for the very important fact that the date is July 7 instead of July 4.

The fact of the matter is that many members must wonder, unless there is a reason given for the first introduction being irregular, why the first one is improper and the second one legitimate. Therefore I should like to move an amendment which would remove both bills from the order paper. I assume it is open to me to move such an amendment. The effect of the amendment would be to remove the second one from the order paper as well so that the responsibility will clearly fall on the other place to decide whether or not one of these motions should be in Votes and Proceedings and which one. Otherwise, if we vote for the amendment of the hon. member for High Park we are saying there is something incorrect in respect of the first private bill entry and nothing wrong with the second one. I have heard nothing which indicates to me that this is so, nor do I have any knowledge that would lead me to believe this is so. For this reason I should like to move the following amendment to the motion of the hon. member for High Park:

That all the words after the word "that" be removed and the following words added "Bill S-15 be deleted from today's Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day, and from the record of Votes and Proceedings concerning Bill S-15".

I presume this amendment will be seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge).

Mr. Herridge: Certainly not. I am opposed to this amendment and all this blather over nothing.

Mr. Peters: It will be seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa). The purpose of this motion is to eliminate any responsibility or any criticism which may fall on the officials at the table in respect of this matter, because I believe they are without blame. I believe that probably in the confusion of the last day they accepted the orders as they were received from the other place. Therefore any responsibility for this matter should lie solely in the hands of those in the other place. By the removal of this entry at this time we will be able to eliminate anything that would cause anyone to intimate that the officials at the table were at fault in this matter.

I would think there might be a good argument against accepting my amendment if we were dealing with an early entry on the order paper which therefore had precedence over a number of bills. The sponsor himself has removed the first entry as a result of his amendment and my amendment relates to the last item on the order paper. In any event, if the other place properly returns the bill it will not lose its precedence on the order paper and, therefore, there will really be no change and no loss of precedence.

We seldom have any difficulty with entries on the order paper, and if there has been any irregularity in the past the sponsor has withdrawn the entry. I do not remember any such irregularity as this in the past, but if there has been something wrong with a private member's entry it has always been withdrawn and re-entered at a later date.

It is my hope that the officers at the table will be supported in respect of this matter by the acceptance of my amendment for the removal of both these entries in order that they can be re-entered in the proper fashion after a decision has been made by the other place as to whether or not this bill has been properly passed, and decided a date upon which it shall be received. I hope members will support this amendment in order that this unique situation can be clarified.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) obviously has failed to see the principle behind the amendment, but in order to allay his fear that there may be some lengthy discussion on this matter I hope all hon. members will agree that all proper entries have always been taken in order. Certainly, our officers at the table have won the respect of all members of parliament in this respect. I think the easiest way to solve this matter would be to re-enter the bill after consultation with those who sponsored it in the other place. I urge hon. members to support my amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion moved by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) deals with an entry in Votes and Proceedings of July 4 and item number 8 under private bills. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is phrased in such a way as to constitute a new question. Since it is a new question in the opinion of the Chair, it cannot be considered as an amendment to the original motion moved by the hon. member for High Park. Again, I must rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words but being a bit of a simple soul I have not been able to recognize the principle of this matter.

Mr. Howard: There is not any; it is a life insurance company.

Mr. Herridge: It is obvious that this duplication is a simple clerical error on the part of someone on the staff. I support the motion of the hon. member for High Park with a view to correcting the situation. I feel this is the sensible thing to do in order that this house will have the opportunity to get on with the debate on the bill in question without wasting anymore time than we have now wasted on this matter.

During the 22 years I have been in the house I have seen various members of the staff with long service replaced by younger men. In my experience very rarely has the staff of the House of Commons in this house, for Votes and Proceedings, or the staff of the Queen's Printer, made mistakes or errors. I look upon this very rare error as a tribute to their ability and care in correctly reporting the proceedings of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I must rise to defend the officials of this house because by no stretch of the imagination can the blame for this error be laid at their door. What my colleagues have been trying to point out to this house is that the error was made in the other place, and that the other place should clearly correct this mess. The attempt we have made to amend the motion of the hon. member for High Park was made with that purpose in mind, namely to place the blame where it should be placed and that is with the other place. Obviously our staff did not produce this entry without a communication from the other place. If that communication was incorrect, which it obviously must have been, then that is where the blame should lie, not with the staff of this house.

The Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I go any further perhaps I should remind the house of standing order 6(7) which states:

> No vote shall be taken between 6.00 o'clock p.m. and 8.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays or between 1.00 o'clock p.m. and 2.30 o'clock p.m. on any day upon which a morning sitting of the house is held. When any vote is postponed under the terms of this section the same shall be forthwith disposed of at 2.30 o'clock p.m. or 8.00 o'clock p.m., as the case may be. The house shall be deemed to have reverted to private members' business for such time as is necessary for the taking of any vote postponed from the time provided for private members' business.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: If it is carried it certainly is carried on division.

Motion agreed to on division.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) Commonwealth Relations—inquiry as to meeting of Prime Ministers; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Public Service—legislation to increase pensions of retired civil servants; the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand), Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Saskatoon—inquiry as to station construction.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill S-8, respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company.

• (6:40 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical to the one introduced in the house last session, passed here, considered in committee, reported out of committee, discussed again in the house but not passed before the end of last session. Since it is the identical bill and was fully discussed in the previous session, I am sure my hon. friends will agree there is little purpose in delaying further the passage of this bill, which has been recommended by all the public officials who have examined it.

I would not presume to say there will be no further discussion on the bill, but if there is none perhaps there will be consent to have the bill referred to committee without further debate.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am very much afraid that I cannot accept the invitation of my hon. friend, the sponsor of the bill. I think his words were that there would be little purpose in delaying further the passage of the bill, which has been recommended by all the public officials who have examined it. This statement bears some examination, because if it were to be permitted to go unanswered it would leave the impression that the employees in the public service of Canada who deal with these matters are favourably disposed to the proposals put to us by Excelsior Life Insurance Company. I am not saying they are against them, but I think the record should be balanced out to indicate the position of those employees in the department of insurance who have examined this bill. Their position is that of carrying out the provisions of the law as parliament has already determined them. They are not in a position to express any opinions publicly, certainly not officially, about the broader aspects of the bill and the impact upon the economy that Excelsior Life Insurance Company and others in a like position may have.

The position of the New Democratic Party has been enunciated on a number of occasions. It is a position that goes beyond the narrow confines of the statutory requirements of the Insurance Act. It is a position that, with respect to companies such as Excelsior Life Insurance Company, is identical with that of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon), a former minister of finance. Our position is on all fours with the announcement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) of this country on a nationwide television broadcast earlier in the year. I refer to the position with respect to Canadian ownership of Canadian industry.

We believe that if the Prime Minister of Canada is able to take to the air and the medium of television to enunciate clearly the position of the Liberal party, the Liberal government and himself on the question of foreign ownership, it behooves us in this parliament to give him every ounce of support that we can to attain his ends, because he is obviously having a great deal of trouble in the cabinet over his declarations.

Where there is a split in the cabinet over a matter of public policy, we want to be on the side of the people in healing that split. We believe we are on the side of the people in supporting the Prime Minister 150 per cent, if that is possible, in his attempts to get through to the reactionaries in his cabinet and party the necessity of Canada owning its own means of production and distribution, and particularly of Canada being able to own and control such financial institutions as insurance companies. This is the crux of the situation with respect to the bill before us.

We have great respect for Mr. Humphrys, but the fact that he and his department have passed favourably on the bill does not touch upon the larger question of public policy with which we are now concerned. It is confined to the interpretation and administration of the law in all its narrowness.

We know by the public declarations of the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council where they stand on this matter. We want to stand with them. We wish everybody in the house would stand with them so that the opinions of the Prime Minister of this country may become the law of Canada in a general way and apply to all these companies. It is true that the bill in respect of Excelsior Life Insurance Company was introduced during the preceding session. It was then called Bill No. S-26.

The house then took the position that the bill should be referred to a committee, and accordingly it referred the bill to the miscellaneous private bills committee. As I read the record, that was on Thursday, February 2, 1967. On February 14, 1967, the committee started consideration of the bill. The bill was referred to a committee in an attempt, as is always the case, to obtain an elucidation from the officials of the company in respect of its proposals, why it wants to do what it seeks to do, how it is going to conduct its affairs in the interests of Canada, and related questions.

There appeared before the committee officers of the company, Mr. Fraser M. Fell, Q.C., who was listed as the parliamentary agent, and Mr. M. Kenny, who was then and I presume still is, the president of Excelsior Life Insurance Company. These gentlemen together with Mr. Humphrys, the superintendent of insurance, and the sponsor of the bill, proceeded to give the committee certain evidence.

The sponsor of the bill is acting out of a sense of public duty as a sponsor. He has no intimate relationship with the company. I am sure he has no favouritism toward it, but is simply as a member of parliament attempting to the best of his ability to perform his duty and carry out his responsibility in piloting through the house a bill which for one reason or another he has been asked to sponsor.

I say this simply to indicate that I shall make no reference to the evidence given to the committee by the sponsor of the bill. The important information relating to the structure of this company was contained in evidence given by Mr. Humphrys, Mr. Fell and Mr. Kenny, the president of the company. I will start at the beginning because this is a rather long and involved story. The beginning of this story starts with Mr. Humphrys who was the first, shall we say, formal witness called before the committee. He outlined some of the history of the company, its powers, when it came into existence, and so on.

In order not to distort what Mr. Humphrys said, I should like to place on record his remarks which are to be found at page 50 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 4, of the miscellaneous private bills committee for February 14, 1967:

> The federal insurance acts could impose certain restrictions on it, in the sense that the company voluntarily agreed to comply with the federal law, but the federal parliament could not grant any powers to the company, since it drew its powers from the provincial legislature. It could operate within its provincial powers, really the narrower of its provincial powers, or the restrictions that might be imposed by the federal statute. But if the federal statute were changed to expand the powers of federal companies, this did not necessarily expand the powers of the Excelsior Life, because they still had to live within whatever powers it drew from the provincial legislation.

Then he goes on to say this:

Now, over the years this has created a certain number of difficulties for the company, and I might just illustrate a recent one.

As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I should underline the fact that Excelsior Life Insurance Company, as I recall it, is incorporated under a statute of Ontario. What this bill is seeking to do is really not to incorporate the company under the statutes of Canada but to continue it as a federal company as if it had been a federal company ever since its inception. This is a unique situation. Up until this time all insurance companies which have applied to this parliament in a similar set of circumstances for incorporation have applied to be incorporated as federal companies. But not so Excelsior Life Insurance Company; it wants the parliament of Canada to say that Excelsior Life Insurance Company shall be deemed always to have been a federal company since its inception.

As I say, the situation is unique; parliament is being asked to say by law something that is not so in fact. I believe that the incorporation should founder on that fact alone, notwithstanding that the highly respected Department of Insurance has indicated its support of that particular proposition.

This is simply an aside, Mr. Speaker, because Mr. Humphrys stated that the fact the company was incorporated in Ontario and could not operate fully under federal law had created certain difficulties over the years. This situation, undoubtedly prompted the company to become a federally incorporated company, and not because of any sense of duty or responsibility to the Canadian economy but because of its own particular sense of its role in society, which is to make a profit.

Mr. Humphrys went on to say this:

Incidentally, this was probably the year that Excelsior Life Insurance Company applied for this continuation as a federal company; the bill was referred to the committee on Thursday, February 2, 1967, and presumably the year before it had applied to the Senate. So not too long a period of time had passed after a certain action was taken, as appears from Mr. Humphry's remarks which I now wish to relate. He said:

In 1965, the federal insurance act was amended to permit companies to invest in mortgage loans up to 75 per cent of the value of the property.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, this is apropos the discussion during the question period today and also yesterday as to whether some of these insurance companies would put some of their savings into housing loans in Canada at a reasonable rate of interest so as to assist the housing market, instead of holding back their investments in order to keep the interest rate up.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Not savings, capital.

Mr. Howard: Well, they are really the savings of policyholders. An insurance company gets its wherewithal only by selling insurance policies to the people, many of which policies do not meet the glowing terms used by the company representatives. Nevertheless, it is public money with which the insurance companies are dealing.

If I may proceed with Mr. Humphry's evidence, he went on:

It was formerly two thirds; then it was raised to 75 per cent.

At one time insurance companies could invest in mortgage loans up to 66⅔ of the value of a property. In 1965 the federal act was changed, raising it to 75 per cent. Then Excelsior Life Insurance Company became interested in taking some of the gravy, I suppose, because Mr. Humphrys goes on to say:

So all the federal companies could take advantage of that right away, but the Excelsior Life could not, because the provincial legislation still restricted it to a limited two thirds of the value of the property. The company then had to wait until the provincial legislation was amended to give it the same powers. The company has, for many years, done a nation-wide business; it is one of the major companies and has been under federal supervision, but it has always been under this particular disability as far as granting additional powers and amendments to the federal legislation are concerned.

The implication of that statement, Mr. Speaker, might be that Excelsior Life Insurance Company wants to put the savings of its policyholders into mortgage loans, but I doubt that that is fully the case. If this bill ever gets to committee, I think we will be interested in following up this particular aspect to find out what the public policy of Excelsior Life Insurance Company is with regard to investment in mortgage loans. One of the reasons it has applied for what it calls a continuation as a federal company is that under federal legislation the field of mortgage loans is more lucrative to the company.

We will have an opportunity on another day to go into the foreign ownership aspects of this company, Mr. Speaker, but before we reach seven o'clock let me say that 70.9 per cent of the shares of this company are held in the United States. It is our hope that the example set by another company which desired to become Canadian owned and to extricate itself from foreign ownership within a certain period of time will be followed in this case; but I will leave that thought till another day. May I call it seven o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The hour allotted to private members' business has now expired. The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION COUNCIL

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS, ADVISORY BOARDS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-150, to establish a Canada manpower and immigration council—Mr. Marchand—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order; house again in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-150, to establish a Canada manpower and immigration council. It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 2—Definitions

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Council established

Mr. Starr: I wish to ask the minister a question and I apologize if he has already answered it. There is a provision here that the Canada manpower and immigration council shall consist of a chairman and 15 members to be appointed by the governor in council, and each of the chairmen of the advisory boards established under part II. Is it the intention of the minister to have representation from each province also on this board? How will such a provision be applied to the 15 members who are to be appointed?

Mr. Marchand: I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that we can have a representative from each province. The 15 members are on the council, and if the chairman and each member of that council were to represent a province that would mean that there would be no representatives from labour organizations, and none from employers' organizations. I think we must keep a certain flexibility in mind. The hon. member will understand that many associations and regions wish to be represented. We have made the terms general because I do not see how we can give everybody proper representation.

Mr. Starr: I understand that. Can the minister give us some idea of the type of representation he expects to have on this council? From what area is it to come?

Mr. Marchand: I think the labour movement should be represented; employers' organizations should be represented. Since the presidents of the boards will be members of this council there will be, to that extent probably, regional representation. Consumer organizations should be represented as well as organizations which usually represent vocational training advisory councils, for example.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9—Meetings

Mr. Starr: There is a provision in clause 9 for the members of this council to meet at least twice a year in Ottawa. If they wish to meet somewhere else they must get the approval of the minister or, should they find it necessary to meet more than twice a year again they must obtain the approval of the minister. Of course they may meet more than twice a year at the request of the minister.

Could the minister explain why he has not left this matter to the initiative of the board, rather than having it at the pleasure of the minister?

Mr. Marchand: One reason was underlined by a colleague of the hon. member this afternoon. There is a financial implication. This board has 15 members and if they decide to meet ten times in different places in Canada, that will be reflected in the estimates. We must keep some kind of control over this activity. I know that no minister will prevent such a board from meeting; unless he has a serious reason, he will not be able to resist for very long such a representative board.

But if, for no specific reason, they want to meet more than twice a year, or if for no specific reason they want to meet in Vancouver because it is winter, I think the minister should have the authority to say, "You are not going to do it."

Mr. Starr: Has the minister ascertained the cost of having the council meet at least twice a year in Ottawa or somewhere else? Has he determined, also, the cost involved with respect to the four advisory boards? Has he been able to ascertain the yearly cost of maintaining this council and the advisory boards?

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand: This is really an estimate we are making. Perhaps the council will meet twice a year, and the board four or five times. I do not know; I cannot say offhand. I will try to make a calculation and give a figure later on.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 10 and 11 agreed to.

On clause 12—Advisory boards established

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, we have suggested on several occasions, both in the course of our remarks at the resolution stage and during the debate this afternoon, that it might be advisable to provide for continuing consulations between the department or the council and provincial authorities.

As mentioned earlier, it would be advisable to maintain such a contact, since it is impossible to do so under the constitution of the council itself.

Would it not be appropriate, for instance, to allow for a provincial participation within the committees?

I believe the minister mentioned that he met with provincial ministers at a meeting held last summer. But is such a meeting, held only occasionally, as required, or before the bill is implemented, sufficient to clear up any difficulty experienced by the provinces in the matter of interpretation or co-operation?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the sector in which we may meet the most difficulties or problems with the provinces is that of the training of workers, that is in manpower as such.

As we know, the federal-provincial agreement provides, at the request of the provinces, for the creation of an advisory board to advise the two governments in matters pertaining to manpower needs, orientation of the courses, etc.

The province of Quebec has set up a board, as has also the province of Ontario. The other provinces, provided they so request it, may also set one up and we shall be pleased to co-operate. Let us say, therefore, that in the most controversial sectors, co-operation can be arrived at through the boards.

The Chairman: Does clause 12 carry?

[English]

Mr. Pugh: The first four paragraphs of subclause (1) have to do with advisory boards, and I have several questions to ask on this subject. Is each of these boards to be a separate entity, or, in other words, will there be an "intermix" of those who are appointed to serve on them, with the result that one man might be serving on two or three of these bodies?

Then again, subclause (2) reads:

> The minister may, from time to time, establish additional advisory boards as he deems appropriate to deal with any subject within his responsibilities as minister.

Has the minister any idea what further boards may be constituted?

I have a further question to ask with regard to the regional aspect of these proposals. Does the minister contemplate setting up regional boards, for, let us say, the prairies, the Pacific coast, central Canada and the Atlantic provinces? I am wondering why the bill should contain this "catch-all" in subclause (2).

Mr. Marchand: There is nothing in the law which prevents a member of one board being at the same time a member of another. As we know, this is not a full time job; the boards will meet only a few times a year, and service on one would not be incompatible with service on another. However, it should be remembered that these are specialized boards concerned with training, immigration and research. It is not our intention to set up other regional boards in addition to those mentioned. We shall have regional and local boards as provided for in another part of the bill. We shall come to that later.

As for the provision that the minister may set up special boards for special purposes, suppose, for example, we had serious problems in connection with one particular aspect of our program; we might find it necessary to set up a special board to give us advice. If automation were creating a lot of disturbance in the employment field we might feel it necessary to set up a special board to study the situation and advise us. This is what we have in mind.

Mr. Pugh: Has the minister considered the procedures by which qualified people are to be appointed to these boards. Has he sounded out possible members? Provision is made for four boards to be constituted right away, each with 11 members and a chairman, so there are a fair number of appointments to be made I presume, indeed I hope, that those concerned will be fairly busy people. It seems to me that the whole thing is likely to be top-heavy, a little unwieldy.

Mr. Marchand: As indicated in the bill, nominations will be made after consultation with the social and economic bodies which are concerned with these matters. Take rehabilitation, for instance. As hon. members know, there are many private associations in Canada which are concerned with this question and it would be senseless to constitute an advisory board upon which these people were not represented. This is the way in which we shall proceed in all cases, because there are many private associations of all kinds in Canada. Usually the most representative association will be the one chosen to recommend persons to be nominated by the minister.

Mr. Johnston: Is there any particular definition of "adult" as it appears in 12 (1)(a)? Would this board serve as a co-ordinating body between provincial occupational training which would be under the regular school system and the federal adult training program? If you read clause 20 and clause 12 together it seems as though this scheme would be quite independent from the provincial educational programs.

Mr. Marchand: The definition of adult education is the one contained in the training measure adopted by the house. I think the line is drawn there as precisely as it can be drawn.

I do not not know if the hon. member heard what I said in French in answer to a question. We have agreement with the provinces on consultative boards concerning training and adult education. Two such boards are already constituted in Quebec and Ontario in order that we may more closely follow what is happening in the labour market and thereby know the kind of courses that should be taught. Any province which feels the need for contact with the federal government can ask us to set up such a board, and we will agree to it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 13 to 19 inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 20—Advisory Board on Adult Occupational Training.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak very briefly on this bill. I must say that I do not take quite as dim a view of this legislation as do some of my colleagues. I support the principle and purpose of the bill because for years members of this group have advocated this type of legislation with respect to vocational training and immigration. The record will prove that.

I also support the bill because I have great confidence in and respect for the minister who will administer the legislation. It is entirely experimental legislation. The minister has said that no doubt defects will be found in the bill. I am sure that as a result of experience amendments will be made to this legislation.

For many years I have supported the ideas which are covered in this legislation, and I have no doubt it will be improved in the future. We must remember that throughout the years all parties in this house have drafted various proposals for the building of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth, proposals which, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs might say, have had to be revised in the light of all the circumstances. I am certain this bill lays a foundation upon which, as the result of experience, very sound legislation will be erected, legislation in which the public will have an interest because of their own participation.

I am particularly keen on the local advisory committees composed of people close to all the circumstances. Some of the biggest difficulties with legislation have resulted from centralized administration by people who did not understand local circumstances. I have always been an advocate of participation by local people in any legislation of this type. Therefore, I am pleased with this provision in the bill, and I must say I am also pleased with the attitude of the employees of the minister's department who are in my own constituency. They have done quite a lot of voluntary work in connection with training of the disabled and in connection with meeting certain unusual circumstances. I wish the minister every success in everything he undertakes to make this legislation succeed in the years ahead.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I shall also be very brief. I would not like to let this very important bill, which I support wholeheartedly, go through without making a brief comment to the minister, apart from congratulating him on introducing it. As the last speaker said, we all realize that it may not be perfect, and that it is in the nature of an experiment.

I am particularly interested in the proposed advisory board on the co-ordination of rehabilitation services for disabled persons. Although the appointees to such a board will serve without remuneration except for compensation of their reasonable expenses, I hope the minister will make sure that among the appointees will be persons who themselves suffer some disablement. I believe that only a person who is disabled sees all the problems of the disabled in the their true light, and I would not like the advisory board to be without the benefit of such advice.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, the word "adult" appears in clause 20 again, and another question arises out of the minister's answer to the question that I asked him on clause 12. When the retraining bill referred to was before the house, considerable anxiety was expressed about the age limitations connected with the word "adult." From consultation with high school councillors I have found them very concerned about occasions when they have been unable to place drop-out students in adult training courses because of the restrictions in the act. Has this problem been brought to the minister's attention with any frequency, and is it something the advisory board on adult occupational training would consider?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, this matter was debated at length in the house when the retraining act was before it. It was also discussed with the provinces, and I think we know now what is meant by the word "adult" in this bill. It means somebody who has left school for at least a year and who has been connected with the labour market during a period of three years. If we can help a school drop-out who has been out of school for a year, but who has not been attached to the labour force for three years, we will do so by paying only for the training course. He will not be given the other allowances. I think Hansard has recorded all the answers already because this point has been thoroughly discussed, and it is one that has been accepted by the provinces.

Those who do not fall within the definition are the responsibility of the provinces. This does not mean that those young people are not taken care of now. They are taken care of, or are supposed to be taken care of by the provinces, but not by the federal government.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order, although in effect it is more a point of information. When the minister justifies the lack of definition of "adult" in this bill, by suggesting it has already been dealt with in a bill previously passed by the house, I for one find this insufficient. I am sure there are many bills on the statute books which have their own definitions of what may or may not be an adult. I do not see anything in this bill which says we should be guided in that respect by reference to the previous bill. I am not an expert on all the legislation on the statute books, and so would ask for the guidance of hon. members who are experts. I believe we are deluding ourselves by accepting a definition which is not implicit in the bill before us.

Mr. Marchand: As the hon. member knows, I am not a lawyer, and I do not intend to become one.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): We are together on that.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand: I might be inclined to believe that the hon. member is probably right and that the utilization of the word "adult" here will not have the same consequences as the definition of adult in the training act, which provides for payment of allowances. However, I do not think the boards will be so concerned about the definition of adult, because they will give only advice to the minister. Therefore, personally, I am ready to concede that even if we receive a recommendation in respect of a group which is not covered under the strict definition in the retraining act I do not think it will matter much.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 21—Regional and local manpower committees.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether there is a conflict in this clause with clause 11 which gives the council certain very definite duties such as advising the minister, and so on. Clause 21 provides that the minister may establish such regional and local manpower committees as he considers necessary for the purpose of advising and assisting the department. Where is the tie-in between the regional and local manpower committees and the council itself? Because of the wording in clause 21, it seems to me that these various regional boards will report to the department or the minister. This would appear to be an assumption of the powers of the council. Could the minister explain this?

Mr. Marchand: It is clear, at least in my mind, that these local and regional committees will have to work with the local manpower centres. If they wish to make a recommendation concerning the policy of the department, they will have to make their recommendation to the council. The council will study the recommendation and advise the minister accordingly.

Mr. Pugh: Would it not be better then, in clause 21, to say that they should report to the council or to the department? The bill states they will report to the department on such things as they are required to report on.

Mr. Marchand: I think what I have attempted to say is that they will work differently. I think the local centres will be represented on the committee by advisors or representatives. So, locally they agree to work together. If they wish to make a recommendation which concerns, for example, rehabilitation, this recommendation will have to go through the special board which is concerned with rehabilitation. After that it will go to the council and then to the minister. So, the whole structure will be fully used.

Mr. Pugh: What the minister has just said makes sense, but I think it will be unworkable because the first paragraph of clause 21 says they will report to the department which would suggest that they report to the department alone.

Mr. Marchand: Of course, it depends on what we call the department. There is the branch which is called the local manpower centre which is integrated in the department. There is no doubt that there are many problems which have to be solved locally. They do not have to be solved here in Ottawa. They can be solved between the committee and the local manpower centre. They work together with the department. If the recommendation is of a general nature I think it will be handled locally.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I regard this particular clause 21 as almost the most important part of this bill because it brings us back to facing the reality, I hope, of the concern I expressed in my few comments yesterday. Before making a couple of specific remarks about this clause, I should like to say that I think both the minister and the department have moved in the right direction. They may have struck a few rocky shoals in their first few months of operation and they may have encountered a few frustrations, but I trust these will be worked out in good faith as the months go by and that more effective work will be achieved by his department.

One of the increasing fears which all of us have, because it has been a reality in some instances, is the tremendous power of bureaucracy and often the loss of reality as a result of the mass of monolithic institutions of government or big business. In this case we are dealing with government. I am not quite as concerned as my colleague the hon. member for Okanagan Revelstoke with the problems which may relate to the passing on of advice to the minister or his officials in Ottawa. I think our major responsibility will have to be in dealing with the local situation and ensuring that good advice and assistance be given to the local regions and in general.

There are, however, difficulties associated with these things. I think we may be coming back to this problem in the future when we deal with the minister's estimates and other matters. I hope, in the context of this particular clause, that the minister will assure us there will be a provision for close liaison with the provincial governments. There have been a number of examples of inadequate liaison or poor communication. I think we should overcome this. It would seem to me that in this clause of the bill it would be natural to have a provision that key people in the provincial government administration be linked up with the manpower officials so that there can be an effective co-ordination of responsibility to ensure that we will not remove the benefit of the good experience which has already resulted from the work and good judgment of these officials.

I do not wish to sound petty or hypocritical, but the other thing which concerns me is the fear that when we set up something like this it will become a haven for tried and true political friends. I expect it is quite natural for any government to be anxious to reward those who have served the party in good faith or to choose people simply because they are well known to a select few. In the matter of the local committee particularly, I hope the minister and his officials would make sure that people who have had intimate experience with this kind of activity would be chosen from the communities. I know we have had officials with a good deal of experience in problems of chronic unemployment and the upgrading of educational opportunities and so on, but very often people who have something very valuable to contribute are passed over perhaps because they are non-partisan or because there are other people who feel they have a right to be rewarded in this way.

I plead that we not use this particular agency as a means of rewarding people for good political service. We should endeavour to obtain people who will provide the most effective contribution possible so that the whole program will go forward. If we make this clear now, then I think in the future there will be a realization that regardless of the party in power we should have people who have the most to contribute.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I wish to reassure my friend that I do not believe the situation which worrys him is going to arise. If we want to set up special committees it is important that we do not work along political lines. This would not be possible; it would not work. I do not believe this has been done either under the Conservative government or the Liberal government. If representatives are required on a national level it is necessary to confer with the labour movement, the employers' association, the consumers association and so on. The only way to do it is to ask these associations to recommend somebody. It would not be right for me to say that a certain person is to represent the Canadian Labour Congress, for example. I do not think the government of Canada could do this and I am sure if it were done the C.L.C. would complain about it. There is only one place where there could be political influence; that is in the nomination of the presidents.

There could be some influence there because the president is nominated by the government, not necessarily following the recommendation of the private organization. I do not think you should be afraid of these boards becoming political instruments because of this set-up. This has not been true in respect of other governments and it could not now be true for the reasons I have given you.

I was president of the C.N.T.U. for a while and I would have liked to see the government try to designate a man to represent the C.N.T.U. without consulting us. That would not be possible. This might have been attempted, but I am sure the appointed individual would not have been successful. This man would be denounced just as one individual who was appointed to the unemployment advisory committee was denounced. I remember this very well. There was a protest and the situation was corrected. This does not really seem to me to be a serious problem. If there is a problem, surely it is not in respect of this part of the bill.

As far as co-operation with the provinces is concerned, I think you are right. We should seek whatever co-operation we can get. The difficulty is that one cannot force co-operation on someone else. Both parties have to be in agreement. As far as we are concerned, not only are we going to ask for co-operation, we hope to receive it. These programs cannot work without co-operation on the part of those who are interested and involved in these programs. However, one cannot force co-operation. I am reminded of the words of Voltaire. He wanted to build a society in which everyone was free. Someone asked him what would happen if someone decided he did not want to be free. Voltaire replied that he would be compelled to be free. Certainly, we hope for co-operation but we must rely to some extent on the provinces themselves.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should then like to ask the minister what criteria he intends to use in the selection of the chairmen of the various commissions.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, what criteria? We will appoint the most competent men we can find.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 22 agreed to.

On clause 23—Appropriations

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, clause 23 reads as follows:

> The minister shall make available to the council or a board, or any regional or local manpower committee such information within his possession or otherwise available to him as the council, board or committee reasonably requires for the proper discharge of its functions.

I quite agree with the terms of that clause, but because this is experimental legislation which has the support of everyone in the house, at least in principle, and because there will have to be amendments made from time to time as experience is gained, I would ask the minister to report to the house fairly regularly on the operations of this legislation in the various regions of Canada in order that members can perform their functions equally as well as the council and the board or committee.

Mr. Marchand: If I am still here when the estimates of my department come before the house, I will be pleased to make a full report each year of the activities of these boards when we are considering the expenditures in relation to the advisory boards.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that we had adopted section 22. If such is the case, I should like to ask the minister to enlighten us on that part where the minister is authorized to provide technical assistance from outside the public service. The minister might tell us what he intends to do in this regard. Is he making reservations which would come under the minister himself in regard, for instance, to the hiring of casual employees to help the civil servants?

Mr. Marchand: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, what is the clause referred to by the hon. member?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, it is clause 22, because I thought that we had not passed clause 22, page 7, where it is said:

> The minister may provide the Council, or any board established under this act, or any regional or local manpower committee, with such professional, technical, secretarial and other assistance as they may require, but the provision of such assistance otherwise than from the public service of Canada is subject to approval by the Treasury Board.

Well then, what has the minister in mind by this rather different procedure?

Mr. Marchand: This, Mr. Chairman, is what we have in mind. If at a given time, the council, one of the committees or one of the boards experience special problems which require some research, or let us suppose that at a given time, there is a problem involving older or disabled workers about which the department has no information and which requires special research, then, we may make available to the council the person it wants to hire, but only with the approval of the treasury board. This is therefore to provide assistance when our departmental staff is unable to do so.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to press the minister on this point, but I want especially to call his attention to the term secretariat. The secretariat is certainly not a technical, professional or informative assistance about certain criteria, certain qualifications of the case to be settled. The secretariat involves a staff able to assist the minister in the performance of duties for which civil servants are responsible, under the bill itself.

There seems to be a conflict of authority or jurisdiction here.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is any conflict. Here is a board, or several boards that will be operating throughout the year, including the main board of which the chairman will not necessarily be employed full time but who may have to come to Ottawa quite often. We may have to hire a part-time secretary, because we may not be prepared to let one of our own go and he might not be willing to wait for a secretary to be free and so a board or a committee might at a given moment sit outside Ottawa, in accordance with the powers provided; it might be more useful to hire a secretary in Quebec, for instance, if the board is sitting in Quebec. This is to give us sufficient power to do this kind of thing.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): I should like to know from the minister whether, after the establishment of these advisory boards, rules will be adopted by the cabinet to allot responsibilities to these advisory boards. What rules are to be adopted by the cabinet in regard to these various committees?

Mr. Marchand: I may say that when the committees are set up, they will receive terms of reference according to the act and, obviously, the department will have the responsibility of submitting such terms of reference.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask another question. Will these advisory committees have to travel across the province in order to obtain information and report to the minister, or will we have a permanent office here in Ottawa?

Mr. Marchand: As the hon. member for Charlevoix knows, the act provides for the creation of several committees. There is a grand council which will have its office in Ottawa. There are specialized boards which will also have their offices in Ottawa, and then there are all the regional offices, the regional and local committees which, of course, will not be located in Ottawa. Their offices will be in the region to which they are assigned. The headquarters of the grand council and those of the boards will be in Ottawa. The members of the council and those of the commissions will be able to travel according to their needs but, as I told the Leader of the Opposition earlier, only with the proper authorization. Naturally, you cannot allow 25 or 30 committees to travel all over Canada without authorization.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I understand and I would accept the explanations given by the minister if he would lay down that condition for the council itself. But, I am somewhat concerned especially when I refer to the provision in the bill whereby the minister may provide not only the council but any board or any regional or local manpower committee established, with professional or other assistance. There I can see the danger of a multiplication of assistants in the public service, because the minister requests the authority to extend those technical advisers, that professional or secretarial assistance, even at the local and regional level, and if the minister would give us the assurance that the expenditure incurred for such professional or technical assistance would not be unreasonable, I might be prepared to accept his explanations, but I see that once again we might have to ramify, extend and project secretariats and agencies which would be a duplication of the work already done and of the responsibilties already assumed by civil servants. If the minister agreed to provide the secretariat's technical and social assistance to the council itself, I would agree, but when he tells us that this situation can occur in all the local committees, at all levels, I feel that the government might incur expenditures which will further increase the present deficit.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, obviously, when the terms are rather general, any conclusion can be arrived at, including the one my hon. friend has just drawn. However, there are several barriers, of which the first is the estimates of the department. You will note that $120,000 are provided for in the budget for the advisory boards, which include all per diems to be paid, all allowances, all travelling expenses, including secretarial expenses. If ever we go beyond that—at the present time there is only an overall limit—but the treasury board has also set a limit —we can then come back to the house for supplementary estimates. If perchance there should be the abuse the member fears, you will be aware of it and, hackles up, will be ready to criticize us, and rightly so.

Then, in any case, we agree: the idea is to have the authority at any time, whenever a regional committee holds an important meeting, and no secretarial staff is locally available, to hire such staff on a temporary basis to help the committee operate effectively.

Now, I think the house is pretty well able to act at all levels, and if it should happen that abuses are committed, you would spot them so fast that you would have time to correct them before they led to disaster.

Mr. Valade: I apologize if I press the matter, Mr. Chairman and I recognize the merits of the minister's argument. However, the minister did not tell us how the staff for this additional secretariat will be recruited at the local level, not under the national council, but at the local and regional levels.

If the minister reserves himself the authority to appoint the additional staff along with the employees of the public service, and if these appointments come under his direct authority, for this is the essence of this clause, I wonder how the minister can allay the suspicions of political patronage.

Mr. Marchand: I am grateful to the hon. member for wanting to protect me, but I feel that you should give me credit at least for common sense if not for good faith. If a council in Vancouver must hire a stenographer for three days, I will not step in to find out who he or she is and where they got him or her, so long as I am given proof that such a step is necessary.

You might say: Is it not possible that at some time abuses might occur? Might they not choose the wrong secretary? It is quite possible, I cannot give you any guarantee, that is to say I cannot put in the legislation anything that will put your mind at rest because you seem to fear a lot of things, but nothing much can happen.

Moreover, control is automatic. There are in these committees people from every association, responsible people; I think that even though we would like to do certain things allowed by the legislation, our people would not agree.

Therefore, I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that this clause should keep one from sleeping soundly.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact the purpose is not to protect the minister himself, but to establish a principle, so that the legislation would not give way to any favouritism, not that the minister could give instructions to that effect, but the door is still open because of this section.

And I wonder why the minister did not take any other steps so that the council itself would approve or recommend the hiring of such staff, subject to his approval; that would prevent the minister from making the choice, because he would be open to this kind of criticism in the future. We know by experience that there was a certain nonchalance inside the Post Office Department in this respect. We would like to protect the minister against such experience.

Mr. Marchand: Well, that is very kind of you sir, I will try to avoid taking any unnecessary risk in regard to this clause and protect myself.

Clause 24 agreed to.

On clause 25—

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I have just a short question. A question arises in my mind in connection with the repealing of these sections of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act. I am going back to clause 20. I wonder whether the new advisory board will now, on the co-ordination of rehabilitation services for disabled persons, carry some responsibility for retarded children and adults' work, which in this whole process has been moved around a bit. I wonder whether this board will be advising the minister on the advancing work that goes on in the whole field of retarded persons.

Mr. Marchand: I think they will have the same jurisdiction as before. It is the same group of people we want to cover under the new set-up. I do not understand the purpose of the hon. member's question. Is he afraid that there will be a limitation which does not exist under the present law?

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I am asking this question for information and to find out whether the new advisory board will indeed be responsible for retarded persons' work.

Mr. Marchand: They can make recommendations for all groups of persons which fall under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): There is some confusion here, Mr. Chairman. Maybe this is not the time and place to clarify it, but there is some confusion whether responsibility for the rehabilitation for retarded persons falls within the realm of the manpower department or the department of health. I see that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is sitting behind the minister. Perhaps there is time for an instant conference on this question. I think it is something that needs to be clarified because there is confusion abroad as to where responsibility is exercised in these matters.

Mr. Marchand: There is no doubt that we in the Department of Manpower and Immigration have a responsibility concerning retarded children. I gave an address in Quebec a few days ago and mentioned what we were doing for retarded children. But of course, this is related to the employment of retarded children. The health aspect of retarded children falls under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): The minister is saying that where it is related to a matter of employment it will come under his jurisdiction, and hence under this new advisory board under the act that we are considering; is that correct?

Mr. Marchand: That is right.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment that a new clause be added, namely, clause 26. I send it to the table and I shall read the same. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes, that Bill No. C-150 be amended by adding thereto the following:

Clause 26 (1) The chairman of the council shall, within three months after the termination of each fiscal year, transmit to the minister a statement relating to the activities of the council for that fiscal year, including the financial statements of the council and the Auditor General's report thereon, and the minister shall cause such statement to be laid before parliament within 15 days after the receipt thereof or, if parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first 15 days next thereafter that parliament is sitting.

(2) The council may prepare and cause to be published a review of medium and long term manpower and immigration prospects and problems.

(3) The council may cause to be published such studies and reports prepared for the use of the council as it sees fit.

Manpower and Immigration Council

I will speak very briefly to the motion if I may, Mr. Chairman. I think it is essential in our parliamentary process that in setting up creations such as that which is set up by this bill there be some connection between the parliament of Canada and the particular bodies that have been established. I have made that point before.

Second, Mr. Chairman, I think the minister need not fear this process because the action of these boards will help him to educate the public to our manpower and technological needs. It should not inhibit the members of the council, because even though there may be disagreements among the members themselves, what they present to the public is surely the consensus of their views.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment which, from every aspect, seems very reasonable and designed to protect the rights of parliament and democracy.

Prior to adopting such a resolution, I believe that we must try to see what effects will follow the proposed procedure.

First of all, there is that whole part of the report of the chairman of the council concerning finance; there is indeed much exaggeration. There is exaggeration because this report must be delivered by the minister here in the house. When the item of the estimates relating to the advisory boards is considered, the members will be able to get all information they wish, that is, for instance, how much someone has received as fees on travel expenses, the whole having been checked by the auditor general, according to the regular procedure of the house. Then, questions may be asked in the house and the minister will report. The chairman of the council, who is not a fulltime civil servant, will have to ask our department what expenses have been made, that is to say he will have to ask the department, in fact, to make his report to the House of Commons; this means that we keep control—for the boards are dependent upon the department, in short; they are integrated within the very structure of the department. So, I cannot see the necessity for this outside control since such control may be maintained from within.

In fact, we are trying now to subject the proposed council to the same requirements almost, as we have for the Economic Council of Canada, which is an independent body with power to spend money, which has its own budget and is not dependent on any department. In that case, I well understand that a report may be required similar to the one this amendment seems to require from the chairman of the council.

All this part seems to guarantee the rights of supervision of the House of Commons but in fact it guarantees nothing at all and simply weighs down the legislation through a repetition or, if you prefer, it is an embarrassment through a duplicate procedure, since the same ends can be achieved by other means.

Now, this is a minor issue as far as I am concerned, but there is a major point, and I would like to deal with it for a few moments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[English]

Mr. Marchand: I think it is a very important point, Mr. Chairman, and I should like to be heard in the house on this.

Mr. Nielsen: Take half an hour.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: These boards, as we know, are advisory bodies and they are also representative bodies, for people are sent by their association to take part in a certain way in the implementation of the legislation, as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) said very well, or endeavoured to say, this morning.

Since I have myself been a member of those boards—I was appointed when the official opposition was in power—I worked with them and I can say that the atmosphere is not one of conflict or competition between management and the employees as that which pervades other organizations; each member is really making an effort to make sure that the legislation is implemented fully.

But as soon as those persons—especially the representatives of labour movements or of employers' or other associations—will become aware that their activities could be reported to the House of Commons, then the position and the character of the councils are changed, in that those people will feel compelled to take positions consistent with the requirements or the wishes of their own association.

[English]

Mr. Ricard: There are not now.

Mr. Marchand: What I am saying is very important, Mr. Chairman, and has nothing to do with what is going on behind me.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, since I have convinced the opposition, I shall say no more. But I feel it would be extremely serious to accept such an amendment, because, for one thing, it is partly useless and secondly, which is serious, it destroys the very nature of advisory councils. I therefore think that the committee should reject the amendment.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. How different is this procedure in respect of the council from the procedure under the unemployment insurance advisory board legislation?

Mr. Marchand: I think that the advisory board makes recommendations mainly on financial matters.

Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Marchand: It can go further than that, but usually they only make recommendations when there is a consensus. The labour organizations are directly represented on the board, and that board is much more balanced than this type of board. It is the duty of this advisory board to advise the minister and even the House of Commons, and in that case I think the procedure is normal.

There are also financial considerations. If, for example, the level of benefits is raised, that is an important matter for the house. The other board does not have such financial responsibility, and that is why the procedure is different.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: They do not raise the level of benefits.

Mr. Marchand: No, no; but they can recommend it to the house—

Mr. Starr: Can these people recommend benefits?

Mr. Marchand: Through the minister, to the house.

Mr. Starr: Can this board recommend certain aspects?

Mr. Marchand: I think it could. I think that these advisory boards are very well integrated into the structure of the department and to accept this amendment would be to destroy the value of these boards. I will tell my hon. friend something that is very simple. Supposing that tomorrow I nominated a chairman, or supposing that this government nominates a chairman—

An hon. Member: Why not nominate the hon. member for Timiskaming?

Mr. Marchand: —and then, suppose that another party is in power here; this chairman may decide to embarrass the government with this council. That is not the purpose here. This body is to help the minister, not to fight him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Marchand: Yes. That is the purpose. The purpose of this body is to help the minister so that the law is properly applied. That is why I believe this amendment to be bad. It will not do anything. If it does something, it will be to the detriment of the good administration of the law.

Mr. Benson: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. McCleave) negatived: yeas, 41; nays, 70.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Starr: At the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, may we have the unanimous consent of the house to proceed with third reading?

Mr. Monteith: No, let us stick to the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unanimous consent of the house is required for third reading at this time. Does the house give that unanimous consent?

Mr. Starr: At the next sitting of the house.

C.N.R. Financing and Guarantee Bill

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. E. J. Benson (for Mr. Sharp) moved the second reading of Bill C-151, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1967 to the 30th day of June, 1968 and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary, on the introduction of this bill, explained its purpose. It was in the usual form for the annual C.N.R. financing. During the resolution stage, however, several questions were raised which I propose to deal with now. This would facilitate the movement of the bill through the committee of the whole, clause by clause.

Several points were raised by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), the first of which was that the Canadian National and Air Canada should make public their balance sheets. I wish to indicate that the Canadian National and Air Canada do publish their balance sheets. These may be found in the separate annual reports which are published by each company and subsequently tabled in this house.

The second point was that there should be a separate bookkeeping system for Air Canada to provide a truer up to date picture than is now available, so that Air Canada might be compared with Canadian Pacific Airlines.

My comment in this regard is that Air Canada maintains a separate bookkeeping system and, as mentioned previously, publishes its own annual report. Its financial statements are audited by a recognized firm of chartered accountants. The certificate of this firm accompanies the published statements and indicates that they are in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. Any loans payable to the C.N.R. are clearly set out as a special item on the air line's balance sheet. Comparison of Air Canada's financial position and operating results with those of other Canadian air carriers, including Canadian Pacific Airlines, may be found in considerable detail in publications issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I shall be pleased to provide these to my hon. friend.

[Mr. Starr.]

The third point the hon. member raised was that Air Canada's net debt fund ratio is not correctly shown in available figures.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Air Canada's debt-equity ratio may be readily established from the published balance sheet and compared with those of other air lines. I would be pleased to provide a comparison if the hon. member wishes to make one. The fourth point was that the profit and loss situation of Air Canada is not really known. However, it is indicated in the statement of income included in the annual report and again, in considerable detail, in statistics published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) complained that parliamentary authority is being sought now for C.N.R. expenditures which have, in fact, already been made. I should like to point out that as laid down in the Canadian National Railways Act the annual capital budget is approved by the governor in council upon the recommendation of the minister of transport and the minister of finance; subsequently it is laid before parliament. As a general rule, parliament refers the budget, along with the company's annual report, to the committee on transport and communications. While strictly speaking, the authority for making the capital expenditures indicated in the budget is granted by the governor in council and does not require further parliamentary approval, the budget is set out in the annual financing and guarantee act for parliamentary approval as the relevant basis for the financing and guarantee authorities, which parliament is being asked to provide through a bill such as this.

Another point made by the hon. member for Calgary North was that the C.N.R. should follow the practice of government departments in accordance with which expenditures must be approved through estimates. The annual financing and guarantee act contains several technical sections relating to guarantees, borrowing powers and so on, which are legislative in nature and do not lend themselves readily to inclusion in estimates. Other provisions could of course be included in estimates. The estimates for this year already contain provision for C.N.R.'s 1967 deficit of $15 million. A separate bill has the merit, however, of having all the financing and guarantee provisions together and avoids any charge of using the estimates for legislative purposes. Hon. members on the other side know the difficulty I have had in the past two years with regard to items in the estimates which are legislative in nature while those estimates were being considered in committee of the whole.

I believe those were the main points raised by hon. members opposite and I am putting forward these explanations now in order to facilitate the passage of the bill.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In an effort to be helpful we have checked over here and we find there is some agreement—I am certainly not speaking for everybody—that this is a routine measure and that there is little change, if any, from what has been done in other years. It has been customary to allow second reading without extended debate.

I wish to say quickly, though, that there are some on this side who are experiencing problems which they might have raised on this occasion, but they are willing to wait for the debate on the budget or some other occasion before doing so. As I said yesterday, we are not happy with the changes in the ministry. But I will leave it at that for the moment.

If the minister would look up the proceedings, he would find there was some agreement that Air Canada should be given a fully separate status, independent of the C.N.R. I know there have been full bookkeeping disclosures and proper balance sheets issued. What appeared in Hansard was misunderstood. I am merely of the opinion that in these days when the company is dealing in hundreds of millions of dollars and is in direct competition with C.P.A., it should produce a full balance sheet comparable in every respect to that of the C.P.A. That was my point.

I might add that provided no other questions arise I am willing to agree to second reading of this bill, and I say this as an indication of our co-operation.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I raised my objections last night to the present method of providing legislative approval for expenditures which are, in effect, government expenditures, because in my opinion it is a wrong approach. Nothing the minister has said this evening has changed my views in that regard.

I have brought this matter up in previous years; I did not raise it yesterday for the first time. I had hoped that this method of financing the C.N.R. and Air Canada would have been changed by now so as to bring it into line with the normal method of government financing. In every other case where government expenditures are made an estimate is put before the House of Commons and authority for the expenditure is sought. After all, the primary job of the House of Commons is to grant money to Her Majesty for public purposes. But here is a case in which the House of Commons is being asked to grant money to Her Majesty for public purposes after it has been spent. The government comes to the House of Commons and says: Air Canada has spent so much—in this case, $264,800,000—for capital purposes and we want you to give authority for having spent the money.

This is wrong in principle. I do not say there is anything wrong as far as the expenditures themselves are concerned, but I think it is wrong that this anomaly should continue. The minister told us it would be difficult to bring in estimates applicable to these expenditures. But the bulk of these expenditures has been made for capital purposes and in acquiring investments in affiliated companies. A list appears on page 2 of the bill—road property, $79 million; branch lines, $13 million; equipment, $85 million; telecommunications, $14 million; hotels, $4 million; Air Canada, $67 million. Surely, there would be no difficulty about producing an estimate of what was required for hotels, branch lines equipment, and so on and bringing it before parliament in the same way as any other government expenditure is brought before parliament with a request for authority to spend money up to the sum provided. I suggest strongly to the minister that this should be the last year in which things are done as they are being done today. In future we should be presented with the estimate of the C.N.R. and Air Canada in the same way as the estimates of other departments and branches are presented, and parliamentary approval secured before the expenditure has been made.

This is the only way in which parliament can exercise control over the expenditures of government branches, that is to say by limiting the amount which can be spent for specific purposes. This is what parliamentary control of the purse means. If there is no such control over these crown corporations then, in essence, there is no control over their expenditures.

Mr. Norman Fawcett (Nickel Belt): I do not intend to take up much time but as a former employee of the C.N.R. and as one who still holds seniority in train service I think I should not neglect this opportunity to say a few words. Moreover, as a former representative of one of the unions which represent railway employees, there is a particular point I should deal with.

First, I might say I am in no way opposed to this bill. I realize it is more or less a matter of form, something which must be dealt with if the C.N.R. is to continue in operation.

I am sure the top officers of the C.N.R. deserve commendation for the realistic view they have taken of their obligations in many respects. I refer particularly to passenger services, a type of transportation which it seems the other line has decided to abandon altogether. I will not develop this point extensively except to say that the C.N.R. has shown a greater realism in its approach to its responsibilities, something which has resulted in a much better employee-employer relations attitude.

The matter with which I wish to deal was touched on by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), last night. It is the inadequate pensions received by many former C.N.R. employees. One has to understand the C.N.R. pension system to realize the awkward position in which some of these people have been placed. As my colleague said, if parliament is to be asked to assume responsibility for making funds available for C.N.R. operations, then we should insist that something be done for some of its retired employees.

In practically every locality there is the case of C.N.R. pensioners living side by side, both having given the company 45 years service, but the one who was pensioned off six seven, eight or ten years ago is getting a very inadequate pension, while the other gets an adequate pension. Something must be done about this. We must insist that something be done to help such pensioners, mainly those who have been on pension for seven or eight years.

I hope the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) will insist that the C.N.R. accept proper responsibility for these people. I have received letters by the dozen from them. Many of them belong to retired people's organizations. Sometimes they send petitions; sometimes they send individual letters. They feel they are not getting a square deal. They did not have the same opportunity to contribute to pension funds as employees pensioned off more recently. They have been just as dedicated in their service, have worked just as hard, have served as many years as more recent pensioners, yet all they get is a subsistence pension.

[Mr. Fawcett.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Capital expenditures authorized for 1967.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, this clause deals with the question of capital expense. It reads as follows:

> The National System is authorized,
> (a) to make capital expenditures not exceeding in the aggregate $264,800,000 in the calendar year 1967 in the following estimated amounts for the purposes of capital investment:
> Estimated requirements in the calendar year 1967:

Road property	$79,701,000
Branch lines	13,125,000
Equipment	85,304,000
Telecommunications	14,595,000
Hotels	4,875,000
Investment in affiliated companies:
Air Canada	67,000,000
Other	200,000
	$264,800,000

My point in rising is to mention the fact that throughout the years the leader of our group and other prominent members of it have urged that social capital be provided by the Bank of Canada, and we cannot understand why we have to go through this procedure.

Mr. Byrne: That is the Social Credit theory.

Mr. Herridge: Well, you have got one of your members who will support me on this proposal, the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I hope to get support from him because he knows I am on sound ground. Social capital required by the federal, municipal and provincial governments should be provided by the Bank of Canada in the form of loans on the basis of securities offered by the federal government, at an interest rate which will provide for the servicing of the loans, instead of this country having to import $1,000 million, as it did last year, of United States funds to provide capital investment for provincial and municipal governments. I see the minister looking at me, but I believe I am pretty close to the figure that was involved.

What I want to know is why we should finance our social capital through this type of bill? Why can't the Bank of Canada provide this capital, accepting securities from the federal government for the investments involved? I would like the minister to explain why this cannot be done. It is a policy we have advocated throughout the years. Only recently I read a letter from our leader to the Social Credit League in British Columbia endorsing this policy.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the biggest holder of government of Canada bonds is the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada takes up a substantial amount of any new issue of the government of Canada. At the moment it is the biggest holder in the country of government of Canada bonds, which are used for financing social capital, as the hon. member call this particular expenditure.

In the case of the C.N.R., the financing can be done in either one of two ways. The government can borrow the money directly from sources including the Bank of Canada, which would take up a big part of the loan, with the chartered banks taking up a substantial part also, and then advance the money to the C.N.R. Alternatively, the C.N.R. may borrow directly with a government guarantee but it would have to pay a higher interest rate if it did. It can be done in either manner.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add my support to the plea that we extend the policy of the Bank of Canada in this regard, because we know that the interest that is paid by the government of Canada on bonds that are held by the Bank of Canada is returned to the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Benson: If it makes a profit.

Mr. Leboe: You got the message all right. I should like to make the plea that there be a continual increase in this policy so that eventually the Bank of Canada will hold a great deal more of the national debt than it does at the present time. I should like to commend the government for increasing it a couple of per cent in the last few years, but I would like to see it increased even more.

I should like to support the hon. member for Kootenay West in his plea that the Bank of Canada become more of a functional bank rather than something which is there to buy and sell bonds simply for the sake of regulating the money supply without any regard to the interest charges we are paying to capital investors from outside to do the job we are trying to do in Canada.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make one further comment. I was very pleased that the minister admitted the Bank of Canada can provide funds for investment in social capital and is doing so at the present time. All I urge is that this policy, which originally was a policy devised by the C.C.F., be extended so that finally we can get all our social capital provided and will not have to go to other countries to obtain loans and send interest there to meet the obligation.

Mr. Fulton: There is the greatest proponent of the application of the idea of social capital I have ever seen.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I heard, indeed with pleasure, the participation of the member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) to the debate. I am pleased that he has asked that the Bank of Canada supply funds, at least for the time being, to Crown companies.

I therefore also invite the minister to take the necessary steps so that the Bank of Canada can finance our crown companies in part. And I ask him: why could this same Bank of Canada not finance the whole Canadian National debt as well as those of all the other crown companies? I find that, with regard to the Canadian National, for instance, at least in recent years, we are given an annual report indicating surpluses and profits, but when the interest on that debt is taken into account the profits are transformed into deficits.

The same holds true in respect of the St. Lawrence seaway administration. Since its establishment in 1959, this company has always made profits, but due to the interest on its debt, those profits have become a deficit which is an onus on Canadian consumers who make up for it in taxes when they buy products shipped through that seaway.

Therefore, I invite the minister to continue to consider thoroughly the representations made this evening. I am pleased to note that the member for Kootenay West is supporting the demands of the Social Credit party to that effect. I do not know if he feels that there is some sort of socialism in such a policy. As for me I do not see any. It would simply mean that money would be made available to the people through the Bank of Canada and this is the purpose of our request. I think that if the government can ask the Bank of Canada to finance some small undertakings as is the case at the present time, the same Bank of Canada could finance all the investments of the government.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I must say that the electoral district of Roberval is also a very fine one, there are very sympathetic people there, and I would be very happy to be the member for Roberval. But since they already have a very good representative and in view of the fact that I am deeply attached to my riding of Lapointe and my constituents, I, nevertheless, prefer to retain the constituency of Lapointe.

I had another point to raise in connection with clause 3 of Bill C-151, but before raising it, because it concerns me very deeply, I should like first of all to support the request made by the hon. member for Kootenay West which is, in fact, a reasonable one, since the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) and the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) have supported it. This request is to the effect that the Bank of Canada provide the financing of the construction and the development of the Canadian National and other public bodies. Now, today, when the Bank of Canada buys bonds, it invests in private enterprise. So I am wondering whether the Bank of Canada has the right to buy bonds from private enterprise; if it has the right to buy shares or bonds from private enterprise, why would it not have the right to do so in the case of public bodies, of municipalities, of provinces, of crown corporations? And then, if the Bank of Canada buys bonds from public organizations, municipalities, provinces or crown corporations, I wonder why the Bank of Canada, which is another public body, would try to make money out of a public body? It would be the same thing as to rob Peter to pay Paul. So since it is admitted in principle and recognized as a fact that the Bank of Canada can buy bonds issued by private enterprise, why not recognize the fact in the case of state enterprise? It seems to me it would be most logical. And if the Bank of Canada can buy bonds from public enterprise, I am wondering why the Bank of Canada, which is itself a public enterprise, a state enterprise, should make profits out of state enterprise? It would be illogical and ridiculous. And then we come to the most logical and most simple conclusion suggested by the member for Kootenay West, seconded by the member for Cariboo and the member for Chapleau, and it is that the Bank of Canada should finance, at a nominal administrative cost, the public bodies and public undertakings, government undertakings. It is simple. If the Bank of Canada is doing this in the case of private enterprise, all the more reason for it to do as much for state undertakings.

[Mr. Laprise.]

I should now like to raise another point. It is said here that the national system, that is, the Canadian National Railways Company is authorised to make capital expenditures not exceeding in the aggregate $264,000,000, including $79 million for road property and $15 million for branch lines.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board. Where have these works been done? In Quebec? I should like to know about the work done in each province. The Minister of National Revenue could give me this information, but perhaps he does not have the figures at hand. He may not be able to give them to us before ten o'clock. We could interrupt our examination of this clause and take it up again tomorrow. I should like to know where these works have been done. The C.N.R. may have made some improvements or built some new lines, but not, I think, in the province of Quebec.

In the case of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area, for instance, there has been no marked improvement in the railway system, as train service is just as poor as ever. If the service seems to be faster, it is because the train now does not make any stops where it used to. That is the only reason. The train still runs at 60 miles per hour: 20 miles up and down, 20 miles from side to side and 20 miles forward, for a total of 60 miles per hour.

Now, after investigating the matter, I also found out that the number of miles of railway lines in service at present in Quebec has been reduced rather than increased.

So, where was this work done? Where were those structures erected? Where was the equipment used? The new equipment? I know that train service was discontinued in several areas in Quebec. However, the Rapido was put in service between Montreal and Quebec, for the duration of Expo, with four daily trips each way. This was a noteworthy improvement to the Quebec-Montreal line service.

I hope that with all those expenditures and amounts authorized to-day, the same service will be provided after Expo, as this train was always full and as many people have used this train to go from Quebec city to Montreal and vice versa.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister of National Revenue, who is now sponsoring this bill, to tell us how this amount of $264,800,000 was spent, by province. For instance, what proportion of the $79 million has been spent in each province, for road purposes? He could give us this information. He could also tell us how many branch lines were built in each province. As for equipment, how much of the $85,304,000 was spent in each province? Expenditures to the tune of $4,875,000 are provided for hotels; how much of this was spent in each province? There is also investments in affiliated companies. Obviously, for Air Canada, it is to purchase aircraft, for interprovincial flights, and it would perhaps be more difficult to give any figures.

In any case, Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to provide that information. It may be that the minister does not have it at hand since I put the question to him on the spur of the moment; but perhaps he would agree to putting off adoption of clause 3 until tomorrow. It is five to ten. If the minister agrees to do so, we could have an answer tomorrow. Does the minister have those figures now?

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I could not give the details of all the capital expenditures, including the breakdown by provinces, as quickly as that, particularly with reference to such things as rolling stock and so on. I will be very pleased to undertake to get this information from the C.N.R. for my hon. friend and provide a reply by letter to him or in answer to a question he may wish to put on the order paper. I will ask the C.N.R. to supply the information. I do have some details in respect of certain branch lines such as at Mattagami, Sarnia, Amesdale-Bruce Lake, Stall Lake-Osborne Lake, Watrous-Guernsey. I have the details for these branch lines and there may be others included. I will undertake to provide the information to my hon. friend in one of the ways I have suggested.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Will the hon. minister agree to postpone clause 3 until the end of our examination? Tomorrow, before continuing the consideration of clause 3, the minister could bring us these details.

Obviously, I cannot blame the minister for not having the answer at hand. I know that when such a bill is considered in committee, some members may raise questions just as difficult as the one I am putting and that is why I have no idea of blaming the minister for not having the reply at hand but I think the information which he has supplied is inadequate and does not answer the question I have raised.

He has given us information regarding construction of seven or eight branch lines for an expenditure of $13,125,000. Railroad property cost $79,701,000, which is a large amount.

I should like to know how much has been spent in each province out of this amount of $79,701,000, out of the sum of $13,125,000, out of the $85,304,000 for equipment, out of the $14,595,000 for telecommunications and out of the sum provided for hotels.

So if the minister prefers to adjourn consideration of clause 3 until tomorrow, at which time we may continue the examination of the other clauses, we may have a complete reply tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, if we could move forward with this bill I could give the information in respect of the road property. This information is available to my hon. friend in the capital budget of the C.N.R. which was tabled in the house. The information he is asking for is available to the house at this time.

All we are asking for in this particular bill is the right of the government of Canada to guarantee the loans. The question I suggested was difficult to answer related to the breakdown by provinces, and I doubt that I could provide that information by tomorrow. I will undertake to ask the C.N.R. to do that if it is possible. Let me repeat that the information in respect of road property has been broken down by regions and is available in the budget which has already been tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have received the committee report on the C.N.R., but I did not find in it the answer to the question I asked, by province.

As for the study made by the transport and communications committee, the Minister of National Revenue is probably not aware of it and I even believe he does not approve of such action. But I shall tell him this: Mr. Chairman, I have been systematically kept away, brushed aside, along with the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard). We are the only ones to have been systematically eliminated from the committees. We do not sit on any committee. If the minister tells me that this information has been given in the transport and communications committee, I say to him it is really unfortunate, but if we are not members of the committee, it is precisely because the government tried to gag us by systematically keeping us away.

I am probably the only member here that does not belong to any committee, the less so to the transport and communications committee. This is why I did not attend the proceedings of the transport and communications committee and why I did not get this information.

Therefore, I must be satisfied with asking questions in the house since I do not have the opportunity to ask them in the committee. I admit this may give a little trouble to the minister. But what can I do, Mr. Chairman; it is not I who established this discrimination towards the member for Lapointe, but rather the government. I will not blame the Minister of National Revenue; I know he is not the type to participate in that kind of discrimination. I have always thought better of him. Therefore, I did not obtain the answers in committee, because I was not allowed to be a member thereof. No answer can be found to my specific question in the annual report of the C.N.R. Then, I think that it would be advisable to call upon the Minister of National Revenue to obtain the information from the C.N.R.

As it is past ten o'clock, well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call it ten o'clock which would give the Minister of National Revenue the opportunity to provide an answer to-morrow.

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I did not suggest in my answer to the hon. member that the information was contained in the annual report of the C.N.R. I referred to the capital budget of the C.N.R. which has been tabled in this house. This is not available only to committee members but to all hon. members of the house who want to look at it. My hon. friend could have obtained most of the information he is asking for from that budget if he had wanted to look at it.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell the hon. Minister of National Revenue that I took the trouble to look for this information, but the expenditure in these different fields in not indicated for each province; let the minister see for himself.

If this information had been contained in the report, the minister would not have had to get up and say: I do not have the figures. Nor would he be forced to say: I do not know whether I shall be able to give these figures tomorrow. If this information were contained in the report, the minister would not have said that he would perhaps be unable to give me these figures tomorrow. The minister cannot even give these figures tonight or tomorrow because it may take a long time to find them. They are obviously not contained in the report on capital expenditures, for then he would be able to quote them. He could have sent another member to fetch the report in his office in less than two minutes and given the figures. If he is unable to give us this information tonight, it is because it is not contained in the report. Therefore, the minister should not tell me to take the time to read the reports; I have read them, but they do not contain the information and this is the reason why I am asking the minister to give me the answer.

I will now call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I will give the hon. member a copy in order that he may look at it.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I realize that an hon. member has called it ten o'clock, but in order to expedite the business of the house and in view of the fact that probably this bill could be passed this evening if we are patient, we are prepared to sit beyond ten o'clock.

• (10.00 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, far from me the idea of delaying unduly the progress of our business but let us set aside consideration of clause 3 and take it up tomorrow.

The minister has just given me some loose sheets. It is not a report but photostatic sheets of which I did not get any copy and which have not been tabled.

I have received the reports of the C.N.R., the report on capital expenditures, but I did not get this one and I have not even looked it over yet. Therefore, if the minister agrees to postpone consideration of clause 3 until tomorrow, so that I may have a satisfactory answer, I will tell him that I have no objections to carry on with the consideration of the rest of the bill tonight if we could make some progress. It has never been my intention to delay unduly our business; on the contrary, I am glad and happy when everything goes well and smoothly and everything is considered in great detail but, in this case, there is a matter about which I should like to get some answers which I have not been able to receive in committee because I did not sit on the committee.

In order to allow the minister to carry on with the consideration of his bill, I am prepared to study the rest of the bill except clause 3 which will stand until tomorrow; otherwise, Mr. Chairman, I call it ten o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, my offer was conditional upon our passing the bill completely tonight. In view of what the hon. member has said, it is obvious that he does not wish the bill to be passed this evening.

Progress reported.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please—order; the only thing that would be in order at this time would be for somebody to ask what the business of the house will be tomorrow.

Mr. Starr: We know that.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, under the new and efficient management of the house these things are all well known.

Mr. Fulton: In order to facilitate the debate, Mr. Speaker, I would ask what estimates were arranged for tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to speak to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) about the request conveyed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Starr) to deal with a specific item. However, I hope that before—

Mr. Fulton: It is wheat tomorrow, is it not, and not housing?

Mr. Starr: I think tomorrow we will be dealing with the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, item 1.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS—DISCUSSION WITH HER MAJESTY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CONFERENCE

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, once again I appreciate the great generosity of my distinguished colleague, the member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne), who is so concerned with the matters I submit in this house, that every evening after ten o'clock he remains in the house to give these points a very friendly and very efficient consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the matter I should like to bring forward tonight offers a great deal of interest, for the good reason that we are living exciting hours in Canada.

The major problem in the present context is that of Canadian unity.

I should like to make a digression to point out to the house very prejudicial publicity. I am thinking of such serious papers as the Toronto Telegram and others with a wide circulation, which print headlines such as this one: "How will Quebec separate" and the picture of Pierre Bourgault on the first page. I think that newspapers such as these are more deleterious to Canadian unity than all the wild statements that can be heard here and there throughout the country.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that such disproportionate attention is given to movements that, in fact, express the opinion of but a very small minority. I am afraid to state that, in the province of Quebec, the majority, and a large one at that, hold the view that Canadian unity is priceless and should be safeguarded.

I should like to take advantage again of this digression to say that, if Mr. René Levesque is a separatist candidate in Quebec, he will be beaten, and soundly so, and I am not afraid to say so.

However, if problems crop up in Quebec, it is not up to René Lévesque to speak on behalf of Quebec. There are federal members here, 58 Liberal members from Quebec who reflect the opinion of that province better than a demagogue like René Lévesque. Still, if there are problems, it is because, in fact, the Canadian ideal which should exist is sadly lacking. Indeed, there is almost a total absence of Canadian ideal. And it is so because we have neglected to Canadianize our institutions.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had a Canadian flag adopted in 1964, it was a step forward. Our institutions were then being Canadianized, our Canadian ideal was being strengthened; all Canadians were being asked to rally around a symbol in which they take pride and which flies now over the world fair. How humiliating it would have been, Mr. Chairman, if, in 1967, during the world fair, when hundreds of thousands of people visited us from abroad, we had not had that distinctive symbol as witness to Canadian unity.

Let us Canadianize our institutions. That is the purpose of my question tonight. I ask the government, or its authorized spokesman, whether it would not be advisable to convene a conference of all commonwealth countries and decide whether the term "British subject," which is there and applies to most Canadian citizens, could not be changed without prejudice to the respect for man and with the agreement of all commonwealth countries.

Canada wants to and must remain in the commonwealth, an economic and political association of nations united under the symbol of the British crown. There is nothing offensive about that, but since Canadians, proud to be Canadians, are still British subjects, we should think it over and wonder whether a conference of the commonwealth could not consider the possibility of amending such a statute and all that in effort for Canadianization, Mr. Chairman. In the past, it used to be called the British Commonwealth; today, it is called the Commonwealth of Nations. And what would prevent the British crown from presiding still over that association. But, even so, all the countries which are part of that association can also say that the citizens of those countries are no longer subjects but citizens.

That is the reason why I urge the government authorities to see to what extent they could encourage a good initiative, request or suggest the calling of such a commonwealth conference and ask all the representatives of the commonwealth countries to take action so that we will be citizens of each of the countries which make up the commonwealth and to discard the label "subject" in order to further the spirit of Canadian unity, the reason we are willing to fight against people like René Lévesque who is only trying to create disorder to satisfy his selfish ambitions.

[Mr. Choquette.]

[English]

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I were to repeat any of the compliments I paid the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) last evening it might be assumed that we belonged to a mutual admiration society.

Mr. Knowles: Don't you?

Mr. Byrne: It goes without saying that the energetic and youthful member for Lotbinière is indeed versatile and well versed in many subjects. He has introduced a new subject this evening, one not entirely related to the question which was put by him on July 4, 1967.

Personally, I do not feel qualified to comment on the relative positions of political parties in Quebec. Specifically I am not qualified to talk about Mr. René Lévesque; nor, indeed, am I interested in what Mr. René Lévesque believes to be best for the interest of Quebec. From what I have heard, I may say that I cannot agree with him.

The hon. member raised an interesting question. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and his parliamentary assistant are attending the sessions of the United Nations; both would have been interested in hearing what the hon. member had to say, and I shall be pleased to bring the matter to their attention. I may say that, for the moment, no plans are under way for convening a commonwealth prime minister's conference in the near future.

PUBLIC SERVICE—LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of a question which I put yesterday afternoon to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson), as reported in Hansard on page 2431, I return once again to the matter of pensions of retired civil servants.

There must be a word which means "again for the one thousandth time". At any rate, I return to the subject tonight and as earnestly and strongly as I can, I plead with the President of the Treasury Board to do everything he possibly can to get action on the matter soon.

The subject was under discussion in the late show period last night. My hon. friend from Carleton expressed indignation, indignation which I share. The parliamentary secretary to the present minister took exception to that approach. I hope I may get somewhere if I take a different approach.

I plead with the minister to realize how deeply disappointed, almost disillusioned, are the people who are concerned about this matter. The minister knows that he himself in June, 1966, a year and a quarter ago, gave his personal consent to this subject being referred to a special joint committee on the public service of Canada. That indication on his part was a word of encouragement which seemed to say that after all the years we have been fighting over this matter we were about to get somewhere. In January, 1967, the consent the minister had given was transformed into reality when the appropriate motion was made referring this question to the special joint committee on the public service. That joint committee did a tremendous job on this issue and it made a unanimous report on May 8 of this year recommending that immediate action be taken to increase the pensions of retired civil servants. I emphasize, again, that this was a unanimous report and that it was made by a committee of both houses with all parties in both houses represented thereon.

An immediate assurance was given that the matter would be considered and action taken at the earliest possible moment. I emphasize that this could have been acted upon before we adjourned for the summer on July 7. For a time it looked as though it might have been, because of the words of assurance which were given. But when July 7 came we were told we would have to wait until the fall. Not only were we told we would have to wait until the fall, but we were told by the President of the Treasury Board that an announcement of a specific proposal would be made in the fall. I plead with the minister not to get up and tell me tonight that it is still the fall. By the calendar it is—

Mr. Benson: It is only four days old.

Mr. Knowles: But the retired civil servants and their families believed that a recess of 11 weeks would certainly be long enough for the government to act, and that the necessary legislation would be ready when we resumed yesterday. An assurance that something would be done was given not only by the present minister but by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) who entered the debate on the last day before we recessed, July 7. I was castigated for insisting that action be taken before we rose. I replied to that criticism by saying this, as reported in Hansard for Friday, July 7 at page 2360:

> I know, if we are asked to wait until fall on this issue, that there will be other matters that will have priority. We would not reach the matter until October or November, and these people would not get their increase until next December or January. I know further, Mr. Speaker, that unless action is taken now we have no guarantee that action will be taken in the fall.

I was told that I lacked faith, that I lacked confidence, that I did not appreciate the deep concern on that side of the house over the plight of these people. I was told this on the floor of the house and out in the hall. They said: "Stanley, we are just as concerned as you are." But you, sir, as a member for an Ottawa constituency, know as I do what this means to many thousands of these people.

I could use the language that was used last night, and on occasion I probably will use it. I think it is a hoax that for months these people have been led to believe something was going to take place. But, Mr. Speaker, I put it to the President of the Treasury Board in terms of the strongest plea I can make—don't mislead these people, don't disappoint them, don't disillusion them any longer.

Parliament has spoken through a joint committee of both houses. It has said something should be done and should be done soon. The government has said through the mouth of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, through the mouth of the President of the Treasury Board, and through the mouth of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that active consideration is going to be given to that report and that something is going to be done.

We were told something was going to be done this fall, but yesterday the answer we got was that the matter was still under consideration and that when a decision is reached the house will be informed. That is the kind of answer we have been getting ever since May 8. I am afraid if that kind of answer continues to be given, my prediction of last July 7 will prove to be correct, that by not having got the matter dealt with then the battle is almost lost. So far as I am concerned it will not be lost. We shall keep at it until it is won.

I do not know who it is in the cabinet who is holding this up. I know one member who was against it, for he told me so. I can mention this now because he has since left the cabinet. But there must be somebody else in the cabinet who is objecting to it. I know where the President of the Treasury Board stands. He has told us publicly, and I am sure he will not mind my saying that he has told me personally and privately. He thinks something should be done. I plead with him not to let this issue be stalled any longer. Let us have action on it now. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are at the edge of your chair and so I leave my earnest plea with the President of the Treasury Board.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would simply reply briefly to the hon. gentleman opposite by saying the steps he has outlined were the steps that were taken. He indicated my personal concern in this particular matter. In due course the government agreed to refer it to a joint committee of the house and the other place. That committee made its report and the committee report was then transmitted to cabinet.

The cabinet has been considering the matter. I can assure the hon. gentleman only that the matter is still on the cabinet agenda. It has not been dropped by the cabinet, but a decision on the matter by the cabinet has not yet been made. When a decision is made I will transmit it to the house. As the hon. member has indicated, he knows my personal feeling in the matter, and I trust it will not get too far into the fall before a report can be made to the house by myself.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION —SASKATOON—INQUIRY AS TO STATION CONSTRUCTION

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like this evening to make a plea once more in the house for C.B.C. television coverage for the constituency of Saskatoon and the surrounding area. Undoubtedly the government must be aware that the story of C.B.C. coverage for my constituency has been a story of frustration, a story of delays, a story of indecision. In other words, nothing has been done despite numerous petitions and letters sent over the past few years to the government of Canada and also to the C.B.C.

We are wondering where exactly the hold-up on this matter is. I refer to the white paper on broadcasting. At page 10 it points out:

> The government has advised the Board of Broadcast Governors that, pending the enactment of new legislation, it is now prepared to consider issuing second-station television licences on the recommendation of the board, subject to the reservation for the use of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of channels in Victoria, B.C.; Saskatoon, Saskatchewan—

Of course that came after the big freeze was put on any expansion by the C.B.C. The government has advised that it is prepared to consider issuing these licences. What has happened since? Nothing very much has happened. Along came the report of the standing committee of the house on broadcasting which, on page 9, reads as follows:

> The committee concurs with the statement on structure appearing in the white paper—

That is the one to which I have referred.

> —particularly with reference to extending coverage to all Canadians, and to full network services in both official languages.
> We recommend further that, wherever practical, in areas now receiving only one Canadian service, if the service is through a private outlet, the alternative should be provided by C.B.C. If C.B.C. is now the sole service, the second service should be private. Where there are serious obstacles to such parallel development, however, these should not prohibit the extension of alternate service by other means, at least on a temporary basis. We urge that the introduction of dual service proceed as rapidly as C.B.C. finances and local market conditions permit.

I submit that the local market conditions certainly have been met in the city of Saskatoon with the broadcast area it has. We are the only major city in western Canada which is without a C.B.C. television outlet. I think it is very important indeed that the people in this area should have the privilege of sharing in the benefits from the tax money which is used in the support of the C.B.C.

Despite everything we have done there always seems to be something blocking the actual construction of a C.B.C. station at Saskatoon. You will recall that it was held up first by the government freeze on expenditures by the C.B.C. Then, permission was given to go ahead, but the B.B.G. hearing was delayed. The hearing was to be held in January but was delayed until April. Finally, the B.B.G. gave approval early in May this year. Then the Department of Transport, which had to pass on the technical matters, gave its permission as well.

Now, what has happened? I, personally, have attempted to find out by phoning several government departments which might seem to be involved in this, but I have been unable to get an answer from anyone concerning what has happened. The press, which seems to know things before members of parliament do, has pointed out that cabinet approval has been held up. If this is the case, then in view of the fact that the government already has stated in the white paper that it is prepared to consider issuing these licences, I wonder why the cabinet could not immediately consider allowing the commencement of construction of a C.B.C. station at Saskatoon.

If this construction is not started soon or is held up much longer, then the program series, which I think was to start in September of 1968, will be held up for an additional year since the transfer between the private station and the C.B.C. station would require some time to enable them to work out the programming. So that there will not be a further delay of one year, some decision should be made very soon so that the C.B.C. can commence construction. This affects not only the Saskatoon constituency but also many of the surrounding constituencies which would be served by the radius of television coverage which I understand the C.B.C. has suggested. Apparently they have in mind a satellite to serve the Kerrobert area. As we all know the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) has risen in his place from time to time pointing out the importance of C.B.C. coverage for this area and why they feel there should be a C.B.C. station in Saskatoon with the consequent satellite coverage for them.

I should like to know whether in the very near future the cabinet will allow the C.B.C. to start construction of a C.B.C. station. We think it is of vital importance to a city which is the second fastest growing city in Canada and also one of the finest, as my colleague the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) has pointed out. We believe it is very important that a city which is major in every possible way in western Canada should have this coverage. I would appreciate it very much if the representative of the government could tonight give us the assurance that in the next few days the cabinet will give favourable consideration to the immediate construction of a C.B.C. station in Saskatoon.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, just as I had an affinity with the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) this evening, I should like to assure the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) that both he and I walk in the same wilderness so far as C.B.C. television is concerned within our ridings.

I only wish I could take the hon. member on a trip through the East Kootenay to let him hear of the complaints and concerns of the people in my riding which is served to the extent of 20 per cent to 25 per cent by off air service; that is by C.B.C. television. All other receivers are on a wire line and are paying a substantial amount for this service. As suggested by the white paper, before granting a second license we are first endeavouring to provide television service for the majority of the people in Canada. I might say that the majority of the people in my riding are not receiving C.B.C. television.

Be that as it may, I am sure this matter is being given very careful consideration by the ministers concerned with this matter, namely the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), and the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh). As I am here this evening apparently to make apologies because of the absence of these ministers, who are unable to be in their places because of illness or important business, I will undertake to bring this matter immediately to their attention and indicate the very forceful manner in which the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) has brought this matter to the attention to the house.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.34 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, September 27, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HEADS OF STATE

PROVISION FOR INCLUSION OF O CANADA IN SALUTE

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-152, intituled "An Act respecting the salute to the head of state".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, when the national anthem of a friendly nation is booed by a crowd, it is always an odious sight.

In Canada, an obsolete and colonialist protocol fosters that type of deplorable incident which, amongst others, occurred when General de Gaulle, arriving on the Colbert, set foot on Quebec soil. An anthem other than that of Canada was immediately intoned.

The purpose of this bill is to correct an annoying anachronism and to allow the anthem "O Canada" to serve as a salute to the head of state, in the presence of the governor general, since the latter represents first and foremost the head of state of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CORPORATE AND CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT, APPOINTMENT OF PERSONNEL, ETC.

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a Department of Corporate and Consumer Affairs; to provide for the appointment of a minister and a deputy minister and for their duties and powers; to provide that the governor in council may establish a consumer advisory council and other bodies to assist the minister and for the remuneration and expenses of the members thereof; and to provide for certain other matters related or incidental thereto.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR INCREASES IN POSTAL RATES, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Post Office Act to increase by one cent the postage rates for letters posted in Canada for delivery in Canada; to provide an amended rate structure for newspapers and periodicals; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act, more especially in relation to tenders and contracts.

Motion agreed to.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF APPLICATION

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to extend its application to the years 1968, 1969 and 1970.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS—POWERS OF MAGISTRATES

Question No. 148—Mr. Mather:

Has the Prime Minister received petitions in support of private member's bills C-155 (1966) and C-38 (1967) extending the powers of magistrates in dealing with cases of cruelty to animals and, if so (a) how many petitions were received (b) in what form (c) from residents of which provinces (d) what consideration is being given to such petitions?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Prime Minister's and Privy Council offices and the Department of Justice as follows: Yes. (a) 2,950 containing 3,668 signatures; (b) Letters, cards and lists of signatures; (c) All except New Brunswick; (d)

The government proposes to introduce at this session an amendment similar in principle to that proposed in Bill C-38.

FEDERAL COMPLIANCE WITH LABOUR STANDARDS CODE

Question No. 244—Mr. McCleave:

1. Do all federal government departments now carry out the provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code with respect to (a) part I—hours of work (b) part II—minimum wages (c) part III—annual vacations (d) part IV—general holidays?

2. If there are exceptions, what are they and when will they be corrected?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. Standards similar to those set out in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code with respect to minimum wages, annual vacations and general holidays are enjoyed by all employees of federal government departments. The only known exception to this concerns the rates of remuneration received by cadets in the Canadian Coast Guard College which are in some cases lower than $1.25 per hour. The cadets are, of course, involved in a formal apprenticeship program which will ultimately have beneficial career effects, a situation for which the code makes provision.

2. With respect to hours of work, most public servants work a 37½ hour or 40 hour week; this is, of course, equal or superior to the minimum standard in the code. Nevertheless, hours in excess of the standards established by the code are worked in certain field operations, isolated locations and under exceptional circumstances directly related to operating requirements. The Treasury Board has had such types of situations under close study to determine the most practicable methods of meeting the code standard while recognizing the best interests of the employees and the requirements of service to the public. In several such instances it has proven possible to reduce hours to the code standard or very close to them. Efforts along this line are continuing and it is felt that collective bargaining will assist the process since it will provide the vehicle for making known the employees' wishes with respect to various alternative solutions.

STUDIES RESPECTING NATIONAL CAPITAL BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 273—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Is the present site of the Macdonald-Cartier bridge the result of a study or suggestion made by the town planners of the National Capital Commission and (a) if so, in what year was this result made known to the public (b) if not, who authorized the construction of the bridge at that place?

2. What were the priorities established in 1952, 1956, 1960 and 1964 by the town planning committee of the N.C.C., concerning the construction of bridges over the Ottawa river between the Quebec side and the Ontario side?

3. To the knowledge of the government, did the N.C.C. in its study on the economic prospects of the national capital area, mention the westward shifting of the inhabitants of the N.C.C. area both on the Quebec and Ontario sides, since 1947?

4. In the master plan for Hull and district, which was made known in 1964, and in connection with the regional development for Hull, Aylmer, Deschênes, Lucerne and Hull West, what were the 1986 population forecasts for each of these municipalities of western Quebec?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

(a) Not applicable. (b) A special technical committee set up to study this question, known as the Ottawa river bridges committee, comprising representatives of the Ontario department of highways, the cities of Ottawa and Hull, the federal Department of Public Works and the federal district commission endorsed the present location of the Macdonald-Cartier bridge which was recommended in a report prepared by Messrs. De Leuw Cather and Company 1956. The construction of the bridge at this site was confirmed finally at a special meeting dealing primarily with cost sharing held April 28, 1960, attended by the federal Minister of Public Works, the minister of highways and provincial treasurer of Ontario, deputy minister of public works, Quebec, the mayors of Ottawa and Hull, and their respective staffs.

2. 1952—The Gréber report of 1950 established as first priority the replacement of the Alexandra bridge and allocated second stage priorities to the Lemieux island and Deschenes bridges. A bridge at the location of the Macdonald-Cartier bridge was not mentioned. The federal district commission used this report as a guide to the development of the national capital and adjusted its recommendation in the light of the information available at the time of the development of a project.

1956—The federal district commission brief in 1956 recommended to the joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate, the construction of an Ottawa river bridge as priority 5 among many prospective joint projects. The joint committee's report in reply to this brief stated:

> The acute congestion at rush hours would be greatly relieved if the tracks were removed from the Interprovincial Bridge. Adequate approaches to the bridge on both the Ottawa and Hull sides should be constructed at once. An entirely new bridge should be built as soon as possible to take the place of the old bridge.

1960—The Gréber report of 1959 to the National Capital Commission gave the Macdonald-Cartier bridge first priority of the Ottawa river crossings. This location was accepted at the special meeting of April 28, 1960, referred to above, at which the chairman of the National Capital Commission was present.

1964—The Lemieux Island bridge now had top priority as the Macdonald-Cartier bridge was being built.

3. The report on economic prospects, national capital region, prepared by Larry Smith and Company for the National Capital Commission, indicates continuing residential population growth westward on both sides of the river, with most of the growth occurring in Ontario. The report also forecasts residential development east of the existing Ottawa-Hull area.

4. The 1986 population forecasts in the master plan for Hull, Aylmer, Hull South (now Lucerne), Deschenes, and Hull West prepared in 1963 were as follows:

East of Gatineau park: City of Hull, 70,000; Hull West, 8,000; total, 78,000.

West of Gatineau park: Aylmer, 12,000; Deschenes, 2,500; Lucerne, 25,500; total, 40,000.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING CONTRACTUAL COMMITMENTS OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 283—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the governor in council established any regulations concerning the conditions under which an agency corporation may undertake contractual commitments under section 83 of the Financial Administration Act?

2. What are these regulations?

3. Are there such regulations for proprietary corporations and, if so, what are these regulations?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. The governor in council has established regulations under which certain agency corporations may undertake contractual commitments pursuant to section 83 of the Financial Administration Act. Currently, these regulations apply to three agency corporations: the National Capital Commission, the National Battlefields Commission and the Northern Canada Power Commission.

2. The government contracts regulations, P.C. 1964-1467, P.C. 1966-533 and P.C. 1967-12.

3. No.

INCOME TAX PROCEEDINGS, CANADIAN JAVELIN CO.

Question No. 305—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has the income tax division any action or proceeding in the Exchequer Court or before the income tax appeal board in connection with the income tax defaults of (a) John C. Doyle (b) Canadian Javelin Limited (c) subsidiaries of Canadian Javelin Limited?

2. If so, what are the amounts of claims against each of the above?

3. If any (a) decisions (b) settlements have been made in any of the said cases, what is the nature of each?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): 1. (a) Yes. (b) No. (c) No.

2. A writ of extent was issued out of the Exchequer Court of Canada against John C. Doyle on the 8th day of July, 1963, for the sum of $3,410,130.90. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable.

3. (a) Mr. Doyle appealed to the tax appeal board regarding the assessments against him. The decision rendered on June 6, 1967, by the Chairman, Mr. Cecil L. Snyder, and concurred in by Mr. Maurice Boisvert, member of the board is:

> The appeal for the taxation year 1950 is allowed in part and the assessment is varied to add to the appellant's income for 1950 the sum of $200,000 in place of the sum of $400,000 assessed by the minister. The assessments levied by the minister of $160,939.35 and $183,173.11 for the taxation years 1953 and 1954 respectively are approved and these appeals are dismissed.
> The further assessment for the year 1954 of the sum of $2,080,000 is approved in principle but the assessment is referred back to the minister for reassessment to permit the deduction of approximately $280,000 incurred by the taxpayer in acquiring the property in Chile wherein the amount of profit derived from this venture is held assessable to income tax.

(b) No settlement has been made by which tax properly assessed has been reduced.

Questions

PENSIONS TO JUDGES FOR PERMANENT INFIRMITIES

Question No. 308—Mr. McCleave:

1. How many persons receive pensions under section 23 (1) of the Judges Act by virtue of being afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling them from the due execution of office?

2. Without specifying their names or identifying them by provinces, what were the permanent infirmities submitted as the reason for resignation of office, by those now receiving pensions?

3. What is the practice followed by the governor in council in deciding requests of this nature and what medical opinion is required?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): 1. Sixteen.

2. Six heart disease; 5 cerebro-vascular disease, including strokes and other complications; 1 disseminated sclerosis; 1 prostatic disease; 1 mental illness; 1 complications of therapy for a malignant tumor; 1 high blood pressure; progressive physical and nervous infirmity with advancing age.

3. Each case is considered on its own merits and one or more medical opinions are obtained, depending upon the nature of the infirmity and the notoriety of the circumstances surrounding the request.

SURVEY OF MEDWAY RIVER, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 329—Mr. Crouse:

Is there a survey being conducted by the federal Department of Fisheries on the Medway river in Queens county, Nova Scotia, at present and, if so (a) what is its objective (b) who authorized the installation of a counting device which impedes the flow of fish to their natural spawning grounds (c) have any salmon passed through the counter (d) what arrangements have been made to distribute or dispose of the kiaks killed by the counter (e) how many salmon have died in the counter box (f) how many salmon have been caught in the heavy wire screening and iron rods blocking the river (g) has a report been filed by the fisheries protection officers on the number of smolt, spawned kiaks and other fish travelling down river which have been killed while endeavouring to pass through the counter box?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes. (a) The collection of basic engineering and biological data essential for the development of a scientific management program for the Medway river. (b) Counting facilities are essential tools for the collection of data and are authorized by senior departmental officials for this purpose. (c) Over 200 salmon and grilse passed through the counting fence to July 18. (d) It is not unusual for kiaks to die naturally after spawning. The dead kiaks accumulated on the fence were collected and buried; the number was insignificant compared with the total run. (e) None. (f) None. (g) The resource development service is undertaking this project and will prepare an internal report.

DISMISSED DIRECTORS OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 347—Mr. Caouette:

1. Over the past ten years, have there been any cases of dismissal of directors of crown corporations defined as proprietary corporations by the Financial Administration Act?

2. If so, what are the names of the dismissed directors, and why were they dismissed?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the proprietary corporations as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

MONTREAL—COST OF ROADS, HIGHWAYS AND BRIDGES IN PORT

Question No. 352—Mr. Davis:

What has been the total cost to the federal treasury, since 1955, of roads, highways and bridges built within the confines of the port of Montreal and charged either to the National Harbours Board or to Expo 67?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned: the cost of roads, highways and bridges within the exhibition grounds is $23,248,580, of which $19,027,070 will be permanent and $4,221,510 temporary.

The total asset value of the permanent bridges and roads is $15,221,650, leaving a balance of $3,805,420.

The National Harbours Board advises as follows: $55,967,088 in so far as the National Harbours Board is concerned.

COST OF EXPO '67

Question No. 353—Mr. Webb:

What has been the actual cost of Expo '67 to date?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The agreement entered into on January 18, 1963, by the government of Canada, the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal stipulates that the government of Canada shall pay 50 per cent of the cost of the exhibition, the government of the province of Quebec 37½ per cent, and the city of Montreal 12½ per cent. The gross expenditures to July 31, 1967 are $333,592,741, which includes capital, administration, operating, public relations and financing costs. Revenue accruing before, during and after the exhibition from the sale of passports, bonus books, concessions, royalties, sponsorship, advertising and sale of assets, etc., will be applied against gross expenditures.

COST OF HIGHER EDUCATION

What is the approximate total cost, at the present time, of educating the following qualified persons up to (i) bachelor's (ii) master's, and (iii) doctor's levels (a) engineers (b) mathematicians (c) physicists (d) scientists (e) physicians and surgeons?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): At present no reliable figures are available. A cost study in Canadian universities and colleges is presently being done by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada with financial support from my department. Preliminary results of this study should provide reasonable accurate information by the summer of 1968.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

NATIONAL CAPITAL BOUNDARIES

Question No. 336—Mr. Caouette:

As of July 1, 1967, what were the exact boundaries of the national capital, as opposed to the "national capital region"?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

CANADIAN UNITY—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely: should our country, Canada, remain a single country or should it be partitioned to please the destructive elements that want to destroy the basis of national unity, and also to establish clearly the definition of one nation or two nations in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member for Villeneuve be kind enough to explain to the house the urgency of debate.

Canadian Unity

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, as things are going in Canada, I think it is more urgent to debate our very existence as a country or as a nation, than to deal with wheat commitments or agreements with the United States or other countries, or even housing, because if our country is on the brink of anarchy or revolution, it is obvious that neither wheat nor housing will have much importance in our country.

Mr. Speaker, the very existence of our sovereign country is at stake. The confusion now prevailing everywhere in Canada in that regard must be cleared up. And it is here, in the Canadian parliament, that it must be discussed. I think that we are at least two years late here in the federal parliament to debate that question. But it is better late than never. The time has come, I think, as we say in good French, to take the bull by the horns. It is not too late yet and we must not be afraid to state that we are in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as I just said, the Canadian parliament is at least two years late. It is a matter of restoring order in that tower of Babel.

Some of our people are in favour of the associated states, others prefer independence and sheer separatism; we have some in favour of the sovereign state within a Canadian union—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel I must interrupt the hon. member to remind him, as I did yesterday when a similar motion was put, as well as the day before yesterday when another motion, of the same kind was introduced, that under the provisions of standing order 26, the mover and those who speak on that motion must restrict themselves to the matter of the urgency of debate. The point is to convince the Speaker, if possible, that the debate should be held today rather than later this week, next week or at the earliest opportunity given to the house to discuss that problem. I would invite the hon. member to restrict himself to that point.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not a matter that concerns the future. Indeed it does, but this question should have been settled, cleared up and discussed two years ago here in parliament, in order to know where we stand.

It is urgent to know whether Canada is made up of one or two nations. It is urgent that we know whether we should choose between a republic, Canada as it is at present or an improved Canada. That is why we must take a stand in order to avoid any more confusion, both inside and outside Quebec, as well as the acts of terrorism which occurred the other day at Pierrefonds or right in the city of Montreal when the confederation train passed through, and in several other spots in the province of Quebec.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that we know whether we are Canadians, or whether there are two or ten kinds of Canadians. It is up to the federal parliament to take a stand, to discuss this matter as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If that is the general opinion, I would ask hon. members not to broach such a general subject in the present circumstances.

Hon. members know that the representatives of all parties have agreed to discuss this afternoon a matter concerning which a similar motion was introduced a few days ago. In my opinion, there will be complete chaos if we put off the debate scheduled for today, by a motion introduced under standing order No. 26. I do not see the usefulness of putting off the business of the house in order to allow this sort of debate.

The hon. member for Villeneuve himself recognizes the wide scope of the question; that was the sense of the speech he has just made. I would remind him of citation No. 100 in the fourth edition of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms where, under subsection (8), it is written:

> I do not think that under the standing order... a motion on a subject of this kind, having such a very wide scope, was ever contemplated.

And it seems to me that this citation applies exactly to the situation which the hon. member would call to the attention of the house and I think that I should immediately give my ruling that this motion is not in order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I think that standing order No. 26 states that those who would express their opinion on the urgency of a debate are entitled to do so. It is included in the standing order and was added, if you recall, Mr. Speaker, because previously, the ruling of the Speaker could be appealed. Lest anyone be able to appeal the ruling of the Speaker, it was added to the standing order that the Speaker was required to take into account the advice or the opinion of those who wished to speak on the question.

At this time, I believe we have not had the opportunity to speak on this point and the ruling has already been brought down.

I Mr. Speaker, and I admit quite frankly, that if this problem could have been settled this afternoon, I would have been happy. Let it be settled, so that we may finally know what is what. We might have decided this afternoon the whole question of whether independence or associated states would have been better. That I would have liked to know.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can see the merits of the objection taken by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) under the standing order which he read but I think that he will also see the merits of the ruling which I have made. He will understand that even if he or other hon. members attempted to convince me that a debate of this kind should take place this afternoon, it would be in vain. Under the circumstances, I do not feel that a prolonged debate should be allowed.

I make this ruling quite aware of the fact, as I said before, that the hon. member for Lapointe is right when he says that as a rule the Chair must listen to the argument presented by those interested in the matter and who suggest that the adjournment of the regular business of the house is necessary in order to consider the motion moved by an hon. member.

But, I have come at once to the conclusion that such a debate would not be necessary. I would suggest to the hon. member for Lapointe to wait for another opportunity to make his representations.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I think it is my privilege to set forth my arguments in favour of the urgency of debate on that matter; however, if I should be out of order, I would ask you to set me straight. I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that you made your ruling so hastily this afternoon; usually, you take everything into account and take into consideration the opinion of minorities with a generosity that does you credit.

I should like to say at the outset to set the record straight that I am not a separatist. On that point, I dissociate myself from my friend, the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). On the urgency of debate, Mr. Speaker, I must share the opinion of the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and the member for Lapointe, because it is more important this afternoon to debate the future of Canada than to discuss whether there will be legislation allowing the building of houses for those who need them, although that also is urgent.

It must be realized, Mr. Speaker—and that is where I want to prove the urgency of debate—that the separatists in Quebec are creating a climate of anarchy and terrorism and that the fanatics in other provinces are making false representations and we even have to put up with international vexations of the part of some heads of state who meddle in our problems.

I think it is urgent, Mr. Speaker, because there is some anxiety throughout Canada at the present time about whether Canada will survive or not, and the problem is mainly one of understanding, of finding the meaning of the words. What do we want exactly, what is the meaning of all those words said before public opinion, especially by people seeking political advantage.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that even if the present debate were considered as urgent this afternoon, it would still be helpful in clarifying what Quebec wants exactly and in finding out the right meaning of the words we are discussing. We run the risk of waking up to-morrow in a dead-lock; this would mean, for Canada, endless years of difficulties and perhaps the disintegration of this national unity in which we so firmly believe.

Apart from this, I think the initiative should spring from the federal government and not from the provinces. If the government wishes to retain its prestige—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member suggested himself a moment ago that I might call him to order if, in my opinion, his contribution was somehow exceeding the scope of the debate.

It seems to me that at the moment he should be called to order. The only matter which the hon. member can discuss, if he wants to, is the urgency to move the adjournment of the house this afternoon to discuss that question.

Mr. Mongrain: With all due respect for your decision, and I admit that your are much more familiar with parliamentary procedure than myself, I am trying to bring forward some arguments to prove the urgency of the debate, because I feel that the future of Canada is much more important than the future of housing in Canada.

I have enough faith in the good will of all my colleagues in the house to think that, in the opinion of the hon. member for Villeneuve, what we want this afternoon is first to define the terms in order to know whether we agree to secure the future of a united Canada. In my opinion, this is more urgent than to discuss whether a housing program will be launched tomorrow morning for the benefit of homeless persons.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Trois-Rivières for his comments. I should have pointed out more clearly than I did earlier that the situation this afternoon is quite exceptional.

A motion was moved yesterday under standing order No. 26, and it was agreed to discuss that motion today. I therefore asked the hon. member to postpone the subject matter of this new motion to another day that we might deal with the matter brought up by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), I repeat, under order No. 26. To proceed otherwise would be illogical. That is why I suggested, at the start, to the member for Villeneuve that discussion of his motion could not be allowed today.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, might it be possible to discuss it Monday, for instance?

Mr. Speaker: The member can discuss the matter with the representatives of the parties of the house. Unfortunately, I cannot take that decision.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to prolong the debate since you have made your ruling, but it might be preferable that the Prime Minister indicate to the house a tentative date when we could deal with this problem which is of such significance that we must not close our eyes on the subject. Perhaps the Prime Minister would have some explanations to give us which would be helpful in finding a solution to the present deadlock?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest to the hon. members that it is almost sure that very shortly the house will be asked to consider a supply motion and the budget, and, within the scope of these two subjects, the debate proposed by the hon. members for Lapointe and Villeneuve could take place.

Once again, I am asking the co-operation of the hon. members, and I suggest that the comments they might wish to make now might easily be made when the debate proposed by the hon. member for Villeneuve actually is considered by the house. As I have said, this might occur very shortly. I am asking for the co-operation of the hon. members for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) and Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) who seem to wish to add to the arguments already brought up.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to co-operate, but I should like to add one word after rising five or six times, precisely on this motion of the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who raised the most important, the most capital question in Canada at this time. I shall dwell for perhaps 60 seconds on the urgency of debate.

I say it is an urgent debate but I would ask the hon. member for Villeneuve to take this into account so that the debate may be held after the following events have taken place: the right hon. Prime Minister said yesterday that he was expecting in November the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission which will deal precisely with these problems of one nation or two nations on the social, cultural and political plane. There will be shortly an interprovincial conference called by Mr. Robarts. The parliamentary committee on the constitution in Quebec will get back to work shortly and, apparently, report early in December. The states general of Quebec and of French Canada are meeting on November 22. That is why the subject is so important and capital.

I would invite the hon. member for Villeneuve to press the matter further at the beginning of December, in order that we may discuss before the end of 1967, the most important problem faced by Canada.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have some exceedingly striking arguments which will irrefutably convince you of the urgency of the debate.

My first argument derives from two different positions: the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) says there is only one nation in Canada; the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) says there are two. So, the debate is most urgent because the problem is liable to create a cabinet crisis, and the debate will inevitably continue on cabinet solidarity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder anew if it might not be wise to stop this discussion. I think I was perfectly right when I indicated a moment ago to the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) that a problem of such scope could certainly not be solved by a debate within the limits of standing order 26, and I am sure the hon. member for Lapointe surely agrees with me on this point.

I cannot imagine what argument could be put forward by the hon. member for Villeneuve or some other member of the house to prove that such a broad question should be considered this afternoon, in the very particular circumstances of the business intended for this afternoon. Once again, I wish to remind the hon. member that, in any event, I have already made a ruling I would not prevent the hon. members from stating their points of view, although I think that this debate should stop now.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, if we are not allowed to put forward our views on the urgency of the debate, I believe that the whole procedure was irregular. The hon. members for Villeneuve, Trois-Rivières and Sherbrooke were permitted to voice their opinion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I said before, the hon. member will certainly have the opportunity, within a very short while, to submit his representations when it is possible to have this debate. As he knows, the rules state merely that the Chair should listen to the representations and to the suggestions that are made. However, they do not state that the Chair must listen to all the arguments, all the representations of each member. I think the rules give full permission, however, to the Speaker of the House to come to a decision before he listens to the 264 members. Therefore, I ask the hon. members once again to allow me to come to the next item of business on the order of the day.

Mr. Caouette: I rise on a point of order. I think that to clarify the present situation and without embarking immediately on a debate, as you suggest, if the Prime Minister gave us some indication so as to advise us approximately when such a debate would take place in the House of Commons, it would be satisfactory to everyone because, under the present circumstances, neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives utter a word in the house, while outside the house, everybody uses phrases such as "one nation", "two nations," "two founding people" and "three founding people." One does not know where to go—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member could perhaps put that question to the Prime Minister when we reach the question period.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have here standing order 26 which states this:

Any ruling made by Mr. Speaker after listening to argument on the question or urgency.

There is no mention here that Mr. Speaker can restrict the reasons, can allow certain members to speak on the question and refuse that permission to others, but it states and I quote:

—after listening to argument—

—on the question of urgency. That is exactly what I intended to do, Mr. Speaker. You do not want me to do it. I shall not do it. I am going to co-operate with the Chair but it is rather strange that other hon. members were allowed to state their reasons and that, when my turn came, I was denied that permission, and I still wonder why.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LEGISLATION TO BE DEALT WITH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I ask this question in the interest of facilitating the business of the house and enlarging the comprehension of members and the public. I ask the Prime Minister whether on an early occasion he will give to parliament, as he has given to the press, a list of legislation and a detailed timetable of the priority for dealing with such legislation. This will provide Canadians across the country with some assurance that the very real issues of economic expansion, high prices, national development and national unity will be faced firmly by this parliament.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to see that the right hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman has already begun to impress me. I would be very glad to see that the hon. gentleman is given a list of the kind he has suggested, and other hon. members also. The priority and order in which these proposals are to be taken should be worked out in consultation with the leaders of the parties. In respect of the particular matters which the hon. gentleman mentioned, which are not necessarily related to specific acts of parliament at this time, there will be a budget debate—I think it will be next week—of five days, I believe, if parliament wishes to take five days, and I hope we will be able to cover the economic situation at that time. Then there will be two supply debates very shortly. So far as legislative proposals are concerned, I suggest there be a meeting at a very early date to try to work out priorities which will be agreeable to all.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO SETTLEMENT NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can he inform the house whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs, during his stay in New York leading our delegation to the United Nations, has had discussions with representatives of other governments regarding possible steps toward peace negotiations in Viet Nam? If so, can the right hon. Prime Minister inform the house whether there is some hope that such steps are being seriously considered by the governments concerned?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has discussed this and other matters with delegates to the United Nations assembly. He has had several meetings with foreign ministers. Viet Nam was certainly one of the matters discussed, as indeed were other matters including the situation in the Near East.

As a result of these discussions I can only say at this time that there is nothing to encourage the view that constructive negotiations on the war in Viet Nam can begin at this time. But that does not mean we are not pursuing with others at the United Nations the possibility of changing that situation. My hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs made his statement to the assembly today. He dealt with this matter, among others, in that statement. I hope he will be in the house tomorrow, and perhaps he will be in a position then to answer questions on that statement.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the right hon. gentleman inform the house whether the government has recently made representations to the government of the United States urging it to stop the bombing of North Viet Nam, particularly, if I may put it this way, the irresponsible and dangerous bombing within miles of the Chinese border?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this matter was included in my hon. friend's statement today. He had discussed this and other matters with the representative of the United States government. If my hon. friend has read that statement he will have noticed—I am paraphrasing the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs because I have not the text before me—that the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not see any hope of negotiations until the bombing of North Viet Nam stopped; words to that effect.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would express the feeling of appreciation of many, I am sure, on this side of the house over the minister's very strong stand at the United Nations this morning pressing for the early suspension of bombing in order that talks might begin.

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

CUBA—CALL BY O.A.S. TO SUSPEND TRADING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether the government has received any formal communication from the Organization of American States regarding its call to friendly nations to cease trading with Cuba.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. We have received the resolutions of that conference but there has been no approach made to Canada by the organization itself in connection with the resolutions or the meeting which was held in Washington recently. At least I had no knowledge of any such approach early this morning but I will make further inquiries.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

QUEBEC—REPORTED PLAN FOR INDEPENDENCE IN FIVE YEARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Is the Prime Minister aware of the existence of a plan which would allow the Union Nationale to achieve independence for Quebec within the next five years?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Only from what I have read in the newspapers, Mr. Speaker, including a statement which apparently was made this morning by a representative of the government of the province of Quebec denying the significance that has been attached to any such statement. I am not sure, in fact, that he did even deny its existence.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Does the Prime Minister recognize the urgency of a debate on this matter in case such a plan did exist, and when could this debate take place here in the federal parliament?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: I can think of no more important subject to be discussed in this house at the right time and in proper circumstances, and I hope that will be very shortly.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

In view of the statement made in Montmorency by the member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) on the eventuality of a Canadian republic, could the Prime Minister tell the house whether the matter has been referred to the cabinet, and whether it is the intention of the government to introduce shortly in this house a bill to amend the constitution of the Canadian government?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that this question is in order in the circumstances.

Mr. Allard: Why not?

[English]

TRADE

ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRIES AFFECTED BY GENEVA AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry. Has the government any plans for easing the impact of the Kennedy round tariff reductions on companies whose products are sold only in the Canadian market? If so, when does the government expect to announce such plans?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, consideration has been given to this question. Plans are in preparation and when appropriate an announcement will be made.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say whether there are any plans to protect the agricultural products of Canada?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I point out that such products are not within my province, and I prefer not to be too precise on that.

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that one of the consequences of the Kennedy round tariff adjustments might well be to create unemployment in certain industries, has the Minister of Industry consulted with the minister of manpower for the purpose of setting up a crash program to accelerate the retraining and relocation of the employees affected by those changes?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, such discussions have been held.

[Later:]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or to the Prime Minister. It is related to an earlier question directed to the Minister of Industry with regard to the Kennedy round. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Prime Minister assure us that studies are being undertaken by the government to look into the possible alleviation of the impact of the Kennedy round on agriculture, such as are now being undertaken with respect to other segments of the economy? After all, agriculture is still an industry.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall have to speak to my colleagues about that, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PARTICIPATION BY BRITISH COLUMBIA IN RETRAINING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Could the minister tell the house whether the province of British Columbia has yet signed an agreement with the federal government to participate in the occupational retraining program to which reference has just been made? If not, can the minister tell the house what effect this will have upon the number of positions open to persons now applying for retraining and improving their technical skills?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that the question is perhaps too detailed and should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Speaker, if I could ask the first question I will take the second one at ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It might be simpler to take both at ten o'clock.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REQUEST FOR MORE EFFECTIVE METHODS OF DEALING WITH ACCIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport which I know is of concern not only to both of us but to the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Transport and his department. Has the parliamentary secretary anything to report with respect to requests by Canadian Pacific Railway train crew employees for improved first aid and transportation arrangements in certain areas to deal more effectively with accidents on the railroad?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question be placed on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FEED GRAIN FREIGHT SUBSIDY TO ONTARIO PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, normally I would address this question to the minister of forestry or the Minister of Agriculture, but since neither is in the house and the matter is urgent may I be permitted to address it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the contract price for new corn in Ontario is already 25 cents a bushel lower than last year, will the right hon. gentleman undertake to have the house informed as to whether, in order to check this alarming trend, the Canadian livestock feed grain board has recommended to the government a freight subsidy on this corn which is moving into eastern markets similar to that on western grain?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question appears to the Chair to be the type of question which should be placed on the order paper. If the hon. gentleman thinks that I am wrong he might give notice that it be discussed on the adjournment proceedings, whereupon I would give it priority.

Mr. Danforth: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a very urgent matter. This corn is in the process of being marketed. Every day's delay means a lot of money to the farmers involved. To have the matter delayed until a later debate would just increase the pressure on this particular commodity.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister of forestry I have a question for the Prime Minister which is related to the question asked by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) concerning the plight of the feed grain producers in southwestern Ontario.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would undertake to discuss with the minister of forestry, who answers for the Canadian livestock feed grain board, the possibility of implementing the recommendation of the standing committee on agriculture, which appears at pages 542 and 543 of the fourth report of that committee dated March 22, 1965. This recommendation suggests enlargement of the feed grain assistance policy to cover feed grain producers in Ontario whose products are destined for markets which are in eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to discuss this matter.

[Mr. Danforth.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED CHANGE IN SITTING HOURS AND ORDER OF BUSINESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the government house leader, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the importance of the debate which has been called for today, will the government agree that this house should forgo the private members' hour and sit until ten o'clock tonight?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to consult with my colleagues and try to reply informally later.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the government house leader whether he intends to call a house leaders' meeting to discuss the matter so as to prevent any kind of backlash that might eventuate if this question is not discussed through the normal channels.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be quite happy to discuss it with any of the house leaders.

[Later:]

Mr. MacEachen: I should like to rise on a point of order and clear up for the benefit of hon. members the question of the sitting hours for the rest of the day. I have had a word with, I think, most of the house leaders, and without asking them to take any responsibility for this suggestion I propose that we forgo private members' hour, continue with the estimates until six o'clock, and then follow the regular practice for the rest of the day.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I listened with some interest to the minister's statement during which he indicated he had discussed this matter with most of the house leaders. I wish to state categorically that the minister did not mention it to any member of our party.

An hon. Member: What party?

Mr. Patterson: As for the matter which was discussed when he was over on this side of the house, he did sit beside me but he never mentioned the subject to which he has just referred. I object to his indication that the house leaders have been contacted with regard to this proposal. Furthermore, I should like to know just why the leader of the house is taking his present attitude, whether it is deliberate or not.

Mr. Speaker: Order. A proposal has been made by the minister. Without going into the details of the intervention by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, is it agreed that the house shall sit at the times suggested by him, and is it so ordered?

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order or on a question of privilege, if you prefer it that way. I am aware that the three independent members here do not express their opinions on all questions and it seems to me that, as representatives of the people, we should have the same rights at least as every member here and that, as a matter of courtesy, the hon. minister could have come over here to ask us whether or not we objected to that. We do not require so much after all and, even if some of my Liberal friends do not understand that we are protecting their interests at this time, I wish nevertheless to reiterate that we do not accept, whatever may be our differences of opinion, to get a poorer treatment than the other members who, for their part, resigned themselves to the guidance of a leader. We are not even asking, Mr. Speaker, that there be a leader here but, while coming this way one could have asked us: Have you any objection to that, yes or no?

That is all we are asking, to get the same treatment as the other members and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that is our privilege.

[English]

Mr. Patterson: It is not our intention to thwart the will of the house at this time, but I wish to say that in future we may have to examine carefully any decisions we may take if consideration has not been given to discussing such matters as this with the house leaders either individually or at a meeting.

Mr. MacEachen: On the point of order or question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, the proposition was, of course, put up to each member of the house and each member of the house is free to accept or reject it. House leaders and others were treated alike. But I do reserve my position with regard to the final point raised by the hon. gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give the hon. minister the assurance that he has a very agreeable personality with which we can co-operate. All we ask is that he sees us somewhat more often and listens to us. We have nothing against him, we are agreeable to the decision he submits to the house. We are ready to accept it but as the leader of the Créditistes has said, there is a principle involved in the questions that will arise in the future.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The proposal has been made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the house forgo private members' hour from five to six and sit thereafter from eight o'clock—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: —that the house adjourn at six o'clock. My understanding now is that the house is to adjourn at six o'clock having suspended the private members' hour from five to six. This requires the unanimous consent of the house. Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

RESEARCH

TERMINATION OF ASSISTANCE TO HARP PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry. In view of the current discussions which are taking place, is the government reconsidering its decision to withdraw support from the HARP project?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, Mr. Speaker. There have been very long and intensive examinations into the HARP project. The decision to terminate Canadian government assistance was made some 19 months ago. The HARP project was advised that Canadian government assistance would be terminating in a period of one year from the time of the decision. This year has now run out and circumstances do not appear to have altered so as to justify a change in that decision.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question. What provision, if any, is the government making to keep in Canada scientists who will otherwise be obliged to move to the United States with the project?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, we have been exploring with the McGill authorities other possible work alternatives for this group.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN COST OF LIVING INDEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the release by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics under date of September 25 which discloses that changes will be made in 1968 in the industry selling price indexes and wholesale price indexes, can the minister advise whether changes will be made in the cost of living index, changing its present 1949 base equalling 100 to a more recent year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question appears to be argumentative and I do not think it is acceptable.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that major revisions of this type can cause considerable inconvenience to users of these indexes. Long term contracts have to be written in the immediate future which make use of these indexes. I am requesting this information because these contracts will have to contain a provision which allows for a change to higher industry selling prices, and for these reasons I think it is important that we know the government's plans in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the question should be placed on the order paper.

FINANCE

TAXATION REPORT—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR FILING BRIEFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I would ask the right hon. gentleman, does the extension announced yesterday by the Minister of Finance with respect to the deadline on the filing of briefs on the Carter report on taxation mean, hopefully, that the report is to be scrapped?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

REQUEST FOR TAX REDUCTION ON PRODUCTION MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the increased difficulties which will be encountered because of the Kennedy round tariff agreement, will the minister recommend to the Minister of Finance that he give consideration to easing the tax on production machinery so that our own Canadian manufacturers can compete against foreign firms which are exempt from this tax?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, under the Kennedy round agreements the tariff on production machinery coming into the country will be reduced, thereby reducing the costs that go into production.

Mr. Irvine: May I ask a supplementary question. We know the tax is to be reduced, but a tax will still remain, and it will be of such proportions that it will make it difficult for some Canadian manufacturers to compete.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is argumentative.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING UNIVERSALITY OF FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. My question arises out of the growing concern over the past two months which was partially clarified yesterday by the statement the minister made at the Chateau Laurier. Now that the minister has clarified the position of businessmen, doctors and lawyers with regard to the universality of the unemployment insurance fund, could he extend his clarification to cover other professions, such as teachers and nurses.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I welcome the question, Mr. Speaker, because I welcome the opportunity to clear up a statement that has given rise to some misunderstanding. In the speech mentioned I said that there has been a trend toward universality and that certain other classes may come in. I said to the teachers, however, when their representatives met with me recently, that they are near the bottom of any universal list, if they ever do come in.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister take this opportunity also to clarify that statement contained in his speech which refers to the extension of universality to any who are not functioning as employees on wages or salaries, or their employers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this line of questioning is out of order.

INDUSTRY

CONSIDERATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF INTENSE NEUTRON GENERATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the government come to a decision with respect to proceeding with the substantial project of the intense neutron generator requested by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker. The matter is still being studied at cabinet committee level.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the substantial size and expense of this project, is it intended to submit it eventually to a parliamentary committee or to the house for approval?

Mr. Pepin: It has already been submitted to the science council. The Prime Minister or the cabinet will decide if the step recommended is a wise one.

EXPO '67

ASSISTANCE TO VISITORS DURING MONTREAL TRANSIT STRIKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges-J. Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) since Expo comes under his jurisdiction.

Has the minister received from the authorities of Expo 67 requests for assistance in the transportation of visitors now in Montreal to the Expo site during the strike of the public transportation system which is dragging on? Has he been approached by the authorities of Montreal or Expo 67 about that matter?

[English]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have been in constant communication with the officials of Expo. I am meeting with the board of Expo in Montreal on Friday. This is a matter that is constantly before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister tell us if he is ready to offer that transportation service if the Expo authorities request it?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is hypothetical.

BROADCASTING

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN CONSIDERATION OF NEW ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Having in mind the questions and answers yesterday on the subject of the introduction of the new broadcasting legislation, and particularly whether the legislation will be referred to the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, my question is this. Has a firm decision been taken on the procedure to be followed, and will the bill be referred to the committee I have mentioned after second reading?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision. At the moment, I think, some discussions are going on among the representatives of the parties, but I cannot say whether there is anything firm.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he able to advise the house and country of any initiatives which the government is taking or plans to take, either in a commonwealth or security council context, to hasten the realization of the government's declared aims in reference to the situation existing in Rhodesia?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not able to answer that question on orders of the day, Mr. Speaker. We have been having discussions with other governments inside the commonwealth with regard to the commonwealth aspect of this very important matter, and inside the security council, because this question will be coming before the security council.

TRADE

POTASH—ALLEGED DUMPING BY CANADA ON U.S. MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I answer the question that yesterday I undertook to answer today. The question by the hon. member for Melville was about action being taken with respect to the alleged dumping of Canadian potash. The answer is that we are aware of the anti-dumping investigation that is being carried out by the United States treasury. This investigation is still in its preliminary stages. We are in touch with the firms involved and have provided them with relevant information regarding anti-dumping regulations and procedures applied in the United States. As I have said, this is only preliminary, and I shall report developments to the house later.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): May I ask a supplementary question in respect of the anti-dumping regulations. Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce not aware of the prices charged by Canadian producers? If so, why does he wait on the results of a United States investigation?

Mr. Speaker: That question, too, is argumentative, I should think.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would he consider the possibility of recommending the creation of a committee of the house to study the problem of the constitution in Canada?

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This question, or one like it, was asked yesterday. I cannot add anything to what I said yesterday.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): My question is for the Prime Minister. Will the right hon. gentleman use his undisputed talents in the field of international reconciliation to assure us that the Secretary of State will soon be able to resume her proper place in the house.

Mr. Speaker: That question is out of place.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN DESIGNATION OF NATIVE PEOPLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to ask the Secretary of State whether, in view of the desire of a great many native Indian people in Canada to be referred to and considered as Canadian citizens, she would have a conversation with her colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to find out whether, in the amendments to the Indian Act which are being prepared, provision might be made for some designation enabling native people to be considered on the same footing as anyone else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

SASKATCHEWAN—INQUIRY AS TO QUOTAS AND BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce as the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Can he inform the house when we may expect a general quota in the province of Saskatchewan, and when box cars will be available to handle the grain? I should like to mention one point specifically, Mr. Speaker. Radville in Saskatchewan is one place where the situation is serious.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have a reply I can give in connection with Radville, but perhaps it would be better if we were to wait a few moments until we go into committee and I can deal more fully with these matters.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of Industry. Recalling the hon. gentleman's repeated assurances in the house that the Canada-United States automobile pact would result in lower prices for automobiles in Canada, could the minister indicate what steps he has taken with regard to the current price increases?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The hon. gentleman is apparently not aware that the recent price increases in the United States with application to 1968 model cars were considerably higher than was the case here.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Is the minister not aware that Ford have increased the prices of their cars in Canada by $90?

Mr. Drury: Is the hon. gentleman not aware that in the United States the increase is $131?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT AND OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is for the Secretary of State. I wonder whether along with her concern for parks she has shown a similar concern for the establishment of a Canadian film corporation, the subject of a bill which she was anxious to have passed earlier this year. Can the hon. lady tell us when the corporation will be set up and when it will begin to function?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): We have been awaiting appointments to the C.B.C. I have been discussing this with various individuals and if the one matter has not been resolved soon, the other will be.

HOUSING

EFFECT ON MORTGAGE RATES OF BANK INTEREST INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister been advised by those concerned whether the increase of one half of one per cent in the interest rate charged by the Bank of Canada, as announced last night, will have any effect on mortgage rates of interest?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I will make inquiries, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBLE UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM TARIFF REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the Minister of Industry and Defence Production (Mr. Drury) indicated a while ago that he had been discussing the consequences of the lowering of tariffs, could the Minister of Manpower and Immigration tell us in which industries and regions such unemployment is expected?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the program under study and the ideas that we are discussing concern all those industries which might have to tackle the problems mentioned by the hon. member but we have not referred to any particular industry.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order; house again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. Vote 1 will be found at page 492 of the bluebook. The details thereof are listed at page 493.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

1. Departmental administration including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $8,429,500.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall this item carry?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased I have this opportunity of returning so soon after the session reconvened to the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. I think hon. members will recall that we stood item No. 1 and passed all the other items. It was stood at the particular request of the then leader of the opposition so that he might have a chance to consider and discuss the Kennedy round of negotiations, but the finger of fate in the form of political vagaries has intervened in the meantime and I am sorry he is not here now to pursue the matter. Because the item was stood to discuss the Kennedy round of negotiations perhaps at the outset I should make a few remarks on the Kennedy round.

As I indicated on June 30 these Kennedy round agreements constitute the most important trade pact in history, representing a major advance in the liberalization of world trade. The concessions secured in our major foreign markets will be of benefit to every sector of the economy and every region of Canada.

The agreements provide for wide ranging tariff reductions or elimination of tariffs on virtually all the products of which Canada is already a significant exporter. Of particular importance is the reduction of tariff levels on industrial and manufactured goods generally to levels of 10 per cent or less in Canada's major export markets. This is where the new opportunities are opened up. These tariff concessions will, for the most part, be phased over a period of four years, beginning January 1 of next year. The scheduling of Canadian tariff reductions will be announced in the near future by my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

In addition to the tariff concessions obtained, the Kennedy round resulted in the conclusion of a new international grains arrangement providing for significant increases in the price range for wheat and also in the establishment of a new multilateral food aid program. I shall go into this matter in more detail in a few moments.

The third important agreement negotiated in the Kennedy round, which will also be helpful to our exports, relates to a new anti-dumping convention. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, announced last week the setting up of a special committee to receive the views and recommendations of Canadian industries with respect to Canadian implementation of this anti-dumping convention.

The Kennedy round will open major new perspectives for the expansion of Canadian exports to our major markets both in the United States and overseas. The concessions obtained will, in particular, make it possible for Canadian industry to develop export markets in the new fields of manufactured industrial products, the most rapidly growing sector of world trade. The realization of these new trading opportunities will make a significant contribution to a more viable balance of payments, and to increased employment for our rapidly growing labour force. As I have repeatedly emphasized, it is primarily up to private enterprise to ensure that these market opportunities are fully exploited. Such export expansion will, through economies of scale, help to lower costs and increase productivity.

The positive response of the Canadian business community has been gratifying. In order to ensure that Canadian exporters are made fully aware of the new export possibilities we have embarked upon a series of seminars with the business community in every region of Canada, in co-operation with the provincial governments. Good meetings have already been held in Winnipeg and Halifax. A further Kennedy round seminar will be held in Montreal tomorrow, and in the following two weeks seminars will be held in Toronto and Vancouver. We expect that, in total, more than 2,500 firms across the country will participate.

Our trade development program in response to the new opportunities opened up by the Kennedy round will be a continuing process A further series of meeetings is planned with the export committees being established by Canadian trade and industry associations. We are gearing the services of the repartment in all its aspects to the new dynamic international environment for world trade. I have already announced the extension, for the first time, of export credits and insurance facilities for Canadian exports to the United States market.

The Kennedy round is not, of course, the end of the road. We are already engaged in the consideration of what further international trade initiatives might be taken to carry forward this process of opening up channels of international trade. In this connection, it is expected that there will be a meeting of trade ministers in Geneva this fall, under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, in which we will be looking to the possibilities for the future. I am planning to attend this proposed ministerial conference. I have already had an opportunity to exchange views as to future prospects for the liberalization of world trade with Ambassador Roth, the president's special trade representative, in the United States, and with Commissioner Jean Rey, the newly elected president of the European Economic Commission.

I am also planning to hold further discussions with British ministers on these matters, as well as on the important question of possible British accession to the European Economic Community. We are maintaining the closest consultation with the British government in order to ensure that Canadian trade interests are taken fully into account.

Now, I should like to turn to the subject of wheat which has been receiving a great deal of my attention in recent days, and will continue to do so.

First, let me again clarify the position of the new international agreement scheduled to come into effect on July 1, 1968. You will recall that while the administrative provisions of the old International Wheat Agreement were continued, the price provisions lapsed on July 31 last, as I informed the house. In this connection I refer hon. members to Hansard of April 7, page 14643, and of June 5, page 1134.

An extension of the lower price range of the 1962 agreement was not acceptable to Canada and other exporting countries who were negotiating in the Kennedy round for a higher price range for wheat. Indeed, acceptance of the former and lower price range at that time would have prejudiced the securing of the higher price range then under discussion in Geneva. The Canadian position was worked out with representatives of western farm groups, who were present in Geneva during the negotiations.

As I informed the house on earlier occasions, we were successful in negotiating a 21 cent increase in the price range as compared with the old International Wheat Agreement, and I again emphasize it was an increase in the range. This agreement was signed by 17 countries, including most of the major commercial exporters and importers.

On announcing the terms of the agreement, and on other occasions, I emphasized that the specific prices at which wheat would trade within that price range would be determined by market factors of supply and demand. For example, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I said:

Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the hon. member knows, these are simply minima and maxima within which the world price can and does fluctuate. The world price still is determined largely by supply and demand, having regard, of course, to the maximum and minimum referred to here.

Subsequently, a negotiating conference was held in Rome during July and August for the purpose of expanding the Geneva accord into a full-fledged international agreement, incorporating the price and food aid commitments negotiated in Geneva as part of the Kennedy round. Fifty two countries attended the Rome conference, including all signatories of the Geneva agreement. The new grains agreement is scheduled to come into effect on July 1, 1968. This date was not Canada's preference, and we pressed hard in the negotiation in Geneva and Rome for an earlier date. However, constitutional procedures in other countries, and particularly decisions yet to be taken among the E.E.C. member states, made it impossible to obtain agreement for earlier implementation.

In the interim, until the new agreement comes into effect, it is essential that market stability and adequate prices be maintained.

I have been very concerned about the downward trend of wheat prices in recent months. I am particularly concerned that wheat has been trading in world markets slightly below the minimum prices established in the Kennedy round agreement, although they are substantially above the minimum of the old wheat agreement which was $1.74 for No. 1 Northern.

Canada did not initiate the downward trend in world wheat prices, but rather was forced to lower prices to meet competition from other exporters.

It was against this background that I met in Washington on September 12 with the United States secretary of agriculture, Hon. Orville Freeman, and the United States special representative for trade negotiations, Ambassador William Roth.

The house will recall that following these meetings greater confidence developed amongst overseas buyers. The tone of the market has improved and Canadian and United States export prices have increased two and three quarters cents per bushel.

At the present time, No. 1 Northern is priced three quarters of a cent below the new agreement minimum basis in store the lakehead. At least, it was at that price earlier today.

Mr. Woolliams: What is the price at the lakehead today?

Mr. Winters: Perhaps a cent above that as of this afternoon.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not hear the price you gave.

Mr. Winters: The price I gave was three quarters of a cent below the agreed minimum which is $1.95½. But not all grades of wheat are selling below the minimum agreed to at Geneva. No. 3 Northern is currently two cents above the new agreement minimum for that grade. At the Pacific coast, all grades of Canadian wheat are above the new agreement minimums. This I think is important to note.

Every effort is being made to sell maximum quantities of wheat at the best possible prices. In this context, it should be recognized that in the marketing of wheat, as for other products, the law of supply and demand is a vital factor, and I have consistently informed the house that the price, within the agreed range, would be determined by market factors. High prices are meaningless unless the product can be sold. The problem is to achieve the highest price at which wheat will move. This we are doing.

Crops in the northern hemisphere this year have turned out better than originally expected, and it is not surprising that this supply situation should have an effect on prices. In these circumstances, the new price range takes on particular importance and it is in the general interest that the range should be observed.

Competition from other exporters is very keen; the United States, Australia, and France are marketing wheat aggressively in world markets and we must meet this competition. The Canadian crop, fortunately, is considerably better than was anticipated in the light of dry conditions prevailing shortly before harvesting, and we are all pleased about that.

I am naturally disappointed in our wheat sales to Japan. I have been in communication with the responsible minister of Japan toward reversing the downward trend in our wheat sales to this important market. If necessary, I propose asking the minister of food and agriculture to receive me in Japan very shortly in order to help resolve this matter. There has been a number of communications on this important subject.

I am determined that everything possible should be done to ensure wheat prices will strengthen further and that wheat will trade within the range agreed to at Geneva, but not yet ratified.

When the agreement is ratified it will stand on its own feet. But, pending ratification and only until that date, the government is prepared to make up the difference between the agreed schedule of Geneva minimum prices, related to approximately $1.95½ basis No. 1 Northern in store the lakehead, and any wheat sold by the Canadian Wheat Board below this level during the period August 1, 1967 and July 1, 1968.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winters: This is the date when the new agreement is scheduled to become effective.

In the light of prevailing prices and the current stronger tone in the market, it is not anticipated that this will involve any heavy demand on the treasury, but will, I hope, be an important factor in ensuring that we achieve sales at the optimum price.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister permit an interruption at this stage?

Mr. Winters: Certainly.

Mr. Woolliams: I believe that on behalf of the government this is the first time this announcement has been made in parliament or even outside parliament to the press.

Mr. Winters: On September 14 in Winnipeg I told the trade seminar that this matter was under very close consideration and that I thought the farmers of western Canada had a right to interpret the Geneva agreement as I have now interpreted it. Now, I am able to confirm this officially as a government decision.

In conclusion, I should like to turn to our general export performance. Canada's performance in the markets of the world continues strong. In 1967, to date, as in the preceding year, the rate of growth in Canada's exports has exceeded those of other major trading nations. This means also that Canada's share of the world market has continued to expand.

Canada's merchandise exports, in the first seven months of 1967 reached $6.6 billion, up $915 million or 16 per cent from the level of the same period last year. It seems clear that the centennial export target of $11¼ billion will be reached and surpassed.

Mr. More: How much have imports increased?

Mr. Winters: Imports have increased quite substantially, but fortunately our exports have increased faster than our imports with the result that as of the date I mentioned we had a much healthier balance of trade than we had last year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winters: This continuing strong advance in exports has been achieved despite a slowing down of growth in some major markets and in world trade as a whole. Especially noteworthy is the sharp rise in sales to the United States, notwithstanding the hesitant trend of industrial activity in that country in the first part of the year. Canada's exports to the United States in 1967 to date are up 19 per cent from the same period in 1966 and are half as high again as two years ago.

Among Canada's overseas markets, the sharpest gains are being made in Japan and in some Commonwealth countries. Hon. members will have seen the reports of recent important contracts by Canadian uranium producers for deliveries to Japanese users extending through 1978.

You will recall the contract signed earlier with the United Kingdom and another contract with Ontario hydro which gave us substantial evidence of the vigorous revival of world demand for uranium for peaceful uses. The need of importing countries to protect their future requirements for nuclear power reactor fuel have sharply accelerated the pace of exploration and mine development. Canada is in a specially favourable position to meet these new demands.

The forward momentum in our total export activity must be sustained. To give more specific direction and focus to our export initiatives, I hope shortly to set targets for the coming year.

As barriers to international trade come down, and as the nations of the world move closer together, Canada's future progress toward international strength and maturity depends more than ever upon a strong performance in world markets. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure to follow the Minister of Trade and Commerce in debate because I have always said, and will repeat now, that even though we sometimes disagree philosophically or about the facts he is probably one of the leading gentlemen who sit on the front benches on the government side. Perhaps I might say that we are also personal friends.

An hon. Member: Watch him, Bob.

Mr. Woolliams: My first comment this afternoon on behalf of western Canada is of congratulation to the minister for the announcement we heard a few minutes ago. I am sure the president of the wheat pool of Alberta, the president of the wheat pool of Saskatchewan and other farm organizations have been apprehensive. They would have been more content a few weeks ago had they known that the government was considering or was prepared to make payments out of the treasury to cover any per bushel loss on grain that was sold by the Canadian Wheat Board below the minimum suggested by the new international wheat agreement which will not come into effect for approximately one year.

Probably the Family Herald, which is a farm paper, put the situation in the most succinct way. Before reading from that paper, let me say that the fact the government is considering now paying bonuses to the Canadian farmer out of taxpayers' money does not altogether change the picture. Perhaps the minister will make some explanation in that regard when I have completed my remarks. Certainly, grain was sold by other countries below the minimum to be set under the new wheat agreement or below the minimum set under the old wheat agreement resulting in a decrease in our exports.

I should like to read from page 9 of the Family Herald, the last edition, under the heading "Reports" as follows:

> Western farm leaders have been quick to react to the downward slide of wheat prices which early this month fell four cents below the floor agreed upon in last spring's Kennedy round but which does not actually go into effect until July next year. Both Charles Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and Roy Atkinson, president of the National Farmers' Union, have registered the concern of prairie producers over this development. Mr. Gibbings declared that "Canadian producers are facing the most critical situation that has existed in more than 20 years."
> A 22 cent price drop for No. 1 Northern has brought the Lakehead price from $2.13 last spring to $1.91 in early September. The price drop has brought a direct confrontation between U.S. and Canadian wheat pricing policies. While neither trade minister Robert Winters nor Canadian Wheat Board chairman, W. C. McNamara would say specifically where the price cutting started, they did acknowledge that Canadian wheat exports to Japan had suffered most during the current sales decline and that U.S. exports had taken up the slack.

Let me pause there for a moment. In other words, while there has been this vacuum between the lapse of the old agreement and the implementation of the new agreement, we have lost markets for Canadian wheat.

Let me continue reading from this article:

> Mr. Gibbings was more forthright.
> "It will be noted," he said, "that the U.S. price dipped below floor levels on July 13, the day after 52 nations met in Rome to begin discussions about implementing the sixth wheat agreement. It seems to me that all the nations participating have a moral obligation to observe the floor price to which they agreed. Technical difficulties in completing the final document should not serve as an excuse to break the floor."

Behind the increasing competition lies the fact that world production is up so wheat exports are slowing and stocks are rising. At the end of the crop year, July 31, Canadian exports totalled 482.4 million bushels compared to 545.3 million the year before. During August exports of 21 million bushels amounted to a third of the exports for the same period in 1966. Stocks too were up 67 million bushels.

Let me come quickly to my point. After we had asked for an adjournment of this house to discuss this very serious matter, after we asked the Prime Minister what would happen as a result of the 22 cent drop in the price of wheat, and following a great deal of pressure on this side of the house, the minister got up this afternoon and said to the farmers of western Canada and the country that the government intends to pay bonuses out of the treasury to western farmers because the United States has sold wheat below the price of the international wheat agreement. In other words, the taxpayers are going to have to pay for the reprisals of the United States against Canadian competitors.

While this was going on we were losing our markets, particularly in Japan. The minister may have remedied or patched up momentarily the difficulty, and may have satisfied western farmers. However, as the minister said in his opening remarks, the sale of wheat and the price of wheat, in spite of these agreements depends on the law of supply and demand. The demand existed and it was being met by Canada. During this interim period this demand was being met by the United States and we have lost important markets.

What was it that put the farmers and farm organizations in the position of believing that they were secure under the international wheat agreement? In the few minutes I have I should like to refer to what the minister said on May 15, 1967 as found at page 222 of Hansard for that date. Let me read one paragraph to point out what the minister said to get headlines across this country and which left the impression that wheat would sell for 21 or 22 cents a bushel more. On that occasion I replied to the minister that I hoped the farmers of western Canada would not believe that they were going to get the 21 or 22 cents a bushel more. This is what the minister said:

While it is not yet possible to make public detailed results because not all GATT countries have, as yet, had the opportunity of agreeing to them, I can say with respect to wheat that the basic elements of a new international wheat agreement have been agreed between major exporting and importing countries. We have achieved a significant and welcome increase in international minimum and maximum prices for specified qualities of wheat, and substantially strengthened arrangements for co-operation to maintain market stability. For No. 1 Manitoba northern, in store at the lakehead, new minimum and maximum prices will be $1.95½ and $2.35½ Canadian respectively.

To be fair to the minister, he corrected those figures the next day when he pointed out:

The maximum price for wheat at the lakehead and at Vancouver under the agreement announced yesterday should be $2.38½ and $2.46½ respectively instead of $2.35½ and $2.43½ as they appear in Hansard at pages 182, 183 and 222.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The spread of 40 cents between minimum and maximum is in U.S. funds. The above corrected figures provide for the conversion to Canadian currency at current rates.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam on that occasion asked the minister this question:

Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether this will change the 21 cents increase over the previous price increase mentioned by the minister, or will that still stand?

The minister's answer was as follows:

The 21 cents figure still stands.

I suggested to the minister on May 15, 1967, that he left the impression—he did not do it deliberately, by any means—with the farmers in the country and members of parliament that the price of wheat was going up 21 cents immediately. You can understand the reaction out west when they found that the price of wheat dropped 22 cents. They felt there was a 43 cents spread between what the minister had said in the house and what was happening economically in western Canada as far as wheat was concerned. That statement was made on May 15, 1967. The minister referred to what I read yesterday from page 1134 of Hansard. The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale said:

Mr. Speaker, this a very important question and should be answered right now, for the simple reason that the farmers in the west have planted their wheat and are waiting to know where they stand in light of the new wheat agreement.

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer this very briefly. On June 1 our ambassador in Washington did sign on behalf of the government of Canada a protocol extending the administrative articles of the 1962 wheat agreement until July 31, 1968, with provision for earlier termination in the event of a new agreement covering wheat coming into force before that date. This action was recommended by member governments of the international wheat council at its 48th session last April.

In view of that statement we considered that the articles of the international wheat agreement of 1962 were renewed. If you look at articles 13 and 14 of that agreement you will see they set out and define "minimum". The minimum is the floor price. I will have something to say about that in a few moments. That is what the western farmers fought for for many years, so they would know when they produced their wheat they would receive at least the floor price for their commodity.

This is what happened in 1929. In 1929 the price of wheat was about $1.40 a bushel. I was a boy on the farm at that time. Within six months the price had fallen to a price of 20 or 30 cents a bushel. As a result there was bankruptcy and insolvency on the farms and it took seven or eight years to recover from that situation.

We heard from the minister on June 5 that the administrative articles of the wheat agreement had been renewed and he set out the maximum and minimum prices. At page 15 of the international wheat agreement of 1962 I find this:

> If any exporting or importing country is making wheat available for purchase by exporting or importing countries at not greater than the minimum price, or if such a situation appears likely to arise, the executive secretary shall, after bringing the mater to the attention of the advisory committee on price equivalents and communicating as that committee may advise with the country concerned, report the situation to the executive committee.

In other words, if any country is selling wheat at below the minimum price, it is reported to the council that governs the matter and sets the minimum and maximum prices. The maximum price protects the importer and the minimum price protects the producer. What is the situation now? The minister says that the agreement has not been finalized. I ask, are we in a new vacuum in this respect? I suggest that we are. Will the importing countries which have been buying wheat from the United States, particularly Japan, at a price below the minimum come forward now,—the 52 countries concerned—no matter what was discussed at Geneva, and sign an agreement which will mean they will pay more per bushel for their grain? There may be further difficulty in crystallizing and finalizing the international wheat agreement.

I and the farmers of western Canada believed when we heard those answers from the minister that the agreement was being continued and there was a minimum and maximum price in respect of wheat. If there was agreement, we believed there was an obligation on the part of the United States, Canada and other exporting and importing countries to live up to the minimum and maximum prices set under the new agreement when the 52 countries met. Perhaps this was not done because of some failure on the part of the minister. I hope the minister will explain this later.

In any event, the United States decided they would get our markets. The United States seized this opportunity when there was a vacuum in the agreement, when the agreement did not operate. They seized the opportunity to sell their grain to Japan and perhaps to other countries because their exports were dropping off. Their export markets were dropping off seriously in August and they decided to take over the Canadian markets. Exports from that country had dropped to the extent of not quite 100 million bushels.

The loss of markets is just as serious as a reduction in price, because without sales there cannot be any prosperity on the farm. I remind the minister that back in 1956 when he was a member of another government, when Mr. C. D. Howe, the then minister of trade and commerce went out west, there were 700 million bushels of wheat piled up on the farms, unsold, with no quotas; and without quotas there cannot be any prosperity on the farm.

Today we face a serious situation. Not only are exports dropping off, but for weeks the government has dillied and dallied in connection with the strike of the S.I.U. and no grain has moved out of Canada. Today most of the grain is still in bins on the farms of western Canada. It is no good paying a bonus in respect of the price of wheat if that commodity remains unsold. Therefore, this is not much of a promise; it is merely an attempt to cover up a problem.

The government felt they had to bail themselves out as far as the farmers of western Canada were concerned, so they said: We will bonus you for any loss in the price of grain. But if grain cannot be sold, what good is that bonus? Why has the government got into this situation? Let us see what has happened. As the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows, the wheat board used to be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance. In April 1963, when the Liberals came into office, the Minister of Finance went to Edmonton and Regina and said that the former minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, had been wrong in telling the farmers to produce wheat. The minister said they would have a surplus of wheat. Within 30 days there was such a demand for wheat that the Minister of Finance was telling the farmers that we had not enough wheat to meet the demand. What kind of nonsense is that?

People opposite scoffed at the former minister of agriculture. They said: You did not sell the wheat. They were so busy trying to sell this idea to western Canada that they forgot their responsibility as the government to sell wheat. The position of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle at that time was that we needed an aggressive sales policy. I am sure this minister wants an aggressive sales policy for wheat. But there is a difference between the two ministers. The minister of agriculture when we were in office said that if there was any problem we would take responsibility for that problem. The Minister of Finance said no, it is always the problem of the wheat board; there are no sales without the wheat board. That kind of attitude may have created the vacuum in which the government finds itself this afternoon.

I think it will pay if for a few moments I remind the house, before putting some questions to the minister, of some of the history of wheat. From the homesteading period until 1924 the sellers of grain in western Canada were disorganized. In the fall the price of wheat went down, and when the farmers had sold all their grain the price went up. Wheat was dealt with on the grain exchange. In 1924 our fathers and grandfathers met and formed the first wheat pool. From the first wheat pool there grew, through R. B. Bennett, the Canadian Wheat Board which for the first time in Canadian history stabilized the price of wheat in much the same manner as did the farm stabilization measure with respect to other products. That measure was introduced when the hon. member for Calgary North was minister of agriculture in the Conservative government.

The wheat board then became the marketing agency for all grain. This happened during the war, and I give the Liberals credit for it. The wheat board is the farmers' marketing agency; it organizes the sellers of wheat and is able to obtain a fair return, a pool price, for wheat. The farmers and producers of western Canada feel they have been put back in a vacuum in respect of wheat. In fact, they are in a vacuum. The only thing that the minister has done as the result of probings from the opposition has been to tell the farmers that to compensate them for the lower price he will give them a bonus. He has not explained certain things which have occurred, and I think we deserve an explanation.

Here are the questions that I should like answered, Mr. Chairman.

1. Has the United States or any other country broken the terms and conditions of the international wheat agreement? Is that agreement operating on a legal or moral basis?

I see that the minister is getting some guidance from the new Liberal member for Medicine Hat, who never really wanted to sell wheat to the Communist countries anyhow.

2. With the lapse of the international wheat agreement after the meeting of the nations at Geneva, was there a moral undertaking by all exporting and importing countries of grain who were a party to the agreement to live up to the terms until a new agreement became effective?

Why is that question important, Mr. Chairman? It is important for this reason. If the United States continues to sell its grain below the minimum price stated in the international wheat agreement, which is not now in operation, then we are going to lose our markets. What country is going to pay more for wheat from Canada if it can get it cheaper from the United States? Is this a reprisal by the United States against Canada because the former Conservative government dared sell wheat to Russia and Communist China? Has the minister put that question to the United States? We want to know what has been the nature of the talks.

3. Did the minister know on May 15, 1967 when he announced the prices in the House of Commons and the increase of 22½ cents for No. 1 Northern that there was no minimum or maximum price that could be legally enforced, and that basically the farmers of western Canada were operating in a vacuum for the first time in many years?

If the farmers were operating in a vacuum, and if wheat was operating in a vacuum as far as its being a market commodity, why did the minister say that we have a new minimum and a new maximum even in spite of that vacuum? We are almost back on the old grain exchange system where the United States can make moral arrangements with Canada and then go out and dump its wheat on to our markets.

That is the kind of stand that I should have liked to see the minister take on that night in

May. Perhaps his trade officials have led him down the garden path so far as the United States is concerned, and that country is taking over our markets. I should like to know what is going on behind the closed doors.

4. Has the United States subsidized its exports of grain so as to be able to supply Canada's best customers with wheat below the minimum price? How much has the United States dumped on the market?

I did not know what the minister was going to announce today but I should like to ask him another question. On the strength of Canada subsidizing its wheat for the first time, will the United States make other reprisals? Did the minister say to the minister of agriculture or minister of trade in the United States, or to any of his officials: We are going back to western Canada to bolster up our political chances by giving the farmers a bonus?

One of our great problems in the export market has always been the competition of the United States. That is why over the years governments have always considered the matter very carefully before subsidizing grain in this manner. It was always felt that if we were to subsidize grain in this manner the United States, with its power and economic might, would be able to dump its grain onto our markets.

I referred to 1929 and 1930 when young men and women were taken out of school and put off the farms with nothing but their possessions. We have just had the biggest drought in western Canada in 30 years, and the only reason we have had any kind of crop is the reserve moisture of former years. In Great Britain today there is a recession and there are economic difficulties in other countries. High interest rates prevail. The same circumstances existed prior to 1929 when the crash came on the farms. This crash will come again, in spite of the assurances of the minister, if we lose our markets.

What good is a bonus, Mr. Chairman, if we do not sell our wheat? How long will the taxpayers of Canada keep the government in office if no wheat is moving to Canadian markets? That is the question.

5. Is there no agreement operating at the present time to protect the western producers and to guarantee them any floor price, or do we merely accept the word of the United States that that country will maintain a moral obligation to Canada?

If there is such a moral obligation, what was the question asked by the minister when he met Mr. Freeman on September 12? Did the minister ask Mr. Freeman why the United States was selling its wheat when it gave us its word that it would not sell it below the minimum price? Was this action taken so as to get our markets? I should like to know what was the answer. Was the government pussy-footing with the United States? Or did the minister stand up like the former leader of the opposition when he was prime minister and was told that the United States would not assist Canada to load grain destined for China and Russia? The right hon. gentleman told the President at that time that Canadian wheat would be loaded on the ships and would be exported, that this country was a sovereign state. I suggest that this is the kind of action that this government should be taking. Are we now an economic satellite of the United States in respect of wheat and other commodities?

I am not expert in industrial affairs, Mr. Chairman, but I suggest that members of parliament from areas of industry should take note of what happens to those industries when tariffs go by the board.

6. Is the position that the United States has taken since the Geneva conference against Canada's export of grain a reprisal against Canada for the exports to China and Russia? Has the minister discussed this?

7. What assurance has the minister received from Mr. Freeman in Washington to restore the buyers' confidence in the market and recover one cent or more?

Can the minister say whether since his chat the price has gone back $1\frac{3}{4}$ cents or $2\frac{3}{4}$ cents? The fact is that the price has gone down 22 cents. Is it bouncing back? Time will tell, but it is taking a long time.

8. Can the minister now guarantee to parliament that no further sales by the United States or any other country will be made below the minimum price?

Did the officials in the United States say to the minister that they were sorry they ruined our market in Japan and may ruin it in Great Britain, but that from now on they were going to be good boys because they had a moral arrangement with us? Did they take advantage of this vacuum to unload their surpluses? That is the question that the farmers in the farm organizations across the country are asking, and they are not going to be satisfied with the minister's announcement today that he is giving a bonus when our market prospects are deteriorating day by day and nothing is being done. If the minister had been given a guarantee in this regard I think he would have mentioned it when he reported to the house a few moments ago.

9. Were any sales made by Canada below the minimum price? We did not hear about that. Is this the reason we lost the Japanese market to the United States? I understand from newspaper reports that we lost two thirds of that market, and if that report is correct it is a big blow. Has Canada told the United States that we are going to embark upon a wheat war? I am not recommending such a step by any means, but I think there should have been some strong talk by Canada on this question.

I appreciate the patience of the minister and the members of the committee on this question, and in conclusion I congratulate the minister for saying that he will bonus the wheat producers for their loss because of the bungling of his government. However, I do not congratulate him on the vacuum which is costing us markets day by day unless he has received some assurance in this regard from the United States, and unless he can produce some answers to the nine questions I have posed which he has heard this afternoon and will appear in Hansard.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Trade and Commerce always radiates self-assurance and confidence when making announcements to this house or when offering an interpretation of some recent developments in trade talks. But I think that most members of the committee, certainly on this side of the house, have come to learn by experience that sometimes it is a little dangerous to accept the minister's interpretation of what is going on at its face value. It seems that the minister is a victim of his own feeling of overconfidence with respect to many recent developments.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, the hon. member for Bow River and others referred to occasions in this house—they are May 16, May 25 and June 15, to be exact—when the minister, in statements or answers to questions, clearly said that the price of wheat then prevailing in world markets would continue to prevail for the next 12 month period or so, or until the inception of the new agreement. He said that price levels would remain, to the best of his information and judgment, at what they then were, around $2.12 or $2.13. On page 577 of Hansard for May 25 the minister said:

> —it is understood in trade terms that this means the new price range which I have reported to the house will be observed in the months ahead until the new agreement becomes fully effective.

Being human, the minister, as everybody else—despite his self confidence—is liable to err. Throughout the summer he had ample opportunity to take remedial action. For some strange, inexplicable reason, he failed to do so until about the middle of September. It was then, we are given to understand, that he went to Washington to talk with the Secretary of Agriculture in an effort, presumably, to persuade that government to change its wheat export sale and pricing policy. Though the minister's effort resulted in relative failure, he ought to be given credit for making the effort. Nevertheless, the effort could have been made sooner.

Throughout July, August and until the first part of this month, the price of Canadian wheat declined in a drastic manner, that is the proper term. The decline was so drastic in fact that a leading spokesman of the wheat producing industry of this country referred to it as being of epic proportions, and certainly worse in cost-price terms than any decline we have experienced in the past two decades.

The minister, by way of announcements and questions answered in the house, gave us to understand that the old wheat agreement would be carried on until the inception of the new agreement next July. Yet, events have shown that the minister's statements were not correct. Yesterday, when questioned by hon. members on this side, the minister sought to qualify his answers. He said that he had been referring only to the instruments of administration with respect to the old wheat agreement being extended, and that he had not meant to say that the agreement itself was being extended. Certainly, the spirit of the agreement has not been extended.

As we now know, after the last agreement ended—even before that—our neighbours to the south pursued a trade policy with respect to wheat that was a violation of the spirit of the old agreement. Certainly, it violated the spirit of any new agreement.

The ink was hardly dry on the agreement protocols that were drawn in Geneva and Rome last April, July or August when the United States pricing policy for wheat became such that wheat prices fell toward the floor agreed on in the new agreement.

Lest I digress too far I wish to say, with respect to the minister's announcement of this afternoon, that the government's new policy will be to make good the difference between the floor price of the new agreement that is to take effect next year and any prices received that are lower than that. That policy is important psychologically. It is difficult to calculate extemporaneously at this time what the announcement will mean in dollars and cents. Nevertheless, I agree with the hon. member for Bow River. While the bonus, as he called it, is one thing, the timing of it is another. The sense of timing possessed by this government is poor, and it was poor in this instance. I agree with the hon. member's statement.

If the new policy had been arrived at a few weeks ago or even a month ago, the Canadian Wheat Board might have been able to pursue a more aggressive policy in protecting our established markets in Japan and elsewhere, those markets where we have been slipping in competition with the United States with respect to wheat sales. Once a market is lost it is not readily regained. If it is ever regained, it may take a few years to do so. If the policy of paying the differential between the new floor price and the lower prices is acceptable and laudable now, it would have been all the more welcome, all the more sensible and all the more defensible a few weeks earlier. Though I have no proof, I hazard to say that the government's decision was an eleventh hour decision. The decision is good, but how much better would it have been had it come earlier. I am prepared to insist that the government's announcement came as the result of a hasty last minute reflection. I say that because the collective thinking of the cabinet was not much disposed to the idea of some form of price support. Only ten days ago the minister said in a press conference that the government had no intention of considering a price support on subsidy program for wheat. Ten days later it is announced, but only after some markets are lost.

On his return from Washington the minister, as reported in the press, said something which left me surprised and appalled. He admitted that wheat price levels were softening, that they were soft. In the face of a 22 cent decline, which is a decline of approximately 10 per cent, to say that there is a softness in wheat prices shows a degree of nonchalance which I hope that this minister and his colleagues will not exhibit again.

The minister said also that the government was not considering any form of subsidy or price supports. This would be approximately ten days ago. It may well be that the government was in fact considering such a proposal at the time but for some reason or another having to do with strategy, possibly, it was decided not to disclose the nature of those deliberations in connection with a price support policy.

Now, we have an announcement, and it will help. There is little point in indulging in harsh recriminations, or attempting to discover why the minister was not apparently aware of the adverse trend in prices which was developing in July and August. Certainly, from May until now there has been great confusion in the minds of many people, not only among producers but among those who sit in legislatures and in parliament as to the likely effect of the trade talks on wheat prices. As for the minister's explanations and interpretations, all they did was to leave in their wake a sea of confusion, confusion compounded because his statements were contradicted by actual events or became so soon after.

Now we find, in a sense, remedial action taken. I refer to today's announcement about the readiness of this government to provide moneys by way of price support to cover this differential. There was no need for the government to have waited so long. All the indications during the past few months, indeed, throughout last year and 1967 to date, showed that there was an inflationary trend developing in this country. This is far from being abated; in fact, it is gaining momentum. The index of the cost of farm production surged last year, and this year the rate was even higher. The more general cost of living index increased to a point at which it brought forth a general cry of protest. This year the indicators show that the rate of increase in the cost of living is even higher than it was last year. Thus, a 22 cent decline in the price of wheat has taken place this summer—call it a 10 per cent decline by way of understatement—at the very time when the cost of production is surging upward unabated.

It is ironical that last May when the minister was referring to the new minimum and maximum levels which had tentatively been agreed at the trade talks—an increase amounting to 21 cents—the hon. member for Medicine Hat and others pointed out, quite rightly, that while such an increase was better than nothing it was less than satisfactory in the light of the continuing increase in the farmers' cost of production. If this 21 cent increase was not satisfactory then, what words can now be used to describe the situation which developed this summer when instead of going up 10 per cent the price of wheat went down 10 per cent. All one can say is that a development of this kind is simply unacceptable to Canadian farmers and to western farmers in particular. It is unacceptable almost in a physical sense because if a situation of this kind were to continue in the face of rising costs of production it would mean an even more rapid consolidation of farm units and an even more rapid exodus of the farm population to the larger towns and cities. This would be bound to result in serious social and economic disruption.

I cannot understand why the logical policy which the government has announced today could not have been decided upon and announced earlier for reasons which were well put forward by the hon. member for Bow River and for reasons which I myself have already stated. There is a further reason why the government might well have arrived at its decision some time in July or August or as soon as it became obvious that the price trend was gaining momentum back in May and June. The precedent they have for taking the course of action now announced arises from the statement made by the Prime Minister in the election campaigns of 1963 and 1965. It is on record in the newspapers. The Toronto Globe and Mail featured a story on this very point—"Pearson Promises Prairie Farmers $2 a Bushel for Wheat". The Saskatchewan Star-Phoenix had a similar headline, as did other papers. My old friend Hazen Argue came to my home town to make the same kind of promise. This summer that promise which had no practical meaning in all of 1966 and until July of 1967 could have been implemented in a meaningful way, yet the government chose to wait until the end of September before making an announcement. In the interval, as the hon. member for Bow River has said, markets have been lost, markets which it will be difficult to recapture.

I should mention one further aspect of this promise before going on to deal with other matters. These promises made by the Prime Minister and his colleagues in those election campaigns were not made spontaneously or "off the cuff". Let me quote from a news story carried in the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Pearson, in notes of an address prepared in advance, promised western grain growers that a Liberal government would immediately provide a floor price of $2 a bushel for No. 1 northern.

It was not an ejaculation prompted by some kind of emotional circumstance, such as that which may have prompted President de Gaulle to utter the kind of statements that he did when visiting this country. This was a contrived promise by the Prime Minister, reiterated by his colleagues. It was something calculated, but apparently it was never intended that it should materialize. These are rather harsh words to use, but it appears the promise was calculated and it deceived. The result was deceptive, but now at least a half step is being taken in the direction of fulfilling the promise that was made three, four or five years ago.

In the interval, costs of production have increased tremendously. If the Prime Minister was warranted in thinking in terms of a $2 bushel floor in 1962 or 1963, what should the floor be now if it is to have corresponding value or meaning? All we have is the minister's statement to the effect, as I understand it, that there will be a floor price of $1.95½ per bushel, and when the price falls below the new agreement floor the difference will be made up out of the public treasury.

The lowering of wheat prices has not meant anything directly to wheat producers in the United States. As I understand it, they are sheltered from the buffeting that takes place in international trade. Price stabilization and price support are adhered to by the United States government of the day as a matter of public policy. As a result, farmers know where they stand and are able to plan ahead.

But in Canada, even at present, it would seem that when a storm brews in international trade and pricing, our farmers are expected to weather the worst of the storm and stand all the buffeting on their own. This kind of treatment should not be tolerated in the future. I hope that between now and the inception of the new international wheat agreement in mid-summer of 1968 it will not be necessary to implement this eleventh hour policy just announced by the government. I hope the development of events will see prices return to the levels that prevailed up until the summer of this year.

If the prospects of a return to the former levels and above the new I.W.A. floor are not good, it is likely that some countries which, until now, have been prepared to ratify the new agreement will choose to stall and not ratify it. As I understand it, the period of ratification falls between October 15 and the end of November, only a few weeks from now.

The course of events during the past few months have caused a critical situation, one which has been outlined by Mr. Gibbings and others who have described what took place during June, July and Augsut when the federal government sat back and did nothing with respect to this crucial matter.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the minister before the next speaker commences. In view of the fact that taxpayers' money is contributed by all the people in the nation, the small farmers as well as the large farmers, is the minister aware that under his method of payment most of the money will go to the big operators and the small fellows will get nothing? The fellow with 50,000 bushels of wheat will get the lion's share. That is what this system of payment means. I would like to hear what the minister has to say about that. I am also waiting anxiously to hear what the small farmers throughout western Canada will have to say.

Mr. Winters: Any deficiency there might be, and I trust there will not be very much —I hope there will not be any substantial charge against the taxpayers because we all hope and expect the price will return to a more normal trading range—will be paid to the wheat board which in turn will make the payments in respect of deliveries.

Mr. Kindt: But there is no difference between paying it to the wheat board and paying it directly to the farmers. There is just one step in between.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I enter this debate on wheat and wheat prices with some hesitancy. Ordinarily, someone else in this party more versed in that branch of agriculture would have spoken, but I wish to make a few comments on the subject.

It is always a pleasure when the government comes round to adopting what Social Credit has advocated over the years. A few years ago we campaigned on two-price agriculture. Now, we see that the wisdom of what we said has come home to the government, perhaps a little late but better late than never. The previous speaker wondered why the government had delayed so long. I think it has moved rather rapidly. It has had the benefit of only two days of advice from the hon. member for Medicine Hat, and I think it has acted with great promptness on that advice. While we may regret his loss, I am sure the farmers of western Canada will appreciate the step that has now been taken.

The move announced by the minister this afternoon should bring home to some people the fact that today agriculture operates in a world market, an increasingly sophisticated market. Of course the usual moans and cries will go up that rugged individualism on the frontier is being allowed to die a little more, but at the same time there should be realization that we are in competition with other nations which, years ago, adopted policies of subsidizing agriculture in a whole variety of ways that have not been used in Canada.

We are subject to a variety of manipulations. I know this has been a good summer in Europe, and I expect in most of the Soviet union as well, but I very much doubt whether this is the main factor which has brought about the declining price of wheat. Because of the world food shortage food prices should not be declining in any part of the world. I am sure the manipulation that has been taking place has been at the governmental and policy level, and the result is not all due to the supply and demand factor.

In a way I am surprised that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government have been slow to act in this manner because during the last few years they were quick to act when external competition threatened the industries of the central provinces. They have been the architects of a variety of solutions to reduce competition between the United States and Canada.

I could speak of the automotive pact which constantly has been held up as something which would be of advantage to us. We know the tremendous excitement there was on that side of the house when it was felt a few months ago that the Mercantile Bank might be in a position to compete too strongly with Canadian banks. We know of the efforts that have been made on that side of the house to prevent the establishment of the Bank of British Columbia and we can imagine the glee that was felt at the demise of the Bank of Western Canada. All these are things which would lead to the economic development of the west. It is unfortunate that this one branch of agriculture, which is so important to the west, should have been brought to this stage of crisis before any action takes place. This government has adopted a rather cavalier attitude to world agreements in respect of primary food commodities. In so far as a sugar agreement is concerned, nothing is heard about that at all. As a matter of fact this is one aspect of Canadian agriculture, but compared to the whole Canadian agricultural industry it is a small aspect. The government never has seen fit to do anything about really bringing about a sound sugar agreement. This is another matter which I trust the hon. member for Medicine Hat will take up when he has a little more time after the wheat problem has been settled.

When the problem of international wheat agreements is so important to the country as a whole and so vital to the west, it seems strange to me that the situation which has developed could have developed with so little sound and fury from the government spokesmen through the last few months and that we had to wait until the opening of parliament before anything could be done about it. Even when it is done, it is a shoring up operation which does not look to the future.

I trust that those who are responsible will make every effort to reduce the kind of unfair competition which comes from outside and not inside Canada. I think the spokesmen for industry and trade on that side of the house have looked too long at what they felt possibly was competition within Canada and have been neglecting the sort of competition which can arise in the international market. This type of competition can have serious repercussions for a variety of industries, but especially for the agricultural industry.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up too much of the time of the house on this matter, although it is a matter of importance. I presume the Minister of Trade and Commerce, possibly better than anybody else in the house—at least I hope so—realizes the importance of this problem. I presume he will give us a lot of information concerning the situation in which the farmers suddenly find themselves now because of this latest crisis in respect of wheat and grain prices.

Some people might say to me, "What are you worried about in this regard when you are a member from a province that has not much to do with the export of wheat". They might say to me, "What do you know about the price of eggs in China". I do not know much about the price of eggs in China, but I know more about the omelet than I know about the hen that laid the egg.

This is a situation which is somewhat surprising because in the past the government has shown much interest in guaranteeing prices to the farmers. This attitude has resulted in a certain amount of stability. The situation at the present time is somewhat surprising to the producers as well as to members of the house. However, the fact that in the major wheat growing areas of Canada this year there is a very low yield compared to some of the past years, particularly last year, is causing anxiety to some of the farmers.

I recall when the news release came out announcing that the farmers were to get 20 cents more at the elevator. This pleased some of the farmers who did not know exactly what this whole thing was all about. It did not give the farmer much more over-all. It gave him more at the elevator but not in the back payments. If he gets 20 cents in the fall, he does not get it in the spring.

One matter which concerns and angers the farmers at the present time is that they are not working necessarily for their own benefit. I would dare put it this way; they are all in the service of the farm machinery producers and manufacturers. When the farmers have to face the problem they are facing now of wheat contracts being sabotaged, and when they are in the position of not knowing what they are going to do with the little bit of wheat which they do have to sell, I think the government has a duty and a responsibility to look into the problem, make recommendations and adopt stern measures if necessary. Steps must be taken to stop this trend in the rise of the cost of farm machinery. Unless this is done, we will be faced with a major problem in the farm industry before too long. When one considers the prices of farm machinery 10 or 15 years ago, it would seem there is absolutely no reason for such a spiralling in the cost of farm machinery.

I think there are little tricks employed by the farm machinery producers which the farmers themselves cannot correct. You might say that they do not have to buy these machines. When harvest time arrives a farmer who has machinery which is three, four or five years old which needs repairs just cannot wait indefinitely to have the repair work done. One might say that he could have had it done in the spring. He might have, but he did not have the money in the spring. When the crop ripens in the fall he has to fix that machinery. Sometimes it breaks down in the process of harvesting and the farmer is told that the necessary part is not in stock so he will have to wait. Sometimes he is told that the part is in Toronto or somewhere else, and that they will look for it. This has been a problem in some regions. Some of the dealers I have discussed this with have said that they do not consider it is necessary to keep in stock all farm machinery parts.

The farmer is obviously worried about getting his crop off and he cannot wait several weeks for parts to put his machinery into operation. In this way, indirect pressure is being put on him by the producers of farm equipment to go out and purchase new machinery. This is an underhanded way of selling farm implements to these farmers. It is much like a slap in the face with a hand in a glove, but it still hurts. The farmers cannot avoid this situation, yet they cannot afford to pay the present price of machinery.

Let us just for a moment look at the price of farm machinery as compared with ten, 20 or 30 years ago. I suggest the increase amounts to about 500 per cent. Coupled with this fact is the extremely high rate of depreciation. Many of these farm implements, such as a combine, are only used for about three weeks per year in the fall. After they are used, they are put away and not used again for another year. A farmer may be able to depreciate his farm implements to the extent of $5,000 in one year. One can appreciate how large a crop yield a farmer must have to withstand that type of situation.

Let me give you another example of the pressure put on farmers by the implement companies. At one time you could purchase a Massey-Harris combine at a cost of $1,500. This combine did not have a cab. When this implement wore out or had to be replaced the new one included a cab at a cost of an additional $800 to $900. The implement companies suggested this additional cost was necessary so the farmer could work in the shade.

Surely the farmers of this country are entitled to know what is going on behind the scenes in this farm implement industry, and the government has a responsibility in this regard. Let the government follow the slogan used on television not so very long ago in respect of winter work programs: "Why wait, do it now". Something should be done about this swindle as soon as possible.

Has the minister calculated the amount of debt a young farmer must incur to purchase land and equipment at today's prices, or how many years he must farm at the price of today's production to pay off that indebtedness? I suggest the figures in this regard would be staggering, particularly compared to similar figures of 20 years ago. It is my suggestion that today these farmers are working to a great extent for the producers of farm equipment. They will continue to work for them until such time as they go out of business.

There is a large scale production of wheat in the western part of this country, yet the farmers in that area all have a worried look because of the present situation. Production costs are increasing, yet selling prices in many cases are decreasing. It is my understanding that this year's crops in western Canada are not as good as last year. I am informed that the average yield will be 14 bushels per acre. How many crops would a farmer have to grow with a yield of 14 bushels per acre before he could pay off his indebtedness, or before he closed his doors and quit farming?

A great many farms in Canada today are being purchased on credit, and many farmers have loans to improve their farms. All these farmers are worried about how they are going to remain in farming if the present situation continues to exist. It is easy to say that they now have modern equipment, modern farms and can produce a great deal more with less effort. This does not, however, make up for the tremendous difference in production costs. It is true that with the modern combine, which is self-propelled by 16 cylinders, a farmer can harvest many more bushels per day than with the old type combine. However, cost of this machine is about five times what it was 15 or 20 years ago. The cost of machinery has gone up about 500 per cent but the price of wheat, milk, hogs and eggs has not increased to the same extent. I suggest that farmers' income has been pretty well stable, although in some cases it has gone down. Surely, this government has the responsibility to do something about this situation. It must continue to find markets to guarantee the sale of the farmers' produce. The farmer relies on the Canadian government to do this, yet at the present time I feel they have been let down. This may be a more complicated matter than it appears to be on the surface, but a mistake has been made. I might add that it appears to be a rather silly mistake.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Chairman, let me suggest that the government should do a great deal of fancy skating to rectify this situation as soon as possible. The government must not wait until tomorrow to do something. It should adopt that old slogan, do it now. The government should establish a parliamentary committee to study this whole situation and recommend measures to correct it. If it did so, I am sure it would receive the unanimous co-operation of all members. The government should clamp down on those companies which are swindling not only the farmers but the Canadian taxpayers by unnecessarily increasing the cost of machinery of all kinds. This trend is inflationary and is detrimental to the country as a whole. The situation generally discourages the initiative of small, private enterprises, and it creates great problems for politicians in all parties, no matter how thick skinned they may be.

I believe that all parties in opposition will support the government in any measures they take to improve the situation. The producers of farm marchinery should be made to close their doors tomorrow morning if they are not able to explain in black and white why we have seen farm machinery costs spiralling. This kind of situation exists in many areas. Perhaps we are to blame in the first place. The same thing applies to the cost of construction. We wonder why the cost of housing has risen. We seem to forget the 11 per cent sales tax and the increase in interest rates. This situation exists with respect to the cost of farm machinery.

If it is our fault, we must take steps to remove some of the blockades that exist. We must exert pressure on the people concerned to reduce the cost of farm machinery so that our farmers will be able to obtain a profit at the end of the year. All the profit should not go into the hands of the farm machinery companies but should be available for the betterment of the farmer and the Canadian people as a whole.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the two matters I wanted to place before the committee. This is the responsibility of the government. I refer to the spiralling cost of farm machinery. The same thing applies to the cost of producing any commodity in Canada, but at this time we are dealing with the situation confronting our farmers. We must also guarantee to the farmer that he will be able to sell his products. The government has a responsibility in this regard. I am looking forward to hearing the minister's explanations and his intentions in this regard.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I intervene in the debate today, and for the first time from this side of the house, because it is certainly an important and serious matter when there are major fluctuations in the selling price of Canadian wheat. I listened with interest to the hon. member for Bow River. It seemed to me that he had ready a very great speech, if I may use that word, and somehow or other after the minister had completed his statement the steam had disappeared from the speech the hon. member intended to make.

I listened also to the other hon. members who have spoken. The hon. member for Springfield complained that action was not taken in July and August. I listened to the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. What he said was very interesting, because he was prepared to give me a great deal of credit for having so soon influenced the government in taking the action which the minister announced today.

I appreciate that kind of accolade but am afraid the facts will show that I do not deserve it. The minister made a speech in Winnipeg on Tuesday, September 14, to the Kennedy round trade opportunity seminar. At that time he made it very clear that he and his government intended that the farmers of western Canada could expect the minimums reached under the new agreement in Geneva to be those at which wheat would be sold. I will quote from the minister's speech. He said:

> I do not wish to go into detail at this time but I can assure you that every effort is being made to sell maximum quantities of wheat at the best possible prices. Although (the) agreement (is) not yet in effect, I hope wheat will trade within the maximum and minimum. If not, then special consideration will have to be given to what steps can be taken to ensure that the wheat board gets the minimum price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: It is only two weeks ago that the minister made it very very clear that the government intends to see that the Canadian Wheat Board will obtain at least the minimum price for distribution to farmers, as agreed to in the new wheat agreement. So, while I thank the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke I am afraid that my being on this side of the house began some time after the minister had made his and the government's position clear in so far as this matter is concerned. There is one other matter with which I should like to deal.

An hon. Member: What about $2 wheat?

Mr. Olson: I should like to answer questions from now until six o'clock if there were time. However, I wish to complete my remarks. I can see that other hon. members wish to speak on this subject. The hon. member for Rosthern, for example, is very anxious to get into the debate, as is the hon. member for Macleod and perhaps many others. I think one or two questions at the end of my remarks would be in order, but I do not want to use up all my time because there is very little left.

I think there is one other major point that should be raised because of what the hon. member for Springfield said. He complained that the government did not take any action during the months of July and August. I should like the hon. member to know that September 8 was the first day that the selling price of Canadian wheat was below the minimum price. Within three days the minister was in conference with the appropriate officials in Washington to try and reach some kind of understanding to correct this situation.

I can remember an incident when our minister was three days late arriving in Hong Kong. That was in 1961. I should like to talk about that. The situation now is quite different. Those three days taken by the minister were used to set up some positive plans, for fruitful discussion and positive action. I do not think hon. members opposite would like to talk about the three days that elapsed between the time positive action was taken and when somebody had to hurry to Hong Kong to make the announcement. There is quite a difference in the three days.

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: No, the hon. member will not permit a question because there is not sufficient time, and that is the only reason. If hon. gentlemen opposite would care to do their homework they will find that immediately after the discussions which the minister held in Washington the price of wheat started to firm up.

Mr. Cantelon: Too late, and 15 cents too low.

Mr. Olson: Perhaps hon. members opposite would like to talk about the relationship of the government to the wheat board, and so on, so far as selling on foreign markets is concerned. I have sat in this house and listened to all the statements about the great job done by the previous administration in their aggressive selling of wheat. The hon. member for Bow River made that statement again today.

The only inference that can be taken from that remark of the hon. member for Bow River is that today the Canadian Wheat Board is not selling wheat aggressively. I do not accept that suggestion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: I am very proud, and justifiably so, of the performance of the Canadian Wheat Board in connection with the sales of wheat to communist China, Russia and other countries. There is one thing that has always puzzled me. The former administration took office in June of 1957. They were in office for the balance of 1957, all of 1958, all of 1959 and all of 1960. Yet throughout that entire period there were no great announcements of any tremendous wheat sales. It took them four years to get started as far as these sales were concerned. What is the explanation for that delay of four years? The reason is very simple, if they would only admit it. There were no additional markets available to the Canadian Wheat Board until that time.

When that market became available, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Wheat Board was there to sell wheat at the maximum price. The same situation obtained with the $800 million transaction with the Soviet union in 1966. So, it is pretty clear that this old story about this aggressive selling dating back to around 1961 is losing some of its force. I think hon. members opposite would be well advised to let it quietly die away; it never did have any credence and the farmers understand that.

The hon. member for Bow River complained that the price is going down and at the same time complained that we are losing some of our markets. I am wondering what he expects the Canadian Wheat Board to do. If other competing countries initiate lower offering prices, what would the hon. member have the Canadian Wheat Board do? Hold the price, which would mean we would have no volume and consequently no sales? Or would he have the wheat board adjust their price so as to remain competitive?

Mr. Churchill: The government should take some action.

Mr. Olson: The government has taken some action. It has already taken enough action today to take the steam out of all the speeches that were going to be made this afternoon.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Don't count on that.

Mr. Olson: What would hon. members opposite have done? Would they put the Canadian Wheat Board into a price war with the United States treasury?

Mr. Woolliams: We would not let the United States take over Canada.

Mr. Olson: I do not think they would, and I do not think that the hon. member for Bow River really seriously suggested that no appropriate action has been taken.

Mr. Roxburgh: He is a cattle man anyway, not a wheat farmer.

Mr. Olson: I think the Canadian Wheat Board has acted very correctly and responsibly in adjusting prices to meet the new competitive situation in the world.

Mr. Rapp: Tell that to the farmers in Medicine Hat.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Bow River also told us how sad he was that we had lost a portion of the Japanese market, and certainly that is a very serious loss. But I wonder whether the hon. member has done his homework in this respect too. Is he aware, for example, that as far back as 1964 there was a very aggressive undertaking by interests in the United States to set up a number of schools and seminars in Japan to train Japanese bakers in future to use American winter wheat?

In this regard I should like to read a short extract from the Searle Grain Company Limited weekly letter for July 8, 1964:

> In a further effort to expand utilization of United States wheat in Japan, U.S. wheat growers, in co-operation with several other groups and agencies, have just launched an intensive regional program of training the future leaders of Japan's baking industry on the proper use of flour milled from U.S. wheat blends.

[Mr. Olson.]

The article goes on to indicate that there had been a very aggressive program in an attempt to get these bakers to use flour with the higher content of United States winter wheat. In spite of all this the Canadian Wheat Board since that time has been able to hold and expand the volume of wheat going to Japan until now. I think we should commend the Canadian Wheat Board on this.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes—until now. How this man opposite can change.

Mr. Olson: This man opposite has not changed. He has always been an ardent supporter of the Canadian Wheat Board and remains so today.

Mr. Churchill: And of the Liberal government.

Mr. Olson: I hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will forget that untrue statement that was flung across the house a number of times, namely that this member was ever opposed to selling wheat to Communist China. That statement is false, and as far as I am concerned they know it is.

Mr. Woolliams: What about your leader at that time?

Mr. Olson: He will have to answer for what he said. I will answer for what I said, and I did not say that. If hon. gentleman had read the press the next day they would have found that the hon. member for Medicine Hat disagreed with that statement; they forget that.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think the government has taken appropriate action, that the trend has now been reversed and the price of wheat is moving up again. I think that is commendable. Much remains to be done and I hope that the minister and his department will finish the work. What is clear to me even today is that the wheat board, with full co-operation from the government, is doing everything possible to sell the maximum volume of wheat at the best price which is obtainable. Their record of action during the past two or three weeks bears that out in very clear terms.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, this is one of those occasions, having listened to the speech we have just heard from across the way, when one should reflect upon the history of the party to which the hon. gentleman belonged and the stand it took regarding sales of grain by Canada, particularly during the period when the former leader of the opposition was prime minister of this country and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was minister of agriculture.

The hon. member across the way indicated that he was never against wheat sales to China, yet he ran in more than one election campaign as a candidate for a party that was against those sales.

Mr. Jorgenson: No principle.

Mr. Nasserden: I have heard his colleagues in the party to which he once belonged speaking on platforms across the prairies, particularly in the province of Saskatchewan, and reiterating time and time again the shortcomings of the former Conservative prime minister and minister of agriculture because they had entered into these sales. I think it can be said that the hon. member himself at times questioned the advisability of making sales on a credit basis; he will not deny that.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Medicine Hat dissociated himself from that statement the day after it was made.

Mr. Nasserden: At least he admits it was made.

I now turn to the question before the committee today. The announcement made by the minister was one that the producers in western Canada will appreciate. The people in western Canada would have appreciated it a lot more were it not for the fact that they know there will soon be a general election in the province of Saskatchewan. The Liberal candidates who were travellng up and down the province last week were not able to talk about provincial politics at all. The question being fired at them was: What are you doing to get the government at Ottawa to do something about the price of wheat and the falling grain sales which are taken place in this country?

This is why we have had the announcement today from the government. There is nothing in it which bears any relationship to the promises which were made during the last election campaign as hon. gentleman opposite went across the country declaring they would give the grain producers $2 wheat. Where is that guarantee of $2 wheat? How was this subsidy to the grain producers of western Canada arrived at? Any way you look at it, it is a makeshift which has been put forward at the last minute to help a provincial premier try to salvage something from what is happening in the province of Saskatchewan at the present time.

I think of the statements made by officials of the grain trade in western Canada and compare them with the statement made by the minister today. The minister said he was in Washington on September 12.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The minister came back from Washington, and what action did he take? He comes to the House of Commons and says to the people of Canada, "We will support the price of wheat; we will pay the grain producers of western Canada the difference between the price they sell at on world markets and the price set in the international wheat agreement". Unless I am mistaken, this is an indication that the minister's mission in Washington failed.

Mr. Churchill: That is right.

Mr. Nasserden: The minister expects continued sales of grain at prices lower than the minimums set under the new international wheat agreement. That is the only conclusion one can come to. Yet the hon. member for Medicine Hat and the Minister of Trade and Commerce say that all will be well as a result of the action that has been taken today.

Charlie Gibbings, the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, had this to say, according to the Globe and Mail of September 13. The article comes from Regina.

Mr. Nicholson: Listen to what he will say tomorrow.

Mr. Nasserden: I know what he will say tomorrow. He will say that this is a makeshift policy embarked on by this government; that it has absolutely no relation to the cost of production today; that it has no relation to the promises made by the Liberal party in two or three election campaigns to the producers of western Canada. That is what Charlie Gibbings and the farm leaders of western Canada will say, though they will thank you for the pittance you have given them.

When I congratulated the minister last summer on the progress he was making in western Canada and the image that he was building, I hoped that my praise would not go to his head.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Don't congratulate him again.

Mr. Nasserden: I can tell the minister on this occasion that price alone is not bothering the farmers of western Canada. The 590 million bushels of carryover is bothering them, as well as the fact that sales have slumped and that we have lost markets to other nations. These things are bothering them. Then, this minister says and the hon. member for Medicine Hat says: "This government acted within a period of three days." Where have the minister and the government been since last June when prices first began to decline? Does one wait for a catastrophe to arrive, or does one look at what is happening, recognize the trend and try to stave off the trouble, thereby saving the taxpayers of this country something in the process? That is what the government that preceded this one did.

On the front benches of the opposition side of the house sits an hon. member who was the minister of trade and commerce in the former government. He and his prime minister went to Washington to stave off problems similar to those we are now experiencing. That was back in 1958.

Mr. Nasserden: Well, we have not got the $2 wheat that the government promised; we have not even got the old promise, that they were to give to the producers in western Canada $1 a bushel more on the first 300 bushels of wheat. That, also, would have cost the treasury a great deal of money. The government's action does not recognize the serious problem caused by increasing costs that bear heavily on individual producers and the agricultural industry of western Canada and other parts of the country. During the past year these costs have risen at a tremendous rate.

I see that the minister who is in charge of housing is in the house. Well, there is a housing crisis in this country; there is also a crisis in agriculture, in international affairs and in national unity. There is a crisis in almost every area in which this government has responsibility. Yet always the answer that the opposition has been given has been: "We have taken action; let us wait and see"; or, "We will take action tomorrow;" or "A royal commission is to be set up to study the problem."

The role of the opposition in Canada has been questioned by some during the past several months. The role of the parliamentary opposition is to warn of what may take place in the country, to warn of what may take place in housing, agriculture or international affairs. This government was warned of what would happen. The former minister of agriculture, who is not here today—

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Nasserden: He is where he should be today.

An hon. Member: Where?

Mr. Nasserden: Explaining to the farmers of Saskatchewan some of the shortcomings of the administration—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nasserden: —of the administration that sits on the government side. I want the Prime Minister to consider what I am about to say. The Canadian Wheat Board should be under the Minister of Agriculture. This is where it was when we formed the government. Today's announcement does not take into consideration the welfare of our grain producers. This policy is a makeshift; if the board were under the Minister of Agriculture we could hold him responsible. As it is, the Minister of Trade and Commerce can say: "Agriculture is under the Minister of Agriculture and I cannot answer for him." So, we can have this buck passing between ministers.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce would not do that, I know. He does not like the idea that the Minister of Agriculture can do anything in a better way than he can, but that is an aside.

As I said, the Canadian Wheat Board should be under the Department of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce could have met United States authorities at any time since June, discussed these matters, and protected not only Canadian producers but also the integrity of the international wheat agreement. The producers of western Canada fought for this agreement over the years. They cherish it and it is something they will defend with their last vote and their last dollar. Members of the government should remember that. When the government say, "We had to wait until the price of wheat went below the floor" is to admit that this problem did not get the consideration it deserved. That made me really disappointed with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have a high regard for him; I thought he was coming along fine. In fact, I was looking forward to the day when he might be the leader of his party.

Mr. Churchill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: If he thinks that the government's action will enhance his reputation, he had better think again. I say that in all sincerity. The producers in western Canada will not be fooled. They will know that the government acted only because of the general election presently being fought in Saskatchewan. They will know that the government acted in this way only because they were unable to secure the co-operation and understanding of United States officials. And that, my friends, is very serious; it means that the ministry has been unable to come to terms in this regard with the administration in Washington.

I can only hope that the minister's optimism will be justified and that the price of wheat will recover. If I understood him rightly, the hon. gentleman referred to the law of supply and demand and indicated that price was a decisive factor in the movement of grain. Those who are producing grain not only in Canada but elsewhere in the world know that one of the reasons for establishing an international wheat agreement in the first place was a realization that price has very little to do with the movement of grain; there are other factors which enter into it, the urgency of the need, for example, or the availability of funds to finance sales. This is why the wheat agreement was negotiated with China on a credit basis resulting in the movement of wheat which had been piling up for years on the farms, in elevators and at terminals under the former Liberal administration.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the minister for the action the government has taken. It will reassure farmers that some kind of floor under the price is being provided. But it represents far less of an assurance than the farmers might expect from the government at this time. We can only hope that the minister's optimism is justified and that he will not lessen his efforts to influence the United States authorities in connection with their sales program.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): In the few minutes at my disposal I do not intend to deal as fully with this subject as I had planned. I wish to say that my hon. friend from Bow River and my hon. friend from Rosthern have given forcible expression to the feelings and thoughts of the farmers of western Canada and I simply add that I agree wholeheartedly with the statements they have made.

I wish, also, to tell the minister that we in western Canada do appreciate the statement he made this afternoon. It reminds me of the story about the boy putting his finger in the whole in the dam. That is exactly what has taken place in this case. The dam has begun to leak. The government has seen the problem and this is a stop-gap measure. The farmers of western Canada believe they are encountering one of the most serious problems they have faced for many years. They are concerned about the market situation and the events which have led to the recent drop in wheat prices. They are concerned, too, about the price of wheat, though this has been taken care of temporarily. I wish to refer briefly to the transport situation as far as grain is concerned as well as to the urgent need for finding markets for that grain. We all know that the farmers of western Canada have all along been carrying the burden of current wheat prices entirely on their backs. They feel they have been battling the entire resources of the United States treasury allied with all the other main exporting countries, since up to the present Canada has been the only main producing nation which has declined to subsidize growers. This is our main concern.

I should like to know—and the minister is no doubt in a position to tell us—whether the subsidy mentioned today will apply to all the grain produced and sold in the current year or whether it will apply only in respect of grain which is exported. We in western Canada are very much concerned lest we return to conditions which prevailed between 1953 and 1957 when we saw our stocks of grain pile up on the farms and in the country elevators to the extent of 700 million bushels. It was only through the aggressiveness of the former Conservative government and the minister of agriculture at that time that this situation was changed.

I wish to read an article which appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail, a Canadian Press story from Winnipeg. The headline reads: "Wheat Exports Off Sharply". This is the crux of the problem facing Canadian exporters today.

Canadian wheat exports in August showed a sharp decrease from August, 1966, and a substantial decrease from the 10-year average for the month.

Exports of 24.4 million bushels were 39.8 million below the 10-year average, the Board of Grain Commissioners reported yesterday.

Principal markets for August's exports, with comparable 1966 figures in brackets—Britain five million (five million); the Soviet Union three million (8.9 million); Belgium and Luxembourg 2.6 million (2.9 million); Italy 1.9 million (1.5 million); Japan 1.8 million (6.9 million).

This is what farmers are concerned about. Why has there been such a rapid decline this year? Is the minister doing all he can, along with other members of the government, to maintain our markets or is he sitting back and letting the great country to the south, the United States, which has been subsidizing its farmers all along, continue to undersell us at the expense of the Canadian producer?

The last report of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool estimates that 320 million bushels of wheat will be produced in western Canada in the current year including 17 million bushels of durum. In addition it is estimated there will be 50 million bushels of oats produced and 63 million bushels of barley. The total comes, in all, to 433 million bushels according to the figures reported in the Globe and Mail yesterday.

Our farmers realize they have had a strike on their hands in western Canada—the seamen's strike—and that up to the present grain has not been moving. The situation is becoming serious. I feel it is time that every point in western Canada was placed on a one bushel quota and I urge the minister to impress on the wheat board the importance of getting the quota opened up. Farmers and businessmen are complaining bitterly; I need not tell hon. members of this house that the lots of implement dealers are packed with new machinery which they are unable to sell.

Farmers are experiencing the pinch. They need money because their notes are coming due on the combines and tractors they previously bought. They are in dire need of money as quickly as possible.

The farmers have been reasonably content up to the present time, but now there is a great deal of uneasiness among them. The softness in world wheat prices has the farm community aroused. There is widespread fear that the United States is going to embark on another world wheat price war, and we would like the assurance of the minister that this will not take place.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that this situation has come about. The drop in the price of wheat will not show up until the final payments that the farmers receive in 1969. At the present time, most people in Canada do not realize that the full result of what is taking place will not show until that time.

[Mr. Watson (Assiniboia).]

Item agreed to.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of making a statement. I think this is agreeable to the house leaders.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to motions at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASED INTEREST RATES ON MORTGAGE LOANS

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement concerning interest rates on loans under the National Housing Act. In November of last year I announced introduction of a formula designed to adjust automatically the rate for home-owner and rental housing loans made by approved lenders, or by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation where loans were not available through approved lenders. Under that formula the rate is adjusted at the end of each quarter in relation to changing yields on long-term federal government bonds.

Despite introduction of this self-adjusting formula, which got satisfactory results during the first quarter, the N.H.A. rate throughout the year has been substantially below conventional rates, and for the past six months it has offered no significant premium over high grade corporate bond yields. As a result since March 31 private lenders have shown very little enthusiasm for N.H.A. insured mortgages.

During 1967 the N.H.A. rate has been adjusted at the end of each calendar quarter to a level 1½ per cent above the long-term government bond yield whereas section 4 of the National Housing Act, which was amended to provide for this some years ago, permits a spread of 2¼ per cent.

In order to attract private funds into housing and to enable the government to concentrate its future lending in the important social areas of greatest need, namely, public housing, housing for elderly people, housing for students and urban renewal, the government has decided to take full advantage of the spread authorized in the statute. We anticipate this change will result in increased lending activity on the part of primary lenders and at the same time substantially increase activity in the secondary mortgage market, which is very important at this time.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, effective October 1, the maximum rate of interest on home-ownership and rental loans will be set at 8¼ per cent and will remain at that level until the next quarterly adjustment at the end of this year.

In making this announcement, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it perfectly clear that there will be no change in the N.H.A. interest rate policy on loans for public housing projects for families of low income, housing for elderly persons, student housing, land assembly, urban renewal and sewage treatment plants.

The change I am now announcing should not be expected to provide the complete answer to our current serious housing situation. Nevertheless, it is an important part of the whole, and I will have more to say on this subject during the housing debate tomorrow, and no doubt other members will have something to say as well.

Mr. Starr: You will need to.

Mr. Nicholson: But one thing is obvious, the government must look, and Canada generally must look, to private lending institutions to increase substantially their participation in that part of the housing requirement which traditionally is a commercial lending operation, specifically home owner and rental housing for those who can afford housing on an economic base.

As I have just indicated, the government intends to devote a larger proportion of its resources to the social needs of the lower income groups and to the trouble spots resulting from the fantastic urban growth that has taken place, in order to provide improved living conditions in urban areas.

It should also be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the prime N.H.A. interest rate, that which I have just announced, is the maximum rate. Within the wider spread provided between bond yields and the new N.H.A. rate private lending institutions have the opportunity to initiate lending at rates below the maximum.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that the minister has had to make the announcement which we have just heard. It is a sad story for all the hopeful who thought the government has some concern about their plight, especially those citizens who are looking for proper shelter. The cost of rental housing is getting beyond the reach of the ordinary citizen and we can only look with despair to the immediate future. This new addition to costs by the increase in the interest rate charged on loans will simply inflict a greater degree of suffering on those who are experiencing the acute crisis in housing.

This increase in the interest rate is just more conclusive proof of the government's determined refusal, since assuming office, to look ahead and adopt those measures which could sidetrack the influences which obstruct the path to a stable economy.

The government simply would not face up to the fiscal and economic crises of the day. It would not adopt the fiscal measures needed to combat inflation and rising prices, rises which have made an excessive demand on wages and led to imminent unemployment. The government has left it to the governor of the Bank of Canada to make the move because it did not have the gumption to do so. This is all strictly as a result of the announcement made by the Bank of Canada yesterday. It is due to the fact that the government did not face up to its responsibility of changing its fiscal measures and policies. They have left it to the Bank of Canada to come to the rescue of the Canadian economy. We have foreseen the further implications in this announcement. I hope that during the debate tomorrow we will be able to delve further into certain consequences of the increase in the interest rate.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the statement just made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) is an admission of the complete and utter bankruptcy of this government so far as housing policy is concerned. As a solution to the housing problem, the words that have been given to us today are just so much eyewash. We feel that what is needed is a direct approach to the problem of housing. When I say a direct approach I have two things in particular in mind. We in the New Democratic party believe we will have to get away from private lending institutions for the building of houses and will have to concentrate on the making of direct loans. Reference has been made to the Bank of Canada. We will have to make more use of the Bank of Canada for direct loans.

When I urge that we come at this problem directly, my other point is—and I think the Economic Council in its fourth report said something to this effect—that housing should not be just a pawn we play with when fiddling with economics but that it should be a concern in its own right and a major concern of government and parliamentary policy, not something to be played with as this government is doing.

The suggestion that the maximum rate under N.H.A. loans be raised to 8¼ per cent as a means of solving this problem is a suggestion which is ridiculous coming from anyone, and especially from a responsible minister of the crown. I noted the way the minister said that the government in effect is getting out of the business of helping individuals with homes so that it could put more money into other important social areas. It was this that brought the word "eyewash" to my mind. If this government were doing anything significant in the field of public housing, housing for the elderly, for students and in the field of urban renewal, then the suggestion might have some meaning.

We have not had an opportunity, for this brief statement, to get hold of the statistics, but everyone knows the statistics indicate that precious little is being done by the government in these important social areas about which the Minister of Labour now speaks. So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the worsening we have seen in the last year or two so far as housing is concerned will be accelerated by this proposition. With this figure of 8¼ per cent we will add to the burden in respect of getting houses built for our people. The building of houses is not just something that should be carried on for the purpose of making a profit for private lenders or private builders. Housing is not just something to be played with in an effort to adjust the various factors in our economy. Housing is one of the most basic essentials for people anywhere and one of the most basic essentials of this modern kind of society in which we live.

I call upon this government to stop playing with this problem and come directly to the whole problem. As the minister has said, a great deal more will be said about this tomorrow by him, I hope, and by members of this group, but I want to say tonight that we regard this statement as very disappointing. We did not think that even this government would go that far. We say this is the kind of thing which will rob this government of any confidence it ever had on the part of the Canadian people.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, at this late hour I should like to say two things about the minister's announcement. First of all, 8¼ per cent interest is a grievous rate of interest. I hope that we will have an opportunity to work out the mathematics of $12,000 or $15,000 lent or loaned over a space of 15 or 20 years so that we and the public will have a better idea of exactly what it will mean.

What I regret most about the minister's statement is the tendency to confuse cause and effect to some extent and to blame the situation on the rush toward urbanization, the rush to the cities in Canada. I know this is going on. I know this is a world-wide phenomena and one cannot lay the blame for the whole thing on the government. It seems to me, however, that some of the blame for the acceleration of this problem can be laid on the shoulders of the government because the government has denied N.H.A. lending through placing restrictions on the loans which can be administered in areas which could benefit from it. This applies particularly to the problem of sewage disposal which goes far beyond the wishes and demands of the local health units. The minister knows of what I speak.

I think Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could correct this aspect which accelerates the rush to the city which this afternoon the minister has blamed for the crisis which now confronts him.

At 6.18 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROVISION RESPECTING USE ON CEREMONIAL OCCASIONS

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-153 entitled "An act respecting the use of the Canadian flag on ceremonial occasions."

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, the Union Jack is usually hoisted in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen of Canada or her representative on public occasions or ceremonies. Now, Her Majesty the Queen of Canada is also chief of the Canadian state and acts as such in our country; therefore, it seems that in the presence of the chief of the Canadian state, the Canadian flag can be hoisted as well as the flag usually hoisted according to the established custom.

This is the object of the present bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—SPEECH AT UN BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER—VISIT TO CANADA BY ALLEGED STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question to address to the Prime Minister. It is in reference to the interesting address made yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the United Nations general assembly in which he urged cessation of the bombing of North Viet Nam and declared also—I quote—that "there is no hope for progress toward a peaceful settlement in appeals or proposals which place the total burden on one side only."

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is planning to follow up this statement by negotiations or discussions with other parties involved designed to bring about an improvement in this most dangerous situation. In particular I should like to know whether any new overtures are being planned to the authorities at Hanoi or their allies to end the flow of troops and war materials from North Viet Nam to South Viet Nam should the bombing cease.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is at the moment on his way back to Ottawa. I had hoped that he would be in his seat to deal with this particular matter, but he will not be here until tomorrow morning now.

I know discussions have been going on with other governments as to what steps can be taken to follow up the various proposals which have been made in connection with this conflict. There are no special steps I know of that are being taken, certainly not by us, with Hanoi at the moment, but perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs can add to my reply tomorrow. He has been in touch with a good many delegations at the United Nations and may be able to add to what I have said.

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Prime Minister. I wish to ask whether the Prime Minister can tell us what is the purpose of the visit to Canada by members of the Vietnamese liberation front, which is a communist organization currently engaged in active hostilities against United States forces in Viet Nam. On what grounds were visas granted by the Canadian government for what appears to be a propaganda tour, and has the government received any representation with regard to this matter from Washington?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, these students, or so-called students, were invited to Canada by a Quebec students' organization. They are travelling on North Vietnamese passports, which are acceptable under certain conditions for admission to Canada. If they had been travelling on documents issued by the so-called liberation front this would not have been acceptable. We do have a relationship with the government of North Viet Nam because of our membership on the international commission, and we recognize their passports as they recognize ours. I do not know what is the purpose of their visit, Mr. Speaker, but in the circumstances it did not seem possible or desirable to refuse the recognition of North Vietnamese passports regularly held by these applicants for admission to this country.

Subject to further examination, I think we have received a query from the United States government as to any information we may have about the nature and purpose of this visit. I should like to look into that part of the question.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a supplementary question in view of an expression used by the right hon. gentleman. Did I hear him say that we had received a clearing from Washington as to these students, or was the word used a "query"?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is my impression that we have received a query from Washington, but I want to look into the nature of the query, if any.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question about the doubt cast on the status of these people on tour from North Viet Nam. Why is it that the immigration department did not take a closer look, inasmuch as the Prime Minister himself referred to them as so-called students?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the description of a person as a student—whether he is or is not a student—is not in itself reason for refusal of admission. I used the words "so-called students" because I noted that one of them was, I think, 40 years of age, which seemed to me to be a little old to go to university.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister stated that there is mutual recognition of passports as between North Viet Nam and Canada. Does this necessarily imply that these students must appear on the television program "Aujourdhui", when we are not quite sure why they have come to this country?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. That is an entirely different question to the matter of their appearance on television. Their passports would have nothing to do with that.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he would give us the name of the student organization that gave the invitation?

Mr. Pearson: L'union générale des étudiants du Québec.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask a further supplementary question. We are given to understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had at least informal discussion with Secretary Rusk of the United States before making his speech at the United Nations. Is the Prime Minister in a position to report to us what was the attitude or reaction of Secretary Rusk and the United States government?

Mr. Pearson: No, I am not. Perhaps my hon. friend could ask that question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am not in a position to say what was the reaction by Secretary Rusk to the remarks of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In the light of the Prime Minister's recent policy statement in terms of Viet Nam, is the government now contemplating furthering its activity in the field of civilian rehabilitation in Viet Nam or in particular by bringing Vietnamese children to Canada for rehabilitation?

Mr. Pearson: I do not think these questions are necessarily related. I think one should be considered quite apart from the other. The fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday indicated a policy that the bombing should stop does not affect our obligation to bring about peace and help people in that country. Perhaps I should add that while the Secretary of State for External Affairs emphasized that the bombing should stop he also pointed out that the stopping of the bombing, unless followed by other steps taken by the other side, would not in the circumstances bring about peace.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ESTABLISHMENT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of his announcement last September 13 that he was setting up an advisory committee on executive compensation in the public service in accordance with the recommendation of the joint Senate and House of Commons committee on the public service, can he now inform the house whether this advisory committee has been established and, if so, who are its members?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, at this point I am not able to indicate the names of the members of the committee. We have received recommendations with regard to persons who should be approached and have been approaching some of these persons. When the slate is completed I will be very happy to announce it in the house.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps I might bring to the attention of the hon. member that this very question is on the order paper; therefore I do not believe I should allow further questions on the matter at this time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EXTENSION OF FRENCH RADIO AND TELEVISION SERVICE IN WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

In view of the principle which states that both official languages must be recognized from coast to coast and in view of the fact that I have been asking for five years that the C.B.C.'s radio and television services be given in British Columbia, is the minister in a position to tell us today if the radio and television services of the C.B.C.'s French network has improved in British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to recognize and allow the question which the hon. member is asking the minister, namely if the service has improved. Of course, the minister is being asked to express an opinion and it would seem that in that respect the question is out of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I can amend my question by asking if the French radio and television service is provided at this time to the French-speaking people of British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I think my question is perfectly in order and it seems to me the minister should tell us whether or not the French language is respected in British Columbia as we respect it elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary question is becoming out of order because he requests an expression of opinion by a minister.

HOUSING

PROVISION FOR N.H.A. MORTGAGES FOR MIDDLE INCOME GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the very sharp increase announced last night in N.H.A. mortgage interest rates will make it impossible for individuals earning less than $8,000 per year to apply for N.H.A. mortgages, is the government considering some plan which will enable those earning less than this to apply for N.H.A. mortgages?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will be discussing this in a few minutes. Perhaps my hon. friend will hold his question until after the statement of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister not made up his mind, like everyone else in this house, that statements we wait for from the Minister of Labour are really meaningless, and that it is only reasonable that the Prime Minister should make an explanation?

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

ARDA—ACTION ON REPORT RESPECTING NORTHERN NOVA SCOTIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, before the house took recess the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development advised that the government intended to hold meetings with the ARDA task force on its report in respect of the nine northern counties of Nova Scotia. I am wondering if he can now advise the house whether the government has reached a decision.

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been meetings between the government of Nova Scotia and representatives of the federal ARDA administration. The work is progressing normally and satisfactorily.

Mr. MacEwan: When does the minister expect a decision to be made and action to be taken on this important report?

Mr. Sauvé: Some action has already taken place, in that a committee has been established and a plan is being prepared by the officials of both governments.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. As a result of some confusion and uncertainty arising out of his clarification yesterday can the minister now advise the house whether, as a result of proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, the employer-employee relationships which are to be broadened will include registered nurses? Will the minister also indicate to the house when he anticipates that this legislation will be brought forward so this whole question can be settled in the minds of the public?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is our hope that this legislation will be brought forward at an early date. We already have a pretty full legislative timetable, but this matter is of great importance and will be brought forward as soon as possible. At that time the extent of the changes recommended by the government will be disclosed in the bill. If there should be any extension of the trend toward universality this will be based on the employer and employee relationship. I might say that this is a trend which has occurred over a period of years. It is a gradual trend, and there has been no specific decision as yet for any extension.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I have a supplementary question. Will the Minister of Labour indicate whether his government has abandoned the idea of increasing to $65 the weekly amount now paid under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

Mr. Nicholson: I welcome that question, Mr. Speaker. The government never had that idea. Whoever put it forward must have been someone who makes reckless statements, such as the hon. member does at times.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to argue with the Minister of Labour, but it was reported in the Canadian Press that he made such a statement, and it is up to him to have it withdrawn.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROTESTS ON DIVISION OF SALMON CATCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Is his department aware of the rather serious criticism made by the fishermen of British Columbia about the division of the sockeye salmon catch in the Canadian area of the Pacific as between Canadian and United States fishermen? The criticism is that this division is unfair to Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that his question as asked is not in order. He is asking whether the minister is aware of certain criticism, and that is certainly not an urgent question.

OPENING OF PURSE SEINING SEASON IN BAY OF FUNDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is it the intention of the minister's department to open the purse seining season in the bay of Fundy on October 1 as promised?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand exactly what the hon. member means by the opening of the purse seining season. If the hon. member refers to that section of the bay of Fundy on the New Brunswick side, there will be no change in the date that was in effect last year, which I believe was October 1 or October 15.

EXPO '67

CONTRIBUTIONS TO COST BY GOVERNMENTS OF QUEBEC AND MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether the governments of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal have contributed financially to the development of the site of Expo 67?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be put on the order paper.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO JOINT SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Registrar General concerning the statement he has made in Toronto on the advisability of creating in Canada a federal-provincial board on the control stock exchange operations.

Is the hon. minister in a position to tell the house whether he intends to call an early meeting of the provincial premiers or finance ministers?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving notice of his question. I think that the calling of such a meeting comes under the jurisdiction of the right hon. Prime Minister.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EQUIPPING OF MOTOR VEHICLES WITH EXHAUST CONTROLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the government of Ontario announced last week that all motor vehicles sold in Ontario must be equipped with exhaust controls, I ask the minister whether the government will now consider making this a national standard.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I made a statement some time ago setting out the view of the department with respect to the efficacy of these controls. We are now examining the new situation to see whether that former view should be modified in any way.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RAIDS ON OFFICES OF SERBIAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he received a letter dated September 16 on behalf of the Serbian national committee protesting against raids by the R.C.M.P. on the offices of members of the board of directors of that organization? If so, has the Prime Minister replied, what is the nature of his reply, and will he investigate the reasons for the harassment experienced by these Canadian citizens and report to the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker. At the moment I am not certain whether I received a letter of that kind.

FINANCE

INCREASED CANADIAN AID TO INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can we expect a statement on increased Canadian aid to the International Development Bank that would back up the remarks made by the Minister of Finance in a recent speech in Rio de Janeiro?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Minister of Finance about that when he returns from Rio. I think he is on his way back now.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF FARM POLICY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether the farm policy task force which he initially referred to many months ago is yet operational?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the members of the task force have been named and are commencing their work shortly.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise us who will be the chairman of that task force?

Mr. Greene: If the task force requires a chairman he will be named from among the members.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

LOWER ST. LAWRENCE—INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. René Tremblay (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Could the hon. minister tell the house when he is hoping to sign the agreement with the government of the province of Quebec, with respect to the implementation of the program for the development of the Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, if we can carry on our negotiations smoothly, I hope that in two months and a half to three months we will have the pleasure of signing this agreement.

Mr. Tremblay: I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the hon. minister assure the house that this agreement will take into account the responsibilities and prerogatives of the federal government in this pilot territory?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, just as in any such agreement, the federal authorities will fulfil the duties devolved upon them, and the province will also assume the responsibilities under its jurisdiction.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): I would also like to ask the minister what is the share of the federal government in those agreements for the development of that area of the Gaspé Peninsula. Is it fifty-fifty with the province of Quebec?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, it varies according to areas. Up to now, in the three agreements signed, the federal contribution was 66 per cent and I think that in the case of the Development Bureau of Eastern Quebec for the Lower St. Lawrence area, the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands the federal government contribution will amount to approximately $160 million out of a total amount of $250 million.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER—PROPOSED POSTPONEMENT OF PUBLIC PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour in his capacity as minister in charge of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I hope Your Honour will not rule this question out before you hear it because so many people want to speak on this subject today; but this is a single urgent point, and I probably will not get a chance to raise it later.

Has the minister's attention been drawn to the suddenly aggravated situation in Vancouver caused by the proposal of the city planning director to abandon or indefinitely postpone eight public housing projects which would provide nearly 500 housing units? If so, what plans has the minister for dealing with this situation?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will be satisfied that I did not rule the question out of order before I heard it, but I suggest it might be asked later this afternoon.

SPORTS

PAN-AMERICAN GAMES—THANKS FOR FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO SUCCESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it is one I should have asked him on Monday when this session resumed. Would the Prime Minister accept the thanks of my constituents for the contribution the federal government made this past summer to the success of the pan-American games.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker, and to confirm what my hon. friend said about the amazing success of those games, even though we were all wet when they started. I should like to ask the hon. member to convey to the municipality and the people of Winnipeg our thanks for the way they handled the games.

AGRICULTURE

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY TO CORN PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask whether the government has any plans to subsidize the corn growers of southwestern Ontario who are suffering from a 25 cent to 30 cent per bushel decrease in price this year. This would be a subsidy similar to the one offered the western wheat growers.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the analogy drawn by the hon. gentleman is correct. Certainly at the present time there are no plans along the lines he has indicated.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister can advise the house if he has any plans to cope with the present crisis in the Department of Transport. The crisis I refer to is brought about by the appointment of the hon. member for Trinity as Minister of Transport.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the crisis is only in my hon. friend's mind.

SHIPBUILDING

PAYMENT OF SUBSIDIES ON FISHING VESSEL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. It is one of import and urgency to at least six provinces in Canada. I should like to ask the minister whether the government has established as policy the cessation of building subsidies on fishing vessels.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bower: I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister why then are subsidies not being granted on the building of fishing vessels in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Robichaud: As has been the case in the past, subsidies have been granted as soon as the applications are received and processed. If there have been any delays the hon. member may find out they have not been altogether the fault of the federal Department of Fisheries.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether the government intends at this time to allocate to each province certain amounts under this plan?

Mr. Robichaud: This is not in the mind of the government, Mr. Speaker.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATION OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has, as he indicated last Monday he would, looked into the question of an invitation being extended to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to attend the constitutional conference about which he spoke at that time.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): They will be represented, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question. Will the representation be from the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in those jurisdictions or is it contemplated that they will be represented by personnel of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Mr. Pearson: I shall have to look into that particular aspect of the question.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AGREEMENT TO FORGO PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR THIS DAY

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order of interest to hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the house allow the minister to rise on a point of order although orders of the day have been called?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that in order to give additional time for the debate on housing we might forgo the private members' hour and thus provide an additional hour for this debate today. If that is agreeable to hon. members, the government will agree to it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Supply—Labour

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Labour for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. We are on vote No. 35 dealing with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

35. To reimburse Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for expenditures on housing research and community planning, for the amounts of loans for sewage treatment projects forgiven to a province, municipality or municipal sewerage corporation, for contributions made for an urban renewal scheme or pursuant to an urban renewal agreement, for losses resulting from the operation of public housing projects, and for net losses resulting from the sale of mortgages from its portfolio, $25,300,000.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I take it that we are to move directly to vote 35 of the Department of Labour estimates. This is the only item which deals with estimates of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I welcome heartily the opportunity to discuss these estimates, not simply because of the housing problems which admittedly exist but rather because it affords me an opportunity to present to hon. members a statement concerning some aspects of the housing picture which some statements that were made in the house yesterday and the day before indicate are unknown to them.

I wish to put it on the record at the outset that we do have a serious housing situation in Canada, one which is likely to continue for some years to come. No country can grow as fast as Canada is growing and have a concentration of population in certain urban areas without having housing problems. But I do want to make it perfectly clear that these problems are largely centred in the metropolitan areas in this country, and the record shows that fact quite conclusively. The record speaks for itself. I also want to say that while we do have problems centred in certain specific areas, regardless of what hon. members may say about the housing situation, the situation in these specific areas is not indicative of the housing situation which prevails in the majority of our cities and towns.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Nicholson: I also wish to point out that very little reference has been made to the fact that the housing problems that arise in metropolitan areas such as Toronto, Vancouver and other cities the size of Hamilton and larger arise not so much out of a reduced volume of housing—in fact there has been a very substantial increase in housing—but out of the unprecedented pace of general development and growth in these areas. Much house building has been going on in Canada though not enough to take care of the phenomenal growth that has taken place in Toronto and certain other areas. I also wish to say that notwithstanding the deterrents to house building this year, in 1967 we shall have in excess of 150,000 starts.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: That is 50,000 too few.

Mr. Nicholson: If the hon. member is quoting the report of the Economic Council, he has not read it very carefully. It says that 140,000 starts will take care of the new family formations, the other 50,000 being to replace old houses that should disappear.

Mr. Hees: Are they not necessary?

Mr. Nicholson: Of course they are needed, but one must deal with problems like that in accordance with all the circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nicholson: They must all be taken into consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nicholson: Hon. members may laugh; hon. members may well laugh, but the 150,000 starts represent a very substantial increase over starts in 1966. This year's starts represent an increase of about 15 per cent over those of 1966, and this increase, I might point out, has been largely made possible by the vast infusion of federal funds to support housing, an infusion that has been felt in every province of Canada.

There are those who would deplore our not reaching a much quoted figure which has been referred to of 200,000 housing starts. But the 200,000 housing starts are forecast for 1970.

Mr. Hees: Is it not 190,000?

Mr. Nicholson: It is not 190,000, with all due respect. The figure is 200,000 for 1970.

Mr. Hees: But the Economic Council says that we need 190,000—

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member can make his speech later. He may then quote from the report.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nicholson: A little closer examination of that report will reveal that this target that I have referred to is four to five years off.

But hon. members must keep in mind that in our society, which is based on freedom of private action, housing, like any other commodity, is subject to economic laws. Temporary setbacks are bound to be endured periodically in the competition which supports private enterprise. But the vital concern is that our long-range objective of 200,000 starts per annum in the early 1970's be attained in the allotted period.

Mr. Grafftey: Did the minister say 1870? His speech sounds like a nineteenth century speech.

Mr. Nicholson: One would think that the figures which have been quoted are those of the Economic Council; in fact, many of these figures are supplied by Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation, and their forecasts are available to everyone.

If we fail to reach the target of 750,000 starts, including the 200,000 replacements over the next few years, certainly, we shall be in a difficult position. I can only say that the government has no intention of letting that happen, and our record will prove just that.

Mr. Woolliams: The government has quite a record.

Mr. Nicholson: At the beginning of this year we were optimistic that there would be some slackening in the financial and other pressures which plagued housing during 1966. Nevertheless, hon. members, I submit, must acknowledge that in the years 1964, 1965 and 1966 we had record housing completions in this country. We had three records. We also had record housing starts in 1964 and 1965.

In the budget presentation of last year the Minister of Finance and other representative spokesmen of the government appealed to municipalities, provincial governments and business generally to level out the program of expansion that was bursting at the seams. This had to be done and it has been done. We are now beginning to catch up, notwithstanding the lag in housing starts last year. To stimulate the swing back to housing, to encourage house building at the level that had gone on during 1964, 1965 and 1966 and which was suspended during the last several months of last year, the government introduced in November last a new formula for the establishment of the maximum interest rate which would be permissible under the National Housing Act. This rate was raised to 7¼ per cent, with provision that there would be automatic adjustments quarterly in accordance with the yield on long-term Canada bonds.

Shortly after changing the interest rate the government moved to release the chartered banks from their previous restriction of a 6 per cent maximum interest rate under the Bank Act, and authorized their participation both in N.H.A. and conventional forms of mortgage lending.

No one can deny, if one studies the figures objectively and fairly, that these incentives not only seemed to help but in fact helped considerably. Bringing the banks back into the picture augurs well for housing in the long run.

It should be obvious to any independent thinker that some time would have to elapse before the banks could fully participate in the program. They were authorized to participate in May, and progress of late has been encouraging. I am sure that the situation is even more encouraging to banks and other lending institutions as a result of the announcement I made last night.

Realizing that it would take some time for the banks to come into the picture and for the pendulum to swing—

Mr. Fulton: Might I ask the minister a question? Could he outline the extent of bank participation since the changes were made in the Bank Act and since the budget? Is that figure available?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes. During the last three or four months the banks have been coming in at a rate of $10 million or so a month. It is increasing gradually. The new interest rate should stimulate lending, and we are encouraged by what is happening. One can hardly expect the banks to put their money into housing when they can put it somewhere else to better advantage. That is one of the reasons for our step of last night.

I might also say that the government, realizing that it would take some time for the measures that we announced last year to permit the banks to really come into the picture, took further steps in January. For the first time in Canadian history a spring speculative loan program was introduced. This unprecedented move, together with the normal supply of mortgage money and the introduction of the banks into the picture, resulted in an immediate and substantial surge in housing activity in the spring of this year.

By March of 1967 loans under N.H.A. were being processed at a rate four times that of 1966. These loans included not only home ownership loans but very substantial ones for multiple dwellings for rental purposes, primarily in Toronto and other large cities.

Unfortunately, the re-entry of the chartered banks at first fell somewhat short of our expectations, though in fairness I must say that the response has been more encouraging during the last few months. The reason for the lag is not surprising.

While life insurance companies, trust and loan companies historically have directed most of their investment funds to mortgages, the chartered banks in Canada have concentrated their investment and still are, in the more attractive market of consumer loans. These are facts.

Housing, like other forms of real estate, is a particularly inviting investment when the economic cycle has slowed down to an appreciable extent. One can readily confirm that.

Mr. Woolliams: This is the greatest speech I have ever listened to.

Mr. Nicholson: When the economy is in a buoyant state, as it has been for the last three or four years, other fields of enterprise receive the bulk of private support. That support comes not only from the banks but from other private lending institutions.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman—

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nicholson: I have a limited amount of time at my disposal. I will be glad to answer questions at the end of my remarks.

The report of the Economic Council to which I have already referred suggests that action should be taken to protect housing from the effects of this anti-cyclical force to which I have referred. When the economy is in a buoyant state, there is relatively little money for housing; when otherwise, there is more, more money goes into housing. The Economic Council in its report refers to this fact but makes no suggestions as to what might be done to alter the situation. I think this should be and is one of their responsibilities. They make no suggestion as to what might be done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Graffiey: They are not running the country. You are.

Mr. Nicholson: They are I believe, there to make constructive suggestions occasionally, at least. They are a council set up to advise. Not only do they fail to offer suggestions to correct this situation, but there is nothing new in the statement to which I have referred. Any student of economics could have made the same statement. Not only Canada but other nations have been trying to resolve this problem for many years.

It would be possible, I think, if we wanted to have a completely controlled economy—and I doubt that any of the hon. members directly opposite would favour that—for the government to intrude into the field of private enterprise and create special economic controls which would ensure housing support at all times. But since we have a private enterprise economy I suggest we must strike a balance between the need of funds for housing and the need of funds for other purposes, including social welfare measures, as well as moves to keep the private sector of the economy pulling its weight, for that is where most of our tax revenues come from.

No one would seriously suggest that a person with an income of more than $10,000 a year needs a subsidy. Subsidies are not needed for that type of housing, nor are they needed for luxury travel, for the operation of expensive automobiles, for the purchase of television sets and so on. Surely there is a place in a free enterprise economy for operations of this new interest formula. I say that for those who do not need a subsidy, housing should and must compete with other forms of consumer purchasing. This philosophy was reflected in my announcement last evening of an increase in the maximum permissible N.H.A. rate.

Admittedly—and I make no apologies for it—the new maximum rate will be the highest ever established for lending under the act. But it is a rate which this parliament, or rather a previous parliament, introduced into the act to be used in circumstances such as the present. Make no mistake. Anyone with any knowledge of business in this country will agree that the new rate is a most realistic one in view of the prevailing economic conditions. I might say we have been under heavy pressure for the past year to free the rate entirely. Such action would certainly have given new appeal to N.H.A. mortgages but it is an essential purpose of the act to contain the rate within reasonable boundaries in line with economic conditions, and these conditions now justify the use of the formula which parliament has authorized.

The new formula and the resulting rate, with the additional inducement of the N.H.A. insurance feature, should and I am sure will assure a substantial upswing in the volume of lending just as the move earlier this year got results. What happened last year was that at the end of March the prevailing interest rate dropped. Lenders did not have the possibility of operating under any ceiling. If people in business were getting a rate of 7¼ per cent they knew it would drop to 7 per cent, and it did drop. As a result there was great activity in that field during February and March but when the rate was at the 7 per cent level during early May and June there was no movement to speak of.

It is a question whether we really want housing and will pay the market price for it, or a reasonable price, or whether we go without needed housing. Most of this borrowed money goes into multiple dwellings—apartment blocks—and people who build apartment blocks do not build them just for the pleasure of providing people with accommodation; they do so for profit. They are in business to make a profit. Why should they not pay the same rates as anyone else in business for profit must pay?

I should like to point out, too, that this new formula which is, as I have said, permitted under the act, will allow approved lenders to choose any rate not in excess of the maximum rate that they deem appropriate for the type of housing to be built or having regard to the location of such housing. They will not necessarily fix the maximum rate. In the light of discussions that I have had, discussions not only with builders but with representatives and senior officials of the lending institutions, the banks, mortgage companies and trust companies, I am confident that this new arrangement will create funds for rental projects, multiple dwellings, in the large urban centres where accelerating growth is creating the most urgent need.

Let us see what happened to the money that has gone into housing. I am sure hon. members, and particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in the light of his comments last night, will be interested to learn that the expenditure of the federal government in the field of housing in 1967 will be in excess of $900 million, by far the largest disbursement in history, approximately three times what it was when we took office just over four years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: Actual commitments this year already are well in excess of $750 million and up to the end of August more than $500 million had been allocated in direct loans for home ownership and rental housing. This is double the direct assistance that was made available in 1966 which, incidentally, was a record year.

Unfortunately, the rate of expenditure is one which cannot be continued indefinitely, since the allocation of funds for housing must be considered within the framework of the government's total social obligations, in addition to this $500 milliion for direct housing loans, the government has committed very substantial sums to assist in areas of housing which were neglected when hon. members opposite were responsible for the government of the country—areas which did not exist. We have committed substantial sums to those areas of housing where federal authorities have their greatest responsibilities, namely, housing for low income families, housing for senior citizens and students, and loans and grants for urban renewal.

All these activities, regardless of any economic pressures from outside, require vastly increased government programs. It is in this sector that government housing effort is most justified and it is the government's intention to devote a growing portion of federal aid to these vital social aspects of housing.

The following figures will, I believe, be of interest to all hon. members. Nearly $150 million has already been provided this year for public housing projects throughout the ten provinces. A further $21 million has been made available for the construction of low rental accommodation for senior citizens. Almost $54 million has been allocated for student housing. Municipal programs to eliminate blight and enhance general living conditions have been assisted through urban renewal loans and grants totalling upwards of $55 million, while another $29 million has gone to improving municipal sewage facilities. In this field this year more than $300 million has been allocated to areas of the greatest social need—more than the whole annual program of the party opposite when they were in power, more in nine months of the year than they did in their whole program in a full year, including direct loans, I might say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: The amendments to the National Housing Act which were approved by parliament in June, 1964, have encouraged provinces to incorporate their own housing corporations or agencies. They had not done so previously. They have organized now to co-operate in programs to provide housing for low income families and the elderly. Since the passing of the revisions in 1964, agencies have been or are being formed in eight out of the ten provinces. The same 1964 amendments opened new opportunities for provincial action in the field of public housing as an alternative, at their option, to joint federal-provincial participation. They offer the provinces long-term low interest loans equal to 90 per cent of the cost of the project. Our low rental homes program has enjoyed marked success as witnessed by the fact that in one province at least 90 per cent of the money they invest is being put up by the federal government. In other cases 75 per cent of the funds is put up by the federal government.

• (3:30 p.m.)

As a result of this 1964 legislation—and I think these figures are interesting—16,000 public housing units have been placed under the federal-provincial arrangements and under the 90 per cent loan-assisted program. That is 16,000 units in a little over 30 months, as against 11,700 units in the previous 15 years. It is encouraging that we are making progress at this time and bringing the provinces and municipalities actively into the picture, but it has taken enabling legislation to do so.

In addition to the substantial support being given to the public housing programs, I am anxious to expand substantially the activities of limited dividend housing corporations which were active for the first year or two but which seem to have been quietly forgotten in recent years.

During my visit earlier this year to the ten provinces I emphasized that limited dividend housing corporations can effectively provide, with federal or provincial funds, housing for low income families as well as for elderly persons. I have encouraged the provinces, municipalities and charitable organizations to move into this field. I have also undertaken—and this will be implemented promptly—to make the adjustments in rent levels which are permitted, and as well and perhaps more importantly, in the maximum income qualification. This is because a person cannot get a house financed by a limited dividend corporation if he has an income in excess of $5,000. The provinces, after getting advice from the municipalities if they wish to do so, may recommend the rent level that they think appropriate in a particular case.

We all know, Mr. Chairman, that there is no easy answer to the complex problem of housing production and to the allied problems that arise from urban renewal and development. This is particularly true in the metropolitan cities of Canada. I refer not just to Toronto or Montreal or Vancouver or Winnipeg but to cities ranging down in size to the city of Hamilton.

Mr. Chairman, the availability of mortgage funds, while it is a very important factor, is only one factor. Even if we had the market for double the quantity of housing next year as well as the ability to build that number —say 300,000—it would require ancillary services far beyond the capacity of our provinces and municipalities to provide, certainly beyond the capacity of the municipalities.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, there are many problems affecting the production of housing that can be resolved only by local or provincial initiative, including the supply of land, zoning, urban planning and building by-laws.

While there is absolutely no question, as I have readily conceded at the outset, that housing is a matter of grave national concern, I must say that in view of our rapidly expanding population the problem is bound to be with us indefinitely in those areas where growth takes place. For example, Toronto; when I first visited Toronto at the end of the first war it had a population of about 600,000 but it is now nearly four times that size and nearly one-third of its population has come from other countries.

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the minister to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to allow the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: I thank hon. members for their co-operation. I will not be much longer because I know hon. gentlemen wish to make their contribution and they may have a few questions to ask.

As I way saying, Mr. Chairman, Toronto is perhaps the best example in Canada of situations such as this, partly because of the unusually high percentage of new Canadians who have moved to that city within a relatively short period of time. This situation requires that federal, provincial and municipal governments work together in closest cooperation in order to provide the long-range planning which is necessary to supply the services to meet a greatly enlarged housing program.

We all know perfectly well that in Toronto there are no serviced housing lots available at a price much less than $12,000 per lot. We also know that in some of the municipalities surrounding the city of Toronto the problem is that the town councils would like to see more apartment buildings erected within their boundaries, not individual homes. The reason for this is very simple. More schools are required and the municipalities need money to pay the teachers; yet the major tax base is in the city of Toronto. This is true in every large metropolitan area in the country. There must therefore be joint planning and a joint course of action by the three levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal. This is necessary in order to provide for the arterial roads that are needed, serviced lands, schools, churches, shopping facilities and all the other pieces that go to make up our urban fabric.

As I said at the outset, I welcome wholeheartedly this debate because it gives me an opportunity to invite not just criticism—I welcome it and no one should be in public life if he is not prepared to take it; you have to have broad shoulders and take it with a smile—but constructive suggestions from hon. members directed toward a solution of this problem of major national importance. Criticism is relatively easy for partisan politicians, but we want helpful suggestions.

I do not want hon. members to think that this housing problem has not been given a great deal of thought by me and by others. Suggestions have been made by members of the house and representations were made in the first three months of this year while I was visiting the different cities in all parts of Canada that real encouragement would be given to home ownership if the interest portion of mortgage payments, were deductible for income tax purposes. There is nothing new about that. I understand that it was most successful in Germany in the years subsequent to 1948. It has also been suggested to me that speculation in land holdings may be reduced if a capital gains tax or some other technique were used to prevent excessive profits in the disposal of land held for speculation. There are cases where lots were acquired for $1,200 or $1,500 and after sitting there for 10 or 15 years or so are now worth $12,000 or $14,000. Municipalities and provinces are deeply involved in this kind of suggestion, but two of the provinces actually collect income taxes. This type of suggestion deserves very serious consideration but it could not be put into operation without the consent of the provinces.

There are other factors affecting the production and cost of housing which involve the municipalities and provinces in a very real way. It is partly for these reasons that I made a suggestion to the Prime Minister—others may have made it but I know I did some time ago—that some form of federal-provincial discussion take place to enable urban development in Canada to keep pace with requirements in a realistic and practical way. Unfortunately, with three provincial elections going on we are not likely to have this in the next six or eight weeks, I am convinced, however, that such a conference should be held and it should be held this fall if possible. At least it should be held early in the new year if not before the end of this year.

Housing is an area in which all of us regardless of party affiliation share a common concern. Let us have constructive criticism and constructive suggestions during today's debate.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the minister? In view of the small amount of usage with regard to the loans for existing housing is the minister considering an increase in the amount?

Mr. Nicholson: It is under constant review. I might say that as yet the applications we have received for loans do not indicate that there should be an increase in the level of the ceiling. They are coming in now at the rate of about 600 or so a month. The average loan is less than $9,000. There are hundreds, literally tens of thousands, of houses in the Atlantic region, Ontario, Quebec and the prairie provinces where home owners can move to advantage at the present level. We are trying to allocate the amount of money available to help the largest number of people rather than limit the number. Until the program has been in force for at least a number of months, I think it would be unwise to change the ceiling. However, this ceiling is constantly under study.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I believe the minister said that the average amount of the loans is approximately $9,000.

Mr. Nicholson: For older houses, yes

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Yes. Does the minister understand that there are literally thousands and thousands of people buying homes, for example in Toronto, where the amount of the loan required is far in excess of the maximum loan and that therefore it would be nothing but an exercise in futility to make an application. I would be glad to supply the minister with numerous examples. In view of this, why is the government not now prepared to give consideration to this matter and enact legislation to increase the maximum amount? What is the use of a person applying for a $10,000 loan when he needs $14,000 in order to buy a house?

Mr. Nicholson: The answer is simple. We are receiving an increasing number of applications from all parts of Canada. At first when this procedure for loans on existing houses was new people did not know about it, but it is increasing in tempo. That was particularly evident in Winnipeg when I was there discussing housing matters on Monday of this week. I do believe that we should have at least another few months experience before we consider increasing the level.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): If it is working there, good luck to them, but what is the use of making an application in an area like Toronto or Ottawa where the loan requirement is $13,000 or $14,000 and the maximum allowance is $10,000. It is ridiculous. Why are you not prepared to increase the maximum amount to $15,000 or $16,000 and see what happens, thereby giving the people in the cities a chance to get in on this legislation?

An hon. Member: No answer as usual.

Mr. Sherman: The other day, in relation to his capacity as Minister of Labour, the minister spoke of task forces and anticipatory forces being set up under his direction to probe developing situations on the labour front and to anticipate problems which might appear on the labour front so that there could be planning to meet these problems. I think that statement was enthusiastically received by people all across Canada. My question to the minister at this point simply is, are a similar approach and attitude being brought to bear on this other area of his capacity so that in the future the recurring chronic crises in housing can perhaps be planned for, anticipated and headed off?

Mr. Nicholson: There is considerable merit in that suggestion. This is not the first time it has been made, but it certainly is a meritorious one. I have given very serious thought to recommending that either a committee of this house or of the two houses of parliament study this matter so that their views can be placed before the federal-provincial conference when it is held.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, for the first time in this house we have seen a minister who is responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation act in a belligerent way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Keays: —in addressing the house. I did not believe the minister had the capability of doing so. I can only say that it must be a camouflage to draw the attention of the Canadian people away from the real crisis in this country in the domain of housing. The minister has endeavoured to go back over the years and refer to the records of previous governments, fully realizing that Canada is a young and growing nation and that the forecast of the experts was that more family units would be formed in the years 1966 to 1970. He goes back to statistics in order to prove that with a population of 20 million the same principle can be applied that applied to a population of 15 million or 16 million.

This is an exercise in futility, Mr. Chairman, which will not answer or solve the serious problem now facing the Canadian nation. There is a serious crisis in Canada and it will not be solved by merely repeating statistics. We must be more realistic and get down to basic thinking. This government has never done that. It seems to be more interested in political expediency than in anything else, and it refuses to stand up and admit to the Canadian people that the position it adopted and followed over a period of three years is one which is now causing the deep concern that all Canadians have today.

The minister knew of the projected estimates and the estimated housing requirements and he has taken action at a snail's pace. By referring to the government's record of ten years ago he has hoped to camouflage the inefficiency of his administration in so far as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is concerned. We do not have to go back very far to see the true picture. Statistics from the Canadian Housing Review show that housing starts declined from an annual rate of 151,000 units last July to 146,000 in August. The house construction industry is normally very active in the summer months, and when we note that in the middle of the summer there is a decline in housing starts we can be sure we are in for a serious disappointment in the fall of the year.

N.H.A. activity in respect of approved loans remained relatively low in August with loan applications in the amount of 877 units. This was 5.1 per cent below the year before in respect of seasonal adjustments. This represents an annual rate of about 10,500 units. With a situation like this in a young, growing country such as ours with so many new families we can expect a disastrous 1968.

The announcement made by the minister last night about the increase in the interest rate was no great surprise to prospective home owners and potential investors. The home owner has come to know this government as one that operates with patch-up legislation, interim measures, ill-conceived, unsuitable and not very well thought out policies for the Canadian people. It is obvious that this announcement was not surprising to potential home owners in view of the criticism which has been levelled at the government over the past few years by those who have aspired to the ownership of shelters. This criticism has been so intensive the government has been forced finally to throw out the challenge to those who supply the source of funds by allowing this fantastic increase in the interest rates.

It is not surprising that the government had to delve deep into the old practices to find justification for increasing the rate to 1 per cent above that which was suggested by the minister some six months ago. The shortage of homes in Canada is reaching such an alarming proportion we are witnessing in our large centres and rural areas great stress and mental suffering on the part of prospective home owners. This is the result of the turmoil into which these people have been thrown by the actions of the government.

Let me refer to a statement made by the minister on April 10, 1967, as recorded at page 14704 of Hansard. In answer to a question that day the Minister of Labour said:

> There is no fixed date. It is in line with the return, the long-term yield on government bonds and, as already forecast, it has dropped to 7 per cent. It is the government's hope that there will be a further drop before long under the formula announced last December.

What a formula that was, Mr. Chairman. It resulted in an increase from 7 per cent to 8¼ per cent in the interest rate charged to those who make loans to purchase shelters in which they may raise their families. The announcement yesterday was not unexpected by the suppliers of funds. They knew that the government's policy was short term and they were convinced that soon they would receive an increased return on their investment far out of proportion to the return they could receive from government bonds or securities.

Recently the Minister of Finance, recognizing the inflationary trend, urged restraint on the part of business, labour and provincial governments while at the same time increasing federal government spending. This is the old squeeze that only has the effect of increasing the cost of production to the consumer at a time of spiralling costs and excessive salary increases. This can have no other effect than additional costs causing strain and suffering for those who only a few years ago thought their reserves were sufficient to meet the costs of the projects which they had planned so well.

There has been government apathy in so far as this problem is concerned. As long ago as December of last year the president of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation stated that we needed 170,000 starts in 1967. He said there would be an acute shortage of housing and that we required a total production of 750,000 units in the next four years. What has the government done about this?

Has the government heeded the warning that was given to them? They have done nothing whatsoever. The only thing they have done is to have the minister go across the country holding seminars and telling the provincial and municipal governments that they too have a responsibility with regard to housing. But the fiscal measures of this government have not allowed the provincial governments sufficient funds with which to fulfil their obligations.

We heard the minister today trying to justify the position his government has taken. He seemed cornered and had to rely upon statistics to prove that there was an increase in house construction. If we cannot look forward from year to year to increases in housing demands, increases in population, etc., it is time we turned the government of this country over to a party that is able to foresee the future.

I agree with the minister when he says that housing is also a provincial and a municipal responsibility. I can only say, however, that in this field which is concerned with the national welfare of our citizens the national government has a solemn duty to take the initiative and bring together those bodies which are provincial creations and are concerned with this matter. Unfortunately the minister's message has not come through. This problem has not been caused because the provincial governments have been indifferent to it. It has been caused, rather, through the fiscal policies of the government which have made it impossible for the provinces to fulfil their obligations in the field of housing and in many other sectors of the economy.

We may argue the pros and cons of the minister's statement, but it remains crystal clear that the government has refused not only in the last few months but in the last few years to look forward and plan fiscal policies to meet changing conditions. Statements have been made by those on the government benches that the government is going to reconsider its position and make funds available on a priority basis. This is a futile intention on the part of the government because priority in each department of government has a different meaning. For reasons of political expediency every member on the government front benches finds a reason why his program should not be changed.

If the government had really intended to cut back on government expenditures it would have postponed some of those projects which are not intended to be productive. The end result, however, is that the government is short of funds in important sectors of the economy such as housing and the people of Canada have to suffer the consequences.

What is the nature of the housing problem? Is it predominantly of a social character? I say it is, because it touches the very life of the family. The problem in this field is causing undue hardship to many of our wage earners. The problem is constantly with us because we are a growing nation. It has often been said in the house that by the end of the 1960's housing starts and completions would have to be at an annual rate of 200,000 units. Added to this figure, of course, are replacement demands amounting to approximately 50,000 units per year.

We can see, therefore, that we have an important goal to attain. The minister in his statement of last year had every confidence that the measures he was proposing would meet this demand. Unfortunately, the experience of the last few months has proven that the figure of houses completed has dropped away below expectations and housing starts have dropped by an alarming degree. The prospects of attaining our goal are dim indeed.

When we look at the record of the government in the field of housing we find they have been an accomplice in those factors which have increased the cost of housing and land by approximately 35 per cent within the last four years. Adding to the cost of housing is the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This tax has been constantly opposed by my party. Adding to the cost of housing is the higher cost of labour because of, as I mentioned earlier, urgent demands for increases in salaries to meet the higher cost of living. Also adding to this problem is the short-term policy of the government which allowed land speculation to be abnormal.

Another factor in this problem is the cost of building materials which has risen beyond any normal increase because of inflationary pressures and the high cost of production. In this respect we have a government that is continually endeavouring to drive a corkscrew deeper and deeper into the festering social fibre of the family.

It is true that the new rate announced by the minister will not affect the interest rates on loans for public housing projects for families of low income, housing for older persons, student housing, urban renewal and sewage treatment projects. However, when we consider the effects the increase in the interest rate will have we immediately see that we have eliminated from the market all those with incomes ranging from $4,000 to $8,000. The people in this wage bracket represent a large majority of the wage earners of Canada.

I have every sympathy with those who have to live in public housing projects. It is the duty of government to help those who have not the necessary resources for the maintenance of their families, to intercede and give comfort to those families. This government is not preoccupied at the moment, and should not be, with those who want a $50,000 house, because funds are available right across the country for those who need such houses.

But I ask the government to think of those families whose income is between $4,000 and $8,000. These families will never again be able to own a house in Canada. The government has eliminated the majority of wage earners in this country from owning a home. Any government that does this has failed in its responsibility to provide good administration. If a worker has an income of $8,000 a year he will not be able now to buy a house costing $15,000 or $18,000. Add to the payments of capital and interest those for school and municipal taxes, add income taxes, both federal and provincial, add the cost of maintenance of the house, and you will find that families with an income of $7,000 or $8,000 a year will become indigent and will have to come to the government of this country asking for help in an effort to subsist.

This is a sad state of affairs. When you deprive wage earners in the $4,000 to $8,000 bracket of the possibility of ever owning a house, you are doing the greatest injustice that has ever been done by any government to any people in any land. I hope the government's policy with regard to low income wage earners will be continued so that we will give to them all those facilities to which they are entitled, but I also ask that the middle income group be given the same facilities to which all Canadians are entitled.

The minister is well aware of the fact that in view of the present costs it is practically impossible even to consider the construction of a home costing less than $15,000. The repayment of principal and interest plus the annual taxes calculated on a monthly basis must not exceed 27 per cent of the gross annual income, so it can be stated that a person earning $6,000 a year cannot qualify for a loan because after his monthly payments are made the balance left puts him into the category of a low income earner. It can therefore be said that no one earning under $8,000 a year can qualify for a loan under the policy laid down by the government. This is a serious state of affairs because, as I have mentioned previously, we have deprived the majority of the Canadian people of the possibility of owning a home and this strikes at the very heart of our social structure in Canada.

It is all very well to criticize the government for policies which do not seem to meet the views of another party, but I believe it is also our responsibility to be able to suggest what must be done to meet the crisis and alleviate the problem. First and foremost we must consider the necessity of conducting research into housing and its problems in so far as the cost and quality of housing are concerned. We note that housing has been an industry where such research has been lacking, and it is the government's responsibility to order intensive research in this domain.

Research is mandatory in regard to urban development more than in other areas because our cities are younger, more spread out and flexible than cities in the order parts of Europe and the conglomerations in the United States. It is important that more intensive research be carried out into urban renewal and recreational facilities for those living in these areas. A more drastic drive must be made in order to encourage private enterprise to make funds available to meet the demands on the financial market. It seems strange to me that our Canadian financial institutions cannot meet the challenge extended to them, because the security on housing loans afforded them by the government is greater and more lucrative than on investments that can be made in corporations. I am not stating that they should keep away from corporate investments, but surely they would be encouraged to invest an important part of their portfolio in housing in Canada.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Keays: I will permit one as soon as I am through.

I was rather amused at the minister's statement in which he encouraged investors to lend money at a rate below the ceiling which has just been authorized. I would hate to believe that the refusal by private enterprise to invest money is caused by the feeling of insecurity which these people have with regard to the government. Therefore it is very important that the government give heed to these fears and assure the financial community of our country that it intends to establish strict fiscal policies and put our economy on a stable and projected long-term base. Urban development is not encouraged. Long delays in servicing land, the extravagant standards which are demanded and the complexity of municipal laws and regulations all add to the cost of housing projects and cause a lack of interest among project builders.

Surely we should have thought of devising new ways of raising money for housing. It would seem to me that the issuance of debentures, guaranteed by the government, by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could create interest among people with small savings and encourage them to put their money in these secured investments which would provide a rate of interest comparable with that on government bonds or good corporate investments. Had this plan been adopted some years ago we would have had enough cash inflow to meet the financial demands of the day.

I could go on for a long time exposing the housing problems of Canada. However, I do hope above all that the government will reassure the financial community of this country that it is serious in trying to curtail expenditures which are not productive and that it will give to the average taxpayer of this country the incentive to invest his savings in housing for the good of all Canadians.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was good enough to say that he would permit a question. I wish to ask him one in connection with one of the statements he made. He spoke about the fact that the new interest rate would adversely affect people in the low income range. Does he know that from among those who have borrowed in excess of $500 million this year more than half the borrowers have incomes between $4,000 and $7,000 a year?

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to dispute that fact in any way but I think every member of the house and every Canadian knows quite well about the 8¼ per cent interest rate on loans, and if these people are in the $4,000 to $7,000 bracket they will never be able to meet their responsibilities.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, in speaking on behalf of the New Democratic party perhaps I could start by making a few comments on the minister's speech. Over the years the minister has treated us to some rather interesting statements in trying to defend that which is indefensible. But his speech today certainly took the cake. If you boil it down to one or two sentences, the minister is trying to tell us that there is no shortage of housing. We have too many people in Canada and the housing shortage is really some rumour spread by all the people who cannot buy homes. That appears to be his attitude.

He has accused us of being partisan on this issue. Everybody knows that we are not partisan in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): We never take partisan positions in the opposition. We are here only to make solid, sound, constructive proposals and to speak on behalf of the people. As I say, we never take partisan positions.

[Mr. Keays.]

The government's attitude on housing is reflected by the fact that to get at the housing problem we had to wait for the estimates of the Department of Labour to be discussed. That, I think, epitomizes the attitude of this government. At Ottawa housing has never been accepted as a prime responsibility. It has been kicked from one minister to another over the years. The Minister of Labour has been so busy settling strikes and other things that he has never had a chance to direct his attention to the problems of the housing industry of this country.

I wish to say two things mainly about the increase in the interest rate to 8¼ per cent. First, I think the public should be made aware of what the increase means to them. The normal purchaser buying an N.H.A. house with a $15,000 mortgage will repay on that $15,000 over 35 years $46,725. If the $15,000 mortgage runs only for 30 years he will repay $40,050. That is a pretty drastic critique of the new Liberal politics we were led to expect.

Equally important, it must be pointed out that no matter how much money is put into mortgages under N.H.A., homes will be built that the vast majority of Canadians cannot afford to buy in any event. We should stop hoodwinking the public that by coming into the house and mouthing statistics about the amount of money going into mortgages the government is in any way beginning to attack the housing shortage. It is not. We are misleading the public, and the sooner we stop doing that and face the facts the sooner we shall get down to serious discussion.

In a way I wish I could dislike the minister. It is always easier to go after somebody you do not like. But the minister is a likeable person. When he first got his portfolio many of us hoped he would make a serious attack on the housing shortage of this country. We gave him several years relatively free from criticism in the hope that progress could be made. But after all is said and done, what has happened is that the new lieutenant governor of British Columbia is shortly to leave us, leaving behind this mess that we have inherited. So for as I am concerned, his greatest contribution to the housing crisis would have been had he remained postmaster general.

A prominent political figure in Ontario discussed the new interest rate on the radio yesterday. He said that it was an absolutely frightening figure—and he happens to be the Liberal leader in the province of Ontario. That was his method of endorsing the new interest rate that is to come into effect.

The minister asked us to do two things, to be critical and to try in some small measure to be constructive. Of course, as good members of the opposition we are always interested in being constructive. The real problem in housing today in Canada as I see it is that no level of government will be honest enough with the public to admit that a housing crisis exists, though it is apparent everywhere. You cannot travel throughout this country without seeing the critical situation of housing. In my opinion it is the most urgent social problem we are faced with. The shortage is not confined to places like Toronto; it is present in rural areas and in small towns. It is a problem which exists across this country from one ocean to the other. For the minister, therefore, to get up and suggest to us who represent the various areas of this country that there is no problem is fatuous. His whole speech was an exercise in fatuous frolicking. It did not come to grips with the problem.

I wish that for once the government of this country would say: There is a problem and we are prepared to co-operate to try to solve it. Instead, every time that we raise the matter the minister gets up with a whole batch of statistics to floor us with his rhetoric and say, "There is no problem. It is a kind of isolated thing which, if we close our eyes, may some day go away." That is all he told us today. We simply will not solve the housing crisis in this country unless this government and other governments are prepared to say: We admit there is a problem.

We are not saying that the federal government is wholly to blame. This problem has arisen since the second world war and it is a product of the inattention, lassitude and apathy not just of the federal government but of all the provincial governments and municipal authorities. Everyone must share the blame. But for heaven's sake let us admit that it exists and try to get down to constructive action. Let us try to assess the problem and deal with it. If the government would only do that we should be on our way to some sort of solution. Instead, the minister persists in his fatuous position that there is no problem and that there is only isolated difficulty here and there which can be dealt with by unloading a lot of mortgage money.

The minister talked about private enterprise and said that it could solve the problem. I am not criticizing private enterprise. It goes where the money is. That is its job. But in no country of the world has private enterprise solved the housing problem of the majority of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I do not say that self-righteously. I do not even criticize. It is engaged in business and it goes where the most money is. It has not solved the housing crisis anywhere else and it will not solve it in Canada, despite what the minister says.

My third point is that the minister must stop running around the country hiding behind the British North America Act. The position he constantly takes is: We can do nothing because under the constitution housing is under the authority of the provinces. That attitude is disastrous. Housing is of national concern, no matter under whose jurisdiction it lies. The people in the provincial governments are eager to co-operate with the federal government. They are looking for help, leadership and co-operation. They are not worried about the B.N.A. Act; they are worried about their people.

For the minister constantly to scurry behind the B.N.A. Act every time we talk about housing is reprehensible and unforgiveable. Ottawa must begin to accept responsibility. Until it does we can have debates for 30 or 40 hours, we can take days in talking, but unless we are prepared in this chamber to accept responsibility for housing as a matter of national concern, no solution is in sight.

I hope the minister is not expecting a lot of solutions this afternoon. I suggest that no single person in this chamber this afternoon can give a blueprint to solve the housing problem. Let us admit to the public that it is a deep-rooted, far-ranging, difficult problem and that at this stage we do not know the precise answer. But let us say that we will accept responsibility and that we will start to do something concrete. That is what the public wants to hear and not a lot of ridiculous statements about mortgage money and how it will cure a problem which does not exist. Let us tell the public the truth for a change. That would go a long way toward getting co-operation.

We have many problems in the field of housing. I have studied that field since coming to Ottawa and its magnitude and complexity are overwhelming. We are not a unitary government; we must work with the provinces and municipalities. We have the most outdated building codes known to mankind. A whole host of problems must be resolved.

Another thing for which we have been asking, though I know our request has fallen on deaf ears, is a ministry of housing and urban affairs staffed by a full-time minister. How in heaven's name can you expect a man to tackle the greatest social problem that we have when he is constantly beset with the problems of labour? Perhaps he does do a good job in that field. I do not know and there are other opinions, but certainly the minister cannot perform both tasks.

What is the use of educating our children and spending billions of dollars to that end if they and other people of Canada are not adequately housed? There is no possible way of solving the problem except by the appointment of a minister of housing and urban affairs. I say this because the greatest problem that we are going to face in the next 20 years is what I call the urbanization of Canada. We are becoming a country of city dwellers. Before very long 80 to 85 per cent of our people will live in cities or in great metropolitan areas. I see the minister nodding his head in agreement.

The housing crisis is an obvious one, Mr. Chairman, because it is the first problem that epitomizes the dilemma of urbanization. But it is only the first problem. Other enormous problems loom ahead such as sewage disposal, water pollution and transportation, as well as cultural problems. The difficulties that lie ahead are fantastic and housing is but the first problem we run into. We have not solved it yet; indeed, we have not even got down to the business of solving it.

Three years ago I made a speech on housing in the course of which I analysed in great detail the housing question and recounted some of the short-term and long-term measures. At that time I pleaded with the minister to appoint a royal commission on urbanization which could travel across the country and find out what our needs are going to be, what type of housing will be required, where it will be built and what type of financing will be necessary. I asked the minister to set up a royal commission so as to provide a blueprint for the next 20 years.

We are fighting in the dark, Mr. Chairman. We do not have the statistical background which is required to analyse the whole broad spectrum of urbanization in this country. Nothing has been done in this regard, of course, because none of us really expected it to take place. If the minister had foreseen this event we would be in a position today to decide what kind of problem we face and to put forward possible solutions. Instead we are wallowing around with the crisis becoming worse every day and the actions of the federal government becoming less every day, in spite of what the minister says.

My remarks being of a general nature, I also want to remind the minister of this facet. Three years ago I pleaded with the minister to get away from the C.M.H.C. boys, to travel across the country instead of letting them surround him with their phony statistics which they use to buttress their entrenched position. I suggested that if the minister did this he would be in a better position to analyse the problem. At that time I told him I envied him. When he became Minister of Labour and part time minister of housing I said he would have the chance to change the face of this country. That would have been his mark, I suppose, certainly his memorial. However, this did not happen, and we on this side of the house are very disappointed in the minister, likeable though he may be. The minister has not been a successful minister in the field of housing.

There are many other things one could say, Mr. Chairman. For example, the minister quoted from the report of the Economic Council. For years we were told that when we talked about housing we were indulging in a lot of partisan politics, that we were just taking advantage of the situation. I do not know how the government can say that now. The report vindicates the position that all parties in the opposition have taken over the years. The report tears to shreds the housing program of the government. It shows it to be nothing less than inadequate, shortsighted, lacking in planning, lacking in financing—in short, lacking everything that is required for a proper housing program. The report of the Economic Council is not the product of partisan politics. It carries the weight of the most responsible group in Canada which we in this chamber created. It makes clear that there is no housing program at Ottawa at all.

The minister also talked about mortgages. For years we have asked both him and the government to create some sort of regular source of mortgage funds. One of the problems of my builder clients is that they never know whom to approach for funds. In Canada mortgage money has been turned on and off like a tap in order to meet economic needs. The Economic Council points out that housing has been treated as a pump primer and it is severely critical of this fact. When things look bad a billion dollars of mortgage money is thrown into the market; when the economy is good the flow is cut off and the building industry is ruined.

This sort of situation has been perpetuated over the years. Clients of mine have gone bankrupt because, having started projects with the promise that they would get the money, Ottawa has then turned off the tap and the projects have had to be abandoned. Therefore I suggest that the government has never treated the supply of mortgage money as a permanent need because it has never accepted housing as a proper social requirement. This is another criticism that has been made over the years.

The problem that the minister tried to solve a year or two ago has not been resolved. There is now no adequate machinery for consultation among the provinces, the municipalities and the federal government. Without it there is absolutely no hope of ever solving the housing crisis.

Most of the points which will be developed in detail will be handled by other members of our party as the debate proceeds, but in closing I want to reiterate what I said earlier. Like the minister, all of us are concerned about this problem. All of us are wrestling with it, looking for a solution. But there can be no solution until the government in Ottawa declares, first of all, that there is a crisis, second, that it is prepared to grapple with it and, third, that it is prepared to begin working the problem out by setting up a ministry devoted to housing needs and nothing else.

Even if the government took this step, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there would be any quick solution. There are inadequacies everywhere. The minister talks of 16,000 public housing units; Toronto alone is short of 25,000. Only 3 per cent of our housing production is devoted to public housing needs as against 12 to 25 per cent in most other developing countries. So we are a long way behind even in this regard.

Neither is there a program to meet the needs of the old age pensioners. In my constituency old age pensioners cannot rent homes if they have only their old age pension because they do not have sufficient funds to pay the rent. They would need to supplement their income. I suggest that most young people in the country today who are getting married will never own a home as long as they live. This is a pretty serious situation for our country.

Mr. Ryan: That is a pretty wild statement.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): My hon. friend from Spadina interjects. I hope he will make a speech and give us the benefit of his remarks. The hon. member says that is a wild statement.

Mr. Ryan: I should like to ask the hon. member how he is so positive that the province of Ontario is so eager to co-operate. How does he know that?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Because, Mr. Chairman, I have done what this government has not done; I have talked to the officials in Ontario.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit another question? Does he know of a single application for a public housing loan which has come to Ottawa in the last few years that has not been dealt with very promptly?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Scott (Danforth): That is not the point. My criticism is that members of the government sit in their seats and wait for people to come to them. Where is the leadership? Parliament passes a law—and we in this chamber were glad to pass it—and then hon. gentlemen opposite sit on their "fannies" and do nothing to see that it is carried out. That is the big problem. The hon. gentleman and his friends should get out and sell this legislation to the public. This is what they are not doing, and this is why public housing in this country is a joke. It is failing because the government declines to go out and sell its own program. I recognize that the minister does not have the time to do all this. He is a part time minister, and we regret that. There are plenty of teeth in the National Housing Act if it is properly used, but at the present time it is not being promoted properly.

I wish we could all accept the fact of the housing crisis. We are not talking about statistics but about people who are suffering. They are not rows of figures such as the minister reads into the pages of Hansard. They are citizens of this country and they deserve better treatment than they have been getting at the hands of the government.

If we do not begin to make a serious attack on the housing problems of our growing cities, future parliaments will curse us. We have the affluence, we have the facts, if we could assemble them, we have the knowledge, we have the technical skills that are required, we have the manpower. All that is needed is the will. If we had the will we could solve Canada's housing crisis.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, while we are dealing with the estimates relating to the National Housing Act, I should like to make a few remarks to the minister responsible for the application of the act and denounce the decision of the government to increase the rate of interest to 8¼ per cent of which the minister advised the house yesterday. That rate applies to housing construction and, of course, low-price housing will suffer most from it.

The minister knows full well that housing needs are high in Canada and that they are felt almost exclusively by those who have little or no income: the destitute, the poor, the economically weak as some like to call them. It is therefore especially at that level that the housing problem exists today. Almost every day we read in our newspapers of protests made by building contractors or housing organizations, of provinces, in short, the whole country, against the attitude of the government towards housing generally.

Those people complain mostly about the lack of funds made available for housing projects, because of the increased demand for homes due to the greater number of weddings in Canada. We shall return to that subject later on, because statistics have been submitted to us to that effect.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the recent government decision to raise the rate of interest to 8¼ per cent will further prevent people from owning their own homes. The previous speaker mentioned some calculations that have been made, and I should also like to deal with the effect of that increase and comment on its results.

That increase to 8¼ per cent for a $15,000 loan over a 15 year period will cost $31,059.30 in interest only, or a total of over $46,000 for a house after 35 years. Mr. Chairman, that means that whoever wants to own a home will have to pay twice to the financier who is profiting from this legislation. We, of the Ralliement créditiste are opposed to this state of affairs and will fight it.

A while ago, towards the end of his speech, the minister asked us for suggestions. Yet he has had some coming from all parts of the country, from representatives of building associations as well as from representatives of homeowners associations. My suggestion to the minister this afternoon is to regulate the situation. It is known, for instance, that a man who marries at 30 or 35 years of age —possibly earlier—waits a few years before buying a home then he buys a $15,000 home on a 35-year plan and when his house is paid up, he will be aged 65 or 70. By that time, after 35 years, if he has made no repairs on his house, it will be a slum, it will be obsolete and possibly unfit for occupation. The financial trick is apparent. Through the National Housing Act of 1954, financiers lend money to build such houses. They have no repairs or maintenance to handle, they are taking no risk because of the government guarantee on the one hand and, on the other, there is insurance against fire or loss. So, they will pocket $31,059 without any risk on the construction of a home, a $15,000 house.

[Mr. Scott (Danforth).]

• (4:50 p.m.)

That is a source of inflation and makes it impossible for most Canadian families to own their own home. When one is a homeowner, one pays rent throughout one's life and, in the end, one realizes that the title is on a worthless house.

The real owners of our residential buildings are the financiers. We bear the financiers no grudge as such, but we want our Canadian families to really own their homes. We want it to be possible for them to have a home of their own, without having to pay the financiers for two other houses.

Mr. Chairman, we are asking the government, the minister responsible for the National Housing Act to use the Bank of Canada to make credit available so that loans can be made available and this credit should be put in circulation without cost except administration.

Every time a new house is built, the credit for the amount it has cost should be put into circulation, free from interest and should not be considered as a debt. And every time a house is destroyed, whether because it is falling to pieces with age or otherwise, the same amount could be withdrawn from circulation, thus avoiding inflationary risks. In my opinion, it is the only way for the minister and the government to settle the housing problem in Canada. I cannot see any other way out. Nobody, so far, has ever suggested any plan or offered any valid answer to this problem except that of using the Bank of Canada, an institution which belongs to us, Canadians, and which ought to lend its services to Canadians who need a house and are entitled thereto.

This is my suggestion to the minister. If he can prove it does not make any sense, I am ready to change my mind, provided he gives me time to examine his own suggestions beforehand.

On May 27, 1966, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), in answer to a question from the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), said:

> To date only those who could not meet the basic credit requirements essential to become a home owner were refused mortgage loans.

Loans are refused to persons who are not solvent. But why are they not? Because they are for some time deprived of the fruit of their labour, through income tax and taxes of all kinds. Thus, they are deprived of all possibility of saving a few dollars, and when they ask for a loan, after having been fleeced by all sorts of means, they are told: You are not solvent, you cannot be given a loan. And that, after the government itself has taken everything they possess or what they could have saved to buy a house.

Mr. Chairman, it is against such things that we protest. We feel that every Canadian citizen, every Canadian family should have a home and really own it.

Today, a solution is being put forward. Low-rent housing will be built for low-income people. Last fall, I visited a housing project sponsored by the national association of housing contractors under the auspices of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In that research project called Mark IV efforts were made to find a way to build houses at the lowest cost possible. Government officials, economists, sociologists are racking their brains to find ways to lower the construction cost. What did we manage to do with that research project Mark IV? We simply managed to build a squalid house.

And when Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or any other agency makes plans to build low-cost houses for low-income people, they will only come out with squalid houses, at the present time, because the cost of materials has become exorbitant due to all kinds of taxes.

I say to the minister that if he wants more houses, increased housing, if he wants even more demand, he should start by an immediate removal of the tax on building materials and the thousands of taxes of all kinds which enter into the cost of materials and which the buyers are not aware of. For instance, and this is a specific case—it may not be a federal but provincial tax which they have to charge simply because the federal government has too many taxes of other kinds and the provincial government must step in somehow to get funds—the Abitibi area, where I live, produces lumber for building purposes. However, this lumber is not used in Abitibi only, it is shipped to larger centres, such as Montreal and Toronto. So, to truck about 20,000 f.b.m. of lumber from Rouyn to Montreal, 200 gallons of diesel oil are required; with the 22 cents tax per gallon, this amounts to $44 for each return trip between Rouyn and Montreal.

So, for each truckload from Rouyn to Montreal, lumber cost is direclty increased by $44 in Montreal, due to this diesel oil tax.

Cost of building materials of all types is thus increased through hidden taxes that are felt but not seen, so that such materials have now become almost a luxury, an almost impossible buy. A house which cost $14,500, less than five years ago, is now retailed at $22,000, always using the same materials. This is only as far as cost is concerned.

And now the minister tells us that the interest rate has gone up. So, you can realize how acute the housing problem is in Canada.

We are told that in 1961, about 30 per cent of Canada's workers, numbering at the time 6½ million, did not earn enough to pay income tax. They would certainly be unable to pay for decent housing, at today's prices and high interest rates.

These Canadian workers who do not pay income tax must spend too high a proportion of their earnings if they want to live in a fairly decent home; thus, the amount of money needed for food, clothing and other basic needs for a decent standard of living is inadequate, because they spend it on housing. The housing shortage is one of the reasons for high rents, and this has been repeated many times, specially more recently. And restricting loans, through credits or increased loan interest rates, contributes to the impoverishment of our workers, our senior citizens, our invalids, our unemployed, in short all those with fixed or modest income.

While some ministers say they are undertaking to fight poverty and want, others persist in making people poor. One would think they are fighting the poor rather than poverty.

The housing problem is even more desperate for large families. In 1961, there were more than 60,000 families living in houses that did not contain half the number of necessary rooms. The efforts made by the governments using the National Housing Act that provides low-rent housing for families earning a small income and for the aged have almost been a failure.

• (5:00 p.m.)

In Toronto, the Social Planning Metropolitan Council has made it known that we had missed by 56 per cent the goal set for a five-year period ending in 1963. Only 2,500 new housing units for the aged have been built in the Toronto metropolitan area. Still fewer low rental family units have been built. An objective of 5,000 units had been set, but only 352 were built, that is 7 per cent of the objective.

In Montreal, the situation is even worse. Thousands of houses are shared by two families and many other families with four or five children or even more live in two rooms.

The director of the Montreal board of social services, Mr. Pierre Laplante, has accurately described the conditions at the end of May 1966 at a meeting attended by civil and religious authorities. The newspaper Le Devoir of June 1 also referred to them.

I am now quoting Le Devoir of June 1966:

Mr. Laplante complained that hundreds of houses have been demolished in blighted areas with the help a wide publicity campaign, but that nothing had been built afterwards . . . neither the new C.B.C. building nor low rental housing units. He explained that the families thus expelled from their decrepit homes had to seek refuge in other homes just as decrepit. "In the last few years, he stated, a great many homes have been demolished, it is true, but for the purpose of building skyscrapers and apartment buildings for millionaires. Now, the lots cleared of their unsanitary dwellings are becoming residential districts for rich people and, as a result, the poor must find shelter elsewhere."

Mr. Laplante added that downtown Montreal is the most densely populated area in North America (11,000 inhabitants per square mile) or 88,000 families whose average annual income barely exceeds $3,000.

Mr. Chairman, could the head of a family then seriously consider owning a home when he barely earns $3,000 and he would have to meet monthly instalments of $140 or $150, without including the cost of maintenance? It is unthinkable.

And now, back to the article:

Almost 70 per cent of those families live in extremely difficult circumstances, if not in the most abject poverty. "The children, he said, wear hand-me-downs from their grandfathers and green expanses are practically non-existent. Just open the front door and you are on the pavement."

And Mr. Laplante added: "In this narrow strip of land, lives a strata of the population that never sees the sun."

Well then, Mr. Speaker, the situation which prevailed in Montreal in 1966 is very much the same to-day and perhaps even worse since I believe that because of Expo, house-building may have slackened.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Chairman, in the face of such a situation and in view of the need for new houses, I feel that instead of increasing interest rates, the minister should give some thought to cutting it down so as to allow more Canadian families to have decent houses built, in order to give them a sense of ownership rather than the feeling they are just tenants at the service of financial interests.

The fourth annual report of the Economic Council of Canada states very clearly our housing requirements until 1970; according to that report, there should be at least 200,000 housing starts every year up to 1970. Again, Mr. Chairman, that will not keep up with the increased requirements, because with 200,000 units a year we will not even make up for lost time, since we are already quite late in the field of housing construction.

Those are the few comments I wanted to offer the minister, since we are discussing the housing problem in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, it is not by increasing the cost of housing that we will solve this problem, but rather by reducing it. Let us make the borrowing facilities available to the builders, available to the public. We may offer as many facilities as we want, but if housing costs continue to rise, as is now the case, if rental costs keep going up, as is now the case, families, heads of families will never become home-owners, and I think that the workers have the right to home ownership, in order to feel at home in a house, with a front and a back yard, and a lawn to rest after their working day, a place where they could grow a few things, do a little gardening and plant some flowers, because they will be happy to own a piece of their homeland. It is only then that we shall have real patriots willing to defend their homeland because they will own a part of it.

Mr. Chairman, everybody has a right to live in his own home, in a single house which will be his only, and the duty of the government is to take the necessary steps to help him to reach this aim.

Now, I think that if the minister and his government will try a little and look for solutions, they have only to address themselves to the governor of the Bank of Canada and give him the necessary orders to create credit as quickly as the houses we shall be able to build. When this is done, we can rest assured that it will not take very long before everybody gets his own house in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, a few months ago parliament increased the bank interest rate. At that time we were told, particularly in the finance committee, that if we took this one step money would become available. The small income earner who wanted to buy land would have to pay less for his money. Some of us were rather suspicious of that reasoning at the time, and I think our suspicions were borne out yesterday with the announcement by the Minister of Labour of the increase in the N.H.A. mortgage interest rate. Obviously the money has not become available for less than it cost before we took that step.

We must seriously consider what will happen when we adopt interest rates like this. I hoped yesterday that someone would do the arithmetic involved and, of course, someone has. In today's Globe and Mail we find that on an $18,000 maximum loan at 8¼ per cent the total payment over the full term of 25 years is $42,084. In other words, the interest charge is $24,084 or $6,084 more than the original loan.

This additional money is not required for labour or for materials in the house but strictly to pay for the loan. We might ask where that extra money is to be found. It certainly does not come from increased productivity. New money is created annually to a certain extent, and this has something to do with productivity, but this extra can only be derived by borrowing from the future. We are becoming involved in spiralling interest rates which will destroy our economic system unless very serious consideration is given and certain steps taken to stop this at some point.

The minister in his statement yesterday and today during his elaboration referred to urbanization being responsible for the housing crisis. He said, "The government tends to devote a larger portion of resources to trouble spots resulting from the fantastic urban growth which has taken place." There has been a fantastic urban growth, much of which has taken place in our large cities where land costs are high. Far too much of the money that is ostensibly being spent for housing must first be spent to obtain a bit of land on which to build the house.

One thing that bothers me is the number of regulations imposed by the government or its authorities which have the effect of increasing building costs, because this accelerates the move to the city. Extremely stringent rules apply to N.H.A. housing with regard to lending money for houses to be built on lands that are not connected to sewers. This affects the availability of money for housing. Some years ago the government attempted to tackle this problem and funds were made available for research in order to come up with something that would help. I suspect that a great deal of the money was put into market research rather than practical research, because the result of all this effort was something called the "converto" unit.

A regulation was made which provided that no money would be lent in respect of houses being built on unsewered lots unless a converto unit was put in instead of the conventional sewage disposal unit, the septic tank. There is really nothing wrong with the idea but there is a great deal wrong with the economics of it because this unit costs $600 to $800 more than a conventional unit. This regulation has had the effect of forcing people to move into urban areas. It has also had the effect of increasing the cost of housing in Canada. If you take $600 to $800 and work out the interest at 8¼ per cent over 25 years you will have the true picture of the cost involved in this unit.

If it were satisfactory and did anything to solve the problems of pollution, I would not for one moment raise my voice against it in this chamber. But I know that health units have serious second thoughts about the ability of these units to do the job they are supposed to do. There are health units in British Columbia that refuse to have anything to do with the converto unit. This means there is land which cannot be built upon with an N.H.A. loan because the health unit will not give permission for a converto unit to be installed and C.M.H.C. will not give permission for the conventional septic tank to be used in that type of building. So there is a bit of a bind there.

I raised this question with the minister and his reply was that C.M.H.C. had placed a freeze on all lending in respect of unsewered lots whether or not they had a converto unit. I doubt very much whether that action had anything to do with the converto unit. I imagine it had a great deal to do with the fact that the fund had dried up and the freeze was already in existence.

I seriously urge the minister and the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to consider this matter very carefully and take steps to alleviate the situation. This is one of the constructive steps the minister asked us to suggest in order to help him. I suggest that the health units be given flexibility in deciding whether a converto unit shall be used. If they decide it must be used because of the size of the lot, let this be done. But if they decide there is no greater possibility of pollution from the ordinary septic tank, let the septic tank be installed. In fact, they will probably decide that there is less pollution from the ordinary septic tank because they have serious reservations about the effectiveness of the converto unit.

I suggest that the local health units be allowed to decide this question. They should be allowed to do so because these matters fall within their authority and it is a constitutional authority. It is a serious matter indeed for the federal government to move into this area. If the action of the federal government had the effect of forcing all building to be carried out on properly sewered lots, thereby reducing the menace of pollution, it would be worth while, but it does not do that at all. What it does is make it extremely difficult for anyone who has invested almost $1,000, plus the continual maintenance of the converto unit, ever to vote for a sewage bylaw. Why should he? The policy does not prevent this type of building altogether, because the person who somehow manages to scrape up the money from some source other thn C.M.H.C. can build using the conventional septic tank. This should be a matter for very serious discussion right now, because the minister is blaming urbanization for the crisis in housing. It seems to me that anything that can be done to keep people in the rural areas, even for a while, will help.

It might interest the house to know—some hon. members have probably already noticed this—that when the mid-term census figures were published the only province in Canada where the rural population had not declined was British Columbia. There are specific and special reasons for this. They involve the tax on home owners and grants that have enabled people, elderly people particularly, to stay in their own fully paid-up houses rather than move into the city or into a public housing project. I believe steps can be taken that would provide direct incentives to people who own their homes to stay there. These incentives do not have to involve enormous sums of money. The amount of money involved would be far, far less than the sum involved in N.H.A. loans at 8¼ per cent over 25 years.

There is much to be done in this area. We have heard this afternoon a call for a ministry of housing. This might not be a bad idea, but I know that if that call from the New Democratic party were heeded and a ministry of housing were set up its work would be measured by only one criterion, the number of public housing units constructed each year. This would be the only measure that party would use.

The rhetorical question was asked this afternoon: Where on earth has private enterprise ever solved the housing problem? One could, of course, ask the corollary question: Where has public housing solved the housing problem? Has it solved it in the Soviet union? Has it solved it in Czechoslovakia? Has it solved it even in that pearl of public construction, Sweden? It has not. All these countries have housing problems which are acute and are becoming more acute. This is not the road to follow.

During the question period this afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked a question about some housing projects in Vancouver that are apparently held up. She did not say why they are held up. They are held up because they are under investigation. This investigation is being carried out because the cost per square foot of public housing in Vancouver is twice as much as that for housing built under private enterprise. Public housing is not the road to inexpensive housing for Canadians. The road lies in turning private enterprise loose, in making sure that conditions are such that the construction companies know from year to year or at least have some idea how much money will be available to them so they can plan ahead. The road lies in taking constructive steps.

Another constructive step that could be taken very quickly by the government is the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on construction materials. This surely—I have said it before and it bears repeating—is one of the most inflationary taxes ever imposed. It has led to nothing but grief since its inception, particularly in the field of housing.

These, Mr. Chairman, are some of the areas in which the government can act and should act. No one will deny the gravity of the crisis. But the most frustrating part of it all to people who uphold the free enterprise system is that it has the tendency to make public housing seem the only solution and ever more attractive. I would urge the government to act in these directions that are open to them in order that this country may benefit, not from the most expensive housing that can possibly be built but from the cheapest and best housing that can possibly be built.

I have not been aware of any activity by the members of the New Democratic party this summer to help to prevent a seriously damaging strike in the lumber industry in British Columbia which might cause the mills to shut down. The resulting damage to the industry could eventually affect the housing problem, causing it to become even more acute.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, when the minister was speaking this afternoon he gave the impression that the housing problem is mainly one which exists in large urban centres. However, I wish to assure him that this is not so. Of course it is a very serious problem in large urban centres, but it is also a serious problem in urban centres of all sizes. Let me give an example.

Last Monday night I spoke in Picton which is a very important town in my riding, having a population of 5,000. Before going down there I asked those arranging the meeting what subject they would consider to be the most important for me to discuss that evening. The unanimous opinion was that housing was the most important matter of concern to the people in that district. As I said, Picton is a town consisting of some 5,000 people and it is a rural area. The inhabitants of this town are very much concerned about the housing crisis which exists in our country.

When the minister was questioned in May by the opposition about what he intended to do to provide the 170,000 houses which the Economic Council of Canada specified to be the minimum number of housing starts per year which should be made in this country in order that our people may be properly housed, he appeared very confident that his program would meet the country's need for 170,000 housing units this year. In looking back it is interesting to note how the minister's program has worked out in practice. When he spoke in May the construction industry of this country was producing houses at the rate of 16,096 starts a month. By June the number of starts increased by 8 per cent, to 17,429. However, by July the number of starts fell off by 14 per cent to 14,965, and by August the number of starts fell off by another 11 per cent to 13,343. So we see that in reality the minister's bold program has turned out to be a program in reverse. It started boldly and increased in the first month by 8 per cent. Then it turned in the other direction and in the next-month fell off by 14 per cent and in the following month by 11 per cent. August is the last month for which we have figures. Heaven knows what we are going to find has been the production rate in the month of September.

By the end of August the number of housing starts made in this country this year numbered 84,578. If we are able to maintain in each of the four remaining months of the year an average of the number of housing starts made in the month of August, 13,343, then by the end of this year we will have started 137,474 houses or about the same number as we started last year, which was 135,000. We can only hope that we can maintain that figure because, as I have pointed out very clearly, in the past two months we have seen serious drops in the number of housing starts, and in all probability we will find that in September we will have fallen considerably below the 13,343 starts made in August. If we look back one year farther we find that in 1965 we produced 20 per cent more houses than we did in the following year, 1966, or than we are likely to produce this year.

This is the minister's bold program for catching up with our housing needs in this country. In 1967 we are producing 20 per cent fewer houses than we did in 1965, assuming that we can hold the rate of starts which we made in August of this year, and there is a very real possibility that this will not be done.

So we can see that this program about which the minister spoke in such glowing terms last May has turned out to be a complete failure. In reality it is a policy in reverse. That is about the very best that can be said for it. What it amounts to is that by the end of this year the housing program, about which the minister spoke in such glowing terms a few minutes ago and also in May when he answered questions in the house, will have produced more than 50,000 houses too few, according to the minimum figure of 190,000 which the Economic Council of Canada says we must produce each year from now on until 1970 if we want to avoid an accumulating shortage of houses in this country.

In trying to explain this away, the minister said that of course that figure includes around 50,000 houses which must be replaced. He implied that it really is not too important to replace those houses, that people can go on living in run-down, unsanitary, slum houses so far as the Liberal government is concerned. This does not seem to bother the minister too much. The fact that this kind of housing contributes to juvenile delinquency, broken families and crime does not seem to bother this government in any way at all.

I want to point out that this is the complete reverse of the policy of the Progressive Conservative party in this matter. We believe that the people of this country deserve to have houses that are modern, sanitary and comfortable because we know that these make possible better family life and ultimately better citizens. That is the philosophy of the Conservative party concerning housing in this country. But it seems that the Liberal government is in favour of seeing people continue to live in run-down, unsanitary, slum houses, with all the detriments that these bring about.

Having examined this dismal failure of the government, let us ask ourselves what has been the cause of it. The answer, of course, is the government's tight money policy, in which it has persisted for the past two years despite the constant urging of the Conservative party to abandon this policy which is doing nothing but harm in our country today. The tight money policy has forced interest rates to such a high level that those who would normally invest in housing mortgages are no longer interested to do so because they can find more lucrative ways of investing their funds. So I say that the government's tight money policy is wholly responsible for the fact that the interest rate on N.H.A. mortgages was raised last night by 1 per cent to 8.25 per cent, the highest rate at which the interest rate on these mortgages has ever been in our history. This, I believe, is a very sad state of affairs when one considers the needs of the people of this country for housing at a rate of interest they can afford to pay.

I believe that the financial institutions of this country or any other country have a real responsibility for providing the funds that are necessary to build the houses that the people of a country need. President Johnson of the United States did something which I think our Prime Minister must do in the very near future when he approached the large life insurance companies of the United States directly and explained to them that they had a real, national responsibility in providing the necessary funds for the kind of housing which is necessary to be undertaken, that involving the highest risk and therefore the least attractive—slum clearance housing. The United States life insurance companies responded magnificiently to his approach and diverted $1 billion from their regular $16 billion stream of investments, telling President Johnson that they would invest what is required for slum clearance housing. This, I believe, is the kind of initiative that should be followed by the Prime Minister of this country. I believe that he should speak to our financial institutions and explain to them that they have a very real national responsibility to meet the housing needs of this country.

In the United States, the financial institutions receive approximately 6¼ per cent on the money they lend for housing purposes. Our financial institutions obviously have been unwilling to come forward with enough money at the recent rate of interest, 7¼ per cent, that was available to them. It has been necessary for the government to raise the rate of interest to 8¼ per cent to attract what the government hopes will be sufficient funds into the housing field.

On Tuesday I asked the Prime Minister if he intended approaching the large financial institutions of this country and putting to them the proposition that President Johnson of the United States had put to similar institutions of the United States. The Prime Minister told me that if I waited until Thursday the minister would advise me of his intentions and actions in this regard. So I ask the minister whether he would not, when I sit down, advise the house as to what the government's intentions are in this regard.

As I say, I believe our financial institutions have the same kind of responsibility toward the housing needs of this country as was recognized by the financial institutions of the United States when they came forward with $1 billion for slum clearance purposes. If our financial institutions would respond in like measure, we should obtain an additional $100 million to what we presently have for housing purposes.

One thing has become very clear. Housing in this country in future cannot be treated as something which can be turned on or off according to the fiscal or monetary situation prevailing at the time. It must be treated as a vital human need. The funds to finance house construction must not be turned on or off according to whether other forms of investment appear more attractive at the time. There must be a sufficient and continuing flow of mortgage funds throughout the year to permit the construction of the housing which our people need. The Economic Council of Canada has made very clear that our people need a minimum of 190,000 new housing units per year to look after their needs in this regard.

I believe that housing is too important to be moved simply from department to department or to become an adjunct of one department or another. I believe a new department must be established, a department of housing and urban affairs, to administer not only the housing affairs of this country, but also the many problems which have arisen through our rapidly growing urban society.

To keep our mortgage rates reasonable, I think the government must do two things. First, it must avoid in future the tight money policy imposed on this country during the past two years, which has sent interest rates up and up. Second, the government must persuade the financial institutions of this country that they have a national responsibility in providing funds, at a reasonable rate of interest for the housing which our people need.

As I say, I am much impressed by the actions of the United States financial institutions in making funds available at 6½ per cent. If the United States financial institutions find it possible to make funds available at that kind of interest rate, our financial institutions should also be able to do so, particularly when one considers that these funds which they make available for housing are guaranteed 100 per cent by the federal government.

If sufficient funds from our financial institutions are not forthcoming to meet our housing needs it is obvious, I believe, that the gap must immediately be filled by the federal government. It is important for us to remember that those government funds which are to be used to finance our housing needs will not be a government expense and would not in any way affect taxes. You and I know, Mr. Chairman, that the government raises the funds that it needs for these purposes by going to the capital market and paying the rate of interest which is necessary to attract the needed funds from potential lenders throughout the country or, in some instances, in another country. The government then adds a necessary service charge to cover expenses and the money is made available for housing or other necessary purposes.

I believe that if the government follows what I consider reasonable and sensible suggestions in this regard and follows a course which appears to all of us to be reasonable and sensible, we shall cease moving from housing crisis to housing crisis as we have in the past years and we shall be able to provide the houses which our people need in the quantities they need them and at costs they will be able to pay.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to answer the question which the hon. member for Northumberland put as to the government's intention with regard to possible approaches to our large financial institutions for assistance in housing.

I think I made it clear in statements I made earlier in the year that we have had extended discussions with the leaders of the financial lending institutions in Canada—the trust companies, insurance companies and banks—and one company alone, one company alone is putting into the N.H.A. field, apart from its conventional lending, nearly as much on a per capita basis as the $1 billion being put up by a group of companies in the United States. I think it should be put on record also that while I believe some of them could do more and will do more with the change in the interest rate announced last night, the life insurance companies of Canada are already putting 50 per cent of their total investment portfolio into mortgages and the trust companies are doing still better.

On a point of order arising out of what was said by the hon. member for Northumberland, may I point out, Mr. Chairman, that the figures he quoted with reference to housing starts relate to towns and cities having populations of 10,000 and over, they do not include communities of 10,000 and less. Together they are altogether different from the figures he quoted.

Mr. Hees: Then, Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Wahn: On a point of order, the hon. gentleman asked his question of the minister after the minister had spoken. He has had his opportunity to speak and he should now let others speak.

Mr. Hees: I wish to make it clear that I used comparative figures, prepared on the same basis, for all the years I quoted. My comparisons between one year and another were therefore very fair. I used figures which had been produced for me by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The bureau made them available to me and they had all been worked out on the same basis year after year.

I should like to ask the minister one question based on something he said. Could he explain why there is such a discrepancy between the rate at which the financial institutions of the United States are willing to lend their money and the rate required by the large financial institutions here in Canada?

Mr. Nicholson: Traditionally there has been a spread of 1 per cent or so between Canada and the United States, accounted for partly by differences in the exchange rate.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the people of Canada will not be deceived or misled for one moment by the sometimes extravagant and irresponsible charges made on this subject yesterday and today by certain opposition members, including the hon. member for Danforth with his careless reference to the report of the Economic Council which, as I read it, does not support the specific charges he made. Canadians will resent any attempt to make political capital out of housing needs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wahn: Clearly, all three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal, have certain responsibilities in this field. In my own city of Toronto, which has perhaps the most serious housing crisis in Canada, we have an N.D.P. mayor, a Conservative government at the provincial level and a Liberal government at the federal level. All of them are involved. Housing should not be made a matter for partisan politics.

It has been clearly established by the Minister of Labour that the government, ably assisted by C.M.H.C., has executed brilliantly and efficiently the federal housing policy so far approved by the house and set out in the housing legislation of the last few years. The statistics already cited on starts and completions and covering the amount of federal money committed establish this fact decisively and I do not intend to repeat them. However, I do want to stress my personal conviction that to ensure decent housing for all Canadians this house must accept a new federal initiative. It must accept the principle that there is a clear federal responsibility to take a direct and active part in the provision of public housing, at least in the large and rapidly growing urban areas where the crisis is most severe. It is not enough for the federal government merely to act as a friendly banker, the role the federal government has played in the past.

The step announced yesterday in raising the maximum interest rate on N.H.A. direct loans is consistent with this principle. As the minister stated yesterday, "The government intends to devote a larger portion of its resources to the social needs of the lower income groups and to the trouble spots resulting from urban growth, in order to provide improved living conditions in our urban areas". Apparently some opposition members oppose this principle.

In a recent address at the annual conference of mayors and municipalities by Mr. Michael Wheeler, director of special projects on low income housing of the Canadian Welfare Council, Mr. Wheeler pointed out that in the years 1964 to 1966 84 per cent of the total federal commitment to housing was in the form of N.H.A. insured loans, 10 per cent consisted of non-profit loans for housing elderly persons, for student residences and so on, and only 6 per cent consisted of loans for public housing. In the same address Mr. Wheeler pointed out that the average price of N.H.A. houses was just under $20,000. Under N.H.A. regulations loans for such houses cannot be made to persons having an income below $7,000 or $8,000 a year. It is clear therefore that in the past over 80 per cent of our total federal commitment of funds was used to subsidize those who needed it least, those with incomes of more than $7,000 or $8,000, and only 6 per cent was used for public housing where the need was greatest.

The minister in his remarks earlier today indicated that so far this year the percentage of funds used for public housing has been increased more than threefold, to $150 million or 20 per cent of the total. This has been a tremendous improvement but clearly further action is necessary. The minister's statement yesterday should help ensure a still further improvement in the percentage of the total federal commitment which is used for public housing.

One vital fact must never be forgotten. The relatively poor showing of public housing has not been due to lack of federal money. In recent years far more federal money has been available and still is available for public housing than has ever been asked for by the municipalities and provinces which under our legislation have responsibility for initiating public housing projects. I believe it is a fact that since the present minister assumed responsibility for housing not a single public housing loan recommended by C.M.H.C. and proposed by a province has been refused by the government. This is a record of which the government and, indeed, every member of this house can be proud. But more public housing is urgently required in certain areas.

This adds force to what I have said. A new federal initiative in public housing must be approved by this house. It is not enough that federal money for public housing is available. We must go further and see that it is used effectively. I am certainly prepared to support a new federal initiative and I am sure this applies also to many other members on this side of the house. I ask members of the Conservative opposition, who so recently in national convention approved the two nation doctrine to tell us whether they are prepared to accept federal responsibility in the field of public housing. And what about the members of the N.D.P. who, when in the province of Quebec, preach so fervently the gospel of special status? Are they prepared to accept the principle of federal responsibility?

Up to the present time parliament has taken the view that the provision of sufficient public housing is essentially a welfare matter within the constitutional jurisdiction of the provinces and their municipalities. I contend that this view is long outdated. For example, the housing crisis in Toronto results from the fact that people from all parts of the province of Ontario, from other parts of Canada and from countries outside our borders are flocking into the city. The population of Toronto in recent years has been expanding at about the fastest rate of any large city on the continent. It has almost two million people. More immigrants have come to the Toronto area than to any other part of the country. The public housing crisis in Toronto has resulted from this influx of people from all parts of the world. It is the policy, and correct policy, of this government, to encourage immigration. Immigrants must find some place to live. They must find housing.

Surely it is now entirely clear that under existing conditions the provision of public housing in the large rapidly growing urban areas is a question of national urgency involving the peace, order and good government of Canada. Until parliament accepts this responsibility it is idle and mischievous for opposition members to attack the government for not taking action which parliament has not yet authorized. I challenge the Conservative and N.D.P. opposition members to cease their carping criticism and to stand up and tell the house and the Canadian people where they stand on this vital issue of federal government responsibility and authority.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Grafftey: Are you being serious?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): That is what we have said for years.

Mr. Wahn: I hope that in the remainder of this debate members of all parties in this house will accept the principle that the provision of public housing in our large urban centres is not a welfare measure and therefore of local concern but a matter of national urgency and importance.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Why do not do something about it then?

Mr. Wahn: I feel confident that if parliament will accept the federal responsibility, effective action can be taken without constitutional change. It must be recognized, however, that in addition to federal responsibility there is a provincial and municipal responsibility and that there must be a co-operative effort among the three levels of government.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Would the hon. member permit a question ?

Mr. Wahn: When I am finished. A means can and must be found to cut through the red tape and to put an end to the buck-passing among the three levels of government which has limited action up to the present time. We must try to pinpoint the reasons why federal funds have not been used so far and then decide how we can make action effective in the future.

I suggest to the members of this house that the most fundamental reason why federal public housing funds have not been fully used up to the present time is that additional public housing in the large urban municipalities such as Toronto, which need public housing most, will under existing conditions impose an additional, unwarranted and indeed unbearable burden on the home owner. Independent studies make it entirely clear the urban home owner at the present time is bearing an unfair and regressive tax burden. If Toronto or any other urban municipality wishes to use federal public housing funds, it must be prepared to put up a small percentage of the capital cost itself. It is a small percentage but it does involve some additional burden.

Much more important, however, are the hidden charges upon the municipality resulting from public housing. These include the cost of providing water mains, sewage systems and municipal services of all kinds, and particularly schools for the large numbers of children in the public housing projects. Again federal legislation makes federal money available for certain services such as sewage systems. Nevertheless, public housing does impose an additional and unfair burden upon the municipal taxpayer. Moreover, municipal resources are limited, and in these circumstances it is only natural and human that municipal officials will encourage the construction of revenue-producing office buildings and industrial plants rather than public housing projects. Surely it is entirely clear that if the municipalities are to welcome public housing projects these projects must be made financially attractive to the municipalities. This is a financial, not a constitutional, problem and it can be solved.

Out of date municipal building restrictions and expropriation laws also impede public housing. Finally, the additional time and expense involved in dealing with a multitude of authorities at three different governmental levels impose a heavy and often impossible burden of expense, delay and frustration upon all those concerned with public housing.

No doubt these problems can be resolved in a number of ways. However, any solution does involve more direct federal participation in public housing and therefore a new federal initiative in this field. For example, in each large urban municipality where a serious public housing problem exists there could be formed under provincial charter a public housing corporation governed by a small and competent board of directors consisting of persons nominated by the municipality and the provincial and federal governments. I hope these persons would not be civil servants. Our civil service bureaucracy is already too large.

The necessary money would be provided by the federal and provincial governments in the agreed ratios. The corporation would have the power to expropriate on fair terms, power to cut through unreasonable municipal building restrictions, to acquire and service raw land and to buy or build public housing.

Admittedly there is need now for economy in government, but this plan would not involve expenditures above those now contemplated. Some of the money previously used to finance expensive single family homes would be diverted to meet the needs of those people whose needs are greatest and most urgent. The construction industry can be as well employed in building public housing as in building single family dwellings at $20,000 or more, luxury apartments or large office buildings. I believe it is entirely clear that there is no constitutional objection to such a scheme.

I think all of us in the house would agree that public housing is now an urgent necessity. I think we would also agree that it is not the best ultimate solution. All of us, I am sure, look forward to the day when every healthy Canadian can earn enough money by his own efforts to provide decent housing for himself and his family so that public housing will be required only by the elderly, the sick and the disabled. In the meantime, however, we do have a public housing crisis in some of our large cities. I hope that members of all parties will support additional federal action in this field.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Before calling on the next speaker it is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to announce the adjournment proceedings for ten o'clock.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, before I make my brief remarks this evening I should like to give my views relating to partisanship. I think partisanship is at its worst when we deal with personalities in the House of Commons in the wrong way. It seems to me there is a new type of partisanship coming from the government this afternoon.

What has been happening, Mr. Chairman? We have been telling the government for three years that there is a housing shortage in Canada and that the government is doing nothing about it. All members who returned to their constituencies this summer discovered there was a housing crisis, not a shortage. We have been putting on Hansard day in and day out for the last three years positive suggestions in the matter of housing. But what has happened? The government and its supporters come to the House of Commons at the resumption of this session in the fall of 1967 and say: "Oh, don't be partisan; don't criticize us."

I suggest that that is exactly the role of an opposition, and we are going to continue to put forward positive suggestions on the floor of this house. We are also going to continue to point out to the people of Canada that this government has no policy and is giving no national leadership in the field of housing. I suppose that the hon. member who has just spoken would accuse me of being partisan in saying that, but I am only saying what every Canadian is saying right now in every part of the country.

Reference has been made to the constitution. Canadians in every corner of the country today are sick and tired of the government hiding behind the constitution. Ten years ago there was absolutely no doubt it was the federal government that was responsible for inflation and the rise in the cost of living, the number one domestic concern today of Canadians. Yet the Minister of Finance rises in this house and says there is doubt about where the constitutional responsibility lies.

Ten years ago, five years ago, when we were in power, there was no doubt in our minds that the provinces and in turn the municipalities had a real role to play in housing policy. There was also no doubt in our minds that housing was a national consideration and concern. Every time we get up on the floor of the house and invoke the government's responsibility, what happens? Is the parliamentary secretary to the minister really serious when he rises and invokes the constitution and tells us it is really a provincial concern? Not at all. Would he go back to his constituency in the face of a housing crisis and wave the constitution in his constituents' faces? I hope not.

Let us be clear now that while we require the co-operation of the provinces and the municipalities the ultimate responsibility for housing or the lack of it, rests with the federal authority. It is passing strange to me that while the government is always talking about the desirability of the central authority, the federal government, being able to have its hands on the various levels of power, the minute the cost of living spirals, the minute there is a problem such as a housing crisis or in respect of urban development, water pollution, air pollution or soil pollution, the minister concerned gets up and says it is not their responsibility but is the responsibility of the provinces.

The hon. member who just spoke said that he was sick and tired of the buck being passed. It is this minister and this government that are passing the buck. We ask the minister and the government not to give us long speeches about interest rates and not to quote statistics but rather to accept their responsibilities and act.

I am very glad the minister made the speech he did today. I do not hold the Minister of Labour solely responsible for the housing crisis. It is part and parcel of the bankrupt economic policy of this government. He is forced into this position by the fact that the government has not co-operated with the provinces in planning economic and social priorities. He is forced into this position by the unplanned spending of the government and by the continuing budget deficits. He is forced into the position of high interest rates because the government has not disciplined itself or planned priorities within the national sphere or with the provinces.

I am glad the minister has made it clear that he is not accepting one of the central recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada, namely, that modern government must regard housing as a social welfare matter and must realize that housing is not one of those areas of social welfare which should be affected by normal economic fiscal planning.

Time and time again this government has not paid heed to the positive suggestions from this side of the house. At every session for three years we have told the government that as long as it regards us as a parliament to be played with in conjunction with fiscal and monetary measures it is not going to have a satisfactory housing policy. The minister today turned his back on this suggestion and pinpointed the fact that the Canadian government is the only government in the modern western world which does not regard housing as a social welfare matter and one which should not be affected by the ups and downs of normal monetary fiscal management.

We believe that proper and decent housing is a priority welfare and social matter. With poor housing many other social and welfare programs cannot be brought into effect. Juvenile delinquency and all the urban problems that we need to attack in a positive and constructive way cannot be attacked as long as we are not providing our people, not only in the low but also now in the middle income group, with decent housing. So we consider housing, along with education, a priority item in terms of social welfare matters.

The Liberal party likes to consider itself the pioneer in do-good legislation, but I think they are missing this primary priority because of the whims of fiscal management. I am glad the minister spoke as he did. He gave us a wonderful lecture about how we do not have much housing when the interest rate goes one way, how we do pretty well when it goes another way, and so on. We followed the minister with great care, but in sum and substance he was telling us that he is going to turn back on the main and central recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada. So we will continue to have a housing crisis in this country until there is a change of government.

Mr. Mackasey: You will wait a long time.

Mr. Grafftey: That is one example from the minister's remarks. He belaboured the problem of low-cost land in cities like Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver—all the large metro and urban centres of this country. He spoke of the unavailability of good, low-priced land. We on this side of the house are quite aware of this. Three years ago we told the minister that there was a need to develop co-operation with the municipalities and the provinces whereby low-cost land would be available to the citizens of this country.

The minister points out this problem to us today. I sincerely hope we will not have to have another two years of study before it is pinpointed again. We have been aware of it for three years. I hope the minister does not feel that he has just informed us of it for the first time in the house this afternoon.

One of the reasons which I have already given for the engendering of a high degree of cynicism on the part of the Canadian people toward the federal authority is related to the fact that the federal government far too often when it gets into trouble decides to be partisan and hide behind the constitution. Canadians in every corner of this land are becoming very concerned because no level of government is treating modern problems seriously—some of the problems are not so modern—and no level of government today is seriously confronting the problems of housing, air pollution, water pollution, soil pollution, and urban development.

This is just one instance where a minister of the government is being frustrated. This government will not let parliament and the elected representatives play their part in modernizing and updating our constitution. I am not speaking only of French or English cultural rights in all parts of Canada. It is my view that one of the real causes of national disunity today is related to what I call the real economic issue because the government will not let members on both sides of House of Commons get down to work on modernizing and updating our constitution. Because of this we continue to have such things as housing crises and spiralling costs without any feeling on the part of the people at the grass roots level that any level of government is effectively tackling these problems.

What happens then? Month after month, year after year, we in the opposition put positive suggestions on the record of the House of Commons to no avail. Government spokesmen, such as the one today, get up and quote statistics. Today we heard from the minister. Tomorrow I am sure we will hear from his parliamentary secretary, and I can almost quote what he will say. He has made the same speech 50 times. He will invoke the constitution in a manner similar to that of his minister who today gave us a little lecture in economics. He told us that he could not put funds into the economy as long as housing is operating at a certain level.

Let me inform the minister that he cannot hide behind that kind of speech any more. He is going to be faced with this type of criticism until he recognizes that housing is a social welfare matter and that the right to a decent house, a decent dwelling and a decent roof over one's head is a fundamental right in a free, democratic country. The minister made a good nineteenth century speech today, but that is just not good enough for 1967. I would be surprised if his speech today gets much caucus support, particularly if some of the members on that side to whom I have spoken are really serious about where they stand in the political spectrum.

Let me ask simply what the government is going to do to solve this problem. The minister has quoted statistics today, but the fact of life is this. We are at least 50,000 housing units short this year and unless the government does something about this situation it will become worse before it becomes better. Marie Antoinette said "Let them eat cake". What is this government going to say to these people who do not have decent roofs over their heads? Is it going to tell them to get tents? Is the government going into the business of distributing tents in the months ahead? I am not being facetious. It is just not good enough for the government to quote statistics.

The housing crisis does not only exist in the urban and metropolitan districts. Many people in rural districts do not have decent homes today because this government has not evolved a good policy. What is the problem? Basically, at this time Canadians in the lower income brackets are faced with a real crisis. I suggest that people in the middle income bracket are now facing a real crisis. Many Canadians in the middle income bracket can not find homes to live in today, and this has been pointed out many times. These people are flooding into the cities.

Recent figures show a record upsurge in immigration. Young married couples born in the immediate post-war era are now looking for homes. The minister invoked the argument this afternoon, which simply does not hold up, that if you talk with young married couples or couples in the middle income bracket you will find that they have made all sorts of provisions for travelling, for education and for many other things. That is true, but in the minister's lecture this afternoon he stated that these people have not really given priority to or made provision for the purchase of homes. That is also true because the cost of a home is so high it is out of reach of the average family. These people do not even consider buying a home because houses are so expensive.

As a Conservative, deep down in my heart I believe that home ownership is a great thing. I believe in what might be termed an ownership democracy. I believe in a democracy that encourages people to own their own homes, small businessmen to own their own businesses and farmers to own their own farms. I believe that Canadians should invest more in the shares of Canadian companies. I believe that the reason people are not talking about owning their own homes is that they are priced so far out of the market today they cannot begin to afford them. A home should not be something just for the rich.

I think I have said at least three times during this debate, but it must be said again and again, that in a country like Canada which has the second highest standard of living in the history of the world, it is nothing short of a disgrace that we should have the kind of housing crisis that is facing this nation today. All the minister apparently can do is get up in his place and give the sort of economic lecture he has given this afternoon, without giving any real encouragement to those people who want a decent roof over their heads. I had hoped for better. I hoped he would give some encouragement this year when we are talking about new and modern politics. All he has done is quote statistics to those who are living in want and deprivation.

Last year in Toronto the average price of a new home was $29,000, yet in 1965 approximately 85 per cent of housing loans financed by the federal government were made to individuals with annual average incomes of over $5,000. Where does this leave the low income worker? The answer is that it often leaves him living in squalor in run-down metropolitan areas. I do not say this in a demagogic way, but such poverty amongst plenty should be stopped. I hope this is the last time in respect of a subject as sensitive as this that a minister of the Crown will get up and quote a lot of bureaucratic statistics.

In 1967 housing starts, instead of increasing over the number in 1966, are beginning to slip badly. We do not have to make speeches about this; this is the fact. The winter season last year was half over when the government recognized this problem, even though week after week we pointed it out to the minister. Day after day, along with members of the N.D.P., we asked what action the minister intended to take.

During a period of time when a great deal of cynicism was being directed at this institution, the minister went on a cross-country lecture tour. You may conduct a parliamentary inquiry or whatever you wish, but one of the real reasons people are getting fed up with much of what is being attempted by the government is that the government has built delaying procedures into our activities. We have had a record number of royal commissions, some of which have been very good; yet only a small percentage of their recommendations has been carried out. The Registrar General is now following this procedure. If a problem develops he suggests that we set up a task force. He will not even face the problem; he sets up a task force.

When President Kennedy set up a task force in the United States this simply meant that the tentacles of the White House would reach out over the United States. Such a task force was required to report back within a few weeks at the most. If an extension of time was required a very good reason had to be supplied. The very phrase "task force" in the United States denoted the urgency of a problem. Today when we face a crisis in Canada the government sets up a task force which may report in one, two or even three years. If we in the opposition ask why it cannot report sooner, we are shouted down.

A great deal has been said about research. I am not one of those anti-eggheads or anti-intellectual individuals. I recognize the real need for research in housing, but what frightens me is that the government may have been using research and study as an excuse for delay. There is a time for study but there is also a time for action, even though we do not know or cannot be 100 per cent sure we are right all the time. I am a great believer in computerized research. I believe that in modern government we require more and more research. However, when we are faced with a crisis this government institutes more research when it should in fact be acting. I suggest to the minister that the research he is carrying out now should have been done five years ago. Am I to tell a constituent in my riding that he cannot have a house over his head until we—

Mr. Mackasey: You were in power five years ago.

Mr. Grafftey: As the hon. member says, we were in power five years ago. This policy might have been good enough at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: The voting digits from my province are upset. They are becoming exercised now because they have also been told by their constituents that homes are needed. Research is a must, but let us not invoke the need for more research for the purpose of delay, delay, delay.

Last year the minister came up with a new kind of meeting, the symposium. He went across the nation calling housing symposia with the municipalities and provinces. Having gone across the nation calling one symposium after another, he tells us in his speech today that we need yet another federal-provincial meeting before we can have any action. All he did was travel across this country calling symposiums. It was a sort of lecture tour.

The minister told the provincial officials to get off their chairs; he told the muncipalities what they should be doing, always becoming a little irritable in the house when we told him what he should be doing. Now we have not a housing shortage but a housing crisis, and we are still telling him what he should be doing. This afternoon the minister suggested another federal provincial conference before anything can be done. Yet some hon. members wonder why Canadians are getting sick and tired of buck-passing, hiding behind the constitution and the fact that no level of government is facing up to its responsibilities in this regard.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member may certainly ask me a question.

Mr. Groos: The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has said that last year the minister spent his time crossing the country calling symposiums. The hon. member for Danforth said the minister was sitting in his office. Both hon. members cannot be right. Is the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi wrong or is the hon. member for Danforth wrong?

Mr. Grafftey: Perhaps the minister found time to do both.

Mr. Régimbal: And produce nothing.

Mr. Grafftey: Housing starts in 1967, instead of increasing over 1966, are falling off badly. The fall of the year is here and we have gone from a housing shortage to a housing crisis. Unless I misunderstood the minister's words, those who are looking for homes cannot take much encouragement from the announcement last night or from the minister's speech in the house this afternoon.

I repeat what I have already said. I believe that every Canadian family should have the right and opportunity to own a home or to enjoy adequate rental accommodation. I agree with the government that this should be brought about in co-operation with private industry and the provincial and municipal authorities. But I do not agree that the federal government does not have the primary responsibility in this regard. A housing crisis is surely a national issue, especially a housing crisis that is spread right across this nation. If it is not a national issue, what are we doing here in Ottawa?

In my view the inability to act on important issues such as this is one real cause of separatism. I do not like to use that word but we all complain today about the power of the provincial governments. This complaint is often heard. We say that the provincial governments are too powerful and the federal government is not allowed to do the things it should do. This is an area in which the federal government should be acting, but it is abdicating its responsibility.

Mr. Régimbal: And joking about it.

Mr. Grafftey: What about home ownership? It should be encouraged. Just in case hon. members opposite think we have no positive suggestions to put forward I should like to list a few. With respect to home ownership we should be encouraging intensive research into new methods of building lower cost housing and furthering research into co-operative building and ownership. I am talking about the kind of research that we need. The kind of research that has been carried out has inhibited us from acting in other areas. Second, we should eliminate the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Third, we should exempt from taxable income an amount up to $500 for school and municipal taxes. Let us consider this suggestion. Is it practical? Perhaps hon. members opposite think it is not. But let us talk about it; it is an idea.

Fourth, we should extend the original Progressive Conservative legislation to provide low-cost, long-term loans to municipalities for sewage treatment projects and other anti-pollution measures. Fifth, we should establish a municipal capital availability fund for purposes of long-term, low-cost loans. We have been suggesting this for years. Now the minister rises in the house and talks about the problem of the unavailability of funds for low-cost loans. Sixth, we should extend direct Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans to include those who today cannot qualify for reasons of income. Seventh, we should increase direct loans on older housing, especially where a housing shortage exists. A little progress has been made in this regard. Eighth, we should make group mortgage insurance available to all N.H.A. mortgage holders.

What about low-cost rental housing? In this connection I make the following suggestions. First, we should provide low-cost, long-term federal loans and a higher federal share of capital costs and operating losses. Second, we should co-operate with the provinces and municipalities in the setting up of minimum standards or ordinances for rented accommodation and provide incentives for both urban and rural municipalities to fight blight and decay in housing by such ordinances. Third, we should provide long-term loans to municipalities for the acquisition of land for housing and/or recreation purposes. This is another answer to the point raised by the minister this afternoon.

Fourth, we should provide such incentives as are fair to encourage the investment of capital in house financing. What the minister said today was true. There are a great many people who are in the building industry to make a profit. I do not think anybody is against that. The facts of life dictate this. I believe that in a realistic way we should encourage a policy that would be an incentive for people to invest capital in house financing.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to answer all the questions raised by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. When he got down to his suggestions at the end of his speech, I thought he was really indicating the program that had been carried out by the Liberal government rather than things that should be done in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: I wish to speak briefly in this debate as Acting Minister of Finance in the absence of my colleague, the hon. member for Eglinton, who is attending the annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and International Bank in Rio de Janeiro.

All of us in the government recognize the importance of housing in our economic and social policies. It is one of the most essential needs of the people of Canada, a need which will grow and change as our population grows and changes in its composition. The Economic Council of Canada has done us all a service in showing how these needs grow and change in accordance with the growth of the various age groups of the population, as well as noting the influence of increasing incomes on the desire of unattached persons, as distinct from family units, to have accommodation of their own.

The federal government of Canada over the last 35 years have become increasingly and productively involved in the housing situation. Our main activity commenced as a credit measure during the depression, improving notably the source of mortgage funds. When the war was over our operations were considerably extended and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was set up to carry them out vigorously.

Its activities have led the government of Canada into initiating, advocating and supporting a wide variety of programs, from the insuring of mortgages at the one extreme to the support of town planning and urban development at the other. We in parliament can claim some credit. We in parliament have become very conscious of what can be done and should be done through the financial instruments that are available to us.

It must be recognized, however, that housing, urban development, land use and all the municipal problems that relate to it, are matters within provincial jurisdiction. Our influence has been important and productive but it cannot be conclusive. As my hon. colleague, the Minister of Labour, has pointed out, there are many things which cannot be done by money in this field. It is important that problems, for example, relating to the supply and use of land, which comes within provincial jurisdiction and the normal responsibilities of municipalities, should be dealt with just as vigorously as the supply of funds for the building of houses. Moreover, as my colleague, the Minister of Finance pointed out some months ago, it is quite important that the effects upon housing of the real property taxes of municipalities be taken into account. He noted in April that, along with other influences, these taxes make house and apartment costs too high. Part of the solution of the housing problem must be found in improving the financing of municipalities.

A good deal of the current problems in housing arise from the shortage of funds in the capital market available for lending on mortgages. Our own experience in Canada in the past, as well as experience in the United States, has shown that housing is vulnerable to competition for funds in the capital market. In part, this vulnerability arises from the greater competitive power of the competing borrowers, dowdy businesses on the one hand and governments and municipalities on the other. In part, it arises from a variety of institutional arrangements including the competitive power of those savings institutions that normally invest in mortgages as compared with those that normally invest in other things. Part of the trouble derives from the nature of the mortgage instrument itself. All of these factors must be considered in looking to any long term solution of the housing problem. A discussion of them would be appropriate at some future time in this house. In regard to the immediate current problem that confronts us, I would like to say a little with regard to the relationship of housing to the flow of savings and the funds that the government can put into housing as compared with other areas.

Last year, in 1966, the competition for funds in the capital market was very intense and the flow of funds from conventional lenders into the mortgage market and thus into housing was considerably reduced.

[Mr. Benson.]

Since late last autumn there has been quite a substantial expansion in the money supply which has alleviated the tightness in credit conditions generally. Notwithstanding this expansion there has, however, been a substantial increase in long term interest rates, both in the United States and Canada, after a brief decline last winter. In both countries long term interest rates have reached very high levels despite the substantial expansion in the money supply.

These high rates of interest on bonds and mortgages are the result of the action of investors and borrowers in the markets. Investors are demanding high rates for their savings, in part because there are potential borrowers willing to pay such rates and competition permits them. In part, the demands of investors for high rates arise from their concern over the increasing prices and wages in our economies, that is, concern over inflation. So long as investors in the United States and Canada continue to have the attitude they now have toward long term investments in bonds and mortgages, and so long as there are many long term borrowers in the market, we cannot expect to escape these high rates of interest.

A considerable part of the heavy demands upon the capital market this year is the demand of the government of Canada. The net cash requirements of the government over and above its revenues and its normal non-budgetary receipts this year are very much higher than they have been for many years past, apart from those arising from the large exchange transactions of 1962. This requires the government to borrow very large amounts. Our borrowings are inevitably part of the problems confronting the capital markets in Canada this year. They are part of the competition which is making it difficult to get sufficient money for mortgages to build houses and apartments. Our demands on the market this year, however, are moderated by our ability to reduce our cash balances this year, as the Minister of Finance said we would do in this budget speech on June 1.

In looking forward to the housing situation next year one of the important issues that has to be taken into account is the extent of the competition there will be in the capital market for savings to be used for purposes other than housing. One of these demands will, of course, be the demand of the government of Canada. Moreover, at the beginning of the next fiscal year cash balances will not be as high as they were at the beginning of this fiscal year, so we shall not have as much freedom to meet our requirements through the reduction of our balances.

The government—the treasury board and the cabinet—is now trying very hard to contain our expenditure and lending programs for next year in order to keep our demands on the capital market down to an amount which we feel is reasonable in relation to the other demands on that market. In doing that we will be helping in the best way possible to allow savings to be used for financing the construction of apartment houses and other rental accommodation, which we feel to be urgently needed in the present situation, and for loans for the purchase of homes.

In this current year, when housing remains under pressure because of the competition for savings from other borrowers, we are taking a number of major steps to make it possible to increase the amount of housing units being built.

The first of these was taken some time ago in changing the Bank Act to permit banks to engage in conventional mortgage lending on houses as well as N.H.A. lending. So far this has not had an appreciable effect on the flow of funds into the construction of new houses, but I am told it will an increasing effect as the year progresses and in subsequent years. The banks now are strong competitors for savings and I would expect them to play a role in the financing of housing which is consistent with their outstanding strength as a financial intermediary. It takes time for them to build up their organization for making mortgage loans and to get it fully functioning, but they should be able to play their full part within a few months time.

The second step we took this year was to approve a large direct lending program for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The Minister of Labour has given some figures to illustrate the magnitude of the corporation's program this year. Let me give some figures to illustrate the magnitude of the contribution which the treasury is making to the housing program by way of loans to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I will give you the net figures representing the amount of loans over and above the amount of repayments received. For this current fiscal year we expect these to be over $660 million. This sum is far higher than it has been in any previous year. Last year it was $489 million, the year before that it was $315 million. For the convenience of hon. members, I might insert a table in Hansard at this point giving the figures for the ten years prior to this year.

Mr. Chairman, may I have the permission of the committee to insert this table in Hansard?

The Chairman: Is it agreed that this table be inserted in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson: The table is as follows:

Total Net Loans by the government to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation by Fiscal Years

	($Million)
1957-58	108
1958-59	336
1959-60	315
1960-61	192
1961-62	190
1962-63	102
1963-64	113
1964-65	222
1965-66	315
1966-67	489

These amounts lent to Central Mortgage are used by it for direct loans for home ownership, for loans and partnership investments in public housing, for loans for special housing for old persons, for student residences at universities, for urban development, and other matters. When the figures have been large the bulk of them have been for direct mortgage loans to individuals or builders for the construction of houses.

• (6:40 p.m.)

The government is only able to lend as much as $660 million for housing this year because it had large cash balances at the beginning of the year which can be reduced as the year progresses. Because we cannot repeat this and because we cannot put more strain on the bond market we cannot continue this high rate of lending for direct mortgage loans beyond the current year. We will continue, however, a high rate of lending which will be used, as the Minister of Labour has indicated, for public housing and other special requirements which cannot be financed in the normal way through the market, as home ownership can be.

The third thing we have done this year is to permit N.H.A. insured mortgage loans to be made at any rate of interest up to the maximum permitted by the housing act itself. This very considerable degree of freedom should enable a more competitive market to be established in mortgage lending, with rates varying according to circumstances and market conditions below this maximum. This should help borrowers to get the funds they require from investors in competition with other borrowers. It will, of course, increase the competition experienced by other borrowers in the market, but we feel that this is essential if housing is to receive adequate capital to meet its requirements.

The same amount of competition, though different in form, would occur if by one means or another the federal government increased its own borrowing in order to provide the funds through C.M.H.C. for direct mortgage loans.

I want to emphasize that the government has not set a rate of 8¼ per cent for the interest on N.H.A. mortgages; rather, it has given the market as much freedom as it can, within existing legislation, to determine what rates are appropriate, given the conditions of the market, the situation of each particular case, and the existence of the insurance provided by the housing act. I would hope that in many, if not most, cases the actual rates will be less than the maximum authorized by parliament in the act, but we cannot be sure until we see the way the market reacts over the next few months.

The fourth step, which the government has not yet taken but has indicated as its intention, is to set in motion a serious study of urban development as a whole and of housing as one element of that development. It will be recalled that in the throne speech the Governor General stated the intention of the government to propose to the provinces that a special study of urban development be undertaken in close consultation with all the authorities concerned, and which would be of assistance to federal and provincial governments and municipalities as well as to the public generally.

In August, the Prime Minister indicated that this conference on housing was something on which we would be getting in touch with the provinces and this would be one of the most important subjects on which consultation with the provincial governments would be necessary. That is still our intention, although, as hon. members will be well aware, with elections taking place in other provinces it will be necessary to wait at least some weeks before provincial governments can be expected to participate in such discussions on this or, indeed, other matters.

I have indicated, as my hon. friend the Minister of Labour has indicated, that the housing problem is not simply one of money. Much else is involved, and almost all those other factors involved are ones within the jurisdiction of the provinces and involve very substantially the actions and financing of municipalities.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Monteith: Could I ask the minister, if he has a spare copy of the table he placed on Hansard to let me have one.

Mr. Benson: Yes. I shall be pleased to supply the hon. member with a copy.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member asking a question?

Mr. Kindt: No.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me the opportunity to contribute to this important debate. I must also thank the government for giving us a choice of crises. We could choose between housing, wheat or the two nations concept. I wonder if that situation will continue throughout the sitting.

An hon. Member: It will get worse.

Mr. Germa: I was surprised at the attitude of the Minister of Labour in the house today. When I met him in Sudbury garnering votes he took a more benevolent attitude toward housing. He was most sympathetic at that time. His position seems to have hardened since then—mind you, he was on another mission.

I agree with his statement that housing subsidies should not be granted to those with incomes of over $10,000. If that is his attitude, why does he not make sure that government funds are used only to subsidize those who need subsidization. I agree that anyone earning $10,000 a year is strong enough to go to the open market for his funds.

I object to his assertion that the new maximum interest rate of 8¼ per cent for mortgages is realistic. It is only realistic if one thinks that housing funds should come entirely from the free market. I do not intend to accept that concept, nor do I think that housing should be at the whim of the free market. It is too important a social aspect to be at the whim of the market.

I must refute what some hon. members of the house may think. The hon. member for St. Paul's thinks that I am making these criticisms in order to make political capital. I am not trying to make political capital tonight, and I did not come to this house for that purpose. Tonight, I am here as a victim of the poor administration of this government, so far as housing is concerned.

The minister also criticized the high prices of lots in the city of Toronto, saying that serviced lots at $12,000 were too expensive for individuals to build houses on. I am in sympathy with that sentiment, but I remind him that the problem of land speculation is not new; it has been taking place on this continent for hundreds of years. Abraham Lincoln once said that no man should own or control more land than he needs to raise his family, or conduct his legitimate business. That is my attitude on land speculation. What does the minister intend to do if he is critical about land prices? Will he do something to control land speculation?

I am also surprised that hon. members here should be amazed that we have a housing crisis on our hands today. We knew about the post-war baby boom. We have watched that population grow; we have watched them pass through primary school, secondary school and university. Now, when they are in the housing market we are surprised. Surely, all that could have been predicted. Surely we could have taken steps and made preparations for those we knew were coming. This post-war population bulge is not new. It has been with us for 25 years.

When the minister hides behind the barrier of the constitution, his position is transparent. It is pretty difficult for me to go home and hand the people a copy of the constitution saying, "Here, you can hide under this to get out of the rain." So long as the federal government controls monetary policy in Canada, so long must they accept responsibility for housing. It is of social importance and much too big for municipalities or provincial governments alone.

It is clear from the evidence we have that the turning on and off of the monetary tap has produced a direct effect on housing starts in Canada. In 1965, monetary restraint led to a decline in housing starts which became apparent in 1966. Here we are, in 1967, still suffering from the effects of that policy.

I always had the impression that government funds should be directed to those people who lacked the financial strength to acquire money on the open market, particularly since the institution of guaranteed C.M.H.C. loans. However, in 1965 only 9 per cent of borrowers were in income brackets below $5,000 a year and in 1966 the situation was even worse—only 4.8 per cent of borrowers found themselves in those brackets. Yet these are the very people who most need help by way of government subsidy. It is not the people who are living on $10,000 a year who need it; they have the financial strength to help themselves. The government should be doing something to subsidize high interest rates on behalf of those in the low income brackets.

I take objection to the minister's statement that the problem is one which arises only in the large urban centres such as Toronto, Vancouver and Hamilton. I come from a part of Canada which is off the beaten track. I live in a mining community which does not have a loud voice in parliament. It has become almost a historical fact that people who are miners must endure poor housing conditions. The people of Sudbury are miners, that is a certainty, and I represent them because I am one of them; I have sympathy for them. They are a hard-working people and they deserve more out of life than they have been getting.

In a one-industry community such as Sudbury, financial shocks are not dispersed among a large population as is the case in densely populated metropolitan areas. Whenever something happens to that one industry, everyone gets a severe financial jolt. Living in Sudbury is like riding at the back of a bus, enduring a series of jolts as the economy passes through phases of boom and bust. Right now we are in a boom period economically. Yet though tremendous wealth is generated by the labours of those who often go underground before daylight and do not come up until after dark, we have not discovered a system which will turn this wealth into housing and services for those working people.

I am here tonight to ask the minister to have mercy on these people who labour so hard for so small a reward. The national scene has been covered most adequately by my hon. friend from Danforth. To bring home the true picture to the minister and show him how people are suffering as a result of government policy, I should like to deal with the local situation as I know it to be in the city of Sudbury. I do not know it from the standpoint of academic research; I know it as a long time resident and worker in the city.

Recently, a somewhat famous politician from Toronto, Dr. Morton Shulman, made certain statements about Sudbury. He said it was a slum town and that there was a pall of black smoke hanging over it. I do not necessarily reject entirely Dr. Shulman's assessment of the city of Sudbury. I reject it to an extent; he should have said that only 20 per cent of the city of Sudbury consists of slums. There are some, the elite, the mine managers, the insurance company executives, who live well. But the average miner does not live well and the house in which he lives is part of the 20 per cent described as slums.

This classification is not a random one; the case has been documented by our city planner, whose staff has visited every home in Sudbury. On the streets of Sudbury there are 400 tarpaper shacks. This is not a "guestimate", it is the result of an actual count. These shacks were built about 40 years ago, probably, when the success of mining in the areas was touch and go and no one wanted to invest money permanently in housing. They were built to serve a need; they are still there today, and people are living in them.

To make up for the natural decay in housing stocks we need 600 new houses a year. For one reason or another, mostly financial, we have not reached that figure since 1962. One reason for this failure is that we face the third highest building costs in Canada. Instead of having developers in Sudbury we have peddlers—they make a deal and diddle around with land, then they go to Toronto or Ottawa and peddle their programs.

May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: It being seven o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, before the dinner recess I was attempting to cite how one city suffers from the housing situation, which up to now has been treated on a national or more general basis. As the representative of Sudbury, and realizing that my constituents have had no voice in this parliament for quite some time, I think it is important to bring to this committee the local situation so that hon. members may be apprised of the conditions in the city that I represent.

I was recounting to the committee the housing needs and conditions as they presently exist in the city of Sudbury. I think I stated that we needed 600 houses a year just to offset natural decay caused by age. Then I went on to say that we enjoy—or otherwise—the third highest building costs in Canada, and I believe this is one of the reasons that Sudbury is suffering more acutely than most other cities in Canada.

[Mr. Germa.]

I should also tell the committee about some of the distress caused by this housing shortage. Quite recently a report delivered by the local children's aid society cited a case where a man and wife and their two children were living in an abandoned automobile on the streets of the city. Other cases cited were of families that had been broken up for no other reason than that the parents could not supply the children with the necessary accommodation. These are not families the heads of which are bums or derelicts, but people who go to work every day and contribute to our society and the wealth of the nickel mines, yet cannot find the wherewithal to supply family needs. As a result, the children in these families have become a charge against the state. I think it is a false economy when we save money by withholding housing on the one hand and handing out welfare on the other.

There is also overcrowding and doubling up of families. The pressure on rents is becoming acute and they are rising to prohibitive levels. In the city of Sudbury it is possible to pay $175 for a four-room frame house. Such a house when built was probably not worth $500, it is being rented today at this price. Others, consisting of only four rooms and a path, rent for $150. I suggest it is a crime in this day and age that the city of Sudbury should be called upon to spend the sum of $14,000 a year and upwards on night soil collection to meet housing needs today, but that is the situation and it is going from bad to worse.

What is projected for the future, Mr. Chairman? I told you about the mining corporations in Sudbury. The two companies have announced—and this is on record—that within the next two and a half years they will require 3,500 additional employees. The International Nickel Company announced two days ago that they could use an additional 1,000 men, and they still need them tonight. Why are they unable to get these employees? It is mainly because housing accommodation is so tight that these people cannot or will not come to the city, plus the fact that the wage rate for these employees is such that they cannot qualify for a mortgage under the restricted plan of the government.

In addition to the 3,500 new employees which are required in the city, we also have to accommodate the service trades. For this purpose we use a multiplying factor of 1.6, which means that for each worker in the city 1.6 men are required by the service trades.

This accounts for a further 5,600 new employees in the city. This amounts to a grand total increased population of 8,100, or an increase of 10 per cent in the population over a 30-month period.

There is not one empty bed in the city tonight and yet 8,100 workers and their families are coming to the city. We have been aware of this situation for six or eight months now. The mining companies made this prediction, and the minister was in the city when it was made. Yet the situation has deteriorated in the five months since his visit; nothing has happened to meet the situation.

To give the committee an idea how tight the situation is, Mr. Chairman, hon. members are all familiar with the housing problem in Ottawa.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? Or perhaps I should rise on a point of order. Surely the hon. member is not suggesting that we knew this five or six months ago. We heard about it in June approximately; the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Germa: I beg to differ with the minister. This announcement was made during the election campaign. The by-election was in May and the minister was in Sudbury during that month. It was at that time these figures were first projected by the nickel companies.

We should bear down a little on this subject, since the minister has shown some interest in it. At that time the minister did recognize that we had a problem. Without any urging on our part he announced that he would go to the mining companies to ask them to put up funds to supply us with 150 housing units. He asked the mining companies whether they could put up the funds or consider borrowing the money and making it available to supply 150 rental housing units. That is how serious the minister considered the situation at the time. However, that was during an election period and it is quite easy to get the interest of the minister at a time like that.

Mr. Nicholson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. When an hon. member makes statements like that which are not true, I must rise on a point of order. I said after the election, not before, that I had made an approach to the companies. I told them that with their expected help we could be assured of provincial help. There should be no suggestion at all that politics were being played, because this was deliberately done after the election.

Mr. Germa: Well, Mr. Chairman, this brings me to the point I should like to raise with the minister. We have waited patiently in the city of Sudbury to see the results of his inquiry of the mining companies. It was not our suggestion that a minister of the crown should go begging to the International Nickel Company for funds. I guarantee that the New Democratic party would deal differently with this company. Of his own volition he did see fit to ask the two mining companies for funds. We have not heard from the minister since that day. I wish he would rise in his place and tell us what the reactions of the mining companies were to his request that they supply the funds to build 150 rental housing units. We need this desperately and we would even accept it from them at this moment.

Mr. Nicholson: I would be pleased to give the answer at any time. The answer was a highly satisfactory one. The hon. member will recall that, when I sat down with the mayor and those who had invited me to come to Sudbury, I discussed the problem and said that obviously more public housing was involved and they could accept the assurance of the federal government that I was confident we would get the co-operation of the Ontario government. I also said that, in addition to public housing, other houses were needed and that I felt that the companies concerned might make a contribution over and above what would be done by the federal and provincial governments.

I reported after the election—not during the election—and I then announced that I had received an assurance of full co-operation from the government of Ontario, that we were going to put in the number of public housing units that were needed in the year 1967 according to our estimates. In addition, the mining companies concerned were going to do their part. I said that some 800 starts would be made on houses this year. So, I must take exception when I hear a supposedly responsible member make outrageous statements like those made here tonight.

Mr. Germa: I take exception to the statement that the statements are irresponsible. I ask again how much money the International Nickel Company and the Falconbridge Mines have put up since the minister made his request of these people.

Mr. Nicholson: I simply said that the companies would make the arrangements for the housing starts which were necessary in excess of the public housing units that we had originally suggested.

Mr. Germa: I must differ with the minister because he promised us that he would increase our housing units from 400 to 800. I was a member of the housing committee in the city of Sudbury. I am an alderman there. We held a meeting of the housing committee three days ago. The housing starts this year will not exceed 600. That is the reason I have waited to see what the mining companies propose to do. Are they going to raise the number from 600 to 800? The mayor has not heard from the mining companies. The city planner does not know, the clerk-controller does not know and I do not know. Apparently the minister knows something and will not tell us.

A mining town is populated largely by working people. There is probably no other industry which employs so much low cost manpower. Therefore, we have a large percentage of low income working people. The average wage for 1965, which is the latest figure I could find in our library, is $5,175 a year. If I were to project the wage increase which we have negotiated with the mines, I would arrive at a figure of between $6,000 and $6,200 a year as the average wage in the city of Sudbury as of tonight. This is only my projection. I could not obtain any closer evaluation.

The new interest rate of 8¼ per cent will mean that a large percentage of the people in the city will not be in a position to apply for a government sponsored loan. This acute increase in interest rates can only aggravate our housing situation in the city. In fact, when the interest rate was increased the last time to the 7¼ per cent figure our provincial member for Sudbury stated publicly in the press that he was ashamed to be a Liberal. I myself am ashamed that he is a Liberal. That was his statement. I understand that Mr. Nixon, the Liberal leader in Ontario, is quite upset about the new interest rate.

It is difficult for me, as an amateur politician, to try to follow the devious and dubious tactics carried on by this Liberal government. So, Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to go back home. The people there have expected me to do great things down here. After 46 years of Liberal rule, they said, "Go down and tell these people something, have a little chat with them". I hope I have done that tonight.

[Mr. Germa.]

All I can do is go back and tell my people, "You must bleed a little more and suffer a little more, but you still must get up at five o'clock in the morning, go down and moil in the bowels of the earth and when you come back you will live in your little shack and be satisfied." This seems to be the arrogant attitude of the government tonight.

I think it is unfair and unrealistic that the wealth produced from the natural resources of Canada cannot be converted into houses. It is the job of this government and this minister to find ways and means to supply the wherewithal so that these people—not only the people in the poor districts of northern Ontario who know they have been in the back seat of the bus for a long time—can have decent living. So far as I am concerned I cannot sit still and watch this situation continue. So, I will go back to my people and report to them on the position of the government and the minister.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to participate in this debate and I am pleased the Minister is in his seat. He is a congenial sort of fellow and I feel sorry for him because of the position in which he finds himself as a result of the housing situation in this nation.

Mr. Nicholson: On a question of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I say that it is rather nice to hear what the hon. member has to say today, after being accused of belligerency earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Kindt: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister. I do not wish to go over all the points raised by other members this afternoon. I shall attempt to put my remarks in the form of a summary.

After listening very closely to the various speeches, I decided to bring out some information on housing which has not as yet been covered. I doubt whether there is any question in the mind of anyone on this side of the house or in the minds of very few on the other side that the policies followed by this government in respect of housing have not been successful. I believe the minister would be the first one to admit that fact.

Perhaps I could have the attention of the minister if whoever it is who is talking to him would get out of the way. I am talking to the minister.

An hon. Member: Speak to the Chair.

Mr. Kindt: I am talking to the minister through the Chair. If the other fellow has not enough courtesy to get back in his own seat, I shall have to tell him to do so.

First of all the bank interest rate was changed. At that time the minister argued that an increased bank interest rate would encourage the banks to get into this housing field. He felt that this, in itself, would help to solve the housing problem. That has not been the case. I remember the argument advanced by the Minister of Labour when he increased the rate of 7¼ per cent. At that time I did not seriously object, but I felt that what he was doing would not solve the housing problem. Obviously it did not solve that problem.

The minister has now increased the interest rate to 8¼ per cent. Let me go one step further and suggest that this will not solve the housing problem. The minister is on the wrong track or in a dry hole. He would be far better off to pull up his drill and start on a new hole. In other words, the economic tactics the minister is using to solve the housing problem in Canada will not provide a solution to the situation. I am sure the Minister of Labour and those who sit on the opposite side of the house will join with me in the suggestion that these policies have not worked and will not work. It is time to begin something new.

Everyone knows that if you are going to have adequate housing in this country you must have sufficient finances. Money is still the major problem. The money lenders have this whole situation tied up so tight we are not going to have housing development in Canada if we rely upon our present banks and lending institutions. These institutions provide some of the required funds but they do not provide enough.

We on this side of the house have said on more than one occasion that we must work toward some sort of project development. The minister has referred to urban areas where there is a great deal of new development, including Vancouver and Toronto. One might well mention several others which are rapidly growing centres, like Calgary, Edmonton and so on. In these areas people want housing but are unable to obtain loans. How are they going to get them? The only way one can build a house is by having enough money to pay for it, or by obtaining a mortgage. The government must adopt some type of program to help, but so far government programs have not met the need by increasing the interest rates private lending companies are allowed to charge.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Kindt: I would be glad to answer your question a little later. I do not wish to use up too much of my time in that way now. Perhaps what I intend to say at this time will give the minister some clarification. We must find money for housing development, but how are we going to find it? It must be provided through government borrowing, or by the establishment of an institution such as the Industrial Development Bank. That institution, which is associated with the Bank of Canada, has helped start many industries throughout the country. As an economist, I have given some assistance in the development of these industries by helping these people to obtain loans through the I.D.B. I am sure the money involved in helping these industries start, on a high risk basis, has not added to the inflationary trend in this country. Neither has this lowered, increased or depreciated the value of the dollar. Whenever you put new money into the lending streams in the country through institutions such as the Bank of Canada you have to be very careful to maintain a proper balance. There is no way this minister or anyone else can show me how this problem can be solved unless we provide federal capital.

There is nothing wrong with the government providing capital for this purpose. This has been done in times of war and it can be done for the purposes of meeting the housing crisis through a housing development bank similar to the Industrial Development Bank. I am not concerned with the name, but it could have the authority to start projects in the various areas where there is an acute housing shortage. This institution could then start housing development projects in various areas.

The standards for these housing projects should be high and not 20 houses on a one acre plot with buildings almost touching each other. Surely, there is enough land in this country that we do not have to do that. Let me also say to the minister, in the event that he is mistaken about the possibility of such developments, that I was in the state of Virginia some time ago where a housing project was being developed with toilet facilities and the like. Many splendid houses were being built. Unfortunately Senator Bird came along and suggested that these houses were too expensive, and to lower the expense, outside plumbing was provided. Since then this outdoor plumbing has been called "Bird houses". I should not like to see here in Canada a similar development called "Nicholson houses".

It is my suggestion that the government should participate in housing projects of type similar to the Teron development on the outskirts of the city of Ottawa. If any of you have not seen this development I suggest that you do so. The minister, instead of obtaining a group of planners to do a great deal of research, should obtain the services of some practical man like Teron, put him on the payroll and turn him loose to develop some of these projects. Mr. Teron has said that he could build these houses for $12,000 to $15,000 including landscaping, sewage and water, etc. These would be two and three bedroom units. If Mr. Teron can do this, I venture to say that the federal government could also do likewise. Certainly it is possible for this government to start housing projects of this kind under a housing authority, by making funds available at a low rate of interest. After these projects were completed, the government could then sell them to the individual, thereby turning them over for private ownership.

Instead of charging $9,000 for a piece of land on which to build a house, instead of saddling the newly married couple that wants to get a start in the world with a $9,000 lot, would it not be infinitely better for this parliament to give the government approval to buy the land and develop it in all areas where there is a critical housing situation? There need not be many projects, but there would have to be enough in order to take up the slack for the time being. If this were done, private lending money, with the contribution of the banks and the support of the government, would ameliorate the housing situation.

There is no other way in which this problem can be solved. I look the minister straight in the eye and defy him to tell me any other method that will solve the housing problem. The minister thinks he will solve the housing problem by manipulating the interest rate and then relying on the banks to lend more money. I would not rely on banks but instead, would set up a corporation that would do the job that is needed for the people of Canada. I am not a socialist—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kindt: —but I believe that if we must have housing development we must also have the right kind of organization and the financial backing necessary in order to solve this problem. There is no sense wasting a great deal of time talking about other things. I could talk at great length about the business cycle. The business cycle, which is the reason for the attitude of the banks, is what largely prevents them from making long term loans. The minister cannot deny that. The banks are scared to put their money into long term securities. They have long been accustomed to making short term loans of six months or less, or a year at the maximum. They are not interested in putting their money into projects which will take 15, 20 or 25 years to be paid off.

This is the position in which we find ourselves with respect to the business cycle. This, in addition to other economic factors, has scared the banks away from making long term loans. The minister may, by raising the interest rate to 8¼ per cent, bring a few more dollars into this field but he will not solve the housing problem in this way. Mr. Chairman, I have probably talked more than I should. I want to give everybody else a chance to speak on this subject. Also, I want to give the minister an opportunity to ask me the question he wanted to ask a few minutes ago.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask the hon. member if he knows how the relatively insignificant amount advanced by the Industrial Development Bank to which he referred compares with the $900 million put into housing this year by the government, but I will not ask him.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether he has any figures in this respect. What was the figure put into housing this year by the government?

Mr. Nicholson: The budget exceeds $900 million for the year.

Mr. Kindt: That is the government's contribution?

Mr. Nicholson: That is the government's allocation, and well over $700 million has already been committed this year. I ask the hon. member, how does that figure compare with the I.D.B. figure to which he has referred, or has he the I.D.B. figure?

Mr. Kindt: That is the amount of money lent for the building of houses. If the government can provide this amount of money with which to build houses, what is the difference? The government should see to it that enough money is provided with which to build the houses that are needed. What would this do to the economy of this country? It would not have any ill effects. There would be no inflation as a result of it. Don't kid yourself about that. If the figure the minister has suggested is correct, and this amount is being put into house construction, it is certainly not the sole cause of inflation.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I thought the hon. member had finished his remarks. Rather than ask him another question, I would simply suggest that he read the remarks of the Minister of National Revenue which will appear in Hansard tomorrow. The minister contributed much to the debate this afternoon and I think he answered the questions that have been raised by the hon. member. This was a supplementary speech, not a question.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the last remark of the minister.

Mr. Nicholson: I said that, in my opinion, his statement was a supplementary speech.

Mr. Nasserden: Are you the chairman?

Mr. Nicholson: I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Lind: Mr. Chairman, I enter this debate on housing with a great deal of interest. Hon. members have been pointing out the seriousness of this situation. It is a serious situation, but this government and the minister in charge of housing have shown a great deal of concern for the people of Canada.

Abraham Lincoln once said that you cannot establish security on borrowed money. This government has shown responsibility in this area, and at the same time it has shown concern for Mr. Average Canadian Citizen.

An hon. Member: And the lumberman.

Mr. Lind: Yes, always the lumberman, too. It has always been of great concern to this government that the greatest number of Canadian families be provided with the facilities to obtain modest accommodation and decent housing. I have here a copy of a resolution received from the clerk of the city of London. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to allow me to read it into the record. This resolution reads as follows:

Whereas it has been announced recently that as a measure of economy the federal government has drastically curtailed the amount of moneys to be made available to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for N.H.A. mortgage purposes during the remainder of 1967 and 1968; and

Whereas the number of residential units on which construction has been started in Canada in 1967 is far below the annual national requirements; and

Whereas the federal government's decision not to increase its appropriation for housing this year can only worsen the already critical housing problem in most Canadian cities;

Therefore be it resolved that the government of Canada be strongly urged to appropriate additional funds for N.H.A. mortgages during 1967 and 1968 for residential construction in view of the now direly needed housing in Canada;

This resolution requests only moneys for residential housing. It refers to a single family house on a single family lot, or in other words a residential house for the family whose earnings are $8,000 or more, which is an upper and middle income family. Let us examine the cost factor involved in such a residential home. First, there must be taken into consideration the cost of raw land before any developing costs are incurred. It is a long, slow process to obtain a registered plan on, say, 100 acres of raw land, which would provide about 375 residential building lots.

The developer must obtain approval from at least 13 different boards at the municipal level, and must finally have his plan approved by the responsible minister in the provincial government. From the time the developer starts with raw land until the plan is approved, the cost of the lot will have at least doubled. Let us assume, for easy figuring, that the cost of the raw land is $500 per lot. Now that it has reached the stage that it is a registered lot and a registered and approved plan, the lot will have reached a cost of $1,000. Then, the developer must dedicate five per cent of the land for public uses other than streets.

A subdivision control agreement must be signed with the local municipality and a suitable guarantee or bond furnished by the developer guaranteeing that all future services will be provided satisfactorily. The developer must then proceed with the services, namely storm and sanitary sewers, water mains and leads to individual lots. Curbs, gutters and paved streets must be provided in addition to the much needed sidewalks and street lights. Now, there are additional requirements for underground hydro services and telephone lines. What do all these services add up to in cost? They increase the cost of the land from $500 a lot to between $5,500 and $6,000 a lot. At this point I would like to point out that these figures apply to the area of Middlesex and not Toronto, where the original cost of land may be much higher.

Now that the lot is completely serviced, the contractor can commence building a modest home.

Mr. Nasserden: The hon. member missed a paragraph.

Mr. Lind: Which paragraph did I miss?

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? First, where did he get his figures, and second, can he provide an indication as to how the federal government proposes to reduce these costs?

Mr. Byrne: Let him finish his speech. He may get there yet.

Mr. Lind: I calculated these figures from practical experience. I am not interested in indicating how the federal government is going to reduce this cost because I realize this is a municipal affair. This afternoon the hon. member for Danforth said that the federal government was responsible for the high cost of housing. I recognize this is a municipal affair, and I realize the municipalities must deal with the provincial governments.

Now that the lot is completely serviced, the contractor can commence to build a modest home. Suppose the contractor erects a 1,200 square foot home on this $6,000 lot. What has happened to the cost of this home? First, the building materials have increased in value by about 5 per cent since January 1966. In the province of Ontario 2 per cent of this increase was caused by the Ontario government's increase of the sales tax on building materials from 3 per cent to 5 per cent.

Mr. Ricard: What about the 11 per cent sales tax?

Mr. Lind: Let us suppose that a 1,200 square foot home were to cost $10 per square foot to build in January 1966. At this stage we would add the extra 5 per cent increase in the cost of materials, so that the home would cost $12,600.

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member is leaving out altogether the 11 per cent tax on building materials.

Mr. Lind: I will bring in the 11 per cent a little later. I can speak on that also, but I want to leave it until the end.

The second most important cost factor in this home is the increase in the cost of labour, both skilled and unskilled. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, since January 1966 the cost of labour has increased by 29 per cent, so this would add another $1,200 to the cost of the home. It would now cost the contractor $13,800 plus the cost of the serviced lot.

The third major cost to the contractor is interest costs, administration and overhead. These costs have also increased, so we would add an additional $1,500 to the cost of the home. It would now cost roughly $15,300, plus the cost of the serviced lot.

The fourth cost factor before the family can receive this home is the legal and real estate fees which would amount to about $1,400, so the final cost of this home to the new home owner would be approximately $25,000. No family unit earning less than $8,000 a year would qualify for the purchase of this residential home.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Lind: This government, through the C.M.H.C., has increased the funds available for residential housing—

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman,—

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. gentleman rising to ask a question?

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): I should like to ask a question.

The Chairman: Will the hon. member for Middlesex East permit a question?

Mr. Lind: —by $200 million during the last 18 months. However, but this extra $200 million does not provide any extra dwelling units owing to the increase in the costs of labour and materials in the building of these houses. It would be impossible to increase in any substantial way the number of residents because—

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a point of order? It is obvious from the way this speech is read into the record that the hon. member is not even familiar with it, and one of the rules of the house is that speeches should not be read. We should have some ruling on that.

The Chairman: Order, please. I recognize the point of order raised by the hon. member for Rosthern and I note also that the hon. member for Middlesex East is reading from copious notes. Will he please continue his speech now.

Mr. Woolliams: Read on, McDuff.

Mr. Lind: It would be impossible to increase in any substantial way the number of residences at the present time because, first, there is not a surplus of serviced lots in our area in Ontario; second, there is not a surplus of skilled tradesmen to build these homes; and third, there are not too many people earning $8,000 able to obtain a modest house at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lind: How many family units are eligible to qualify for a modest home in Canada? The Dominion Bureau of Statistics states the average family income is $5,939. Let us consider what the government has done for these families which do not qualify for a modest C.M.H.C. home. At the present time special N.H.A. provisions allow 6.25 per cent interest loans. I should like to read from a booklet published by the C.M.H.C. It reads as follows:

> Special NHA Provisions—6.25 per cent applies to CMHC direct loans for low-rental housing projects undertaken by non-profit corporations and limited-dividend housing companies; loans for university housing projects; loans for sewage treatment projects; loans for public housing projects and loans to provinces and municipalities to meet their share of the cost of implementing urban renewal schemes.

The Ontario Housing Corporation has taken advantage of this low interest rate. In my riding of Middlesex East 1,603 residences will be constructed for single and married students at the University of Western Ontario for a total cost of some $10 million. The federal government will provide 90 per cent of the financing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lind: In other words, we will provide $9,032,000, while the Ontario Housing Corporation will provide $1 million. This student housing project will supply much needed living accommodation for the students of the University of Western Ontario. Let me state that it is my understanding the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has made loans this year to the various housing authorities throughout the Dominion of Canada to the tune of many millions of dollars for similar projects.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Let us not forget that this federal government helped to provide funds for Ontario Housing Corporation to build public housing in other areas. Even in Bramalea, we helped them to purchase some 1,600 lots.

An hon. Member: It was 1,300.

Mr. Lind: This Liberal government has always been the friend of the man who carries his lunch pail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lind: My concern is for the family that earns $6,000 a year or less. There are hundreds of thousands of families that fall into this category. They have every right to demand comfortable, modest homes. If local, municipal authorities will set up non-profit corporations, they can borrow from the federal government, at 6¼ per cent interest, 90 per cent of the funds necessary for non-profit housing projects in their local areas.

The federal government is interested in these projects in this area. The federal government is providing the means for local municipalities and provincial governments to look after the families of this country earning less than $6,000 a year.

This afternoon we heard the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi say that our minister had been travelling up and down the country in attempts to establish housing authorities. The question was asked, what is happening in the province of Quebec? Since the relevant legislation was brought down I understand that the federal people have been petitioning the province of Quebec to come into public housing, to provide housing for the people of Quebec. The legislation was passed in 1964. I was informed that the department was in contact with the Quebec officials until June 29, 1967.

An hon. Member: Lesage refused it.

Mr. Lind: I point this out because it takes a long time to sell the members of the provincial government of Quebec anything.

I am sure that hon. members realize that this government has a good record in housing. Allow me to place on the record a table of housing starts in Canada over the last seven years. I am looking at page 134 of the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. In 1960 we built, in Canada, 109,000 units—of which 67,000 were single, detached units, 30,000 apartments, and 12,000 in other categories. In 1961 we built, altogether, 126,000 units; in 1962 we built 130,000 units; in 1963 we built 149,000 units; in 1964 we built 166,000 units; in 1965 we built 167,000 units; in 1966 we built 135,000 units; and in the first six months of 1967 we had 90,926 units under construction.

An hon. Member: Is that not inadequate?

Mr. Lind: This government has an excellent record in housing, yet we are not satisfied. We will continue to search out ways and means—

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, by increasing the interest rate.

Mr. Lind: —to help the wage earners of Canada obtain suitable, comfortable houses.

Mr. Keays: May I ask a question. Having heard the learned discussion embarked on by the hon. member for Middlesex East—

An hon. Member: Ask the question.

Mr. Keays: If my colleagues will bear with me I shall try to reach it. The hon. member gave figures showing the increases in housing costs during the last four years. Knowing full well that he knows a great deal about costs of lumber and building material, will he not say that the cost of houses in Canada has increased by 30 per cent in the last four years? That is the figure he has just suggested.

An hon. Member: He should know.

Mr. Lind: I talked about four years ago.

Mr. Keays: The hon. member spoke of the additional cost of labour and building materials. If one adds sales tax and all the other charges against housing one ends with a figure showing a 30 per cent increase in housing costs over the past four years.

An hon. Member: Let him look at his speech again.

Mr. Nielsen: He read it but did not understand it.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, it is fitting that as a member representing the Canadian metropolis, I should express certain thoughts on the problem before us, namely the housing situation throughout Canada and especially in the city of Montreal and in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the member for Middlesex East (Mr. Lind), who just resumed his seat, that I intend to reply to his statement about the non-participation of the government of Quebec in the program of urban development, construction of new houses or slum clearance.

If the hon. member for Middlesex East will kindly remain in his seat, I intend to enlighten him about facts he might not have been aware of and it is obvious that he was not because when reading his text he did not know where to put a full stop. I would have told him that if the province of Quebec did not participate with the federal government on a large scale in urban renewal or housing projects in the province of Quebec it is because from 1960 to 1966 a Liberal government was in office there and in the field of housing it failed completely to meet its obligations toward the population. It was necessary to wait until the coming to power of the Union Nationale government, when, through its minister of municipal affairs, Hon. Paul Dozois, it reached an agreement with the present government and set up the Quebec Housing Corporation.

Were the remarks of the member for Middlesex East as encouraging for his party as the minister believes them to be, he should then have told us, and insisted on the fact, that there is a current housing shortage in Canada of some 300,000 units. That is to say, some 300,000 families will have to wait till the minister realizes the housing situation is serious in Canada.

The minister asked us this afternoon,—and I feel sorry for him—asked us, of the opposition, actually to do his work. He told us: I ask the opposition not to criticize the minister, not to criticize the government; I ask the opposition to make suggestions to us.

In all the years I have been sitting here, I have never heard a minister admit so candidly his incompetence, his inability to manage the affairs of his department.

We are not here to bestow flattery on the minister or to express thanks to the government. Indeed, I do not think there should be even one Canadian who should feel compelled to say "thank you" to any government; for we are not here to get thanks but just to see that problems are solved. That is the reason why we have been elected by the people.

It is not difficult for the government or for the minister to say, as the latter said this afternoon: What can we do? The housing situation is serious.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[English]

I want to quote the minister at this point. He said, if I remember his words correctly, that any country growing as fast as Canada was bound to have a housing problem and that the government was dealing with this problem as it arises. This means that the minister has a 24-hour policy to deal with these urgent matters. He does not attempt to forecast the amount of increased housing which is required by a growing population; he tells the people of this country that he and the government intend to settle these difficulties as they arise.

I would not like to be labelled as a member of a 24-hour policy government, though I think this is the kind of government we have had during the last six years. This is why we are running, as my hon. friend from Bow River said, from crisis to crisis. I say it shows lack of a sense of responsibility. Moreover, when the minister tells us that this is a situation which has only just arisen, he is not speaking in accordance with the facts.

Two years ago, in 1965, La Presse of Montreal, another well known paper Le Devoir and even the Gazette printed articles in the month of January underlining the urgent need for action in the field of housing by the present government. This was two years ago, so the situation has not arisen overnight as the minister suggested. The excuse made by the minister in this regard cannot be accepted by us.

I recognize the hon. gentleman's difficulty. His colleagues across the way think that power is theirs to own as of right until they grow old and retire. I do not agree that this is the case, but because of complacency on their part they are not putting their full weight into the execution of their duties. As an example, let me remind hon. members that the minister told us this afternoon that the problem was not so much a lack of houses as the presence of too many people in this country. I wonder what the Minister of National Health and Welfare would say about that. I think it would be more appropriate for him to convey to his colleague responsible for housing the idea that what we need is not a housing policy but birth control pills for the Canadian people.

These are the kind of arguments used by the minister this afternoon. I am sure they do not suggest answers of the kind the Canadian people want at the present time. I am not speaking in any partisan way; I am speaking for those many thousands of people who are wondering what is to happen to them tomorrow in the area of housing activity. It is because this matter is so serious that we asked early this week for an immediate debate on the subject. The government was not ready; they had not written out their speeches. The hon. member for Middlesex East has just read us his own. I would not have thought it necessary to force the government to take action with regard to housing. The minister promised us that by 1970 there would be 200,000 units of new housing in this country. If we can judge from past promises and the results of last year when the number of units built declined by 32,000, I do not think we can rely on the promises the minister made today in this regard. The situation is so serious that people from all walks of life and in all sectors of activity have for months, if not for years, been telling the government about its urgency.

I can understand the bewilderment the public must now feel, because, like me, they may have been reading the pamphlet which the Liberals put out across the country during the election campaign. The first article in this pamphlet says the Liberal government is determined to "fight the poverty which unfortunately still exists in some areas despite general prosperity". The writer adds: "The plan is ready".

Is the plan ready, Mr. Chairman? Can the minister tell us whether the fight against poverty involves the lack of housing? Does it mean a constriction of the funds available to working class people for the purchase of homes? Members of this house are asking whether the minister really told the truth during that campaign or whether what was said then was merely part of a political propaganda offensive.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, housing gives rise to a problem which is so serious that the reports of the Economic Council of Canada, whether it be the third review of November 1966 or that of September 1967, show the seriousness and the importance of this matter.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I know that this has probably been mentioned by other members, but I still want to stress it and draw it to the attention of a government which, it seems, does not intend to consider and read the considerations published in the report of the Economic Council of Canada.

I would like the hon. minister to heed what the Economic Council of Canada has to say in its fourth report which was distributed to us recently. Chapter 9 is entitled "Policy Implications" and deals with the economic policy and policies to assure an adequate expansion of housing. Under that chapter it is stated that:

> Of all the major sectors of the economy, none will have to grow more rapidly than housing—at least to 1970, and perhaps even throughout the 1970's. This is a matter of major national importance if a growing housing shortage is not to become a serious national problem.

Greatly increased physical resources will therefore be required in this field, including a substantially enlarged working force with appropriate skills and considerably enlarged capital and residential construction capacity. A large and sustained volume of residential mortgage financing will also be required.

Here are the exact words of the report which cost a great deal of money to the Canadian people and which points out to the government and the minister responsible for housing the seriousness of the situation and the ways of correcting it.

Mr. Chairman, the report continues by warning legislators against the tendency to use this industry as a cyclical readjustment factor. As a matter of fact, one can read:

The use of housing as an economic regulator should not be continued to such an extent in the future.

This means, obviously, that housing, housing credit and the administration of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have always been linked to the needs, the economic incentive which was necessary for the government to keep abreast and avoid a widespread depression. We are warned against this practice.

I fully agree with this report because there is a growing awareness of the fact that the housing factor is no longer an economic regulator; it has become a factor in itself, a social factor, and a most urgent one.

If we do not settle this problem, if the government beats around the bush, tries to find excuses and defers its decisions, well, Mr. Chairman, we will not be surprised to note before long perhaps a very unfavourable reaction of the people to the government and the confidence that the people should place in their administrators.

The minister is fully aware that the Economic Council of Canada is not the only one to have cautioned him against the present situation; it also happens that briefs have been submitted to him from all quarters.

As an example, I should like to mention the one published in the press recently by the provincial Association of Quebec Home Builders Incorporated. In a press release that I take the liberty of quoting, the president of that important association cautioned the government against the situation which is facing us today.

[Mr. Valade.]

I am reading this release, Mr. Chairman, because I consider it most important:

The president of the Provincial Association of Home Builders, Mr. Fernand Boissé, of Sherbrooke, objects to the do-nothing policy applied to housing by the Ottawa government. Since August 12, mortgage loans are practically suspended which brings almost to a standstill the operations of the home building industry.

Once again, the government, by its haphazard policy of granting occasional loans and interrupting them suddenly, is causing serious prejudice to the population—which cannot find decent lodging at the present time—and to the whole industry.

It is useless—continues Mr. Boissé—for the minister responsible for housing to proclaim the urgency and the seriousness of the housing problem if, at the same time, he eliminates the loans without which builders cannot build for the public.

In the past two years—

And I emphasize what the president of the association noted:

In the past two years, residential housing has slowed down as a result of credit restrictions and the shortage of housing is reaching a critical stage while demand is constantly increasing. The absence of a rational policy in the field of housing will have led to that incredible situation: in a country as advanced economically and technically, the public cannot find decent housing because of government lack of cohesion in the matter of mortgage financing.

Mr. Chairman, I end my quotation here to show the minister that if I quoted those words, it was to point out to him that the problem has been with us for two years and that the government has been helpless or unconcerned in the face of a situation which was growing worse from day to day.

Evidently, arguments have been put forward to the effect that there was also, in the field of housing, a provincial and municipal responsibility. We all recognize the responsibility of the lower levels of government in that field. Indeed, the Ontario government recognized it by creating its own organization; the Newfoundland government also set up its own agency and recently, the Quebec government established the Quebec Housing Corporation, an act which came into force yesterday.

If we admit that the provincial and municipal authorities are responsible in the field of housing, that is no excuse for the inertia, the incompetence and the inability of the minister to see to it that those lower levels of government accept and assume their responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman, like some of my colleagues, when I see in my riding families who live in crowded tenements, in dusty cities, in houses which can be destroyed overnight by fire—I was unfortunate enough to witness such a fire where two children I knew very well died—I cannot but feel sorry about the fate of those people. That is why I think the federal government, whose responsibility it is to co-ordinate action, to incite—if the minister will accept that word—to stimulate, to wake up the lower levels of government if they will not assume their responsibilities in that field, should do something all the same.

It is quite obvious, Mr. Chairman, that the province of Quebec has not yet, as it ought to have done, taken adequate steps to alleviate the appalling housing conditions which prevail. As the representative of a city of almost two million people or over, I just cannot accept the fact that in a section covering hardly two square miles, there should be over 80,000 people who are more or less decently housed and of whom at least 50,000 live in decrepit houses or lodgings. And though there may be, in a certain executive field, related administrative duties and interwoven responsibilities—call them whichever name you like —still, I think it is the duty and the responsibility of the men who have been elected to represent the people in this assembly, to draw the attention of the lower level governments to a problem to which they do not appear so far to have been giving enough consideration.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the province of Quebec could have done much better than it has to date for, of the 12,000 units—

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Valade: If the hon. member does not mind, I will hear his question when I have used up the time allowed me.

If, of the 12,000 housing units financed in Canada recently Quebec has managed to build only one low rental housing project, namely the Dozois project of 796 units, I feel it proves beyond a doubt that the Liberal government which succeeded the Union Nationale in 1960 in the province of Quebec has generally failed to meet its obligations and responsibilities, because the Dozois project is the only low rental housing project in the city of Montreal to have been planned and built under the former Union Nationale administration.

When Mr. Lesage and his so-called sensational team came to power, nothing was done to rectify and remedy the tragic housing situation which now prevails in Montreal.

Many factors are responsible for the present housing shortage across Canada and particularly in the province of Quebec. First—as mentioned in the reports of the Canadian Economic Council—there is of course the scarcity of money; the increase in the lot prices due to speculation; the famous 11 per cent tax on building materials which the government insists on maintaining; and also the failure of the federal authorities to show leadership.

Of course, economic factors are involved. If this government had kept its promise when it came to power two years ago, and if it had ensured that so widely heralded prosperity, I think that today many more workers would have the means to buy a house. Under the circumstances, I think that it is our duty to suggest corrective measures or at least solutions.

Before making suggestions to the minister, inasmuch as he asked for our assistance in this field, I should like him to tell me whether he is really sincere and responsible when he says that he wants to take all the necessary measures to rectify the present tragic housing situation. Can the minister give us his assurance that he will contribute to the settlement of that problem? Is he ready to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials? He would show good will, a really deep feeling for the people who elected this government and he would also recognize a need. I should like the minister to tell us whether he is prepared to go that far.

I should like him also to tell us why the government has left the interests accumulate to the point where the lending rate is almost prohibitive. I do not know of any family head earning an average salary of $6,000 or $7,000 a year who can buy a house, make his monthly payments, pay the interest, pay back the principal, pay the municipal and school taxes, the local improvement taxes and also maintain his property. The minister knows full well that it is not realistic to ask a head of a large family or a man with only a few children to make ends meet with the continued increase in the cost of living, which this government is unable to curb.

Does the minister really believe that the policies which he is now elaborating are of such nature as to improve the situation? I do not think so, because it is humanly and materially unrealistic.

The attitude of the present government is so different from the election promises made by our friends opposite in 1965 that I would like to refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on November 3, 1965 in Lindsay, Ontario, I believe, as reported by the Canadian Press:

> A government must anticipate, to make sure that very high prices will not counterbalance the advantages of prosperity.

Imagine the inconsistency of those promises with the rise of the interest rate.

Mr. Chairman, I would have liked to make other contributions and suggestions to this government, since the minister has made us such a request, but when one considers that in the province of Quebec, and particularly in Montreal, we have spent over a billion dollars to realize a magnificent project, a project extremely favourable for Canada, namely Expo '67, it is morally forbidden to let working families rot in poverty when they are expecting government assistance to allow them to have a home of their own.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, who has just spoken asked me a question. He asked whether the minister would consent to the abolition of the 11 per cent sales tax. I should like to point out that the minister does not have the authority to consent, even if so disposed. I would also like to point out that during years when funds were available for housing, namely the three years that followed the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax in 1963, notwithstanding the tax, we had steady increases in housing starts and completions every year. There were record years of completions in 1964, 1965 and 1966.

Mr. Keays: But you need twice as many.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not know whether the minister was asking a question or making a statement. I do not know why the minister should have the opportunity to make a statement after a member speaks unless he wishes to pose a question and desires an answer.

Mr. Nasserden: I have a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Just a few minutes ago we heard a minister say that there were record starts in the years 1964, 1965 and 1966. A few minutes earlier his colleague said that they had gone down by—

The Chairman: Order. There is no point of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. During his speech the hon. member for Sainte-Marie cast some reflection upon what he called minor governments. I should like to pose a question to the hon. member for Sainte-Marie because I was a representative of the mayors for several years.

[Mr. Valade.]

The Chairman: Order, please. The posing of a question is not a question of privilege. Also the time allotted to the hon. member for Sainte-Marie has expired. The hon. member for Verdun.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I do not know whether I am completely accurate in suggesting that the hon. member for Sudbury made his maiden speech here today. In any event, this was the first opportunity I have had to hear his contribution in the House of Commons. I am sure he will be an excellent and welcome addition to the New Democratic party. I am particularly pleased because he introduced many new socialistic tendencies to that party at a time when I thought the party finally was endorsing private enterprise. I was beginning to feel sorry for the leader of that party who is not here this evening.

I approached this debate with a degree of apprehension—and of interest because the question of housing is indeed a serious one. I would say it is an urgent problem in Canada today; I have no hesitation in making that statement. But, frankly, being serious by nature, I was equally interested in seeing the new look of the Conservative party. I do not know just what was supposed to have been injected into that party, but if the quality of debate we have heard today is any indication of what we are supposed to hear from that party in the future I can only repeat that famous slogan of the House of Commons, they are nothing more than the same old gang.

Since I am not by nature partisan I would much prefer to speak to the question which is before us, the question of housing.

Mr. Nielsen: Nobody else over there has.

Mr. Mackasey: I am glad to see that the hon. member for Yukon has come back. He is the kind of member I enjoy; he likes hard hitting debate and I am looking forward to the winter months when the two of us will match blows. I think he makes a better speech standing than when sitting, and I would appreciate it if he would refrain from interjecting until he is really accepted back into the establishment along the front benches.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: The way Benson is going I will go back home.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I think it is obvious to all of us that there is, in this country at least, a very irksome problem that is worrying hon. members. Having listened to the debate today I have come to the conclusion, and I mean this in all sincerity, that the urgency of the housing problem in the low and middle income brackets, varies from district to district.

I had hoped, as part of the new political look, that the members of the Conservative party might have commenced this debate by saying they realized that the housing situation in Canada has been aggravated by the unprecedented prosperity that has existed in this country since 1962. It has been aggravated as well by the tremendous influx of immigrants who have realized that the Liberal party is back in power and that this is once again a land of opportunity. Since they have not done so, I presume they know we all realize this and do not want to be redundant.

As is often the case, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi began his remarks by saying he did not want to make a partisan speech and then proceeded to make personal reference to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. I wish he were here tonight. I was glad to listen to his contribution in the house, particularly since the last time I saw the hon. member, he was prognosticating over the C.B.C. during the time of that well known recent convention, predicting the outcome on the basis that he was going to deliver the balance of power to a certain candidate. Unfortunately, he delivered that balance of power to the wrong candidate, and I hope he will be back in favour very soon.

Mr. Ricard: You are out of order.

Mr. Mackasey: I guess I am out of order and I will return to the housing situation, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: You would be better to stay away from it.

Mr. Mackasey: I tried without much success to list several of the main points expressed by that hon. member. I wrote as quickly as possible but was unable to get them all down because of his fiery style of oratory, which is the envy of all of us I am sure. I did manage to write down 12 of his suggestions. I went to the reading room during the adjournment and found that eight of them had been the subject of rules, regulations and statutes of the House of Commons for many years. I might have expected this kind of error on the part of the hon. member for Northumberland, who last year in debate made it obvious he did not realize that at that time banks could not enter the mortgage field. Today, however, the hon. member came up with some very good ideas, particularly one, namely that the government copy the United States government and consult with our institutions of finance in this country, to see if by some moral persuasion the government could persuade these institutions to help in the field of housing. This particular type of encounter between the government and private enterprise did take place last March and April. Thanks to the persuasive powers of the present minister in charge of housing, we did obtain from private lenders more of a direct contribution on a per capita basis than did our counterparts in the United States under the plan of President Johnson.

Mr. Nielsen: What is the interest rate in the United States?

Mr. Mackasey: My very good friend, and I am glad to see him in the house obviously the picture of health, the hon. member for Danforth, made the same speech again for the fourth time. I am glad because this makes it easier to anticipate the arguments. One thing did surprise me slightly about the speech of the hon. member for Danforth and the speech of the new and vigorous member for Sudbury was that they felt that because of this kind of emergency in the field of housing, we could completely disregard the constitution of Canada. They both said, in essence, to hell with the B.N.A. Act, it is not really important because we have a housing problem. They suggested the government should be involved in low rental housing without discussing this with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mackasey: That is precisely what was said. Perhaps I am paraphrasing a little but you can check this out to make sure I am correct.

What was said by that new representative of the party that has finally recognized a special status for the province of Quebec? I do not know how housing fits into this special status for the province of Quebec, but I should like to remind this house that the New Democratic party has now discovered that special status. I say this because about two weeks ago during the height of the Conservative convention, I read a letter to the editor of Le Devoir which would indicate that this party had discovered the principle of special status. The hon. member for Greenwood wrote a beautiful letter to the editor of Le Devoir in which he stated that he wanted the French Canadian people to realize that the New Democratic party was the first party of any in the federal field to recognize this special status. I still do not understand how housing would fit into their concept of special status. In any event, if one listened to the hon. member for Danforth, he would obviously be aware that we are going to have a housing problem of a completely different nature in la belle province. That may be good for housing, I do not know. As a matter of fact—

Mr. Lewis: You know that is not true.

Mr. Mackasey: Those who want to know the real definition of special status as discovered by the N.D.P., and their attitude toward the housing problem, should read the speech made in the House of Commons on May 16 by that same hon. member for Greenwood. In the final analysis you may find their definition of provincial rights to be more restrictive than is presently the case.

There has been a lot said today about housing, particularly with regard to people in the medium income class, including young executives and intellectuals. I will refer to the workers in a minute. I come from that class myself and I feel—

An hon. Member: And you look it.

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, I look it and I am not ashamed of it like some Tories apparently appear to be. I don't give a damn for the $25,000 per year supporter of the Tory party, nor whether he can find a house as long as I can find adequate housing for the lunch pail carriers in my riding. They are my concern.

Mr. Fulton: Don't run away with yourself, Bryce.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member should be careful of his public image to which we have been exposed for years. That image is likely to go out the window if an intellectual such as he decides to interrupt and interfere from his seat. You have a public image now, and you have a responsibility.

Mr. Fulton: Don't worry, our boys are not particularly concerned about—

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Mackasey: Don't let your image go to your head. Please be calm. Don't get excited. You should co-operate or co-ordinate your housing committee a little better.

Now that we have got over that little bit of interruption, let me refer to last Saturday's edition of the Montreal Star. I sat thinking that if I were a young executive in Montreal and wanted to find a house to live in, would I have any success. As has been mentioned here today, many young couples are starting out in life and want to obtain a little bungalow on a piece of land 50 feet by 100 feet. I was wondering where I could find such a property in that big, bustling metropolis of Montreal.

In looking at the Montreal Star I first found an ad for a five and one half room bungalow at $13,530 in Chateauguay, which is a village 15 minutes from Dorchester street, with payments of $82 a month. Another firm advertised three and four bedroom bungalows for $15,399. The ad suggested that one should hurry because there were only 1,000 left. If one preferred a duplex in St. Laurent at $39,000, which means about $19,000 per unit, a few of those can be found right in the heart of old French Canada.

In the event that some individuals on the other side are contemplating a move to la belle province during this 100th year of confederation, when so many individuals are endorsing federalism, let me refer them to this ad. It refers to a house called the Californian which sells for $18,000 with a 6¾ per cent interest rate and a cash down payment of $990. Finally, Mr. Chairman, before someone over there has a heart attack because I am not moving along fast enough, there is another house advertised here.

This next example shows just how important Ross Thatcher is. You can buy a house called "Saskatchewan" for $13,990, with a down payment of $475. Just in case hon. members think that in the question of housing we are forgetting the Quebec nationalists, we find a house called "Quebec" that sells at $16,150 with a tremendous down payment of $800. We have other models ranging from $13,000 to $18,000.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, because I like to hear a good fellow.

Mr. Enns: My question is simply this. I should like to ask the hon. member how long he thinks he would have to spend in the reading room to find ads for the 250,000 houses that he is describing.

Mr. Mackasey: Is the hon. member asking whether there are 250,000 such homes available?

Mr. Enns: I believe there is a demand for and a shortage of houses to that extent at least.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I was so impressed by the arguments advanced today by the opposition, which arguments were so well documented, that there were absolutely no homes available in this category in the great metropolitan area of Montreal that I went to find out for myself what the figures were.

Mr. Enns: There is no crisis?

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member is getting like the hon. member for Kamloops, who has left the chamber to get a tranquillizer. However, Mr. Chairman, there is a serious note to this debate. Perhaps my happy mood tonight will counterbalance the debate we have heard from the other side of the chamber. Hon. members opposite have been extremely critical of our housing policy, but they should be more factual in their remarks. I suppose the new look over there has unfortunately not had time to develop. One would think that the chairman of their committee would have pointed out the excellent work carried out by C.M.H.C. We should have heard of the advantages of having this great corporation rather than the completely misinformed statements to which we have been subjected today.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi said that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour will again rise and hide behind the constitution. I have not had the experience of the hon. member in being a demagogue. I have not had the chance to go across the country and take my own, unofficial poll on the sex life of the tsetse fly or what the big problem is in Vancouver or Winnipeg. I have not had the advantage of the weekly bulletins that have been issued when the hon. member has discovered that Vancouver is worried about pollution, Saskatchewan is worried about external affairs, and deep in the heart of Montreal somebody is worried about separatism.

An hon. Member: You sound like an auctioneer.

Mr. Mackasey: I am worried about the constitution, and unlike the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, I respect it. There is a fundamental difference here. All of us who have sat in this House of Commons have heard innumerable speeches by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi in which he has defended the right of the province of Quebec and other provinces, and castigated the government for injecting themselves into the affairs of the provinces and now disregards those rights.

Mr. Nielsen: What about housing?

Mr. Mackasey: All right.

An hon. Member: We haven't seen the hon. member for Yukon for one year.

Mr. Nielsen: But when I speak, I contribute something to the debate, unlike the hon. member who has just interjected.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I do not want the attitude of the committee to become belligerent. In all fairness to the hon. member for Yukon, I would point out that he is a perfect example of how we should conduct ourselves in this House of Commons. So I am on his side; other hon. members should leave him alone.

Mr. Nielsen: Let us talk about housing.

Mr. Mackasey: Somebody said that the province of Quebec is finally establishing a housing corporation. I think the hon. member for Sainte-Marie pointed out that in the years 1960 to 1966 the Lesage government would not do any such thing and now, after the enlightened separatist government came into power in the province of Quebec, they will get every nickel possible out of the federal government by having funds funnelled into the province. In the Tory years you had no housing problem because the people stayed in the country and on the farms. They were not inclined to leave the farms, realizing the degree of depression that existed in the big cities. That is the big difference between those days and today.

The minister told the house this afternoon that eight of the provinces have now established what might be called housing authorities or housing corporations. At least they are provincial government bodies working largely in complete co-operation with the federal government.

The minister in charge of housing in Quebec, Hon. Paul Dozois, is a capable and excellent man. He realizes the necessity for low rental housing in the province of Quebec. He realized this necessity back in the 1950's, and there is in that province what is known as the Dozois plan, or Dozois development, which provides adequate housing for hundreds and hundreds of families in the low rental categories. He is a strong Canadian and a strong federalist. I point this out because I may have created the impression that all members of that government are Noël Tremblays.

But not one single housing corporation at the provincial level was established prior to 1964. Where was this great degree of co-operation between the years 1958 and 1962? Where was the respect for the rights of the provinces in those years? Why did not the great Tory provinces get around to forming housing corporations in those years? They did not do this until there was in Ottawa an enlightened Liberal government.

The facts are there for all to see. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre likes his facts to be precise. He is looking at me now with both eyes, for a change. The Newfoundland and Labrador Housing Corporation was established in 1966. The Nova Scotia Housing Commission was established on April 6, 1966. The New Brunswick Housing Corporation was established on July 1, 1967. The Quebec Housing Corporation, Société d'habitation du Québec, was assented to on June 29, 1967, and became operative on September 27, 1967. The Ontario Housing Corporation was established on May 8, 1964. The Manitoba Housing and Renewal Corporation was established on June 21, 1967. The Alberta Housing and Urban Renewal Corporation was established on April 11, 1967. The Prince Edward Island Housing Authority was established on April 7, 1966.

Despite these facts, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi rises in the house and accuses the minister of running back and forth across the country holding meetings with the provinces, with nothing to show for his efforts. All the minister has to show for his efforts is six or seven new housing corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: These housing corporations and authorities have been established because we have enlightened legislation. Because of the policy of this government we will be able to do something to solve this problem. We will be able to provide low rental housing and housing renewals. Not one person in the opposition congratulated the minister today for not having increased the interest rate on loans for low-rental houses. Not one member of the opposition has noticed that the money available for low rental housing in this country is still at an interest rate of 6¼ per cent. Why did not somebody mention that fact?

If we want to respect the British North America Act in this country, if we want a country—this is the point—everybody must make a sacrifice, and this includes the English separatists as well as the French separatists. If we are to respect the B.N.A. Act and provincial jurisdiction in the field of housing, the name of the game is co-operation. Three levels of government merged to produce Expo, and three levels of government will merge to solve the housing problem. The three levels of government are going to merge right across this country to wipe out slums and eradicate mediocre housing. This can be achieved if we take advantage of the legislation, not that we will adopt but which already exists.

There is not a member in this House of Commons who does not feel as I do in this respect. Sometimes you get a call on Friday night or on Saturday, or a phone call from a constituent who wants to find a senior-citizens home and says, "Is there a home somewhere to place my parents? My mother and father want to live with us, but my home is too small and we do not have anywhere to put them." There is no way in which I can answer this question. We do not have a single, solitary housing development for senior citizens in a city of 90,000 people. This is a shame but it is not the fault of the federal government. There has been sufficient money but, as the minister pointed out time and time again and as has been stated by previous speakers, there has not been one single solitary project brought before the federal government—and I presume the same has been true of the opposition when it formed the government—by the provinces that has ever been refused. The moneys available for low rental housing on the federal level have never been exhausted in one calendar year.

So let us remember and let us be factual. There is a housing problem and I am not proud of it. This government, like all other governments, must do something about it. However, this is a worldwide problem. I have often been accused of a slight leftist tendency which makes me look from time to time to the little group in the corner and wonder why they are so misguided in other areas. So I went to the library and I said to myself: perhaps we can learn from Sweden. This socialistic haven may have been able to solve this problem. It is a small and compact country. Its people are used to regimentation, they are used to socialism. They do not really have to use the thought process. There cannot be a housing problem in Sweden, I thought. However, I found to my surprise that the waiting list for houses is getting shorter; you only have to wait between five and six years for a house. That is an improvement when you compare it with Poland, for instance.

The problem is a worldwide one but it does not mean that we do not have a responsibility to do something about housing. What we have to do is to establish priorities and find out who is important and who needs the housing. Many speakers on the other side of the house have said—and unfortunately their remarks got lost in their partisan attitude—that we must do something for the little man with the lunch pail. It is hard to shed tears for the young executive making $28,000 a year who cannot find a mortgage at 6.25 per cent. I stay away from the executive page in the Montreal Star, the $40,000 and up category. There are many of them. But we need low rental housing.

Let us eliminate the term "public housing". It is degrading, to my way of thinking. Not being an intellectual, an engineer or an architect, I can never understand why public housing has to be so ugly, why it cannot be more functional and why we cannot have a little grass growing around it. Why is it that a man who earns $100 or $120 a week is not entitled to decent housing? The provision of decent housing is the moral obligation of the government and we have no right to shift it to the provinces or the municipalities. We are not trying to do so. We are trying to co-operate, and this is the reason why the minister, particularly in the first three months of the year, travelled from one end of the country to the other setting up housing corporations. So the mechanism and good will are there, but the demand for this type of housing must be generated by the people on the street, the people at the civic level who have a moral responsibility through the church and social groups to look after their neighbour. It is a grave responsibility, and yet when one goes to city council meetings, as I do—and I am sure this is true all across the country—one finds only eight or nine people present there. One can understand then the despair and frustrations of the old people because they cannot find homes since there are not enough convalescent and low rental homes available. These places do not have to be shacks. Let us look at Habitat which we are proud to show the world. We are trying to do things in this country but we will not get anywhere if the attitude of the opposition is completely negative and partisan. We have not heard a single, solitary suggestion from the other side except for the one made by the hon. member for Northumberland who said we should use moral persuasion on insurance companies. That is his great idea for the future. Other proposals came from the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi who filed eight or nine suggestions that are two or three years old and already on the statute books.

I just received a note from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation stating that their pamphlet is out of date. However, that is not too important because the principle is the same, namely that there is money and there always has been money for low rental housing. What we want to do is rid the country of the prejudice that surrounds the name of public housing. We want to cease equating public housing with poverty, degradation and second class status. We want to make our low rental housing projects in this country attractive and a compliment to the working man. It is not the 8.25 per cent interest that is the burden in housing, as the hon. member for Sainte-Marie said in one of his few moments of rationality. It is the taxes on the municipal level for schools that fall on the home owner. The day is rapidly waning for the hope that all of us have of living on a piece of land 50 by 100 feet with a nice little cottage on it and a few tomato plants growing in the backyard. It is impossible. There are no more lots left on Dorchester street or Sherbrooke street in Montreal. If you want that dream, you have to go back to the country and when you get back to the country you are faced with the tremendous cost of building facilities for education. It is a vicious circle. It is not a problem that one level of government can settle. It is a problem which has become a national emergency. I do not know if the minister will agree with that. Nevertheless, in times of national emergency we should not fight, bicker, and pass the buck. The time has come for complete co-operation among the civic, provincial and federal jurisdictions. Fortunately, through the foresight, intelligence, integrity and eloquence of the minister, practically every province in Canada today has finally established a provincial housing corporation the medium through which we will eradicate the slums of Canada.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Chairman, I see that I do not have much time left and I think I should congratulate the hon. member for Verdun for that non-partisan speech which he promised us and delivered to us. Perhaps he will excuse me for being slightly partisan in the minute or so that is left to us today. However, I have no intention of blasting the minister. I think that, along with many members on this side of the house I can say we have a great deal of regard for him and for his capabilities. However, we must realize that he is an overworked man. It is not his fault that he was saddled with this responsibility for housing. We know that within the terms of reference of his portfolio there is plenty of work for any man even though his capacity may be great to carry out his duties in that respect. Nevertheless, the housing policy has suffered, I think. I do not believe we can blame the minister for that.

I was very interested tonight to hear the hon. member for Middlesex East mention the resolution that was passed by the council of the city of London. It is recognized at the present time in the city of London that there is a shortage there of some 4,000 dwelling units. They are quite concerned, and I am sure everybody in the house is concerned about the fact that throughout Canada there is a shortage of some 25,000 residential units.

This is what we are considering here now. I hope we will have an opportunity to carry on this discussion a little further some time in the not too distant future and to discuss this problem in greater detail. I am concerned about the effect of the increase in the maximum interest rate upon the average person who makes less than $8,000 a year, not the man who is fortunate enough to be in the higher income bracket. What will happen to him, because with the higher interest rate naturally the valuation of all homes will increase the inflationary pressures which exist today? When it does, the man living in the low rental home will have to pay more by way of rent. Naturally, the money coming out of his pocket will remove him from that utopian condition of having his own home.

Is the home, the private dwelling, becoming uneconomic? I do not think so. The minister ought to consider that. Particularly, he ought to consider the fellow in the lower income bracket. How is he to have a home of his own?

I note some restlessness, Mr. Chairman. May I call it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: It might be helpful if I announced the business for tomorrow and next week. Tomorrow we propose to deal with legislation, the resolution on emergency gold mining assistance which is No. 34 on today's order paper. After that is completed, we propose to take the resolution on postage rates, No. 33 on today's order paper. On Monday we propose to move that Mr. Speaker leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply. This will allow hon. members to move an amendment. When that debate is concluded we propose to resume the budget debate and that resumed debate is likely to begin on Wednesday of next week and will continue for the remainder of the week. That is the present plan. I foresee no change. If there is any necessary change, I shall advise hon. members.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the minister, to avoid any misunderstanding, whether it is not intended to call third reading of the bill on the manpower and citizenship advisory council?

Mr. MacEachen: No.

Mr. Fulton: I asked that to avoid misunderstandings.

Mr. MacEachen: We shall not call it tomorrow or next week, no.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

ESTATES GENERAL OF QUEBEC AND FRENCH CANADA

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, last June I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) about his participation and that of the federal Liberal party, as well as of the federal government to the Estates General of Quebec which will be held late next November.

It is a known fact that the Estates General will bring together 2,500 delegates who will study in committee the problems of Quebecers and Quebec.

Mr. Trudeau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member tells us that last June—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is precisely against standing orders to raise a point of order at this time. I think it has always been acknowledged that no point of order could be raised at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. It is not the custom to interrupt the member who has the floor and in view of the fact that the time allotted is only seven minutes, I feel that questions could be postponed until the time is up.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the minister will certainly have the opportunity to reply; in fact, he will have three minutes to reply.

So, I consider strange this refusal of the government or of the Liberal party or of the federal Liberal members from Quebec, except the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) who has agreed to attend the meetings of the Estates General, the object of which is precisely to consider the problems of the Quebecers.

It is known that at their meeting in Montmorency House, the federal Liberal members were told by Reverend Father Arès, a Jesuit well known for his concern for national questions, that they have been too aloof from the main events that have occurred in Quebec recently.

And they still do since, generally speaking, the federal members of parliament refuse to take part in as important a meeting as that of the Estates General to be held next November.

It is therefore astonishing to hear the hon. Minister of Justice tell us, as if he no longer knows what is going on in Quebec and how the thinking evolves: If they have suggestions to make and amendments to propose to the constitution, let them do so. But he does not have any to make, precisely because he shies away from the events and the changing mood in Quebec. He stays far from it and does not participate in the life of present day Quebec; that is why he has no suggestions to make. He has no plans to amend the constitution, and merely says: If anyone has suggestions to make, let him make them.

But when one makes suggestions—and that is what is going on right now, in the case of all the suggestions made to the hon. Minister of Justice—the hon. minister merely rejects them and does not make any of his own.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. Minister of Justice, whose mission, whose role is precisely to attend to constitutional changes when they are indicated, were to follow more closely what goes on in Quebec at the present time, if he met Quebecers oftener, he would know what amendments are indicated.

Perhaps it is because he was elected in an English-speaking riding in Montreal that he seems to neglect the point of view of the French Canadians. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Justice, as a man in public life and a Quebecer of French extraction, should take part in the Estates General. He should attend the meetings, participate in the discussions and hear the various points of view which will be expressed. What will be the conclusions thereof? I do not know, since the Estates General have not yet met, but I think it would be profitable for the Minister of Justice to hear and discuss all those suggestions at the Estates General. I also think that it would be more useful for him than to argue that Estates General are a backward step and only those who are elected can speak on behalf of the people.

No, Mr. Speaker, it does not only rest with those who have been elected to speak on behalf of Quebec citizens; it rests with the Quebecers themselves to speak on their own behalf. It rests with the Quebecers to speak for themselves and this is what they are going to do at that meeting of the Estates General which includes delegates of every constituency, of all classes of society and of every association.

• (10:10 p.m.)

In concluding, I invite the minister to change his mind and to allow the Estates General to have access to all documents, statistics and research which might have been made by the federal government in the past. By making all those available to the Estates General, I think that it will give the best opportunity to study the Quebec problem, since this has been organized quite seriously by a group of honest men who really want to study the Quebec problem fully.

The Estates General will elect, as I said earlier, people from all walks of life and every part of Quebec. The organization was set up in earnest and I think that the Minister of Justice would benefit by taking part in it.

That is why I invite him to change his mind in that respect, to recognize the wonderful work accomplished by the Estates General up to date, to take part in it, to voice his opinion and to make available to that organization all the research and statistics facilities of the federal government.

Mr. Trudeau: My Speaker, my point of order dealt with the allegation of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) to the effect that his question of last June concerned the participation of the Liberal party in the Estates General, whereas it referred to something entirely different. As a matter of fact, it was about statistics to be supplied by the federal government to that organization.

I feel, therefore, that he is clearly misusing the standing orders so as to deal with anything and everything when it suits his convenience. That is why I have no advice to take from the hon. member for Lapointe who is lacking in sense of sequence.

He is also anything but well-read and has a very bad memory. He says that I failed to make any suggestions to amend the constitution. I must tell him that hardly three weeks ago, at the convention of the Canadian Bar Association held in Quebec city, I made very specific suggestions to amend the constitution, to ensure its gradual rather than disorderly evolution and development.

These propositions, Mr. Speaker, are the only definite propositions made by a government in power in this country to amend the constitution.

So, there are people who have been making haphazard and contradictory propositions, for a very long term but, our government excepted, no one has yet suggested a definite formula for the orderly and progressive development of the constitution.

As far as the Estates General are concerned, in Le Devoir, day before yesterday, in a paper read to the delegates who are to sit on the Estates General, I see that the right and the duty of French Canadians to be equal to other people is being proclaimed.

Mr. Speaker, in my speech to the Bar Association, I suggested a way through which French-speaking Canadians could obtain equal rights with English-speaking Canadians. This suggestion has been rejected and even ignored by the hon. member.

Mr. Grégoire: Even by the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Mr. Grègoire.]

Mr. Trudeau: What I should like to know—I beg your pardon, the right hon. Prime Minister did not reject it.

What I should like to know, and I hope the Estates General will at long last let us know, is how they will go about achieving that equality of the French Canadians with other peoples. We are still waiting, we are even awaiting a concrete speech from the hon. member for Lapointe, something specific, a constitutional document, an amending formula with certain specifics, which would enable us to sit down and study. But, until now, we have heard almost nothing but words.

NATIONAL PARKS—WASKESIU, SASK.—POSSIBLE RETENTION OF TOURIST CABINS

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing) is not in the house tonight as I should like to discuss a matter which comes under his jurisdiction. However, I shall take this opportunity to present my case for the Waskesiu townsite national park in Saskatchewan. I would be failing in my duty as a member of parliament, whose constituents are involved in this matter, if I did not do so.

Waskesiu was dedicated by the late prime minister of Canada, W. L. Mackenzie King, as a park for the use of the average Canadian. It was never intended as a rich man's paradise. The original intention of Mr. King with regard to this park has been carried out in that it has largely been used by Canadians of modest means. They have made use of the magnificent setting of Prince Albert national park to erect tents, portable cabins and what are popularly known as shack tents.

Shack tents in reality are collapsible, are readily stored, have wooden walls and a canvas roof. Many of these cabins or shack tents have been passed from father to son and so on. They have been improved and decorated, and in many instances become difficult to recognize in that the improvements have been so vast that the original canvas roofed shack tent is no more. Instead, you might see a gleaming example of what modern technology can do.

The important thing is that Waskesiu provided many thousands of citizens with an opportunity to have an exciting outdoor holiday at minimum cost. The portable cabin and shack tent dwellers have been the backbone, the mainstay, of Waskesiu, and in view of this you can imagine the shock and disbelief of Waskesiu enthusiasts at the announcement of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In place of the camping area, the shack tents, the portable cabins, even the commercial Waskesiu bungalow cabins, a new recreation area and a new group of so called low cost motels is to rise. As a result of the grandiose plans of the minister the tennis courts, bowling greens and other excellent recreational facilities will disappear. In other words, no longer are the needs of those who have made Waskesiu the holiday home it is today to be considered by the minister.

By some strange survey the minister has decided that the one day visitor, the one day transient, is the one his department should woo. This is the decision, even in the face of the fact that the gates of Prince Albert National Park are between 250 to 300 miles from the trans-Canada highway. So, by his decision, the minister is ignoring completely the rights of the present users of Waskesiu. No longer, with the implementation of this plan, will a shack tent owner be able to pass the ownership on to his son; no longer will it be possible for a portable cabin to be passed on to a beneficiary or sold.

In many cases the owners will be faced with losses amounting to $5,000, $6,000 or $7,000, and all of this is to satisfy the whims of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. What is the purpose behind this scheme? Surely it is clear that the purpose is to banish the shack tent, the portable cabin and, later, larger cottage owners, because it is noted that no provision is made for relocation of the shack tents or cabins. It has been said that there is no place to put them. Yet, only 30 acres are involved out of over 30,000 acres which are available in the park in the Waskesiu town site. Lake Waskesiu alone has many areas where cabins could be relocated or, alternatively, where the day camp proposals of the minister could be put to the test.

Make no mistake; if you remove and banish the people who are the backbone of Waskesiu, you destroy the true purpose for which Prime Minister Mackenzie King inaugurated the Prince Albert National Park. The minister should reconsider the plans which were so hastily conceived. Surely, it could not have been his intention to hurt first of all those shack tent owners who can least afford a change. Without Waskesiu many will be unable to afford any summer holiday. I find it difficult to believe that the minister will press forward with such a policy without the benefit of sober second thought. I bring this to the attention of the minister, and I ask him and his officials to consider this issue which is very serious indeed in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member opposite that his remarks this evening were timely and I will draw them to the attention of the minister on his return to the house. There are, however, a couple of points I should like to make today in view of the hon. member's remarks.

Our national parks have been established for the preservation of Canada's marvellous wilderness as our national heritage. It is the desire of the government of Canada to make the parks freely available for the use of all Canadian citizens. The increase in the number of good highways in the last few years has made a large number of Canadians more aware of the national parks and has given them an increasing desire to visit them. Due to this increase in attendance in the national parks, existing facilities definitely have become overcrowded. Therefore, new facilities must be created for the highly mobile type of park visitor that is the norm in this country today. The position of the shack tent dwellers in Waskesiu is a highly privileged one in that they have been allowed to maintain what is, in effect, a private dwelling for some years.

I should at this time emphasize that no existing shack tent dweller in the park today will be displaced. They will continue to be granted leases on a year to year basis so long as the existing tenant or his or her spouse wish to remain there. What the department has said, however, is that no new people will be allowed to obtain leases of this type in the parks. Shack tent camping is a privilege that will rest with the individual and cannot be considered an interest vested in either the structure or the land. A tenant, therefore, cannot be allowed to assign or transfer his lease to somebody other than his or her spouse.

Mr. Speaker, this is a decision that has been discussed at great length in parliament, in our committee and in the press; it is believed to be the right one. Both the minister and I firmly believe that a national park is the property of all Canadians and should be available to visitors from all parts of the country. We have gone to great pains to assure those people now holding special shack tent privileges in the park that they will be allowed to remain there as long as they renew their leases annually.

The formation of new private dwellings of this nature, however, would be incompatible with the philosophy of the use of the national park and the increasing need for camp site space for the mobile traveller. It is for this reason that the government believes, in the interests of the public of Canada, that the shack tents must be phased out by natural attrition over the years.

May I say, in conclusion, that the government at all times welcomes the advice of the public and is willing to receive representations from all interested parties including the hon. member.

POWER—COLUMBIA RIVER—ALLEGED DELAY IN FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO B.C.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on September 26 I asked the following question as reported in Hansard at page 2482:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that Hon. W. A. C. Bennett, premier of British Columbia, is publicly condemning the government of Canada for failing to pay the $12 million owed to British Columbia for completion of the Duncan Lake dam by July 31 of this year according to the agreement between the federal and provincial governments with respect to the Columbia river treaty, can the minister inform the house of the facts with respect to this intriguing question?

I asked that question because the people of British Columbia are somewhat confused as to what are the facts. I wish to quote briefly from the agreement signed by the government of Canada and British Columbia on July 18, 1963 in relation to the Columbia river treaty. I find the following in clause 15:

Canada and British Columbia will consult as required on technical and other matters of mutual interest with a view to facilitating the implementation of the treaty, avoiding disputes and carrying out this agreement.

What confuses the people of British Columbia is that Mr. Bennett apparently is not taking advantage of that clause in the treaty, but is publicly condemning the federal government. The Vancouver Sun of May 11, 1967 suggests that Mr. Bennett, when asked for his opinion of the treaty, said that the thing at fault was that the treaty was signed too quickly. He blamed the federal authorities for the arrangement made with the aluminum company for a dam on the Arrow lakes which was three times better than the one provided by the treaty.

The premier of British Columbia officiated recently at the opening of the Duncan lake dam which was completed earlier than anticipated. This is what he had to say according to the Vancouver Sun of Friday, August 18 in its report of this ceremony:

Premier W. A. C. Bennett officially unleashed the water behind Duncan dam—

At the same time, he unleashed his wrath against Ottawa for failing to pay him $12 million in exchange for flood control benefits in the U.S.

Ottawa, he charged, has defaulted on a term of the Columbia River Treaty under which the Duncan dam was built.

And he offered to lend the federal government the money he claimed it owes B.C.

"I offer to lend it to them if they're so hard up," he told reporters immediately before the dam dedication ceremony here.

"Without interest," he added.

Then the newspaper went on to say:

Such was the private wrath of the premier Thursday as he issued his angry charges in stage whispers to reporters attending the event.

He said later:

"This is supposed to be a picnic atmosphere," he told a crowd of about 300 from atop the dam.

"So I won't make any speeches."

The article says later:

"I want to make it clear," he told reporters privately before the luncheon, "that it is not the U.S. who defaulted. It is Ottawa."

He said that, although under the treaty the U.S. is required to pay flood control benefits to the Canadian government, it is Ottawa who is supposed to pay B.C.

He went on to say:

"It's always Ottawa that's to blame," he said.

These are the premier's criticisms of the treaty in the first instance. I have a photograph in my office in which the premier of British Columbia is shown clapping his hands vigorously while the treaty is being signed by the President of the United States at the Peace Arch in British Columbia, on the U.S.-Canada border.

This has created a great deal of confusion in the public mind. In the agreement there is a clause that permits for consultation on these technical and legal matters in order to avoid disputes. Yet the premier of British Columbia is going around the country blaming the federal government in the first instance for signing the treaty anyway, and latterly for failing to pay the $12 million that he claims is owing his province in respect of the early completion of the Duncan dam.

I trust that when the parliamentary secretary replies he will inform the house of the facts, because the people are confused and want to know the truth with respect to this agreement and Premier Bennett's statements.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the facts with regard to this situation are as follows. The British Columbia Power and Hydro Authority brought the Duncan dam into operation on July 31, 1967. This dam is the first of three to be completed as part of the Columbia river undertaking.

Article VI (1) C of the Columbia river treaty provides that the United States shall pay to Canada in United States funds the sum of $11,100,000 upon the commencement of operation of the Duncan dam. This payment was not made by the United States to Canada on the date on which it fell due which, as I have indicated, was July 31 of this year. I understand that the authority to make the necessary payment is contained in an appropriations bill which has not been passed by the congress of the United States.

The importance which we attach to receiving this overdue payment at the earliest possible date has been urged on the United States government. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) recently spoke in this sense to Mr. Rusk. He also pressed a claim for interest covering the period since the payment fell due on July 31. While the United States authorities may not view the latter in exactly the same light as we do, we believe they share our anxiety to avoid further delay. Moreover, we are now following up our claim for interest in Washington.

The obligation of the government of Canada in this case consists solely in taking all steps necessary to protect Canadian interests by ensuring that the terms of the Columbia river treaty are carried out. This obligation is being fulfilled by this government. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been in touch with the premier of British Columbia in order to keep the premier abreast of developments on this matter.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

MISLEADING ADVERTISING—AMENDMENT EXTENDING PROTECTION TO TOBACCO CONSUMERS

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-154, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the Food and Drugs Act provisions which protect the consumer in the fields of food, drugs and cosmetic products against misleading advertising, so that in future the consumers of tobacco products will also have that protection.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WINKLER—FAREWELL MESSAGE ON RESIGNATION FROM HOUSE

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege today to say to the house that I hope in my ten and a half years as a member I may have made some responsible contribution to the annals of this historic parliamentary institution. I should like to thank every member in every part of the house for their co-operation and for the friendly associations I have had during this time.

I wish also, Mr. Speaker, to express my gratitude for the co-operation of departmental officials and of every staff member of the House of Commons, as well as recognizing the co-operation of members of the press gallery. Last but not least, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for the tolerance and patience as well as the courtesies you have extended to me.

May I hope for future blessings on this great country and on all those who work with pride and dedication for its future. And now, Mr. Speaker, I bid you all au revoir.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the hon. gentleman that I do not rise to wish him well in the reasons that cause him to leave this house, but I do wish to say to him that we have appreciated the way in which he has conducted himself as an individual in this house. We wish him good health and prosperity in all those things dear to him except his treasured ambitions in political life.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I have just one friendly world in reply. The good services of my future office will be available to the minister as well as to everyone else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—SPEECH AT UN BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER—VISIT TO CANADA BY ALLEGED STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps the minister has noted the question I put to the right hon. Prime Minister yesterday. At that time the Prime Minister said the Secretary of State for External Affairs would reply this morning, and I am wondering whether the minister would care to do so now.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the question, because I returned very late. Would my hon. friend repeat it?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, if I may I should now like to put the question to the minister. In the speech the Secretary of State for External Affairs delivered at the United Nations last Wednesday he urged a cessation in the bombing of North Viet Nam and declared that "there is no hope for progress toward a peaceful settlement in appeals or proposals which place the total burden on one side only."

I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government is planning to follow up this statement with negotiations or discussions with the other parties involved, which negotiations or discussions are designed to bring about an improvement in this most dangerous situation. In particular I should like to know whether any new overtures are being planned to the authorities at Hanoi or their allies to end the flow of troops and war materials from North Viet Nam to South Viet Nam should the bombing cease.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government urged that there be a stop in the bombing because at the present time it is of the view that this is the only way to test the willingness of North Viet Nam to enter into negotiations and consultations with other countries in an effort to bring about an accommodation. This was the policy that was pursued before we publicly asked for a stop in the bombing, and this will continue to be the government's policy.

I should add that, as the house already has been informed, the Prime Minister responded positively to an invitation put forward by the president of the world federation of the United Nations associations for a meeting at Geneva of the two co-chairman countries, Britain and the Soviet union, together with the commission powers, Canada, Poland and India. We have passed on to the other invitees the reaction of the Canadian government to this invitation.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that some hon. members, myself included, still find the minister's answer a little equivocal and bearing in mind that the minister said that appeals to one side alone are not sufficient, is the minister suggesting that he is appealing to the United States to stop the bombing of North Viet Nam without any concession by the other side, in other words without any halt to the flow of troops and war materials from North Viet Nam to South Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The answer to that is yes, and there was nothing equivocal in the first response.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs for his adoption of a policy this party has put forward before. Is he now able to tell us whether, on the basis of our contacts with the régime in Hanoi, there is any reason to believe that a cessation of the bombing might in fact lead to negotiations?

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the declaration I made at the United Nations I was not enunciating new Canadian policy, but, for what I believe to be sound reasons this was the first time that policy had been stated in that particular way in public. Having regard to the immediate question, we consider that an end to the bombing must be regarded in the present circumstances as the key to the solution, or a starting point in the process of solving this regrettable situation in Viet Nam. Hanoi has said that only after the bombing has been stopped would it be in a position to indicate what would follow. It seems to us that the only way to test North Vietnamese willingness to enter into negotiations is to stop the bombing.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's reply to the hon. member for Greenwood, can the minister indicate how long he thinks we should have to wait for a reply from Hanoi should the bombing stop?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my friend recognizes the limitations of that question.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question. A report has been made that the minister had a discussion with Secretary of State Rusk prior to his speech at the United Nations, in which he may have informed him of the general tenor of his remarks. Is the minister in a position to confirm this, and can he assist the house by indicating what may have been the reaction of Dean Rusk?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On September 7 I met with Mr. Rusk in Washington and once again stated the position of the Canadian government on this question, particularly with regard to the question of bombing. On the same day in New York I also discussed the matter with his ambassador, Mr. Goldberg. I did not on that occasion indicate the position we would take in the United Nations, but both the Secretary of State Rusk and Mr. Goldberg were advised before I spoke of the course the Canadian government proposed to take.

I have no indication as to what the official reaction is, but there have been wide indications from all over that this seems to have been the correct step and perhaps well timed at this particular period.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising out of a question addressed yesterday to the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State for External Affairs may not have had an opportunity to read yesterday's Hansard. My question relates to the visit of three North Vietnamese students to Canada. The right hon. Prime Minister said yesterday that subject to further examination he thought the government did receive a query about this visit from the United States.

In view of the fact that reports today indicate that the United States authorities deny having made any such inquiry, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs clarify the situation, since these United States authorities claim that the Canadian government took the initiative of informing them about the visit rather than the other way around?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Canadian government took the initiative. We informed the government of the United States of the decision.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I respectfully ask the minister why it was necessary for a sovereign country like Canada to inform United States authorities of the fact that we were admitting in the normal way, on normal visas and passports, three visitors from a country with which we have that kind of exchange? Was there any reason for the United States authorities being informed and for this explanation being given?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think the circumstances involved in this matter, which include the deep involvement in Viet Nam of the United States, a close friend of Canada, warrant the view that one conducts a successful foreign policy by observing the courtesies that one would expect from a friend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The minister pleased many Canadians, I would even say the majority of Canadians, when he made his statement to the United Nations that bombings should cease first. Did he have any reactions from the American authorities in the attitude taken by the minister on behalf of the Canadian government, on behalf of all Canada? If he has had some reactions, what were they?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I understood correctly the hon. member's question. Did he ask me whether I had reactions from Canadians or from other countries?

Mr. Caouette: From the American government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet had any official reaction from the government of the United States, but at the United Nations, I had reactions from other members of the organization. And as I just told the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I have given notice through our ambassador in New York of our intention to ask that bombings should cease.

RHODESIA—POSSIBLE REVIEW OF CANADIAN POSITION ON SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that by now the Secretary of State for External Affairs appreciates that he has been welcomed back to the house after his absence. My question also is for him. Will the Canadian position on Rhodesian sanctions be reviewed in the light of the call from three African states to end United Kingdom curbs against Rhodesian trade?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I said in my statement on Wednesday at the United Nations that Canada had fully complied with the security council directives with regard to sanctions against Rhodesia, that we were awaiting the report of the secretary general as to the effectiveness of these sanctions, and that if they were not satisfactory we would be among those who would urge further sanctions to bring an end to the régime in Rhodesia.

Mr. Johnston: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In relation to the commonwealth meeting rather than to the United Nations, what new measures will Canada suggest to the seven nation committee, which includes Canada, already set up to consider new measures against Rhodesia?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed the other day in the sanctions committee in London. I would prefer to wait until we have the report before giving an indication of what further sanctions might be employed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GREECE—SUPPORT FOR RESTORATION OF POLITICAL FREEDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I regret that I have not given him notice of it and if he prefers to take it as notice I will be quite happy.

The question is as follows. Will the Canadian government join the Council of Europe and certain European NATO countries, among which I believe are Denmark and Norway, in making a protest to the government of Greece against certain breaches of human rights and the suppression of political freedoms in that country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has had the opportunity on a number of occasions to discuss this matter with representatives of the government of Greece. We share the view that the restoration of parliamentary freedom in that or in any other country is a desirable objective which has received and will continue to receive Canadian support.

FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF TAXATION REPORT BY JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of States for External Affairs, since he is leading the government today. I will put to him this question. Would the government give earnest consideration to the referral of the Carter commission report on taxation to a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons prior to the formulation and publication of the white paper? This is in accordance with the decision by the Minister of Finance to defer the submission of briefs.

I make an urgent plea to the minister to take this under consideration, and perhaps when the Minister of Finance comes back next week they will be in a position to answer that point.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALBERTA—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that there are a number of judicial vacancies in the Alberta courts, will appointments be made in the very near future?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the vacancies exist in the sense that the Alberta legislature created them, but as the hon. member knows I am not in a position to recommend that they be filled until this house adopts amendments to the Judges Act. I hope this will be done as soon as possible, in this session if we can find time.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FEED GRAIN FREIGHT SUBSIDY TO ONTARIO PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I have a question for the minister of forestry. In answer to a question of mine the other day, as shown on page 2550 of Hansard, the Prime Minister promised to discuss with the minister the desirability of extending the feed grain freight assistance program to the southwestern Ontario feed grain producers, particularly the corn producers, to assist them during the present depressed conditions of the grain corn market. I should like to ask the minister whether this discussion has taken place, and can the corn growers look forward to some measure of assistance through the good offices of the Canadian livestock feed grain board?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago this problem was raised with the Canadian Livestock Feed Board administration and I understand that yesterday they had a meeting with Mr. Standing, the secretary of the Ontario winter wheat marketing board. As soon as any decisions are taken I will inform the hon. member through the normal channels.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister of which I gave him notice, but since he is not here I will put it to the Acting Prime Minister.

I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether Mr. David DePoe was carrying out his functions for the Company of Young Canadians this week in Montreal when he criticized the administration of McGill University?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF APPLICATION

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to extend its application to the years 1968, 1969 and 1970.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Mr. Johnston: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The committee is being asked to consider a resolution that extends the application of gold mining legislation for the next three years into the future without the presence in the committee of the Minister of Finance, who has been attending a most important conference in which the whole subject of the world gold market arose. Just this morning there was the headline—

The Chairman: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that if he wishes to proceed he should state his point of order now.

Mr. Johnston: My point of order is that this resolution should be delayed until such time as the Minister of Finance returns to the house to give a statement.

The Chairman: The hon. member has no point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, since 1948 the federal government has been giving assistance to the operators of gold mines considered uneconomical under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

The legislation, passed in 1948, has been renewed several times since, in 1951, 1952, 1953, 1955, 1956, 1958, 1960, the last amendment dates back to 1963 when the act was extended for a period of four years, that is until December 31, 1967. Therefore, it is urgent to introduce today a new amendment.

Last year, during the winter, and quite recently, the government undertook to review the situation in order to know whether the legislation which we are dealing with today was still necessary, in what terms, at what price and at what level of subsidy.

The representations made by the gold producers, by mining associations and delegations from the mining municipalities concerned, in Quebec and Ontario in particular, have been of great assistance to us in carrying out that review, and we wish to thank the groups that came forward.

[English]

Excitement and romanticism have been associated with the early development in Canada of the gold mining industry. In the last century placer gold was found in the Cariboo district of British Columbia and in the Klondike in the Yukon. I was in the Yukon recently to visit the latest mining development and spent some time in and around Dawson City, where my grandfather lived at the time of the rush and where he died some 20 years after. It is unbelievable that gold should still be extracted from these same sands.

In the early part of this century, Mr. Chairman, lode gold—that is gold found in hard rock—was discovered and developed at Kirkland Lake, Timmins, Val d'Or, Malartic, Red Lake, Yellowknife and other places. The gold mining industry was a pioneer in the development of much of Canada's north. It became a major element in our mining industry, and gold had the greatest value of any metal mined in Canada for three decades following 1920. The year 1941 was the year of greatest production. In that year the industry produced about 5.3 million ounces, worth about $206 million. At that time the total value of mineral production in Canada was about $560 million; so $206 million for gold alone out of just over half a billion, gives a good indication of the importance of gold mining in those years.

Following world war II, however, the rate of expansion of the whole mineral industry in Canada increased, slowly at first but then more and more rapidly. By 1966 the mineral industry had become a giant in this country, with a total production of slightly over $4 billion. Unfortunately gold mining did not participate in the post-war expansion to the same degree as did other parts of the industry. The main reason for this is the simple fact that cost of labour and supplies increased while the selling price of gold remained fixed.

I understand that my hon. friend the hon. member for Villeneuve will probably have something to say about the "stability" of the price of gold.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, few new discoveries were made, and gold mines were forced to rely mainly on known ore zones and their possible extension for their production.

It should be added here that the industry undertook to increase its efficiency by the use of improved mining equipment and methods. The effort achieved a marked degree of success. For a few years total output of gold in Canada increased. It reached a post-war high in 1960 when a total of about 4.6 million ounces was produced having a value of about $157 million. However, the improvement in efficiency has not prevented many gold mines from closing in the last few years due to depletion of ore reserves through exhaustion, and again due to increasing costs.

I have in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a table which illustrates the decline which has taken place recently in the gold mining industry. The statistics I have refer to lode gold mines only. As an aside I might say that lode gold mines bring out the gold found in hard rock. A small quantity of gold is still recovered in Canada from placer deposits in the beds of streams and rivers, a type of operation almost entirely confined to British Columbia and the Yukon. As a third source gold is also produced as a byproduct from some base metal mines. The subsidy is not paid in that case.

With the permission of the committee I will table this chart which indicates the situation as it exists now, and I will comment on it in a moment.

The Chairman: I should point out to the minister that it is impossible for him to table a document in committee; he will have to read it into his statement.

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman; I wish it simply to be printed in Hansard.

The Chairman: The minister will be able to do this later on in the day when the house is in regular session.

Mr. Monteith: I think he may have permission to include it in Hansard, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I am sorry, I misunderstood. The minister is not permitted to table documents in committee, but may have documents included in his remarks in Hansard.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, May I ask the minister the source of the document?

Mr. Pepin: They are the usual good statistics of my department.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder whether the minister back to back with the lode mining statistics would also request permission to print the placer mining statistics.

Mr. Pepin: I will have those in due course in this debate.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that these statistics be included in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

LODE GOLD MINES

	Number of Mines in Operation	Number of Men Employed	Ounces Produced	Number of Ounces Produced from All Sources
1948	87	22,566	3,081,113	3,529,608
1950	83	22,491	3,764,757	4,441,227
1955	61	18,032	3,866,124	4,541,962
1960	55	16,542	3,930,366	4,628,911
1965	55	12,520 (est.)	2,958,874	3,606,031
1967	40	10,500 (est.)	—	—

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, the figures which appear in Hansard give on the left side the number of lode gold mines we have in Canada. For example, in 1948 we had 87. This number dropped to 83 in 1950, to 61 in 1955, to 55 in 1960, stayed there in 1965, and to 40 in 1967. The number of men employed in 1948—this is a very important statistic—was 22,566. In 1950 the number was 22,400; in 1955, 18,000; in 1960, 16,500; in 1965, 12,500, and the figure estimated for 1967 is 10,500. Hon. members will thus realize that the number of mines is diminishing, and consequently so is the number of men employed in the mines, the number now being half what it was in 1948.

• (11:40 a.m.)

The number of ounces produced has not been declining as fast, indicating greater efficiency in the industry. The figures are as follows: in 1947, about 3 million ounces; in 1950, 3.7 million; in 1955, 3.8 million; in 1960, 3.9 million; in 1965, 2.9 million. I also have figures showing the number of ounces produced from all sources including placer mines and gold found in base metals.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Would the minister permit a question? Did he say that in 1942 there were 87 gold mines?

Mr. Pepin: In 1948.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): The report of the administration of the Emergency Gold Mine Assistance Act for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966 says on page 11 in table 1 that in 1948 there were 117 gold mines receiving assistance under the act. I am of the opinion that the minister was referring to lode mines rather than to the total of lode and placer mines.

Mr. Pepin: I thought I had made it clear that I was talking only about lode gold mines. If one includes the placer mines and the base metal mines the figure of 117 is accurate.

[Translation]

At this stage, Mr. Chairman, I may add right away that gold production remains an important element of our mining industry. It has had its set-backs, it now has problems, but it is not moribund. In 1966, about 3.3 million ounces of gold were produced in Canada, that is a value of $125 million. Gold ranks fifth for value in the list of metals produced in Canada in 1966.

Outside of the U.S.S.R., whose production is not known, Canada ranks second amongst gold producers in the world, immediately after the Union of South Africa—although a good deal behind—since it produces some 30 million ounces.

[English]

I should like to say a few words now about gold mining communities. There is an old saying that "gold is where you find it." It was found in many out of the way places in Canada—at least they were remote at the time of the discovery and development of the gold mines. The pioneering role of the mining prospectors and operators was shared by those who came to work in the mines and to provide the services needed in any community. Schools, churches and hospitals were built, as well as homes and business premises; water and power systems were installed, and streets and roads constructed.

There are 20 communities in Canada whose economic support is derived almost entirely from the operation of gold mines. We have estimated that in 1966 the population of these communities exceeded 80,000. This social factor represents, of course, the major cause for the present legislation, as it did for the legislation introduced a few months ago in connection with the Cape Breton coal mines. Improvements in methods and systems of transportation have linked the mining communities with major centres by rail, road and air. But though they may now be more easily accessible, they remain detached from the heavily populated areas of Canada and are still dependent on the resources of their immediate areas.

The discovery and development in recent years of deposits of base metals and industrial minerals has added some economic support to the mining communities of Timmins, Kirkland Lake, Val d'Or and Malartic. Everyone here has heard about the Texas Gulf Sulphur zinc-copper mine at Timmins, the Jones and Laughlin iron ore mine at Kirkland Lake and the pulp mill of Domtar Limited situated about 100 miles north of Val d'Or. The gold mining communities have made efforts to attract other industries. The federal Department of Industry has provided financial incentives to new manufacturing and processing industries in designated areas under its area development program. Some success has been achieved through these efforts.

Notwithstanding some diversification of the base, the gold mining communities continue to be dependent mainly on the economic support provided by the operating gold mines. As the gold mines have reduced the scale of their operations or have ceased production, former employees have faced the problem of finding new jobs. The federal Department of Manpower and Immigration has assisted in placing workers in suitable jobs through the Canada manpower centres. Workers are retrained where necessary. They are also given assistance to move to other areas under the manpower mobility program.

Everybody understands that moving is a difficult operation in the case of people who have grown up in certain areas and who are very much sentimentally attached to those areas, and sympathizes with those who have do do so. Governments try to cushion the shock.

Perhaps I should say something now about the role of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The act was passed in 1948, at which time a large number of gold mines were faced with operating losses because of increasing costs of production. The operators were, of course, unable to increase the selling price of their product.

Without assistance the mines would have been forced to close. Extensive economic and social dislocations would have followed the abrupt closure of so many mines. The purpose of the legislation was to extend the life of the gold mines and thereby allow their dependent communities to adjust gradually to diminishing economic support. May I emphasize that the purpose of the legislation is not to increase the number of gold mines in Canada, but to permit a slow decline with a view to protecting the communities rather than the operators of these mines.

It is well known that the price paid for gold by the Royal Canadian Mint is governed by the price paid by the United States treasury and the exchange rate between the Canadian and United States dollars. The price paid by the United States treasury has been fixed since 1934 at $35 per fine ounce. I should point out that even in the representations which were made to us by the gold mining operators it was not denied that there was no great chance that this price could be increased in the near future. I look across to the hon. member for Villeneuve because I want him to get the point well. Even the people who made representations to us agree that there is no justified hope of this price changing. The hon. member for Villeneuve, who has grandiose ideas about the use of money, may well tell us we should raise the price to $100 or even to $150.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow a question at this time?

I understand that the price of gold has been set at $35. Is the minister aware that in the United States, subsidies of about $44 per ounce are being paid to gold mines, which represents a total of $79 even though the price is set at $35? Now, what prevents us here in Canada to follow the example of the United States and pay subsidies to gold mines?

Mr. Pepin: There are no doubt several reasons for that. The United States production being probably much lower than the Canadian production, the Americans may be interested in increasing their gold production so as to avoid being entirely dependent on foreign countries in their monetary manipulations if that term is not deemed disparaging.

• (11:50 a.m.)

[English]

Since May of 1962 the value of the Canadian dollar has been set at $0.925 United States funds. At parity the Mint buying price for gold is $37.84 per ounce in Canadian funds. As the market value of the Canadian dollar may be permitted to fluctuate by 1 per cent on either side of parity, the mint buying price in Canadian funds may vary between $37.46 and $38.22 per ounce.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the legislation was to extend the life of many of the gold mines and thereby allow their dependent communities to adjust gradually to diminishing economic support. I am going to repeat this on a number of occasions in my speech and throughout the debate, because I do not want anybody to believe that we are looking for an increase in gold production.

The assistance given under the act has successfully retarded the rate of decline of the industry. In this way unemployment and consequent social dislocations in the gold mining communities have been minimized, and so the purpose of the legislation has been achieved to a good extent. As I said a moment ago the number of employees has declined from some 22,000 in 1948 to about 10,000 in 1967, and this has been a progressive, or better, a regulated, rate of decline. Of course it was not accomplished without difficulties and hardship, but in my view the federal government has done its share to prevent greater hardships.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister inform us whether he and the government have made any representations to the International Monetary Fund, or to the United States, for a revision in the price of gold to $70 or $100?

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member for Yukon is probably better aware than I am that there is a big international debate presently taking place on this subject. He is also aware that the Minister of Finance is in Rio at the moment, and this matter is possibly on the agenda of the conference he is attending. My only contention in this debate is that we cannot count on a rise in the price of gold. The legislation is based on the situation as it exists now, and which is recognized by the gold mining producers themselves as the situation which will probably continue for a good many years to come. Of course if major changes should occur in this field at the international level, there is no doubt that in consequence the government would adjust this legislation.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister state what his government's position is going to be? Is it going to be for a raising of the price of gold?

Mr. Pepin: I am not the Minister of Finance, and I know I could not be that minister as I am not qualified. I am only dealing with mining legislation and, as I shall say in a moment, social legislation. I am not dealing in monetary policies, and I am quite sure the committee would agree I should not do so.

Mr. Johnston: It seems to me that the question just asked adds some validity to the point of order I raised earlier. I wonder if the minister is aware of the threat on the part of South Africa, announced this morning, that if the price of gold is not raised it will reduce the supply of gold to the western world?

Mr. Pepin: That is a policy for the Union of South Africa to devise. I simply repeat, and I beg the comprehension and sympathy of my hon. friends, that this is a mining policy and is not monetary policy. This is a mining bill, not a monetary bill. If my hon. friends disagree with the position taken by the government in monetary matters I ask them to please raise that matter at the earliest occasion, but not today.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the minister does not think that we should discuss that question. It would have been better to wait for the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) to be here, since we are discussing the matter of gold, and consequently the monetary question.

I understand the idea of the minister to the effect that this is only an extension, or an amendment to the existing act, and that it has nothing to do with the monetary question. However, the minister for half an hour has been mixing together the monetary question and the matter of gold. Now, it seems that we should have waited for the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to be here, and he would have joined the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in discussing the renewal of this act which is very important for Canadians as a whole.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, this debate on monetary liquidity in the world has been going on for several years. The experts I consulted think that it will go on for some time yet. The legislation under consideration today expires on December 31, 1967 and to protect the communities and the municipalities which are in danger, it will be necessary to intervene immediately and not wait for the results of the international transactions.

I think the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) would not want to prejudice his electors on that score. And I think that he will co-operate with the minister to ensure the passing of this legislation as quickly as possible so that on December 23, 1967 we will not find ourselves without a legislation.

[English]

Mr. Kindt: To clarify and settle the point may I ask the minister if the resolution has any objective other than what is stated, namely to extend the application of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act? Has the minister anything else in mind to slip in as an addition to this amendment? From the way he is talking I would say there is something else.

Mr. Pepin: I was going to say in conclusion that the only purpose of today's debate is to justify the extension of the legislation.

Mr. Kindt: To extend it?

Mr. Pepin: For another three years. That is the only purpose of the resolution. I am trying to demonstrate why we have decided to do that, and to show why we decided not to do more, as requested in various representations that we received.

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the minister to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent for the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: It is like a question and answer period.

Mr. Pepin: We may get that over now and not have to do it later.

The cost of maintaining assistance under the act has been appreciable. A total of $231 million has been paid to gold mine operators from 1948 to March 31, 1967. The following table, which I hope to receive permission to have printed in Hansard, taken from the annual report on the administration of the act to March 31, 1967, shows the amounts paid by calendar years, and my hon. friends will realize that this also deals with the question of the number of mines, something which was raised by the hon. member for Timmins.

The number of mines declined from 117 in 1948 to 66 in 1965. This includes all types of mines except, of course, metal base, and the table shows that the assistance paid per year has not varied very substantially. This assistance totalled some $12 million in 1948, $10 million in 1951, $16 million in 1954, $11 million in 1958 and $14 million in 1965. The number of ounces produced, as has been stated, has been going down.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): If I heard the minister correctly he has referred to a table. I do not know where his table comes from, but the details according to the bluebook show the number of mines receiving assistance in 1965 to be 41 whereas the minister has mentioned 65 or 66. Why is there this difference in those figures?

• (12 noon)

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry; we will try to rectify that. The figure, as I said, is in respect of the number of mines being assisted in 1965-66. The number of ounces was 3.6 million in 1949, 2.6 million in 1964 and 2.4 million in 1965. Of course, the assistance paid per ounce produced has increased quite substantially. I might mention a few figures: In 1949 it was $13.48, in 1965, $6.11, and in 1966 the estimate is $6.63. So the subsidy per ounce has been going up quite seriously. May I have permission of the house to have the next table printed in Hansard?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the minister may have permission to have the table printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*Represents assistance paid to mines whose 1966 applications were processed prior to March 31, 1967.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask whether this table is a supplement to the 1966 regular annual report in respect of emergency gold mining assistance? Is it a similar table to that which we find in the 1965 report?

Mr. Pepin: I think so. So the amount of assistance payable for the year 1967 is now estimated at $15 million. What about the future? Should parliament authorize the proposed amendment to the act, it is anticipated that the total assistance paid will decline moderately in future years. To be more specific, during the period 1967 to 1970 it is estimated that six mines with an annual production of about 400,000 ounces of gold will become eligible for assistance whereas 14 mines with an annual production of about one million ounces will close. I might add that most of the gold produced in 1970 probably will be eligible for assistance. I am giving hon. members all I know about this subject so that I will not be accused of painting too rosy a picture. This is the picture of a declining industry. It is unfortunate, but we must face it.

Increasing costs of production will prevent assistance from declining in direct proportion to the reduction in output of gold caused by the closure of some mines.

I think I will skip the basis on which assistance is given. It is a rather complicated formula. I am quite sure that those who will speak on this subject are aware of it and do not need to have it repeated to them. I might say that when the cost of production is higher than $26.50 there is assistance but when the cost is higher than $45 there is no compensation. This indicates that between a production cost of $26.50 and $45 an increasing subsidy is paid.

What was in the briefs which we have received from the Mining Association of Canada, the communities affected and a few other associations? First of all, these companies have stressed the need for continuation of assistance to gold mines. Second, most, if not all the groups, have requested a change in the formula for determining the assistance payable which would have the effect of increasing the assistance by 50 per cent. I will not go into this in detail because it is a bit complicated.

Third, a term of four years or more for the extension of the act was considered desirable. Fourth, the brief from the gold mining communities requested the addition of a section to the act to provide for assistance for mining exploration within a 60-mile radius of designated mining towns. They would like to have a subvention for exploration in an area 60 miles around the gold mining communities.

In reply to these requests I should like to say first of all that, in respect of the desirability for continuation of this legislation, we obviously agree because this is what we are doing this morning. Withdrawal of assistance at this time would cause 28 of the 37 lode gold mines receiving assistance in 1967 to cease operations within a short time.

Of course, a substantial increase in the price of gold or a decrease in the cost of production could terminate the need for assistance to the gold mining industry, but neither condition appears likely to materialize in the near future.

Mr. Kindt: Are you sure of that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Pepin: I am as sure as one can be in these matters.

Mr. Kindt: Can the people of Canada be assured that there will be no tampering with the price of gold which will disturb the value of all other commodities?

Mr. Pepin: I have no vision from heaven on this subject, but this is the position accepted by the economists and officials in my department as well as in other departments and fairly well throughout the scientific and business communities in this country.

Mr. Kindt: I was hoping that the minister's statement, while off the cuff, was from heaven and could be taken as such.

Mr. Pepin: Thank you. On the question of the period of extension, as I said a term of four years was recommended by the gold mining communities and producers. While rapidly changing circumstances might make it desirable to review the position of the gold mining communities within a three year period, we believe that a three year period will be adequate. We believe a term of three years gives recognition to the problem of gold mine operators in the orderly planning of mining programs and to the need of dependent communities for a further period of adjustment.

The Minister of Finance and myself had already indicated our intentions to extend the duration of the act when we received these representations. There really has been no protest on this three year period.

The recommendation to include a mineral exploration program restricted to the immediate area of the gold mining towns as part of the assistance provided under the act has not been adopted. First, it is really impossible to give any assurance that mineral deposits of any kind will be found in the prescribed areas, no matter how intensive an exploration program might be undertaken. A mine near Kirkland Lake might be discovered five or ten years from now, but it is so uncertain that one cannot base a policy on that.

An hon. Member: All exploration is uncertain.

Mr. Pepin: I assume that these areas have been thoroughly explored in recent years. I presume also that if I had $5 million for exploration, I would tend to go to areas of Canada which are less known and where the geological survey of Canada had indicated that possibilities existed.

My main point, however, is that exploration is not the purpose of the act. The purpose of the act is not the creation of new mines, neither is it the expansion of existing communities nor the creation of new ones. This is not the purpose of the act. As a matter of fact, in 1963 the act was amended to make it obligatory for a company to recruit more than half of its personnel in the gold mining community in order to be entitled to the subsidies. There clearly is an indication that the legislation is not for exploration or for the development of gold or other mines in Canada.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question at this point? The minister has said that exploration is not the purpose of the act. Is it not, however, a purpose of the act to keep these communities alive? If exploration should turn up additional mines which would help support these communities, would that not be a good objective?

Mr. Pepin: The whole debate is based on the "if" used by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. If there were any assurance that gold or any other mineral would be found I presume we would be more receptive to the argument, but the "if" is so colossal that it cannot be legislated upon.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit one further question? Surely he is not suggesting that the cost of exploration carried on by operating companies is not calculated in the cost per ounce and therefore is not one of the factors upon which the subsidy is paid.

Mr. Pepin: I understand that the cost of exploration in the area of existing mines is deductible and can be included in the determination of the cost of production for subsidy purposes. What we are talking about now is exploration within a 60-mile radius of a mine. My hon. friend, with such great mining experience, knows the difficulty involved in deciding when a mine is one mine or two mines. In this case the representations we have received would relate to something outside of the existing mine. He is quite right when he assumes that the cost of exploration at the site of an existing mine can be included in the cost of production.

I should like to add that in Canada, exploration is generally left to the initiative of private enterprise and is not usually paid for by the federal government. When there are encouragements to be given in respect of exploration, these are usually given by the provinces and not by the federal government. I see an intrigued look on the face of one of my hon. friends. The federal government does this indeed in the northern territories where the federal government behaves like a provincial authority.

Mr. Nielsen: Too bad.

Mr. Pepin: That is another debate. To complete this subject I might say that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I am always keen to give it publicity, provides general assistance to mineral exploration in all parts of Canada by the preparation and distribution of geological and geophysical maps of all kinds. This is a federal contribution. If subsidies are needed for exploration, this would normally come under provincial authority.

The main question still remains, why not raise the subsidy, as both briefs suggested, in view of rising costs? A change in the level of assistance which would have any significant effect at this time, any change which would really reverse the present trend in this industry, would be very costly indeed. The government is now assisting the miners in gold mining communities by payments under the act to the gold miners amounting to approximately $1,500 per year for each man employed. This is not a reproach I am making to the miners themselves; it is only a fact that I feel I should mention. We are already providing $1,500 per year per miner in these communities. If we double the cost of the program by raising it to $30 million or $50 million, we are going to create a situation which will in time become the equivalent of the Cape Breton coal mining situation. In a few years the federal minister of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources would have to bring in another bill in an attempt to do in the gold mining industry what he is trying to do now in the coal mining industry of Cape Breton, and I do not think that is desirable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pepin: I think there are other ways to help. My N.D.P. colleagues protest. If we continued this practice of paying subsidies to industry throughout the country I think we would end up with subsidies upon subsidies and I am sure this is not what Canada needs.

There is also in the existing law a provision in respect of increased costs of production. As I mentioned before, with increasing costs there is an increased subsidy anticipated.

More important still, as I just mentioned a high measure of subsidy would perpetuate the problem and create a situation similar to the one we have in Cape Breton.

The mining industry has never been more active or, generally speaking, more prosperous than it is at this time. However, one of the major problems facing it is the shortage of manpower. It would be irrational, in my view, to pay higher subsidies which would tend to discourage the natural and desirable movement of people from the gold mining sector to other sectors of the mining industry where labour is needed and is better paid than in the gold mining industry. By pouring in more subsides we would damage the situation to a greater degree than is the case now.

The policies of governments, the federal government in particular, have been and are to facilitate and encourage the movement of people when that is inevitable and to bring in industry where it is possible, and all the legislation of the Departments of Manpower and of Industry is to that effect. The hon. member knows that workers or miners moving from one community to another can receive up to $1,000 for transportation purposes. If a man is forced to sell his house and wants to buy another he still receives $500. If he needs retraining he will receive a retraining allowance, and so on. This is a progressive way of dealing with these problems.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the $500 on the 8¼ per cent or on the old interest rate?

Mr. Pepin: It is a straight 500 bucks.

The bill is to be a very simple one. It will replace the year 1967 by the year 1970 in subsections 1 and 2 of section 4A of the act. The period of its application is extended by three years to December 31, 1970. No other change is made in the act. The method of computing the amount of assistance payable to an operator remains unchanged.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I am quite ready to admit with the hon. member for Villeneuve and others, that a social problem is involved here and that notwithstanding the renewal of the legislation, and despite the fact that we will again spend $15 million a year for three years in the gold mines of northern Quebec, northern Ontario and the other provinces, the social problem will remain.

I admit that the possibility for alternative employment in the area for the miners involved is slight. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration, as I said a while ago is ready to help these miners through his mobility and retraining programs, as is the minister of commerce and industry by promoting the establishment of new industries in those areas.

As the member for Villeneuve knows, I have often called upon the provinces, upon the provincial labour ministers and particularly upon the Quebec minister to lay down an overall strategy to remedy these situations.

I am justified in saying that I have not received very brilliant or practical suggestions on the subject particularly from the Quebec provincial government, whatever its political hue.

The provinces, particularly Quebec, claim that this question involves the price of gold, the monetary policy, so that it is a federal government responsibility. I do not share that view. I think—and I hope the hon. member for Villeneuve will not cause me any prejudice in claiming the contrary—that a mining problem is involved and a social problem which the federal government cannot solve alone. The provinces, particularly Quebec, even claim exclusive responsibility in the field of mining and, occasionally, in the social field.

It is well known that I am not a believer in water-tight division of jurisdictions between the federal and the provincial governments. In the present case, as in most others, a mixed jurisdiction is involved; I think that the central government and the provincial governments should work together to solve the social problems in northern Quebec and northern Ontario. But, as I often say, it takes two to tango and, in this case, I have not been invited by the provincial governments, even though I suggested it.

So, I earnestly hope that the central government and the provincial government will agree to work together to solve the social and mining problem brought about by the waning gold mines.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, permit me first to make some comments on the speech made by the minister. I should tell him first that he did not have to convince anybody on this side of the house that the act should be extended for a period of time. I believe we in this house agree that this is an absolute necessity; in fact, it is a minimum requirement. However, I believe the minister fell down in his remarks in trying to justify the fact that the government is not doing anything but extending the application of the act.

I felt, as I am sure did many other hon. members, a real sense of dismay with regard to this part of the minister's speech. I felt that the minister had forecast a very dismal prospect for the mining communities which are affected by the act. The minister said the government would permit a slow decline in these communities; he mentioned a progressive state of decline. Several times during his speech he intimated it was the view of the government that the gold mining communities would slowly disappear.

I am positive that these communities are not going to die. They have resisted so far the very great problems that have faced them. They have tried to diversify the industry and have been only partly successful. But they have certainly tried and they will continue to try. I am quite sure the minister's forecast that within a few years we will see the end of this problem is wrong. In the meantime why should we not provide at least a minimum standard of living for these communities? Why should we not provide the workers with a minimum wage so they may live reasonably during the years until something else turns up?

The whole tenor of the minister's speech and the reasons he gave for not extending the application of the act into any other area were certainly most discouraging. The minister's attitude seems to be: We have given up in respect of this industry; we will carry it on for a few years and hope something else will turn up. I believe the minister should do much more than hope something else will turn up because nothing has turned up in the last 20 years. I think the minister should look forward to a continuation of the need for these grants. I am sure the gold mining communities will not disappear and that the need for gold will not decline. The minister gave us a very intensive background paper on the problem but I am sorry he did not give us more detail on the reason that nothing is proposed beyond the application of the act for another three years.

The mining communities asked for four substantial things which the minister mentioned. The first was an extension of the life of the act. This has of course been granted and we agree with it. I cannot understand why the minister has limited the extension to three years. Originally this was emergency legislation and it was extended year by year. Then someone had the idea that it was more than an emergency act and renewal was extended to two years. It was later renewed for three years until 1963 and in 1963 it was renewed for four years.

I do not think this is a numbers game. Why did the minister decide that a three year extension was sufficient? Does he believe that in the future something will change the situation? If the minister had given us any indication along this line I would have been satisfied. The minister may hope that within three years something will happen to change the situation, but he did not say this, on the contrary, he said he really did not know what would happen except that there would be a slow decline in the gold mining communities. I cannot understand why the minister did not extend the application of the act for four years. If he was not going to renew it for four years he should have given us a better reason for not doing so. No sufficient reason has been given.

The mining communities also asked for an increase in the grant. Here again the minister did not give us any real reason for leaving the grant structure as it is. He merely said that adjustments could be made to the grant and that possibly the mining communities or the mines could obtain an increased grant by applying the formula.

The fact is that in 1958, after the act had been in effect for ten years, the government of the day found it necessary to adjust the grant structure and it was adjusted upward by 25 per cent. If it was necessary after ten years of a fairly slow increase in the cost of living and labour costs to increase the amount of the grant by 25 per cent in order that it would be realistic, then surely in view of the tremendous increases in the cost of living in the last three years these grants should be increased if they are to be effective. It is no use saying that the industry is a declining one and therefore we will only go part way in assisting it. The government must recognize the fact that grants will be needed for some years, and they will have to make them realistic because costs in every other facet of the Canadian economy are increasing.

There is no doubt that in the gold mining industry wages are deplorable. Evidence presented to us in the committee on immigration and other house committees has shown that miners just will not go to the gold mines and stay there. The mining communities have a great deal of trouble keeping people in the mines. When one knows the wage level of the industry one can understand why this is so. Wages in the gold mining industry are not comparable with those paid in other mining industries or other industries generally, and living conditions in some gold mining communities are at a much lower level than in other communities.

For these reasons I believe there should have been an increase in the grants. I have read the brief presented by the mining communities. One such brief dealing with this problem came to hand just this morning. In this brief and others which I have read I have not discovered any great division between the mining communities, the labour unions, the miners themselves and the companies. Four years ago we heard a great deal of talk to the effect that the mining companies were getting these grants and should be able to raise the wages of their workers. In these briefs I have not read any serious suggestion that the mines are gobbling up these grants and are not using them at least in part for the benefit of the communities and the miners. I believe that if the grants were adjusted, the lifetime of these communities would increase, as would the wages of the miners. Also, the economy generally of northern Ontario, northern Quebec and other gold mining areas would improve.

So I do not think that the minister really gave us much of an answer. Perhaps he will explain why the three year term was adopted. As I said, I do not know of any reason why it should have been done and he did not explain it, but certainly the problem is not going to disappear in three years.

Now I should like to deal with the minister's reason for not extending the act to include exploration within 60 miles of existing communities. He simply brushed this off. He said that nothing is likely to be discovered anyway so we will not try. He also said that exploration is not the purpose of this act. Surely we cannot consider one piece of legislation in isolation from anything else that goes on in the community and in the country. Let me put the following question to him: Suppose gold was not found but some other metal, would that be so terrible? I say no. Although the other metal might not come within the ambit of the narrow provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, it would still be of benefit to the community. I do not see how the minister can be serious in saying that gold will not be found so it does not come within the act. I say that the purpose of the act is to maintain the communities until something else can be substituted, and if nothing else is substituted then the purpose of the act is to maintain the communities as long as there is sufficient product to justify the continued grants.

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I am quite sure he is aware of the fact that the mining industry in this country benefits from all kinds of incentives, ones that the Carter report even said were excessive. I am sure he is aware of the fact that the mining industry treasures these incentives and recognizes how much they have contributed to the development of the industry. What the hon. member is asking for is the addition of still greater incentives over those that already exist. We are not speaking here about creating something. There is already a substratum of incentives in existence which the mining industry regards with great satisfaction. The opposite impression should be left in the mind of the public.

Mr. Aiken: It is certainly true that the tax incentives are well appreciated. I merely said, and I repeat, that perhaps within the ambit of this act the additional 60 mile rule might not result in the finding of gold but surely it would give an incentive to go out and do some exploration and perhaps achieve what has so far been lacking, the provision of further development within these areas. After all, as the minister said there were 80,000 people in these communities in 1966. These people have set up their homes and want to stay there. Believe me, if they did not want to stay there they would not have remained, because so many do leave and those who are there want to stay.

I see no reason why the provisions of the act should not be extended so that further exploration can be carried out. I would also ask the minister the following question: If, as the minister said, there is absolutely no possibility of this happening or if it is very unlikely that anything would result from it, why did the gold mining communities feel that there was some possibility? Surely the people living in the area, and there may be others who have greater knowledge in this regard, must have some idea of what can be found there, and even if they have not they must have learned the lesson that you never find anything without looking for it.

The mineral developments that have been carried out in this country have been made possible because of people who went out to explore. Often they did not find what they were looking for but they found something else.

So I see no reason why such an extension of the act could not at least have been given more serious consideration. I admit the minister did consider it, but not deeply enough. In fact I felt that he brushed off the whole problem too lightly and gave us the impression that we were merely going to maintain these communities a while longer before dropping them. We hope that something will perhaps evolve from the I.M.F. discussions, or perhaps the price of gold will go up. Let us say the price of gold does go up. All that will happen then is that the subsidies will go down. In some cases they may not be required but I am sure that in other cases they will be unless the price of gold were increased drastically, which is certainly not very likely.

I should like to go now to another subject, the prospects of improvement in the situation from any other direction. I think the most likely one to which people were looking was the recommendations of the Carter royal commission on taxation. I am quite sure that people were told from time to time that this would be one of the serious problems that the Carter commission would consider, and I know that even before the Carter commission report came out the mining industry and the mining communities made their position on taxation very clear.

In spite of the fact that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act has provided some additional support, mining generally has had incentives in taxation for some years and these have been used to encourage the development of the country. People have been encouraged to go out and take a chance, thereby reaping greater benefits. This has been so with regard to the miner and prospector as well as the person who dabbles in the stock market. The only incentive that the Canadian people have had in the use of many of these private pools of money that are available has been the fact that if you buy a mining stock there is some hope you may make some money which will be tax free. Otherwise people would put their money in nice safe mortgages at 8.25 per cent. I do not think anybody can do very much better than that even on the stock market these days.

Then, of course, there is the prospector, and I do not mean the fellow who goes out with a pick and shovel but the companies which are doing very technical research and surveying to indicate the presence of ores. They were hoping that at least the Carter commission would recommend the continuation of these incentives. I should like to read for the record a very short extract from a publication called "Today In Mining" issued by the Mining Association of Canada in March of 1967. The interesting feature of this extract is that it was taken from a speech made before the Carter report recommendations came out. The speech was made by W. S. Kirkpatrick, the retiring president of the Mining Association of Canada.

> Any significant change in the favourable nature of tax provisions for the mining industry would "create uncertainty and a lack of confidence which would severely curtail the growth of the industry, with consequences harmful to the whole economy."

Mr. Kirkpatrick also stated that tax provisions now applicable have been a major factor in stimulating past growth of mining in Canada. He concluded by saying:

> Any recommendations for radical changes in our federal tax structure, as they affect mining, must be assessed in the light of these facts.

Two weeks after this caveat was entered the Carter report was published. At first, of course, it seemed to create a great deal of confusion, but I think I can fairly say that while all the implications of this gigantic work are not yet clear there is one area in which the proposals are not acceptable in their present form. I refer to their effect on the mining industry. I have not heard anybody say that these recommendations are valid from a national viewpoint or from the strictly narrow viewpoint of the mining industry. From the national point of view they would be disastrous if they had the effect as everyone thinks they will, of cutting back exploration for and the development of new mines and resources and cutting back the communities that rely upon these mines.

In the first place these recommendations, if applied, would reduce developments in Canada. Second, from the very narrow viewpoint they would seriously affect those mining communities now in existence.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is the chief spokesman on this issue for our party, I wonder whether the committee would agree that he should complete his remarks?

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Aiken: I thank the committee, Mr. Chairman, and I will be but a few minutes.

It has been fairly generally accepted that the recommendations of the Carter report will not only be unhelpful to the industry but damaging. I should also like to refer to the September 25, 1967 issue of the Northern Miner which carried a report of a discussion by a panel of mining experts in Toronto. The moderator of the panel was Mr. Wansbrough, vice president of the Mining Association of Canada. According to the report the consensus of the panel was:

> Withdrawal of tax concessions to the mining industry as recommended by Carter will cripple Canada's greatest industry.

The last quotation I should like to put on record is from a document which came into my hands only this morning. It relates to a very substantial submission by the Mining Association of Canada which was prepared in August and has just been circulated today. This submission does not deal with the gold mining industry specifically as a separate item but in the summary, which was dated for release September 12, the following appears:

> Implementation of the Carter commission recommendations concerning the mining industry would have "disastrous" consequences for the Canadian economy.

The conclusion of the association is:

> If the commission's proposals were to be adopted, the present, powerful incentive to exploration for minerals would be eliminated; the level of exploration for new mineral deposits would decline drastically, and property examination work would drop sharply. Existing mines would continue in production until reserves were exhausted; but present reserves would shrink, as those marginal now would not warrant development. Instead of the healthy growth that can be expected if the existing tax treatment is continued, the prospect would be for an accelerating decline in mineral production in Canada as existing reserves are exhausted and not replaced.

I think that sums up fairly well the view of the industry with regard to the general proposals of the Carter commission. I am not going to beat the minister over the head with this because no one is yet responsible for implementing the recommendations, no position having been taken up to now. However, I think in any case it should be very clear that on this point we would feel that these recommendations in the form they have been presented are not acceptable. In fact, I cannot think of any form of recommendation that would reduce the present tax incentives which would be of any assistance. In general the whole way in which mining exploration and development have been treated is not acceptable, and I hope that the government will state its position clearly very soon so there will not be a falling back in the production, exploration and development of Canadian resources.

In view of the fact that there does not seem to be anything emanating from the Carter report on taxation which is going to be helpful to the industry and very little seems to be coming from other sources, we have no objection to the continuation of this act. I think it should be mentioned that a meeting of the International Monetary Fund, which the Minister of Finance is attending, is now being held in Rio de Janeiro. I would assume in light of what we have read in the newspapers that none of us here is competent to judge the effect of the conclusions arrived at at this conference. Nevertheless, it is quite evident that the I.M.F. considers world gold resources to be inadequate and that they are going to create a new kind of money which would be governed by the ability of countries to draw on a fund backed only by the countries contributing to the fund.

There is the feeling that something interesting might come out of this proposal, but it is quite obvious that if that is the case, it will be superimposed upon the present use of gold, and will be devoted almost entirely to international monetary fund transactions. So quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, although this may be used as a bit of an excuse or as a hope that something may eventuate which will relieve the situation, I do not know how it can. There has been no indication that the United States is going to increase the price of gold, and I think the reasons for this are well known. We are therefore caught in this paradoxical situation of a world shortage of gold, of gold being in the ground ready to be mined, but we cannot get a price for the gold which would be an incentive to produce it in sufficient quantity.

It seems to me that since this is a matter of international finance and necessity it is a proper case for the government to act as they have and extend this legislation. I do not see any relief of the situation in sight. I would seriously ask the government to give very real consideration, even before the expiration of the three year period, to enlarging the provisions of the act and to do something more than just extend it from year to year as a temporary measure. I think this problem is a more serious and long-term one than the minister has indicated.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: May I ask the minister a short question? Does he have in mind abandoning gold as a measure of value? I gathered from his remarks that this is what he has in mind.

Mr. Pepin: I thought the speech we have just heard was rather good on that subject.

Mr. Kindt: Would the minister enlighten me on whether he believes the use of gold as a measure of the value of other commodities is likely to continue? Until he has clarified that point it will be hard to resolve the issue. He seemed to indicate in his speech that it had been almost abandoned in the international field.

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member's colleague has just indicated that the best we can hope for is that gold will remain as a basis upon which other form of convertibility will be added. I am not particularly encouraged by that assessment of the future of the gold industry made as I have mentioned, by the hon. member's colleague.

Incidentally I was surprised that after telling us there does not appear to be much future for the gold industry the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka should be willing to subsidize it at a still higher level. I am surprised by the lack of logic in linking his assessment of the situation with the conclusion he reached. I do not wish to be unfair, however, because I admit that other considerations, such as the welfare of the communities themselves, were in his mind. Nevertheless, I have read recent articles by the hon. member to the effect that the time has come for us in this country to return to the logic of Conservative economics and I admit I was somewhat astonished to hear him say the time had come to raise subsidies, just as though he had suddenly become an adherent of the New Democratic party.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In view of the lateness of the hour I wonder if we could now call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, we have before us legislation to extend the provisions of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for another three years. The minister has made it very clear that there are to be no other alterations in this legislation involving this field. This morning he used a word, possibly inadvertently, that could well apply to this legislation when he stated that its purpose was to retard the closing of the mines, or something to that effect. I think the word "retardation" is very appropriate to this legislation which has been on the statute books for some 19 years. It is retarding legislation, and according to the minister its purpose is to retard the inevitable.

• (2:40 p.m.)

I believe the original purpose and intent of the act with which we are dealing today was to foster and maintain the gold mining communities. As we look over the record of what has transpired in the 19 years since this legislation was first enacted we can see what a complete and shoddy failure the act has been in light of the purposes for which it was originally intended. This morning the minister gave a very good outline of the history of the gold mining industry since the act first came into being. It is a history of bankruptcy of ideas and the failure of the policies of the governments of this country over the past 19 years with regard to the gold mining industry. This is what it has been and this is all that it has been—a history of bankruptcy and failure.

The act has not done the job it was originally intended to do. It has been extended from year to year. The very name of the bill should make us realize what a complete failure it has been. Twenty years later it is still called the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. How long does an emergency exist and when do we stop trying to fool ourselves?

The minister mentioned some of the statistics contained in the report of the administration of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966. We see, for example, that in the first year subsidies were paid, 1948, there were some 117 mines which received assistance from the federal government and in the next year, 1949, there were 122. In 1949, when the highest number of mines was being assisted by the federal government, they received some $12,571,456.90 in assistance from the Canadian taxpayers. By 1965 this number had dropped to 41 but they still received approximately the same amount, $12,053,385. What this really means is that while the contribution by the Canadian taxpayers to this industry has remained practically constant throughout these 19 years, the number of mines participating in the plan has dropped from 122 to 41, which leads us to wonder what assistance this has been to the gold mining communities since this has been the purpose of the act since it was passed in 1948.

I should like to be even more specific by illustrating a situation with which I am very familiar. The Hollinger mine in Timmins has been the biggest gold producer in the Timmins area and in fact has been the second largest gold producer in the world over the past quarter of a century at least. Since 1948 the Hollinger mine has received in subsidies from the Canadian taxpayers some $19,771,-145.93, according to the information in the blue book we have here. This includes their three properties, the Hollinger mine at Timmins, the Ross mine at Holtyre and the Young-Davis mine at Matachewan which has been closed down for some years.

We have been notified that within the next year or possibly 18 months the Hollinger mine will be closed down. Therefore we have a situation about which I am well aware. Miners who have worked in the Hollinger mine, some of them for 40 or 45 years, are being thrown out without a pension of any kind. They are being tossed out like an old pair of shoes that one tosses in the garbage can, in spite of the fact that the Canadian taxpayer over the past 18 years has paid $19,771,145.93 to this one company.

How effective has this act been? What have we accomplished? I wonder just how much thought parliament, this government, the government which preceded it and the previous Liberal government have given to the administration of the act, because some very strange things come to the surface if one studies it at all. For example, most of us are quite aware that in 1953 there was a great strike in the gold mines. All the mines in the Timmins area were out of operation for periods varying between five months and seven months. I do not remember the exact date but I believe the Hollinger mine was out of operation for about six months that year.

If we look at this book, keeping in mind that the report is really for the previous year's operations we find that the year before this strike and the year after it the taxpayers of Canada paid a subsidy to this company of $665,908.59 just in respect of the Timmins operation alone but that for the year 1953 when the mine was closed down for six months, when the miners did not draw wages and the community did not receive the benefit of their wages for six months, the taxpayers paid the Hollinger mine $1,012,-139.49. Without making a deep study one has to assume that it was a very profitable venture for the Hollinger mine to allow those men to be out on strike for six months because its subsidy from the Canadian taxpayers doubled for that year.

This is just an illustration of why I am trying to make the point that the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act has never been a solution to the problems of the gold mining industry. Apparently it never was intended to be that but rather a gesture to try to fool the public. By dipping into the taxpayers' pockets for the last 20 years governments have been able to maintain this gesture which has solved nothing. The minister said today, supported by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, that there is no future for the gold mining industry. The legislation is just a palliative so that the old pensioner who we know will die within a few years will have a little pittance to make things easier for him until he gasps his last breath.

The legislation the minister is presenting today is for the purpose of extending the act for three years. He gives no particular reason for setting that period. If we look at the history we find that over the past 18 years the mines have closed at the rate of five a year. All he had to do to look after the situation was to extend the act for 18 years, because there will be no communities left if we continue the same policy that has been followed in the past. The minister and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka have both subscribed today to the idea, which unfortunately has been promoted and sponsored by the Minister of Finance, that gold is of no more good to the world and that we should get rid of it as quickly, decently and quietly as we can. I do not agree with that theory, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this moment to make a clarification. I am sure if the hon. member had listened carefully to my speech he would not have made that assumption.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I made the wrong assumption but I followed the hon. member's speech very carefully because I wanted to find out what the Conservative party policy was as expounded by their leading spokesmen in this field. Perhaps I was confused, but Hansard will speak for itself and we will have a look at it tomorrow to find out, if indeed we can, just what their policy is.

I know that the Minister of Finance, apparently with the support of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, believes that the sooner we get rid of gold as the means of international exchange the better off we will be. I understand that the Minister of Finance at the present time is attending a meeting of the International Monetary Fund, and if we can believe the newspaper reports the major objective of that meeting is to find some substitute for gold to be used as the medium of international exchange.

Let me remind the minister that if we make a study of history we will find that for 5,000 years people have been looking for a substitute for gold but for 5,000 years have been unsuccessful in finding one with any lasting value. I predict without one shred of hesitation that their efforts will be as unsuccessful this time as they have been for the past 5,000 years.

Gold is something we have in Canada which very few countries in the world have today and it is something that is sought for by every country in the world. It is something that is always going to have a sales value because it is one commodity that over the centuries has been accorded the complete trust and confidence of nations all over the world. By pursuing such a policy as the government are pursuing at the present time they are, in my opinion, following a course which is complete idiocy.

The minister pointed out in his speech that there have been no new discoveries of gold. This is not really true. There are new discoveries, some of which I know of myself. There have been new discoveries of gold but they will not be promoted or exploited at this time as long as we have a fixed price that bears no sensible relationship to the value of money today. They will not be exploited or developed as long as the government continues the policy announced by the Minister of Finance of attempting to replace gold with some kind of funny money.

We have noticed over the past 20 years that the number of gold mines in this country has decreased from some 250 to about 30. As I mentioned earlier, at the rate they are being operated they may last for another five to ten years and that will be the end of gold mining until such time as world events catch up to us. But then, after great stress and strain and possibly another depression like we had in the 1930's, gold will come back into its own and we will start over again. Apparently it is impossible for this government to learn from history and the mistakes of the past.

[Mr. Martin (Timmins).]

There are a great many things I should like to say about gold, but the minister indicated very clearly that he is not interested in gold. The debate today is confined to a three year extension of a policy that certainly everyone must recognize is nothing but a dismal and utter failure. I think any remarks I might have to make about gold, its price and place in the world markets would be better reserved until the Minister of Finance returns from the I.M.F. meeting. At that time we can perhaps return to this problem with a minister who will accept some responsibility in this field.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, this morning I listened very carefully to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as he was explaining the urgency for parliament to approve resolution 34 which reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to extend its application to the years 1968, 1969 and 1970.

The purpose of this resolution is to enable the government to assist gold mines for the next three years, or from December 1967 to December 1970.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister has stressed the importance, for the government, of providing assistance to northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario with respect to gold mining. It is common knowledge that these Canadian areas had gold mining developments which, unfortunately, had to be closed down. Recently, I read in the August 1967 issue of a Montreal periodical, La Prospérité, vol. V, no. 1, a greatly significant article.

The mining industry has been for the last 30 years the backbone of the economy in this area. Apart from the Mattagami and Chibougamau developments, located 185 and 330 miles respectively from Rouyn, there is a drastic curtailing of mining production.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The figures mentioned and quoted by the minister in his explanations prove undoubtedly that there is a substantial drop in the mining production in that area.

Thus, in the area of Val d'Or, several gold mines, namely East Sullivan and Sullivan Consolidated, have almost ceased all production. The Malartic mines have slowed down production.

There also mines have been closed.

In Rouyn-Noranda, the problem is just as acute. Over the years, Noranda has become the reduction centre of copper concentrates of northwestern Quebec and northern Ontario. Now, among the twenty copper producers sending their copper concentrates to Noranda to be reduced, several will stop their shipments shortly, including the Beauchemin family mines. In a couple of years, if new ore deposits are not found, the Quemont Mining employing more than 500 persons will have to close.

It is obvious that Quemont will close its doors; it has already said so to its employees.

Normetal Mining—

—north of La Sarre—

—and Lake Dufault Mines are experiencing serious difficulties. At Noranda Mines, which has 1,700 employees, the ore reserves are diminishing rapidly from year to year. Some fear that this company will have to lay off a lot of men in the next five years or so. The prospects are therefore far from bright.

Besides the minister admitted it this morning. The prospects are not bright as far as the prosperity and labour market are concerned in that region because with the exception of the mines, there is no secondary industry there. A few years ago we should have had, for instance, the zinc refinery which was set up in the Valleyfield area instead to process the ores coming from Noranda or northwestern Quebec.

This zinc refinery employing possibly more than a thousand men should have been established in the northwest—this industry belongs to our area—but no government, federal or provincial, has intervened nor asked the Noranda Mines Co. to set up this secondary industry in the area where the ore is mined. No! The plant was allowed to go to Valleyfield, where there is neither copper nor zinc.

There is neither zinc nor copper in Montreal and the suburbs, on St. Catherine Street, but that is the spot decided upon to set up a secondary industry.

Thus, the prospects are not very gay and, within five years, we will have large scale lay-offs at the Noranda Mines whose resources are not eternal.

Mr. Chairman, I say we must support this resolution with all our might to maintain the assistance to the gold mines and I say that, in the circumstances, we should improve such assistance in view of the fact that there are no other industries in our area to give work to our manpower which is being displaced or laid off every day.

We have tremendous potential. For instance, it is well known that between La Sarre, Rouyn-Noranda, Amos or Val d'Or, towards James Bay, there are untold riches, invaluable wealth, but no one in the past 15 or 20 years has thought of a way to ensure their development.

We have heard about an engineer called Mr. Kierans from Sudbury who, after having studied the situation, brought forward a program to develop the wealth of James bay, by using, for instance, the Harricana, the Rupert and another river—three rivers in any case —to divert the waters of James bay to the south as far as the great lakes. This Kierans project was found somewhat unrealistic when it was brought forward.

Today, we have people, mostly from the provincial government, exploring the James bay area. Last year, businessmen, the boards of trade, people from every social level, in the area of La Sarre, Amos, Val d'Or, Rouyn-Noranda and Malartic got together to develop a road from La Sarre to James bay. Last winter, I believe, they built a stretch of road of about 40 to 50 miles. Those people performed that work without the help of any government, either provincial or federal, and today, it is finally being realized that it might be important to extend explorations a little further in that northern region.

Mr. Chairman, this is only one field. That part of the country is exceedingly rich in forest resources. Water resources are almost fantastic, if only we tried to develop them to compensate for the gradual disappearance of mines in that area. That is no doubt what prompted the editor of La Prospérité to write in the August 1967 issue, and I quote:

Prospects are therefore far from heartening as far as the prosperity in that area and the labour market are concerned. More than 3,000 jobs are involved. It is time to plan, consider and prepare projects—

I think that the studies have been lenghty enough and that it is time for action, for positive measures, for realizations. The article reads further:

—even to consider vocational training classes—

They are already somewhat in progress, but they are just starting.

—for those displaced miners.

In a few years, it would be too late to consider the solutions to implement. While there is still time, let us see big and realistically.

Mr. Chairman, I said earlier that we have considerable forest resources.

The minister complained, this morning about the fact that the federal government has to pay $15 million a year to keep the men at work in the gold mines. Moreover, the minister even maintained that the federal government, through its subsidies, contributed approximately $1,500 for each miner working in the subsidized gold mines.

I do not doubt the figures quoted by the minister. It might be true that the subsidies amount to a contribution of $1,500 per gold miner, but subsidies have already been extended to other segments of the Canadian economy. We grant subsidies to the western wheat producers in order to increase the farmers' income. This is not surprising for the minister.

• (3:10 p.m.)

The fact that we export wheat to Russia, China and various other communist countries can give the government a reason for granting huge wheat subsidies, because wheat can be exported.

Mr. Chairman, the minister knows full well that all the gold produced in Canada is easily exported. The United States would buy all the gold we produce. If we doubled our production within a year, the United States would buy it all. The minister knows that.

This morning, the minister made a comparison with the coal mines in the maritimes. I could not help arriving at the conclusion that the comparison does not apply. Coal has a monetary value as such, while gold is accepted as the basis for international exchange. Coal is not and never will be. There is a difference. Therefore, a parallel between the two, between the coal mines to which we grant subsidies in the maritimes or in Alberta, it matters little, and the gold mines in northwestern Quebec or anywhere in Canada, is simply not logical to my mind. We are sure that we can export the gold we produce.

Now, the minister tells us: well, in 1934 or 1935, the price was set at $35 per ounce. That is not enough. It is obvious that it is not enough. Indeed, we know it is not. In 1958 I believe—if I remember well—the United States themselves decided to allow a subsidy of $44 per ounce in addition to the price of $35 set by agreement. The total price for one ounce of gold, as produced in the United States, is thus $79.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) where he gets those statistics; I have just been talking to Washington and I am told that there are no subsidies whatsoever for gold-production in the United States and that the $44 or $45 subsidy mentioned by the hon. member is just the amount as claimed by gold producers, but it never became part of the American policy.

Mr. Caouette: Then, somebody is lying, Mr. Chairman, and I do not think that it is I. I have in my hands a Toronto newspaper dated July 23, 1966 which says:

Marked rise of gold mine securities following Washington's decision to increase its subsidies to gold producers. Gold mines reached a new peak—

—that is on the stock exchange—

—while the banks fell off yesterday on the Toronto stock exchange at closing time.

Earlier, I advised the minister to call the Toronto stock exchange so as to be sure not to miss the mark.

The rise of the gold mines stocks is the result of the approval by the internal committee of the United States house of representatives of a bill providing an increase in subsidies to gold mines. The bill, passed yesterday, states that the mines in operation will receive subsidies equal to six per cent of the value of the gold produced during the years elapsed since 1939. The operators of inactive mines will receive subsidies equal to $44 per ounce, above the fixed price of $35 per ounce fixed in 1939.

This was in 1935.

Among the banks, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Toronto-Dominion Bank and the Royal Bank lost ½ point respectively—as a result of the decision taken by the United States house of representatives to approve that legislation to grant an increase in subsidies to gold mines.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that, according to the article, it is a bill of the house of representatives. It is quite possible that it has never come in to force. This is what I am told in Washington.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, is it the American congress which informed the minister this morning or at noon about subsidies. Are subsidies paid to gold mines in the United States? How are they called? Does the minister know?

Mr. Pepin: I have been assured that no subsidy is paid to gold mining in the United States.

Mr. Caouette: Is the minister aware of the fact that gold mines could not operate at $35 per ounce in the United States, just like in Canada?

Now, how can the mines maintain their operations when the wages paid there are twice as much as the wages paid to our gold miners in Canada?

Mr. Pepin: I think it is possible that the ore is richer in the United States than in Canada, or that the operations are more efficient down there.

Mr. Caouette: At any rate, Mr. Chairman, one thing is sure. Gold mining operations are more profitable to American than to Canadian companies. The minister, as well as ourselves, received last November the brief of the Regional Economic Council for Northwestern Quebec, the brief of the cities of Val d'Or-Bourlamaque-Sullivan and Malartic, mentioning that even the operators of inactive mines will be paid subsidies of $44 per ounce over the fixed price of $35, but the Regional Economic Council calls the government's attention to this fact:

> However, we deem advisable to emphasize certain aspects which have been developed more particularly in various areas of northwestern Quebec, but which will also effect more or less seriously all the areas concerned in both Quebec and Ontario, according to the situation prevailing in the various communities:
> 1. A general closing down of gold mines could create disastrous social and economic problems leading to the complete bankruptcy of certain centres and their population.

The minister took that into consideration. He stated, this morning, that it was especially because of the social and economic problems that the government is willing to go on subsidizing the gold mines.

The minister also told us that this does not mean that he wants the gold mines to continue their operations, but merely that they are to be allowed to die out gradually. We continue to subsidize them so as not to upset too much the sociological conditions in those areas and to enable the mines to close down gradually.

• (3:20 p.m.)

However, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that even if we had other types of secondary industries, the government would not like to see all the gold mines in our region close down. It is one of the most important gold producing regions in Canada.

If all those mines were to cease production tomorrow, if no gold were mined in Canada at all, the minister would perhaps be among the first to complain because we use this gold to negotiate with many countries in the world through the United States which, for their part, accept gold as a means of exchange, in return for commodities which we need and to balance our commercial deficits with them or with other nations.

However, we know that there are other solutions to the problem. We know that these gold mines eventually—

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired. Does the hon. member wish to continue? Does the committee give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I thank the committee, Mr. Chairman, for giving me, for another few minutes, the opportunity to continue my remarks about this very important resolution, a resolution, moreover, which especially concerns the area I represent here. Since we, in northwestern Quebec happen to be right in the heart of the problem, I should like to go on quoting the brief which the Regional Economic Council of Northwestern Quebec submitted last November—that is about a year ago—to the hon. minister, to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). Here is what the Council said, with the support of the cities or the municipalities concerned:

> The need for the workers in the gold mining industry to receive salaries on a par with those paid workers employed in the extraction of base metals.

The hon. minister is certainly aware that in the Val d'Or and Malartic areas, the difference in salaries is intolerable.

As a matter of fact, a worker in a certain mine will perhaps earn as much as $1 an hour less than a miner employed at the Noranda mine or in one of the mines of northeastern Ontario. Yet, living conditions are the same, the cost of living is exactly the same at Val d'Or and Malartic as in Rouyn, and if the miner who has a family to support earns $1 an hour less than the one who works at the Noranda Mine, or at the Quemont mine or at the Lac Dufault mine, at that time, Mr. Chairman, there is an unaccountable gap, because mines cannot pay more, since they do not have the means to do it. That is why towns like Bourlamaque, Val d'Or, Malartic, Rouyn-Noranda, as well as the municipal councils and the Regional Economic Council are asking the federal government and the minister involved to increase the aid to the industry, not to allow the companies to make more profits, but to enable them to pay better wages to their employees so that they may reach at least, the average salary level paid in the area.

The Regional Economic Council is perfectly right in that respect when it says, and I quote:

> The desirability of amending the exploration program in northern Canada, in order to enable the companies operating in the municipalities concerned with the gold mining problem to find alternative solutions for those that will have to close down eventually.

But one way to stop the closing down of those mines is to increase financial assistance; another way is to promote exploration and discovery of new mineral deposits. There is a tremendous potential for discovery of hundreds of new mines in the area extending north to James bay. What potential indeed! Another alternative: the local use and processing of our forest products. If the government is reluctant to pay $15 million in subsidies to our gold mines, that $15 million should be spent to establish secondary industries in our area and the government should insure that our displaced or laid off gold miners find new jobs in new plywood factories, for instance.

We have a group of businessmen who are now trying to start production of plywood in the Val d'Or area. It is very difficult to catch the ear of the Industrial Development Bank; it takes six months to get an answer to an application. It takes sometimes a year and a half to two years before getting results, when it is not a flat "No" and we are then told: Try to arrange your balance sheet otherwise; however, it would be a viable industry, an important secondary industry which would transform on the spot the product of our forests.

Mr. Chairman, if this subsidy of $15 million paid to gold mines were increased to help the establishment or the creation of secondary industries in our own country, it seems to me that the operation would be much easier and a great deal less painful than it is now. In fact, the minister knows very well that even with his new legislation to extend the payment of subsidies for a period of three years, he still will not be able to solve the problem. Within three years, the way things are going, most mines in Malartic-Val d'Or will be closed.

[Translation]

Our workers, our miners who have been living in the area for 25, 30 years will have to leave and go either to northern Manitoba, or to other sections of the country and everything will be lost in the cities where a great deal of money has been spent by the people, the leaders of our region, because of lack of planning.

I warn the minister about that situation, but he is well aware of it. When he says that the federal government is not the only one to blame, I agree with him. The Quebec government should also do something in that field. If the Quebec government insists on taking charge of everything in the province, it should start by assuming its responsibility with regard to the miners who are being displaced or are losing their jobs because the gold mines are closing their doors.

It is clear that our region which has been dependent on those mines for some thirty years cannot expect to continue to live off those mines to the end of time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out to the minister that even if it is true that Quebec must take its responsibility, even if it is true that Quebec does not co-operate with Ottawa and turns a deaf ear, whatever political party is in power as the minister said, he should just the same take the lead in suggesting, a more adequate remedial measure than subsidies, because it is the federal government that pays the subsidies.

The people of our area would be grateful and would understand the importance of establishing secondary industries as an alternative to mines which are closed or gold mines with low grade ores which are not profitable.

Then, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will have recognized that there is in north western Quebec, an enormous quantity of potential energy ready to develop, and that with good will and financial assistance, of course, it will be easy to correct the alarming situation which is now prevailing in our area.

[English]

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I shall be only a few minutes because I am one of those who believe that the renewing of the assistance program is very essential to the gold mining industry, and we in this group give our support to this resolution. However, there are some points I should like to cover in regard to the matter which have to do mostly with the cold, hard facts put before us by the minister in connection with the phasing out of the gold industry in Canada, particularly those mines that do not have the type of ore to work which will make their operations profitable under today's standards.

The amount of money being spent in this regard can, I think, be considered to be negligible in light of the sum of money spent, for instance, on national defence. We consider that national defence is required and that we need to spend money on the armed forces. However, I think it is equally true that it is important that we assist the gold mining industry.

As most hon. members know, the Cariboo is synonymous with the gold mining industry. For many years a gold mine was in operation at Wells. It is one of the gold mines to which the minister referred when he said that certain mines had gone out of business. It is heartening to note that the mining operation at Wingdam, a very short distance from Wells, is now being revived, and it seems that we are going to see considerable activity in placer mining in this area.

Another matter that the minister stressed was that the people now employed in these various communities will readily be taken care of by the department of manpower. I should like to draw to the attention of the minister, who can perhaps draw it to the attention of his colleague, that other people in these areas are affected by shutdowns in addition to those who are on the payroll of the operation in question. I refer to those who supply services that are required, such as operators of grocery stores, meat shops, garages and so forth.

When the minister of manpower makes provision to assist individuals in the exodus which occurs when a plant is shut down, I would point out to the minister that people in small businesses who over the years have just been making a bare living servicing these communities are left high and dry. No provision is made to give them assistance to ease the plight in which they find themselves. It is heartening to note that when this occurred in the town of Wells the people there were determined to find ways and means of retaining their community life, and I think this is typical of other communities. They have a love for their own community. They have helped to build it and they do not want to pick up and leave. I do not know what can be done to assist people who find themselves left high and dry. All their customers pretty well disappear when the plant closes down and the workers are cut from the payroll and leave. There are no customers at all to buy from their stores and the situation becomes very serious for the owners.

It is not only a question of the participation of the federal government in this regard but also one of very close co-operation between the federal government and the provincial government concerned. Provincial governments certainly have a very large responsibility in these matters in addition to the federal government, perhaps much more so than the federal government when the chips are really down. It seems to me there is room here for very close liaison and for a co-operative effort between the provincial and federal authorities so as to make certain that all of the people affected, not just those on the payroll, receive some consideration, and that the means is provided to re-establish themselves in one way or another.

• (3:30 p.m.)

That is all I want to say today. I could go into great length about the history of the Cariboo country but I will merely suggest to hon. members that if they wish to find some really interesting reading they should go to the library and take out some well written books on the subject of gold mining in the Cariboo. They will not be disappointed.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Choquette: Is he still a member?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I will be grateful if you will tell the hon. member for Lotbinière to shut up and stop his "ki-yi-ing". He seldom adds a useful word to the discussions in the house.

Mr. Choquette: The hon. member has been away for one year and it is a shame to see him back.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Lotbinière may be interested to learn that my riding, unlike his, contains 207,000 square miles and it takes me five weeks to get around to each community once.

Mr. Choquette: The population is so concentrated that there is no need for you to stay away for one year.

Mr. Nielsen: I wish the hon. member for Lotbinière would concentrate on removing himself behind the curtain for a few minutes.

Mr. Choquette: No, I shall listen to you. I am watching you.

The Chairman: Order. This might be an appropriate time to allow the hon. member for Yukon to carry on with his remarks on this resolution.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rose to direct my remarks to the resolution before us but I am sure you would not expect me to permit the inane remarks of the hon. member for Lotbinière to pass without challenge. They are typical of the tactics of hon. members opposite.

Mr. Woolliams: Constituency of Windsor Castle.

Mr. Nielsen: The gold mining industry of Canada finds itself in a paradoxical position. On the one hand the world is short of gold and on the other the gold which lies in our mines in Canada is going to waste while the government in Ottawa does not appear to be doing much about it.

I was astonished by the minister's complete lack of interest in the whole subject. He rose in his place and mechanically presented a proposition to extend the provisions of the act for another three years. He stumbled over a few statistics and then gave the industry the kiss of death by saying that the only reason for the extension of the legislation was to allow gold mining to die gracefully.

I come from a riding which has 90 per cent of the placer gold producers in Canada. The placer gold production of Canada may be relatively small. During his statement the minister repeatedly made the point that the cost of the administration of this act was $231 million. I would point out that production in the Yukon in the first few years at the turn of the century more than equalled the cost of the administration of the act since its inception. The minister has kindly sent me the statistics for which I asked in respect of placer mining. In 1948, of 30 such mines 20 were in the Yukon; in 1950, of the 24 that were operating in Canada 19 were in the Yukon; in 1955, of the 22 operating mines 17 were in the Yukon; in 1960, of the total of 26, 20 were in the Yukon. The total the minister has supplied for 1965 is 22 with no figure given for the number of operators in the Yukon, but I dare say it remains at 19 or 20.

If he looks at the annual report for the year ended March 31, 1966 the minister will find that, throughout all those years, of the total applications for assistance under the act about one third in number came from people who conduct placer mining operations in the Yukon. Indeed, the largest placer mining operation which existed in Canada until 1966 was that of the Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation.

This brings me to a point which the minister made. He made special reference to manpower and the high cost of labour. This is indeed a problem not only in the gold mining industry but throughout the mining industry generally. Rather than offer the incentives which are offered with regard to manpower mobility the minister might be well advised to try to convince his colleagues that there is a desparate need for the training of miners in this country. United Keno Hill Mines Limited in the Yukon has drastically curtailed its operation, not because the company was running out of good ground but because it could not meet the labour requirements of the operation, partly on account of the high cost and partly—and this is the point I am now making—because of the unavailability of skilled miners. This is a problem which confronts the whole of the industry.

The solution proposed by the minister is to close down the mines, extend the period of assistance for another three years and perhaps for a further three years, and then let the industry die a graceful death. He seemed to be entirely disinterested in the fiscal ramifications involved. I tried to get the minister to say whether or not he was in favour of increasing the price of gold. He ducked that question. In fact, he went on record as saying, not once but twice, that the gold mining operators who had made representations to the government agreed with him that there was no hope for an increase in the price of gold.

This left me with the impression that no representations for an increase in the price of gold had been made to him. However, in the brief submitted by the gold mining communities comprising some 35 communities in Canada, supported by the regional economic council of northwest Quebec, supported by the association of mining municipalities of northern Ontario and by the northwestern Ontario development council and co-ordinated by the department of industry for the town of Timmins, recommendations in this regard come through loud and clear. They have said on page 4 of their submission, and I think it is worthwhile to put it on the record, that they want a revaluation of the world's currencies in terms of gold under the terms of the I.M.F. agreement. They want a gold price of $70 to $100 per ounce, and say this would provide a valuable interim measure and long-term support to world currency reform.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pepin: If the hon. member would not mind a brief interruption I wish to say I do not disagree with that. That was in the representations we received. What I said this morning was simply that it would not be practical at this stage to take into account a rise in the price of gold in determining the policy that we are considering here. That is all I said, and if I may be allowed to quote from the memorandum from the gold mining industry I would point out that it also says:

> The fixed price of gold, as determined by the United States government and supported by the International Monetary Fund, of which Canada is a member, is a world wide problem which continues to occupy the attention of economists.
> In spite of the arguments which can be adduced for expanding the role of gold for international monetary purposes by a revaluation of all currencies in terms of gold, it appears to us that such a development cannot be counted on for any aid to the industry in the immediate future.

Mr. Nielsen: I was coming to that if the minister had been patient. I want to be fair to him. I think it is very relevant to the resolution under discussion and to our determination of whether we are going to continue to extend what has been described by my hon. friend from Timmins as emergency legislation since 1948. I believe that the minister as the minister representing the mining industry, and the gold mining industry in particular, should be able to say whether he is in favour of a rise in the price of gold. He should be able to tell hon. members whether the Minister of Finance has gone down to Rio with a view to trying to convince those with whom he will be holding discussions that there should be an increase in the price of gold. Yet the minister has been unable to do this. It struck me that he showed a remarkable lack of interest in the whole matter of the fiscal ramifications.

The minister said that exploration is not the purpose of the act. While he is quite correct in saying that exploration costs, as we all know, have no direct connection with the mining operations, they are calculated among other factors in determining the assistance that is rendered to applicants under the act. In actual fact the minister is out in left field when he says exploration is not the purpose of the act or that the act does not take into account exploration beyond the operations of any particular producer. I would like to draw to his attention that during the many years that Yukon Consolidated Gold Corporation was drawing assistance under the act it was operating in an area which we locally call the Loop, 80 miles of creek, and it was constantly exploring up the creeks and down the creeks for new gold bearing gravels and earths. If this assistance had not been available to the corporation for this purpose it likely would have packed up operations a good many years before it did.

That brings me to the next point, the matter of keeping gold mining communities viable. The minister said that his forebears went to the Yukon in the early days and settled in the Dawson City area. He himself recently visited Dawson City. It must have struck him, as it does thousands who come from the outside, that there once stood the fourth largest municipality in Canada, now virtually a lost community because of the gradual decline of the mineral industry in the area. Recently there have been some signs of encouragement with the finding of asbestos 40 miles away, but that is quite a distance from the municipality. While we can mobilize relocation of manpower in areas like Cape Breton when an economic problem occurs that requires the closing of a coal mine, it is pretty difficult to mobilize the relocation of a whole municipality. This is what the government is confronted with in connection with places like Dawson City. When gold mining does move out of that area, although certainly it has by no means left yet because we still have a number of small placer operations supporting this and other communities in the Yukon, then the situation will reach the stage where other devices will have to be found to maintain the municipality.

Unlike the previous government, certain of whose tourist investments in that area were scoffed at and scorned by hon. members opposite when they sat on this side of the chamber, this government is displaying remarkably little interest in that kind of direction to the type of community that suffers as the result of the falling off of the mineral industry, in this case the gold mining industry. The minister's colleague, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, will tell him that the whole northern area of Canada is a mecca for tourists from all over North America. Therein lies a treasure house for the federal government in tourist dollars if it would but realize it.

With respect to exploration I would also point out there is seldom a prospector who does not go out into the bush with a gold pan in his pack. Surely it cannot be against the interests of this country to find more gold mines. If that be the case then I must be more lacking than I thought I was in my appreciation of the value of gold and of the economic need of this country to have it. To be confronted on top of all these problems facing the gold mining industry with recommendations that have the possibility of acceptance, such as those contained in the Carter report is just about putting the last nail in the lid of the coffin of the mining industry as a whole and particularly the gold mining industry.

The minister made certain remarks about a lack of new discoveries. The hon. member for Timmins brought him up short on that and, incidentally, also criticized the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka for not offering policies although he himself did not make one single constructive suggestion to meet the problems. Discovery Mines in the Yukon is one such new find which produced gold for a few months and then had to close down because of problems of high cost.

The whole mining industry in the Yukon, let alone the gold mining industry, operates in a very high cost area. The same situation prevails in the Northwest Territories. There the mining industry also has its problems. Not only mines but individuals are met with almost prohibitive costs in almost every sector of consumer demand and the consumer dollar.

The other day we had a debate on housing. Every house built in the Yukon for miners costs 30 per cent to 40 per cent more than a similar house in Calgary, Edmonton, Ottawa or Toronto. This is the kind of factor that should be taken into consideration when applying legislation of this nature to areas of this kind.

I say to the minister that he should take an adamant stand with his cabinet colleages and insist that the Carter report recommendation that the three year tax exemption period on new mines be abolished be flatly rejected. If he does so he will find 100 per cent support from the mining industry as a whole. I also suggest to him that he should impress upon his colleagues the need for flatly rejecting the Carter report recommendation with respect to depreciation and capital cost allowances. He will also receive 100 per cent support for that stand from the mining industry.

This industry, I am sure has made representations to the minister. I do not think the minister can gainsay me when I say there is not one single responsible organization connected with the mining industry which has not condemned those two recommendations of the Carter report. I believe I am perhaps in a little more unique position in this debate than any other member even the hon. member for the Northwest Territories who has similar problems in his riding. As the minister has said, there are certain responsibilities the provinces have, but he went on to say that the federal government behaves like a provincial authority in the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Pepin: I did not say "behaves", I said had the same powers.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe the word the minister used was "behave". Perhaps he did not, but that is my recollection. However, that is how they behave; let us call a spade a spade. Not only in respect of this kind of legislation but in respect of any other prerogatives of the federal government, it is my suggestion that they should desist, finish and conclude their habit of behaving like a provincial authority. The sooner the federal government transmits responsibility to the responsible people who live in these areas, the more co-operation and efficiency it will receive in respect of the development of these areas.

The minister also, I am sure, has received many representations from labour. I touched on housing a moment ago. He must remember the briefs which have been submitted to our government by the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, now merged with the steel workers. He must have received their representations in connection with this, as well as the mining industry generally.

The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act cannot be considered in a vacuum. There are various reasons for the assistance becoming necessary and for the industry becoming sick in the north. The high cost of labour is perhaps the single most important factor affecting costs. If the minister accepts the proposition that one cannot consider the economic aspect in a vacuum, then he must look into other areas such as housing, unemployment insurance, and all the other related labour problems that have the result of increasing the cost of these operations, particularly in the north.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but the time allotted to him has now terminated.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent of the house to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank members of the committee for their indulgence. Until the minister convinces his colleagues, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Public Works, and all the other federal authorities of whom there are legions, who are poking their noses into the various aspects of the economic fibre of the north, that measures must be taken to reduce the cost of transportation, housing, communication, and all the other myriads of areas where the federal government insists upon jurisdiction, he will have to be continually involved with legislation of this kind. If he expects the mining industry to be a viable self-supporting industry then, in my humble opinion, there must be a reduction of the costs which make this kind of legislation necessary and an endorsement of the kind of recommendation the gold mining communities presented to him in 1966 with regard to the price of gold. Therein, it seems to me, lies the first step in the proper direction toward curing the high cost of living, the high taxes, and the high cost of production in the gold mines generally.

It is only by taking this kind of position, I suggest, that the minister can come anywhere close to solving the problem. It is not one of allowing the industry to die. That is the impression we all received from the minister's remarks. The industry, far from being supported and far from being looked at as an industry which must be arrested in its downward trend, should be looked at as an industry which should attract attention with the ultimate objective of making it a viable, healthy, self-supporting industry. This cannot be done by the sort of negative approach the minister seems to be taking.

Mr. Orange: Mr. Chairman, earlier today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made official his announcement that there would be a three year extension of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act which, in effect, will permit the gold mining companies and communities to exist for another three years. As we heard earlier, in the past year we have had representations from the gold mining communities, The Mining Association of Canada, the unions and others, asking the minister to make a statement which would set at ease those who are involved in the program in these various areas.

I expect that today's announcement, which has been public knowledge for a few days, will have removed some anxiety from the minds of the people in the groups concerned. It is a long awaited statement and one which possibly treats the top of the problem but not necessarily the root of it. We have heard the various members who have spoken here today mention the problems facing the gold mining industry in Canada. We have heard that it is the only commodity in this country in respect of which prices have been fixed since 1935. It would be redundant for me to talk about the problem producing a product on which the price is fixed and the costs are moving up all the time.

I should like to think for a moment that possibly part of the history of our Canada, our west and our north is based on gold. We heard the hon. member for the Cariboo talk about the exciting days when gold was discovered in the Cariboo. We have heard the hon. member for the Yukon talk about the Klondike. When I was a youngster acting as a caddy carrying golf clubs around a gold golf course, I recall carrying the golf bag of a famous Klondiker, Mike Mahoney, the man whom they say carried a piano over the Chilkoot Pass.

Mike was a fantastic person. He started mining with real interest in the Klondike. I think it is an historical fact, as pointed out by the hon. member for the Yukon, that he made a contribution to the growth and development of Canada to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars.

At this stage we are confronted with a problem which has social and economic implications. We can go back for a considerable period of time to ascertain the effects of the closing of mines in western Quebec, northern Ontario, in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. We know there are plans on the part of governments, past and present, to step in at an appropriate time and provide some form of assistance if and when these communities are closed. I wonder if this is really good enough in light of present circumstances.

Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act

I have listened to various views expressed here today to the effect that we are not getting to the real root of the problem of gold mining in Canada. We have talked about the problems of manpower in terms of keeping the industry going. In my constituency, our two major mines are operating at 60 per cent capacity because of the lack of miners. It is not difficult to find men to work on the surface or in other capacities in the mill, but it is virtually impossible to find men who will go underground and mine in the true sense of the word.

Perhaps one reason for this difficulty relates to the development of our affluent society in which it is easier to make $600 or $700 per month working in some other line than it is to make $1,100 or $1,200 per month underground. At the same time, I am wondering whether we are missing an opportunity to employ our indigenous people to a greater extent in the production of gold. This suggestion is not really related to the question of increasing the assistance to gold mines, but it does seem to offer some solution to our problem.

I am thinking particularly of the nickel mine at Rankin Inlet in the Northwest Territories where approximately 125 trained miners were released when the mine ran out of economic ore. We have not taken the opportunity to transfer these miners to other communities. This is true to a lesser degree of the Eskimo people working in northern Manitoba. At one time there were between 25 and 30 employed in Yellowknife. Unfortunately, it was difficult to arrange for these people to participate in community life and own their own homes rather than renting houses which were substandard. It was difficult for their wives to become accepted in the community and learn to help in a modern metropolis. This is only part of the problem.

The only way we, as a nation, can determine whether we want this industry to continue is by examining the total effect of gold mining on our national economy. Such a study has not been made. It would include gathering information as to the total amount of bullion produced annually over the last 50 years, the effect of wages paid from the mining operation, the number of service industries and other individuals who depend upon gold mines for their livelihood. We should also consider the taxes paid by mining operations, as well as the personal income taxes paid by the miners and those in associated and related industries. We must also take into account the sales tax paid by the miners and service industries such as aircraft companies, supply organizations and drilling companies.

[Mr. Orange.]

Such a study should also cover the foreign exchange picture and the importance of gold to the national economy as well as the effect the profits of gold mining operations have upon further mineral development. I have in mind particularly the COMINCO operation which has spent a great deal of money in the Northwest Territories as a result of their mining operations in Yellowknife. That company has spent a great deal of money on exploration.

It is my feeling that we should also take a look at practices in other countries such as the United States, not only in terms of monetary and fiscal policy, but also to determine what practices are followed by that particular government.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. member a question at this point? Will he state for the record whether he is in favour of keeping the price of gold at $35 per ounce or increasing it?

Mr. Orange: I can answer this question in two ways, and if you will bear with me for a few moments my feeling will become obvious to you. Perhaps, you have already made an assumption.

I should like to place on record a portion of an article which appeared in the September 18, 1967 edition of Newsweek. This article reflects to a certain extent the United States viewpoint. The article is entitled "Golden Harvest", and that does not refer to grain from the prairies. It states:

> The government's search for new gold resources is beginning to pay off.
> Recent underwater finds off the coast of Alaska have been described by Department of Interior officials as "better than we dared hope for".
> New sampling techniques, they say, "are hitting the target every time".
> Land-based efforts in Nevada have produced new ways to extract gold from low-grade ores. Mines not used because of the high cost of conventional methods may start producing again.

The final paragraph covers a subject about which I intend to find out more. It states:

> Note: The government will soon announce a program to bankroll seekers of gold and other scarce minerals. It will boost its share of their costs from the present 50 per cent to a ratio of 75-25.

My point is that we should attempt to get the minister to undertake a study of the effect of this industry on the national economy. We have done this before in this country in respect of other industries. We have heard figures that there are approximately 12,000 people employed in the industry, and I think such a study would be worthwhile. If you refer to information provided by the department, you find there are approximately 130,000 Canadians directly dependent on gold mining.

I realize there must be some reluctance on the part of many people to extend this program. I recognize that the program is not intended to assist gold mines in areas which are outside the range of existing gold mining communities. I have no argument on this point. However, I do have an argument in this respect. In gold producing areas it is obvious to many people that there is the potential for further mineral development.

It has often been said that if the price of gold were increased to what it should be according to 1935 standards, perhaps up to $100 an ounce, within 15 to 25 miles of Yellowknife there would be five more producing mines. I am not suggesting that all these mines would become economic ventures under present circumstances, but I cannot help wondering whether the limitations of the act are not restricting the development in this area and lessening the wealth of Canada.

Like others who have spoken today, I could not represent an area which is dependent to a great extent on the mineral industry without referring to the Carter commission. We all know that the Carter commission was brought into being by the previous government in 1962. This government has received the report of that commission. I believe all of us in the house, particularly members of the former administration as well as the present administration, now have an opportunity to look at the report from a somewhat dispassionate point of view. I fully support the urging of the hon. member for Yukon with regard to the three year tax depletion period. If companies involved in exploration and development did not have the opportunity to recover their capital costs, the mineral industry of Canada would largely disappear.

It is a fact that for every claim staked, for every man who goes into the bush to prospect for the first time, for every exploration and development program, only one in 25 is ever successful. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, how can this country afford to carry on real and viable exploration programs that will ultimately bring to this country the resources upon which we depend if we involve ourselves in some kind of tax program which will destroy the initiative of the little fellow, the juniors, as they call them, to go out and discover our resources?

Once a mine comes into production there is the question of the tax free period for exploration and pre-production expenses. If this program is not retained, the mineral industry in Canada will face serious consequences. Depletion and capital cost allowances are also affected. I shall say very little on this subject because much has already been said and said well. However, I wish to associate myself with the remarks made because I believe that if we wish to develop the primary industries of Canada, particularly the non-renewable resources of oil, gas and minerals, and want these resources to play an important part in developing our economy, we must be extremely careful how we handle the problem.

Reference has been made today to what happens when a community "folds" as a result either of the depletion of ore bodies or the impossibility of equating marketing with production costs. It has been suggested that some of the federal government programs, Canada manpower and others, might assist miners in moving from their present communities to others. Everybody knows that we could place the entire population of any particular mining community in northern Canada at any time.

However, where gold mining communities exist and are viable, and where they will continue for a considerable number of years, I believe that the federal government must consider ways of making these communities more interesting and better places in which to live. I should like to think that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's television package for the north will result in people in the industry being more content to live in isolated or remote areas. However, I am not sure that this is the only answer to the problem. I think in terms of the development of adequate housing. In the past, many companies have been somewhat reluctant to invest money in this area. One of the major mines in Yellowknife will next year build 25 homes exclusively for the use of miners. This is just one example. I am sure the company asked itself why they had not done this 20 years ago when they first went into production.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister that the extension which he announced today is a good move, but it is only part of the answer. The whole answer is far more complex. It is fraught with social and economic problems. I hope that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in consultation, particularly as far as the north is concerned, with his colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, will consider these problems and endeavour to solve them. Then we can hope that the industry will have a future which will be an important part of our Canadian way of life.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member a question dealing with gold. Is he aware of the fact that the hon. member for Yukon, who has been absent from this house for a full year, has lost a golden opportunity to be a good member of parliament. The hon. member for Yukon has been absent for one year and has been making excuses to the house for his absence.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have over the years had an opportunity of watching the effects of the application of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. Over the years, I have supported the assistance that has been given to gold mining communities, and intend to do so again today. I was sympathetic with the minister in his introduction of the resolution when he indicated that the only matter in question was the continuation of the subsidy now being paid to the gold mines.

However, I am also aware of the fact pointed out by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke this morning that this matter should not be discussed in isolation and solely within the terms of the resolution. I think the minister, who has listened to the discussion of this subject today, is well aware of the limitations of this measure. I would like to remind him that his predecessor, the minister who introduced this bill originally, had this to say about emergency gold mines assistance, as recorded on page 4972 of Hansard of June 12, 1956.

> I have emphasized, sir, that this measure is no solution of the deep-seated problem of the gold mining industry. The difficulty and the flaw in measures of this kind is that they often lull the government and lull parliament into thinking that the problem has been solved, or at least the problem has been met for the time being. No hon. member should delude himself into thinking that this measure is any solution, even on the short-run basis, of the needs and the problems of the gold mining industry. These problems are going to require much more farsighted solutions than are offered by the hand-to-mouth, stop-gap type of asistance that we have in the present measure.

I agree with this statement and I was surprised at the interpretation that has been given to these remarks. The minister gave us the impression that if this emergency assistance were provided for another three years the number of mines in operation would be far smaller than the number in operation today, and that if this assistance were extended as an emergency measure eventually there would be no gold mining industry left and therefore there would be no problem.

The minister is a very astute and capable man. I think he will find that the problem which he inherited in the coal mining industry of the maritimes would be duplicated in the gold mining industry. In both cases, the problem is not so much whether or not it is advantageous to mine a particular commodity but whether or not it is advantageous to the nation to allow the disappearance of the industry with the resulting calamitous effect on the mining communities. In both cases, subsidies have been granted and the operation has been left in the hands of the mining companies. Of course, this has not been satisfactory. In my opinion, and obviously in the opinion of the minister, a much more sensible solution has been found for the dwindling of the coal mining industry in the maritimes through the establishment of a company to explore the possibilities, not of phasing out that industry but of using the assets that are available in the area to develop an alternative to a subsidy or eventually a substitute industry.

I believe that the initiative of the people in the maritimes and the support that was given by the province, as well as the co-operation of the federal government, will help to bring about a permanent solution to this problem. I suggest that emergency gold mining assistance is not a solution and was never intended to be a solution. It is only a stop-gap measure which has not done the job we had initially hoped it would. It is merely a half measure which has neither allowed the communities to develop nor the industry to phase out. If the gold mining industry had been phased out, then the communities in the area would have been able to turn to something else. However, the mines have continued to operate.

I suggest to the minister that he should turn the Little Long Lac Mining Company into a crown corporation. This company is a parasite. It buys a certain amount of stock in a gold mining community, receives the subsidy and then moves on. Under the 1966 Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, certain subsidies are being paid to a number of mines in my area owned by the Little Long Lac Mining Company. These mines are under the name of the original company, and although the subsidies are not very large they are obviously being eaten up by a parasitic company which is closing down the mines as fast as it can. If the government were to take over the company for a very small investment it would be able to get a very large portfolio. The government would find that for an expenditure of about $20 million within a little over one year it would own most of the gold mines in the country. Let me point out that the assets of those gold mines are very large. For instance the Hollinger company has assets in the neighbourhood of $100 million. With a little co-operation the Little Long Lac Mining Company could buy Hollinger and obtain those assets. The McIntyre company have about $17 million worth of assets in their portfolio, some of it invested in steel mills, iron mills and related industries.

I am sure that with proper guidance from the federal government the Little Long Lac Mining Company could take over those assets and the government would then do a good job of recouping some of the expenditures it has made over a period of time.

However, if the minister is not interested in providing the same type of assistance for the gold mining industry as he has for the coal mining industry, then I suggest he will have to look for some other solutions.

Perhaps I should not delve into the monetary field but I think, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, we are dealing with a commodity closely associated with currency. People do not usually think of gold in terms of a commodity which we export and yet over the last 30 years it has been one of the largest export commodities in the Canadian economy. On a number of occasions the export of gold has allowed us to balance our payments with our neighbour, the United States, and thereby achieve a reasonable end-of-the-year balance of payments which would not have been possible had we not had this commodity.

It would not be wise for the Canadian government to make a decision based on whether or not gold is worth more to us than $35. Recently, the government, with a great deal of persuasion, has been able to allow the minting of a new coin. I am not suggesting that commodity prices should bear a relation to our currency, but it is a fact that gold is related to currency because the International Monetary Fund has set the price of gold at $35, a price which the United States was willing to pay for that commodity. In Canada we have found a way of selling $1.91 worth of coins for $4. We have now added one $20 gold coin, and instead of getting $1.91 plus the $20 which would be $21.91, we are selling this package for $40. I am quite sure the minister will agree that if we were to make a number of coins, the sale of which would be as popular as the sale of this particular coin has been, we would be able to raise the international price of gold to around $75 or $80 without asking any of our neighbours to buy that commodity. I believe the government is thinking about this.

What I am concerned about is that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources do not seem to have consulted each other on what the long range program is to be. Recently the Canadian government decided to hold gold. I am disturbed that about 50 per cent of our production is now being held in reserve by the Canadian treasury. I suggest that if all our gold were to be held in reserve, the amount that the Canadian government would have to pay for this reserve would probably have to be doubled. The only change would be that our export commodity would be held as a reserve rather than cashed in at $35. It is also a fact that we seem to be playing games with the United States. When the United States decided they were going to establish, through the International Monetary Fund, a new form of money which would in reality be United States dollars which would form a backing for all international currency, a great deal of resentment was expressed by some countries, particularly France. If France had carried on the same game, the United States could have been bankrupted because obviously they would have been unable to meet the call for gold.

I think Canada should deal with gold as a commodity on the international market in the same way as pulp and paper and other things, forgetting the fact that it is a precious metal. In looking for markets in the world, we will find that gold will command a much higher price on the open market as compared with the ordinary channel of the London or New York exchanges. We might find then that gold would bear a much closer relationship to the cost of production.

For many years the black market price for gold in China has been in the neighbourhood of $80. Some Mediterranean countries are paying even more. On the bootleg market, there is a considerable markup on the price of gold. The last time I asked the price on the miners' high-grade market it was $28, but the price the gold was being disposed at was considerably above $35, otherwise, the margin would be too small.

Another interesting subject is the report of the Carter commission. This resolution deals with the gold mining industry, and nobody doubts that unless some changes are brought about in the industry it will do what the minister hopes it will do, that is disappear. Coming from the labour side of the gold mining industry and not the management side, I am not particularly unhappy about this.

I was in Kirkland Lake not long ago and I asked the civic officials there how many gold miners were in the town at the time. Off hand, they had not the faintest notion, and could not even tell me within the nearest 100 or 200 people.

As soon as these mines close down the outlook of the man in the street in Kirkland Lake improves 100 per cent. He no longer is depressed. People talk about the high salaries made by teachers, about the number of people employed at the local hospital. They talk about the people employed on the Jones and Lockyer iron project. They talk about the pulp and paper industry in the area and the new developments in forest products. There is no particular interest today in gold mining.

Reference was made earlier today to a summary accompanying the submission of the Mining Association of Canada, which was lamenting the Carter commission report and the three year tax-free period. This summary reads:

> These, the industry says, are necessary because mining profits are subject to special provincial taxes in addition to heavy "social" costs such as the building of communities, roads, schools, hospitals, etc.; because of the high risk nature of the industry and the high costs of exploration, and because of the "need to return the capital value of the exhausting mine".

What a lot of bunk that is, Mr. Chairman. It just is not true. With one exception, I defy anybody to name one company in the major gold mining communities in my area which has put anything into the community for the good of the community. In Timmins for years and years the Hollinger mine owned the water system. This system has been paid for year after year at exorbitant rates. The system was paid for 30 years ago. The other day the company offered the system to the town of Timmins for $300,000 because they were closing down the mine. They said take it or leave it because they were going to shut off the water. This company never donated anything to the community.

I might add that the only reason this company had a ball park in the town was that it could not be taxed. Now, the mine is closing up and this park is going to be sold and divided into lots for housing purposes. The company will make a capital gain out of it.

I cannot think of one thing that the Lakeshore mine or Wright-Hargreaves did for the community of Kirkland Lake. It is the only mining community in the country I know of that does not even have a Y.M.C.A. None of the social services in the town was paid for by the mining companies. I suggest the Mining Association of Canada is talking a lot of rubbish when they refer to the gold mining industry in the terms they do, because it is simply not true that they are spending any money on exploration or are doing any exploration in the gold mining field.

For the advice of the hon. member for Northwest Territories, in my opinion it is the little guy, the prospector, the man who is a grubstaker who goes out into the bush in the summer and stakes out the maximum claim allowed under the legislation, who should be given consideration. He should be allowed to develop his claim so eventually he has an opportunity to invest in any mining operation developed on the ground he has worked. This does not happen now. I know hundreds of individual prospectors and I cannot think of one of them who shares in a mine.

I know a fellow by the name of Jamieson—the hon. member for Timmins also knows him—who died before he could take part in the operation of a mine. He held a stake in it and was well aware for many years of its value. I have no objection to these small prospectors being given a three year tax-free exemption, but I want to tell the committee how phony that is.

In the province of Ontario INCO makes a profit after taxes of $114 million. How much, Mr. Chairman, does the mining industry in Ontario pay by way of mining taxes? This industry pays $15 million, which does not even cover the cost of operating the tax department. I am not sympathetic to Rio Tinto or to Inco, which is going to put in another nine or ten shafts in the near future; each of these companies will get a three year tax-free exemption. Do they need it, Mr. Chairman? They need it like a hole in the head. This is just manipulation, not mining development.

The hon. member for Timmins remarked to me a little while ago: "Don't talk about Texas Gulf in Timmins any more; it now has a new name". I suppose that under the new name the company is now eligible for another three year tax-free exemption. That is why I suggest that the Mining Association of Canada is putting one over on the people of this country. They are not talking about the companies who really need this three year tax-free exemption.

If any hon. member visits Elliot Lake he will soon discover who the people were who used this exemption and how my resources, your resources and the resources of the Canadian people were exploited. And what is more, Mr. Chairman, we paid them to do this. As we all know, ever since there have been repercussions in the gold mining communities, communities which really developed these areas and took a considerable time to do so.

I support this subsidy, Mr. Chairman, though I have never found it to be of much value. In my area it amounts to between $4 and $6 an ounce. This means that if we could raise the price of gold to $46 or $47, the gold mines would all be better off than they would be under this program. They could return to free enterprise. These companies can be excellent free enterprisers when it suits them, but they are as anxious for handouts from municipalities and governments as any industry there is. They can be highly socialistic when they want to be and also rank free enterprisers as well when it suits them.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Free enterprise for the poor and socialism for the rich.

Mr. Peters: As the hon. member for Timmins says, free enterprise for the poor and socialism for the rich. This sort of thing works very well when it comes to tax concessions, and if these companies have anything to do with it this practice will be repeated in the future.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I suggest that the mining communities are not interested in the continuation of some of these major abuses. I am refering to the hundreds of millions of dollars lost to Canadian taxpayers because of exemptions to companies which do not need them and, indeed, cannot use them. Many of the developments undertaken are not carried through; the companies concerned sit on them until there is yet another tax exemption available. If none is offered they do not undertake any development at all. I know the minister is aware of this problem. I have some respect for him. I certainly have some respect for the manner in which he and his colleagues solved the coal problem. I think he will have plenty of time in the course of the next 12 months to see how things are developing in the coal industry and I hope the government will then see fit to extend the benefit of a similar plan to the gold mining industry, because it is my belief that remarkable things could flow from this type of settlement.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Choquette: The next premier of Manitoba.

Mr. Dinsdale: We hear many speeches on many subjects in this chamber and as I rise to take part in this particular discussion I hear a prophecy from the lips of the hon. member for Lotbinière. I make no comment at all in that regard because after many years experience in this house I have concluded that to indulge in prophecy in matters political is not a very worthwhile pursuit.

However, just before I turn to the subject of the resolution, perhaps I should add another word in reference to comments which have been made by the hon. member for Lotbinière here this afternoon. I must say he is showing a considerably broader outlook on national affairs as illustrated by the comments he made this afternoon than I have noted hitherto. Until recent times, the hon. member has adopted a narrow focus on national issues which has tended to be divisive rather than expansive. This afternoon, however, he returned to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and now his vision has even crossed the formidable barrier of the Canadian Shield and he has fixed his attention on that wonderful and productive province, the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Choquette: You will be the next premier, I know that. But you had better be in the house, not absent, like the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member for Lotbinière promises to stay away for a year I will go back home.

The Deputy Chairman: These arrangements will have to be made outside the house.

Mr. Dinsdale: Having begun my comments on that happy note, I should like to refer to the attitude the minister has taken in connection with this resolution. He introduced the resolution as a routine matter dealing with a routine problem. I must confess I was disappointed in the low key, gloomy, almost pessimistic approach the minister took in placing the subject matter before the house, particularly since he is the man responsible to the government of Canada for the promotion and development of one of our most important industries.

If I were asked to summarize and paraphrase his remarks I might do so in the following words: He felt that the gold mining industry was in the grip of outrageous fortune and there was nothing which the government of Canada could do about it. Therefore, to continue to paraphrase, he had decided to maintain the status quo. And you know what the old southern preacher replied when asked to say what "status quo" meant. He answered: "It is the mess we are in."

The minister's approach reminded me of the attitude which seemed to prevail in the house in connection with resource development programs prior to 1957 when it was felt that policies and programs which had been going on for years should remain undisturbed regardless of the consequences. I am disappointed in this attitude taken by the minister because the hon. gentleman is regarded as one of the dynamic personalities in the cabinet. His own personal background should, I think, put him on the side of the creators and the positive school of thought in relation to resource matters. I was interested to hear him say that in his family tree, way back to his grandfather, there is a record of contact with those stirring frontier days during the time of the trail of '98.

Mr. Nielsen: The real Klondike.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. I do not think the hon. gentleman's grandfather would be very happy with his grandson's attitude toward these matters as expressed in his opening remarks during this debate. They reflected what one might call the typical Liberal and negative attitude which is evident across the whole spectrum of resource development.

This is even more surprising when we recall that the minister has just reurned from a visit north of latitude 60. I can say that nobody who crosses this important frontier in terms of latitude comes back without a new vision—or, at least, he should return with a new vision and a new vigour with regard to Canada's resource potential. Indeed, I suggest that my hon. friend from the Northwest Territories should invite the hon. member for Lotbinière to go north of latitude 60 himself, now that he is showing this wider perspective on national affairs, because I think he would catch the fever as well.

Mr. Nielsen: He would catch more than that if he came to the Yukon.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: Apparently the inoculation did not take with the minister because, although in statements outside the chamber he has referred to the successful developments taking place in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and to the new mines in particular, such as Pine Point, New Imperial, Granville, Cassiar Asbestos up at Clinton Creek, and so forth, this vision does not carry over into the field of the gold mining industry.

I think I should remind the minister that if the previous administration had assumed this pessimistic attitude toward resource potential we would not now be having these significant new mining developments coming into production. You cannot live on the development of the past. Each succeeding government has to initiate plans and programs of its own. It is fine to boast about the things we did when we were in office, but the succeeding government must pick up the torch and initiate new development itself.

Mr. Pepin: There was no major initiative in that field during the past ten years. That was not due to a lack of ingenuity on the part of ministers. It was caused by the force of circumstances, the facts of life in the gold mining industry.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not accept this pessimistic attitude. As I said, it is reminiscent of the attitude that prevailed before 1957 in these matters of development.

Mr. Pepin: What did you do in 1958 except increase the subsidy by 25 per cent, which did not prevent the decline we are experiencing now? I am not blaming you.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am not going to debate—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dinsdale: Just one moment until I finish my statement. I am not going to debate, and in fact there is not time to debate the details of the problems that are all too prevalent in the gold mining industry. What I am criticizing is the attitude of the minister. Besides mentioning the problems of the gold mining industry, the minister could have given a word of encouragement to it, and to mining as a whole.

At this very moment discussions are taking place in Rio de Janeiro which could change the whole prospects of the gold mining industry. I am no expert on international monetary policy, but at least I am this much in touch with the situation. I know that the decisions made back in 1944 at Bretton Woods with respect to the gold standard are about to be changed. We shall hear more about this when the Minister of Finance returns. We are now going to enter into a period during which we will gradually remove international monetary procedures from the gold standard and follow the policy enunciated by Lord Keynes in 1944.

Mr. Pepin: One of your own colleagues spoke rather differently just a few hours ago.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is why I am not going to get into a detailed discussion on these points. Let me repeat that what I am decrying in my brief remarks is the total pessimism of the minister with regard to these matters.

Mr. Orange: Would the hon. member say whether or not he is in favour of an increase in the price of gold?

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member for the Northwest Territories is entering an area which I said I was not going to discuss this afternoon. I referred briefly to the deliberations which are taking place in Rio de Janeiro.

It is not only in this are that the government assumes a pessimistic attitude. It assumes that attitude in other basic economic areas, such as housing, the problems in the wheat economy and so forth. It is almost as if we were in the hands of a mechanized economy and human ingenuity cannot do much about it.

When listening to the minister I hoped he would introduce some ray of hope, some gleam of light into the picture of doom and gloom that he so eloquently painted. This atmosphere of gloom hangs over the whole mining industry, and I am sure the minister is aware of it. My office has received a flood of briefs dealing with the recommendations by the Carter royal commission with respect to the mining industry.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to protest a little bit. I am not responsible for the conclusion of the Carter commission. I did not call the Carter commission into being. Somebody else in the government of that time did. I think my hon. friend is unfair in not allowing us the right of receiving representations and objectively analysing the Carter report recommendations. The insinuation seems to be all along that we have accepted the Carter report recommendations.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think the minister is indulging in debate instead of asking a question. Perhaps he will wish to make up for the omission before the discussion ends this afternoon. What the mining industry is saying in its briefs is that the same conditions will prevail in other areas of mining unless the government makes some positive statement now on its attitude to the Carter royal commission recommendations. The government must provide leadership in these matters.

I do not have much time to deal with the point raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming with regard to the problems of mining in the current economic situation. However, I do say the problems of the mining industry, although it is more sophisticated than it was in the days when the minister's grandfather crossed the Chilkoot Pass, are much the same today in terms of personal and physical hardship. I disagree quite forcefully with the statements made by the hon. member for Timiskaming during his attack on the big corporations and their role in the business of Canadian resource development. I have in my hands here an excellent brief from the British Columbia and Yukon Chamber of Mines which statistically gives the lie to the statements made about the role of the corporations.

It is still the individual prospector who is responsible for 99 per cent of the discoveries in the resource area.

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. member permit a question? I have particular knowledge of only one mine in his area. Does he know the name of the prospector who made the discovery of the Thompson development that INCO undertook?

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not happen to have personal acquaintanceship with the particular prospector who discovered the Thompson mine, but I do know from my experience in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories that it is the individual grubstaking prospector who still does the basic groundwork in bringing in mining discoveries.

• (5:00 p.m.)

As I say, I am depending on the statistical and factual information provided by the British Columbia and Yukon Territory chamber of mines which I believe is just as knowledgeable in this field as is the hon. member for Timiskaming. The preamble of their brief states that the brief is supported by no fewer than 1,400 individual members. But, we are not here to debate this problem this afternoon.

Let me bring my remarks to a conclusion by saying that the minister should have seized the opportunity to speak on behalf not only of the gold mining industry but also the mining industry generally here this afternoon. He even went so far as to indulge in the old log rolling technique and buck passing technique which bogged down Canadian development in the early 1950's when it was said that these matters belonged to the provinces. As Harry Truman once said, I think we have concluded long ago that the buck has to stop somewhere and in this instance the buck has to stop with the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources for the government of Canada. The federal government, and its minister who is responsible for this area, must provide leadership.

The minister has the example of the resource minister's council which was designed to deal with this jurisdictional problem in the area of renewable resources. I know from personal contact with this area that the same process should apply in the field of non-renewable resources. Unhappily, no initiative has been taken in this regard. I trust, before we conclude this discussion of what the minister has described as a routine matter dealing with a routine problem, that he will change his viewpoint and seize the opportunity to make a positive statement on behalf of the mining industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman, as representative of the largest mining county in Canada, I deem it my duty to make a few observations on the bill under consideration.

A moment ago I was listening to the exchange between the fiery member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) and the equally hot-headed member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The latter stated that his constituency was tremendously large, covering some 222 square miles, I think.

[English]

About 220,000 square miles.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Nielsen: Two hundred and seven thousand square miles.

Mr. Blouin: Well, I do not want to roll you over, but I have a constituency that has 375,000 square miles.

Mr. Dinsdale: How many square miles are there in Lotbinière?

Mr. Blouin: That is something for the hon. member for Lotbinière to answer. I have a population of about 128,000 people and 58,289 voters.

Mr. Nielsen: The member's ancestors were also Yukoners.

Mr. Choquette: The hon. member for the Yukon has been absent for one year while the hon. member for Saguenay has been assiduous and has a greater population to represent. Shame on you.

Mr. Blouin: I think we are off the subject I was about to discuss.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to tell you that I have listened with a great deal of interest and sympathy to the previous speakers in whose constituencies the gold mining industry operates.

I come myself from a mining county and I know that each closing down of a mine is a catastrophe for some mining communities, which become ghost towns.

I would like to point out—much has been said about gold mining—that in my own county the situation is somewhat reversed: gold mines are not granted subventions —though I support the idea—it is the iron ore mining companies in my county which represent an important asset for the country as a whole.

Recently I read in a report from the Gulf of St. Lawrence Ore Producers Association that the iron ore operators were paying an average of $25 million per year to the federal treasury.

• (5:10 p.m.)

In my opinion, that is a considerable contribution and I should like to tell the minister, in return, that we have isolated and far off communities working in those mines, and that I do not see what the federal government can do to alleviate their necessarily lonely existence.

Not too long ago, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) whether federal-provincial agreements to help develop that part of my riding by building access roads to natural resources were to be renewed. I asked him the following question:

> Has the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources renewed an agreement with the Quebec government for 1967-68 with respect to the construction of access roads to natural resources? In the affirmative, what is the share of the federal government under this agreement?

Of course, the answer I received was a categorical "No".

I know that not long ago, there was a meeting of the provincial ministers of mines and, if I am not mistaken, the renewal of this agreement was requested. Consequently, I would ask the minister to take note of this request, because the 50,000 citizens in my riding who are now working in the mining industry have no means of transportation, except by air. There is also the railway but, as everyone knows, that is for the mining operations.

Therefore, I ask the minister to take note of those remarks and to see to it that this agreement is renewed so that it will be possible to build access roads and get those people out of their isolation, a situation which, in my opinion, should not exist in 1967.

Mr. Chairman, I could keep on for quite a while because in our area, mining has a long history. We have rather large gold deposits which are untapped; we also have lead, zinc, copper as well as great asbestos deposits.

In fact, the Asbestos Corporation announced last year developments totalling $72 million to the Deception Bay mine. I am told, however, that those developments have been delayed as a result of the recommendations of the Carter report. The minister said a while ago that the Carter report merely contained recommendations. I hope that these are only recommendations which will not necessarily be accepted, because if the mining industry is not given some incentives, well, we, from mining constituencies, which I repeat, represent a considerable contribution to our national income, will suffer.

I heard a while ago some members talking about northwestern Quebec where my constituency is located. I also heard about subsidies, grants being asked for the coal mines and western wheat.

Today, I am not asking for mining subsidies but merely for an awareness of the tremendous wealth of northeastern Quebec. To my mind, greater care should be taken of that pioneer population which works without cease to the development of our natural resources.

As I mentioned a while ago, the federal government derives a considerable income from those mining operations and, in return, we only ask that federal-provincial agreements should be signed to assist them.

Prospectors were also mentioned. I believe—since I am from a mining constituency—that all mines are discovered by prospectors. In my opinion, they should get much more encouragement than they actually do. There are rumours that they wander about the country, not even knowing what they are looking for. I happened to know several of them and I can tell you I am in a position to say that they are the ones who have discovered the mineral wealth of the constituency I represent, they are the ones who have paved the way for all those industries. I maintain that if the prospectors were given more encouragement, they could best tell us where there are ore fields in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I would not want to delay the approval of this legislation which I fully endorse. The idea is to extend this financial assistance for the next three years. I hope it will be granted, that gold mines throughout the country will survive, and that ghost towns will not rise where gold mines used to be.

I hope that gold production will continue and that ways to increase it will be found, but that other mining developments in Canada will not be neglected.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up too much time this afternoon. I wish I could agree with the minister that this was just a mining bill which occupies exactly the same position as any other bill regarding coal, potash, tungsten or tin. However, we know that in today's economic world this simply is not the case. Administratively, from the point of view of the minister's department, perhaps we should all be prepared to look at the bill in that way. Nevertheless, to assume that attitude is to be unrealistic, and it is unrealistic on the part of the minister because he is part of the government which is responsible for monetary policy. This is a world wide responsibility because Canada is one of the big ten nations in the international monetary fund. One thing leads to another, and to pretend this afternoon that gold on today's world markets is no different than tungsten or tin is to be unrealistic. It is just as unrealistic as our foreign policy under which we are joining a committee designed to tighten up sanctions against Rhodesia. We can be unrealistic in a variety of ways.

This lack of realism is indicated very clearly by two headlines which appear on the same page of today's Globe and Mail. The first headline is "South Africa threatens to reduce gold supply". I am sure anyone who has gold mining stock in Canada was brightened this morning on reading that headline. I am sure there will be a flurry of activity to find out just what this may mean. This is not something that will be considered in isolation from the gold mining picture in Canada.

On the same page appears a headline which would indicate that the predicted gross national product of the United States is $835 billion. The reference is to just one nation, not the common market, not Europe, not Japan nor parts of South America, it is just one of the world's nations. When we read of a gross national product in those terms, we realize how little connection there is between gold and production in today's world. We know that new gold no longer goes to provide backing for money but into private hands throughout the world. There is still great hope in many parts of the world that the price of gold will be raised, and raised sharply.

Although we had the assurance from the minister that should this happen there will be a very rapid adjustment in the gold mining subsidies, I think there would be certain administrative problems in making that adjustment quite as rapidly as he predicts. I am not at all recommending a policy of raising the price of gold but there are many in today's economic world who feel it is inevitable and could well come considerably sooner than the minister has today predicted.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member whether he thinks Canada is in a position to influence decisively the decision in these matters? Could I ask whether the hon. member believes that I could have based the bill we are presenting today on either the pro or the con of that debate?

Mr. Johnston: That is really not the question, Mr. Chairman. We like to think we can be quite influential, and pride ourselves that Canada has spoken out as a member of the big ten. We know that our Minister of Finance is returning or has returned from Rio and has spent the last few months attending a series of very important conferences, where I am sure the voice of Canada has been heard.

Just the other day the Minister of Finance made a speech which was widely reported in Canadian newspapers. I am sure that any of his colleagues in the cabinet would be among the first to say that this speech had weight. I do not have to defend that position, and far be it from me to lessen the importance of Canada's voice, as the colleague of the Minister of Finance may be trying to do this afternoon.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I am just pointing out that Canada is not the only country deciding what the policy should be when it comes to international matters.

Mr. Johnston: I would not pretend for a moment that she was. All I am saying is that the Canadian public should have a better picture of what is involved, not only in gold mining but in the whole spectrum of our economy. The most ironical thing is that at the present time the economy of the free world is hazardously dependent upon gold from the Soviet union. What an ironical thing that is, when one realizes that their gold sales are one of the main ways in which gold enters the western economic system at the present time. Also, our economy is terribly dependent upon the supply of gold from the Union of South Africa, and no one would doubt the amount of gold that comes from that country.

Considering all the aspects of South Africa's world position, what a hazardous thing it is that the economy of the free world, and in effect the entire world, is dependent on these two sources of gold production. While newly produced gold may not enter into the backing of money, it does seem to provide a sort of mystic reassurance that people still need.

The headline today regarding the conference in Rio is, "New World Money Approved." We know that nothing of the kind has happened as yet and that it will be a long, long time before any such thing does happen. The August 25 issue of Life magazine contains an important article on gold written by John K. Jessup. He predicts that it will be 100 years before we reach the point where anything like a new creation of money that is not attached to gold will come into existence.

We may well ask the question that other people have asked, namely, why this should be such a short term bill. Important questions arise out of what has been happening in the world monetary picture. These questions have a tremendous influence on this bill. While no one will vote against the bill—I am sure it will be passed by the house—it should not be passed under the guise of being like a bill to help the coal industry, or like a bill to open up a tungsten mine somewhere in Canada. The base upon which we operate is quite different.

I suspect that if the minister attempted tomorrow to shut down all the gold mines in this country because they are not economical, tremendously heavy pressure would be put upon this country by the nations of the big ten, the United States and a great many other sources to prevent that happening. We do not have any choice but to pass the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act; but we should clearly understand what the situation is and what we are doing when we extend this emergency measure.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pepin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-155, to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I think there is an understanding in the house that we suspend private members' hour and go ahead with the resolution standing in my name.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the private members' hour for this sitting be suspended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR INCREASES IN POSTAL RATES, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Post Office Act to increase by one cent the postage rates for letters posted in Canada for delivery in Canada; to provide an amended rate structure for newspapers and periodicals; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act, more especially in relation to tenders and contracts.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, since I took over my responsibilities as Postmaster General, 21 months ago, the admiration I have for the department has tremendously increased. The system of communications thus made available to the country is a sort of cement which keeps together the bricks of the business world and the individuals.

The Post Office Department, as a government concern, has never been intended to be a profit-making concern—and my own research on the subject supports this. But the Canadian post office has never been intended either to operate at a loss. In other words, the ideal situation would be for the post office to maintain from one year to the other a fair balance between revenues and expenditures.

That ideal situation has been achieved nearly all the time. But, that rule of balance must not overshadow the obligation of the Post Office Department to contribute to the progress of Canada, to the daily life of its people and to the prestige of our country in the world.

That obligation, has also been assumed by the post office. The various branches of the department reach the most remote areas of the country. The speed with which mail is carried within Canada is an example to other postal administrations of the world, and the flow of printed matter which is carried by the post office is a credit to Canada, within its boundaries as well as abroad.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

The resolution which has been placed before the house is designed to do four things. I know that some of them will not be popular but I assure the house that the legislation is responsible legislation.

First and most important are the sections of the legislation which govern the conditions and the rates for newspapers and periodicals. In the revision of the act, the statutory rate for the mailing of newspapers and periodicals is restricted to newspapers and periodicals which meet the new definition of a Canadian newspaper and of a Canadian periodical. The position of the rural newspapers is more clearly defined and the support through postal rates to these little publications is continued. Leaflets, organization publications, house organs and other such material will no longer be classed as second class mail but will be handled at the printed matter or third class rate. Publications which do not qualify as Canadian will come out of the second class statutory rates category.

With the passing of these sections the revenues from second class mail will be increased but, what is more important, the legislation governing this class of mail will be improved so that the administration of this part of the act will be more defensible and handling costs can be more readily apportioned to the various categories of publications for the purpose of determining postage rates.

The second major item is the increase in postage for first class mail or, as it is more commonly known, letter mail. The new rate on a letter for delivery within the postal area in which it is posted will be five cents for the first ounce or fraction of an ounce and three cents for each additional ounce or fraction of an ounce. The rate on a letter posted within one postal area for delivery in another postal area will be six cents for the first ounce or fraction of an ounce and four cents for each additional ounce or fraction of an ounce.

Concurrently with this rate change it is intended, in accordance with the authority granted under Section 6 of the Post Office Act, to abolish the domestic air mail letter rate and to provide air transmission for all domestic mail prepaid at the first class rate of postage, regardless of weight, providing delivery will be expedited.

Since 1954, only first class mail weighing up to eight ounces has received the all-up service which, by the way, is a postal service Canada pioneered. Now with this change, all first class mail in Canada will receive the all-up service. To business houses across the nation this will be welcome news because the ambiguity which existed between first class all-up and first class air mail will be eliminated. All first class mail in Canada will receive air transport at the one rate.

The change will also raise additional revenues to meet the increased costs and to help reduce the overall post office deficit, which is a factor in current operations.

The third change governs mail transportation arrangements. It reflects a modern day appreciation of the need for flexibility in making contractual arrangements and more equitable adjustments in payments to contractors.

The fourth revision deals with the general administration of the postal operation whereby it is necessary to give authorization to employees to administer oaths and receive affidavits, and where a more lucid statement of authority is required for the Postmaster General to maintain a continuing group of post office investigators.

I will not elaborate further on the bill because it is very urgent that the bill be presented to the house. I want to assure the committee that when we study the bill, either on second reading or in the clause by clause stage, I will be able to provide the necessary information and answer all the questions asked. However, I think it is very urgent that this bill be presented as soon as possible and made public so as to allay the grave doubts which may be in the minds of the printers of newspapers and periodicals. As soon as the bill is presented, I will be able to provide to the house more information than I can now at the resolution stage.

Mr. Churchill: The minister should have given us more information with regard to revenues and expenditures.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I will be able to give the house more specific information with regard to revenues and deficits. As everyone knows, deficits on second class mail have increased substantially in the last two years while first class mail has always shown a profit. However, as hon. members will observe in the next estimates of my department, first class mail is starting to show a deficit. If the rate is increased on first class mail, it will not only cover the deficit in the first class mail and increase first class service but also cover some of the deficit in other classes of mail. Some people might say that those who will be most affected by the increase in the rate on first class mail will be the average citizen writing a few letters a month, but I should like to point out, and this may come as a surprise to many hon. members, that 75 per cent of all first class mail comes from business companies.

I think it will be much easier for hon. members and for the public in general to understand all the details of this bill when it is presented because the regulations and all they entail are very complicated. They are difficult even for post office employees to understand. I think hon. members will find there will be some substantial changes in second class mail.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to ask the minister a question for clarification. At the beginning of his statement he mentioned there were four main changes in the proposal. The first change involved newspapers and periodicals, the second one referred to an increase in first class mail and the third one was with regard to mail transportation arrangements. I cannot recall what the fourth change was.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): The fourth change deals with the general administration of the postal operation which would allow postal employees to administer oaths and receive affidavits and permit the maintenance of a continuing group of post office investigators.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the minister for his words of explanation, particularly in connection with first section to which he referred, although perhaps he was not as explicit as I should have liked him to be at this time. However, as he suggested, we will look at this matter very closely when we proceed to the second reading of the bill.

I must say at the outset that this is a most shocking resolution to put before this committee, particularly this week since it comes on the heels of recent announcements that point up the woeful mismanagement of affairs in this country. I refer to the admission by the government that the wheat agreement was allowed to lapse and the poor taxpayer will now be called upon to subsidize western wheat, an unnecessary circumstance in the first place. Following on the heels of this avoidable misfortune, the government then suggested that 8¼ per cent mortgage money was the only way to finance the building of houses.

Three times and out is a familiar cliché, Mr. Chairman, and we have now been presented with the third time. The poor defenceless public now has to face a 20 to 25 per cent hike in postal rates. And for what, Mr. Chairman? I submit it is for curtailed service in many instances and chiefly because of government mismanagement.

Let me say immediately that the poor Postmaster General alone is not responsible for this, because he does try to do his best. But just to prove how things have deteriorated in this country in the past three months, Mr. Chairman, let me refer to an extract from Hansard. As reported at page 1098 for June 2, 1967 the Postmaster General said:

> I can tell hon. members that at the five-cent rate for letters we still make money. At four cents we still make some money, although we are on the verge of losing.

Three months later, Mr. Chairman, the minister is saying, in effect, that we are losing money on first class mail, which indicates a pretty rapid deterioration.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that much of this resolution is couched in the vaguest of generalities. Nevertheless, the general public is going to be gouged again. The citizens of this country are being called upon, in effect, to subsidize the second class mail operations of the post office. How much more of this inflated cost of doing business, this inflated cost of living, can the Canadian public accept and still survive? We are being forced time and time again to dig deeper and deeper into our pockets, and I suggest that the people of Canada cannot take many more weeks like the past one.

As reported on the same page of Hansard, the minister went on to say in reference to second and third class mail charges:

> At the second and third class rates we are losing about $30 million a year.

I suggest there should be more specific reference in this resolution to how the really serious difficulties of financing and operating the post office are going to be resolved. At this juncture we have no idea whether the rates to be attached to the losing part of the operation, that is second and third class mail, are being increased at all. Are they going to be increased proportionately more than the increases applied to that segment of the operation that is self-supporting? According to the statement of the Postmaster General last June, certain elements of his department's operations are profitable. Are rates for second class mail to be reduced?

I do not wish to sound facetious, Mr. Chairman, and I do not intend to be facetious, but my point is this. The resolution refers to increasing by one cent the postage rates for letters posted in Canada for delivery in Canada, and to providing an amended rate structure for newspapers and periodicals. What does "an amended rate structure" mean? Is the rate structure to be amended upwards or downwards? The minister has not spelt that out in the house. The only information we have about post office affairs is in some press releases; but, all we have to go on in this house is the resolution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I were a suspicious person, which I assure you I am not, I might assume the word "amended" meant to make a minor change in second class rates, and an attempt to shore up the balance sheet by overcharging the unorganized general public. By "unorganized" I refer to those not represented by strong association lobbies, unlike the publishers. I refer to a body akin, say, to the Manufacturers' Association, which speaks for its members; and I am assuming, Mr. Chairman, that there must be a newspaper and magazine publishers association.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, there is no reference in the resolution to third class mail. I would compliment the post office for the nice way they have of describing the junk that you and I as householders receive in our mailbox almost daily. I refer to advertisements for everything from magazine subscriptions to soap and detergents. Yes, periodically we even receive material from political parties. But there is not a word in the resolution about this segment of the mail.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): The hon. member realizes that Christmas cards come under third class mail?

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, but we do not know how large of a deficit is accumulated as a result of this particular segment of the operation of his department.

Another point that causes me concern is this. The resolution commences:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Post Office Act to increase by one cent the postage rates for letters posted in Canada for delivery in Canada;—

That means there must be an international agreement or something on postal rates to which Canada must adhere, and therefore we are powerless to change the rate until another postal convention agreement is signed. I have no idea when such a convention will be convened, and from what the minister said this spring I believe the present agreement has some considerable time to run. This further points up how rapidly our internal conditions have deteriorated.

May I just refer to the United States postal rates for first class mail. Although as of this morning there had been no change, there has been some suggestion that their five cent letter rate will be changed in the not too distant future. But the charge made for third class mail is almost the same as for first class mail. Obviously, the United States authorities have concluded that if advertisers find it profitable to do so, they will continue to use this service. The United States post office is not asking the general public to subsidize that service, and this is as it should be.

I should just like to refer to the London Free Press, an issue of recent date. The article states that the post office committee in the United States has brought in a new bill which provides for a 21 per cent rate boost for second class mail.

[Mr. McCutcheon.]

This would take effect gradually over a period of three years. Current United States rates on second class mail, including newspapers and magazines, are 4 cents for the first two ounces and 1 cent for each additional ounce. This is the point I was making. The only people who face increases spelled out exactly for them in this country are the little people, the ordinary citizens who do not have huge lobbies working for them.

The rest of the resolution calls for changes in the administration of the act, more especially in relation to tenders and contracts. We have suggested that certain procedures should be changed in this area over the years and we shall look with interest to find out whether some of these suggestions have been included. But I think it is now time that we came to grips with the ever increasing problem of the cost of living. Here is another classic example of the inability of the government to deal satisfactorily with the financial affairs of this country.

It may be said that one cent is a small amount, and I admit that it is. But the principle here is wrong, the principle that the little people of the country should have their burdens spelled out in unmistakable terms while we are not nearly so emphatic where strong organizations are concerned.

I commend the United States post office committee which has looked at this problem from all angles. Traditionally their second class rates have been higher than ours, but they have spelled out what their increase will be. I notice the minister shaking his head. I hope he is shaking it in agreement.

May I conclude by recalling what the minister said on July 2, 1967. At that time he said because our rates are a little lower than rates in the United States and because we have a better service, many magazines printed in the United States are brought into Canada by truck for mailing here. If United States rates go up proportionately more than our own, I submit we shall have quite a line-up of trucks at the border and I wonder how much we shall lose on this operation.

I should like to make the strongest plea at my command to the government that before the second reading of this bill the whole matter be referred to a committee of the house for the closest scrutiny. I suggest that in this way, with a new, non-partisan, constructive approach to our problems, we could help the government arrange a much more satisfactory solution.

Mr. Mather: I do not rise with the intention of making a speech but to ask a question. Our attitude toward this proposal to increase the rate on first class mail will obviously be influenced by the proposals which the minister has in mind with regard to second class mail. Why can the minister not give this information to the committee so that we may be in a better position to judge the virtues of the other proposal. He has spelled out the increase in the first class rate. Why not for the second class rate.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): The question of increases in rates for second class mail is more complicated than an increase in the cost of first class mail. Obviously we cannot increase rates by less than one cent, because we cannot begin issuing stamps of, say, half a cent denomination. Thus the increase in the cost of first class mail has to be one cent.

As far as second class mail is concerned there are many other factors that can be considered, various directions in which increases can be made, some paying a little more and others, possibly, a little less. As far as daily newspapers are concerned, they are now paying two and a half cents a pound for news and four cents a pound for advertising. The increase on the advertising portion will be bigger.

Some of the magazines or newspapers now enjoying second class statutory rates will cease to have the benefit of these rates because we are working out a new definition of a Canadian newspaper or a Canadian periodical. The result will be, in effect, an increase of more than the one cent. Under the new definition of a weekly newspaper, a weekly newspaper will be a rural paper with a publication figure of less than 10,000. Newspapers with circulation of more than 10,000 will come into another category; there are free zones for the weeklies, and all sorts of arrangements, but I can tell you that there will be increases in second class mail rates.

We are starting right now to have a deficit on first class mail. Our estimates forecast, with regard to the first class, indicates a deficit of over $5 million right now. I can tell hon. members that next year the deficit will be up to $7.7 million, and costs are continuing to rise. In these circumstances, do hon. members opposite not feel it is time to raise the rates?

Whenever we come to increase the salaries of our personnel we are told the amount offered is not enough. We need revenues. Transportation costs have risen. There has been no increase in second class rates since 1951, I believe, and no increase in first class rates since 1954.

The hon. member who had just made his speech suggested that the ordinary citizen would have to pay the bulk of the revenue to be provided by this increase. Let me tell him that the average citizen spends on first class mail service of the post office $1.82 a year; the increase will bring this up to $2.19, so the ordinary citizen will be paying 37 cents a year more. But consider the position of the Bell Telephone Company, for example, which has telephones in every home and sends a bill to every house once a month. What about companies and corporations of this kind? It is they who will really be carrying the burden.

I shall have many explanations to give, Mr. Chairman, when the bill is before us and I think it is important that we should come to that stage as soon as possible.

Mr. Mather: If the minister cannot give us details of the increases in the second class rates, can he not indicate the amount which the new rates will provide? I understand that the deficit on second class mail is about $28 million. Does the minister plan to increase revenues by that amount?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Those who remain in the second class will provide about $7 million more, but since many of them will be removed from that class it is difficult to give an exact figure of the kind sought. There are about 5,000 newspapers and periodicals now in the second class category which have never registered though some have had their permits or privileges since 1932. Many of these will be omitted, and we will thus obtain higher revenues. I say nothing about increases in the third class, "junk mail" many people call it, though let us not forget that Christmas cards come into this class of mail.

I cannot at present increase the third class mail rate because we are now charging four cents for a letter. How can I increase the third class rate to 4 cents if that is already the price we have to pay for local first class? The fact that there was a ceiling on the first class mail meant we could not move toward introducing an increase in the other different categories. I cannot urge that the third class mail rate be increased to the same level as that of first class.

Progress reported.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if anybody from the disorganized cabinet on the treasury benches knows specifically what is the business of the house for next week?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I understand that on Monday we will go into a supply motion and, if it lasts for two days, the next three days will be spent on the budget debate.

At 6.03 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 2, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

REPORT ON MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few moments of the time of the house to report on the twenty second annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development which was held last week in Rio de Janeiro. As governor of the I.M.F. and the world bank for Canada I led the Canadian delegation which this year for the first time included three other members of this house; the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Hon. Jean Chrétien), and the hon. members for Essex West (Mr. Gray) and Labelle (Mr. Clermont). As I did in Rio, I should like to pay tribute again to the kindness and hospitality of our hosts in this beautiful city of Rio.

The most important item on the agenda concerning the I.M.F. was the resolution dealing with the establishment in the fund of a new facility based on special drawing rights to meet the need, as and when it arises, for a supplement to existing reserve assets. Through close consultation with our executive director on the board of the fund and through Canada's membership in the Group of Ten, Canada has actively participated in the development of the plan proposed in the resolution which was before us in Rio. Agreement on the plan was only possible by a series of compromises; consequently it was not completely in accord with Canadian views. None the less we strongly supported it, and I am pleased to report that the resolution was unanimously passed.

The resolution requests the fund's executive directors to complete the drafting of the new articles necessary to implement the proposal by March 31, 1968 at the latest. The governors will then be asked to vote on these amendments, and if they are passed the new agreement will go to the parliaments for approval and the authority to implement it.

I stressed in Rio the importance of establishing this new facility as quickly as possible. I will be prepared to place the necessary bill before parliament very soon after approval by the governors of the detailed agreement. I hope parliament will give it full, speedy and sympathetic consideration. The setting up of this new facility will be a major step forward in strengthening the international monetary system.

Many governors including myself gave some attention to the need for national economic policies appropriate to the international and domestic circumstances of the present. The ministers and governors of the Group of Ten also took advantage of their presence in Rio to meet to discuss a problem that I know is in the minds of us all, the high level of interest rates which currently prevails throughout the world.

As for the meeting of the international bank, while the replenishment of the resources of the International Development Association was not formally on the agenda, it was the most important issue to be discussed and dominated the proceedings. The I.D.A. is the affiliate of the world bank which extends credits on concessional or "soft" terms to developing countries that do not earn sufficient foreign exchange to service loans made on conventional terms. Past government contributions to I.D.A. which had been set at $250 million a year for three years have virtually all been committed.

I met with Mr. George Woods, president of the world bank group and with ministers of finance of countries that contribute the major part of I.D.A. resources. I told them that I consider I.D.A. to be one of the most effective and efficient means of channelling aid to developing countries. The replenishment of I.D.A. could well be one of the most critical points in the relations between the developed and developing world. Accordingly I was most anxious to have I.D.A. replenished at a substantially higher level than in the past and indicated that, subject to parliamentary approval, Canada would be prepared to contribute its share to such a replenishment.

As a result of my conversations I am much more hopeful than before the meeting that such a replenishment will take place at an early date.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to have permission of the house to table the statement I made on behalf of Canada at the meeting in Rio as soon as it has been translated from English to French and from French to English.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the degree of satisfaction with which this house will have received the statement by the minister must be tempered by the fact that there is no easy road to full implementation of the first part of this international accord, and the minister has indicated some of the necessary steps that must be taken. The one point I dispute with him relates to his anticipation that he will present legislation to implement such an agreement in due course, namely sometime late in 1968 or 1969. I hope there will be a replacement by that time.

Those who have followed the deliberations of this international conference realize there are some real problems ahead. Not only is this an interim draft negotiated after some concessions; I think the minister would be the first to admit that before the governors are in a position to vote and the legislatures of the respective countries are in a position to ratify the agreement there must be more hard bargaining because of certain influences and pressures for radical change in the composition of international credit facilities.

Having said that, I should not like to minimize the contribution that has been made as a step forward in removing an area of unsettlement or unrest in respect of world credit facilities, having regard not only to the basis of exchange but a gathering of the international bank group and a decision to replenish the international development account. I am sure a great deal of the pressure and unrest in the world results from, shall we say, the agitation or the natural desire of some of the have-not countries for more extended facilities so they may develop their economies. We look forward to examining the minister's statement, which he indicated he will be tabling, and ultimately we will be examining the minister more closely during the consideration of his estimates or on some other appropriate occasion as to just what went on at this conference.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure everyone who has been following the attempts that have been made to permit the world to break out of the strait-jacket it has been in for a number of years now, in fact ever since we set up the International Monetary Fund, will greet this development with considerable satisfaction. We shall, of course, be interested to know just what will be the terms upon which nations will be able to avail themselves of the special drawing rights which have been referred to by the minister.

I would hope myself that this perhaps is a first step toward a much wider and a much deeper international co-operation than is indictated by a purely monetary agreement. I would hope that the prophecy of the late John Maynard Keynes might eventually come true and that this sort of thing will be the first step toward some type of global administration.

Any such step, of course, will be greeted with shrieks of dismay from those who are deeply wedded to the past and its concepts of natural sovereignty. It has been obvious for a number of years that we could not go on as we have been, relying on the currencies of the United States and Great Britain and a gold supply which is really entirely beyond our control, as a means of financing world trade and world development. My only regret is that it has taken the monetary authorities of the world so many years to take even this step after the first proposals were made for developments of this sort. I have always been very pleased to note that Canada has been in the forefront in pressing for this much needed and long delayed reform.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) with us again in the house after a long week of absence.

Indeed, last week we needed him when we dealt with the question of gold, of subsidies to the gold mines of northwestern Quebec, as well as the wheat subsidies. But the minister was busy in Rio de Janeiro, in Brazil, at the conference of the International Monetary Fund and the Internal Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

He has just told us that the Canadian government does not necessarily share the conclusions arrived at, and that many compromises were made to achieve unanimity—which unanimity does not satisfy the government.

Now, when, in Rio de Janeiro, discussions took place about international finance, national finance, aid to countries where it is urgently needed and also to countries where the need is not so great, I wonder if the minister, who brought there attractive suggestions for the international financial community, was not questioned about how things were going over here in Canada, in relation, specifically, to the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

It is certainly a very good thing, Mr. Speaker, to deal with matters pertaining to international finance; still, I believe it might be more advisable, at the moment, to settle first our own national financial problems. No doubt the minister was asked about conditions prevailing in Canada, and I cannot help wondering if, at that time, he thought of calling the attention of the representatives of the various countries of the world to a statement made more than a hundred years ago by a former president of the United States, John Adams, whom I quote:

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

All the perplexities, confusion and distress in America arise, not from defects in their constitution or confederation; not from want of honor or virtue, so much as from downright ignorance of the nature of coin, credit and circulation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those questions precisely were discussed at the conference of the International Monetary Fund and I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that we must look into the minister's remarks or into the report he has just submitted.

We shall study the proposals made by that world monetary conference in order to draw some conclusions which, I hope, will open the eyes not only of a group of Canadians but of the whole people and will encourage the Canadian government to take some responsibilities in the field of finance, credit and currency in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the minister's statement at this time, but it would have been appreciated particularly last Friday in connection with the debate on the Gold Mining Assistance Act.

I was happy to see that the minister gave some indication of the long and rocky road ahead of the proposed scheme, though I do not expect that this parliament will hold it up for very long when it comes up for discussion. There is an alarming tendency here always to assume that everything to do with the international monetary policy is somehow over the heads of the members of this institution. However, we know that in all likelihood there are parliaments in some countries which will take a much more intransigent stand against the proposals. We know also that this is just the first step in the working out of a new basis for the international settlement of trade balances. As we move into the area of international finance we must always be very sure that we obtain the best possible price for what we give away as we move through these steps.

The economic policies of this government at home have not been such as to particularly induce confidence in our ability to handle our national economy. In the latter part of the minister's statement when he discussed the International Development Bank he must have known surely that very quickly he would run into the political problem at home of selling to the Canadian people the idea of an increase. It will not be easy to find money for the International Development Bank when money is not available for housing and other much needed purposes at home.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: If hon. members will allow me to do so at this time, I should like to inform the house that the following vacancy has occurred in the representation:

Of Eric A. Winkler, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Grey-Bruce, by resignation.

Accordingly I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*PENAL INSTITUTION, SAINT-PIE DE BAGOT, QUE.

Question No. 272—Mr. Ricard:

1. Is the government still considering the construction of a penal institution at Saint-Pie de Bagot?

2. If so, on what approximate date will this institution be constructed?

3. If not, what use will be made of the land purchased by the government for the construction of such an institution?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 of the question is as follows. The property at Saint-Pie de Bagot is being retained by the government for penitentiary construction purposes when facilities additional to those at Cowansville and Ste. Anne des Plaines are required.

In answer to part 2, there is no immediate plan to construct a penal institution.

In view of the answers to parts 1 and 2, the answer to part 3 of the question is not applicable.

LOADING OF BUSES AT MALTON AIRPORT

Question No. 321—Mr. Cowan:

Is the Toronto Transportation Commission permitted to load buses at the "Arrival-Exit" of Malton airport in the same manner that the Ottawa Transportation Commission is able to load buses at the "Arrival-Exit" of Ottawa railway station and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No. The traffic on the Arrival-Exit levels is so congested that parking of additional buses cannot be accommodated. Curb space must be kept free for loading and unloading of passengers from private vehicles and taxis, and the limousine buses parking time is kept to a minimum.

Since the Toronto Transportation Commission buses are being used mainly by employees, the bus stop in the basement level has proved to be convenient both for the employees, and for those of the general public who wish to use this service.

AERIAL BUS SERVICE, EDMONTON-VANCOUVER

Question No. 322—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has Pacific Western Airlines filed with the Air Transport Board an application to operate a scheduled aerial bus service between Edmonton and Vancouver and return?

2. If so, when?

3. Has any decision been reached on this application, and (a) if so, what are the reasons therefor (b) if not, for what reasons?

4. If such an application should be deemed beyond the jurisdiction of the Air Transport Board, where does the jurisdiction lie?

5. How was authorization granted in 1962 or 1963 for the present aerial bus service between Edmonton and Calgary operated by Pacific Western Airlines?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Pacific Western Airlines has filed an application for authority to operate a class 1 scheduled service between Vancouver and Edmonton municipal airport.

[Mr. Ricard.]

2. May 15, 1967.

3. No decision has been taken on the application which will be processed normally, including public advertisement.

4. The application is within the jurisdiction of the Air Transport Board.

5. Pacific Western Airlines is authorized under licence No. A.T.B. 1023/59(S) to operate a class 1 scheduled commercial air service serving the points Edmonton, Yellowknife, Fort McMurray and several other points including Calgary. The point Calgary was added to the licence in March 1963, by board order No. 3509 dated March 26, 1963, to permit the operation of a scheduled air bus service between Edmonton and Calgary. For this service the licence contains a restriction that all flights from Calgary must make a first stop at Edmonton municipal airport and all flights from Edmonton must be operated out of the municipal airport.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION, LAKE WINNIPEG

Question No. 328—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How much money was spent for the aids to navigation program for lake Winnipeg and adjoining rivers and lakes for the fiscal year 1966-67, listing projects and locations?

2. How much money is allocated for this program for the fiscal year 1967-68, listing proposed projects and locations?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. $15,065.41 was spent in aids to navigation program in 1966-67, as follows:

Bloodvein River	$1,538.63
Deer Island	775.54
Spider Island	663.72
Selkirk Is. North End	612.50
Poplar River Entrance	476.76
Nelson River, Playgreen Lake	2,754.95
Winnipeg River	2,149.56
Spruce Island Channel	1,685.87
Berens River	682.40
Hecla Island	701.74
Red Rock Island	296.98
Clements Point	264.00
Loon Straits	265.26
Black Bear Island	304.87
Cox's Reef	138.43
George's Island	473.56
Mission Point	558.19
Dog Point	639.42
Cormorant Island	83.03
	$15,065.41

2. $125,000 is allocated for aids to navigation program in 1967-68, as follows:

Construction
George's Island (dwelling, light and fog alarm building)	$45,000
Selkirk (structures for new aids, storage buildings, minor improvements)	$42,000
	$87,000
Equipment
George's Island (generators, light and fog alarm equipment, stove, refrigerator, freezer)	$15,000
Selkirk (lanterns and minor equipment, new and replacement buoys)	$23,000
	$38,000

FEDERAL RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 357—Mr. Davis:

1. Taking into account, as between the federal government and the government of British Columbia, all the revenue received by the federal government (including direct taxes, indirect taxes and other revenue) and all expenditures on British Columbia's behalf (including conditional and unconditional grants to institutions and to individuals and expenditures incurred for public works and other purposes and by crown corporations in that province), for the fiscal year 1964-65, how much more, or less, did the federal government spend than it collected in the said province?

2. What are the comparable figures for each of the remaining provinces of Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. Information is not now available to provide an accurate answer to this question and the necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather the necessary information.

NATIONAL INVESTMENT FROM PUBLIC SECTOR

Question No. 363—Mr. Ormiston:

1. What percentage of the national investment in the calendar year 1966 was derived from the combined public sector (federal, provincial, municipal)?

2. What was the comparable percentage for 1949 and 1939?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Preliminary estimates indicate that the percentage of investment in the public sector, defined to include capital expenditures of government departments, government owned enterprises and government operated institutions and housing, was 32.0 per cent.

2. The comparable percentage for 1949 was 26.8 per cent and for 1939, 28.5 per cent.

REPAIRS TO ALEXANDRA BRIDGE, OTTAWA

Question No. 377—Mr. Isabelle:

What amount will be spent by the Department of Public Works for the repairs now under way to the Alexandra bridge?

[Translation]

Hon. George J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): An estimated amount of up to $1,300,000.

[English]

*ACTION ON FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING REPORT

Question No. 390—Mr. Stefanson:

Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation at this session of parliament, based on the recommendations of the McIvor commission?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the commission of inquiry into freshwater fish marketing known as the McIvor commission are under study by the provincial, territorial and federal authorities. The views of certain of the provincial and territorial authorities have not yet been received. When these views have been received and considered, an announcement of government policy will be made.

APPOINTMENT TO PROPERTY MANAGEMENT POSITION, PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 421—Mr. Reid:

1. Did the Public Service Commission advertise a competition to fill the position—property management in the capital region—Department of Public Works, and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, how many applications were received from both within and outside the Department of Public Works, and what are the names of those who formed the board to select the winning candidate?

2. What are the present duties of the present occupant of this position?

3. What are the qualifications of the present occupant of this position?

4. What is the remuneration for this position?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) The position of director of property management in the capital region of the Department of Public Works was filled by means of an inventory search of applications registered at the Public Service Commission and of inventories of officers employed in the public service. (b) Thirty three candidates were considered by a board composed of the following members: Mr. R. B. Whiting, assistant deputy minister (program planning), Department of Public Works; Mr. J. A. Langford, assistant deputy minister (design), Department of Public Works; Mr. L. McGurran, director financial services, Department of Public Works; Mr. W. F. Nelson, director personnel administration, Department of Public Works; Mr. W. D. Egan, program evaluation officer, Department of Public Works. The then Civil Service Commission approved the recommendation of this board and appointed the successful candidate under section 25 (a) and (b) of the Civil Service Act.

2. The present dtuies of this position consist of the administration of the departmental program for the region relating to accommodation, client requirements in buildings, maintenance, site acquisition and the administrative and personnel services entailed in fiscal control, manpower utilization, classification, pay, staff development and safety and fire prevention; the development of regional organization, establishment and policy within the intent of departmental program and directives; the recommendation of retention of firms for service contracts, the invoking of penalty clauses in contracts, the development of changes in departmental procedures designed to improve services to clients and the public by the region, and the acceptance or rejection of claims within assigned authority; and the performance of other duties related to the position.

3. The present occupant is a graduate architect who was employed for seven years within the Department of Public Works between 1955 and 1962 in a number of different posts including those of assistant district architect and district architect of the Ottawa district office and of co-ordinating architect at Department of Public Works headquarters. Between 1963 and the time of his appointment to the position in question he was vice president of a development and construction company active in all fields of building development including management.

4. The salary range for this position is $17,270 to $20,802 per annum.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PURCHASES BY GOVERNMENT AND CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 162—Mr. Godin:

1. In each of the last three years, what was the sum of the purchases made by (a) the government (b) departmental corporations (c) crown corporations (d) each of the proprietary corporations?

2. For each of the aforementioned sums, what were the annual proportions of Canadian and foreign products purchased?

Return tabled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REACTION TO U.S. OFFER OF CEASE FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received any information with respect to the attitude of the government of North Viet Nam or any of its allies toward President Johnson's latest offer to bring about a cease fire and commence negotiations for a settlement of the war in Viet Nam?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge we have not received any information bearing on that particular statement of the President. However, I will look into the matter and see whether anything came in this morning.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Does the government have any information on the rumours circulating that United States bombers are refuelling in Canada as one of two stages, one stage being in Alberta and the other in Alaska? If so, can the Prime Minister say whether these rumours are true?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have no information whatever which would support that statement in so far as Alberta is concerned, but I will be glad to make inquiries.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RESOLUTION FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA RESPECTING TOBACCO ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, based on a resolution passed by the union of British Columbia municipalities at their annual convention recently held in Prince Rupert. The resolution was to the effect that the U.B.C.M. called on all senior governments to introduce legislation to eliminate, modify or deglamorize all forms of tobacco advertising.

Has the minister received a copy of this resolution and, if so, can he inform the house of his response to same.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that the question could easily be placed on the order paper. That is the suggestion I take the liberty of making to him.

[Translation]

FINANCE

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING INCREASE IN PRICE OF GOLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my favourite minister, the Minister of Finance.

During the monetary discussions which took place in Rio de Janeiro, was the increase in the price of gold mentioned and, if so, what conclusions were arrived at during that conference?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the subject of the price of gold was not on the agenda of the meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Rio. Therefore I have nothing to report from the conference on this subject.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of his call for a bipartisan approach to the problem of national unity, and the reported concentrated effort regarding national unity that the government is making at the present time, could the Prime Minister tell us if and when the final report of the B and B commission is going to be brought before the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was a question about this matter the other day, and I think I said at that time that there are three or four volumes of that report outstanding. The next volumes of the report are very important ones indeed and, I have been told, will be available at the end of next month, November.

TRADE

WHEAT—SALES AT LESS THAN MINIMUM PRICE UNDER AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, particularly as he has made an announcement about the subsidization of wheat. Has the minister directed the wheat board to sell wheat A1 below the minimum price as agreed to by the 52 countries in the international wheat agreement, or has the wheat board stated to the minister that wheat will be sold without a minimum price?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that these are regarded as internal matters between the minister and the wheat board. However, generally speaking, the wheat board has served notice that it intends to sell wheat at world prices, in competition with others who are competing for world markets.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it then that the minister has admitted that the wheat board will be selling wheat at below the minimum?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That statement is argumentative.

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: In further explanation, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put another question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I take it that in the discussions which he, on behalf of the government, had with the other exporting nations, the government took the position that there is no moral—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot embark on a debate with the minister on any point. He should ask a question.

Mr. Woolliams: All right, I will put my question. I take it, then, that there is no moral obligation on the part of Canada to adhere to a minimum price under the world wheat agreement?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is out of order.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister wanted to answer. He was partly up on his feet.

[Later:]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the subject of the price of wheat. In view of the minister's statements this afternoon on this matter, has the government now decided to concur in United States policy of selling wheat at below world prices?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, the whole idea of the decision made by the government last week was to put the wheat board in a position where it could compete with other exporting countries by selling below the price range that was agreed to at Geneva and Rome, but not yet ratified.

Mr. Woolliams: As a supplementary question I would like to ask the minister whether he or his government has complained to the United States about selling wheat below the minimum set out in the agreement.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, there is no such agreement that is binding at this time. There was an understanding at Geneva, subsequently broadened at Rome, but not yet ratified. It is the period between the reaching of this understanding and its ratification that is a matter of concern to the government.

Mr. Woolliams: As a further supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SHIPPING

REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION OF SMALL BOAT HARBOURS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I wish to direct a question, of which I gave notice earlier today, to the new Minister of Transport. I wish to know whether the report of Dr. Tom Howe on the administration of small boat harbours has been received. If so, can the minister say when he will be able to table this report so that it may be available for study?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker; I was looking at the notice of another question I had received from another hon. member.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I addressed a question to the Minister of Transport asking whether he had received the report of Dr. Tom Howe on the administration of small vessel harbours. If so, can he tell us when he will table this report for the information of members of the house?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the report has been received. It is a very comprehensive document, however, and because of its content it will take the department some time to consider it. The report, which is voluminous, was intended to be an internal document for the department. Once we have had a chance to review it I shall be prepared to make a further statement and to comment on the situation which is revealed in the report.

FREIGHT RATES

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF NEW NON-CARLOAD RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Transport of which I gave him notice. I welcome any efforts he may make to bring about changes that some think still remain to be made in the department. Is the minister aware of the great anxiety felt among maritime shippers with respect to the new non-carload rate structure? If so, will he promise a full review of this matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The matter has been brought to my attention and is being considered by the Canadian Transport Commission, which has jurisdiction under the powers given to it by parliament. I hope they will review it sympathetically for the benefit of all maritime members of parliament and others.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Without commenting on the minister's answer, may I ask him if he will not examine the approaches that were made to the former minister, arrange a meeting, and consider using his good offices to bring about a stay or voluntary withdrawal of this new structure until satisfactory tariffs can be agreed on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a representation and not a question.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FERRY SERVICE, SAINT JOHN, N.B.—DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, having given the minister notice of a perennial problem which I know he will handle with true dispatch, I should like to know whether he will repeat the assurance given by the previous minister that the government will soon make its long awaited announcement on the Digby-Saint John ferry situation.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This question is high on the list of priority studies, Mr. Speaker. I hope to report to my hon. friend and his constituents as soon as possible.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the fresh Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: An answer of yes or no. would be satisfactory.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Recalling the minister's experience with the admirals over the past few years, is he confident that he will be able to deal just as ruthlessly with Sailor Jack Pickersgill?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure there will be full co-operation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

MINISTERIAL COMMENTS RESPECTING TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister since it deals with two statements of ministers which seem to conflict. In this morning's paper I noticed a report of a statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is said to have roundly condemned one of the principal recommendations of the Carter report, the one dealing with depletion. That statement is contradictory to the one made by the Minister of Finance to this house, who informed us that the government would not decide its policy on the Carter commission report until a study has been made of it, a white paper published and the matter placed in the hands of hon. members. I should like to know from the Prime Minister which of his ministers has enunciated government policy.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to resolve that contradiction in my hon. friend's mind by discussing the matter with both ministers concerned.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the various statements which have been made about the matter of tax incentives for the mining industry, is the Prime Minister in a position to say whether the government has reached a decision on the matter?

Mr. Pearson: The policy of the government on this and related matters will be made known—

An hon. Member: In due course.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, in due course. Thank you.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the report of the minister's statement made at Fort McMurray over the past week end, to the effect that tax incentives to encourage mining development and exploration should be continued, represent government policy?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was merely stating that there—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. An hon. member cannot ask a minister to comment on a statement made outside the house.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DELAY IN INTRODUCTION OF UNIFICATION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, but since he is absent overseas attending a NATO meeting I shall address it to the Prime Minister. Is the delay which has been announced in the promulgation of the amendments to the National Defence Act, providing for unification of the armed forces, due to the government having found that the proposed changes are not practical or desirable?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

PILOTAGE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the new Minister of Transport concerning another long standing problem or issue. Can he tell us what is the status of the long awaited report of the pilotage commission?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I must take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): I wish to put a question to the Minister of Labour which has nothing to do with housing. As the annual meeting of the brotherhood of railway, transport and general workers is now being held in Ottawa, could the minister not give some indication when legislation will be brought forward to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the matter should be on the order paper before too long, I hope. I cannot fix any definite date, but it can reasonably be expected to be put on the order paper before the end of the month.

EXPO '67

LACK OF AGREEMENT TO ENSURE TRANSPORTATION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): I wish to address a question tion to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for Expo. Since we were given to understand that agreements had been arrived at with the various organizations involved which would protect the operation of Expo '67 against untimely labour-management conflicts, and since the present Montreal transport strike has already cost an estimated $7 million in revenue, is it correct to assume that the M.T.C. and its employees were overlooked in arriving at those agreements?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as framed is not acceptable. The hon. member is asking an argumentative question.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS AFFECTED BY TARIFF REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Are measures being worked out by the government to ease the impact on agricultural producers adversely affected by Kennedy round tariff reductions?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe that some time ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce announced any measures that were being taken in this regard, but I do not think with respect to agriculture in particular. We are in constant discussion with the agricultural organizations, and certainly any appropriate action would be announced in the house in the proper manner.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As the Minister of Agriculture implied that the Minister of Trade and Commerce at some time had made a statement to the house on this matter, could the minister advise the house whether the government is taking steps to see that agricultural producers who are adversely affected by Kennedy round tariff reductions are going to be protected?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this whole matter is one of continuing government consideration. No decisions have yet been arrived at.

Mr. Hees: As a further supplementary question, is this matter being actively considered with the idea of producing a plan to protect agricultural producers who are affected?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a repetition of the previous question.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF 12 MILE LIMIT AND GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Would the minister take the House of Commons and the fishermen of Canada into his confidence and give us an up to date report on the negotiations being carried on with other countries toward establishing a 12 mile limit for Canada? At the same time would he inform us when we may expect geographical co-ordinates to be established, from which base lines will be drawn?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is not acceptable. The hon. member is asking for a statement, something which should be made on motions.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the desirability of concluding before Christmas the long awaited parliamentary study on national capital planning, may I ask the Minister of Public Works when he proposes to ask the house to approve the establishment of a special joint committee on this subject?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

REPORTED REFUSAL OF MEDICAL STUDENTS THROUGH LACK OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Now that fall registrations have been completed has the minister been informed in the last few days that hundreds of qualified students have been refused entrance to Canadian medical schools because of the lack of teaching facilities?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubt that the question as asked is acceptable. The hon. member is asking if the minister has been informed of a situation. I do not think the question in this form is in order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Grafftey: May I rephrase my question to the minister. Now that fall registrations have been completed will the minister inform the house whether hundreds of medical students have been refused entrance to our universities because of a lack of teaching facilities?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will inform the house at the appropriate time.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO DEPOSIT INSURANCE LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In accordance with an undertaking given to the house the minister tabled a letter dated June 27, addressed to the premier of the province of Quebec, regarding proposed amendments that might have to be made to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. Would the minister advise the house when it is proposed to bring forward these amendments, and when we may anticipate that we can get on with the consideration of them in committee?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say I am surprised that the matter is not on the order paper. The legislation is ready and it will be presented immediately.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION AS TO ADMISSION OF RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of reported differences in statements made by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the admission of mainland China to the United Nations, can the Prime Minister say what is now the Canadian government's position with respect to this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are no differences as referred to by my hon. friend. Our position, as it was outlined to the last assembly of the United Nations and repeated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs last week in regard to the desirability of having the voice of continental China heard at the United Nations assembly has not changed. However, as I have said before, and so has the Secretary of State for External Affairs, this is not a time when an initiative of the kind we took last year is likely to be accepted. It was rejected at the last general assembly, and in view of what is going on in China at the present time it is not likely that any initiative of that kind would be more acceptable this year than it was last year.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES UNDER HOSPITAL LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare of which I have given him notice. Will he advise the house whether the monthly payments made to nine provinces by the Canadian government under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act are up to date as of September 1967, and are the payments to the province of Quebec under the Interim Fiscal Arrangements Act also up to date as of September, 1967?

Mr. Speaker: Order, this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Cowan: Ten o'clock, sir.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE DISBANDMENT OF GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Considering the failure of the Company of Young Canadians to achieve the objectives for which the group was formed, is it the intention of the government to disband the company, particularly in light of the cost of over $2 million to the treasury this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked includes allegations, and cannot be asked in that form.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

NOVA SCOTIA—ASSISTANCE TO KEEP MCBEAN MINE IN OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is further to a meeting at Halifax attended by the united mine workers, community leaders and other interested people. Has the government made a decision on additional subventions to be provided in order to keep the McBean mine, with its 400 employees, operating during the next year or two?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, subventions are being paid now, and with respect to what will happen in the future I am waiting for the corporation to become operative before deciding.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF CENTENNIAL COINAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question with reference to centennial coinage to the Minister of Finance. Has the production of centennial coinage for 1967 been cut off at the mint?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take notice of part of the question. In fact the intention is to supply the needs of our currency with 1967 coinage but not to carry that design forward into 1968. I am not absolutely sure about the precise answer to the question that has been asked.

Mr. Pugh: As a supplementary may I ask whether the old coinage has also been produced during the present year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I fail to see the immediate urgency of the question. There may be some aspect of the question which escapes me. If there is a matter of urgency, I will allow the question; otherwise I suggest that it be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Pugh: On this point, you will remember that before July 1—

Mr. Speaker: It might be easier if the hon. member asked the question.

Mr. Pugh: May I argue it at ten o'clock?

SUPPLY

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

HOUSING—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in a young country such as Canada where the population is made up of people who have come from many countries, where there are vast distances over which people and goods must be transported, a country with a strategic location on this earth, it is natural that there will be many matters, that trouble Canadians. Canadians are serious about the unity of Canada; they are concerned about it. Canadians are worried about peace on earth, the Viet Nam situation, and the underdeveloped countries which need assistance. Parents are worried about future opportunities for their children to achieve their aims by individual effort and not by relying entirely on governments. Our people are concerned about the position of Christian principles within our society.

There are many things which concern Canadians and it is well that Canadians think about them. However, the motive of self-preservation and self-interest—and I use the expression "self-interest" in the broad sense —is an overpowering one. Therefore I believe the one single factor with which most Canadians are concerned today is that of inflation and the increasing cost of living. Inflation steals from the poor and the prudent. I think of the elderly couple or the old age pensioner who are trying to survive on $105 a month. Out of this $105 the old age pensioner may have only $40 or $50 a month with which to provide a reasonable roof over his head. I know of many instances where such people do not have enough money toward the end of the month to satisfy their hunger.

I used the word "prudent". There are prudent people who are affected by inflation. I think of a friend of mine who retired about nine years ago. He had been a fairly senior official in a private company. Partly because of health reasons he retired at a somewhat early age, although he was not required to do so. He had given his family a reasonable home life. He had sent his children through school. He had never looked to any government for a handout. He had saved money and he had bought bonds. With his savings he bought a house. From the income on an annuity which he had bought and from the interest on his bonds he thought at the time he retired that he would be able to maintain a reasonable standard of living. Today he finds that the value of his annuity and the income from his bonds are not sufficient to maintain him at a reasonable standard. He is now forced to sell some of his bonds. He figured he would try to live on some of his capital until he became eligible for old age security, but he finds that he is receiving only about 80 per cent on the dollar for the bonds he is selling.

I think of the hundreds and thousands of retired civil servants, many of whom have made representations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the government. They have indicated that in many instances the pensions they received at the time of retirement will now buy only 60 per cent of what they would have bought at the time they were retired. Truly inflation and the increasing cost of living do steal from the poor and the prudent.

But there is one aspect of Canadian life on which inflation has a devastating effect and that is housing. Housing is an essential element for the social well-being of the citizens of the country. Last Monday, on behalf of our party, I moved the adjournment of the house to consider a matter of urgent national importance, namely, the housing crisis. Realizing that the question would be raised by us again and that the motion might well be granted at a later date, the government therefore agreed to bring up the estimates of the Department of Labour last Thursday so that we could discuss the crisis.

I wish to make it clear that I do not use the word "crisis" in the sense that this is a problem which has arisen just now; it is a problem which has been with us for a long time. Repeatedly we have brought it to the attention of the government. For example, on May 16, 1966, a year and half ago, the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) moved the following amendment to a supply motion:

> The policies of the government in imposing tight money and denying builders and prospective home owners needed mortgage funds, constitute a negative approach to the problems facing our economy and are seriously impeding the development of the nation.

Let me describe briefly what the current situation is with regard to housing. We have brought it to the attention of the government before but it may need repeating in a brief manner. At page 193 of the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada we find the following:

> Nevertheless it appears that perhaps as many as one million Canadians are housed in substandard dwellings of this description.

The reference is to a backlog in housing requirements. Roughly one million people were in need of housing this year as of the date of this report. I should like to quote from page 129 of the report of the special committee of the Senate on aging:

—300,000 elderly family and non-family households in 1961—were experiencing difficulties in their housing situation.

As a matter of fact, Mr. R. Adamson, C.M.H.C. economist, estimated when he appeared before the Senate committee on aging that at least 400,000 elderly persons as of that date were in need of housing assistance because of the backlog in the housing situation. What is being done to solve this backlog in housing requirements? I should like to quote from page 133 of the same report of the Economic Council of Canada:

We estimate that by the end of the 1960's housing starts and completions in Canada will need to rise to annual levels of at least 200,000 units to fully meet the nation's requirements at that time.

At another point it states that in the last four years of the 1960's an average of 194,000 housing starts will be required to meet the current requiremetns. Just speaking of one place, the city of Victoria and its environs, the capital regional planning board of British Columbia, at the time I was chairman, made a survey of housing requirements for elderly people in the greater Victoria area and arrived at the conclusion that at least 1,000 people in that area alone were in urgent need of housing accommodation. That is the present situation in respect of housing.

What is being done to meet, first of all, the current requirements and, second, to catch up on the backlog of shortages? In 1966 there were 134,000 housing starts in Canada. The minister indicated last week that this year there will be in the order of 150,000 housing starts.

Mr. Nicholson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member would not want to allow a misstatement to go by unchallenged. The figure I mentioned last Thursday was 150,000, not 130,000.

Mr. Chatterton: Perhaps the minister misunderstood me. I did say that he estimated there will be 150,000 starts this year. In any event, in those two years alone, over and above the one million houses the Economic Council of Canada suggests are required there has been a shortage of requirement in the neighbourhood of 70,000 to 90,000 houses.

[Mr. Chatterton.]

Therefore we are falling farther and farther behind.

Having recognized the situation as it is, let us consider the effect of this critical situation on Canadians. Let me refer first of all to page 136 of the report of the Economic Council of Canada. It enumerates certain effects which result from the housing situation in Canada including:

—shortages of suitable housing in many of the larger urban areas of the country, with adverse social consequences and inhibiting effects on labour mobility;

—widespread and significant increases in rents and house prices, which have been reflected in the cost of living and in upward pressures on wages—

In the 12 months ended August, 1967, the consumer price index on housing went up from 145 to 152.2, an increase of 7.2 in one year alone. It is common knowledge that the shortage of housing in itself has tremendously increased the cost of houses which have been built. It is obvious that when there are more purchasers than there are houses the price goes up.

The third effect as reported at page 136 of the council's report is:

—the sharp drop-off in the utilization of productive capacity in the apartment building sector of the construction industry, with disruptive effects on efficiencies and on the longer-term retention of specialized and skilled labour.

Let me emphasize again the effect on apartment buildings. The minister indicated, and generally authorities agree, that the most efficient form of housing is the multiple type, not necessarily apartment blocks because it could include row houses. This does not mean that people who want to own their own houses should not be allowed to do so, but from the point of view of the provision of houses and the cost of land and services, apartment or multiple housing units are more efficient. The Economic Council points out that the existing situation has had a severe effect on this particular phase of the house construction industry.

Let me refer to a few words of a contractor in my area who has written to the minister to indicate the effect of this housing policy on contractors. First of all he says it prevents builders from building speculative housing which could be used to level out builders' production. Second, it makes it impossible for builders to engage in any kind of realistic planning or buying because builders cannot get volume prices and price discounts on material and subcontracts when neither they nor their suppliers know how many housing starts they will have in the next few weeks, let alone in the next few months.

This man also suggests that builders cannot afford to develop land when the lack of mortgage money makes land unusable for months, leaving capital tied up. He suggests that banks are not interested in developing land of that sort. Therefore builders must wait for mortgage funds to be released and then scramble for whatever lands are available at a premium price which must be passed on to the consumer.

I am trying to point out the effect of the housing situation on Canadians. Let me quote from page 25 of the report of the Economic Council of Canada:

> Many potential home-owner borrowers, for example, may be deterred by virtue of the fact that a higher mortgage interest rate finds significant reflection in the size of the monthly mortgage payment, particularly given the long-term nature of most of the loans now made.

Last week we attempted to point out the seriousness of the existing housing situation. Last Thursday we listened with a great deal of interest and anticipation to replies and answers from members on the government side. It was my impression that the general reaction of the government was, first of all, that this is not a serious situation and, second, that if it is serious there is nothing it can do about it. For example, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) seems to be more concerned about the actual number of housing starts that should be made according to the report than the fact we are falling farther and farther behind. He has consoled himself with the fact that this year housing starts are 15 per cent above the level of 1966. What he did not say was that in 1966 there were 32,000 fewer starts than in 1965. Surely the number of starts should not be anything else but greater. The minister did not mention that the number of housing starts in 1966 was less than in 1958 when there were 164,000. The number of starts last year was less than in 1955 when there were 138,000.

The minister seems to be unconcerned about the fact that the Economic Council has pointed out that 140,000 houses are required per annum for new family formations and non-family requirements and that in addition 50,000 are required for replacement. Apparently this is not important. To indicate the attitude of the government let me refer to page 2596 of Hansard for September 28, 1967. The minister interjected with this question to the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott):

> Does he know that from among those who have borrowed in excess of $500 million this year more than half the borrowers have incomes between $4,000 and $7,000 a year?

That question clearly implied that if that amount of money was borrowed by people earning between $4,000 and $7,000 per year there should be no difficulty in respect of those people who are earning less than $8,000 per year. What the minister fails to bring to the attention of the house is that according to the Canadian housing statistics for 1966 the average cost of a house to those people whose income was less than $4,000 was $12,560. The down payment required from the people in that group was $7,000. The minister knows the C.M.H.C. requirement that the payment to retire the debt and cover the taxes must not exceed 27 per cent of one's gross income. So the people in the low income group to whom the minister referred had to put up a great deal of cash in order to reduce their mortgages.

These people often had to borrow the money, without C.M.H.C.'s knowledge, in order to make the down payment. They borrow the money or sell a little home they have and they put down a large sum of money in order to meet the requirements of C.M.H.C. I am trying to point up the attitude of the government in this respect.

The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) spent a great deal of time the other day reading to the house excerpts from various newspapers indicating in effect that many houses are available and there is no problem at all. I think the hon. member spent ten minutes trying to convince us that there was no problem at all. In view of that attitude of the government we believe we should continue to bring to its attention the serious situation that exists.

Last Thursday the Minister of Labour said to us in effect: What does the Economic Council of Canada advise us to do? Do they prescribe any solutions for this serious problem?

This brings me to the next point I wish to make. First of all, we should try to recognize what were the factors that caused the present situation, what were the conditions that led to it. How can any government find a solution to a problem unless it first recognizes the causes of the problem? I now wish to deal with the causes that led to this crisis in housing. I quote from page 261 of the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada:

> Thus, the accelerated increase in government spending in 1966 and 1967 is outpacing the growth of government revenues at existing tax levels.

Now we are getting to the crux of the matter and the cause of the situation in which we find ourselves with respect to housing. I must point out that the excerpt I have just read from the fourth annual review of the Economic Council refers to government spending and includes all levels of government. Let us never say that the whole fault lies with the federal government. But I submit that according to the figures quoted in the report of the Economic Council of Canada the increase in spending by this government has been a major factor in arriving at the situation where it is not possible to obtain private money with which to finance housing mortgages.

On page 27 of the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada the increases in expenditures of all governments are set out. For example, in the case of goods and services federal government expenditures in 1966 increased by 18.8 per cent over 1965. If we exclude defence, the increase in expenditures in 1966 over 1965 was 27.1 per cent. When the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) spoke in the budget debate on June 6 last he indicated that the increase in federal government expenditures in 1967 over 1966 would be another 20 per cent. We are trying to find out what are the factors which led to the situation we face today.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to answer questions at the end of my speech. We are trying to put our finger on the cause of this serious situation. The government has taken the attitude that there is a shortage of money and this is the reason they have had to raise the interest rate on C.M.H.C. loans to a maximum of 8¼ per cent. I agree with the minister that this does not mean the interest rate will be 8¼ per cent. That is the maximum. It may well be that it will not go up to 8¼ per cent.

The government says there is a shortage of money and they ask: What else could we do? The question is, Mr. Speaker, why is there this shortage of money? I wish to quote rather extensively from the speech of the hon. member for Perth in the budget debate of June 6 because the hon. member put his finger on the cause of this situation in which money cannot be obtained at a reasonable rate for housing mortgages. I quote from page 1192 of Hansard of June 6 last:

> The other evening the minister casually brushed over the effect on the money markets, interest rates, international affairs and domestic prices—

And so on. I quote further from the hon. member's speech as reported on the same page of Hansard:

> All the signs point to the government having to move into the money market in a very big way.

I listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) announce just a few minutes ago that this is a trend right across the world. I realize there is concern in Europe and many other western countries particularly because the United States is using the interest rate to ease the economy. I believe that the action of this government has greatly aggravated the situation which exists in Canada, though it is subject to influence from other parts of the world. The action of the government has contributed directly to the position in which we find ourselves today, where money at a reasonable rate cannot be obtained to finance such an essential article as housing. I quote again from the speech of the future minister, now the hon. member for Perth, at page 1193 of Hansard. I said "future minister", and I mean in the not too distant future.

Mr. Stewart: You must mean that he is turning ecclesiastical.

Mr. Chatterton: As reported at page 1193 of Hansard, the hon. member for Perth said:

> As the minister noted, prices are now 7.3 per cent above what they were two years ago. It is obvious, sir, that the grocery dollar is getting smaller and smaller. At the same time that prices are rising the government must attempt to raise funds of its own in competition with private business and with individuals so in effect the price of borrowing money rises too.

The hon. member then said, as reported on the same page:

> It means interest rates will tend to stay high.

Further, the hon. member said, as reported at page 1193 of Hansard:

> Sir my concern with the financial gyrations of this government is that it has a total disregard for the expenditure of the peoples' money.

We are beginning to put our finger upon what has caused or aggravated the housing shortage in this country. I shall now read a few of the excerpts which the hon. member in his speech read from the Globe and Mail of June 5. This appears at page 1195 of Hansard for June 6:

In the past several years the public has acquired a good deal of experience in the methods of frenzied financiers and it therefore should have no great difficulty in recognizing the glibness of Finance Minister Sharp for what it is.

• (3:50 p.m.)

In his budget speech, which is the equivalent of the annual report to shareholders from the president of a financial institution, the finance minister put up a bold front, yet he was unable to conceal the one important fact, that the nation's financial operations are out of control.

Last Thursday members of all the opposition parties tended to blame only the Minister of Labour. I think he should carry a certain measure of blame for the situation in which we find ourselves today but I submit the basic cause leading to this problem does not lie with the Minister of Labour except in so far as he is a member of the government. It can be directly ascribed to the policies of this government as indicated by the Minister of Finance. It is he who has mainly contributed to the situation we face today.

I could continue quoting along the same lines for another half hour. I am trying to find explanations for the basic causes which have led to this situation. First of all I wish to quote from pages 108 and 109 of the report of the Economic Council of Canada. Reference is made here to the surplus and deficit positions on a national accounts basis. The expert reads as follows:

The major factor in this development in 1966 was an extraordinary rise in government purchases of goods and services, of 16 per cent, or $1.6 billion, the largest percentage increase since the Korean defence build-up.

A very significant comment is made on page 24 of the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada regarding the shortage of housing. It reads as follows:

It is important to note that this situation has not developed as a result of any conscious choice, based on an ordering of the national priorities.

What is meant there is that the government has been drafted into this position because of a lack of a firm stand and because of a lack of a recognition of priorities.

Now let me quote a very eminent journalist and a great columnist, Mr. Bruce Hutchison, from the Ottawa Journal of September 25. The article reads partly as follows:

The Pearson government is trying desperately to extricate itself from a double blunder of economics and politics.

Farther on he wrote the following:

The moment of financial truth came in the last month when the government suddenly found that it could not sell its bonds without paying exorbitant interest rates which have automatically raised those of all borrowers, public and private.

Mr. Hutchison, who I think is a greater authority on this subject than I am, went on to say:

Finally it found its fiscal policies under unprecedented attack by the impartial Economic Council—

Up to now the government, misjudging the economic climate has fed inflation with its deficits.

I do not think there is any doubt in anybody's mind that inflation is a factor which has contributed more than anything else to the position which we have a right to take today in the housing crisis.

Now I wish to quote the following from the Financial Post of September 2 of this year:

Ottawa can only blame itself for its present boxed-in position. If its increases in spending had been less exuberant across the board in the past few years, it would now be able to borrow more easily to finance its long-established housing program.

Farther on the same editorial, headed "Why Housing Gets Hit", reads as follows:

If our political leaders in their beneficence wish to improve the outlook for housing in a more permanent way they must design and time their total spending in a way that encourages, not discourages, private investment in housing.

I think we are beginning to make our case. We recognize there is a shortage of money and tremendous competition in the capital market. We are trying to find out reasons for that situation, and I maintain it was the action of this government which has greatly contributed to that difficult position. I feel sorry for the Minister of Labour. I know he would like to go to the government and say: Please give me another $300 million so I can make direct loans available rather than have to raise the interest rate. I am sure he would love to be in a position where the Minister of Finance would agree to giving him $300 million more.

I recognize that the government has spent $900 million this year, but why did it have to do so? It is because the action of the government has made it impossible for private lenders to have money available to lend for housing. This is why the government has had to spend money on housing. I commend the government for having spent that much in difficult times, but why did it have to do it? Next year we will be in a worse position. As the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) told us on Thursday, next year we will not be able to get nearly as much. Therefore the government has to rely on a fantastically high interest rate to induce private investors to put their money into housing. I appreciate the position of the Minister of Labour and I acknowledge it is not of his making. I see the minister is smiling.

Mr. Connelly, the president of the National House Builders Association, had the following to say as reported in the association's news release of August 24, 1967:

> Mr. Connelly said that his association shared the government's concern for deficit financing and he pointed out that heavy government borrowings at all levels to maintain many non-essential programs had cut into the supply of mortgage money. He agreed with the hope of the government that by reducing its demands on the capital market it will cause interest rates to fall and that more private money will then be attracted into mortgages.

There is not much hope of that now; they may go up to 8.25 per cent. I wish to quote now from the Telegram of September 29 in which the following comment is made:

> Is Ottawa so blind to the growing inflation in this country, brought on in part by unwise government spending, not to know that even upper income families cannot afford new homes?
> Are the government's expenditures in relation to its revenues in such desperate straits that it must sweeten the prospects of private capital buying up N.H.A. mortgages at the expense of the would-be home owner?

There is no doubt that the people who will suffer most from the present situation and from the present action of the government, which was in effect necessary because of the past actions of the government, are the people who can afford it least, namely, people earning less than $8,000 a year.

The Minister of Labour asked us on Thursday what the solution to the problem is. He said that the Economic Council of Canada did not put forward any constructive proposals. As I have said before, the first step is for the government to recognize the causative factors which led to the situation. Unless it recognizes and accepts them, how can it remove the causes?

I hope I have achieved something by impressing on the government that it was their actions that brought about the situation where mortgage money cannot be obtained for housing at a reasonable rate. The government should realize what is required in a practical way to achieve the objectives outlined by the Economic Council of Canada. On page 112 of its report the Economic Council wrote the following:

> The increase in the housing stock, on the other hand, has not kept pace with the rise in new family and household formation in the recent period. Vacancy rates have been sharply reduced, and the price of housing and rental accommodation has risen sharply. Over the period 1963-66, the average rate of growth in the physical volume of housing expenditures amounted to only 3.2 per cent per year.

This is what will be required from now on and the government should pay special attention to it. The report continues:

> To meet the demand for housing which our projections of new family and household formation imply, an average of some 190,000 new housing units per year are required between the years 1966 and 1970. This would mean an average annual rate of growth in the real physical volume of housing expenditures of about 8.4 per cent per year to 1970, or well over twice the average rate for the 1963-66 period.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the government must be aware that this sum of money will be required from now on to meet the minimum objectives which have been set by the Economic Council. Unless they realize this, how can they take action to achieve those objectives?

On the negative side, on page 265 of the report of the Economic Council of Canada there is the following statement:

> The use of housing as an economic regulator should not be continued to such an extent in the future.

This is also something the government must keep in mind. There must be an even flow of funds for housing so that the housing industry can operate in an efficient and effective manner in order to meet the needs for housing in Canada before too many years pass. On page 264 of the report of the Economic Council it is stated:

> Of all the major sectors of the economy, none will have to grow more rapidly than housing—at least to 1970.

It is set forth on page 261 that there is a need—> —for consistent and comprehensive determination of objectives and priorities;—

Let us recognize, Mr. Speaker, what is important. Is housing important? If so, let us assign to it a certain priority, and let the government arrange its fiscal affairs in such manner that the objectives set by that priority can be achieved. The report goes on to say there is also a need—> —for continuing evaluation of the impact and effectiveness of the growing range and diversity of government programs in relation to their cost; and for increased co-ordination between governments in relation to these matters.

Then at page 262 the report continues:

> Similarly, careful attention should be given to the possible ways in which rising government spending could impinge, with adverse effects on the whole economy, on needed growth in housing, exports, and business investment.

If the government does nothing else but take heed of that advice by the Economic Council of Canada and recognizes that it should not repeat the errors of the past which caused this situation, then we have gone a long way toward finding a solution to these problems. But it is a prerequisite to any solution, Mr. Speaker, to recognize the causes of the situation and to take the advice of the Economic Council not to repeat the same actions which would lead to the same problems.

Other specific suggestions could also be made. I agree with the minister when he states what is the first obligation of the government. As reported at page 2577 of Hansard the Minister of Labour said:

> As I have just indicated, the government intends to devote a larger proportion of its resources to the social needs of the lower income groups and to the trouble spots resulting from the fantastic urban growth that has taken place, in order to provide improved living conditions in urban areas.

I agree that it is the prime responsibility of the government to provide housing for those in greatest need, and I concede that there have been substantial improvements under the National Housing Act in the provision of housing to accommodate people in the low income brackets. But judging from the performance last year and this year, the fact of the matter is that the measures provided under the National Housing Act have not been effective.

For example, during the whole of 1966 only 5,676 housing units were provided under the National Housing Act. We must keep in mind that the Senate report on aging indicated that there is now an immediate requirement for 300,000 such units. In addition to the 5,676 units provided by the public housing authority, another 1,300 units were provided by way of the acquisition and renovation of existing property. In the first six months of 1967 a grand total of 1,170 housing units were provided for those in greatest need in the very low income brackets.

I realize that the minister has been criticized for being absent from the house, but I commend him for having travelled around the country trying to convince provinces and municipalities that these provisions of the act can help them solve their problems. I admit that the provinces and municipalities have been reluctant to accept this proposition, but both the minister and the provinces have made some progress in this field. For example, eight of the provinces have now established agencies to co-ordinate these provisions so that advantage may be taken of them. Nevertheless I still submit to the minister that the provisions themselves require substantial improvement.

One of the biggest difficulties—I have experienced this situation myself—is that the municipalities have to find the finances required to purchase such land and then to service it. Therefore I urge the minister to consider amending the terms of the National Housing Act by going beyond the provision of assistance for sewers and assisting the municipalities in meeting their public housing needs in other ways. I think that this is one of the fields that the municipalities are the most reluctant to enter.

Mr. Nicholson: If the hon. member will permit me a question, does he not know that under the act at the present time there is provision for assisting municipalities and provinces in the acquisition of land, that there are provisions for land assembly to meet future needs?

Mr. Chatterton: Yes, I agree. This is by agreement with the provinces. But the fact of the matter is that the municipalities still find it difficult to provide services. I point out that in some fields the federal government offers no assistance. Also it is only through federal-provincial agreement that assistance is provided in the acquisition of land.

Another aspect which could be improved substantially is that of limited dividend housing. These operations were largely at a standstill last year and only 300 units have been provided this year. Although this field is open to private capital, I think changes should be made in the provisions to ensure that private capital is given the chance to enter that field.

I do not want to take much more time, Mr. Speaker, but I point out that many excellent suggestions are made in the last chapter of the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada under the heading "Policy Implications". I was glad to see that when the minister spoke last Thursday he recognized that there would have to be a thorough, comprehensive study made of the whole question of urbanization. I know this question was mentioned in the throne speech last May, but that was in May, Mr. Speaker. The minister has used the excuse that there are three provincial elections coming up and that we will have to wait until these are over, but I would ask him why he did not conduct this study before. I am sure it is not the personal fault of the minister, but there does seem to be some confusion on the part of the government about what to do first. To my mind an objective, comprehensive study is certainly essential.

The provision of money for housing is not the only problem, as the minister knows. We also have to find the land, and there is the question of transportation to be considered. The whole thing is tied up with education and air pollution and the problem is a broad one. But I must say that unless a reasonable amount of funds is made available to provide housing we will not begin to find a solution. This is an urgent problem for which the government must find a fairly reasonable answer in the very near future.

I am going to move now to a motion which will give those members, particularly those on the other side of the house, who feel that the government by its actions has not contributed in any way to meeting this difficulty an opportunity to indicate their disapproval. It will also give those who feel that the government's policies have been demonstrated to be completely satisfactory and adequate a chance to vote against my motion. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays):

• (4:10 p.m.)

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"This House asserts that the government by its failure to assign priorities to essential programs and to co-ordinate fiscal policy to ensure the carrying out of such programs, has directly contributed to the difficulty of providing adequate housing at reasonable cost; that its recent action with respect to the interest rate has worsened the position of Canadians in the middle and low income brackets;

And this House regrets the failure of the government to recognize the housing shortage as a major crisis requiring immediate and co-ordinated steps for its solution as clearly indicated by the recent report of the Economic Council of Canada."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): The question is on the amendment.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I welcome the amendment moved by the speaker for the official opposition because it clearly expresses our party's objectives vis-à-vis the attitude of the present government to housing needs. I particularly refer to the last part of the amendment which says that the government has failed to recognize at this time the urgency of the housing crisis. I believe that the amendment clearly expresses the feelings not only of the official opposition and of our party but also of the Canadian people at this time. I intend to devote my time to expressing as well as I can what we feel about the utter bankruptcy of the government's policy in the face of the urgent housing situation.

There is little need for me to cite the report of the Economic Council as the previous speaker did that most carefully. To my mind the one thing this government lacks to deal with the housing crisis is the will to deal with it. I do not believe that money, materials or manpower are the essential ingredients which are lacking. The most necessary ingredient that is lacking is the will by this government to give housing the top priority that it ought to have.

Some hon. members may not think that this is a sophisticated way to talk of housing. I do not aim to be sophisticated. I aim to come before this house and to express the needs of my constituency, province and country as ably as I can. In the minds and lives of thousands across this country the need for housing has become the top priority at this time. In spite of the copious warnings in different parts of the Economic Council's report the government has no notion at all of dealing with housing as a matter of top priority.

The report was published approximately a week before we met here on September 25. In the report of the Economic Council are listed five goals of government policy. They are the five most important goals within the domestic field. At the top of the list is supplying adequate housing for the people of this country. No. 2 is educating the growing population; No. 3 is providing employment; No. 4 is maintaining price stability and No. 5 is solving urban problems.

Those of us who spent the summer in our constituencies, particularly if we live in urban constituencies, came to believe from our experience with our constituencies and constituents that housing would be the top to face parliament this fall. The government was warned about this. The Economic Council made it clear that housing should be the top priority in government policy this fall.

We returned to this House on September 25 and what did we find? First, housing was not mentioned at all on the order paper. Where was that question of urgent and top priority in the government's immediate legislative program? Second, we found that the government resisted a discussion of the matter in the house. No provision had been made for discussion. When some hon. members pointed out that this was a matter of grave and urgent concern the government resisted discussing it. Ultimately, under great pressure a period for the discussion of this question was provided.

Third, we discovered that the entire matter of housing had been left for a federal-provincial conference which will be held some time this winter. I know that the provincial elections raise difficulties for housing conferences. Nevertheless, if a matter is of top urgency I maintain that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) ought not to announce that he will meet with the provincial premiers at some future time in the winter to discuss the field of housing. That is not how one handles the No. 1 problem of the country.

Fourth, we heard the announcement two days after parliament reconvened that the interest rate on N.H.A. loans had been raised from 7¼ per cent to 8¼ per cent.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Again, such a measure was flying directly in the face of the advice given by the Economic Council. That body had warned over and over again that housing should not be considered a regulator of the economy and that the money tap should not be turned on and off at will. The Economic Council warned that the housing sector ought to be protected in so far as possible from the full effects of monetary policy and should not have to suffer the full effects of any monetary restraints. Actually when action was taken it did not come in the form of restraints. Instead a go-ahead signal was given to banks and other private lending institutions to add an additional full percentage point to their interest rates.

• (4:20 p.m.)

There were monetary restraints, but they were not on the banks and the lending institutions. A tight money policy was firmly clamped on the ordinary people of this country who can no longer afford to buy homes at the present interest rate.

At present, in order to qualify for an N.H.A. loan at 8¼ per cent one has to have a minimum income of $8,000, and in order to carry a maximum $18,000 mortgage for a 25-year term it will cost $140.28 per month, not counting taxes. Thanks to this new government policy only well-to-do people can now afford to buy houses in Canada. It is the only policy the government has announced to date, and it makes it doubly certain that henceforth only well-to-do people can buy homes in this country. Certainly this was not what the ordinary people were anticipating.

In addition to the high interest rate the profit margin is a big factor in housing for people all across Canada. I have here the September bulletin of the Vancouver housing association, published before the new interest rate was announced. It points out that the shortage of mortgage money is not the only problem facing the home buyer. It also points out that a comparison of 6,000 new house sales in metropolitan Toronto during the first six months of 1965 and 1967 respectively showed that prices had risen by 26 per cent to 48 per cent, depending on areas, during the last two years. The average price of new houses sold this year was very close to $30,000. It adds:

> In the Vancouver area the house cost index prepared for the Society of Residential Appraisers rose by less than 3 per cent between 1966 and 1967, but the price of new houses has risen during the same period by something nearer to 20 per cent, owing to the higher profit margins now obtainable.

What has the government done to control those higher profit margins? Has it done anything to show it would be desirable to control them?

I would like now to deal mainly with those income groups which are suffering tremendously because of the government's lack of recognition of the urgency of the situation. Had I the time, Mr. Speaker, I could tell you about many individual cases in my own riding and in other parts of Vancouver, with which I came in contact this summer. I can think of a woman with two children who travelled throughout that city using rental advertisements in the paprs in seeking a home. She had money to pay a good rental for a house but she could not find one where children were allowed. She had a car to travel around in but nowhere to live except in her sister's already too cramped quarters.

I can think of a woman in my own constituency, an amputation case, confined part time to a wheel chair and the rest of the time on crutches. She had to leave her basement suite, and a pitiful place it was, at the end of September. But she had literally no place to go. She went to all the agencies in Vancouver. First she went to the Vancouver housing authority which deals with low rental subsidized housing. Then she went to all the other various housing associations, including the Vancouver housing association and the registry which was set up for a few days by the mayor's office but which I believe has since been closed.

I am informed that this registry office received some 11 or 12 calls over a period of five or six days offering accommodation, but one of the offers was at a rental of $225 per month. Finally she ended up where she began, with the Vancouver housing authority. There she was told, "We are very sorry. There are 1,700 people waiting for low rent publicly subsidized housing. Some 900 of them are single people like yourself, some of them disabled, but nothing short of death can make a vacancy available. Only death can bring about a vacancy for you or for anyone else in your position."

This is a terrible situation. I do not want to load all the blame upon the minister or the government. These sins go away back. This is a matter of arrears piled on arrears, piled on arrears, and we are sinking deeper and deeper into the quagmire of homelessness in which thousands of people across the country are caught. Something must be done because the problem is urgent.

Earlier this year the Vancouver city council finally took its courage in its hands. In May it produced five projects to provide housing for people with low incomes.

Mr. Nicholson: Does the hon. member not know that it was the Minister of Labour himself, who suggested such action to the city of Vancouver and that at a meeting in Vancouver he pleaded with the Vancouver council to act and said that the federal funds needed were already available?

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I know the minister is interested in this matter personally. I know he has gone to Vancouver and done his best to get various union organizations, co-operative organizations, societies of various kinds, probably veterans' organizations although these have already been involved, and other groups, to take their surplus funds and put them into housing.

Mr. Nicholson: The question I asked was, does the hon. member not know that I pleaded with the representatives of the city council of Vancouver to show more initiative.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, I do know that and I appreciate it. However, this is what happened. In May the Vancouver city council went to the provincial government in Victoria with five projects for housing. In August it took five more projects to Victoria. But since then those project plans have been sitting on the desk of the provincial minister in Victoria, and according to what the provincial government says none of them will be proceeded with until such time as an exhaustive cost probe has been completed by the provincial government.

The Vancouver city council, a creature of the province, having been turned down by its parent, decided to approach Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It begged the corporation to help acquire land for these projects. What was the corporation's answer? Undoubtedly it did what it had to do under the rules. It simply said it could not help in negotiations for the purchase of land at the price to which land had risen.

As a result on September 25, the day parliament reopened, the Vancouver city planner recommended to the council that three of the ten projects be abandoned and that five others be postponed. These eight projects would have provided 484 housing units. The two remaining ones, smaller in size and designed for elderly people, should be proceeded with, according to the city officials. So out of the ten housing projects which the minister urged them to go ahead with, three are to be abandoned, five postponed and only two small ones proceeded with on the recommendation of the city planner. The reason given for this was the high cost of sites which was four times higher than previously and the fact that Victoria could not or would not approve these shared cost projects until their own cost probe was finished. C.M.H.C. in the past had refused to authorize negotiations to buy these sites. The city council met and instead of deciding to adopt the planners' report said they would take two weeks and explore the possibility of getting C.M.H.C. to give them some help. I do not know what will transpire in the period of those two weeks but I imagine that C.M.H.C., with its present instructions and policy, cannot do anything more than has been done in the past.

The problem of land assembly and land cost must be dealt with. I know that it comes under provincial jurisdiction so I do not need to be told this. But here we have a situation in respect of which the city does not have the resources to act. The provincial government apparently will not act at the present time and the federal government takes the attitude that because this is the way things have been done for years it is up to the municipalities to initiate housing developments and projects in this country.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. lady if this speech should not have been given in Victoria, British Columbia, rather than in the national capital?

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): No, and I will give the reason in a moment. Under today's conditions I do not believe we can leave it to the municipalities to initiate housing. They do not have the resources to do so. We are very familiar with the difficulties and unevenness in the provincial situations in this country. I believe that if housing is the overriding national issue and concern—the Economic Council says it is and a lot of us believe it is—then it is a matter of urgent public concern for which the federal government will have to assume the initiative at the present time. I believe that until the federal government does so we will not have any action. I know that the federal government takes the position that it is ready to give help when the provincial governments are ready to move, but I do not think that is good enough. If this is an emergency issue I think Ottawa will have to draft a workable over-all plan in respect of all kinds of housing —public, private, separate domiciles, row housing, garden apartments, high rise, and low rental subsidized housing. When it has worked out the details of such a plan I believe the federal government will then have to send someone across the country to sell this idea in a big way to the people of this country.

I know about the seminars the minister has held throughout the country. I know that within the limit of these he has been doing the best he can. That, however, is not what I mean. I mean that the government of this country will have to devote to the question of housing the same attention and concern that it devoted to the war when the war came along.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): All right; you may put the war in a holy category if you like but I do not. Although there had been a depression and there was no money available for anything, when war broke out we cut the red tape. I know that. I know that if this government took the attitude that housing was a big enough problem to be a matter of national concern it could go to the provinces with a sensible, sound program which would lay out what the federal government, the provincial governments and the municipalities could do.

While speaking of municipalities I might point out that places like Vancouver, Toronto, and I hope Montreal, are big enough that they should be dealt with as regions or regional authorities which do not have to have every jot and tittle signed by the authorities at Victoria, Queen's Park or Quebec. This may not sit well with some people but it sits well with people who do not have housing. These are the people whom we should be considering. We send the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) all over the world to drum up trade because we consider trade to be important. The government devotes money and time to matters of international trade for Canada. We have here a problem which goes to the very root of our Canadian life and yet we do not take it seriously.

Certainly the constitutional issue is important, but why should not constitutional policy at the different levels of government see that the money and the tasks are in the same place so that if the money is to remain in Ottawa the big jobs will be handled by Ottawa, and so on down the line? If some provinces are able and willing to handle some of the big jobs then the big money should be there within their jurisdiction. We will not achieve this by sitting here in Ottawa and saying that they must come here and see us about it.

The problem of housing is the war on poverty. The Privy Council issued a pamphlet before the summer which advises us of the priorities that Canadians have. These are partly because we have not had our sights raised for us by government policy and example. We are told that in an average year Canadians spend $500 million on travel abroad, $1 billion on alcohol, $400 million at the racetracks, $200 million on candy and $30 million on dog and cat food. What we spend on public housing is less than what we spend on dog and cat food.

I am not blaming the minister, but I am saying that the present housing policy is completely ineffective. It is just like holding out a straw to a drowning man. If you say to me, "Well, where is your detailed housing policy", I say to you it is up there in the gallery and in the offices around Ottawa. It is not the ability to set up a housing policy which is lacking at this time, nor is there a lack of brains to do it. We have the ability and the brains in offices throughout Ottawa and in the provinces and cities of this country. It is the will to build homes for the people which is lacking.

Before you say that it will cost too much, let me remind you that the lives of thousands of Canadians across this country have been blighted because of the failure to build decent modern houses. If we take one of the most depressed groups, the Indian people, they have never had a chance because of the hovels and the misery in which they live. They live in hovels in which self-respecting people would not want to keep their animals. Many of them are living in conditions of that kind.

I could take you through areas in my riding where, although we have one fairly decent low-cost subsidized housing project, there are no facilities whatsoever, or at least there were none prior to this summer, for recreation or programs of development of any kind for the people who live there. After a great deal of hard work the Vancouver housing authority finally got the money to put up a fence around two tot lots in order to keep the pre-school children from being injured by traffic on the adjacent streets. Some people did not like the particular locations of these tot lots and felt they could find available land in better areas. One of the Vancouver housing authority officials suggested to me that this was probably right but said, "For goodness sake, don't mention it to Ottawa because we would be required to instal new toilets at such locations and it would take at least two years of negotiation with Ottawa before we could obtain the money for the new toilets." I just mention that as an example of the fact that we are not dealing with these things as we should.

We are supposed to be engaged in a war on poverty and one might ask where we might obtain the money to do the things required. Let me remind hon. members that almost all of the corporation tax revenue received by the federal government is being spent in two areas of federal responsibility, defence and borrowing. It is my feeling that we could cut down a great deal on our defence expenditure, although I realize not everyone will agree with me in this regard. Nevertheless, it is a fact that the federal government is spending about 40 per cent of its total revenue for defence and interest on borrowing.

Surely it is more important for the country to have a sound and satisfied population than to spend a great deal of money on military hardware for defence. We should first consider provision of modern and comfortable homes. I am sure that by doing so we would be spending our money more effectively than by spending it on defence. In this nuclear age it is far more important to have a sound, healthy and happy population than a huge defence system.

Those are the comments I wanted to make this afternoon, and if I have not made them in a satisfactory manner it is because I have not got the capacity to do better. I feel very strongly that I have voiced the opinion of the people in my riding and the whole Vancouver area, particularly so far as urgency is concerned. Hundreds of people in my area will never have the opportunity of becoming home owners because there is no earthly way they can get a down payment. They do not want low rental public housing, although there are thousands of people who require this type of accommodation. I urge the government to consider seriously its new role as we enter the second century of confederation. If we want to keep Canada as one nation we will have to provide a high standard of living, adequate housing and training, and opportunities for all. This government has not yet been prepared to provide leadership in this regard. I am sure the people will continue to demand these things until their needs are satisfied.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this motion that the house go into committee of supply—I was going to say to make some criticism—to make what I would call mainly remarks. We certainly do not have to prove to the minister the housing needs in Canada; he is as convinced as we are about that. We do not have to convince him further. However, we are more inclined to pity him instead of criticizing him severely. We pity this team caught in a strait jacket because of our fiscal system which imposes its will on Canada as a whole and makes puppets out of our ministers.

Each time I study some characteristics of our fiscal system, I feel the presence of a hidden power that it is impossible for us to determine for the very good reason that it hides behind legislation. That despicable power often forces the government to do things it would rather not to do and not to do things that it would very much like to do.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak not only to the minister but to the people of Canada to draw their attention to the matters which interest us, namely housing and the fiscal system in general. I would like to give the results of a little study of the hidden side of our fiscal system.

This afternoon, I should like to find out through an X-ray or an electronic detecting machine the real thinking of those responsible for this system which is imposed on the entire population. Sincerely, Mr. Speaker, after more than five years in this house and after two and a half months of adjournment which I spent travelling throughout my constituency to question various groups, individuals, representatives of private industry, to know the effects among the people of the legislation we vote here, I am definitely disappointed.

The conclusion I have drawn from all these visits and discussions is that fiscal legislation is strictly a smoke screen to hide the true purpose of the government, which is to tax the individual, when such legislation is not simply a web of inequities. That is pretty well the conclusion I have reached after working in my constituency during the holidays.

It is always interesting for a worker to observe the result of one, two, three, four or five years' work and frankly, Mr. Speaker I was somewhat depressed when I realized the uneasiness which is rampant in my area. I can understand this uneasiness all the more since I have lived through it and discussed it with these people, since I belong to the people and I have also suffered the effects of certain legislation for which, this time, I cannot directly blame the government or the administrators.

However, as I said at the beginning, we can feel a power beyond the governments, a financial power which enforces its will upon the country and prevents the government from getting the money where it is. Every day, we find some means to fleece the people a little bit more, squeezing a few cents more and forgetting the mighty who live off the blood of our people. Well, I want these words to reach the people, to awaken them and incite them to free our leaders. If they lack the courage to free themselves, let them give up their seat so that others, capable of facing reality, may take their place.

Mr. Speaker, we have considerable evidence of the inequity of the present system. In fact, I have selected two or three instances and I shall start with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, one of our good crown corporations, which is supposed to help large Canadian families to secure low cost housing.

While all Canadians were waiting for our legislation to become owners, how did we answer them to help them achieve their purpose? We are raising the rate of interest to 8¼ per cent, and then we have the nerve to say that it is intended to provide low cost housing. After having taxed building materials at 11 per cent, not to mention those 20, 30, or even 100 hidden taxes on these materials, we are now increasing the interest rate to such an extent that I, today, can go to any financier, to get a loan at 8 per cent. And the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which claims to help small home-owners, provides loans at 8¼ per cent. Why are we imposing this torture upon people. Why do we force the head of a family to pay for his little house, once to finance, and once to the contractor? Why?

Mr. Mongrain: It is three times.

Mr. Gauthier: I will say three times: once as taxes, once as interest and once to the builder. That is how you divide the monthly payments on property. But why? Is there anyone in the department who is serious enough to answer that question? Why do taxes and finance cost twice as much as building materials? It is utterly ridiculous!

Moreover, the average C.M.H.C. loan is $9,000, whereas the smallest houses—I made inquiries this summer—cost $14,000, $15,000, $16,000, $18,000 and $20,000. But do you think that a prospective owner can finance the construction of a $20,000 house with a $9,000 C.M.H.C. loan? It is impossible. How sensible is the C.M.H.C. Act?

Some members of this house travel around the country saying: Look at what we have done. Then at the end of the year, the government will put on our statute books all the legislation it has passed. When one takes the trouble to study those measures, one soon realizes that most are only smoke screens designed to cover up the actual truth. And the C.M.H.C. Act is one of those. Heads of families are led to believe that they can readily obtain the money needed to build a small house.

If only that head of a family was not forced to go through a contractor to get a loan from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That is another trick. The contractor will make a profit of 30 or 35 per cent, while the owner could get a loan to buy the necessary materials to build his house. No, he must accept the plans and specifications of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, go through a contractor and pay again that small financier after all the other sorts of finances.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is only a smoke screen. Not even 10 per cent of the low-income people could qualify under the provisions of that legislation. I do not remember which hon. member said a few days ago that a man, the head of a family who earns $5,000 or $6,000 cannot even think of building himself a house, because he does not earn enough to take advantage of that legislation. And I believe this.

But does the head of a family have to struggle over the payment of a house when the main concern of the government is to pass legislation to protect and assist the people, to lay down conditions so that the head of a family may be able to become a home-owner?

I say, at this point, that the government is certainly not doing what it should, not because it does not want to, but because it is prevented from doing so by this financial power. What I say today—and I am not afraid to say it—is that where financial matters are concerned, it is not the government that is leading. It is quite another system, and our governments are the victims thereof. There are men of good will among the ministers, but they are bound, hand and foot, and lack the possibility of enabling our Canadian families to get a home.

Let us consider once more the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. I told you that I had spent the summer touring my constituency. In fact, I did more than that, for I came every week to Ottawa, endeavouring to solve such problems as were submitted to my attention. I also went to Quebec; in short, I travelled everywhere, trying to find out what was wrong.

Let me tell you about an experience I have had with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which experience floored me. C.M.H.C. now grants loans for the construction of old folks' homes. There again—I will prove to you that it is nothing but a smoke screen—they do not go about it directly but in a round about way.

Out of 11 applications in our area in the last two or three years, only one home was built. Only one, and even at that, those who were granted the authorization to build it had to fight to the last. One! Yet we pay people, bureaucrats to attend to the needs of the people. The second permit was held up—was blocked, in common language—for two years. The people responsible for organizing the benevolent association had gone from door to door and collected $17,000 to build that home. Then, for two years, those $17,000 were frozen there, all plans held up, and things got to the point where it was decided not to build.

Well, when the people decided to come and see me, I told them: "Friends, let us take the bull by the horns." I went to Ottawa to see what had been done. I went to the office in Hull, to see what was going on in the province of Quebec. I also looked into what was being done in Ontario. I went to Quebec because we are dealing with a joint plan. Talk about joint plans: the federal government says: See Quebec about it. Quebec says: See the federal government. I therefore went to all concerned.

And do you know what I found out? That the federal office in Chicoutimi was holding up the works. I can give you the name of the manager of that office if you want it. I even told him: "Your name has never been given out in the house; be careful that it is not."

• (5:00 p.m.)

They twice invited tenders; the first time, there were four tenderers, the second time, five. But the tenders were too high. I asked the officials if they had some kind of norms to determine whether a tender was too high or too low. I discovered that the norms in general—I was unable to obtain the specifications and will tell you why later—were $5,000 per bed in Quebec and $7,000 in Ontario.

The Quebec norm was established at $5,000, probably because the cost of living is higher in Ontario—I do not know—and in that province, they are entitled to build nicer houses than in Quebec. The norm was $7,000 per bed in Ontario and $5,000 in Quebec.

But our people in Chicoutimi had the lowest tender at $4,200 per bed, and it was still too much. I asked the office manager: Why do you refuse? He answered: Because our estimator thinks it is too much. The estimator no longer takes into account a norm of $5,000, $4,000 or $7,000 per bed; he is an estimator. I asked the office manager: Who is your estimator? And he told me: a student. A student estimator, Mr. Speaker. That is a qualified estimator, imagine, a student!

Well, I asked him: Did you send your papers to Ottawa? He answered: No, no! He was causing these people to believe that the papers had been in Ottawa for two years, when here, at the headquarters, there was nothing. I told him: Tomorrow, immediately, send the papers to Ottawa and we will then see. As for me, I shall go back to Ottawa. After a week of discussions, the work resumed. The headquarters here in Ottawa accepted and the construction started a fortnight ago. I asked that chief: I do not know what are the orders, but let me have the rules that govern you, you bureaucrats, in that matter. He told me: We are forbidden from giving them to you. To me, a member of parliament, he said: We are forbidden from giving them to you. Then I told him: Listen, the legislation governing the building of homes for the aged is perfect. I studied it. But even if the act is perfect, is there some unknown body whose regulations can prevent the good administration of the act, cancel the good effects of the act. That is what I wanted to know. But I could not see their regulations and even less the standards which help them determine if they should grant a loan of $5,000, $7,000 or $4,000. I wrote to the department to get that information because I thought that I would find out through the minister. There are still secret regulations unknown to the elected representatives of the people but at the disposal of the bureaucrats. Bureaucrats. And I like to say it openly because I do not know why I was refused that information.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: May I rise on a point of order? I may have misunderstood the hon. member, but I understood him to say he had applied to me for information. I have no recollection of any such request and if the hon. member made such a request I would like to know what it was and when he made it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: No, I will say to the minister that he misunderstood me. I am not at all referring to the department, I am only speaking of the Chicoutimi office where bureaucrats told me that they have some regulations for the administration of the act in the various districts. I would have liked to obtain those regulations but I was told that they were unable to provide them. I wish to know the truth about that matter.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the hon. member, who has ready access to the minister, has ever asked the minister for any information along these lines on any single occasion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister most sincerely, and as a matter of fact, I left my friend in Chicoutimi with these words: If I am unable to obtain from your office, I am sure that the minister will make them available to me. And I am still waiting for that information in order to complete my investigation and find out exactly what went wrong. We finally reached the construction stage, after a delay of two years and a half, not because of the head office here in Ottawa or of the Quebec office, but because of a small local office. A great many things are going to happen, because there are still ten applications from my area and others will keep coming in.

Homes for older persons are urgently needed in my district and I feel that in the future there should not be a two years' delay after an application has been received to have it approved. This is a proof, as I said earlier, that certain means are resorted to in order to thwart the object of the legislation for the construction of homes for older citizens and which is in fact almost perfect. Another piece of legislation which is a smoke screen is the one providing for a $30 monthly increase for old age pensioners.

All the newspapers announced that the old people would receive $30. That is another new piece of legislation, as reported in the newspapers, but what is it, really? Everybody will have to pay more taxes for the benefit of 24 or 25 per cent of the population, although we were told that all senior citizens would benefit from this allowance. I know old people who receive $1, $2 or $3 per month; you go and talk to them and you will see that they are aware of the effects of the act. And all this was anticipated, as I have said when the bill was passed; however, it was passed just to add one more act to the statutes.

And it was the same with the Canada Pension Plan, the very same thing: always to get more, levy another tax, and fleece the sheep a little closer!

Discussion on Housing

For instance, take the case of a young man, aged 18; at first, he will pay $156 per year into the pension plan at age 18, and at age 65, if you add it up,—I did it during the holidays,—if, for 45 years, he pays $156 per year at a yearly interest rate of 6%, which is loaned at 6% yearly, after 45 years, his total contribution will be $35,000, and for what? A monthly pension of $104! Not even the total interest on the $35,000 that he would now be able to draw.

It is the man who lives to the age of 65 who will benefit. Again, this is not an act to provide security, but to tax the individual's security, to fleece him afterwards. If at least, the same efforts were made to find ways of getting money out of the pockets of rich people who exploit the country night and day, who pay $1 for what is worth $1,000, in brief, if our leaders racked their brains as much to find out or ferret out the hideouts where banks, for instance, stash away their secret loot, or to tax large corporations who exploit our resources for which they paid nothing. For instance, in the province of Quebec, iron ore is given away at half a cent per ton and bought at $300. But there, governments remain silent as the grave, they do not dare say a word and that is where we see the secret power—and the stronger the power the more silent it is—which imposes its will upon our leaders.

It is not because Liberals are here today; leaders have always been the same. We were the victims of financial powers, and still are today. We still have men in the government; I have said so in the beginning. I do not wish to criticize men, for they are the victims and I pity them. As a matter of fact, they are the victims of this infernal system which reduces our people to slavery. They are victims, and that is why I am making a speech today; it is for the population as well as for parliament, for I am trying to shatter this power which extends from one ocean to the other.

I also said that our laws, apart from being a smokescreen, are a web of injustice. And to name only one, I will simply mention the Income Tax Act.

In a few days, I will have the opportunity of presenting a notice of motion on that very subject. I simply wish to speak about income tax, particularly as it affects the worker and as opposed to the exemptions from which companies, trusts and banks still benefit. The worker pays taxes on his gross salary, even though he has four, five, six and seven children to feed. The income tax is deducted right off, without his permission being asked. His daily bread is taken away, while trusts and large companies benefit from generous deductions.

For several years now, for example, we have asked for a reduction in the income tax paid by lumbermen. Nowadays they need a power saw and safety equipment, and they have to travel. The government has been asked to allow these workers to deduct from their income tax the price of their power saws and all their working equipment, as well as the maintenance costs which often reach $500, $600 or even $700.

Domtar enjoys tax exemptions for maintenance and every imaginable and possible depreciation on stationary machinery. A $400 or $500 tax deduction is asked for the head of a family who goes to break his back in the bush, a deduction of $500, $600 or $700 to buy his tools and pay his travelling expenses: No, it is impossible.

It is unfair. When a self-employed individual files his tax return at the end of the year, he will make every deduction he can and hide everything he can. That is all right, but the worker will be fleeced every week without the right to complain. If he does not submit, he will be thrown in jail. Do you not see the inequity of this legislation?

We had to put up with quite a lot; no wonder the people are dissatisfied. Do not play the hypocrites. You know it as well as I do.

The people are dissatisfied because their representatives are not acting in their best interests and fail to perform their duty as members of the House of Commons, that is, to protect society.

I wish that those words be mulled over not only by the people, but by all members. I ask them to examine their conscience in an attempt to come down to earth and to put the general interest before private interest.

This is what I was told by a great parliamentarian upon my arrival in parliament. It struck me and it is true. Here, we must first and foremost, in every area, whether a labour question or something else, make sure that the general interest comes first.

Well, I say that, particularly in the financial field, the general interest, the welfare of the people must come before the interest of any individual whether it is a trust, a bank, a chartered bank, or whatever it is. It is our duty to defend the welfare of the people against these hidden powers.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on the very important subject being debated this afternoon will be brief and, I trust, to the point.

The announcement of the minister last Wednesday to the effect that the maximum interest rate chargeable on home ownership mortgages and rental housing loans will be raised to 8¼ per cent came, I believe, as a further shock both to the building industry and to the average Canadian who is looking forward to building and owning a home. I cannot help but sympathize with the minister because I know he faces a very difficult problem. Nevertheless, somewhere among the responsibilities of the minister and his department there must lie an answer different from that which is being provided at the present time.

The suggestion that raising the interest rates at the present time to this level will encourage private investors to invest in the homebuilding industry is a plausible hope. However, this kind of incentive to those who are interested and of necessity concerned with the building and acquisition of homes is one that will have to be paid for, and I feel there should be a different answer to this very critical problem.

• (5:20 p.m.)

A little while ago I picked up a chart illustrating the cost of interest on mortgages for homes and I was appalled to discover just how much the home owner is required to pay even at past rates of interest, not to mention present rates. Even at 7 per cent, Mr. Speaker, a $12,000 mortgage, which we will say is the average mortgage for the average home, will in 20 years cost the home owner more that $10,000 by way of interest, or a total of $22,000. In 30 years the interest charge alone is more than $16,000, or a total of $28,500. But when one takes the present rate of 8¼ per cent one finds that in 20 years a $12,000 mortgage will cost $13,000 more than the cost of the home itself, or a total in excess of $25,000. In 30 years the cost of the $12,000 mortgage at 8¼ per cent, will exceed the cost of the home by $18,000 or a total cost of more than $30,000. Thus the cost of the $12,000 mortgage comes to 2½ times the purchase price. If one takes a $15,000 mortgage at 8¼ per cent, the cost will be in excess of $45,000 in 35 years, three times the original cost of the home. This shows the terrible and iniquitous aspect of our present housing policy. I believe it is imperative for this country to find a completely new approach to the financing of home construction.

The minister said that the cause of the problem has been in large measure the rush to urbanization in Canada. That may have something to do with it. Yet people need homes no matter where they live, whether in the rural areas or in the cities or towns of Canada. Furthermore, the present trend has been foreseen for a number of years. It is not new. This phenomenon is taking place across the world. Unfortunately, the Canadian approach to providing capital for home construction is far behind the approach adopted by many other countries of the world.

As I say, this is not a new problem and we cannot entirely blame the minister for not having a policy at this time or for bringing about the situation we are debating this afternoon. The problem goes back at least four or five years. In turning back to an old copy of Hansard of 1954 I was interested to see that in a debate on the Bank Act my predecessor in this party, Mr. Solon Low, drew attention clearly to the problem of financing home construction in this country. That is long ago, 13 years. Unfortunately, successive governments have not developed a policy that is adequate to meet this problem.

I have recently returned from a strategy and policy conference in Taiwan. It was called through the initiative of the peoples of the free Asian nations. Its purpose was to study the problems posed by the threat of communism in many parts of the world and to see what strategy or policy should be adopted to prove to the peoples of the world that the answer to their needs for shelter, food and the basics of life can be met better by the free way of life that we enjoy in Canada than by the socialism or communism which is so prevalent in the world today.

One aspect of the conference impressed me. I saw that one of the surer safeguards against communism exists where people have the privilege of owning their homes. It is evident that where people own their own homes, where home ownership is a basic ingredient of life, the people have no interest in communism or other forms of revolutionary activity. I am concerned that in Canada, with our basic way of life and with our strong economy which has such great potential, we cannot find an adequate answer to the problem of providing homes for our people.

Discussion on Housing

It is conservatively estimated that we shall need about a million new homes in Canada in the next seven years. With costs of construction and materials increasing year by year, this means an investment within the next seven years of between $12 billion to $15 billion to provide our people with adequate and proper shelter. How are we to meet this goal? Certainly not by increasing interest rates. These rates have risen from 5 per cent to 8¼ per cent in the last few years. The government is specifically responsible for this problem and it must find the solution to it. A way must be found to finance home construction in Canada. I submit that the government would be well advised to seek a new approach to the housing question.

Housing is so important for the welfare of our people that the needs of the housing industry for money should not be met on the open market where high interest rates are charged. Housing capital cannot be placed in the same category as investment capital which will provide a return when the investment develops. The sooner we realize that housing capital falls into a category different from investment and resource capital, the sooner we shall find a new approach to the problem. The money required for housing ought to be given special consideration so far as interest rates are concerned. I therefore suggest to the minister that he would be well advised to set up a national housing fund. It should be a revolving fund, with the money that is paid back on home mortgages being lent again to provide more capital for more new houses.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not know that that is what happens now, that all the money that comes back on housing loans goes right into new housing in addition to the hundreds of millions of dollars more provided each year by government and parliamentary action?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I am aware of that, but the minister refers to something that is slightly different from my suggestion. The operation of the present policy is not adequate. Initially this revolving fund ought to have not less than $5 billion. Some of that money will return as mortgages are paid and will be returned in new loans. If it is found after a period of years, that this fund is not sufficient, then possibly $500 million a year through private investment might be put into this field. The revolving aspect of the fund would grow year by year, keeping pace with the need for new housing.

[Mr. Thompson.]

Certain government moneys or certain areas of government income ought to be used to provide money for this fund. It seems to me that resource development income is a legitimate type of income which, so far as government is concerned, could well be transferred to another type of resource investment. Certainly there is no more important kind of resource investment than housing. But beyond this it seems to me that money must be provided for housing investment at low interest. It would not be unreasonable if the government in setting up the kind of fund I am talking about would consider an interest rate of 2 per cent or 3 per cent per year.

As the policy of the government builds up year by year a greater obligation in foreign investment we are giving soft loans to foreign countries over long periods, up to 50 years, and charging no interest at all. In some areas this soft loan investment or aid to foreign countries is merely carrying a service charge of approximately half of one per cent. If this is necessary to aid developing countries in other parts of the world I am not against the policy. It is a legitimate type of aid. But how much more necessary it is to have a similar policy in Canada to meet an urgent need. We need an urgent aid program ourselves because if we do not do anything we shall blunder along as we are at present, with the housing backlog year by year becoming greater than it was the previous year.

I am not making an unreasonable suggestion. A previous speaker pointed out that if a war broke out in which Canada found itself necessarily involved there would be no question but that we would have to get the money to finance the war. To compare a war situation with a housing situation may seem farfetched, but the crisis and the need are just the same so far as our economy and the welfare of the Canadian people are concerned.

In this connection my mind goes back to world war II. I believe it was in 1943 that the then minister of finance, Mr. Ilsley, announced a large loan to finance the war effort. Nobody in the House of Commons raised any objection because the urgency and the need for the money were evident. Nevertheless a question was asked of Mr. Ilsley as to how much he was paying as interest on the money. The answer was three-quarters of 1 per cent. He was then asked how it was, when the average interest rate was 4 per cent or 5 per cent, that he could get money at three quarters of 1 per cent. His reply was: "That is what it cost. In view of the war effort and the crisis we are in, why should we pay more than it cost?"

If we could finance the war effort with money at that rate, then it seems to me that money to meet the housing crisis in Canada should be available at less than 8¼ per cent. It seems to me it would be a good policy if the Bank of Canada were used to provide the part of this fund, say half a billion dollars a year, that is not available from some special source of income such as I referred to previously. If this were done a $12,000 home would not cost $25,000 at the end of a 20-year purchase period. The cost would be cut from $25,000 to $15,000 or $16,000.

My point in bringing this up this afternoon is simply to emphasize the fact that it is not good enough to go along in the manner in which we have been proceeding during the past few years. Each year the backlog becomes greater. Each year the need becomes more imperative and yet each year the only alternative seems to be to raise interest rates and thus put the increasing cost of acquiring homes on the shoulders of the people who can least afford it.

I strongly urge the minister that in his consultations with his cabinet colleagues he see to it that the government comes up with a different approach to the question of financing home construction. As long as this is not done it seems to me it will be impossible for anyone on this side of the house to express confidence in the government on this kind of issue, simply because the facts are so clearly before us.

That is the gist of what I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker. In summary, what we are being offered today as a solution to the housing problem is inadequate, and the problem will continue to grow, as it has for the last number of years, until it reaches a point where it will become impossible to solve. I suggest that a new approach be taken. I suggest that we stop fiddling around with policies that over and over again have proven to be unable to meet the need.

We should use our own resources to provide the homes that we need. We have the building materials. We have the cement and the gravel to provide the foundations for basements. We have building materials in ample abundance to build not one million homes in the next ten years but two million homes if necessary. We have the tools, the manpower and the know-how. Why can we not do it? It is because we are tied to an antiquated financial policy totally inadequate to fulfil our potential. Surely there ought to be something better. I realize it is a difficult problem for the minister but I hope he will take the lead in providing an alternative policy to what he is now suggesting.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, in debating the amendment before us we are dealing with something fundamental for all Canadians, the need for shelter and decent housing. As the director of the special project on low income housing for the Canadian Welfare Council put it in a recent speech, "House and home stand at the centre of people's lives."

Listening to the remarks of the spokesman for the official opposition and to those of other members who have participated in the debate, one would have thought it would have been better if more time had been devoted to analysing our present situation with respect to what could be done about the availability and the cost of housing, as well as our ability to provide the funds, both from government and from the private sector, in order to do as much as is necessary to make sure our people have available to them decent housing at a cost they can afford. However, listening in particular to the remarks of the spokesman for the official opposition it seemed to me he attempted to dwell more on the past, and his analysis was based more on trying to attribute blame and find reasons for failure with respect to the present situation.

Because of the approach adopted by the mover of the amendment it is at least in part necessary for us to look back over the same period of time, and when we do that we must carry out a somewhat similar analysis. But first of all I would like to draw to the attention of the house the inconsistency and contradiction which lie behind the presentation of the amendment, an inconsistency and a contradiction so great that the seemingly attractive wording of the amendment do not make up for them, with the result that it seems to me that reasonable and fairminded people in this house, no matter what their concern about the housing situation may be, could not possibly support the amendment.

According to the spokesman for the official opposition the government has aggravated —that is the exact word that was used—the present situation by its spending. In other words, the spokesman for the official opposition in effect is saying that the government has aggravated the situation by spending money on youth allowances, student loans, payments to the dairy industry and increased old age pensions for our senior citizens. He is saying we have aggravated the situation by spending more money on incentives to help areas of slow growth and industrial recession. In effect the official opposition is saying that we have aggravated the situation by tripling the amount—$900 million has been spent in 1967—spent on housing by this government over that spent by the official opposition when it was in office. That is the reason that today they are in the position where they belong, in the opposition.

The official opposition is now saying that we should eliminate or cut back the programs we have put into effect. These are programs which we presented to this parliament. In the main they were supported by the official opposition. On a number of occasions they even called upon us to accelerate the timing of these measures. Are they in effect saying that we should cut out the youth allowances, the studen loans, the incentives to industry and slow growth areas? Are they saying we should eliminate the guaranteed income supplement for older Canadians? This would appear to be a not unreasonable analysis of what the spokesman for the official opposition had to say in putting forward his amendment this afternoon.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The usual nonsense.

Mr. Gray: Are they saying we should not have trebled the spending on housing since the present government took office in 1963? This also seemed to be implicit in the argument put forward in respect of the amendment which is before us.

The spokesman for the official opposition has spoken critically of the borrowing and the deficits of this government. A large proportion of the borrowing has been necessary in part to raise money for housing. Had this money not been spent there would be a much worse situation in respect of housing than there is today. I might add that these comments about deficits came from a very good source, because no other group in this house has a greater knowledge of deficits and how to create them than the official opposition. The difference between the deficits of their day and what we may have now is that their deficits did not come about through a program to increase the growth of the country, to increase jobs or housing starts in this country. They came about through mismanagement. This is something which was recognized at the polls by the voters of this country.

Mr. Keays: Get down to facts and stop talking about the past.

Mr. Gray: If members of this house and the public wish to pursue the same type of analysis made the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) and develop it, they will come to the conclusion that at least in part with respect to our present housing situation one cannot overlook as a cause the neglect, lack of concern and lack of priorities on the part of the official opposition when it had the opportunity as the government of this country to deal with this problem.

It seems to me that a prime reason for the efforts we have been making and must continue to make is that we have to deal with a problem which accumulated when the need for housing of all types was not dealt with by the previous government in any way which could be termed even slightly effective. The building which should have been carried out, the planning which should have been undertaken and the projects which should have been under way between 1957 and 1962 were not carried out. Certainly it is obvious, at least in my opinion, that the present government has to deal not only with the matter of our growing economy and growing population at the present time but also has to make up for what was not done between 1957 and 1962.

Let me attempt to buttress this point by citing some examples. Did the previous government pass legislation to make possible federal loans covering 90 per cent of the cost of public housing for families and senior citizens? Did it make possible National Housing Act loans for older homes? Did it increase to the present level of $18,000 the maximum amount available through N.H.A. mortgage loans? Did it increase by billions of dollars the total amount available through C.M.H.C. for housing and urban renewal programs? Did it take the initiative which led to the creation of the provincial housing corporations in most of the provinces and which over the past few years has enabled the provinces to take care of their constitutional responsibilities in this field more adequately? The answer is obvious. The previous government did none of these things. These things came into effect only after the present government took office.

Let me cite an example in my area of Windsor. The people in this area know very well the situation with which they had to contend before the present government took office in 1963. The present government certainly did make efforts in this regard which were very successful in helping to overcome the unemployment and lack of growth that prevailed during the years of office of the previous government. I am informed that since September of 1965 695 public housing units for families and senior citizens have been or are almost completed. In the years between 1957 and 1962 only one project of some 137 units was planned and built. If I am not mistaken, almost half of the public housing units in the city of Windsor today came about through the initiative and legislation in the matter of housing of the present government.

There has been a lot of talk about housing starts and certainly there is justifiable concern about the level of starts this year and what may happen in the coming year. I was informed this afternoon that while housing starts in the Windsor area from January to August, 1966 totalled 761 the number of starts in the same period this year totalled 928. I am not suggesting there is not still a lot more to be done both in the Windsor area and across the country to help provide adequate and decent housing at reasonable cost for the people of this country, but I certainly think it is wrong to urge, as the spokesman for the opposition did in presenting his amendment to us, that it should be adopted and, in other words, the government defeated.

I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who call for increased federal initiative and activity in the housing area, but at the same time I cannot ignore the fact, under our existing constitutional arrangements, of provincial responsibility and jurisdiction. While calling for greater federal concern and initiative, I think it is also very important at this time to call for greater provincial concern and responsibility when it comes to operating in this vital area of national policy.

Let me cite some examples. In June of 1966 the Ontario Housing Corporation carried out a survey in the Windsor area in respect of housing needs. One of the recommendations which resulted from this survey was that in each of the years 1966 and 1967 a total of 350 units of public housing—300 family units and 50 senior citizen units—would be sufficient for the community's need. There have been hundreds of applications filed with the housing authority, the city of Windsor building corporation, which is in large part responsible for senior citizen housing. The remarks in Windsor city council and by many others would certainly indicate that at the present time there is room in Windsor for a substantially greater effort in the public housing field, and certainly that is my view. However, at the same time, under our existing structure this is still a matter for initiative by the provincial government. I might say, and I will enlarge upon this later in my remarks, that in spite of the provincial constitutional position there is room at the present time for greater federal initiative. The point I am trying to make is that even taking these facts into account, under the existing laws and the existing financial arrangements in the province of Ontario and across this country, provincial governments at this time could be doing a lot more than they are doing to help alleviate the present housing situation.

Let me mention another matter which perhaps has a more local application. There is a public housing project being constructed at this time in the Bloomfield road area of Windsor. At one point, although a number of these units had been completed permission was not granted by the Ontario Housing Corporation for occupation by families that had been assigned to them. The explanation given was that even though the units themselves had been completed the landscaping had not been finished and the sidewalks were not laid. I wonder about a provincial government which, even though it may have had the best of motivations, seems to put greater importance on landscaping, lawns and sidewalks than the basic need for shelter.

Let me refer to another point which seems to me to deserve much greater importance than it receives at this time. There is a lot more room for effort by provincial governments to take advantage of existing legislation in order to carry out greater and more numerous projects of land assembly. One of the problems referred to in the debate today and last week is that relating to the cost of land. Certainly there is room for greater activity in the federal-provincial land assembly area. This means at this time greater activity by provincial governments which would have some positive effect on the availability of land at a reasonable cost. If properly serviced land is not available in this way, this undoubtedly is a factor which creates a serious effect on the cost of housing.

Mr. Grafftey: Just another lecture to the provinces. You are hiding behind the constitution again.

Mr. Gray: I do not suggest that the present distribution of powers in respect of responsibility as to some matters of social welfare is a distribution which brings about the most effective solution to these problems under twentieth century conditions, but the constitution as interpreted by the courts exists and it is simply not fair to the public to say—I am trying to use moderate language—that this constitutional division of responsibility between provincial and federal governments does not exist.

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Gray: I will answer questions when I have completed my remarks.

Mr. Grafftey: Is this crisis not of national concern?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, and of provincial concern.

Mr. Gray: I will deal with this aspect later in my remarks. As the hon. member suggests, it is of national concern, but it is also of provincial and local concern. I do not hesitate to say, as I have said already, that it is one in respect of which the federal government must be prepared to take immediate and ever-increasing initiatives in line with its present abilities to find a method of carrying out this and other programs which the people of Canada expect.

Mr. Knowles: That is what the amendment suggests.

Mr. Gray: There has been a lot of comment today and last week about the increase in the N.H.A. interest rate. It should again be stressed that this rate is the maximum rate of interest which can be charged for mortgages insured under the National Housing Act. There may be arguments about the effect of this rate, and certainly they must be considered, but often this change is referred to in terms which seem to indicate that the government has fixed the rate at 8¼ per cent for all National Housing Act mortgages. That is simply not the case. Surely it is in order to stress again that the government has not decreed that all National Housing Act mortgages should bear 8¼ per cent interest, even though I agree there may be some argument about the effect of this step.

The aim of the government, as I understand it, is to encourage a range of rates below the 8¼ per cent ceiling in order to provide more funds from the private sector and, hopefully, lower rates for housing purposes through market forces. At the end of last week, and I speak subject to correction, the Bank of Montreal indicated that its mortgages for housing would be available at the rate of 7¾ per cent. If that is correct it would indicate that, rather than having created a single fixed rate for all mortgages in the housing field, the action of the government is a step toward its goal of providing a range of rates below 8¼ per cent for housing mortgages. It is hoped that in many areas of the country this rate will be well below the 8¼ per cent maximum. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Old Age Security—inquiry as to possible increase in pensions; the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), Health and Welfare—payments to provinces under hospital legislation; the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Pugh), Royal Canadian Mint—inquiry as to production of centennial coinage.

Pursuant to provisional standing order 6 (1) and standing order 15(4) I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Chatterton.

HOUSING—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, when this house recessed at six o'clock I was pointing out that the government had merely made the 8¼ per cent rate the maximum rate and had not moved, as some have attempted to suggest, to make it the sole rate for insured lending under the National Housing Act. At the same time, while recognizing that the government's intentions in making this move were of the best, with the aim of attempting to attract more private funds into the home mortgage market, I wish to make clear that in my opinion raising the ceiling of the interest rate in this way is at most a partial and an incomplete answer to the need for more housing. It is certainly not the answer for those earning $8,000 a year or less.

The government must be prepared to take further initiatives to assist people with moderate and lower incomes to have decent housing, in addition to the steps already taken which I referred to earlier in my remarks. This must be done if private enterprise cannot or will not do the job adequately. The Windsor Star, in a recent editorial which I must admit was not particularly favourable to the change in the maximum rate, made this point:

> It is a curious feature of our economy that money seemingly is available for almost everything but that which is most needed. It's apparently possible to get money for new supermarkets, sky-scraping office buildings, etc., but not for homes for the people.
> This illustrates once again that our private enterprise system has failed lamentably in the post-war period in the field of housing. The situation is acute and becoming more so. It would be quite desperate were it not for governmental housing developments, subsidies, etc.

The editorial reads in part:

> It may be the day is coming when most housing will be built by public enterprise. Housing will be provided by governments, just as educating, water, police and fire protection and many other essentials now are provided.

The editorial, at another point, reads:

> This is just another example of governmental intervention brought about by failure of private enterprise to meet public needs.

I have said that the change in the maximum rate cannot be the sole answer to the need for more housing. However, I recognize the significance of the situation surrounding the federal government's present borrowing ability. It will help no one Mr. Speaker, to call for measures which would worsen this situation and which would make it more difficult for the federal government to finance its activities at this time.

I think that measures calling for increased borrowing at this time will increase the upward pressure on interest rates, the present levels of which are of concern to many. This will lead to increasing inflationary pressures which hurt everyone, especially those with lower incomes. The other side of the coin, of course, is that the public at large is concerned about the present level and burden of taxation; and, of course, taxation is obviously the government's only other immediate source of funds.

We must act responsibly to improve this situation, so we will be in a position to move ahead in the housing area as quickly as possible in ways that may call for further expenditure. In the meantime we must spend the moneys the federal government has available in ways that provide the most to areas of greatest immediate need in housing. The federal government must be prepared not only to explore but to move into new areas both with existing funds and funds which may be raised in the future, to ensure the filling of the basic need for housing, something which is coming to be considered, if it is not already considered, a basic right of Canadians.

While recognizing provincial constitutional responsibility—and I referred to this question earlier in my remarks—I think there is room at this time for greater federal initiative and action. I think the time has come for a federal minister having as his sole responsibility federal government action in the field of housing and urban affairs. I believe there is a great deal to be said for the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn), calling for the creation of special house building corporations in effective partnership with the provinces, if possible, or under federal auspices alone, if necessary, to build houses at reasonable cost as was done by the wartime housing corporation.

I believe the emergency is of such proportions, in spite of the efforts taken and the achievements that have resulted through measures to which I referred earlier, that this type of initiative could be justified and could very well be supported in the event of a test being made of the constitutional question. I think, too, that the time has come to explore making mortgages available, either by allocating a portion of our existing funds or other funds that will be raised in future, directly by the federal government with interest rates subsidized by the federal government, to people with lower incomes.

Certainly, it is time we reached the situation where there is government action, federal government action if necessary, in partnership with the provinces if possible, to buy and hold—to stockpile, in other words—land across the country to help eliminate speculation and profiteering in land. This is something which in my opinion creates unjustifiable pressures on the cost of land and is a vital factor in the question of the cost of housing today.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the time has not come to consider the possibility of creating disincentives to private builders who prefer to concentrate on office buildings and luxury dwellings rather than doing more in the field of private homes.

While calling on this government to do more in the field of housing, I certainly would say that this government, contrary to what has been suggested by hon. members opposite, has not failed to recognize the nature of the problem in the country. It has worked to deal with it, and definite progress has been made. What this government has accomplished in this area in the past I think justifies my belief that it deserves the continued confidence of this house and this country with respect to its ability to go on and do even more in this vital field of national policy. This fact also justifies the rejection by this house of the amendment before it.

The adoption by this house of the amendment would do nothing to help the present situation. The amendment will change no existing law. It will bring about the passing of no new law. It will not add one dollar to the money already available for housing. It will cause not one more house to be built. It will only bring about another election which will cause uncertainty and delay in the taking of further steps to provide more housing at reasonable cost. I think that in any event the people of this country are in a position to judge the ability of the present government to do a more effective job in the field of housing as compared with the ability of the parties opposite to do the same. Certainly, as I pointed out at the beginning of my remarks, there is nothing that the official opposition were able to accomplish during their period of office which would cause anyone in this house or in this country to take the wording of their amendment as seriously as they hope.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member should fire his speech writer.

Mr. Gray: I would say that because of what the government has accomplished in the past, because of the initiatives it has taken, because of what I think will be the further initiatives it will take in the future, this house should reject the amendment.

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of being able to enter this debate. First of all, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) upon the amendment he proposed. I should like also to state that on Thursday night of last week when the house was about to close I had the opportunity, after having heard the statement by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) on the previous day, to make a few comments. At that time I mentioned the fact that even in the city of London, the riding which I have the pleasure to represent, we are short of some 4,000 dwelling units at the present time. This represents a considerable crisis. It has been reliably stated also that at the present time we are short of some 250,000 units across Canada.

I was rather surprised to hear some of the statements made by the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) because I consider him a good friend of mine. I thought he was somewhat above making some of the partisan statements he made. I do not think it was necessary for him to make them. Our function in the house is to try and get along together. It is the function of the members of the official opposition to put forward ideas which we believe to be in the best interests of the country. The hon. member attacked the former administration and at the same time kept repeating that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich was thinking in terms of the last year and of previous years. Yet, the same hon. member spoke about the previous administration in a way which I do not think contributed a great deal to the well-being of this house or to the well-being of parliament. I wonder if perhaps some of the remarks he made might not have been the product of a guilty conscience. However, we will leave that for what it may be.

The announcement made by the minister the other evening that the interest rate would be increased to a maximum of 8.25 per cent came, I am sure, as quite a blow to many of us. Many people who think in terms of the general good of Canada—and I do not mean to imply that the minister is not because I know him to be the kind of person who does—think of doing those things which are best not necessarily for their own party but for the country. I recognize the minister to be a great Canadian. Tonight, I am concerned about an item which appeared in a newspaper. I will not read it. Let me say only that it related to an $18,000 mortgage. The newspaper stated that by the time a person has paid off this mortgage, the amount of money that he would have repaid would have totalled $42,000, including interest. This is a fantastic amount of money with which to saddle a younger person or even an older person. We find that a person wishing to buy a house costing that much would have to pay in the neighbourhood of $1,000 a year in interest. I wonder whether this would not make private ownership of a dwelling an uneconomic proposition. This is something about which we should think. There was a time when we used to encourage the young people of this country to acquire a home of their own. It used to be our feeling that in so doing we were at least going through the motion of encouraging them to be better citizens. We used to think that owning a home gave us a stake in the community, made us feel we were part of the overall picture. It was our feeling that it made better citizens of us.

I recall the time when I purchased my first home. At that time I think the down payment was $300, and I felt very proud of the fact that I had a stake in the community in which I was privileged to live.

Let us think for a moment about the penalties which we are forcing on prospective home owners today. First, let us think of the interest which they have to pay for 25 years, which may amount to $24,000. To that we must add the 11 per cent tax on building materials—and I do not intend to comment on whether this is good or bad at the moment—or another $1,800. Then, let us think of the average increase in property taxes in urban areas. This adds another $300 for the duration of this program, which comes to another $7,500. These people were fortunate enough to be able to pay $10,000 down, and there are few who can. If you add that to the figures I have already mentioned you will come up with something in the neighborhood of $43,300 which they would be paying just for the privilege of having a stake in the community.

These are some of the things that I am concerned about, and I think everyone in this house should be very disturbed about these impediments that we are throwing in the way of the young people particularly. There are other factors such as land values which are escalating all the time. They are part of the inflationary tendency. This is a further handicap which we are putting in the way of these people.

However, let us look at the problem from another angle. Suppose these people do not own a home. They are, nevertheless faced with the law of business balance, so they must pay higher rent because naturally the value of a home on which owners must pay up to 8.25 per cent will go up and therefore the value of replacement homes will go up. The value of the home which a person is renting will go up, and therefore he will have to pay more by way of rental.

This is a very serious situation, particularly for the young people who are raising a family. These are some of the things that contribute to the ever increasing inflationary pressures.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Let us consider, for instance, the minimum income factor of $8,000 that was mentioned. What about the lower income earner, the man who, let us say, earns $5,000 a year and is paying $75 to $100 per month rent for his home? This man cannot qualify for this type of mortgage. The result is that when his rent goes up he will be paying more money just to subsidize those people in the $8,000 and over income bracket. Is this man not worthy of consideration, or is he supposed to be some kind of second class citizen? Is he not entitled to the dignity of the individual? The same inflationary pressures are going to send his rent up, and I ask the government what it intends to do in such a situation. I feel that these are the people we should be assisting. Of that I am sure, because I lived on that kind of income for many years. It is the man in the lower income group for whom we should have a program.

Let me mention for a moment, Mr. Speaker, something that has been referred to in this house many times, namely the 11 per cent tax on building materials which is collected by the Department of National Revenue at great expense and lent back again through the N.H.A. at a lesser interest rate. I should like to know the actual net figure derived from this tax on building materials. How much does it cost us to administer the tax? For example, how much does the book work cost? How much does it cost the supplier of building materials and the builder himself to handle the administrative work? All of these expenses, which are legitimate expenses, are charged against the company concerned, if these charges are exempt from tax this just means that the government derives even less tax in each particular case.

The net amount received from this tax has been reliably estimated to be in the neighbourhood of 2½ per cent of the full tax, yet these people must pay the full tax of 11 per cent. This is another obstacle tossed in the way, particularly of our young people today who want a home of their own.

I would ask whether this permitted increase in the interest rate that the minister has mentioned will make it possible for people to build, or will it make it impossible? Will it mean that eventually the private dwelling will become an uneconomic unit and that it will not be reasonable for a person to think in terms of building a home for himself? I am sure that every member in this chamber is well aware that this situation will place the lower income family right in the middle of another inflationary squeeze.

We are subsidizing, Mr. Speaker, such persons as the wheat farmers and the dairy farmers. We also subsidize the coal industry. I do not disapprove of this; indeed, I think it is all to the good. In view of the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) found himself in a very embarrassing position vis-à-vis the wheat farmers, I think the government had to subsidize them. But why do we not think in terms of protecting the jewels of our society? Why do we not think of protecting those people in the lower income brackets so that they can qualify for a mortgage to build a home of their own?

I contend that if we made it possible for people in the wage bracket of between $5,000 to $7,000 or $8,000 to qualify for a mortgage to build a home of their own, first of all we would be making better Canadians. As I said a moment ago we would give such persons a stake in their community. I suggest that we should do some very real thinking along the line of making it possible for people within that income bracket to obtain a mortgage at an interest rate of 5 per cent.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we are not above subsidizing our own people in order to help them out, particularly those in the younger age groups starting a family. It does not make sense for them to live in the low-cost housing developments that we have; they want a place of their own where the kiddies can romp about outside in the back yard, be it big or small. I know from experience that this is important to such people.

I should like to impress upon the government at this time the importance of doing something to help the people in that wage bracket. These young people are Canada's greatest asset. During the war it was the young people who were sent overseas to fight for us; I think it is now time we did a little bit of fighting for them.

It is true that some of these people will never own a home; that has always been true. But are we going to condemn them to live in these low-cost public housing developments? These developments do not harmonize with the outlook of young people with a young and growing family. We grant loans to foreign developing countries interest-free, yet we forget the most important asset that we have in our own country.

Let us look at the situation objectively, Mr. Speaker. This morning I called on two banking institutions. Not too long ago it was possible to obtain a mortgage from these institutions at the rate of 7 per cent, though I admit they were selective in placing those mortgages. I asked the manager of one of these institutions this morning what they were charging at the moment, and he told me it was 8 per cent. I contend that that is the thin edge of the wedge, and that within a very short space of time they will increase that rate to the maximum amount of 8¼ per cent. I asked him whether that would be the case, but he replied he did not know.

Supposing, Mr. Speaker, this does happen and these rates do go up to 8¼ per cent. Are the institutions that lend money for this purpose going to lend money at a lesser rate for commercial purposes? We will also find a restraint in the business community. The prices of all other homes are going to increase correspondingly. Let us say that a house is built today for $20,000 and the amount of $20,000 is paid in interest over the term of the mortgage. At the former rate of interest the same house may still have cost $20,000 to build but the interest would have amounted, say, to $12,000. This means that the price of the house has risen by $8,000. The effect of these increases will be felt all the way down to the man who is paying $75 a month rent. That rent will be increased perhaps to $100 a month. This fellow who is making, shall we say, $100 a week will pay an increased rent, according to inflationary trends, perhaps of $115 or $120. The time when he can buy his own home will be postponed. Perhaps he will be too old to qualify for a mortgage when he has saved the money.

• (8:30 p.m.)

It is this point with which I am concerned. I am speaking on behalf of the little man who goes to work every day and carries a lunch pail. He is the man in my mind because he makes this country great. I implore the government tonight to do something to assist him and others like him. Let us help them reach the goals aspired to by good Canadians.

Charity begins at home. I do not say that we should stop the great work we are doing for some developing nations, but let us look at home first. Let us protect those who are the very jewels of this country in which we are privileged to live.

One might ask, where are we to get the money? I say that the first place we ought to look is at our bureaucracy. We ought to cut down the amount of bureaucracy in this country. Perhaps we could cut down on the empire building that has been going on, shall we say, from 1939, I am not excepting the former administration because this is no time to be political and we ought to call a spade a spade. We serve in this house first as Canadians and secondly as party members. As I say, if we can cut down on bureaucracy, it would be all to the good.

I wish to read from the editorial page of the Stratford Beacon Herald of August 1, 1967. Hon. members may not be familiar with this newspaper which is published about 40 miles from the riding I have the privilege to represent. The article reads:

> An Ottawa report setting forth the average income of income taxpayers in Canadian cities was published in this newspaper a few days ago. Average income reported by taxpayers in a number of Western Ontario cities, including Stratford, St. Thomas, Woodstock, Galt and Owen Sound, was in the $4,500-4,700 bracket. In smaller or less industrialized centres the average would be lower. Beacon Herald Ottawa correspondent Richard Jackson, in more than one of his columns, has discussed the civil service salaries ranging, for senior officials, from $18,000 to $35,000, with a few drawing more.
> The Ottawa correspondent earlier this year had reported 372,890 persons in the federal public service,—

That is 372,890 persons, Mr. Speaker, a fantastic figure.

> —as it is now called, with a payroll of $2,063,892,000, not including the armed forces. It is taking one of every four tax dollars to provide this payroll. If one of these Western Ontario taxpayers reporting around $4,500 income was married, had one dependent, paid union dues and made some charitable donations, he might pay $160 income tax, of which $40 would go to pay federal employees receiving, in general, far more than the taxpayer.
> Of course, the comparison is not really accurate; every taxpayer indirectly pays customs duties and federal sales tax on goods purchased, and this would make up part of his $40. It is also the case that civil servants in the higher salary brackets pay far more income tax. The important fact remains that we have 10 times as many people in the public service as in 1939—

Ten times as many. Mr. Speaker, these are astounding figures:

> —an increase out of all relation to population rise, taxpayers' incomes or anything else except the proliferation of Government departments. Ten times as many persons means far more than 10 times the salary total, because of increases granted from time to time since 1939. Now the public service is organized, under legislation discussed in these columns a few months ago, and is reported planning to shake down the Treasury for substantially higher rates of pay.

This is only human. I continue:

> There is nothing in the Treasury but what is put there by taxpayers, and the biggest source is the income tax—not the tax on large incomes, but on the great number of medium and small incomes.

I wish to make clear that I am by no means advocating a program of wholesale firing or disposing of public service people. No, I have not that in mind at all; but I do suggest a serious job evaluation program to take the square pegs out of round holes and vice-versa. That is long overdue.

I do not suggest that these people ought to be laid off or summarily dismissed. But I do suggest, in all sincerity, that as personnel reach retirement age, let us take a good look. Many of them need not be replaced, perhaps. We might be able to cut down the service by 2 per cent, 3 per cent or 5 per cent every year without unduly crucifying anyone, thereby reducing the payroll which stands at over $2 billion. If we reduce the service, say, by 5 per cent, that would mean that $100 million would be released to aid the younger people with small families in purchasing a home. The 5 per cent of payroll that will be saved could go toward establishing those with small families as good citizens of this country of ours.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the backbone of this country is that little man. Let us give him a chance. Let us not kick him while he is down. Let us not make it that much more difficult for him to rise above his present level. Let us do something to assist him. It is time that we thought in terms of charity at home and of subsidizing the little man.

• (8:40 p.m.)

First of all, make it possible for him to own his own home. Make it possible for him to enjoy the dignity to which he is entitled as an individual. Make it possible for him to hold up his head and be proud to be a Canadian.

Tonight I would like to ask the minister and his colleagues on the government front bench what they envisage? What do they plan for this man? Are we going to drop him entirely or are we going to give him a hand up?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it had in any event been my intention to enter this debate, and when I heard the terms of the amendment proposed by the hon. member who spoke on behalf of the official opposition my intention was confirmed.

I share the concern of all hon. members about housing. Notwithstanding the very substantial efforts and very substantial successes of the government in the last few years in adding to the housing supply, and in introducing measures as progressive as any in the world, there is no doubt that now there is a shortage of housing accommodation in Canada. This shortage, of course, is particularly to be found in the very rapidly growing urban centres, one of which I help to represent in this house.

I am also satisfied, and I think all hon. members are satisfied, that the demands for housing are likely to remain at unprecedentedly high levels for as far ahead as anyone can foresee. The Economic Council has made the case very well, but I do not think it would have needed the Economic Council to make their detailed analysis to have demonstrated to any of us what is so obvious.

A country like Canada, with the most rapidly growing labour force in the world, is bound to have a housing problem. This is recognized by the minister responsible for housing. It is recognized by the Minister of Finance, and is recognized by this government. I also agree with the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) in emphasizing the question of fiscal priorities, although I find this advice passing strange, even hypocritical, coming from a party that has on so many recent occasions urged the government to take on vast new spending programs as quickly as possible without regard to fiscal responsibility or priorities, or anything else for that matter.

Mr. Churchill: I think "hypocritical" is unparliamentary language.

Mr. Sharp: I had thought of looking up the voting record of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), whose eloquent words were quoted by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Monteith: How true they turned out to be.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. Sharp: But I decided it really was not necessary because I remember with what wholehearted enthusiasm the members of the official opposition urged us on to spend hundreds of millions of dollars in excess of what we have—

Mr. Churchill: Specify.

Mr. Sharp: They were specified on particular things, but I never did hear from the official opposition any recommendations that in order to make room for a particular priority we should drop other programs costing hundreds of millions of dollars, or urging us to increase taxes for that purpose. I trust, Mr. Speaker, when the government, in the interests of fiscal stability and fiscal responsibility, has again to establish priorities the hon. member and his colleagues will be supporting and encouraging us. That would be a very welcome change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the minister a question at this point. I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to outline for us the government's priorities?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am just coming to that. When we resume the budget debate sometime this week I shall be discussing our general financial situation at greater length, and I shall be asking this house to support the government in maintaining and establishing priorities, and in keeping our borrowing requirements within appropriate limits. I trust that when I do so the applause from the other side will be deafening.

I have listened to these exhortations on economy, Mr. Speaker. I listen to them not only from hon. members opposite. I listen to them almost constantly and, Mr. Speaker, nothing so heartens a minister of finance as that kind of support. But may I add this, that on this field the battles are fought on particular issues and not in terms of generalities. I do hope when I become specific and when, in the interests of the economic future of this country, I shall be urging that we continue the kind of responsible policies we have been following, instead of the customary criticism I have received from the opposition there will be that general support that has been forecast by the speeches made today.

Mr. McIntosh: Keep the politics for the hustings.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is not politics; this is the future of our country. And I say quite sincerely that I hope every member of this house has as high a regard for the importance of fiscal and monetary stability and responsibility as ministers of finance customarily have, and I do hope that there will be that same spirit exhibited when we come down to the particulars. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like—

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Like you did in 1962?

Mr. Sharp: Well now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken the advice of one of the former speakers that I should not go back in history behind this parliament, and I shall refrain from doing that because I know what I might say on this occasion. I am dealing only with this parliament and the attitude of members sitting here today.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): You don't know your history.

Mr. Sharp: I would like to come back to the problem that is facing us and to say something about its nature. The first problem we have to deal with, if we are going to face up to the housing problem adequately and not in a partisan fashion, looking at the realities of the situation, is the shortage of capital or I might say, if you want to put it another way, the shortage of savings. Housing takes not only labour and materials, and at this point may I say we can help to improve the supply of both. Even the federal government has a role to play in this, and many of the efforts that have been made by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) in recent years and months will, I believe, help to improve that situation.

We can also, I believe, improve our building methods. But housing also takes capital in the form of savings. Most buyers of housing are unable to pay cash. Most of them require to borrow some money to build houses, and therefore someone else must have savings in order to enable them to buy houses at the time they want them.

It is the savings to finance the purchase and rental of housing which are scarce today and, I have every reason to think, are likely to be scarce over the next few years. Housing must compete for capital with industry, and it must compete for capital with governments. We must have capital to provide jobs in industry, and governments must have capital to provide the infrastructure, the roads, the schools and all the other things governments must provide if there are going to be cities fit to live in.

• (8:50 p.m.)

There is no easy answer to this. Canada probably will face a shortage of capital over the next few years, and we certainly shall have to import it in large amounts. This has been recognized by the Economic Council whose report has been quoted on so many occasions.

An hon. Member: Not by Walter Gordon.

Mr. Sharp: This is a statement I have made on many occasions and which my colleague the President of the Privy Council has made on many occasions. We shall have to import capital to meet our requirements. We have many demands on it. We must try to establish priorities intelligently and realistically. I know of no easy choices for low priorities in this competition. The test of people who believe in priorities is not what they put at the top but what they drop off at the bottom. These are the real problems we must face in ensuring that there is an adequate supply of capital for housing.

If housing is to compete effectively for the capital which will be required in the next few years, it must be able to offer attractive terms to investors. I regret to say that under present circumstances this means higher interest rates than we have been used to in the past.

Canadian rates must be high enough in relation to those of the United States that they will attract into Canada the capital required to supply our deficiency. This is just a fact of life. There is nothing we can do about it unless we can increase our own savings, and I do not think they can be increased quickly enough to enable us to dispense with foreign capital. Therefore, our interest rates must bear a proper relationship to those in the United States. Canada's interest rates must be such that they will enable us to balance the demands of our capital markets with the supply of funds from savings, both domestic and foreign.

I am concerned about these high interest rates. I regret very much that interest rates have had to rise. They have been rising throughout the western world. They have been rising in industrialized countries and in the underdeveloped countries of the world. As I said in my statement on motions today, last week I was in Rio. There, I had the opportunity to meet all the ministers of finance of the world. We met many times in large groups and in small groups. One of the main problems we discussed was the problem of interest rates. As I said jokingly to one of my friends today, it was pleasant to meet with ministers of finance from around the world because at least we could console one another. We looked at this problem; we examined it carefully and at length for a week. There was not one of us who could come up with an easy or early solution to the problem of high interest rates.

During this past week we have given more flexibility to the rates so that funds can be attracted into housing. We have given as much flexibility as is permitted under the National Housing Act for those who want to obtain insured mortgages by enabling them to offer as attractive terms as are necessary in order to compete with other borrowers. As hon. members know the statute has an upper limit on what the government can do. We went to that limit, not because we expected the rates would rise to that level but so that the market could settle at whatever level was necessary in order to attract funds into insured mortgages. I have every reason to believe that the rate will settle substantially below 8¼ per cent. I believe there is plenty of evidence to indicate that that will happen.

The second major problem is that of serviced land, because properly serviced land is essential to housing development in our metropolitan areas, especially in and around the city of Toronto where land has become a severely limiting problem. This shows up, of course, in the scarcity and in the high cost of the land. I understand that fully serviced lots now sell for $10,000 or $12,000 a lot. I can remember of course, as many of you can, what prices were like just a few years ago. I looked up the figures and found that between 1949 and 1966 the average cost of urban serviced land in all Canada increased by over 350 per cent. This increase is of course, far more than the increase in the cost of constructing a house and far more than any increases in the cost of financing.

Some municipalities, especially in the Toronto area, are now restricting the single houses they will permit to be built to those of a relatively high value, in the neighbourhood of $25,000 and $30,000, so that they will be more able to carry their full share of municipal costs. Then, too, the volume of houses built will not bring an expansion of municipal services and schools which will be a strain on municipal financing. This is a vivid illustration of the interrelation between the housing situation and the problems of municipalities and their financing.

This brings me to the third problem to which I wish to refer; that is, the problem of obtaining good urban development. We can only secure a solution to the housing problem if we can achieve good urban development with the proper planning and control of land use and the proper services and facilities planned to go with it.

Not enough progress has been made in this field. I think this is admitted by everyone. Certainly not enough progress has been made if we are to be able to meet the sort of problem which this country faces in the years to come, even if mortgage funds were available on an unlimited scale. The proper planning and control of land use and municipal administration of it is, of course, essentially a matter for the municipalities. They have the means for effective control. We can help, but to try to solve that kind of a problem by providing more mortgage money probably would make the situation even worse. We must have a co-ordinated approach to the problem of housing. I believe this is recognized by everyone here, but in this debate I regret to say that I felt it necessary to point out these things because too much emphasis has been placed upon only one of the problems, namely the problem of financing.

The fourth problem is taxes on housing. As I know, and as you all know, in order to get the revenue necessary to carry on government it is necessary to have taxes. There are no perfect taxes and certainly there are no popular taxes. Unfortunately, we cannot finance all our expenditures by the most desirable form of taxes which most of us I think would regard as taxes on income, whether of individuals or corporations, or perhaps some taxes on consumption. One of the main sources of revenue in this country is the tax on real property.

Last April, well before this debate emerged, in speaking to the Tax Foundation I referred to this problem and I should like to quote a few of my words at that time:

> Our property taxes in Canada fall to a large extent upon the improvements put on the land rather than on the value of land itself. Along with other influences, they make houses and apartments cost too much. I believe we cannot fully solve our housing problems, which are serious, until we can improve the financing of municipalities as well as the effective control and planning of land use.

That is still my view. In my speech in Toronto I made some suggestion as to how this burden might be somewhat shifted. I have had no takers. This remains a major problem and unless we tackle it, along with a general reform of our tax structure, we will not have dealt with one of the major difficulties that face this country and which is at the root of the housing problem.

It has been suggested that we, as the federal government, should take some action about housing by removing the tax on building materials. There is nothing I should like to do more than that, but I have a problem. It is a problem that is shared by everyone in this house; that is, to raise enough revenue to meet the expenditures of the government. The Economic Council of Canada made a comment on this matter, not quite in the form in which it has been quoted from time to time. The council only suggested that the issue be re-examined, and I can assure you that I have re-examined it over and over again.

The Carter commission, however, made a more pertinent comment when it said:

> The complete exemption from tax of all building materials would be desirable both on economic and social grounds, but may have to be deferred for the present time and reconsidered in the future in the light of revenue requirements.

Those are the circumstances in which I believe we now find ourselves. When we can afford this, and I hope that will be soon, perhaps the first step might be to refund on each housing unit a certain sum of money so that the relief would go in the main to those who need it most.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): You are stealing an idea.

Mr. Sharp: This was an idea I had, and perhaps someone stole it from me. However, originality is not really the test, it is the soundness of the idea, and if I borrowed it from someone I heartily acknowledge my indebtedness. It is a sound idea and I hope in due course we will be able to follow it. In the meantime, it is quite evident, I believe to everyone in the house, and I shall be setting this forth in greater detail during the budget debate, that we cannot afford that particular tax remission now.

However, I did make some calculations as to the amounts involved in sales tax on a house of average size and cost, which is probably in the amount of some $540 as a once and for all cost. This is about the amount of sales tax on the building materials involved in a typical house.

Mr. Prittie: On what value of house?

Mr. Sharp: One can figure that the 11 per cent sales tax is paid on approximately half of the cost of construction, so you get down to figures of this order. Perhaps it would be a little bit less than half. I had these calculations made by some of my experts and I am sure they are within the proper range. On an expensive house the tax would be more and on a less expensive house it would be less. This is based on C.M.H.C. averages of the cost of house building in this country in recent years.

When you compare that figure with the burden on housing involved in property taxes, the average property tax being about $350 a year including semi-detached or row houses, I suggest that while a remission of the sales tax on building materials is a desirable reform, it is one that is not nearly as important as many others, or many other more important steps that may be taken.

Let me now come to what I believe should be the policies of the government in this field. We are pressing forward on several fronts in our attack on this housing problem. As a first step to meet the urgent shortage in funds experienced last year we instituted major direct lending programs. Indeed, the other day when I looked at the figures of the financing of C.M.H.C. I was astounded at the change that had taken place. I found that C.M.H.C. was taking from me, as Minister of Finance, out of the public purse as a loan, hundreds of millions of dollars. A few years ago we were providing something like $100 million. This is the measure of the priority that the government has given to housing since we took office. By comparison, the amount of resources that the government has placed in housing in recent years has been completely out of proportion to any previous period, whether under the previous administration or under the previous Liberal administration. A massive attack has been made on several fronts.

This brings me to what I believe is the second front upon which we should proceed. We are planning next year to provide capital directly through C.M.H.C. to meet the needs for public housing—specialized housing for old people, student housing and urban development—on a much larger scale than ever before, and we do not intend any of the measures we propose in respect of housing to be cut back on these priorities. This is where we believe our primary responsibility as a government resides; that is, in helping those who need help most. We established that priority and I hope it will be supported by everyone in this house.

We plan that the bulk of housing should continue to be financed through the market, as it has been in the past. This is especially important for rental housing which is urgently needed. The government will continue to provide exactly the same guarantees it has in the past on National Housing Act mortgages. We have now given sufficient flexibility so that money can be directed to those instruments at going market rates. I submit this will increase the volume of money available for housing in this country. The combination of the government concentrating its direct activity upon areas of social need and allowing the market to operate under guarantee for private housing is, I believe, the best combination of policies under present circumstances.

To meet the longer term problems I have been outlining, we have indicated our readiness to discuss with the provinces the variety of measures that may be needed to solve other problems than those of housing finance. We have already had many meetings with the provinces in this field. The extent of our co-operation with the provinces and municipalities is far greater than anything that has taken place in the past. The hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) gave us some figures in respect of projects in one city. This information came to me as news, but it illustrates the general scope of the government's activity in those areas where housing needs should have the highest demand upon government resources.

This is the government's policy and I suggest to you that we, as a government, have recognized our responsibilities in this field; we have recognized our fiscal responsibility and we have recognized the need for priorities. I hope that we shall have the support of the opposition on these priorities as they are now and may be in the future. I submit that we recognize the importance of the housing problem and I hope we will have the support of the whole house in respect of the measures we intend to take.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question concerning his good intentions about coming to the aid of those in the low income bracket next year. What income ceiling would the minister consider for the low income earner.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think that question should be directed to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), who will be taking part in the debate later.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Aiken: Is the minister going to give us the priorities, too?

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to many hon. members from the government side of the house in the last few days. One line from Shakespeare kept crossing my mind when they were discussing housing, namely, methinks he doth protest too much. When I heard the exposition of the traveller from Rio just a few minutes ago I thought perhaps I should thank the minister, on behalf of the burdened Canadian taxpayer, for delineating in such detail all the costs and taxes which the present government is making him bear.

However, as I listened to the debate I have heard a diversity of views. At times, there seemed to be a degree of unanimity among the government supporters. They all seemed to be hiding behind that great shield of provincial rights and responsibilities. Apparently, in this manner they hoped to be able to avoid the true responsibility for this crisis which is, of course, the failure of the government to do anything realistic not only towards solving the housing crisis but towards solving the money crisis that is facing our country.

Surely, as has been pointed out by other hon. members on this side of the house, there exists not only a housing crisis but a crisis in monetary policy. This crisis has been intensified and prolonged by months of government ineptitude, government inaction and government fumbling which has led from crisis to crisis and from stopgap measure to stopgap measure. The government has been going to the cupboard for a bone with which perhaps to seduce the Canadian voter, but finally, like Mother Hubbard, they have found the cupboard bare. They have been caught up in a web spun by their own fingers. They have been trying desperately to extricate themselves by using the classic economic ploy that the interest rate is not sufficient to attract more money into the mortgage field, hoping desperately to save the situation. At the same time, there has been an attempt to rescue this government once again from the consequences of its own folly. But, Mr. Speaker, the question the people of Canada are asking is: will these measures work?

Let us look at the situation. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) has pointed out very forcefully that because of the high cost of building and the unavailability of mortgage money the average individual must look not toward home ownership but toward rental accommodation, probably government subsidized. Hon. members will recall the words of the minister when he stated that we must look at the possibility of raising the income ceiling for limited dividend housing. In other words, the minister indicated that it is in the field of multiple dwellings that government action must be directed; that is, low cost, subsidized, multiple housing. Apparently it is not a matter of whether this is a good thing at this stage. Surely, the average Canadian should be given a choice in this regard and should not be forced by sheer economic necessity, made so by the actions of this government, into public housing? This is exactly what the government is trying to do.

I noticed that the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) were very careful to point out that the interest rates on loans for public housing projects for families with low incomes would not be increased. Am I to understand from this that there is no need to attract private capital into the field of low rental housing or student housing, which were dealt with by the Minister of Finance? The minister shakes his head; apparently there is no such need. It seems to me there is a basic contradiction of view here.

Let me illustrate this, Mr. Speaker, by quoting from the minister's announcement in respect of an increased interest rate on mortgage loans. I wish to quote from page 2577 of Hansard as follows:

> In order to attract private funds into housing and to enable the government to concentrate its future lending in the important social areas of greatest need, namely, public housing, housing for elderly people, housing for students and urban renewal, the government has decided to take full advantage of the spread authorized in the statute. We anticipate this change will result in increased lending activity on the part of primary lenders and at the same time substantially increase activity in the secondary mortgage market, which is very important at this time.

The minister went on to say that the maximum rate would come into effect on October 1. In making this announcement he made it quite clear that there would be no change in the N.H.A. interest rate on loans for public housing projects for families of low income, housing for elderly persons, student housing, land assembly, urban renewal and sewage treatment plants. I see a basic contradiction here. Apparently we can obtain enough money, according to the ministers' thinking, with which to house families of low income, the elderly, the students, and so on. I ask, Mr. Speaker, is this what the minister means?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that is a question I shall be glad to answer. That is not what I meant. The statement could not possibly mean that.

Mr. Brand: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will just leave it on the record.

Mr. Nicholson: I shall be glad to answer that question.

Mr. Brand: At the end of my speech, Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad indeed to hear the minister's answer. Of course, the claim is made by hon. members opposite that this increase in the interest rate will not have the least inflationary effect. However, I wonder whether the government and the Minister of Finance, after his trip to Rio, will deny that an increase in the mortgage interest rate will increase the cost of construction and the cost of land. Can they deny that there will be pressure to obtain higher wages in this field in order to meet the increases forced upon the workers? Can they deny that this will result in increases in consumer costs and services, accentuating the spiral in costs? Does the minister deny, or will he agree, that this policy of the government will increase costs?

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the latest report of the Economic Council of Canada. In order that there be no mistake, I should like to quote exactly what the report says. The following appears at page 265 of the report. This passage deals with the effect of monetary restraint on new housing starts in 1966:

> This, in turn, means that even though monetary conditions started to ease before the end of 1966, the volume of new housing completions will decline in 1967. With the rising numbers of new households, these developments have already resulted in very tight markets for housing in a number of urban areas, in a widespread reduction in vacancies, in a general increase in shelter costs, and in indirect upward pressure on wages (next to increases in food prices, increases in such costs appear to have the most direct and powerful effects of all consumer price changes exerting upward pressure on wages).

However, Mr. Speaker, the most serious of the implications as far as I am concerned is the government's indication that apparently people are to be forced by sheer economic necessity into apartment and low rental dwellings.

Many prefer living in apartments, but surely we should have the right to choose where we may live with our families. However, 80 per cent of the people of Canada will no longer be able to obtain C.M.H.C. loans. Is this the intent of government policy at this time? Is this all part of a government scheme to create a rabbit warren complex for the people of Canada? Perhaps the minister wonders what I mean by a rabbit warren complex. One can certainly see that in future the people of Canada will be housed like rabbits in a warren. Perhaps they will even be denied the right to the one propensity for which rabbits have gained a certain degree of notoriety over the years. Surely, it is obvious that the more children we have in this country the more serious the housing problem will become. The government, therefore, will have to take steps—perhaps this is one of the guide lines—to ensure that the birth rate does not increase unduly outside the bounds of policies laid down by the government.

As we look at the over-all picture, it does seem clear that the government has failed to recognize the crisis as it exists or to take adequate steps to meet it. Every measure the government has taken has been a stop-gap measure, the finger-in-the-dike principle, and only a symptom of the serious malaise in the present government. There are many other examples of the finger-in-the-dike principle. We had one the other day when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) brought in a measure to maintain wheat prices in the international market. Incidentally, I understand he pulled his finger out over night.

What the people of Canada are asking is, when are we in the House of Commons going to take a long, hard look at this problem and implement some really effective measures. I am certainly no economist and I make no pretense to be one, but the implications of these government policies to the individual is something that it does not take an economist to realize. This is the question: is it the responsibility of the government to gear the economy of our country to allow individuals to purchase their own homes if they so wish, or is it, as the minister implies, the responsibility of the government to control and decide the type of housing that each individual must have? Are we going to force the individual, by the inexorable pressure of adverse economic factors, to live, as I said before, like rabbits in warrens in government subsidized housing? As we listen to the various speakers on the government side we seem to be coming to the inescapable conclusion that the latter is the answer.

What if we took a brief look into the future? I noticed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was doing that; he did not want to look back either. What would be the ultimate result of this type of Liberal philosophy? Perhaps a new generation of Canadians will evolve, stamped not with the mark of Cain but with the mark of Liberalism, which is, I believe, the generic equivalent. Are Canadians to become faceless, amorphous, indistinguishable from one another, going about their daily tasks in government subsidized training or in government subsidized jobs? I think of the rapidly expanding civil service. Will they be eating in cafeterias owned and operated by the government because that will be the economic thing to do? Will they be taking the government subsidized rapid transit system back to the government subsidized apartments where they will listen to the government subsidized television and radio announcing further plans to control other facets of their life, including the right of procreation. That is the one thing I do not believe the government would dare subsidize, but would control so that a too rapidly increasing birth rate would not overburden the already serious housing shortage which, as the minister pointed out, is to continue for many years to come. Is this what we want for our fellow Canadians? It may be said that this could not happen, but it can happen.

Unless we in the House of Commons come to some realization of what is happening, it will be a reality before many years go by. But it need not happen if we stop this program of stop-gap measures and if we take a few definitive steps to examine our problem in depth. I have heard from the other side, and I agree, that the problem is serious enough so that partisan considerations can be held in abeyance. Surely, the time has come to sit down together in the relatively non-partisan atmosphere of a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons and see what can be done. The minister looked favourably upon this when he spoke the other day. Surely, this would give us an opportunity at least to get the advice of the experts. I do not refer to experts from the C.M.H.C. personnel because they have a vested interest in what is going on, but I am speaking about experts in the field of sociology and perhaps all the other fields which have been carefully documented as being part of the housing field.

Let me point out that the first National Housing Act of 1935 came about in this fashion. Can we do any less in face of the serious situation which confronts our nation today? After all, raising the mortgage interest rate may be the economists' way of stimulating private investment in the mortgage field, but the results to the average Canadian can only be catastrophic. The low income groups can no longer afford to own their own homes and the middle income groups, making up the bulk of our population, are now in exactly the same position. Are they to continue to have the hope of pride of ownership, one of the few things left in this day of government intervention, snatched away as well? So far as I and my constituents are concerned, we are sick to death of listening to this type of pusillanimous sophistry which this government is feeding the people of Canada.

I wonder if we would not be wise to go back—even though the Minister of Finance feels we should not—to January 23, 1935 and read from page 137 of Hansard? At that time Mr. T. L. Church, the hon. member for East Toronto, said:

> It is the duty of a Christian country, a Christian community, to do all in its power to see to it that its citizens live in healthy homes. Housing cannot in any locality be separated from the problems of roads, light, water, sanitation or other similar questions.
> One of the evils of to-day is the high mortgage rates that are charged—

So what else is new?

> —They are retarding progress and recovery. As I say, I cannot emphasize too strongly the necessity of the government taking some action to reduce these mortgage rates which are bearing so heavily on the poor people. In the city from which I come many old workers are losing their little homes because they cannot pay the high mortgage rates which are asked—

The only difference now of course is that they could not hope to get one in order to lose it.

> I hope that in some way perhaps through the provinces and the municipalities,—

Does that not sound familiar?

> —the government may take some action so that loans may be made at reasonable rates of interest to aid the reconstruction of old buildings and the construction of new houses. I believe such a step will be in the right direction.

That is taken from the private members' resolution on the proposed national policy of building and reconstruction as an economic and social necessity. As a result of that private resolution, the then prime minister, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett set up a committee of the House of Commons, and from that came the first National Housing Act which was the precursor of the many acts which we have had over the years. We have had massive revisions of these acts since that time. From 1938, to 1944 and in the present act of 1954, massive revisions have been undertaken in order to attempt to deal with the problems of the day. These were revisions undertaken by thoughtful ministers—one of them is sitting opposite in a somewhat different portfolio—such as Hon. J. Ilsley and others. The work that they did at the time, along with the members of the opposition, had the effect or producing bills which, with reference to their own particular problems, did a fairly adequate job. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the time has come once again for a massive revision, for a long and in depth look to be taken, as I said before, at the present act. I am, of course, aware of the revisions that were made in November 1966; but I feel that as a result of a very careful study the act may possibly be entirely different.

After all, Mr. Speaker, what were the initial purposes of the National Housing Act? We know that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was a crown agency incorporated by act of parliament in 1945 to administer the National Housing Act and to co-ordinate activities in housing. We sometimes forget when we talk of provincial co-operation and otherwise, that authority over and responsibility for a variety of functions affecting housing is part of the duties of C.M.H.C., both in the long term as well as in meeting the immediate requirements of the country. C.M.H.C. has power to act as insurer of mortgage loans, as lender or investor of public funds, as a guarantor and owner of property and other assets.

Another thing which is forgotten is that C.M.H.C. also acts as a research agency in fields associated with housing, and it assists provinces and municipalities in many aspects of urban growth.

However, it seems to me that somewhere along the line something has been omitted. The government's aim through these successive housing acts has surely been to stimulate and supplement the market for housing, to increase the flow of mortgage money, and to encourage lenders to make loans on more favourable terms to prospective home owners. These have been the purposes of the acts, Mr. Speaker, but it seems that the government has forgotten them.

Looking at all of the suggestions which have been made to date, several facts have emerged quite clearly. First of all, nobody appears to have an absolute answer to the problem. It is surely self-evident, as I said before, that the time has come to do away with stop-gap measures, to put an end to finger-in-the-dike policies. It is obvious that the time has now come to make a complete reappraisal of the situation. I am not talking of next month or at the end of the next quarter when the interest rate is reviewed; now is the time to set up a joint committee of the kind I have suggested with all the power and means to look into and report on every facet of the housing crisis in this country. Perhaps at the same time the committee can look into the real cause of the monetary crisis which has been brought on by the policies of the government opposite.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I have never attempted to lay the blame for the present situation totally at the feet of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson). However, I am sure he must share some of the blame along with the other members of the government of which he is part.

Mr. Grafftey: He has lost the fight.

Mr. Brand: That is true. The minister is surely the prisoner of the economic policies of the government. I even noticed the manner in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) talked, as though the policies and decisions that are going to be made were his, not those of the cabinet or government.

I am well aware that the measures proposed by the Minister of Labour are probably all he can manage in the present circumstances within the framework of the economic chains that bind him. But I am also aware, Mr. Speaker, that this government has failed miserably to take adequate steps to head off the economic crisis that has precipitated this debate in the house.

It is a funny thing, Mr. Speaker, but even as the Minister of Labour was making his announcement about the increased interest rates the other night, thus increasing housing costs for every Canadian, the Minister of Finance was making another speech in Rio de Janeiro to the International Monetary Fund about the decision of the government to increase Canadian foreign aid.

The Minister of Finance made a rather revealing statement, Mr. Speaker. He said:

> This decision has only recently been reaffirmed despite the efforts which we shall be making by budgetary policies and otherwise to limit the upward pressures on costs and prices to which I have already referred.

I might say I have a copy of his speech before me; indeed, the minister referred to it earlier.

Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, one minister sitting in the House of Commons suggesting measures to increase costs for the average Canadian, while another minister a few thousand miles away is making a pious speech to other ministers of finance, suggesting that we in Canada are going to do everything we can to keep down prices. These two ministers did not even have the decency to make these statements on different days.

As reported at page 3 of his speech, the Minister of Finance said:

> Canada has had its share of difficulties in finding the right combination of policies to achieve our various goals.

Then a little later on he said:

> But it is clear that we have been more successful in maintaining economic growth than we have been in achieving stability of costs and prices. It is our purpose, however, to combine continued growth with price stability—indeed I doubt whether in the long run the one can be achieved without the other—and we intend to make use of every means available to us to restore the balance.

That sort of thing does make one wonder, Mr. Speaker.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, surely the time has come for a reappraisal of our national economic needs. For example, perhaps it is time to take another look at breaking with the fixed exchange rate system and supporting instead a floating rate. That has been suggested. Perhaps we, as a country, have been tied too long to the federal reserve system of the United States and this is the cause of our trouble. Certainly, some economists say it is.

I should like to see the government set up some sort of inquiry. I have suggested a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons. After all, if such a committee were able to do the kind of job done by the Senate committee on aging, their report would be very worth while indeed. Let the committee talk to the most knowledgeable men in the country. This is the least we can do for the poor taxpayer no longer able to afford to buy his own home and with no sign of any tax relief on the horizon.

You no doubt know the difference, Mr. Speaker, between the home owner in the United States and the home owner in Canada. In the United States the home owner can deduct interest and real estate taxes paid on his home from income tax. This encourages the person who rents to buy a home of his own since a saving is possible by way of tax deduction for his monthly interest payment.

But no such incentive is given Canadian taxpayers. In Canada, it is cheaper to rent than to buy, and that is certainly true.

If the truth were known, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how many members of the house have already received letters from their constituents in which they say, in effect, that they were going to buy a home but cannot now afford one. I would be very surprised if there was one member in this house who has not received one such letter. Most of us have received many. The impact of this increase is catastrophic, as I said before. I suggest the minister ask some of the people who work in the House of Commons what they think and how this will affect their desire to become homeowners; I think he will get quite a surprise.

• (9:40 p.m.)

I ask this government to stop the finger-in-the-dike principle. Let it set up a committee to look at this question in depth and come up with real solutions. Let us put an end to having a crisis every few months. We do not want, as the Prime Minister said, a crisis so that we can deal with the situation more effectively. There is no need for this country to have a crisis economy. The time has come for common sense. I plead with the government to come to its senses and to come to the aid of the average Canadian who is in deep trouble now, financial and otherwise, as a result of the policies which the government has engendered.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the debate to this point at least has made one thing clear, namely, that the problem of scarce housing is neither new nor confined to Canada. The quotation of the remarks of Mr. T. L. Church by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) shows that this subject has busied the Parliament of Canada over many decades. But perhaps the highly publicized awareness of the importance of the problem is new. A provincial election is taking place in Ontario.

I do not think that the peculiar circumstances which have brought about this awareness should cause us to underestimate the genuine problem that exists in the field of housing.

An attempt has been made to suggest that the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada berates the government for allowing a housing crisis to develop. Some of those making this attempt evidently have not read the review. This is quite evident in the exchanges that took place in the committee of supply here, last Thursday, and more particularly, in those exchanges that took place at pages 2586 and 2587 of Hansard.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) in moving his motion, quoted part of the most relevant paragraph in the review. Since we are referring again and again to that paragraph I think it would be well to read it in its entirety. It begins at page 133, and reads as follows:

> We estimate that by the end of the 1960's housing starts and completions in Canada will need to rise to annual levels of at least 200,000 units to fully meet the nation's requirements at that time. The increase in the number of new households in 1970 is estimated to account for some 140,000 of these requirements, based on the projections discussed in Chapter 3. In addition, we estimate that replacement demand will have risen to 50,000 units per year by 1970; this is the amount of new building necessary simply to keep the total housing stock intact after allowing for various removals of units from use due to the elimination of substandard housing, population shifts, and changing economic land uses from residential into commercial, industrial, traffic and other public uses. Finally, it is estimated that by 1970 total stock of vacant dwellings available on the housing market would have to increase by roughly 10,000 units per year to provide for a minimum stock of unoccupied housing required to accommodate the mobility of the population and to facilitate a smooth adjustment between the demand and supply for housing. In 1966, with a decline in housing construction under conditions of monetary restraint and reduced mortgage financing, available vacancies appear to have fallen to inappropriately low levels, especially in some of the larger urban areas such as Toronto.

That is the famous paragraph on which so much of our discussion has centered. Let us look at the situation about which the amendment of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich complains.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), when she spoke earlier today, blurred the distinction between the field of public housing and certain other programs which are similar on the one hand and the field of approved-lender mortgages on the other. We must keep these distinctions clearly in mind because it is to the latter field, not the former, that the 8¼ per cent interest ceiling applies.

Under the amendments made by Parliament in 1964, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was authorized to make 90 per cent loans to provinces, municipalities or their agencies for public housing accommodation for low income families or individuals. Provision in those amendments was made for a program of land acquisition and servicing for public housing purposes, and the corporation was permitted to make loans of up to 90 per cent for this purpose.

To take advantage of these provisions, the provinces had to set up housing corporations. Eight provinces have done this. I cannot help but think that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway should have directed the brunt of her argument more directly to those at whom it should properly have been directed. Frankly, and of her own volition, she ought to have admitted that her own province, British Columbia, had not set up a housing corporation and that some of the difficulties of which she complained could be attributed to this fact. In other words, Mr. Speaker, I think she ought to have been as rough with the Social Credit people as she was with the Liberals.

The corporations in the eight provinces were set up in the period between May 8, 1964 and July 1, 1967. Only one was set up in 1964, the one in Ontario. In 1966 three were set up. On April 6, 1966, the province of Nova Scotia set up the Nova Scotia housing commission. On April 7, 1966, the Prince Edward Island housing authority was established. In 1966 also the Newfoundland and Labrador housing corporation was set up.

Then, in 1967, four other provincial housing corporations came into being. I mention these figures to suggest, sir, that it is a little early to say that the provisions in the amendments of 1964 are not working. Perhaps it is not fair to single Ontario out because, undoubtedly, the housing pressures in Ontario are especially great; yet it can be noted that in Ontario at least 12,000 public housing units have been placed. The total for all Canada has been something like 16,000 units. In other words, approximately three quarters of all the public housing units to date are in the one province that set up its housing corporation in 1964.

The next province, in terms of numbers of public housing units, is Newfoundland and Labrador. This is followed by Manitoba. In Nova Scotia, up to the end of August, 1967, 321 public housing units had been placed.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I say, sir, that the dates on which the corporations were set up and the number of units achieved are significant because they suggest that it is really too early to decide whether the amendments made in 1964 have been successful or have been failures. What is notable is that already in 1967 about $150 million has been provided for public housing projects throughout Canada by the C.M.H.C.

[Mr. Stewart.]

In addition, $52 million has been allocated for student housing; an additional $21 million has been provided for construction of housing for senior citizens; the sum of $55 million has gone for urban renewal; and 29 million for municipal sewage facilities. The total is over 300 million in this year alone toward the areas of greatest social need. Over $300 million has gone for those special kinds of needs in the housing field toward whose cost the taxpayer contributes openly.

This evening we heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) say it was to this field of public housing and to related areas of housing requirements that the government was proposing to give special priority.

The ceiling of 8¼ per cent applies in the field of what we call approved lender mortgages. What has been happening in this field is really very plain. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) when he made his announcement the other day, and the Minister of Finance tonight, have not attempted to conceal the truth. Those with money to lend have not found the rate of interest attainable sufficiently attractive. They have invested their money elsewhere. Consequently the number of houses built with conventional mortgages or with approved lender mortgages has not been as high as one might have hoped.

Confronted with this situation the government had two options. It could make it possible for approved lenders to lend money at rates more attractive to them. It could have raised the ceiling on the interest rate somewhat. Or, at the other extreme, the government could go out and borrow money itself to permit more and more C.M.H.C. loans at a rate below the open market interest rate. This presumably would have meant that the government itself would have had to pay more for the money it was borrowing. An alternative would have been to increase taxes. But no matter which way the government went about raising this additional money the basic result would have been the same. The taxpayer would be subsidizing the homebuilder to a higher extent.

Frankly, sir, that in itself does not jar me. All kinds of cross-subsidizations take place in our society; and cross-subsidization becomes more and more complex as our society becomes more and more complex. The point that must not be forgotten is that if this second option had been taken the taxpayer would be subsidizing a homebuilder to a higher extent.

I found that the hon. member for Saskatoon was confusing me a little on this point when he came out so strongly on the one hand against subsidies and, on the other hand, insisted that unless the government reverses its policy the private homeowner will soon be driven out of existence.

An effort has been made to suggest that the high cost of housing is due to the expenditures of the government in other fields. This, I think, shows that the opposition is underrating the genuine seriousness of the problem. As each topic comes up, whether it is the cost of food, the cost of education or the cost of defence, members of the opposition tend to resort to this narrow argument. They tend to insist that if the government would make savings in some other field it would not need to expend as much money on borrowing, and would not need to raise as much in the way of taxes. In other words, by tackling the various phases of government expenditure separately the opposition implies that the budget of the country is made up of watertight compartments. I do not think that is right at all.

We must think of the economy as something like a balloon. If you push it here it is going to bulge there. If you put more money into, let us say, old age pensions, it is going to have its effects on other parts of the economy. That is why the comments which the Minister of Finance made earlier this evening were so relevant, and I was so pleased to note that the members of the opposition were listening so attentively.

Mr. Monteith: To his excuses.

Mr. Stewart: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what hon. gentlemen opposite are saying is that the Minister of Finance has listened to them too much. One would hope that the advice they are going to give, now that they have adopted their vaunted new look, will be different, particularly if they are going to complain about the results.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The same old bunch.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, let us hope it is not the same old bunch.

The government had to take into account the amount of money that has been put into the property mortgage field over the years by C.M.H.C.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, one which I raise quite often with respect to hon. members opposite, there is a rule that no member is allowed to read continually a prepared text, and I think that the rule should be applied to the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart). Not one word of this is his. He is reading something prepared by somebody else.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made a statement which is quite inaccurate. However, I do not intend to ask that this statement be withdrawn. I think members of the house are quite prepared to appreciate his comment with all the seriousness bestowed upon it by its source.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart: Mr Speaker, I should like to read certain figures to you concerning the money put into the housing field by C.M.H.C. over a certain period of years. In 1962 the input was $245 million; in 1963, $376 million; in 1964, $451 million; in 1965, $545 million; in 1966, $664 million; and the budgetary estimate for 1967 is $962,600,000. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

OLD AGE SECURITY—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE INCREASE IN PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, September 26, as recorded in Hansard at page 2484, I addressed this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen):

> In view of increases that have taken place in the cost of living, and in view of the amendment respecting this matter which was written into the Old Age Security Act in 1965, has it been determined that there will be an increase in old age pensions this coming January and, if so, by what amount?

• (10:00 p.m.)

When I asked the question, Mr. Speaker thought it was not quite appropriate for orders of the day. Accordingly I posted it for one of these late show periods. In asking this question, I wish it to be clear that I am quite aware of the provision in our law under which the old age security pension, also the supplement that is attached to it in some cases, and the Canada Pension Plan are to be escalated. The provision is that each January there can be a percentage increase in these pensions if the consumer price index has gone up by a certain amount for the previous year. There is a formula in the statute which indicates how this is to be calculated and so on. The statute provides that a consumer price increase of less than one per cent is to be ignored and that a consumer price increase of more than two per cent does not result in an increase in the pension of more than that figure, namely two per cent.

The cost of living index, or the consumer price index as it is officially known, has been rising quite a bit lately. It follows, I have no doubt, that there will be a statutory increase in the old age security pension this coming January. The reason I asked the question was that I was anxious to know whether the necessary regulations had been passed and whether the necessary determination had been made so that an announcement could be made which would let our people know that the increase which is provided for is actually going to take place.

It was also my purpose in asking my question to get a clear statement as to what the amount of the increase will be. I realize that the legislation has in it a ceiling. It says that the increase cannot be more than two per cent in any one year. I should like, however, to express the hope that even after the government has made the announcement, which I trust will now be made tonight, it will face up to the fact that under the present circumstances an increase of only two per cent is hardly fair to our senior citizens

I do not wish to burden this house at this time of night with a great list of figures, but I have one or two which I should like to give. The consumer price index for October, 1963, stood at 133.6. The reason I give the index for that month in that year is because it was in October, 1963, that the old age security pension first became $75 a month. The consumer price index for August, 1967, which is the latest figure I have been able to get so far, stood at 150.9. In other words, from the date the old age security pension was set at $75 a month to the present time there has been an increase in the consumer price index of 17.3 percentage points. I do not wish to confuse anyone by seeming to imply that 17.3 percentage points is 17.3 per cent. So, let me make it clear that when you start out with 133.6 and go up 17.3 percentage points you have made an actual increase of 12.9 or almost 13 per cent.

In the face of this 13 per cent increase in the cost of living since the old age security pension was fixed at $75 a month I plead with the government not to be satisfied with an increase in the old age security pension in January of only two per cent. I suggest that to use the argument that this is all the statute provides is not good enough. I am sure parliament would readily accede to an amendment to the statute to allow for an increase comparable to the increase in the cost of living itself. A 2 per cent increase in the $75 pension will provide an increase of only $1.50 per month. A 13 per cent increase, which would be comparable to the increase that has taken place in the consumer price index, would amount to $10.75 per month. I am aware of the fact that this increase will apply not only to the basic $75 pension but also to the $30 per month supplement in the case of those who meet the income test and are receiving it. In other words, if a person is receiving the $30 supplement he will get an increase of 60 cents as well as the $1.50, making a total increase of $2.10 per month. I am also aware of the fact that those drawing Canada Pension Plan benefits will get the same percentage increase. However, I plead with the government, in the light of the tremendous increases that have taken place in the consumer price index, to realize that it is not good enough to talk now about an increase of only 2 per cent or $1.50 per month in pensions. I hope the government will now make the appropriate announcement as to what is going to be done, and I hope it will also indicate that a way will be found to do better than merely increasing the pension by 2 per cent. Obviously, this is not enough.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make two points in reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). First, I should like to draw to the attention of the house that the guaranteed income supplement, which provided for many hundreds of thousands of pensioners a $30 per month increase, must be taken into consideration when one attempts to relate this to the 13 per cent increase that has taken place in the cost of living since the $75 pension was established. In the meantime there have been distinct improvements. Last session we made the largest percentage increase in the old age pension that has ever been made. Certainly, that is a very relevant point.

The second point I want to make has reference to the hon. member's request for an announcement in respect of the calculations that will be in effect. I should like to make such an announcement but the available data upon which we depend for these calculations is not yet available in final form. I will have to defer making such an announcement a little longer, but I will make it at the earliest possible date.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES UNDER HOSPITAL LEGISLATION

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) to advise the house whether or not the monthly payments made to nine provinces by the Canadian government under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act are up to date as of September, 1967, and whether the payments to the province of Quebec under the Interim Fiscal Arrangements Act are also up to date as of September, 1967. This question was preliminary to a supplementary question I intended to ask.

I do not have the slightest doubt but that the payments that should be made by the Canadian government to individual provinces on behalf of hospital services are being made in the proper amounts and on time. That is only proper and I am sure that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would see to it that this duty of his department was carried out religiously and accurately.

Over the week end I went to the city of Montreal to visit a married daughter who lives there, a married brother who lives in Beaurepaire, a cousin on the staff of the Montreal Protestant School Board and a niece who lives in Montreal. During that time I visited a large number of friends. During this visitation from Saturday to Sunday I was absolutely scandalized to learn that there are hospitals in the city of Montreal which have not received a single cent from the Quebec government department of health; in the case of three hospitals for over six months and in the case of one hospital for more than a year.

The fact that the department of health of the provincial government of Quebec is not making the normal remittances to cover the operating expenses of these Quebec hospitals is putting the hospitals in dire straits financially. It is not incumbent on me to investigate all the hospitals and I do not have the time to do so. But in this case I had friends on the boards of governors of four of the large hospitals in Montreal and I confirmed the facts that were produced to me. These facts were attested also by members of the medical staffs.

Surely, if the Dominion of Canada is making payments to the Quebec department of health under the Interim Financial Arrangements Act, since Quebec opted out of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, the taxpayers of Canada are entitled to an explanation as to why the hospitals of the province of Quebec are in dire financial straits at the present time because they are not receiving any payments whatsoever from the provincial government of Quebec against their operating accounts.

I have made inquiries in the proper places and I know that no hospital in Canada outside the province of Quebec has any reason to complain about the speed with which their accounts are covered by the provincial departments of health. This includes the nine provinces outside of Quebec. Why is it that the province of Quebec, where they claim to be so much smarter than the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare and its minister in Ottawa, where they claim that they can run their own hospital scheme much better than anybody else, is the only province in which hospitals complain that they have had no remittances from the department of health of the province to cover their operating expenses? I believe that the taxpayers of Canada are entitled to an explanation on this score.

We are a very heavily taxed country. The taxpayers of this country realize some of their taxes are being remitted to a provincial government which at no time makes any effort to explain the manner in which those funds are spent in the province, but stands up and makes the statement that the provincial government will establish the priorities under which expenditures shall be made. When this money is provided by the federal government in Ottawa, I think that the taxpayers of Canada are entitled to an explanation as to what is happening to the money the federal government takes from them and turns over to the provinces.

The other nine provinces do not hesitate to explain the manner of spending the federal funds that are entrusted to them under these shared-costs programs for hospital service. Why therefore, can we not get an explanation from the province of Quebec as to why the moneys sent to Quebec city from Ottawa are not used, apparently, for this purpose? I know for a fact that these moneys are remitted every month. They are remitted properly and on time.

Why cannot these federal funds reach the individual hospitals, even if the province of Quebec decides it is not going to send the proper grants to those hospitals to cover their operating accounts? This policy of opting out of shared-cost programs is endorsed by some people who are not very familiar, I am certain, with human nature or cost accounting, because when a province opts out it then makes the claim that it does not have to explain its expenditures. It does not have to tell the government, in this case the dominion government, how it is spending the money which the government remits to it on the basis that it will be used for hospital purposes.

I know that no moneys are being advanced by the province to these four hospitals. One hospital in Montreal has not received a remittance from the Quebec government for over 12 months and the board of directors are at their wits end. A hospital in Montreal that has hundreds and hundreds of beds only last week had an order with the printers for letterheads, statements and order forms simply to replenish its supplies. The printer asked the hospital for cash on the barrel-head and also asked it to send a truck to pick up the supplies. Suppliers are simply refusing to forward any materials to these hospitals because of the delay in money being remitted by Quebec city.

Is this money being squandered on Expo? We are always hearing tremendous praise of the province of Quebec because of its great contribution which has made Expo such a success. If they have made such a success of Expo by withholding the proper funds from the hospitals which are entitled to the money and are using moneys that are sent to Quebec city by the federal government for hospital purposes, then this is a crying disgrace and I believe the federal government should give an explanation to the taxpayers of Canada as to why the hospitals in the province of Quebec are not receiving the money that the federal government remits to Quebec. Even if the federal government cannot speak for the province of Quebec, surely it can ask for an accounting of its remittances. There are many Canadians in the nine provinces outside of Quebec who take ill in Quebec and who, because of the portability of the hospital schemes in the ten provinces, are treated in Quebec hospitals. I believe that considering the fact that federal funds are being remitted to Quebec for hospital purposes and considering the number of Canadians from the other nine provinces who are treated in Quebec hospitals as a result of accidents or illness which they suffer when travelling through that province, the federal government is entitled to an explanation as to what is happening to the federal tax moneys being remitted to Quebec for hospital purposes once every month, on time and in full. We know now that the hospitals in Quebec are not receiving grants regularly from the provincial government in Quebec city. I could name four hospitals in Montreal, three of them large, which have not received a cent in six months from the provincial department of health, while another large hospital has not received any remittance from the Quebec department of health in more than 12 months.

This cannot continue and I believe the Canadian government should ask for an accounting of what is happening to the federal hospital funds being remitted to Quebec city under that heading.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): All provinces, except Quebec, submit monthly claims for advances which are paid within a few days of receipt; Quebec being the only province to exercise its right under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act, submits estimates of cost which, after examination by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, (Mr. MacEachen) form the basis for calculation by the Minister of Finance for tax equalization payments.

As of September 30, 1967, all advance claims received had been paid; three monthly claims had not yet been received at that date (Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Northwest Territories). My colleague, the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Sharp) informs me that the monthly equalization payments for Quebec are up to date.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT—INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF CENTENNIAL COINAGE

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, over the last few months, starting in June, I have asked a series of questions on the apparent shortage of new centennial coinage throughout Canada. My reason for asking these questions was that one does not see this coinage in the tills, at the banks or anywhere in Canada, except for the odd coin. I think the idea of 1967 centennial coinage was an excellent one but I do not think that its distribution has been carried out very well. My question related primarily to the west because in the beginning there was some centennial coinage in eastern Canada but very little in western Canada despite inquiries by banks, commercial institutions and ordinary people as well as coin collectors. It was impossible to get hold of these coins.

When I first made my inquiries the minister replied that regional distribution was not good. I brought it up several more times as I was interested more specifically in the total amount of centennial coinage turned out by the mint as against the total amount of old coinage.

The minister's answer to that question was that this year commercial shipments had been in excess of new centennial coinage by 42 per cent over regular coinage of 1966. If that is so, very little of it ever found its way into people's hands. I am referring to actual shipments. I have asked many people in banks and various stores across the country whether they had seen these new coins, and many of them had not even had a peek at a penny.

There is no question in my mind that there has been a serious shortage. I do not care what the minister's figures are. I tried to follow up my question about the 42 per cent increase this year with a supplementary and to ask whether the centennial coinage was proportionate to the ordinary minted new coinage, but I received no answer. Perhaps I will get one tonight.

Then to cap it all, Mr. Speaker, today I asked the minister whether the mint had cut off the supply of coinage. I asked the same question in not just one or two but a number of banks, and I was told: "We have not seen any new coins for the last three or four months". This has been the answer I received in many branch banks, and one of the main branches in Ottawa even went further than that. They have not seen any despite the fact they have probably asked for them. I take it that the normal currency outlet for new coinage is the banking institutions.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, today I asked the minister whether production of this centennial coinage had been cut off at the mint, and his answer was no, but in fact the intention was to supply currency needs with 1967 coinage and not to carry the design forward into 1968.

The sort of question I am asked in correspondence and other media is: Where is this coinage? We have all heard lots of stories about large shipments going here, there and everywhere. If you apply for new coinage in sets, you are told you can get new coinage in sets from the mint. But this is only soft pedalling the question. I am talking about 1967 coinage for the normal use of the people of Canada.

I do not know whether there is any answer or whether the government intends to push the mint and to tell them to grind it out. Or perhaps they will just stick to the coin sets. But the fact of the matter is that very few of these new 1967 centennial coins have been issued and are in circulation in Canada.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question put by my hon. friend, we did make an inquiry of the mint and I am glad to reply that the mint has been manufacturing and will continue to manufacture coins bearing the centennial wild life designs until December 31, 1967. These coins will be distributed across the nation through the agencies of the Bank of Canada.

At the present time the mint has three full shifts employed in the coining and medal division. It is turning out approximately 12 million pieces per week of the various denominations. This is supposed to be sufficient to meet the requirements of the public.

They assure me that the procedure is to distribute the coins across the country in the normal manner. I do not know whether people such as collectors intervene in this process, but they do manufacture 12 million pieces per week and should be able to satisfy the demand. They cannot do more than this. As I say, they are working three shifts a day, so the mint is doing its best.

The matter raised by the hon. member tonight will be studied, and I hope that all those who want these new coins will be able to get them before the end of the year.

Mr. Pugh: Might I ask the minister a question? Could he say how long this production of three shifts has been going on?

Mr. Chrétien: For this design they would continue to the last day of the year, December 31.

Mr. Pugh: When did it start?

Mr. Chrétien: I cannot tell you, but they probably started at the beginning of the year.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 3, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES BEFORE ESTABLISHING PRIORITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In the light of the concern of the provinces over the cost of medicare, will the minister review medicare proposals with the provinces before establishing priorities, as mentioned in his speech last evening?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would think a question of this kind which relates to government policy in general should be directed to the Prime Minister rather than the Minister of Finance. I can assure the hon. member that all expenditure programs are under very careful review. I shall take into account his suggestion that we should consult with the provinces.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—PROPOSED PLACING OF NUCLEAR MINES ON TURKISH BORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wished to address to either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, neither of whom is in his seat. Perhaps one of the parliamentary secretaries will draw this question to the attention of one or the other of them for answer tomorrow.

In view of reports that the nuclear planning group of NATO, of which Canada is presently a member, met in Ankara last Friday and debated a Turkish proposal for nuclear mines to be laid on the eastern border of Turkey with the Soviet union, can the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house what position the Minister of National Defence, who was our representative in that group at this meeting, took on behalf of Canada in respect of this proposal? May we also have the assurance that Canada will vigorously oppose this dangerous proposal, since it is clearly against the spirit of the non-proliferation policy which Canada has supported?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to draw this question to the attention of the Prime Minister.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Secretary of State but, in her absence, I will put it to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Hellyer).

Could he tell us if the organization called T.E.Q., that is the Student Workers of Quebec, has received subventions from the federal government since the Company of Young Canadians was set up?

Mr. Speaker: I think that question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Last night the minister said that the increase in the interest rate for housing was designed to attract foreign investments in Canada. Could the minister tell us where the foreigners take the funds they invest in Canada and, on the other hand, where does Canada draw the funds it invests in foreign countries?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACCEPTANCE BY CANADA OF GREATER RESPONSIBILITY IN PACIFIC AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence perhaps one of the parliamentary secretaries could answer it. Has the Canadian government received an invitation from trade and industry minister Takeo Miki of Japan to become a founding member of an "Asia-Pacific sphere" and to accept greater responsibility in that area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt whether this is a question of immediate urgency. I do not think the question is in order at this time.

FINANCE

INQUIRIES AS TO PROPOSED REDUCTION IN GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the opinion of the Canadian Economic Council that taxes will have to be raised if the present rate of government expenditures continues, and the contribution these expenditures are making to inflation, is it the intention of the government to reduce its expenditures and bring them more in line with its income?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think this question is much too large in scope and cannot be asked at this time.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a related question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister tell the house when we may expect to be provided with a list, or when he may be in a position to make a statement outlining the various items of the estimates which have been reduced in accordance with the survey to which the minister recently referred?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in any statements I have made either in this house or outside I have been referring to the study that is under way of the spending estimates for 1968-69. Those will be submitted to the house for study as soon as they have been approved and presented, in the usual manner. Our endeavour for this year is to stay within the financial program that I outlined in our budget.

Mr. Fulton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it from the minister's answer that there is no attempt to reduce the spending as outlined in the estimates for this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the supplementary question is argumentative.

[Mr. Johnston.]

Mr. Fulton: I assure you, sir, that I am just seeking information. I will try to phrase my question in another way. I would like to be certain about this in order that there may be no misunderstanding. May we take it from the minister's statement that the efforts to reduce expenditures do not apply to this year's current estimates?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that to keep our expenditures within our program as outlined to this house will require considerable economies. But our main effort is to see that in the coming fiscal year we are working toward a closer balance between expenditures and revenues, because I think that will be appropriate to the circumstances we will face in that year, and to reduce our borrowings as far as possible so that we do not make excessive demands upon the market.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising out of the minister's answer to my colleague from Kamloops and the statement made last night by the minister. The minister said that the allocation of priorities would be not from the top but through the reduction or dropping of programs. Could the minister indicate to the house whether there will be any dropping of programs in order to keep expenses within the budgetary provisions of this year?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there are some expenditures the government is not undertaking this year that we had otherwise planned to undertake.

Mr. Lambert: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, in the next few days during the budget debate, indicate to the house which programs and expenditures have been pared?

Mr. Sharp: I expect I shall be participating in the budget debate at the opening. My colleague the Minister of National Revenue will be dealing particularly with the efforts, the very successful efforts, that have been made during his term of office at least to keep expenditures under control and to eliminate those that are now obsolete or unnecessary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROPOSED REDUCTION IN PASSENGER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether he is aware of the fact that a few days ago the Canadian National Railways made a decision to reduce the frequency of their passenger service along the Prince Rupert to Prince George line from the one train a day schedule to three trains a week; and if he is aware of this, could he indicate what steps he might take to make representations to the C.N.R. to induce them to change it?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question should be placed on the order paper. In any event the hon. member has made a representation to the minister.

POLLUTION

INQUIRIES AS TO FEDERAL JURISDICTION OVER CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the announcement that the new fuels research centre will be investigating the suppression of atmospheric pollution, is his department taking over responsibility for air pollution control?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there a federal authority with continuing jurisdiction to inquire into pollution in international water systems such as the Okanagan system?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can he tell us whether the government has taken any further action to co-ordinate all matters of pollution within one department?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think this is the type of question which should not be asked at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether it is the intention of the government to place matters concerning air and water pollution under one department?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is important, Mr. Speaker, to have these matters co-ordinated, and they are being co-ordinated.

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—COST OF TRANSPORTING HAND BAGGAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer).

As the Montreal airport is the only airport in Canada where luggage porters charge a fixed amount for each piece of luggage carried, would the minister tell us whether he has received representations for the removal of this obligatory charge and can he apprise us of the intentions of his department in that respect?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the member for Lapointe that this question is not urgent enough to be acceptable at this time and, further more it could easily be put on the order paper.

Mr. Grégoire: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC WORKS

TORONTO—INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance what funds are presently available to the city of Toronto for the construction of Toronto's centennial project, the St. Lawrence centre for the arts; and could he also inform the house as to the site for the construction of the C.B.C. building.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for statistical information and this type of question cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Haidasz: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTS BY DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him whether the government has recently received a report from the committee set up last June 26 as indicated by the Prime Minister at that time to make an economic investigation into the interrelation between Quebec and the rest of the country.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the Leader of the Opposition I would like to say I will have to look into the matter. I do not think that report has been received.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question. While the Prime Minister is looking into the matter, can he also find out how many committees within the various departments are at present working on matters affecting the constitutional structure of Canada, and what reports if any are available from them?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to look into that. If my memory serves me right I think I did make a statement on this matter in the house last June, but I will be glad to look into the whole question.

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE BY RUSSIA OF NORTH PACIFIC SALMON TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In his discussions with the minister of fisheries of the Soviet union was the possibility of the U.S.S.R. entering into the north Pacific salmon fisheries treaty discussed, and did the Soviet union indicate willingness to join that treaty?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the matter referred to by the hon. member was discussed between the minister of fisheries of the U.S.S.R. and myself during his recent visit to Canada which concluded yesterday.

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICE TO ATLANTIC AREA BY CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister take a fresh look at government policy which now prevents Canada's other major air line from serving Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a submission to the minister. I do not think this can be accepted in the form of a question at this time.

Mr. McCleave: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I was not making a submission. I was asking for an answer, but I will put the matter down for ten o'clock if I do not get the answer now.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED DISCONTINUANCE OF RESERVE TRAINING AT UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I have been awaiting the return of the Minister of National Defence in order that I might ask him a very important question, but because of the urgency perhaps I may direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. In order to settle the uncertainty prevailing in universities all across Canada will the Prime Minister say whether it is the intention to continue reserve army training at Canadian universities?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the acting minister I may take this question. A decision has been taken by the federal government which is being made known to the universities at the present time. I am not sure whether that has been completed. Just as soon as possible a public announcement will be made.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): As a supplementary question, when that announcement is made how many officers in training under the Canadian officers training corps and the regular officer training plans will be affected by the change?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is too detailed. Perhaps I should suggest that unless the Minister of Transport is answering questions in his capacity as Acting Minister of National Defence he cannot be asked questions relating to that department.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, in order to set the record straight I wish to say that was the capacity in which I was acting.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would like to ask whether the Acting Minister of National Defence is aware that this has already been announced, certainly at least in the University of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Hellyer: I am not surprised that there might have been some discussions at some places across the country, but to my knowledge no public announcement has been made. I will certainly check, and see that an announcement is made as soon as possible.

Mr. Fulton: As a further supplementary question, would the minister not think it appropriate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: You are not in your proper seat.

[Later:]

Mr. Hellyer: May I correct an answer I gave earlier with respect to the university reserve training program. The press release did go out yesterday indicating that the program was being discontinued at the end of next year. About 1,000 students are affected, but they will complete the training for which they are enrolled. In addition the department plans to work out in co-operation with the Canadian universities the subsidization of chairs of strategic studies at several universities across the country. We feel that in this way we shall be able to make a contribution to the study of areas related to defence policy which will considerably benefit the academic world as well as the Canadian people in their discussion of defence matters.

Mr. Irvine: A supplementary question to the minister with regard to the university training arrangements. Will an award for the first year of enrolment be forwarded to the universities concerned to cover the current year?

Mr. Hellyer: There will be no enrolment this year but current students will be carried through to the end of their course at the end of the present academic season.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Having in mind the long period during which this officer training plan has been in effect in the universities and the great contribution it has made to the provision of officers for our forces, can the minister tell us why it is being abolished?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not in order.

Mr. Brand: I should like to ask the Acting Minister of National Defence whether, in view of the fact that the C.O.T.C. and the R.O.T.P are being discontinued while the U.N.T.D. is not—certainly not in Saskatoon—a statement will be made in the near future to clarify the whole matter.

Mr. Hellyer: I think the hon. member will find that all the plans are being discontinued, if not at the same time then by the end of next year. Officer candidates will then, in some areas, be trained in the local reserve units.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Nonsense.

Mr. Hellyer: These will be the source of trained officers for the militia and reserve units. It was felt that the original purposes of these plans were no longer being served at the present time and that the resources involved could be more effectively spent in other ways.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF RECENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Now that the government has had many months to study the recommendations of the conference on highway and automobile deaths and injuries, convened by the Minister of Industry some months ago, I would ask him if it is the intention of the government to implement any of its recommendations in the near future.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I expect that an announcement will be made by the government within a very few days.

Mr. Grafftey: If I may ask a supplementary question on that very subject, now that the United States federal government has enforced safety standards for motor vehicles is it the intention of the Canadian government to publish and enforce Canadian specifications and regulations in this regard?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I should hope we would be able to deal with that point in the announcement when it is made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

MONTREAL—APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATION OFFICER IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he received a request from the international association of machinists in Montreal that a conciliation officer be appointed to look into a dispute between the workers at Air Canada and the company, and has such an officer been appointed as yet?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that I did receive such a request, but I will have to take the question as notice.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED DECISION OF ROYAL NAVY NOT TO PURCHASE CANADIAN SONAR SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Has the British government informed the Canadian government that the Royal Navy has found the Canadian designed and produced variable depth sonar system unsuitable for Leander class frigates, and that they are not going to purchase this equipment?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we have not received any such communication from the government of the United Kingdom. My department currently is trying to check the authenticity of reports to this effect which have appeared in the press.

Mr. Harkness: Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there is definitely no official intimation from the British government that this is the case?

Mr. Drury: That is what I said, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house of the quantity of these units. Are there 25 or 50?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is detailed information which cannot be asked for at this time.

Mr. Heber E. Smith (Simcoe North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister answered this question his announcement seemed to carry a certain degree of authenticity. Would he tell the house whether the British are abandoning this detection device because the theory or principle is wrong, or because manufacturing costs have become so high that they cannot afford it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATIONALIST CHINA—RESULTS OF UN SPEECH BY CANADIAN MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the foreign office of nationalist China asked the Canadian government for an explanation of the two Chinas speech which was made at the United Nations last Wednesday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. The speech made by my hon. friend last week was, in this respect, similar to the one made one year ago. If that government had wanted an explanation, undoubtedly they would have asked for it before now.

Mr. Sherman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether, as the result of this speech, the premier of nationalist China, C. K. Yen, is to cancel a scheduled visit to Canada?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the cancellation of the visit of that particular gentleman has been attributed by the Chinese foreign office to the exigencies of the situation in the government of Taiwan. I am anxious, as we all are, to have a visit from a representative of that government. We still hope that will be possible.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell the house whether in recent days there has been any other communication from the government of Taiwan respecting self determination for that country?

Mr. Pearson: Not to my knowledge. I should be glad to look into it, to see if one has come.

EXPO '67

USE OF SITE ON CONCLUSION OF EXHIBITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

On his visit to Montreal last Saturday evening as the guest of his honour the mayor of Montreal, and Expo authorities, was Expo discussed and, if so, what were the results of the discussions? Does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to advise the house on the matter in the near future?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No discussions have taken place as the result of our meeting of last Saturday, since that was a social occasion when the government was happy indeed to be so wonderfully entertained by the mayor of Montreal. So far as the disposition of Expo buildings and the possible use of the Expo site after the end of Expo are concerned, these discussions are going on at the present time. I hope that before long it will be possible to make an announcement.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Can the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether steps have been taken to use the Expo grounds as the site of a French university?

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

TORONTO—ADMISSION OF AVIATION FUELING FIRM SUPERVISORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has he received a telegram from the chairman of the negotiating committee of the local of the international association of machinists in Toronto protesting the admission to Canada of some 15 supervisors for the firm of Consolidated Aviation Fueling of Toronto Limited, who would work in Toronto in the face of a lawful strike of the employees of the firm? If so, what steps has the minister taken?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have not yet seen any telegram, though perhaps one has been received in my office. But I have heard about this problem; I am awaiting a report, and I hope that tomorrow I shall be in a position to tell the hon. member what we are doing in this field.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question; maybe the Prime Minister will wish to answer it. Can the right hon. gentleman give the house any information about the position of the Woods committee report on labour and management relations, or give us any indication as to its contents? When will this report be available?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have been pressing for a report from this important task force. I hope an interim report will be made before the end of the year, and that the work will be completed in 1968. I am expecting an interim report before the end of this year.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

STEPS TO CONTROL IMITATIONS OF ESKIMO AND INDIAN ART

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. What action has the government taken to control the flood of cheap imitations of Eskimo carvings which has been pouring on to the Canadian market recently?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): We have been engaged in a study of the protective measures we can take to preserve the integrity of Eskimo carvings and Indian art work. This has progressed to a point at which a report has now been received from the man to whom we gave the contract, and I hope we shall be in a position to move in the direction indicated by the hon. member at an early date.

Mr. Dinsdale: Has the government made any representations to the enterprisers operating in this field, pointing out to them the basic importance of this industry to the Eskimo economy?

Mr. Laing: We have done that in some of the more remote areas where patterns of clothing have been copied from Eskimo designs, but for those who are heavily engaged in this practice I believe something more than exhortation is required.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

CONSIDERATION OF TAXATION REPORT BY JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. On Friday last I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was then leading the government, whether the government would give favourable consideration to referring the content of the Carter report and related provincial reports on taxation to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, or to a special Senate-House of Commons committee, for study prior to the presentation of a government white paper. Would the hon. gentleman care to comment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Since the Carter commission was appointed not by us but by the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member I feel it would be better and more in the interests of the expedition of business here if the committee to which this subject was being referred were to have before it for consideration not only the recommendations of such a commission but the recommendations of the government.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps the minister would also consider the impact of provincial reports on related subjects, since—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is obviously not a question.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Do I understand the minister to suggest that the committee would have before it only the government's white paper, not the report?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. At that time the committee could have before it any documents it wished. I feel it should have before it the government's recommendations, at any rate. It will, of course, also have the Carter commission report, which is public property and which can be referred to the committee at any time.

TRANSPORT

SECOND FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Transport. In view of the importance of the tourist industry to the Atlantic provinces, can the minister give us any indication of the progress being made toward establishing a second ferry service between the United States and Nova Scotia?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am not in a position to report on that at the moment.

Mr. Crouse: Has a request been received by the Minister of Transport from a group in Gloucester, Mass., seeking federal assistance in connection with the establishment of a ferry terminal in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—POSSIBLE REVIEW OF CANADIAN POSITION ON SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs; it relates to Southern Rhodesia and to the answer the hon. gentleman gave the other day to a question by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. Will the minister tell the house what further serious sanctions he has in mind in an attempt to cripple the economy of Southern Rhodesia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I indicated in my reply the other day, these are matters which, first of all, we would want to have discussed in the sanctions committee which normally meets in London. Likewise we would wish to consider them in consultation with other countries at the United Nations when this question comes before the security council.

Mr. Churchill: The minister refers often to "the illegal government of Southern Rhodesia". Is he contemplating similar sanctions against other illegal governments?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT ON ELECTION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the report of the committee on election expenses be referred at an early date to the committee on privileges and elections? May I also ask whether the government intends that there shall be legislation at this session on the subject of election expenses?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would be glad to consider referring the report to the appropriate committee; I see no reason why that should not be done. As to the latter part of the question, I doubt whether we shall have an opportunity at this particular session to deal with this matter, but I certainly hope we shall be able to deal with it before the next election. Of course that gives us a good deal of leeway.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Labour.

In view of the surprise and concern displayed by the various provincial ministers of finance on hearing the recent announcement that the rate of interest for housing loans would be increased up to 8¼ per cent, is the government considering, in the near future, to change or to alter its position and to bring about some other solution that could help and improve this situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon member is now asking a question that might more conveniently be put in the course of the debate which is going to take place this afternoon.

[English]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF ACCESS ROUTES THROUGH ALASKA PANHANDLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether talks are under way or are to be undertaken with the government of the United States with regard to the construction of new access routes through the Panhandle to tidewater.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): There has been a great deal of publicity about additional means of access through the Panhandle. The unfortunate thing is that there seems to be no practical additional access as such. There are no discussions going on at the present time with the United States in respect of obtaining further access through the Panhandle. We have been engaged in discussions in respect of the Haines highway, and we are making a very worth while contribution in respect of those matters in which we have a particular interest at Skagway.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development about access through the Panhandle. I should like to ask the minister when he will be making public the report of the study group which I believe was appointed by his predecessor or perhaps by himself on the question of access through the Alaskan Panhandle.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, there was not in my time anyone appointed to make an investigation concerning the possibility of access through the Panhandle. There is a committee which was appointed by myself about four years ago in respect of northwestern transportation. This committee makes reports to the government. These reports so far have not been made public.

FORT SMITH—INQUIRY AS TO HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister inform this house when he expects tenders to be called for the construction of 30 houses, prefab or precut, at Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question could be placed on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ABSENCE FROM CHAMBER OF MEMBER FOR YUKON

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order under standing order 6, due to the fact that the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has been exercizing his right to speak in the last few days even though he has been away from this house for one year.

This is quite serious, Mr. Speaker, because I feel parliament becomes a huge joke if this fact is overlooked.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Standing order 5 reads as follows:

Every member is bound to attend the service of the house, unless leave of absence has been given him by the house.

Having been absent for one year, the member for Yukon has shown the same irresponsibility—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must know that under the standing orders, he must resume his seat when asked to do so by the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I greatly doubt that the point of order now raised by the hon. member is in order. I think that the matter which he stated should rather be submitted to the house, if he wishes to do so, by way of a question of privilege.

At any rate, this is my opinion which I am expressing without having thoroughly considered the suggestion. If the hon. member wishes to leave that matter in abeyance, I could eventually give my opinion thereon.

Mr. Choquette: Now, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that I will rise to-morrow I think on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I rise on a question of privilege. When you are considering that very important point, Mr. Speaker, would you also take into consideration the matter of whether a member of this house who has sworn allegiance to the Queen should introduce a measure advocating the abolition of the monarchy and the establishment of a republic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister say whether the government, since approval of the medicare bill, has received representations from any province concerning a review or reconsideration of any of the provisions of this legislation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do know that following the premiers' conference this summer there was a request to the Prime Minister to convene a conference on the subject of medicare. I will be happy to advise my hon. friend later what the present situation is in respect of that request.

Mr. Chatterton: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, addressed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say whether the request of the provinces will be acceded to, and if so when such a conference might be called.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into the matter and discuss it with the minister.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REAPPRAISAL OF DESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Can he advise whether the energies and abilities of Colonel Edward Churchill are now being directed to the Northumberland causeway project? If so, has his department been able to make more rapid progress in the current reappraisal of the design?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): The answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is that we are making very rapid progress in re-examining the design.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASES IN PENSIONS AND DISABILITY ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a very simple and brief question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister anything further to report in respect of government policy relating to an increase in disability pensions and war veterans allowances?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, October 2, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board) for committee of supply and the amendment of Mr. Chatterton (p. 2710).

HOUSING—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have before us this afternoon a motion to the effect that the present government does not enjoy the confidence of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart: I see, Mr. Speaker, that I have summed up the situation reasonably accurately. The arguments put forward by hon. gentlemen opposite in support of their motion have centred around the important problem of housing. The house is being told by the opposition that the high cost of housing can be traced to high expenditures made by the government. The high cost of land for building, the high cost of developing building lots, the high cost of building materials and the high cost of labour for construction we are being told can be traced to expenditures made by the government through such things as higher pensions, assistance to education, additional payments to provinces and the like.

We are being told that the genuine top priority in the Canadian political spectrum in the last five years ought to have been housing, and that this genuine top priority has been neglected. We are being told now that more money ought to have been put into the housing field by the government, or that the government ought to have expended less money for other purposes.

At the time of the adjournment yesterday I had placed before the house figures showing the financial input into the housing field through C.M.H.C. during a span of years. The figures I placed before the house showed that this input has grown from approximately $245 million in 1962 to a budgetary estimate of $962 million in the present year. In the light of these accelerating expenditures we must assume that what the opposition is alleging is that less money ought to have been spent on other programs.

What would lend credibility to that argument of the opposition—indeed, the only thing that would lend credibility to their argument—would be if one of their spokesmen rose at this point in the debate and put before the house a list of the major expenditures made during the past four years which the opposition now believes were mistakes. I invite one of their spokesmen to rise at the appropriate time and put before this house and the country just such a list of major expenditures. I refer to major expenditures, because clearly there would be minor expenditures about which there would be disagreement among the ranks of the opposition and perhaps even on this side of the house. We are talking about considerable sums of money here, so if their argument is to be of any importance at all it must rest upon a list of major expenditures they believe ought not to have been made.

The opposition simply cannot have it both ways. They cannot plead for increased government expenditure for various kinds of pensions, for greater assistance in the field of education, and for a better share of the Canadian tax dollar for provincial governments, and then say that these expenditures are improperly driving up the cost of housing. I invite the next spokesman or some other member of the opposition to resolve the dilemma in which their argument, as so far developed, has placed them.

The need for housing, the need for shelter, is so great that at times like this we are sometimes deluded into ignoring certain major, fundamental economic and social facts and considerations. What I want to do this afternoon is to put before you very briefly three or four of these considerations.

The first of these is that if the amount of housing land is limited and if the bulk of construction equipment and construction skill is being used, no additional amount of money poured into the housing field will produce more homes. All this money will produce will be genuine inflation.

Yesterday the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich quoted from the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. He referred to page 264 of that review, and I should now like to read the paragraph to which he referred because it bears directly on this point. The review states:

> Of all the major sectors of the economy, none will have to grow more rapidly than housing—at least to 1970, and perhaps even throughout the 1970's. This is a matter of major national importance if a growing housing shortage is not to become a serious national problem. Greatly increased physical resources will therefore be required in this field, including a substantially enlarged working force with appropriate skills and considerably enlarged capital and residential construction capacity. A large and sustained volume of residential mortgage financing will also be required.

You will notice that it is only in the final sentence of the paragraph that the matter of residential mortgage financing is mentioned. Clearly the economic council does not regard a large and sustained volume of residential mortgage financing as the prime consideration in producing a large number of houses such as will be necessary by 1970 and beyond. Other factors are involved, but the debate as so far presented by the members of the opposition seems to have glossed over the other factors which evidently in the view of the Economic Council are more important and probably more difficult to provide. Certainly the money to finance housing is important, but it is also very important that we face up to the problems created by scarce land, scarce skills and scarce facilities. We do not face up to these things when we simply talk about the interest rate at which approved-lender mortgages may be obtained.

The second thing that tends to evade us is the inevitability of the high cost of housing in great metropolitan areas. When I listened last night to the hon. member for Saskatoon I thought of the Carnegies and the Fricks of New York. Perhaps the hon. member did not put this in categorical terms, but he said in effect that every family had a right to a plot of land, a garden and the other nice things one thinks of when he envisages such a plot of land. I wonder how the Carnegies and the Fricks of Manhattan would have felt about that when they gave up their houses in the centre of Manhattan. I think we simply have to face up to the fact that at the core of these great metropolitan areas it is impossible to have houses surrounded by a half acre of grass or other improvements reflecting one's horticultural ambitions. This is simply a fact of economic life.

The third point we must remember is that as our national economy grows and as our society develops there may well come a point at which the cost of concentration will exceed the savings of proximity. Let me explain to you what I mean. Manufacturers, financial corporations and the other great entities which make up our economy tend to locate their businesses and head offices in great centres. One thing leads to another. To him who hath shall be given. They all crowd in. Whether this is a good thing in economic terms is a question which is often obscured. As a result there is a kind of inward momentum or inertia in the business community and in the minds of those who determine the answers to those questions. Places like Toronto and Montreal become the places to establish head offices.

I suggest to you that the savings of proximity in transportation and communications are very real but that there may well come a time when the costs of concentration overbalance the savings of proximity.

• (3:30 p.m.)

It would be a great mistake, it would be costly to our nation, if we were to attempt vainly to redress that balance. It would be a mistake if we were to pour additional money into the provision of certain kinds of services. This would have the effect of perpetuating these uneconomic situations.

I speak quite frankly to you, sir. I come from a part of the country where we are not much troubled by the costs of concentration. But there are those from our part of the country who have been wondering when the time would come when the inward pull of economic factors would begin to exhaust themselves and would be overcome by what I have called the costs of concentration. There is a passage in the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada which bears on this point because it shows how important it is for Canadians, above all others, to keep this consideration in mind. On page 177 of the review we are told, in a comment on a table that appears on that page, that:

It is particularly significant, however, that among this group of countries Canada experienced the highest rate of increase in urban population—4.1 per cent annually—over the period of comparison. Indeed there is evidence to suggest that Canada had the fastest rate of urban growth among the industrially advanced countries for the post-war period as a whole. This basic trend in Canada, the expected strong increase in total population up to 1980, and the relatively lower levels of urbanization thus far attained, all combine to imply a dramatically faster rate of urban growth in this country compared with most other industrial economies over the period ahead.

I suggest to you, sir, that it would be unfortunate indeed if we went into this period thinking that we simply must perpetuate the growth of these great and increasingly concentrated centres. I say it would be a mistake because we would simply be requiring people, by the structure of the economy and the society, to live in places where they would probably be less happy and no more productive than they would be if this kind of artificial concentration of population were stopped.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Stewart: Certainly.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Is the hon. member advocating, in his last few remarks, some plan whereby we prevent people from moving from one place to another within this country, and in particular prevent them from moving to some of the larger centres where employment is more readily obtained?

Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member really makes the point of my comment in the last part of his question. I am suggesting that if we are going to spend hundreds of millions of dollars it would be far, far better to expend that money to base business and employment away from these focal points.

Mr. Herridge: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stewart: I am suggesting that it would be far, far better to give people jobs in places in which they could live more comfortably, without many of the problems of population concentration, rather than spending the same amount of money or even more to enable them to survive at all and have to commute 25 or 35 miles to their work and live in a very bad environment. I use the words "bad environment" with almost every connotation of the expression.

The last point I want to deal with is one to which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) himself adverted last night. It refers to the whole question of the municipal tax on homes. On April 26, 1967, when speaking to the conference of the Canadian Tax Foundation, the Minister of Finance, despite the fact that the commission had been set up by the previous government, said with approval that the Carter commission report had come to the conclusion that this tax is regressive and is bearing heavily upon the poor. I say "despite the fact that the commission had been set up by the previous government" to emphasize not that the commission report is wrong on this point, but that the Minister of Finance was quoting it on this point with great approval. The minister again referred to this problem in the house in this debate.

But, Mr. Speaker, an even more austere authority has spoken on this point. I refer again to the Economic Council of Canada. The Economic Council says at page 215 of its fourth annual review:

> Examination of the historical record suggests that the financial structure of Canadian municipalities was reasonably well adapted to the requirements of the late nineteenth century. But modernization of this nineteenth century machinery has failed to keep pace with the needs of accentuated urbanization in this century.

The review goes on to develop this point and at page 218 we come to this sentence:

> Real property taxes continued to account for more than three-quarters of the total revenue from the municipalities' own sources over the period 1953-63 and it is worth noting that they rose more than one and a half times as rapidly as personal income.

The review goes on to document the implications of the passages I have read. I would hope that when the federal-provincial conference on urban problems takes place—this conference was foreshadowed in the speech from the throne—what the Minister of Finance has said repeatedly and what the Economic Council of Canada has said on this question of taxation on homes will not be forgotten. I should think this would be one of the two or three most important topics to be discussed by the members of that conference.

We are conducting a debate on housing. The opposition raised this matter in the house last week, so I was just a little surprised that they returned to the same topic this week as a basis for their first post-reformation supply amendment. Clearly what they are trying to do is sort out their own thinking.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I have time.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member does not have time because his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There may be agreement to allow the hon. member to continue beyond his time, but I should bring to the attention of the house that a large number of hon. members have expressed a desire to take part in the debate and only two hours and 20 minutes are left.

Mr. Stewart: I shall be very brief in answering the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): My question requires a very simple answer. Does the hon. member believe there is a housing crisis in the country today? Yes or no.

Mr. Stewart: There is a housing shortage. Whether one calls it a crisis depends on what one means by the words "crisis". A philosopher has said that there is always a "present crisis". I suppose the hon. member is one of those who move from crisis to crisis.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), who is in charge of Canada's housing policy, spoke last Thursday he tried to tell the house and the country that there really was no housing crisis, that there was only a problem which I suppose one could call a crisis in certain areas. In this connection he mentioned Toronto again and again, but he said that on the whole we were doing quite well. His parliamentary secretary, when speaking a few days ago, told us in great detail that it was easy to get a house in Montreal. I am certain that the Minister of Labour, his parliamentary secretary and possibly the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) are alone in Canada in really believing or in saying that there is no real crisis in housing at present.

If the Minister of Labour thinks that we are being partisan, I suggest to him and to the other members of the government that they look at what the newspapers of Canada are saying and take a close look at what the Liberal newspapers of Canada are saying. Let us take a look at the Toronto Star. I think we all know it as a very open and partisan supporter of the Liberal party and the Liberal government. In an editorial which appeared on Thursday, September 28, entitled "More Houses—But Who Can Afford Them", here is what they say about the government's policy and about the Minister of Labour. I am glad I am quoting from the editorial because I am not certain that the words used in it would be quite parliamentary. It reads as follows:

> The interest rate announcement, standing alone and unrelated to the ability of ordinary people to pay, shows once again the utter incompetence of Labour Minister John R. Nicholson to handle federal housing policy.

All I can say to that is "amen."

Speaking yesterday for our party on the amendment proposed by the official opposition, my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), said that we would vote for the amendment, that we could really do nothing else. Yet I want to say to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) who moved the amendment that we are voting for it because of what is in the amendment and not on the basis of the speech made by the hon. member.

I want to deal briefly with the main criticism he made of the government, one which was repeated today in questions put by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The main criticism was that the reason there is a housing crisis, the reason that the interest rate on housing mortgages had to be raised as it was last week, the reason why there is no money for housing, is that government expenditures have gone up too much, and supposedly the Economic Council is the authority for this statement. I deny the suggestion that the Economic Council made that claim. However, I want to say to the members of the official opposition—and I wish the new leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Stanfield, would use his influence on the members of parliament from his party to prevail on them to be honest and consistent—that if government expenditures are responsible for the difficulties we face in housing, then one needs to look not just at federal government expenditures but at all government expenditures.

The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough who has just spoken mentioned the great increase in municipal taxes. I do not want to deal with that subject today because it would take up too much time but let me say that last night I took the trouble of comparing the increases in federal government expenditures with the increases in provincial government expenditures. I found the figures very interesting and I commend them for study to the members of the official opposition.

In 1958 the government of Canada spent $5.17 billion. Ten years later the estimates of the federal government for 1967-68 show that we are spending $9.5 billion, an increase of just under 100 per cent. In 1957 the province of Nova Scotia, under the premiership of the present leader of the Conservative party, had a budget of $58.5 million. In the year 1967 their budget was $154 million, an increase of almost 300 per cent. I am not being critical of that; I know how much Nova Scotia needs to improve its roads, schools and hospitals. However, I suggest to the members of the opposition that if it is necessary for the federal government to economize so that we can have houses, Nova Scotia should also have to economize.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does the hon. gentleman know whether in the increase in federal expenditures which he has just called to our attention the transfer payments made by the federal government to the provinces are included?

Mr. Orlikow: Of course they are included, and Nova Scotia received a substantial amount. I do not want to spend all my time on this subject; I just want to try to bring some sense of reality to the members of the official opposition. The province of Ontario, which has had a Conservative government for 25 years, spent in 1958 just over $1 billion. In the last year—this was before Mr. Robarts started to campaign and make a promise every day, promises which are going to cost hundreds of millions of dollars—the province of Ontario spent $2.193 billion, an increase substantially greater than 100 per cent.

I wish to commend the province of Manitoba to the members of the official opposition. That province, which has had as its premier Mr. Roblin who, according to the week end Globe and Mail, is the shadow finance minister of the official opposition, had expenditures in 1957-58, the year in which Mr. Roblin took office, amounting to $80 million. For the year 1967-68 expenditures in the province of Manitoba amount to $354 million, an increase, according to my rough calculations, of 450 per cent.

I do not blame Mr. Roblin for the expenditures in some of those years. I was a member of the legislature of Manitoba for part of that period and I urged Mr. Roblin to spend even more money. However, I am suggesting to the members of the official opposition that if they are going to assume the new kind of image about which the press is talking so much, if they are going to offer a constructive alternative to the government, they have to be consistent. They cannot call on the federal government to be careful to cut down expenditures and cut back programs while at the same time Conservative provincial governments are expanding their services. If the members of the official opposition are talking, as they were today in the question period, about programs which should be cut back, I think they will have a responsibility this coming week when we are discussing the budget to tell us what programs they think should be cut back.

Should we stop the subsidy on the price of wheat to be paid to farmers, a subsidy which the government announced last week? I would like to hear from the Conservative members from western Canada. Do they think that subsidy should be stopped because the government is spending too much money? I would like to hear from the members from Cape Breton. Should we stop the subsidies paid to help the coal mines keep operating and to help keep the coal miners at work? I would like to hear from those members on that score.

I remember the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) in past months asking the Minister of Transport about the subsidizing of coal being shipped by rail from the Alberta mines to Vancouver so that it can be sold to Japan. Do they want the government of Canada to stop subsidizing the shipment of that coal? If they do, let us hear about it.

Do the hon. members from Halifax and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich want to cut a billion dollars or half a billion dollars from the defence estimates? I think we should be told this by them because if we do that people working for the navy at Halifax and Victoria would be thrown out of work. Let us hear from these members. Let us see how serious they are about this business of cutting expenditures.

Mr. Forrestall: What would you do about it?

Mr. Orlikow: I do not think the difficulties in housing are caused by too much government expenditure. I say that you people in the official opposition have a responsibility to spell out what you mean, if you really mean what you have been talking about for the last few days.

Now I want to deal with the kind of thing which the Minister of Labour was saying last week and the kind of thing which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was saying last night, that there is really no housing shortage in this country, no housing crisis except in Toronto. Mr. Speaker, the ministers know that is not true.

I have here three stories which appeared in Winnipeg newspapers during the last few months. One deals with the city of Winnipeg and appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on March 14, 1967. It summarizes a study made of housing conditions in the central part of Winnipeg, an area represented by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I want to quote a couple of paragraphs:

> Half the families living in greater Winnipeg, are living in houses or apartments that are overcrowded, or substandard from the point of view of construction or sanitation.
> Or else they are living doubled up—two families in a dwelling designed to be used by one family; or they are paying more for their shelter than they can afford.

It goes on to say:

> There are only 2,000 dwellings in the city designed to satisfy the needs of the 35,000 Winnipeg families (about a third of the total number of families in the area) whose income is so low that they need some form of direct subsidy to be able to live in decent homes.

The Winnipeg Tribune in June, 1967, carried a report about the town of Thompson which is the centre of a large nickel development. Last week my colleague from Sudbury spoke about the problems in Sudbury. In Thompson the International Nickel Company has announced its intention to double its work force over the next few years from the present 3,000 to 6,000. At present there are workers in Thompson who are paying $150 a month for one room and their families are still living in Vancouver, Edmonton or Sudbury whence the men came to find work. What is the future for those families? What is the future of that town? The minister has announced a policy covering an increase in mortgage rates which will effectively prevent these people from ever being able to buy homes.

The Winnipeg Tribune in March, 1967, carried an article which dealt with the problem of some of the rural people, particularly the problem of the Métis, and I would like to quote one paragraph:

> In the community of Ebb and Flow on the west side of Lake Winnipegosis live 329 persons. They live in 52 log and mud dwellings, most of them with one or two rooms. Several families with 7 to 10 children live in one room. Other families with 9 to 13 children share two rooms.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, but I think hon. members and the public in general know the conditions under which our Indian and Métis people are living. Yet last week the Minister of Labour and last night other members of the government tried to brush aside this problem and to suggest that there is no problem. Mr. Speaker, there is a problem. It is a problem which must be met. It is a problem which must be dealt with.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

If there is one thing the government has demonstrated it is that it simply has not got the ability to deal with this question. I think the Minister of Finance put the government's housing policy so clearly in one sentence that nobody, even members of the official opposition, could misunderstand what it is. I want to quote that sentence because it clearly gives the principle under which the government is working. Hon. members will find it at page 2734 of yesterday's Hansard, where the Minister of Finance is recorded as follows:

> We plan that the bulk of housing should continue to be financed through the market, as it has been in the past.

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? It simply means that people who want to find housing accommodation, whether it be individual houses which they will buy or apartments which they will rent, will have to depend on the market. They will have to depend on builders and contractors getting money from the lending agencies.

For some years a situation has existed in which there is a tremendous demand for construction. There is a demand for houses, individual homes. There is a demand for apartment dwellings. There is a demand for building motels and hotels. There is a demand for building modern, luxurious, air-conditioned office buildings. There is a demand for building grocery supermarkets. It is a tragedy if one cannot drive within three minutes to a supermarket, and so it is necessary to build another one three blocks away. There is a demand for filling stations and service stations on every other city block, if not on every block.

Is there any member of the house, any member of the business community, who does not realize that under these conditions, when we obviously cannot meet all of the demands, housing simply cannot compete for money with business and industry which do not care about costs? I say in all seriousness to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall), who asked what our solution was, that if we are going to build housing accommodation, whether it be individual homes owner-occupied or rental accommodation, in anything like the number of units we need we are not going to be able to do so until the government of Canada, in co-operation with the provinces, is prepared to establish a system of priorities.

I give one very simple example from the city of Ottawa; at least, it is simple to me. Completed during the past few weeks in the city of Ottawa was a very impressive, very luxurious hotel just a couple of blocks from here, the Skyline Hotel. I am not an expert on building but I am satisfied that the money it cost to build the Skyline Hotel, if it had been used to build houses, could have provided at least 1,500 houses in Ottawa. I say to the minister and to all hon. members that that is the kind of choice we shall have to make if we really want to have houses. Do we need a hotel more than we need 1,500 homes? My answer is very simple. I think we need the houses much more than we need the hotel and I believe that the government, in co-operation with the provincial governments, in co-operation with the lending agencies and working with the Bank of Canada, should be saying this to the construction industry.

We should be setting priorities. Until we do so it is just nonsense to think we are going to meet the housing needs and build anywhere near the number of houses required. Up until this year we have followed a simple policy in regard to housing, a policy which one of the people who administer a public housing project in the city of Toronto some years ago called a policy of socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor. We have used legislation and government guarantees to assure lending agencies that those in the middle and upper income brackets who borrow money on mortgages are safe risks. The government guaranteed the mortgage companies that they would not lose money. For the low income people, for those with large families, we have done virtually nothing. There are about 50,000 public housing units in Canada and there ought to be 500,000 or more. By raising the interest rate to 8¼ per cent the minister in effect says, "We will not help to finance houses for those with middle incomes."

In Toronto a man must earn over $8,000 a year to qualify for a mortgage loan under the present government regulations. In Winnipeg, the city from which I come, that figure is $6,500. The Minister of Labour ought to know that most workers in Winnipeg do not make $6,500. The minister has frozen out the bulk of the Canadian people.

Even if we build the 170,000 houses which the Economic Council has said we need—and I submit that we will not—even if we build in the next couple of years the 190,000 houses a year which will be needed, we shall be building for precisely those who need assistance least. We shall be building for those who can manage best on their own. That is the effect of the minister's action. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough who spoke before me quoted something from the Bible which ought to be applied to this government and its housing policy—to those who have, shall be given. That is precisely this government's housing policy.

To solve the housing crisis the government should adopt a system of priorities. It should tell the builders and speculators that we can do without some luxury hotels and without the constant proliferation of supermarkets, that the materials and manpower for such projects which have been projected for the next two years can better be used in building housing. That is what the government should say.

If the minister will not listen to that kind of drastic proposal—I am sure he will not because he is a great admirer of the free enterprise market system which he thinks will solve the housing problem—he should listen at least to the proposals of the Toronto Star. That newspaper proposes that the government should absorb about 3 per cent of the interest rate charged against mortgages. It says that if the government were to pump $300 million extra into housing the subsidy would amount to just about $9 million a year. I suggest to the official opposition, which was concerned about government expenditure, and I suggest to the Minister of Labour that the $9 million would be well spent. It would help to provide houses for hundreds of thousands of those who are not in the low income bracket and do not need public housing or subsidized housing but could afford their own houses if the stupid policies which this government has permitted to grow were done away with. In an editorial last Friday the Toronto Star said: "We subsidize coal—why not housing?" The minister ought to explain why the government of Canada or the people of Canada cannot afford to subsidize housing, one of the basic needs of our people.

I said I would mention some policies which we think ought to be adopted.

Mr. Forrestall: The hon. member needs some ideas on the subject.

Mr. Orlikow: In the light of the contributions of the official opposition in the last two days I think it would be best for the hon. member for Halifax not to interject such remarks. I submit that the official opposition have already demonstrated sufficiently their ignorance and stupidity.

I want to deal in broad outline with what we think government housing policy ought to be. We do not think that the federal government can evade its responsibilities in the field of housing. It cannot suggest that housing is outside federal jurisdiction. It is true that the constitution says that housing is a responsibility of the provinces and municipalities, but surely no one can deny, that the federal government, through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has pumped into housing hundreds of millions of dollars. Without the federal government there would be no leadership in this field, there would be no housing policy and virtually no house construction in this country. It is the federal government, therefore, that must give leadership, and there are a number of things which the federal government can do.

If the government does not wish to impose direct capital controls on the construction industry—and I cannot see this dreadful government doing that—at least it could bring in a program similar to the winter works program under which $500 was allowed to those who built houses in the winter when unemployment usually is high. Such a program could be extended to moderately priced houses. Also, Mr. Speaker, the government could take the sales tax off building materials used in home building. That should be done immediately. If necessary the Minister of Finance could think of increasing the sales tax on materials used in projects such as hotels, motels and shopping centres. We could well do with a pause in that kind of building. If the government would do this the building of houses would be encouraged, particularly the building of moderately priced homes.

I submit that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation ought to tell builders that mortgages will not be guaranteed where the cost of the lot exceeds a reasonable amount. That would stop the value of lots being bid up to as much as $10,000 to $12,000 in cities such as Toronto and Montreal. Also, provinces and municipalities should stop selling raw, unserviced land to speculators who develop land which they have bought for several hundreds of dollars an acre and sell it for several thousand dollars per acre. The provinces and municipalities themselves should develop the land and sell it to builders at a reasonable price. I submit that in this way Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could use its money and authority effectively. The adoption of such proposals, we submit, would lead to a solution of the housing problem which has become of crisis proportions.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Before I sit down I wish to pose a couple of questions to the Minister of Labour arising out of remarks made yesterday by his colleague the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance said that the government intended to see that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation placed greater emphasis on projects involving public housing and subsidized housing for elderly people, students, and so on. I should like the hon. gentleman to tell us what he believes the coming year will produce in the way of housing. Is it likely to be the 170,000 units which the Economic Council says we need, or 150,000 or 135,000? It has to be one figure or another. What percentage of this housing will be the kind of housing which the Minister of Finance said last night we needed most? He said—and I agree with him in this—that our need was not confined to the kind of houses which were being built across this country for $40,000 or $50,000. What is the percentage in the public sector likely to be? In 1966 it was 4 per cent. Will it be 6 per cent or 10 per cent next year? If the Minister of Finance was speaking seriously the Minister of Labour, who is in charge of housing, must surely know what are the government's intentions for the coming year.

We on this side hope the minister has a better answer to the housing problem than he has given us so far. We hope his contribution to its solution will be more constructive than his announcement last week that the interest rate would be increased to 8¼ per cent, a rate which 85 per cent of our people, I would estimate, cannot afford to pay. Incidentally, the minister knows that the real rate on commercial loans for housing is not the figure fixed by C.M.H.C. but a higher rate in the neighbourhood of 8¾ or 9 per cent and that as a result of the greater cost of housing most people will need second mortgages in order to complete their purchases. The rate of interest on second mortgages is 10, 12 or even 15 per cent for people who are good risks. I am afraid to mention the figure which people who are not considered to be good risks are required to pay.

These are some of the problems facing the people of Canada today in the field of housing. I am not talking about those who can afford to pay whatever is required of them. I am not talking about people who can afford to rent apartments for $250 or $350 a month or pay $50,000 for a new house. I am thinking of those who are making between $5,000 and $6,000 a year and for whom the cost of housing is becoming so great that they cannot afford to maintain even the minimum standards which any civilized country ought to be providing.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like in turn to make a small contribution to this debate by discussing a situation which is becoming increasingly alarming: the housing crisis.

This crisis, Mr. Speaker, did not arise within the last week. It has been with us for several months and the government, of course, as always, intends to pass legislation and assume its responsibilities only in critical moments. Since 1965, when the present government was re-elected, it has passed legislation sporadically, in times of crisis, and that is why today the members of this house and the Canadian people are faced with a serious, important and urgent situation.

We owe this debate, of course, Mr. Speaker, to the action of the official opposition which, since the reopening of the session, has been proposing the adjournment of our regular business in order to deal with this very important matter. Faced with the refusal of the Chair to grant us this adjournment, we introduced the amendment now before the house.

• (4:20 p.m.)

If the government are faced with such a critical situation with respect to housing, they have nobody to blame but themselves because we never missed the opportunity in former sessions to remind them that they should take stronger measures with regard to the housing crisis and that they should deal with it without delay.

Of course, the crisis has now grown worse and not only the opposition but all information media are unanimous in recognizing that it was high time for the government to take action.

At this stage, I will refer the house to an article written by Mr. Roger Champoux in the Wednesday, September 27, 1967 issue of La Presse where, speaking of the housing crisis, he wrote:

> We come right after the United States—
> As far as the high cost of housing is concerned.
> —which puts us not far from the top, in other words in the prohibitive price bracket. New housing costs a fortune to build; it is barely completed when taxes fall on it like a cloud of grasshoppers. Result: the lessee pays three times what it is worth. Houses of some years standing are the objet of such mysterious dealings that before long only people of means can afford them.

And the article goes on in the same vein. The author explains that the housing situation in Canada, and especially in Quebec, has come to a very serious turning-point.

Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada have been quoted extensively during our discussions. Of course, the minister does not seem very happy when we quote the report of the Economic Council and when it was tabled in the house, at the beginning of this debate, he quite rightly criticized the Economic Council for putting forth nice theories, for giving good advice without suggesting solutions. Obviously, the Economic Council of Canada is not the government. In our parliamentary system, in our democratic system it is not up to the opposition or to the Economic Council to make decisions, it is up to those who have the responsibility of administering the country, that is the government.

But I hardly think that the minister can set aside the annual review of the Economic Council whose purpose is precisely to try to inform the administration, that is the government, on the various problems related to the economy of the country.

On this subject, Mr. Speaker, on the housing crisis, I should recall very briefly the summary of the observations of the Economic Council of Canada which may be found on page 24 of the annual review, and I quote:

> To put these developments into quantitative perspective, it may be noted that the number of new housing starts rose from 126,000 units in 1961 to 166,000 in 1964—

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, may I digress to say that during this debate members of the government have several times asked us: "What did you do when you were in power?" Well, looking at the figures of the Economic Council, it will be found that there has been a considerable increase from 1961 to 1964—I think we were still in power in 1963 and the report also says:

> —but there was no increase in housing starts between 1964 to 1965, while a sharp decline (of about 20 per cent) occurred in starts between 1965 and 1966.

The Conservative party was not in power in 1964, 1965, 1966. It was the Liberal party, the people now sitting across from us.

> —over the whole period 1961-1966, the growth in the physical volume of housing construction has thus averaged only about 4 per cent per year, compared with a rate of growth in real Gross National Product well in excess of 6 per cent. This has meant that at a time when the number of new households being formed was rising sharply, the share of total available resources being devoted to the provision of new housing was significantly smaller than in the early 1960's.

Here we have the summary of the precarious situation as far as housing is concerned. According to the annual review this situation became apparent at the beginning of 1966. That is why last year we have repeatedly asked the government to adopt measures and pass legislation likely to put a stop to the situation with which we are faced today.

But, unfortunately, and I emphasize this again, we have a government which waits until a situation deteriorates before it takes positive action.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are causes to the present unrest, and those which were put forward during this debate, are the tightening of credit and a complete lack of planning on the part of the government with regard to expenditures.

The review by the Economic Council of Canada is perfectly clear and specific on those two points. And with your permission, I shall refer to page 25 of the economic review with regard to the tightening of credit:

In summary, during periods of tight credit conditions, the supply of and demand for residential mortgages are both subject to considerable pressure. Housing demand, as a result, has tended to contract during periods of strongly rising economic activity and during periods of deliberate monetary restraint, serving to stabilize the overall level of demand in the economy, but at the expense of producing a great deal of instability in the housing sector itself.

Since the 1965 elections, the government has applied a policy of tight money. And that tight money policy has had disastrous consequences, not only in that sector of our economy but also in other sectors of consumer affairs.

That is why, naturally, people without means, the poor, are now having a hard time making ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, planning expenditures, that is one of the main objectives of good administration. A while ago, we heard the member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) claim that the Conservative party was not consistent in introducing this amendment, because last year it did not ask the government to limit its expenditures.

Now, as far back as 1965 and even before that, we have continuously been asking the government to plan its administrative expenses.

Of course, we have always been in favour of some co-ordination of priorities. When mention was made this afternoon that we were supporting the proposed increase in the old age pension to $105, that was precisely because we wanted the government to establish priorities in various fields. We were convinced at that time, that the increase in the old age pension was a priority, and I am sure that our well-informed friends opposite also shared our belief in this respect.

• (4:30 p.m.)

We are therefore in favour of planning our expenditures and establishing priorities for certain policies.

In his statement yesterday, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) implied that he would propose, on behalf of the government, to establish priorities shortly. Well, that is what we want and in 1967, if the economy is to be well understood and the national interest served, it will be necessary in our modern times to give priority to certain pieces of legislation.

In the matter of housing, Mr. Speaker, I feel that priorities should be established. The first that comes to my mind is the setting of a reasonable rate of interest for people in the middle income bracket.

Figures have been quoted in this house, showing the continued escalation of mortgage financing and construction costs.

Yesterday, I was shocked by the figures given by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). I refer to page 2719 of Hansard where he told us that with a $15,000 mortgage at 8¼ per cent for 35 years, the cost of the house will be $45,000 principal and interest.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that when we pass legislation or report on our policies, it must be done efficiently.

Obviously, we cannot say that increasing the interest rate to 8¼ per cent will be an incentive to housing construction in Canada. This may promote competition and encourage financial institutions to increase their investments in this particular sector of our economy. However, for poor people, those who cannot afford it, those who earn less than $5,000 or $6,000 a year, for instance, this 8¼ per cent rate of interest is totally unacceptable, it is absolutely detrimental to their interests.

I fail to see how the minister's decision to raise the interest to 8¼ per cent could help the poorer classes to own their homes. I think that in 1967, a house is not a luxury, but a necessity. In my estimation any red-blooded, ambitious and resourceful Canadian can and should aspire to become a home owner or to live in a decent salubrious dwelling that meets the needs of a modern family.

I shall quote here what a Liberal member said yesterday: We are happy that the increased interest rate of 8¼ per cent represents a ceiling and that the minister foresees that financial institutions will provide loans at a lower rate.

To strengthen his argument, evidently, he said that the Bank of Montreal was ready on Friday last to supply loans at the rate of 7¾ per cent. That 7¾ per cent was last Friday, but did things stop there?

Mr. Speaker, the Ottawa Journal reports today that both the Royal Bank of Canada and the Toronto-Dominion Bank have decided to charge 8 per cent interest on loans.

Now, following the 7¾ per cent interest which the Bank of Montreal set last Friday, two other branches of the bank have decided to raise their interest to 8 per cent. And next week, we would not be surprised if our banking and financial institutions would reach the maximum rate—and thus I think that the minister will be unable to attain the goal which he had set when he announced his interest rate of 8¼ per cent.

The second priority, Mr. Speaker, in the housing field, is evidently the elimination of the 11 per cent tax on building materials. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance, in his statement in the House of Commons suggested that the 11 per cent tax was necessary to meet government expenses. He quoted figures alleging that the 11 per cent tax only applied to half of the cost of construction.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the minister was sincere last night when he said that he was looking for means and reasons that would justify dropping the 11 per cent tax, I feel that he could have turned to other fields of taxation, such as the luxury field. For example, why not levy a heavier tax on colour television sets and on tobacco and chocolate, which are not essential to the taxpayers? No, instead of taxing luxury goods, the minister is hitting one area of our economy and he is sabotaging the whole system of taxation.

The minister knows very well that the 11 per cent tax which he has refused to abolish for two years has greatly helped to raise the level of unemployment in our province. If people cannot afford to pay 8¼ per cent, they certainly cannot afford to pay 11 per cent tax on building materials. That is why, in the last few months, our manufacturing and building industries have declined and the level of unemployment is rising, not only in Quebec but across the whole country.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of Finance, if he is really sincere, to review again, not only for himself but for the benefit of all the Canadian taxpayers, this policy of the 11 per cent tax on building materials.

In this, he should, I believe, follow the idea and thoughts expressed repeatedly by the official opposition, that is, he should, in the interest of this economic sector, do away with this 11 per cent tax as soon as possible. I believe that as far as housing is concerned, that is a second priority matter.

The third priority in housing, sir, is for the government to establish a research committee of experts to find out if it would be possible to reduce the building cost of our properties.

We can hardly build a decent house now, unless we pay $12,000, and here again, I think that a $12,000 property would only have four rooms. Obviously, in this $12,000 house, you cannot have the commodities of a more luxurious one. But I feel that the building cost of our houses, when you think of our climate, is excessive and absolutely prohibitive.

I would therefore suggest that the minister acknowledge the third priority: the establishment of a research committee of experts to find out if it would not be possible to lower the building rate of our properties.

Fourth on the list of priorities, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Labour should immediately convene a federal-provincial conference on the housing crisis in the nearest future.

The hon. minister told us in his speech that he travelled across Canada and met representatives of the provinces and of municipalities in an attempt to stimulate house building throughout the country. With respect to this most urgent and serious problem, I think that the hon. minister should immediately call a federal-provincial conference to consider the steps that can be taken in order to reduce the purchasing cost of lots. Since this matter comes under municipal jurisdiction, and municipalities come under provincial jurisdiction, this matter should be discussed with provincial authorities.

At this federal-provincial conference, we should find the means to facilitate urban renewal. Obviously, this is an extremely difficult question in 1967. Naturally, housing is very, very heavily taxed locally, municipal and school taxes are excessively high not only in the province of Ontario but also in the province of Quebec. I believe that the average of municipal and school taxes in Quebec is between $325 and $350 per property.

This federal-provincial conference should also provide through the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation increased amounts to provincial and municipal governments so as to give this area a necessary blood transfusion if the crisis is to be thoroughly and efficiently contained.

Mr. Speaker, it was several times that the present government should show more leadership, more decision in some areas. Naturally, we will be told that this area is not under jurisdiction of the federal government but in view of the fact that the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation has for several years spent millions for the construction of residential housing, I think it would be fair and reasonable that the hon. minister be given an opportunity to exert his leadership and bring the parties involved together to consider most seriously the whole question at a federal-provincial conference.

During the debate, the minister, replying to the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), I think, said that our chartered banks, having been granted new powers by the legislation adopted last year, are indicating some interest in making mortgage loans. The minister quoted figures. The minister said that according to his information chartered banks were lending nearly 10 million dollars a month. But I do not know who is getting these loans nor what banks are granting them. Possibly, they are being made in the major urban centers? But as far as we the rural folks are concerned, I must tell the hon. minister that several times during the summer people came to ask me how this new Bank Act could be used to secure mortgage loans. In all the cases of which I was told about, none of the people has obtained a loan from a chartered bank. Now I speak of the rural environment in which I live. The statistics quoted by the minister possibly referred to urban areas.

But I must tell the minister that in rural areas the banks, thanks to new powers granted them last year, that is the authorization to make mortgage loans, refuse to give explanations and refuse also to grant mortgage loans.

I would therefore urge the minister to bring pressure to bear on our financial institutions, on banks, not only in large cities or in urban areas but also in rural areas, so that they may, under the new powers we granted them, meet the requirements of consumers.

Of course, it is more profitable for the banks to lend on notes. In view of the fact that they availed themselves of their privileges and were given the right to develop, to administer themselves financially, I think that the government should threaten to impose sanctions on the chartered banks and those who will not lend on mortgages.

The province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker, is of course faced with that problem just like the other provinces. That explains why the Quebec government set up what is called the Quebec Housing Corporation, thanks to an act passed in 1967. In addition to dealing with urban renewal and low-rent housing, it has a five-year plan to develop the two sectors I mentioned.

This work is performed in co-operation with municipalities and private companies. Moreover, the province of Quebec, through that housing corporation, borrows funds from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in order to attain those purposes. I am advised that in accordance with the five-year plan of the Quebec Housing Corporation an amount of $100 million is provided for urban renewal and $300 million for the construction of low-cost housing.

But, Mr. Speaker, is it necessary for me to tell you that those are minimum amounts. In fact, Quebec is dealing with an unusual problem of slums; it has been mentioned in this house that Montreal, the metropolitan city of Canada, had taken advantage of only one comprehensive plan for low-cost housing since the Quebec minister of finance, Mr. Dozois, had developed such a plan. It has been called the Dozois plan in Montreal.

What I find most strange, is the fact that we are trying at the present time, to rack our brains, in order to decide what should be done with the site of the world fair. If we have spent millions of dollars in an effort to spread abroad our Canadian culture, I do think that this administration, that of the city of Montreal and the Quebec government should consider the fact that the site of the world fair would lend itself splendidly to the construction of low-cost housing for our people, our poor in Montreal who need them so badly.

In fact, I have been told that, in one portion alone of the site of the world fair, we could house 30,000 families. Let us think about it, Mr. Speaker, 30,000 families.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if we carried out that project, it would be one of the most outstanding gestures of human brotherhood on the part of the Canadian people towards the underprivileged classes of our society, and I urge the minister—this is my suggestion to him—when discussions about the possible use of the world fair site take place, to make that suggestion to the Montreal municipal authorities and those of the Quebec government. In so doing, I am convinced that we would make a worthwhile contribution to a group of our people who need it very badly. Of course, the minister said yesterday that the present government found it difficult to borrow. The same applies to provincial governments.

The Quebec minister of finance told us recently that the borrowing index of the province and that personal and corporate income taxes evidenced that other sources of revenue had to be found. Since Quebec, as well as the other Canadian provinces, desperately need money to set up the various building programs for low-rent housing projects, it is high time, as I said earlier, that the minister convened a federal-provincial conference in order to discuss and solve that problem without delay.

Mr. Speaker, this evening we will be asked to vote on an amendment. All the members are acquainted with the amendment of our party because, to my mind, it is quite clear. We were told yesterday, and it was confirmed this afternoon, that the New Democratic Party would support the amendment. We thank them for their support. We hope that the other parties in the house as well as a few Liberal members—although I doubt it —will also support our amendment. We do not want to twist the knife, nor do we want to challenge the minister. He is an extremely likable fellow, but the government, and cabinet have swamped him with problems in the last two years.

He had some last year with the longshoremen's strike in Montreal; this year, we have to face another crucial matter, housing. Now, through this amendment, we simply want the government to think about it. We are asking the government not to wait until a situation deteriorates before it acts. We are asking the government whether it plans to govern. To govern is to foresee. We are asking the government to foresee difficult situations in the future. Then, even if our amendment is defeated tonight, it will have awakened Canadians to an increasingly important problem and will be of great help to the government.

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, when the estimates of Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation were before the committee of supply last week I stated that I would welcome suggestions and constructive criticisms from members of the house. I think my words were to the effect that if one is not prepared to take criticism, even criticism that may not always be constructive, one should not be in politics. After only five years in this environment I think I can state that with all sincerity. However, I did and do welcome suggestions and I do and have welcomed criticism of the proposals that we have put forward. I will try to deal with the suggestions and the criticism later in my remarks. However, I do intend to pursue the contributions that individual members of the house have made in the course of this debate and I will deal with their remarks in the order in which they have been made.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton), who proposed the amendment on which we will be voting in a matter of a few hours, first referred to the housing requirements in the part of Canada which he knows best. None of us would be human if, believing that some special problems exist that affect our particular riding or the part of the country in which we live and in which we have a special interest, we did not concern ourselves with such problems. However, I wish to say that I do have some detailed knowledge of the housing problems of the city of Victoria and environs and I do know that the greatest need in that particular part of British Columbia is for housing for elderly citizens, for public housing and—yes, a remarkable trend during recent years—a growing need for apartment houses.

That special need, the need for apartment houses, leads me to some of the references which the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich made to the report of the Economic Council of Canada. A number of references have been made to that report, including the fact that I was critical of it. If my remarks on Thursday were construed as criticism, let me say that I criticized only one particular aspect of the report. I recognize that a tremendous amount of work has gone into the preparation of this report. It is welcome, but I do say that in my opinion the role of the council is not only to study but to make suggestions and if I have a criticism it is that while certain statements are made in the report, suggestions as to corrective measures are not contained therein.

There are some passages in the report to which I would like to refer because I think they should be stressed at this particular time. They are to be found on the pages mentioned by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, but the complete exerpt has not been read to the house. On page 24 of the report we find the following words in the middle of the second paragraph:

Given the nature of the capital markets—their structure, institutions, and responses—tightening credit—

Not tight money.

—typically tends to fall with an uneven impact across the spectrum of demand, bearing especially heavily on the housing sector. Housing thus, in effect, becomes an "economic regulator" which acts to offset excesses in demand elsewhere in the system.

This pattern of behaviour may be traced to the effects of institutional arrangements in the residential mortgage market, on the one side, and to the relative sensitiveness of the demand for house mortgages to the level of interest rates on the other. A substantial proportion of house purchases in Canada since 1954 has been made under the insured loan arrangements established by the National Housing Act.

Until recently, the maximum interest rate on newly issued N.H.A. mortgages was set by the government at irregular intervals. When this rate was at a clearly preferential level in relation to the rates on competing debt instruments (e.g., the bonds offered by business corporations to finance their activities) N.H.A. mortgages became attractive to institutional investors as an outlet for their funds. This tended to be so when, in a period of emerging economic slack, corporate bond and other debt offerings fell off, in relation to the demand for them, producing a firming of their prices and a corresponding decline in their yields. Alternatively, when other interest rates were rising, N.H.A. mortgages became relatively less attractive to institutional lenders and the supply of mortgage funds under the provisions of the National Housing Act was accordingly reduced. In early 1967, the method of adjusting the N.H.A. rate was altered.

There is another passage in the report to which I would like to refer. Reference has already been made to it. It relates directly to the remarks made by any friend, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich, and the passage is very significant. It appears on page 135 of the report and reads as follows:

Of the 200,000 starts projected for 1970, it is estimated that about 80,000 units would represent single detached dwellings, and 120,000 units would be apartments, town houses, and other types of multiple accommodation.

As I have said more than once, therein lies the difficulty. The fact sticks out that 120,000 units, 60 per cent of our total need for housing only four years from now, will be in the nature of apartment or row houses. Naturally this need creates a need for a special type of financing. As has been stated, the government had a responsibility to settle and has established certain priorities. Having regard to the change in the nature of our housing requirements and to the changing conditions that are taking place in Canada, I say that we have established priorities and we are getting encouraging results from them.

A reference to the figures will bear this out. I have picked certain years at random. In 1960 the total investment by the federal government, in the form of loans and direct investment in public housing for low income people, elderly persons, student housing, sewage treatment facilities and urban renewal, was $38.6 million, $33 million on the housing side and $5.6 million on the urban renewal side. Now take 1964, the year in which major amendments to the National Housing Act were made. A total of just over $100 million was invested, $87 million in public housing, student housing, etc., and $13.1 million on the urban renewal side. In 1966, within two years of the amendments to the act, the expenditures in these fields of greatest social need reached $201 million, $185 million on the housing side and $16.1 million on the urban renewal side which, of course, is closely associated with housing and improvement in living standards.

In 1967, with only three-quarters of the year behind us, this figure which was less than $40 million seven years ago has reached the astounding level of $400 million in the areas of greatest social need, with $355 million earmarked for housing and $45.5 million on the urban renewal side. As I think I mentioned last Thursday, Mr. Speaker, $300 million of that $400 million has already been committed, with three months of the year still to come.

This is a field in which all levels of government, but more particularly the federal government, have special responsibilities to assist those with the greatest social need. As I have pointed out, our investment has risen from less than $40 million to more than $400 million per annum in a period of six years. My confident expectation is that next year the figure will be at least 50 per cent higher and perhaps even more.

If we are to take care of the need of people for whom the federal government has this special responsibility, should we not assign a priority in allocating funds available for housing purposes to the area of greatest social need? That is the first priority that we have established and that is the course we have followed, at least during the three and a half years that I have been the minister in charge of housing activities. Last year when the demand was not so great in the social need field, partly because the interest of the provinces and municipalities had not yet been generated, in proprotion more money was available and was provided in the form of direct loans for housing as distinct from providing funds to the area to which I have just referred in which we have special responsibility.

The second priority that the government has assigned in the housing field is direct loans by C.M.H.C. to those people who wish to build their own homes, not to the builders of apartment blocks, luxury hotels and the other buildings referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) but to people who want to build their own homes. I want to say to the house that in the three and a half years that I have been minister no person who wanted a direct loan to build his own home and was a reasonably good credit risk—and may I say that the tests are reasonable—has been refused a loan.

There is another priority that has been assigned. In addition we say, and I think quite properly, that when housing is to be built for profit, such as apartment blocks, and when, as pointed out by the Economic Council report, there is a shortage of money, only under very special circumstances, such as in a resource town where there is a need for multiple dwellings, should or will the federal government provide funds. This is something we are doing in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and in the maritimes. We have taken care of the housing needs of our resource communities not just in the field of private homes but in the field of multiple dwellings of the apartment block or row housing nature.

During the debate on the amendments to the National Housing Act in 1964 members of all parties stressed the need of an educational program explaining the provisions and purposes of the act. We embarked on such a program in late 1964 and continued it into 1965. Housing conferences or symposia, a word the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has difficulty in accepting even though it is well accepted and known in the international conference field, were held across the whole country in late 1964, 1965 and again in 1967. The whole purpose of these meetings was education, to pass on information that was lacking.

I met with representatives of municipalities in every province. I met spokesmen even from provincial governments who did not know the possibilities inherent in the new federal legislation. Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) referred to some of the housing problems in the city of Vancouver. I know something about those problems. I think perhaps that I have been closer to them than any other member of the house. I know that in late January of this year, at the housing conference held in the Hotel Vancouver, member after member of the provincial legislature, including members of her party, the N.D.P., got up and said, "We did not know this. The responsibility does not lie with the federal government. The course has been opened up by this legislation but municipalities and provinces are not taking advantage of it." Those are the facts. The same thing happened from one end of Canada to the other.

Yesterday the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works referred to the establishment by the provinces of housing authorities. People keep mentioning the constitution as a bugbear and keep saying the federal government is trying to hide behind the constitution. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. Through lack of knowledge of the facts, through not being properly informed as to the possibilities of the federal legislation, full advantage has not been taken of the legislation.

On a non-political basis we are getting good co-operation from most of the provinces, and this is due to our active educational program. That program is now getting results. Let me give some examples. Up to 1964 when the major amendments were made to the National Housing Act there were less than 12,000 public housing units in the whole of Canada. At the time I said that was a disgraceful situation and that more should be done in every part of Canada.

Discussion on Housing

In the conversations which I and those associated with me, the officials of C.M.H.C., have had with the provinces and the municipalities we have pointed out and stressed the possibilities afforded by the new legislation. Just by way of illustration, not to give them any special pat on the back, but by way of illustration, may I say that in the province of Ontario alone in the last 30 months or so more public housing units have been built than in the whole of Canada in the previous 15 years. That type of thing is going on in the other provinces where we are getting co-operation. It is going on in Newfoundland and Saskatchewan. Despite what the hon. member for Saskatoon said in this debate yesterday, we should keep in mind the situation in his province.

• (5:10 p.m.)

How many hon. members know that housing starts in the prairie provinces this year are 47 per cent higher than last year? We are not getting serious complaints from the prairie part of Canada in the housing field. We are receiving complaints from some centres with special problems. Fort McMurray had a special problem and Saskatoon had one. When we get such requests they are attended to, and I might say that we have had nothing but commendation in the last seven or eight months from Fort McMurray. The same applies to the entire prairie region of this country.

The serious housing problems in Canada are largely confined to the growth areas. More specifically, they are to be found in metropolitan Toronto and in the area between Toronto and Hamilton. There are other, isolated problem areas in Ontario, one of them being Sudbury.

How many hon. members know the real story of Sudbury? The Carter report came out some months ago. In it there was a suggestion that mining companies which had made extensive surveys and tests were to be deprived of certain incentives or tax benefits. The government, through the Minister of Finance, made a statement in May last. In that statement it was announced that for the next three years at least there woud be no change in those incentives. Within a matter of days after that announcement, we learned for the first time—when I say "we" I mean the municipality of Sudbury, the provincial government and the federal government—that five new mines were to be opened within 20 miles of Sudbury and that within the next 30 or 36 months 3,000 houses would be needed in the area. Within 48 hours of receiving that notice I went to Sudbury with senior officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to inquire into the accuracy of these reports. When convinced they were true I said that two things might be done.

There was a need for public housing. People, I think, should know what is meant by public housing. Personally, I do not like the expression "public housing". I prefer the expression used in England, "council housing", or something similar. In Ontario they call it "Ontario housing". In Canada as a general rule we group all such housing together under the term "public housing". Depending on the agreement with a province, any person with an annual income below a certain amount may apply for public housing. In Ontario the income ceiling, I think, is $5,800. Anyone with an income not exceeding $5,800 per annum may apply for and obtain public housing if it is available.

Many members of the Sudbury mining community and many of those engaged in the service industries around there earn less than $5,800. There was an obvious need for more public housing in Sudbury. I said to the mayor and the other officials, "I will first take this up with the Ontario provincial government; I am sure that we will get their co-operation. We have had it from them when dealing with problems in other parts of the province." I also thought that since many people were to be brought into the area or to be transferred from other activities carried on by the mining companies, that perhaps at least some of those coming in would be at salary levels higher than the ones permitted for public housing.

I feel that these mining companies have a special responsibility to provide houses for their senior executives and even for executives at junior level. The companies are there to make money. Nobody objects to that; it is a worthy objective. The companies have their responsibilities. Before there was any public housing these corporations used to provide houses for their staff. Formerly, in the forest industry towns of British Columbia and other industrial communities which sprang up in different parts of Canada housing was not always of the kind we wish to see. Nevertheless the companies did assist in providing it.

I said to the group in Sudbury that I met that I would discuss the matter of housing not only with the province but also with representatives of the mining companies. I did that and the response from the mining companies was encouraging. We learned that 800 housing units would be needed in Sudbury during 1967 instead of the 400 originally anticipated. Next year the figure may well be 1,200 or 1,400; I do not recall the exact figures.

I took exception to the remarks of the hon. member for Sudbury in the house the other day. He intimated that I had gone up there during the election campaign and had made a political announcement. I immediately put on the record that while I could easily have gone there 24 or 36 hours before the election I stayed away until the week after the election. I went up in late May to see what was to be done and after the election I announced the results that had been achieved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: I have wandered away from my original theme. I was talking about the necessity of education, of passing on needed information, of educating municipalities, provincial governments and others with a specific interest in housing. Out of the conferences that took place during the last ten days of January of this year, in February and in March, and out of the subsequent conferences with the representatives of financial institutions—the conventional lenders and approved lenders, the mortgage companies, insurance companies, trust companies and the banks—some very worth-while suggestions emerged. I can now tell the house about some of the suggestions that came out of these symposia and the subsequent meetings. Out of all these there came recommendations for four programs that appealed to me and which I have no doubt will appeal to the majority of my fellow members in the government.

These four programs, all of which were discussed at one or more of the provincial conferences, include the following: First, a comprehensive planning of urban regions and the acquisition of lands for transportation corridors and the open spaces required for urban growth; second, a new community program to stimulate orderly and comprehensive development of new suburban areas within the context of regional and urban plans; third, housing programs to serve as an integral part of other combined federal and provincial anti-poverty measures in specific areas; fourth, housing for moderate income families, not for those with incomes of less than $5,800 but say for those with incomes perhaps between $4,500 and $7,500. These are some of the ideas that came up during our conferences and that need further study. With regard to serious study of the proposed new communities program, a suggestion has been made that the federal government should go in with the provinces and municipalities in undertaking a comprehensive new communities program of the kind that I have just spoken of whereby the federal government might provide special incentives for large scale comprehensive development of suburban communities in certain urban regions. In such a program the federal government might contribute what the three levels of government agreed would be a reasonable amount. Whether it would be 50 per cent, 40 per cent or 60 per cent would be a matter for discussion. In addition, the federal government might make loans comparable in magnitude with the loans it is now prepared to make to provincial housing authorities for public housing.

Yes, several of those who spoke yesterday and one hon. member who spoke today talked about the federal government "trying to pass responsibility on to the provinces". Nonsense. How many people in this house even realize that any provincial housing authority or municipal housing authority can borrow 90 per cent of the money it needs in this field from the federal government, not at the maximum rate of 8¾ per cent but at 6¼ per cent, the approximate cost of money to the federal government. It is largely because of this lending program that we are finding evidence of the increased interest in public housing, which leads me to believe that our expenditure in this field next year will be not $400 million but $600 million or perhaps even more than that.

Included in this suggested program are also resettlement plans. I have for long been interested in resettlement programs and the need for them was driven home at the conferences which took place at Corner Brook, Newfoundland in March last and our earlier one here. As a result of vast improvements made primarily in the fishing industry in Newfoundland, literally hundreds of families who live in isolated outports are being moved into more populated centres. The houses in which they and their forebears lived, perhaps for hundreds of years or more, were perhaps of little value but they did provide a shelter and, what is perhaps just as important, they were owned by the occupants.

Can we expect these people to give up the homes that they own, even though they may be worth only $200 or $300, and move to another area in which a cannery is situated or near where a master ship is operating unless they have a personal stake in doing so? This is an area in which it seems to me that the federal government could and should provide assistance. I have used Newfoundland as an example to illustrate my contention, but this is the type of aid that we should like to see given not only in Newfoundland but elsewhere. There will probably be a need for a somewhat similar program, as a result of the developments taking place under the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It was as a result of constructive suggestions of this kind, the type of suggestion that I invited in the house, that in the Speech from the Throne, which His Excellency read in May of this year, it was announced that the federal government would meet with the provincial governments and I believe with representatives of the municipalities to consider the whole subject. The announcement was made in May on the basis of information we had obtained between January and April.

What happened? We in this house are supposed to be politicians. Let us be frank. There were three provincial elections, two in June and one in July. We have known for several weeks that three more provincial elections would take place in other provinces. We also knew that two of the provinces would have new premises. How absurd it would have been in an environment of that kind to have called a conference on this question. I would have liked the conference to be called for June or July, so would my colleagues. I certainly would have liked to have seen one called not later than September or October. But it would have been a frustrating exercise. I want now to assure the house that the meeting will be called if not for November, then in December of the present year. I will see to it that the invitations go out as soon as the results of the pending elections are known regardless of any changes in government. Invitations will go out promptly, and I hope we shall come to grips with these problems at the coming meeting.

I was impressed with a statement made last night by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), though certainly not all his statements appeal to me. A great many do not. He said last night in the course of a discussion of housing on television that the housing problem in Canada would be solved only by wholehearted co-operation between the three levels of government. I have been saying that for two years and I sincerely believe this is the only way in which it will ever be solved.

Other suggestions have been made by ther hon. members and perhaps some of them call for comment. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) referred to the heavy expenditures being made by all levels of government and the effect they were having on the cost of money and on the cost of living. How many people in Canada, who have read comments on the report of the Economic Council know that two thirds of the money to which the council has referred is being spent by provincial and municipal governments, not by the federal government, and that in the last five or six years expenditure by these authorities has been trebled or quadrupled? Their great increase is the reason for the reference made in the report of the Economic Council.

Criticism was directed toward the government for permitting a higher rate of interest on N.H.A. loans. I think the house should understand just how the ceiling came about. Legislative authority for the imposition of this ceiling was provided not at the initiative of the present government but under another government several years ago. The intention when the provision was put in the act was that should a situation become sufficiently serious at any time a formula such as the one I announced last week could be adopted. We acted on the authority because of the situation that now exists.

The reason for adoption of the new formula is clear. There has been such a heavy demand for the money which was available, not for public housing or those other areas of great social need but for the construction of apartment blocks, the greatest need being in cities such as Toronto and Hamilton and their environs, that interest rates were upset. In December of 1966 we set an interest rate ceiling of 7¼ per cent for the first quarter of 1967. There was no flexibility involved in that rate. The rate could not move to 7⅜, nor could it fall to 7⅛ or 7 per cent. It was fixed for the quarter.

Then this is what happened. The rate is tied in with the yield on federal government bonds and in or about February, the yield on those bonds started to go down. It continued to decline in March, as a result of which it was obvious that the 7¼ per cent rate would drop to at least 7 per cent for the second quarter. In consequence lending institutions, including some banks which hoped they would soon enter the field, began to take applications and there was more activity between the middle of February and March 31, when the rate was at 7¼ per cent, than had taken place in any corresponding period of six weeks or even several months. A lot of money came into housing for apartment blocks and multiple dwellings, particularly in areas of great need such as Hamilton and Montreal. But as soon as the figure dropped to 7 per cent loans dried up and there have been virtually no loans since the end of March from traditional lenders.

Following the meetings which took place in nine provinces with provincial and municipal leaders of all the provinces, I held meetings with representatives of the approved lending institutions. They did not hesitate to point out to me that the government should make its wishes clear. On the one hand, they said, the government wished the institutions to buy government bonds, providing attractive interest rates as an inducement. On the other hand, we wanted more money made available for housing. It was suggested that instead of insisting upon an inflexible interest rate for each quarter the government might do what the National Housing Act permits and free the rate and let the law of supply and demand make the necessary adjustments, subject to the ceiling.

That is exactly what we have done. It was not done with the thought that the lending institutions would increase their rate to the maximum of 8¼ per cent. I hope hon. members do not think this suggestion was not fully explored. I may not be the best minister of housing that the country might have had but at least I have had some business experience and have some common sense, I hope. What the lending institutions suggested was the right to operate without a frozen rate of 7 per cent, 7¼ per cent or 7½ per cent. They wanted flexibility. It was not surprising to me—I would have been surprised had anything else happened—to hear the senior vice president of the Bank of Montreal announce what their rates for housing loans will be. I know that the heads of several other lending institutions in Canada have said what their rate would be and now is. It is not 8¼ per cent. It is 7¾ per cent. I know that the more dependable and traditional lending institutions in whom we have confidence usually operate at one half per cent below the conventional rate. The conventional rate across the country today for most companies is 8¼ per cent and in some instances 8½ per cent.

The officials of the institutions to whom I have spoken in the last day or two have assured me that with the flexibility they have now more money will be made available for housing. This is very important to a bank and to C.M.H.C. The reason C.M.H.C. has had to advance money by direct loans in many rural parts of Canada is that the mortgage companies and trust companies, the traditional lending institutions do not have branches there. You can see how important it is to get the banks back into the picture. There is a bank not only in every city but also in every town of any size and even in many of our villages. The local managers of these banks know the individual who applies for a housing loan. This person probably has had an account at that bank for a period of anywhere from one year to 50 years. The branch manager knows whether or not the man is a good risk and therefore he can apply any rate under the ceiling which he thinks is suitable, whether it be 7½ per cent, 7¾ per cent or 8 per cent or less.

I predict that there will be different rates in different parts of Canada. There might be one rate in Toronto and perhaps a different rate in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or in some other part of Canada. And I ask hon. members, if a person wishes to buy a particularly expensive house why should he not pay the normal commercial rate of interest that he would pay if he were buying a car or a television set? Why should the Canadian taxpayer subsidize that individual? We want our federal funds to be used for the greatest social needs and that is where we will put it so long as I am a member of the government.

I have only a few minutes more, and in the time that I have I should like to deal with some of the other suggestions which have been made. I think for instance that there is merit in the first suggestion made by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) that a reasonable rate of interest be fixed for those persons with low incomes. If we can subsidize people who are moving from an isolated outport in Newfoundland to some other area and if we are going to provide housing subsidies and incentives for some home owners, it well may be that we should be considering something for people with low incomes,—I am not prepared to say whether it should be at the level below $6,000, $7,000 or $8,000, but somewhere between that of the person who has nothing but his old age pension and the person in the lower middle income level.

There might seem to be good reason for doing this, but it is not as simple as it sounds because we must not overlook the person who made an investment in housing last year, with an income of $6,000 or $5,800 or perhaps less. Should it be made retroactive? If it is not made retroactive then there will be discrimination against some of our good people. I should like to admit, however, and I want the hon. member to know, that his suggestion merits serious consideration and it is one which is receiving and will continue to receive serious consideration.

In respect of another suggestion made by the hon. member for Charlevoix and supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), the one concerning the 11 per cent tax on building materials, hon. members heard my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) deal with that last night. Hon. members know how the Carter report dealt with it. The conclusion of the Carter royal commission is that the money must come from somewhere and that until some new general tax formula has been found that will bring in the money needed the tax on building materials might just as well be left as it is at this time.

Again I should like to point out another difficulty. Is anyone going to seriously suggest that the man who builds a luxury hotel to make a profit or who builds an office building to make a profit and in so doing uses building materials should not pay the tax on the materials that are needed by him any more than a tailor, a manufacturer of television sets or a manufacturer of essential household utilities should? Why should there be any difference in the sales tax such people pay and the tax we pay on necessities? I believe this accounts for the conclusion in the report of the Carter report that until the whole matter has been looked into and new tax formulae are adopted this would not be the appropriate time to make such a change.

I have already mentioned the coming conference on housing, but there is also the matter of research. I wonder how many people in Canada know what is being done in Canada in the field of housing research. I wonder how many people in Canada know what is being done by our federal housing agency, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Our architects and others who have considerable experience in these fields are continually in consultation with the housing authorities of the other countries of the world who are members of the UN. They meet periodically and exchange data. In addition, individual research grants are made to the universities with the advice and co-operation of the National Research Council in this field. We are doing much more work in the research in this field than people realize.

We are also co-operating with industry in research. Hon. members have heard of the Alcan houses and the use of synthetic building materials. We are using some of these materials in a housing project in England. There is the Maple Leaf project which is being completed at Harlow, near London. I wonder how many members of this house know we have a housing project involving 175 houses at Harlow, where Canadian lumber, hardware, synthetic and other building materials made in Canada are being used. This is being done in an effort to find markets for building materials of this country. It is part of our research program, also part of our trade program. So a lot more is being done in this field of research than many people think and this must, of course, be encouraged.

With regard to the suggestion of the hon. member that we should furnish a greater amount to the provinces and municipalities, I ask him how much more can we be expected to furnish for public housing than 90 per cent. Surely the provinces and the municipalities between them can furnish the necessary land, which no doubt would represent at least 10 per cent of the value. If we are prepared to lend 90 per cent of the money, I do not think any sensible person, who has any regard for the situation described by the Minister of Finance yesterday and by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) last Thursday would suggest that we should go beyond that. How many people in Canada know that when it comes to urban renewal the federal government pays 50 per cent of the cost of urban renewal projects, that the provincial government pays 25 per cent and that the municipality, unless it makes an arrangement with the province, pays the other 25 per cent?

You should also realize that a municipality can borrow two thirds of the money it needs for urban renewal at the same attractive rate from the federal government. This again demonstrates the absolute need for more publicity and for greater distribution of information in this important and essential field.

Having regard to the last suggestion made by the hon. member that the federal government should bring pressure to bear on banks to get more funds for housing, let me say that it is all very well to suggest that but it is much more difficult to accomplish. One can exert certain pressures and do a lot of things in the housing field in time of war. My first connection with housing was when I was solicitor for the wartime housing corporation. At that time we did not have to worry about provincial or municipal laws or about niceties, we just went ahead and did what we thought was necessary in the interests of the war effort. It cannot be done so easily in peacetime. In this case the banks and other lending institutions asked me another very appropriate question when I asked for more money for housing. They asked us to make it clear whether we wanted more money for housing or wanted it to buy bonds. They tell us that we cannot have it both ways and they asked for some indication as to what we want, with the assurance they are prepared to co-operate. Let me make it clear, we, the government, have not indicated that we want the interest rate to go up to 8¼ per cent, but we have told these lending institutions that we are prepared to give them more flexibility so they can exercise their judgment whether they should invest in housing or buy equities, buy bonds, provincial bonds, municipal bonds or federal bonds.

Before I sit down I want to deal with another matter which was raised during our discussion of the estimates last week. At that time my attention was drawn to the fact that the limited dividend provisions of the National Housing Act were being overlooked and that little advantage is being taken of them. This again was brought to my attention very forcefully at one or more of the conferences which took place in March. As a result of studies which have since been conducted I have undertaken to revise our limited dividend program by adjusting upwards the limit of income in respect of admission to such housing units. Perhaps this should have been done five or ten years ago. Certainly it might have been done two or three years ago. However, so little use was being made of the provisions that seemingly they were being overlooked, with the result that people with incomes over $5,000 were not eligible to participate in these limited dividend projects, where there is relatively low interest on the money invested for private entrepreneurs who want to invest their money. As I say, I have undertaken to adjust the income level upward. This will mean that in large metropolitan areas those families with incomes up to $7,000 may qualify for admission. In rural areas the income level probably will be lower but in areas such as Vancouver, Toronto and Winnipeg it will be raised to $7,000.

I have nothing more to add Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the contribution I have made to the debate, with the support I have received not only from this side of the house but also a little from the other side, will cause hon. members to take a serious second look at the amendment introduced yesterday. If hon. members do not wish to break party lines I hope they will absent themselves during the vote, thereby assisting us to give approval of the sound principles that we have introduced to get our housing program under way.

In conclusion I should like to express my special thanks to the hon. member for London (Mr. Irvine) and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) for the kind things they said yesterday about the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Barnett: Would the minister permit a question before he sits down?

An hon. Member: He has already taken his seat.

Mr. Monteith: He might get up again.

Mr. Nicholson: That might happen, as I still have a minute or so.

Mr. Barnett: Having regard to the remarks he has just made about the income ceiling on limited dividend projects being increased, will the minister indicate what the situation will be in mining and forestry communities where similar projects are undertaken?

Mr. Nicholson: I cannot give a definite answer to that question. I have been more concerned about the larger centres in relation to the limited dividend problem. This program has been used extensively in and near Calgary but in very few other parts of the country. This situation was brought to my attention recently both in Vancouver and in other areas. I can assure the hon. member that there seems to be merit in his suggestion that this might be extended to new resource areas where the federal government is already giving special assistance. If we can get participation on the part of private entrepreneurs in those areas, we will be happy to do whatever we can to interest them.

Discussion on Housing

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the minister. How is it that it is so easy for the government to find capital funds and pay a low interest rate, a mere carrying charge or no interest at all for periods of 50, 60 or 70 years to assist foreign countries, but that when it comes to helping Canadians to buy houses, to find suitable accommodation, it can do nothing better than charge prohibitive interest rates?

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: In this enlightened day and age prosperous countries such as Canada certainly have international as well as national obligations. I personally would like to see Canada devote even more to the less fortunate nations. The amount now spent on foreign aid is infinitesimal compared with the amount we are pouring into housing.

Mr. Knowles: It certainly is.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I was happy to hear the minister admit that some of the suggestions from this side of the house deserved study, because I am convinced that many of our proposals were advanced in an attempt to provide a solution to the problem. The problem is not one which relates only to a shortage of housing in Canada, and everyone agrees that it involves a crisis. The problem is of a monetary nature. We hope that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich will bring the problem to the attention of every member of the house. A solution must be found by those who have been entrusted with the administration of government.

The minister made some comments about the use of housing as an economic regulator and he paraphrased some of the statements in the Economic Council review. I am convinced that the day of using housing as an economic regulator is long past. If the minister will look closely at the recommendations of those who participated in the studies leading to the Economic Council report he will find that they also recommended a second look at the experience of the past regarding the use of housing as a stopgap, to be opened up when more jobs are required and closed when we have full employment. I therefore believe this to be the first step the minister should consider taking. He must keep in mind the fact that housing is an important problem that is with us now and will be with us in future years.

The minister also spoke about the great changes that took place last year in respect of the percentage of dwellings constructed of one category or another. Surely he is not trying to tell us that this crisis was not foreseen. Surely the government was warned about the changes that would take place in the housing field. The government must have known this situation would exist if they referred to the reports of two years ago and last year and also to the forecast of the swift movement of the population to our urban areas. The government must have known this would create the problems which face us today.

This debate has been of benefit in the following respect. The minister told us that the government is applying priorities with respect to the moneys available for housing. He mentioned housing for families of low income and direct lending for individual homes. The minister has never before made these few acknowledgements. I believe the debate has at least brought out these facts. However, all we have heard from other hon. members opposite who have participated in the debate is statistics pointing up the good record of the government and the bad or not so good record of the previous government. I do not believe we face up to this problem when we invoke the statistics of the past, because those statistics are not comparable with the situation that exists today. I say also, Mr. Speaker, that statistics by themselves do not build shelters. They do not provide homes for those who need them, nor do they make homes available to those in the lower and middle income brackets.

We have heard statements from two ministers, one who increased the interest rate to 8¼ per cent and the other the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), who refuses to consider the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. I am convinced that these are cold approaches to the problem. The only answer the government seems to have is that the problem will subsequently correct itself. In August the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) spoke about a conference on housing with the provinces. To date this conference has not been held. I admit that the minister endeavoured to give us a reason for its not being held. But I tell the minister that if we are to take the view that a provincial election every year in one or other of the provinces of Canada will make it impossible to hold such a conference, we will never have a conference of this type because one or other of the premiers will be engaged in provincial political matters. According to the minister's statement it would be impossible to hold such a conference if there were a provincial election in progress.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Keays: Certainly.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member agree that six provincial elections within four months is a rather unusually high batting average for such a short period?

Mr. Keays: Yes, it is unusual to have so many provincial elections. It is also unusual to have so many problems in the field of housing. I believe it would have been usual had we asked some of the ministers of the provincial governments to contribute in some measure toward a solution of this problem. The minister is responsible for housing and is certainly aware of the increased demand for shelter that was forecast to occur between 1966 and 1970. Yet the minister contented himself with holding symposia in various cities across this land. He forgot to delve further into the real problem of housing which is one of finance.

I ask the minister, what consideration have we given to the construction industry in so far as it affects housing and commercial building in this country? The construction industry is the third largest contributor to our gross national product. Is it more economical to curtail housing drastically? Is it more economical to discourage the building of homes or to make homes unobtainable to prospective home owners? Is it more economical to have corporate investment postponed, with the result that 100,000 people will be unemployed?

If the situation is allowed to continue, during the coming winter months at least 100,000 people will be unemployed. There will be unemployed people who are specialists in the housing industry, and this industry requires many specialties. These people will not be able to sit around until we develop a new housing policy or commence new projects. They will endeavour to find employment elsewhere. The net result will be that when we begin to tackle the housing problem seriously the specialists will have gone. In this event there will be another increase in the cost of construction.

What are we to do about the commercial buildings that have been planned in all our cities and towns? Are we to force people to postpone these projects for another two or three years, thus putting more people on the list of unemployed and affecting the service industries to such an extent that many thousands more will be sent home and asked to draw unemployment insurance? I believe this is one consideration that must be dealt with by the government. Housing is not only a problem; it is a crisis. This we all admit. It is also a financial problem. This we admit. But let us find a solution to the problem, because if we do not we will create a much more difficult financial situation by allowing the construction industry to be reduced by 20 per cent, 30 per cent or 40 per cent. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, it being six o'clock, pursuant to provisional standing orders 6 (1) and 15 (4) I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was trying to impress upon the government the necessity for co-operation between the different departments of government. I was speaking about the responsibility of the government to ensure that the construction industry in Canada whould not suffer from the increased lending rate in connection with housing and also about the importance of assuring the construction industry that we will not use it as an economic tap to be turned on or off.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hate to interrupt the hon. member but I should bring to the attention of hon. members that many conversations are going on in the chamber. This makes it difficult for us to follow the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Keays: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I have been able to draw the attention of the government to the fact that, although everyone in the house recognizes that we have a crisis in the housing industry we also recognize that there is a shortage of mortgage funds. However, I believe it is not the role of the members of this house to say that we have these problems, so therefore we must accept them and live with them. We have a duty to perform toward those who need housing, such as the young families across this country, and those who are in the construction industry. I think a solution to the problem can be sought through a study undertaken by the government.

Last night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) referred to some incentives. He said the following, as recorded on page 2733 of Hansard:

> while a remission of the sales tax on building materials is a desirable reform, it is one that is not nearly as important as many others, or many other more important steps that may be taken.

I suggest that if the Minister of Finance believes the removal of the sales tax on building materials is not the most important step that should be taken in order to reduce the cost of housing in this country, then it is his duty to tell us what other measures should be undertaken in order to alleviate the problem. The Minister of Finance, realizing the mess in which we now find ourselves, told us in general terms that there are many other remedies, but he did not specify what they were. He contented himself with saying that we have problems which are going to be resolved but they are going to be resolved at the cost of depriving the majority of Canadians of the right to own their own home. This is the suggestion which he has made. He suggested that time alone will cure this ill. I suggest this is a poor approach to the problem.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) today suggested the removal of the sales tax on building materials used in house construction, but on the other hand said the sales tax should be retained for commercial projects. I do not accept that approach. If we are to remove the sales tax let us remove it completely. Let those with the ability to develop, develop. I do not wish to see the poor remain poor. Let us improve their lot and at the same time allow others who have the incentive to produce retain that incentive and go on producing.

Earlier this year many big developers right across the country postponed construction projects, expecting that interest rates would drop. Now, major construction across the country will drop off. Who will suffer the consequences? The workers in the construction industry will suffer. Earlier in the year money was available at 7¾ per cent and 8 per cent for major construction. That money will now cost 8¾ per cent to 9 per cent.

Last week the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) asked us to admit that the new interest rate of 8¼ per cent is a realistic one. I say let him be realistic and realize that this new rate is depriving the majority of our population of the hope of ever owning their own homes. Who can afford to own his own home when the mortgage rate is 8¼ per cent? If we are going to burn the candle at both ends we will be in trouble.

If we have to pay this high interest rate, I say we should make a serious study of the economics of the situation. By abolishing the 11 per cent sales tax and seeking the co-operation of the provinces on the removal of their provincial sales taxes, we could give more Canadians the opportunity to own their own homes. This is a serious situation, and I was happy, Mr. Speaker, to second the amendment moved by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton).

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Chatterton) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: The question is now on the main motion. The hon. member for Cumberland.

TRANSPORTATION—EFFECT OF NEW FREIGHT RATES ON MARITIMES

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a grievance. I suppose I should say my main grievance is the fact that we did not win this vote. To be more realistic, I should like to say that there is no matter of more immediate concern to the Atlantic provinces than transportation, especially when it affects the movement of goods in or out of the area. This must obviously be evident to the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), and to the government, as a result of the decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners on August 2 to allow the new non-carload tariff which became effective on September 2.

Rate Structure on Freight on Maritimes

As a member from the maritimes, I could use many words that have been used by politicians from our part of Canada since 1867 to describe our feelings as a result of changes in rates, rules, practices and conditions and all of them would qualify so far as I am concerned to describe the urgency of the situation which now faces the business community in the Atlantic area.

I am sure the minister has been informed by members of his own party of the dangers which are inherent in the new rates for l.c.l. shipments. At the same time, I must assume that the minister either has not considered the matter to be as serious as I believe it to be or that the members of his party who have brought the matter to his attention have not been able to impress him with the extent of the damage that has already been evident and which will continue to be in evidence unless action is taken immediately.

I wish to urge the minister immediately to effect a moratorium on the decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners of August 2 and allow a period in which proper submissions can be prepared to show why the new rates should not apply in the Atlantic provinces. The arguments against the allowance of these rates are as old as confederation. We, as Canadians, should not be entering into the second century of confederation in a far more disadvantageous position than that in which we were when we entered into union in 1867.

In recent years, the provincial governments in all four Atlantic provinces have made a determined effort to attract new industry and maintain old industries in our area. We have always been at the mercy of the railways in so far as transportation is concerned because we have not had the competition that is very much in evidence in central Canada. While the new rates do represent reductions in former first and second class express rates, this is of no interest to shippers who formerly used l.c.l. freight service, the type of service which previously looked after the large volume of non-carload traffic. From this point of view, this type of traffic is subject to very severe increases. Articles of a bulky nature such as luggage, boats, canoes and potato chips will have to face staggering increases. Examples indicate increases as much as 288 per cent for potato chips, 369 per cent for canoes, 171 per cent for outboard motor boats and 228 per cent for steel tanks. Another example is the increase on stoves or ranges where the increases average 90 per cent.

[Mr. Coates.]

In the area of the Atlantic provinces with which I am familiar there is a manufacturer of luggage, namely the Christie Trunk & Bag Company. They desperately need an alternate form of transportation if they are to compete on a regional and national basis. There are two stove manufacturers in Sackville as well as The Enterprise Foundry Company Limited and Enamel & Heating Products Limited. These organizations have been in business for many years and have surmounted almost every imaginable obstacle in order to maintain national businesses. They certainly will find difficulty in hurdling this last obstacle created by this government in the form of this substantial increase in the new freight rates.

If this government is concerned about inflation, surely it does not want to increase the burden that will naturally fall on the shoulders of the consumers by increasing the freight rates, which will be the result of the freight rate structure now proposed by the railways. If the railways wish to maintain their volume of business, a more realistic set of rates should be adopted, particularly in view of the fact that shippers have had less than two weeks to prepare themselves for these new rates, although the new rates on non-carload lots were filed with the Board of Transport Commissioners on August 2. Would it not be proper and prudent for the Minister of Transport to declare a moratorium in order to take a long second look at the likely results of these increased rates, and a second look at what may happen to the business communities of the Atlantic provinces if these rates are maintained? In this way the government could show the people in that part of Canada that it is not the minister's or the government's wish to drive many of these small businesses, and perhaps many of the larger ones as well, into bankruptcy. Let me suggest to the minister that a very real crisis exists in the Atlantic provinces as a result of these less than carload lot rates. I ask the minister to take action now.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to unduly prolong this debate but I feel I should add my voice to those protesting this single rate structure which has been described, I think correctly, as the most radical rate change in the century. This is bound to have a discriminatory and adverse effect on the economy of the Atlantic area. I cannot understand why there seems to be a diabolical design on the part of this government to discriminate against this area which needs all the help it can possibly get to improve its economy.

In substantiation of that fact, one has only to look at the latest report published by the Unemployment Insurance Commission which indicates that during the past fiscal year it paid out $52.5 million in unemployment insurance benefits in this area. Surely this gives hon. members an idea of how badly the economy of the Atlantic area needs a shot in the arm rather than the type of discrimination which will occur under this new freight rate structure.

The amount paid in unemployment insurance benefits in the Atlantic area is exceeded only by the amounts paid in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and we must not forget that those two provinces have greater labour forces than the Atlantic provinces. In 1966 in the Atlantic area the labour force consisted of 626,000 people. In January of that same year there were 106,000 of that labour force unemployed. That represents 17 per cent of the total labour force, the highest percentage in any part of Canada. Yet, this government has the temerity to go along with a rate structure which is definitely going to discriminate against the economy of that area.

In the Atlantic area we have the lowest average wage of any area in Canada. In 1966 the average wage, not including agricultural wages, in Prince Edward Island was $64.71 per week; in Nova Scotia it was $76.27 per week; in New Brunswick it was $80.22 per week and in Newfoundland it was $84.91 per week. The national average wage in Canada for the same period was $96.53 per week. In view of these figures, is it any wonder that we in the Atlantic provinces are asking for help to improve our economy? Whenever the government gets the opportunity it discriminates against us. This latest move to unify the rate structure, if I may use that term, is just another example of this discrimination.

There is no question but that this new rate structure will increase the cost of production and increase the cost to the consumer in the Atlantic area. Normally a change of this kind would have to be approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners, but by reason of the new legislation enacted not long ago this approval is no longer necessary. If you refer to the debate that took place at that time you will find it was pointed out that this system would result in our freight rates being increased. At that time we were assured that this would not be the effect, yet today we find our fears have been realized.

Not long ago I read a press report to the effect that the hon. member for Westmorland (Mrs. Rideout), when questioned about this matter said that she had been assured by the government that there would be no discrimination against the Atlantic area. I hope the hon. lady has the courage to stand up tonight and castigate the government for allowing the present situation to develop.

This new rate structure will be of some assistance to those manufacturers and shippers who have been shipping entirely by express, but there are many small manufacturers in the Atlantic area who ship from point to point within the area who will be adversely affected. They do not manufacture or sell their products on a scale which would allow them to ship carload lots.

The new rate is apparently based on cubical content, which is multiplied by ten pounds per cubic foot. I wonder where that ten pounds per cubic foot formula was found. It seems to be exceedingly high in view of the fact that when you ship by air, and the capacity of an aircraft is much less, the cubical content is multiplied by 6.9 pounds. This new formula will tremendously increase the freight rate for manufacturers who ship less than carload lots. I think it has been accurately estimated that in some cases the rate will go up by some 282 per cent. Surely, this is a tremendous discrimination against the small manufacturer in the Atlantic area who ships from point to point. It will not greatly affect the larger manufacturers in central Canada who ship mostly carload lots.

We have a great many small manufacturers in our area, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that industry should be encouraged and we should not trample upon the transportation facilities that exist. As I say, we have in the area a great many small manufacturers who will suffer severely, if not be forced into bankruptcy, by this change. I therefore suggest that the government give very serious consideration to nullifying this change, and immediately.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, any remarks which I shall make or any ideas I attempt to advance this evening have been pretty well covered by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) and the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid) who has just spoken. However, there are a few matters I should like to bring to the attention of the new minister. In the same breath I congratulate him on his new portfolio. If he considers it to be an easier job than his previous portfolio, we will try to convince him in the next hour that this is not so.

It seems to me that we have to deal with the whole question of the change that has been made. As was pointed out by my hon. friend for Kings, the change has been made without going before any judicial body which would examine the effect it will have upon the industries of the region concerned. I ask the minister to take particular notice of this fact. I believe that the change in rates and the elimination of the less than carload rates, with the substitution of express rates at a much higher figure, will impose a tremendous hardship on all small businesses; and the maritimes are full of small businesses. It is in small businesses that for many, many years the people of the maritimes have been employed.

Therefore, it seems to me this is a special situation so far as the maritimes are concerned and the minister should seriously reconsider this new policy. He should also consider that there are only a few industries producing goods in sufficient quantity to take advantage of carload shipments, the availability of transport trucks and that sort of thing. It was my understanding during the debate on transportation that we were looking for a national transportation policy for this country. Ever since I was honoured by being elected a member of this house I have heard the cry, regardless of the complexion of the government in office, for a national transportation policy.

I am sure that every hon. member who listened to the debate on transportation felt that we were perhaps now moving toward a national transportation policy. As I understood what was said in that debate, and as it was explained to us, the medium of transportation that would be used would be the most economical. I believe that was part of the argument used in favour of the act as it now stands. My hon. friend for Cumberland is quite correct when he says that this whole question of transportation is as old as confederation. We all know it is as old as confederation. We all know that what made confederation possible was the promise of the Fathers of Confederation that railways would be built. At that time railways were the medium of transportation. We have built railways to the east.

As I am sure the minister knows from his reading of the history, preferential rates were extended to the maritimes at the time of the building of the Intercolonial Railway. Later, the railway was built connecting the province of British Columbia with central Canada. This made the whole of the country one new nation. Part of the deal by which confederation became possible, concerned the question of transportation. Today, transportation is just as important as it was in those days. Perhaps it is now even more important. Therefore, I appeal to the minister to review this whole question.

I have some information in this respect. I am told that in the constituency I have the honour to represent in this chamber some industries will be most adversely affected by this change in policy. I am sure that the point raised by my hon. friend from Kings with respect to cubic content is very detrimental to the producers of potato chips. While I cannot speak with authority as a result of having contacted these producers, I have no reason to think that the information at my disposal is anything but accurate.

Therefore, I ask the minister to look into the question of this particular product. Nothing could be more important than that we have this industry in our constituency. We have several large food processing plants, and the potato chip industry and the transportation of this product is most important. Anyone who read the last issue of the Executive magazine will have seen the picture of the two McCain boys on the front page, with their families. I must say this is a most attractive picture and I commend it to the attention of the minister, if he has not already seen it, because it is an excellent piece of work.

We are very proud of the McCain family, what they have accomplished and the fact that they have a world wide market for their product. They have obtained a market for the produce of the farms, not only for potatoes but for various other products processed in their plants. We view with a great deal of alarm and misgiving any proposal that would in any way harm this industry.

We have the Hatfields in Hartland and the Piries in Victoria County. We are concerned about the effect of this policy on such industries because we do not want anything to happen that would impair the activity of these companies or the people they employ. These people represent a great proportion of the available labour force in our locality.

In the lower part of New Brunswick we also produce candy. I am given to understand that there are increasing difficulties in the marketing of this product because it is required to be shipped a long way and transportation is vital to the industry. My hon. friend from Cumberland has referred to Sackville. I have always believed that the building of stoves in Sackville is a negation of the general idea that you cannot have heavy industry in the maritimes. In this part of the province one of the heaviest articles of equipment is built, namely, stoves. They have to be shipped as far west as the Pacific coast and compete with similar products from central Canada.

We are concerned about anything that would detrimentally affect this industry. It is not my intention to pick out these industries particularly, but they just occur to me as examples of the industry in the region. I am sure the minister would wish to give his special attention to these matters and would not allow a change in policy of the nature suggested to jeopardize the continuation of this type of business.

I understand that by the substitution of express rates for less than carload freight rates a tremendous hardship is imposed which sometimes amounts to as much as 200 per cent or more, as has been mentioned by one of the previous speakers. I am sure the minister is not anxious to see that sort of thing continue, and I appeal to him to give his personal attention, at the first opportunity, to remedying this injustice. I believe there might be a severe injustice in the activities I mentioned.

I should also like to mention that the town of Woodstock in the county of Carleton has recently seen the establishment of a piano factory. Everybody knows that it is impossible to ship carloads of pianos. I think that the elimination of less than carload rates would be a very serious matter for them, although I confess I have not heard anything from these people; they have not made any protest to me. I am simply worried that this newly established industry, which is just now getting into operation, might run into trouble. When the premier of New Brunswick spoke the other day during the ribbon cutting ceremony, he visualized this factory as the future piano centre of the world. In view of the fact that there will be an election soon, his exaggerated language may be more readily understood. Nevertheless, he visualized Woodstock as the piano centre of the world. If he is right in some of these happy thoughts, then no one would want to interfere with this project. So, I ask the minister to look into that particular point as well.

I have now exhausted the notes that I have here. I hope the minister will give my comments the attention which I think they deserve.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates), the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid), as well as the former premier of the province of New Brunswick in raising a grievance on these rates at this time. I shall make my chief point first, and I shall return to it later in my remarks.

When the new brave world of Canadian transportation was unfolded before us in all its wide flung splendour last year one assurance was given to Atlantic Canada, namely that our problems would be dealt with separately and fully and that in the meantime, until they were dealt with in this parliament, no harm would befall the citizens of Atlantic Canada. Yet, as has been so well unfolded by the previous speakers, we have had an increase in rates that was unexpected, unjustified and against the very spirit of the words proclaimed by the government spokesman, the former minister of transport, even though he or his successor may be able to hide behind the small print. So many of us on this side argued last fall when the transport act was being debated that no government and no parliament should attempt to deal with transportation problems on a piecemeal basis. If there were going to be a national transportation policy, then let it apply to all of Canada. We were assured that the government would deal first with the area west from Quebec. Then, they would get around to the specific problems of the Atlantic provinces and deal with them satisfactorily at a later date. However, this assurance hinged on two things: first, the words "at a later date", and second, that we were going to get the report of the special committee which had struggled with Atlantic problems for lo, these many moons. The later date is now, that is obviously to our disadvantage; the committee has reported, and that also is obviously to our disadvantage. I only wish that instead of being here, addressing you and other members of the house tonight, I and other members were out fighting this issue because it properly belongs in the hands of the people who can decide whether or not the government has kept faith with them. They have not kept faith with the people in Atlantic Canada.

Rate Structure on Freight on Maritimes

Let me compose myself for a few moments before returning to the main subject. A few days ago an Ontario born vice president of what is, I believe, the oldest business firm in Halifax and one of the oldest business firms in Canada, Mr. E. G. "Ted" Jarvis of William Stairs Son and Morrow Limited, had the following to say in an interview with the reporter for the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. I quote from the end of that interview the following statement by Mr. Jarvis:

With the new rates, a merchant must raise his prices, and I think the public should know why.

That is the crux of the question before us this evening. There is a simple answer which can be given to the public why these increases have come into effect. It is that we were given an assurance when the new transport act was passed by parliament and later we were given something else entirely. That is why hon. members have spoken before me and I am sure hon. members will speak after me in this chamber this evening. We were promised that our province would be dealt with separately, but in line with the national transportation policy some time during the current session of parliament. Now, we are confronted with the possibility that small businesses in Atlantic Canada may be driven to the wall, and heaven only knows Atlantic Canada can ill afford that. Some of these small businesses will be driven to the wall by the natural turn of events, but surely this should not happen as a result of an unnatural turn of events. That is why I wish that an issue such as this one could be taken before the people so we could put right what is obviously wrong.

Let me put it in the terms of a small business man, someone who cared enough to spend $100, $150 or $300 to place an ad in the Chronicle-Herald of Saturday, September 30, 1967. His name is David Cuperfain. He deals in shoes, a humble but basic need. I think I can tell my hon. friends across the way that politically he is uncommitted. I know because I have talked to him. I would like to have him in my corner. I think that after this he will be in my corner, but at least he has been looking around. He will not do any shopping at the current Liberal prices. Here is what he said:

At the beginning of this month a noose was put around the economic neck of our region which is going to strangle it as sure as the sun is going to rise tomorrow.

The railway companies put into effect a new freight rate which increased the cost of railway freight, in some instances, by up to 400 per cent.

[Mr. McCleave.]

"Impossible" you say. Permit me to demonstrate to you. Our firm received 240 pairs of children's rubber boots, that sell for $1.99 in our store. Under the old freight rate structure our railway freight bill would have been $16.00 or over 6 cents per pair; under the new rate we were charged for exactly the same shipment $57.60 or a whopping 24 cents per pair.

Mr. Speaker, I did my arithmetic and according to my calculations the increase in the rates has caused the cost of these shipments to increase by $41.60. This represents an increase of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 400 per cent. No wonder there is an outcry in Atlantic Canada about this sort of thing, especially since it came like a bolt from the blue.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Continuing with Mr. Cuperfain, he makes this point:

Under the new freight rate system the railways are required to charge us a so-called uniform rate, but in areas where there is competition from the trucking industry the railways can and will cut those rates to meet the competition. And so, central Canada, with an active and competitive trucking industry, will get a cut in their freight rates by the railways and we in this region will pay much more. Can you see the diabolical arrangement? We, trying to build up our economy by every means possible, will not only be pushed back to a subexistence but we will in effect be subsidizing the freight rates of our affluent cousins in central Canada.

Does that argument sound familiar, Mr. Speaker? It has been repeated over and over again in this chamber for the last 20 or 30 years by a right hon. gentleman who is not with us at the moment but who will be back, and by others. It has been the same message over and over again. When the increases come, they fall on the eastern and western part of Canada because the central part of Canada has at least the built in safety of competition. The result for Atlantic Canada is that the price of our import goods goes up, and the competitive factor we had hoped would encourage our export goods goes down.

The Maritimes Transportation Commission in its "Tips and Topics" for September, 1967, makes a point which I think is a further indictment of the government, the Department of Transport and its minister, or the new set-up that was brought in by the government. The article reads:

The new non-carload tariff which became effective on September 5 was filed with the Board of Transport Commissioners on August 2, 1967.

I interject parenthetically that this is not long ago, about a month and four days.

It was not until August 21, however, that sufficient details were available to the Maritimes Transportation Commission to commence an assessment of its effect on Atlantic provinces shippers.

Now, sir, we are getting into an area of two weeks and one day.

Concurrently with the coming into effect of the new tariff, all non-carload express rates were cancelled, with the exception of certain less than carload rates on Atlantic provinces fresh fish and seafood. Less carload freight rates issued to meet motor truck competition were also cancelled September 5. The published charges for cartage services were likewise cancelled on September 5.

We are right down to the eleventh hour, sir, with these various tariffs.

After September 5, the railways will no longer provide cartage service for non-carload traffic except when such traffic is assessed the new non-carload rates. Other less than carload class and commodity freight rates on Atlantic provinces' traffic have not yet been cancelled and shippers may utilize these rates provided the consignee and shipper perform the pick-up and delivery service.

That is the situation in an economic nutshell as seen by people familiar with transportation. But I can put it in an even smaller and neater nutshell than that. We, in Atlantic Canada, have been had by the transportation policies of the government. I say that again, sir. We have been had by the transportation policies of the government.

Again, I go back to my first thesis. If the government had presented a national transportation policy with all its ramifications, pro and con so far as my area is concerned, and pro and con so far as any area is concerned—we all have to live with the credits and the debits of confederation—showing the effects on our own areas, we would have been in a proper position to assess the benefits and the disabilities to Atlantic Canada, as well as the benefits and the disabilities to central and western Canada.

However, we were promised something. We were promised, "Your problems will be dealt with separately, and in a very fine way." That was a promise which we accepted in the House of Commons last year, and unless the government can remedy the situation now the only redress to achieve what we thought that promise meant is to go to the people and change the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in my ten years in the house I have not taken part in what is known as the grievance period, but tonight I am moved to say a few words. I would like to say that the brevity of my remarks is in no way correlated with the depth of my concern for the subject which the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) has so very efficiently, effectively and eloquently opened.

I agree with what my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces have said about the problems, resulting from developments following the passage of new legislation in the field of transportation. As the hon. member for Cumberland has said, transportation issues are to us as old as confederation. Obviously, because of our geographical location, transportation and communication have been in the very forefront of our economic and political problems and of the economic and political queries which we have directed to the central government.

As my colleagues have indicated, at the present time there is a feeling of disappointment, to use a euphemism, resulting from new methods, new changes, which have exacerbated and aggravated existing problems and inequities, some might say iniquities, that have existed and do exist as the result of our geographical location. I would like to submit, sir, that for two areas in our region, the two island provinces, the difficulties are especially acute.

In Prince Edward Island, along with the less than beneficent results of the new legislation, we have been subjected to an increase in the rates on transportation, including ferry transportation. We have been subjected to a further delay in the causeway. Needless to say, neither factor has done anything for our economy, or for the hopes and aspirations of our people who, as long ago as 1873, were given precise, definite commitments in the realm of transportation.

On the other island, Newfoundland, the people are faced with something disturbing to them sociologically, and very upsetting in terms of economics, the withdrawal of passenger service on the railway. None of these things were mentioned in the terms of union some few years ago. I am disturbed about the surprising calm in reference to this very important measure, a startling economic deprivation and a major transportation dislocation in the newest province of the dominion. If no one is going to speak for that new province, I would venture to say a word on its behalf tonight. This is not to suggest, God knows, that Prince Edward Island has no problems—

Rate Structure on Freight on Maritimes

Mr. O'Keefe: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Macquarrie: Prince Edward Island has problems, but I do say—

Mr. O'Keefe: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. O'Keefe: I addressed the house earlier on this very problem which is of intense concern to all members of the house and of particular concern to those representing the maritimes.

Mr. Macquarrie: I was basing my remarks on the fact that a careful reading of the St. John's newspapers shows they were decrying the failure of many members representing Newfoundland to respond to certain indignant representations from labour unions. It is not my purpose to enter into a crossfire with members from another province or party. I am only interested in the enhancement of the transportation facilities in Newfoundland. As a member of another island province which has suffered much at the hand of the dominion government, the hon. member might appreciate our help rather than seek to divert me from my cause.

On behalf of the hon. member's province, I wish to say that the forcible unemployment of hundreds of people in Newfoundland is of great concern. I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) to bend a sensitive ear to the problems of those people. I have seen little indication of sensitivity, but I live in hope. I do not thrive on adversity and I would be more interested were the minister to take an active part toward making the transportation legislation more sensitive to the needs of our area and especially to the needs of the island provinces which will need, after many years of inequality, some measure of redress. Let us have that rather than the bureaucratic, soulless interpretation which will leave us farther behind the rest of the country than we now are. I urge the minister to take an early look at some of those problems which my colleagues, and especially my colleague from Kings (Mr. McQuaid), so eloquently elucidated tonight. This is a grievance, as transportation so often has been a grievance in this country. We are suffering today because the central government lacks sensitivity. I invite the government to remedy their political situation by taking concrete steps, economically and legislatively, not so much on our behalf as on behalf of our area and the country as a whole.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Queens said, it is not the intention of those of us representing maritime constituencies to make this grievance a partisan matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: I hesitated before seeking the floor. I hoped that a maritime member who supports the government would share our concern for this most serious matter.

An hon. Member: Why are you laughing?

Mr. Fairweather: Because I have a happy attitude toward problems and I feel that to smile is better than to smirk or sneer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: I had not expected, when rising in this debate, to share my personal philosophy with the house; but if challenged I shall be ready for that, too.

Let us return to the issue, the change in the transportation economics of the maritimes. As the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) has said, the l.c.l. rates have been abandoned and express rates imposed on less than carload shipments. I think that the new minister, who does not yet represent a constituency in the maritimes, will be glad for this crash course in maritime transportation economics. He will not learn much from this speech; still, he will get the idea that we who oppose the government are united in this serious grievance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: I will leave to others the difficulty of pointing out to the minister the benefits of this joint briefing. It is obvious that there are many disabilities in the area. Perhaps we should not advertise them; but if we are to speak factually it is well to admit that many obstacles face the industrialization of eastern Canada, not the least of which is the obstacle of transportation.

I will not repeat what has been said about specific instances, but I will say that lately in the Atlantic provinces, through the help of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council and the Atlantic Development Board, we have been enabled to take a united stand on some of the disabilities that plague us.

The Atlantic Development Board has seen fit through public spending—I think the nation agrees with this—to alleviate some of the major road transport difficulties in that part of Canada.

The minister could be of specific assistance were he to have an urgent study made of the need for off-loading feed grain from vessels in the port of Saint John. It is a paradox that this great winter port can load cargoes for world markets and yet has not the facilities for off-loading grain, which is so necessary to agricultural economies in the lower and western part of New Brunswick.

The new cliché in parliamentary language is "priorities". I am interested in the development of clichés in parliamentary language, and "priorities" is the present one. I join my colleagues in asking the new minister to make it a matter of urgent priority to investigate those transportation matters that are of serious concern to many of us who represent Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I wish to take a few minutes of the time of the house to talk about this question which is of vital concern to the economy of the Atlantic provinces. I wish to thank the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) for bringing this matter before the house this evening. Only this morning I received communications from my constituents, including one from the president of the North Sydney board of trade, in which they complained bitterly about these drastic freight rates.

I am pleased to see the minister. I do not wish to be harsh with him. He will agree, I am sure, that we became fond of each other when he was minister of national defence. I hope he does not take anything I say personally.

Before I go into detail may I place on the record the views of the Sydney board of trade as they appear in the Cape Breton Post of September 28. I shall deal with that immediately, as time is important.

The minister is aware of the views of those who have spoken here. I wish him to hear the views of others, outside this house, on this important subject.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Before I begin to quote from this newspaper may I say that the spokesman for the Board of Trade, a person by the name of Harvey Webber, was a prominent citizen of Sydney, a decent fellow and a good type of citizen. All I can say is that I have never known him to be a member of the party to which I belong. The heading reads: "Freight Rate Hike Blasted by Trade Board" and the article says:

> The Sydney Board of Trade has strongly objected to the Minister of Transport and the Express Traffic Association concerning the rushed implementation of a new system of railway freight rates which the board says will have a serious effect on consumer prices in the Atlantic Region.
> The board has been informed that under the new legislation railways do not require approval of rate increases.
> In fact, Harvey Webber, president of the board, says the new rates were not made available to the Maritime Transportation Commission until August 21 and were implemented September 5.
> Mr. Webber says the new system of freight rates introduced by the railways for less than carload freight service will have a serious effect on consumer prices in the eastern region.
> These increases, he adds, along with many other radical changes, climaxed the railway's amalgamation of their express and less than carload freight services by the establishment of a single structure of rates, rules and terms of carriage for all non-carload traffic.
> The board president said that "due to our geographical disposition, the Atlantic region is the largest railway user per capita in Canada, and, therefore, we are faced more with the increased costs."
> Increases brought about by the changes have had the effect of cancelling any advantage brought about by the Maritime Freight Rates Act.
> Mr. Webber adds, "According to figures released by the Maritime Transportation Commission representing local shippers, rates have increased by as high as 282 per cent in some cases."
> One example of the new rate structure, he says, would be to send 35 pounds of clothing from Stellarton to Quebec City. Former freight charges would have been $2.72 freight or $3.25 express. Under the new rate system it is $4, an increase of 47 per cent and 23 per cent respectively. Shipping a canoe from Truro to Halifax will now cost nine times more than under the old rate system.
> These new rules are due to the size and density formula based on 10 pounds per cubic foot of area, the charges will be based at 10 pounds. When dealing with items such as small chicks the effect is startling for cost increase.
> The Maritime Provinces Board of Trade has submitted a strongly worded brief on the subject to provincial premiers.
> But, Mr. Webber says, all businessmen and other shippers should concern themselves with this increase and its possible detrimental effect on our economy. "Consumers can expect to pay more for items shipped into this area by rail," the president adds.

I hope the minister has listened carefully to these comments by the Sydney Board of Trade as they appear in the Cape Breton Post. He smiles. Of course, to him Sydney is just a spot on the highway somewhere and I assume he is not too interested. At election time, though, he can become vitally interested.

Rate Structure on Freight on Maritimes

Another point I should like to make is this. During the period in which the minister was in charge of national defence the closing of bases in the Atlantic region threw hundreds of people out of jobs. In my own area 700 were thrown onto the streets by the closure of Point Edward naval base; not only have they been thrown out of employment but they face skyrocketing prices.

Since we have now lost the "skipper", the fellow from Bonavista-Twillingate, I thought we would now see a new look in the department. I understand from what I have read that the greatest ambition of the former minister of national defence was to become involved in transport, and that if he did he would make dramatic changes throughout the country and do great things for the future. I hope he will. Many fields of activity have been suggested and with the power he has in the cabinet I am sure that with one snap of his fingers he could bring about changes in these freight rates which would greatly benefit us in the Atlantic region.

With regard to Newfoundland, I have no doubt that the hon. member for St. John's has made strong representations on this subject but the cabinet never turns on its hearing aid no matter where the representations come from, whether from members of this party or members of their own. I have no doubt the hon. member has made representations on behalf of his own province; the fact that he was so close to the former minister of transport should have helped. That gentleman was a transplanted Newfoundlander; he was established there though he was not nominated by any convention. In any event, he has gone to greener pastures—and I mean, greener.

I do not wish to take up any more time. I am sure we shall have the opportunity on many occasions in the future to whisper into the ear of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) many of the things we should like him to do. Now that he has a new portfolio, let him not, for heaven's sake, make a mess of the Department of Transport as he did of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I wish to add my voice to those of other members of the Atlantic area who have spoken during this grievance period on the subject of these freight rates which adversely and drastically affect the maritime economy.

Members more senior than I have spoken of their experience in taking part in grievance procedures. As a relatively new member I have wondered as to the effectiveness of this procedure. On this occasion, though, I have been impressed as, I am sure, the new minister has been impressed, by the fact that all hon. members who have taken part have addressed themselves to one basic problem which adversely affects the whole eastern region of this country.

I appreciate some of the minister's difficulties. He has entered upon the duties attached to a new and challenging portfolio. Moreover, last year in a dynamic and somewhat controversial way he was involved in the passage of a bill which caused a great deal of controversy and anxiety throughout the country. As a result, he does not, perhaps, appreciate some of the nuances involved in a transportation bill which gives the railways the power to do what they have done in the Atlantic region.

This is the nub of the problem. This concerns more than a bunch of maritimers crying in the wilderness over what has happened. The minister has shown in the past he can take dramatic action if he considers it to be necessary. We hope he can do as much to alleviate the position in which we now find ourselves. During the last ten years we have in the maritimes been giving effect to "operation bootstrap". We have been trying to lift ourselves up by our own bootstraps. Now, in the first year of the second century we find ourselves faced with "operation blackjack". We pull ourselves up by our bootstraps and get hit over the head by the blackjack in the form of these new rates which setback the whole of the Atlantic area.

I shall not speak at any great length because I know the minister is dying to get up and give some answer to the points we have raised.

• (9:50 p.m.)

In addition, since this is a non-partisan debate, I would love to hear from members opposite about this problem which involves people from all corners. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) said that somebody was not in his corner. I do not care, in whose corner these people are. They are not in one political corner or another; they are backed into a corner by the use of these l.c.l. freight rates. These rates have no connotation to anything. In this case the Atlantic area has been hit over the head with a blackjack because these less than carload rates are of no use to the east. We do not have pool cars, association cars or piggy-backs; we do not have the great volume that the other parts of Canada have. We have to ship in less than carload lots. Here, we are faced with rate increases such as the 288 per cent increase for potato chips. I have several potato chip factories in my constituency. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) also has some in his constituency, although their product is not as good as the product from my constituency. There is the 369 per cent increase on canoes. We do not have many canoes, but we do have furniture and motor boats. When there is a 400 per cent increase in the rate on shoes, then the maritime area cannot avoid being affected adversely.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) paid attention to this debate and showed his interest in it. But, this is not just a case of the people from the maritimes crying in the dark. Previously freight rate increases were required to be justified before they were imposed. In the old days, the railways were required to appear before the Board of Transport Commissioners. We were assured by the predecessor of the present minister that nothing drastic would happen and that the study of maritime transportation problems would be completed before any action would be taken which would hurt the maritimes. We spoke in favour of the transportation bill. We brought in many amendments, but we appreciated that in order to have uniform legislation across the country some parts of the country must be hurt. The illustrious predecessor of the present minister gave us certain assurances. I was one of those who tried to point out to the minister why we should vote for this bill in principle, even though we were left unprotected.

It has been only a matter of a few months since the dire predictions were made, and now they have come true. I do not wish to run out the clock, because I know the minister wishes to reply. Perhaps the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) wishes to reply, as well as some other members from the Atlantic area. Hon. members on this side of the house were prepared to go along with the transportation bill on the assurances of the minister. The minister appreciated the fact that the special transportation problems of the Atlantic region required special study. I hope the new minister understands the implication of the remarks made by members on this side of the house. Even the report of the MacPherson commission recognized that the maritime area needed a special study. This report came in, and then before action could be taken on it the railways moved in to cut us off. As I say, this is operation blackjack which will adversely affect what has happened in the Atlantic area in the last ten years.

I wish to be non-partisan, but I must say that unless the minister exercises his discretion and individual talent, which sometimes brings forth protests from this side of the house, and changes these less than carload lot rates, the Liberals will become lost in the east. Regardless of what the minister says tonight, members on this side of the house will be anxious to see what concrete action is taken to relieve these immense increases which affect the east. Even though we do not have a great deal of manufacturing, that which we do have will be cut off before it has an opportunity to expand.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the grievance which has been expressed in the house tonight. I must say I have certainly had impressed on me the fact that my new portfolio is a very important one, certainly to the maritime provinces. It may be one that is not any easier than my previous one. I suppose only time will tell. I have also been impressed by the unity of the maritime members in their presentations. I might say, for the benefit of those maritime members on the other side of the house, that those on this side of the house had already made representations to me personally. I appreciate their having done so.

Mr. Crouse: I noticed that the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) spoke to you tonight.

Mr. Hellyer: This made it unnecessary for me, under the circumstances, to take up additional time in the house.

Mr. Fairweather: What did you say to them?

Mr. Hellyer: I said to them the same thing I am going to say to you.

Mr. Fairweather: Priority in due course.

Mr. Hellyer: This has, in fact, been a crash course in respect of transportation and the requirements of the maritimes. It certainly has been an acceleration of my education in respect of this very important subject, and naturally I am grateful for it. I am sympathetic to the needs of the maritime provinces. Notwithstanding what one or two of my hon. friends on the other side said, if one were to examine the statistics one would find that I have taken a number of actions which have helped to maintain a very high level of defence activity and employment in those provinces, and certainly a higher level of expenditure than might have been the case if special efforts had not been made.

In so far as the recent rates are concerned, I should point out that I have not studied them. This has been suggested to me as a matter of priority. When I have studied them, and also the effect of them on industry and consumers in the maritimes, I will be in a better position to assess the implications so far as the growth and development of the maritime region is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to standing order 56(2) to put the motion now before the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: It being after ten o'clock p.m., shall I rise and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 4, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF U.K. BRANCH OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a very distinguished delegation of parliamentarians from the United Kingdom, Northern Ireland, Jersey Island and the Isle of Man. These distinguished visitors are members of the United Kingdom branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association and they are visiting Canada, particularly Ottawa, at the invitation of the Canadian branch of the C.P.A. On behalf of hon. members I extend to them a warm and cordial welcome.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MONGRAIN—INABILITY TO BE HEARD DURING RECENT DEBATE

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice this afternoon that I wished to rise on a question of privilege. Here is my grievance. I shall explain it as briefly and serenely as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I sat in on the whole three-day debate on housing. I heard 36 or 37 speeches; I followed with interest, 12 or 13 interventions by the Liberals 14 by the Conservatives 6 by the New Democrats and 2 by the Créditistes. I asked that my name be put on the list of speakers six times orally and four times in writing. I got up 23 times to be recognized and yet I have been unable to have my turn.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe I have legitimate grounds for a grievance, because I think I have the same rights as all other members. And, if the objection is made that other members have not spoken, I may say that one day, if I ever contract a marriage of love or reason with one of the parties in the house, it would be for better or for worse, for worse in that I would let my point of view be stated by the leaders of the party rather than doing it myself when I have the time. That is my grievance, Mr. Speaker.

• (2:40 p.m.)

ABSENCE FROM CHAMBER OF MEMBER FOR YUKON

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the suggestion you made yesterday on my point of order over the prolonged absences of which the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has been guilty from August 29, 1966 to September 25, 1967 in accordance with your suggestion, I felt it was more in order to proceed by way of a question of privilege.

I do not wish to quote authors such as Dawson who recalls among others, the case of Sir John A. Macdonald, called to the bar of parliament for failing to seek permission of the house for some of his absences.

I should like instead to view the facts in a modern context and recall that Mr. Robert Stanfield, new leader of the Progressive Conservative party, himself deplored absenteeism in the house, and I agree with him, Mr. Chairman.

The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), whose interventions are frequent and even fruitful at times, raised a point of order in 1964, under standing order 5, when he asked, with the talent and ability known by all, permission of the house to absent himself, since the debate on the adoption of a distinctive flag was dragging on unduly.

A little later on, in 1965, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), as reported on page 12,746 of the French version of Hansard, also raised a point of order under standing order No. 5 to point out that he expected to be called as a witness before the commissioner and chief justice Frédéric Dorion, who was presiding at the famous Rivard inquiry. The hon. member for Yukon then referred to standing order 5 as shown on page 12,746 of Hansard, saying that if he were called as witness, it would probably be more in order to comply with the provisions of the standing order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been systematically absent since August 29, 1966. In looking through the official report, I notice that from August 29, 1966 to September 25, 1967, 41 votes were taken in the house, and the member who sits in the opposition, who is not a minister and who has no ministerial duties, did not take part in 32 votes, that is he has been absent 32 times when votes were taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I must intervene at this stage to remind the hon. member that he cannot make a historical account of the matter he is now raising.

It is just a matter of indicating the nature of the question of privilege and the Chair must give its ruling later on to determine if there is a prima facie question of privilege. Until such decision has been rendered, I do not think the hon. member can discuss the matter in detail.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I conclude by following your instructions.

I simply wanted to point out to your attention that standing order 5 requires that an hon. member must request leave of absence from the house if he has to be away. An hon. member who is always absent, without having asked the authorization of the house, is violating that standing order, and when I think that the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Blouin), who represents the largest riding in Canada, with a population larger than that of the Yukon, is always here, I say that the hon. member for Yukon shows great irresponsibility by being always absent. I do not ask that the same penalties imposed against congressman Clayton Powell be imposed against him, however—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Choquette: —he should apologize.

[English]

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Lotbinière, I should like to point out that his references to dates of absence on the part of the hon. member for Yukon are not true. I am not surprised that such an obviously spurious question of privilege should be raised by a member who is notorious for irresponsibility and his complete lack of understanding of parliamentary procedure. I am a little surprised, however, that he should raise it on the flimsy pretence that it concerns the privileges of this house, with all the implications inherent in such charge for all hon. members.

I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, of the Biblical account of the woman taken in adultery who was about to be stoned by the righteous. On that occasion our Lord said "Let he who is without sin cast the first stone"—an injunction, Mr. Speaker, we would all do well to ponder in the circumstances which have been so unnecessarily created by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

In its wisdom, over many years of practical experience this parliament has accepted certain rules as to the conduct and attendance at sittings of hon. members. To the newcomer to this house or to those who are ignorant of the peculiar nature of our Canadian confederation, these rules may appear too vague, too flexible and too loose. However, Mr. Speaker, I recall to Your Honour that of our 265—soon to be 264—federal constituencies, no two are exactly identical in size, territorial extent and boundaries, or in distance from the seat of government.

Mr. Choquette: The hon. member for Saguenay is always here.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Starr: May I remind the hon. member that the riding of Lotbinière, for instance, is a pleasantly compact rural riding within easy commuting distance of Ottawa—I understand about 250 miles—and is well served by rail, road and even air.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): But not by members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: The riding of Yukon, on the other hand, is a vast and distant constituency, ten times as distant and difficult of access by any means of travel when judged by the standards of Lotbinière. Almost each one of our 265 ridings is different in this respect.

There has been no question for many years of the attendance of a member being enforced, Mr. Speaker. If attendance is not enforced, then absence cannot be a breach. The last episode in Canada was a special case involving Sir John A. Macdonald. It was a matter of his having been named to a committee dealing with election breaches in Northumberland county. The other member of the committee was a Mr. Pearson, no relation of the Prime Minister I know.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: They did not appear in the House of Commons and were ordered to be taken into custody. This appears in the Journals for May 10, 1873, at page 317. The historical explanation is that Sir John had remained at home for reasons of health of a liquid nature.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: On May 12 Sir John received a medical certificate from Doctor Tupper which was read to the house in the form of an affidavit, as follows:

I, Charles Tupper, of the City of Ottawa, in the County of Carleton, Doctor of Medicine, do make oath and say: That having been called upon to give my professional opinion in reference to the state of health of Sir John A. Macdonald, a Member of the House of Commons, I stated my opinion that it was necessary for the preservation of his health, that he should for some days refrain from the discharge of his duties as such Member of the House—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: I ask, Mr. Speaker, is it to be a requirement that members revert to this sort of practice? I submit that it is in the height of bad taste—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: —it is completely futile and a waste of the time of this house for one member to point the finger at another for behaviour which is dictated for him by the unique nature of the constituency for which he sits. One wonders if the good electors of Lotbinière would not prefer to read of their member's concern for such matters as housing or the plight of eastern agriculture rather than his fatuous remarks and bitter personal attacks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition does not think he has made his point. Perhaps I might be allowed to deal with the question of privilege. I can assure hon. members that I have had an opportunity to reflect on the matter raised by the hon. member for Lotbinière. He gave me written notice earlier today, and I am prepared to make a ruling now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As I have been directly involved in this matter perhaps I might say a brief word. I do not intend to engage in recriminations with my hon. friend across the way, except to say that what he said is false and baseless with respect to the absences mentioned by him in Hansard. I could point the finger at several members on the opposite side whose record for attendance is a good deal worse than mine.

Mr. Choquette: That is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member says it is not true.

Mr. Choquette: It is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: He will not involve me in the name calling in which he is involved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I may say that I have been absent over the past few months, but I have also been attending in the house over the past few months. While I have been absent I have missed the hon. member for Lotbinière as deeply, I am sure, as he has missed me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: May I, as a substantive point to the one that has been raised, refer Your Honour to page 2755 of Hansard for yesterday. The translated heading under which the hon. member raised this question is as follows: "Inquiry as to the prolonged absence of the member for Yukon".

An hon. Member: Terrible.

Mr. Nielsen: In all fairness I think that heading should be deleted; at least it should have been couched in terms to show that it is a mere allegation by the hon. member for Lotbinière and not a fait accompli, as one might gather by what appears in Hansard of yesterday's date. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Speaker: I had asked the co-operation of hon. members to allow me to make a brief ruling on the point raised by the hon. member for Lotbinière.

Dealing with the last point of the hon. member for Yukon, I feel sympathy for his suggestion that perhaps the heading of that paragraph in Hansard was not quite appropriate. We might have referred to the question in terms of an allegation rather than in terms of a statement of fact. I can assure the hon. member that the official records of the house will be corrected accordingly.

Yesterday the hon. member for Lotbinière raised a point of order affecting the privileges of the hon. member for Yukon, and I suggested to him that these allegations could not be considered under the guise of a point of order. In accordance with the standing order he has now served the Chair with notice of the question of privilege he intended to raise today.

[Translation]

I remind the hon. member for Lotbinière that standing order 5 has, in fact, been out of date for a long time. I invite him to acquaint himself with the remarks made by Professor Dawson on page 89, of his book entitled "Procedures of the Canadian House of Commons". The author indicates that that particular standing order has not been in force since the year 1877. For all useful purposes, standing order 5, even though never abolished, has been replaced by the provisions contained in the act on the Senate and the House of Commons. That legislation provides for penalties to be imposed in case of unjustified and repeated absence by a member. I believe that, in such cases, the provisions of that statute prevail.

I have therefore come to the conclusion that the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Lotbinière cannot be considered further.

[English]

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and I think this is the appropriate time to raise it. Today your attention was drawn to a heading in Hansard with regard to the hon. member for Yukon which was considered to be inaccurate. I notice that as recorded on the next page, 2756, I rose on a question of privilege immediately following that. My point of order is that there is no heading at all to my question of privilege and I suggest, sir, it should read "Inquiry as to subversive activities of the hon. member for Lotbinière."

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RESIDENCE REQUIREMENTS OF HUSBANDS AND WIVES

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 156, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Badanai: At the present time the Canadian Citizenship Act does not place a husband on the same basis as a wife. Subsections 1 and 2 of section 9 and subsections 6 and 9 of section 10 provide for the case of a woman whose husband complies with certain requirements to become a Canadian citizen, but does not allow the husband of a woman who has complied with the same requirements to become a Canadian citizen.

For example, present regulations require a woman whose husband is a Canadian citizen to have resided in Canada for a period of at least 18 months immediately prior to the date of her application, whereas they require a man, whether or not he is married to a Canadian citizen, to have resided in Canada for at least five years immediately preceding the date of his application.

It is for the purpose of removing this and other similar anomalies that this bill is proposed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GREAT SLAVE LAKE RAILWAY

Question No. 94—Mr. Baldwin:

1. Has the Great Slave Railway line operating from a point near Grimshaw, in the province of Alberta, to Great Slave lake, in the Northwest Territories, been declared as a work for the general advantage of Canada?

2. If so, on what date was this railway declared to be for the general advantage of Canada?

3. Does the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada have jurisdiction over the Great Slave Lake Railway?

4. Are the operating and maintenance personnel of the Great Slave Lake Railway employees of Canadian National Railways, the Great Slave Lake Railway, or some other entity?

5. Are these employees subject to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, the Canada Pension Plan and/or The Railway Act?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1 and 2. While no specific declaration has been made paragraph 1 of chapter 56 of the statutes of Canada 1960-61 respecting the construction of the line of railway and paragraph 6(1)(C) of the Railway Act c. 170 s.1 RS 1952, read as follows:

1. In order to establish transportation services to and from mining properties in the area of Great Slave Lake, in the Northwest Territories, and otherwise to assist in the development of Northern Canada.

6(1) (C) every railway or portion thereof, whether constructed under the authority of the Parliament of Canada or not, now or hereafter owned, controlled, leased, or operated by a company wholly or partly within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, or by a company operating a railway wholly or partly within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, whether such ownership, control, or first mentioned operation is acquired or exercised by purchase, lease, agreement or other means whatsoever, and whether acquired or exercised under authority of the Parliament of Canada, or of the legislature of any province, or otherwise howsoever; and every railway or portion thereof now or hereafter so owned, controlled, leased or operated shall be deemed and is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

3. As the line of railway is still under construction, the Canadian Transport Commission jurisdiction applies only to construction of grade crossings and grade separations and/or installation of highway protection. The railway operation complies in all respects with relevant statutes.

4. Some employees such as those operating work trains are employees of Canadian National Railways. Others are employed by contractors working on the line.

5. Yes, in so far as Canadian National Railway employees are concerned.

C.N.R. PASSENGER SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 190—Mr. Hees:

1. Does Canadian National Railways plan to discontinue rail passenger service in Newfoundland?

2. Has Canadian National Railways set probable dates for the discontinuation of passenger service in Newfoundland?

3. How many employees have been laid off by Canadian National Railways to date?

4. How many jobs will be affected if discontinuation of Canadian National Railways passenger service becomes an actuality?

5. What plans has Canadian National Railways made for finding alternate employment for those to be affected by discontinuation of passenger service in Newfoundland?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Authority must be obtained from the Canadian Transport Commission before any discontinuance of rail passenger service. The Canadian National Railway proposes to make such an application to the commission due to the fact that since completion of the Trans-Canada highway across Newfoundland there has been a rapid decline in passenger train revenues. The service which the railway can provide with the equipment and rail facilities available cannot compete with the advantages of travel over the highway. As a result, the company has decided to embark upon a bus operation to provide the people of Newfoundland with a faster, more convenient passenger service.

2. It is proposed that rail passenger service be discontinued concurrent with inauguration by Canadian National of highway bus service tentatively set for June 1968.

3. None.

4. About 150 positions in railway operations; however, these will to some extent be offset by the establishment of positions for bus operation.

5. Every effort will be made to place surplus employees in alternate employment.

BUTTER IMPORTS

Question No. 334—Mr. Laprise:

1. How much butter, of what value and from what countries, was imported during the year 1966-67?

2. How much butter does Canada have in reserve?

3. How much butter does the government intend to import during the year 1967-68?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Agriculture as follows: 1. The quantity and dollar value of butter imported into Canada during the year 1966-67 was:

Year 1966*
Country	Quantity (Cwt)	Value ($000)
Belgium-Luxembourg	16,643	405
France	43,898	2,251
Netherlands	171,199	3,986
New Zealand	160	8
United States	2,220	60
Totals	234,120	6,710
Year 1967* (January to March incl.)
Belgium-Luxembourg	46,849	1,086
New Zealand	22,400	846
Totals	69,249	1,932

*All of the butter imported during 1966 and January to March 1967 was imported for processing and re-export or for re-export as ship's stores, with the exception of the butter imported from New Zealand in January to March 1967. This was imported by the Canadian Dairy Commission for consumption in Canada.

Questions

2. On July 1, 1967, stocks of creamery butter in cold storages and dairy factories in Canada amounted to 47,406,000 pounds, compared to 57,602,000 pounds as at July 1, 1966.

3. Information not available.

*SETTLEMENT OF C.B.C. WAGE DISPUTE

Question No. 364—Mr. Ormiston:

From January 1, 1966, to September 1, 1967, has the government, the Minister of Labour, or any official of the Department of Labour ordered, directed, recommended, suggested or determined that C.B.C. management agree to a particular wage settlement with a specific union at a level higher than that recommended, suggested or determined by the C.B.C.?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: In September 1966 the Department of Labour participated in the deliberations of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, with respect to a wage dispute. These deliberations resulted in a settlement mutually acceptable to both parties.

LOCATION OF NEW BUILDINGS IN GATINEAU COUNTY

Question No. 370—Mr. Isabelle:

What will be the exact locations of the two federal buildings shortly to be constructed on the Quebec side of the national capital, one in the city of Hull and the other in the municipality of Lucerne in Gatineau county?

[Translation]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): The Department of Forestry and Rural Development Headquarters Building will be located in the vicinity of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau, in the city of Hull, Quebec.

The Forest Research Centre will be located on the west side of Mountain road, near the intersection of Gamelin boulevard, in the municipality of Lucerne, Quebec.

EXTENSION OF FISHERMEN'S INDEMNITY PLAN TO PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Question No. 378—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Has the government plans to extend the fishermen's indemnity plan to fishermen in Manitoba and the other prairie provinces?

2. If so, when will this become effective?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes.

2. As soon as the provinces indicate their readiness to participate in the administrative arrangements for the field work of appraisals, premiums and contact with fishermen.

EXTENSION OF FISHERMEN'S SHORE INSTALLATIONS INDEMNITY PLAN TO MANITOBA

Question No. 380—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Has the government plans to extend the fixed fishing gear and shore installations indemnity plan to fishermen in Manitoba?

2. If so, when will this become effective?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes, this coverage is part of the fishermen's indemnity plan.

2. As soon as the provinces indicate their readiness to participate in the administrative arrangements for the field work of appraisals, premiums and contact with fishermen.

RESALE PRICE MAINTENANCE BY FIREARMS MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 394—Mr. Enns:

1. Have complaints about resale price maintenance practices been received by the director of investigation and research against certain firearm companies, specifically Remington, Browning and Ithaca?

2. Has any study been made by the director of investigation and research to determine if the price fixing of guns by manufacturers through franchised dealers constitutes a restrictive trade practice under section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act?

3. Has any action against the firearms manufacturers been taken?

Hon. John N. Turner (Registrar General): 1. Yes, with respect to Remington.

2 and 3. The general practice is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry has been, or is being pursued with respect to a particular group of companies or individuals unless and until a report is published or proceedings are taken in the courts.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CANADA MANPOWER CENTRE

Question No. 350—Mr. Johnston:

1. Was it necessary to change the name of the National Employment Service to "Canada Manpower Centre" and, if so, for what reason?

2. What was the total cost of (a) separating offices (b) separating staff (c) rental of non-federal owned buildings (d) discard of stationery and other office supplies for change of name?

3. What was the total number of staff, in the unemployment insurance and employment services separately, in 1965 and in 1966, and if the 1966 figure is not available, what is the estimate?

4. What was the area of square feet occupied by both offices in 1965 and in 1966?

5. How many persons above the classification of local office manager were employed in 1965 and how many in 1966?

6. What was the amount of salaries paid for these persons above the classification of local office manager in 1965 and in 1966?

7. How many directors and assistant directors were there in 1965 and in 1966?

8. What were the salaries of each of these persons in 1965 and in 1966?

9. How many commissioners were there in 1965 and in 1966?

10. What were the salaries of each in 1965 and in 1966?

11. How many federal ministers were involved in Canada manpower and unemployment insurance in 1965 and in 1966?

12. What were the salaries of each in 1965 and in 1966?

13. How many local office managers (or equivalent) were there in 1965 and in 1966?

14. What were the total salaries of these persons in 1965 and in 1966?

15. What was the total number of staff handling "special placements" in 1965 and in 1966?

16. What were the total salaries of these persons (as in part 15) in 1965 and in 1966?

17. What was the total number of authenticated placements in 1965 and in 1966 (disregarding persons called back to their own jobs)?

18. What was the cost per individual placement in 1965 and in 1966?

19. What was the total amount of N.E.S. salaries below the classification of local office manager or assistant in 1965 and in 1966?

20. How many persons of a staff below the classification of local office manager or assistant were employed in 1965 and in 1966?

22. Who was the chief commissioner in 1965 and in 1966?

23. What was the chief commissioner's salary in 1965 and in 1966?

24. What is the duration of his appointment?

25. What were the total expenses of "executive visits" from Ottawa to local offices in 1965 and in 1966?

26. Do local office radio and TV broadcasts still reflect the same jobs available after all these changes and, if so (a) for what reason (b) who pays for the increases in salaries, upgradings, etc., and costs?

27. What are the total annual costs to operate each regional and local office in addition to the costs to the department of the head office in Ottawa?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion No. 17?

I ask, sir, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS OFFICE FROM AMOS, QUE.

Motion No. 17—Mr. Laprise:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all documents and correspondence between the personnel of the office of the Indian agency in Amos, on the one part, and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, on the other part, in connection with the transfer of the district office of the Indian affairs branch from Amos to Val d'Or.

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking for correspondence which passed between officials of my department. It was correspondence entirely within the department, and customarily this sort of thing has not been made public. I would ask him to drop the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LEGISLATION TO BE DEALT WITH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on September 27 last I addressed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister regarding the business of the house, asking that at the earliest opportunity he submit a list of legislation expected to be considered during the present session and detailing a time table, to which the Prime Minister replied that he would be very glad to see that such a list was given to me and to other members. Is the Prime Minister now ready to submit this list of legislation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am sorry I have not been able to do that, Mr. Speaker, but I will consult with the house leader and try to get the list to my hon. friend as quickly as possible. As he probably knows, we will be debating the budget during the next four or five days, and during that time I hope we will be able to make clear what our proceedings will be afterward.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FORESTRY

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN STUDY OF FIRE PREVENTION METHODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In view of the serious loss of timber, scenic and recreational values caused by forest fires in British Columbia this year, has the minister received any request from the government of British Columbia for a joint federal-provincial study of new techniques to deal more efficiently with Canada's most persistent form of natural disaster, the forest fire?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of his question. So far we have received no official request.

Mr. Herridge: As a supplementary question, will the minister consider sending a representative of his department to attend the seminar called by the mayor of Trail, B.C., for some time in November, to discuss forest fire fighting methods, to which representatives of the provincial government and the governors of Washington and Idaho have been invited?

Mr. Sauvé: I will do this with pleasure, Mr. Speaker, if we are invited.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT ARDA

PROMOTION OF SECONDARY INDUSTRY IN NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the minister responsible for ARDA, the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Has the minister received representations concerning assistance from ARDA in setting secondary industries in northwestern Quebec?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Not as far as I know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette: I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Supposing the people in northwestern Quebec were to ask for assistance from ARDA, would the Industrial Development Bank co-operate with the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is hypothetical.

[Mr. Pearson.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED VISIT BY FRENCH AGRICULTURE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In the light of newspaper reports on the subject could he tell us whether when the French minister of agriculture, Edgar Faure, arrives in Canada he will be conferring with him on such mutual problems as farm prices and the handling of farmers' demonstrations?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I regret to inform the hon. member that Mr. Faure's visit, due to circumstances beyond his control, has been cancelled.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO INCREASED FOOD PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Would the government look into the causes which led to the 4½ per cent increase in the cost of food during the past two months, as a preliminary step to stemming the rapid rise in the cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a very general question and cannot be asked at this time.

TRADE

TEXTILES—SUGGESTED RESTRICTION ON IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

In view of the fact that the sales of Canadian textiles have fallen off for the first time in five years while inventories have doubled, does the government intend in the near future to invite officially the Japanese government to restrict its exportations of fibres to Canada?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has already invited the Japanese government to do that. When I was in Rio I had the opportunity of speaking directly to the Japanese minister of finance in order to support our application.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): As a supplementary question, will the minister assure the house that nothing will be done to interfere with Canadian-Japanese trading?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is the problem the government faces, illustrated most vividly by speakers on this side of the house.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Can he inform the house whether he has taken the necessary steps to protect the shoe industry in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that this question is much too general in scope to be asked at present. I believe that the hon. member is asking the minister to make a statement, which would be appropriate on motions.

Mr. Ricard: With all due respect, sir, I believe that my question is similar to that asked by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), since it concerns an industry of vital importance to the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made his representations.

DRUGS

TORONTO—STEPS TO COMBAT USE OF MARIJUANA IN SCHOOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the federal government been requested to assist the efforts of Toronto municipal and school officials to combat the increasing efforts of international drug syndicates to push the use of marijuana in Canadian schools?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that question.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROVINCES ACCEPTING INVITATION TO ATTEND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, more than a week ago, on Monday, September 25, I asked the Prime Minister to inform the house what provinces had accepted his invitation to the federal-provincial conference called for early next year. The Prime Minister replied that he preferred not to do that then but if I would wait until the end of the week he could give a full reply. Is he now in a position to do so?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I can give a fuller reply, Mr. Speaker. I think seven provinces have accepted, and perhaps tomorrow I will be able to give the full list, including those which have not yet been able to answer my letter.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): When the Prime Minister replies tomorrow perhaps he would also reply to the question I put to him on two occasions with respect to representation by the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the Yukon and Northwest Territories will be represented at this conference in the usual fashion followed over the years by the federal government.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TORONTO—ADMISSION OF AVIATION FUELING FIRM SUPERVISORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is he now in a position to answer the question put to him yesterday by the hon. member for York South concerning the reported admission to Canada of 15 supervisors to work for Consolidated Aviation Fueling of Toronto Limited in the face of a legal strike?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I received the telegram to which the hon. member for York South referred yesterday. The report I have indicates that 15 supervisory men came from the United States and concealed the true purpose of their visit to Canada. They did not indicate to our officers that they were coming here to work for the Consolidated Aviation Fueling company. A meeting was held the following day with the president of the company following which our local officers decided, for reasons of safety, that these men could remain in Canada. I am assured now that this is not at all necessary, and these men will be asked to quit Canada within 48 hours.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REGULATIONS RESPECTING INTEREST DISCLOSURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Finance could advise the house when he intends to publish and table the regulations concerning interest disclosure, as provided for under section 92 of the Bank Act.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question tomorrow after I have made inquiries.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON UNEMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

As the Economic Council of Canada foresees a marked increase in the number of unemployed this fall, and in view of the Canadian Press report which outlines special steps to alleviate the consequences thereof on Montrealers, can the minister make a statement on his plans to avoid an unfortunate situation this fall?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking the minister to make a statement which can be allowed only on motions.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, may I put my question in another way?

Does the Minister of Manpower and Immigration intend to take steps in order to avoid a sharp drop in employment in Montreal this fall?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in so far as my own responsibility is concerned, we have a new manpower training program as well as a manpower mobility program, and there is no doubt that my department will make every effort to improve the situation forecast by the hon. member.

Mr. Valade: Has the minister approached the authorities of the city of Montreal or the province of Quebec to discuss this situation which is expected to be rather serious?

Mr. Marchand: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Marchand.]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a complementary question.

Is it not the opinion of the hon. minister that it would rather be important to lengthen the winter work period instead of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not asking a question but making a suggestion.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asking him whether during the time he was recently in the United States he was able to get the authority and permission of the United States government to establish the geographic co-ordinates from which the straight base lines will be drawn.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it was not necessary to ask the United States for authority to establish either the co-ordinates or the straight base lines system. This is something that depends entirely on the policy of the government of Canada. I hope to be able to make a statement about this matter very shortly.

Mr. Howard: I have a supplementary question. I understand the hesitancy on the part of the minister to be more precise in view of the fact that he was precise earlier in the year and was unable to meet the deadline. However, can he tell us when—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

FORT CHIMO—INQUIRY AS TO MANUFACTURE OF OOKPIKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Are the current difficulties being experienced in respect of the Eskimo handicraft industry responsible for the cancellation of the manufacture of Ookpiks at the Fort Chimo co-operative?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this question is one that should be asked at this time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great economic urgency in the north. Perhaps I could rephrase my question. Has the manufacture of Ookpiks at the Fort Chimo co-operative been discontinued?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR INCREASED WHEAT QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and in his absence I will direct it to either the acting minister or the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that as of October 2 there were still 213 points in Alberta without a one bushel wheat quota, can the minister inform the house what action the wheat board is taking to rectify this very serious situation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will check into this matter and provide an answer tomorrow.

Mr. Smallwood: I have a supplementary question. As of the same date there were 197 points in Alberta on a one bushel quota as compared to 548 points in Saskatchewan. Will this discrimination be rectified after October 11, which is an important date—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

RAIDS ON OFFICES OF SERBIAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct another question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning the question I asked on September 28. At that time I inquired whether the Prime Minister had received correspondence dated September 16 from the Serbian national committee, whether he had acknowledged it, and what was the nature of his reply regarding this complaint. Can the Prime Minister answer this question now?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible to parliament for the R.C.M.P. perhaps I might be permitted to deal with the question raised by the hon. member for Ontario. A letter under date of September 16 was received in the office of the Prime Minister on September 28. Acknowledgement of receipt of that letter was sent on September 29. A reply in substance will be forwarded from my office as soon as I have ascertained the facts concerning certain matters raised in the letter.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR FURTHER SHOWING OF FILM ON CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the urgent need of a decision will the Prime Minister have immediate studies made as to the possibility of an agreement being reached to have the world famous film about Canada, which is being shown at the telephone pavilion at Expo, and already viewed by over 5 million people, retained and shown across Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter is already under consideration. I am taking an active personal interest in this because, as I am sure all members will agree, this is something that should be shown in this country.

AGRICULTURE

FREIGHT SUBSIDIES ON TRANSPORTATION OF FEED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Ministry of Forestry and Rural Development. Can he tell us what decision if any has been made by the Canadian livestock board regarding an appeal for transportation subsidies on feed grain, to apply in that part of Ontario west of the lakehead?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, an announcement will be made next week by the board in respect of the payment of transportation costs from the lakehead to various regions of northwestern Ontario.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, the minister informed the house last week that the board was considering similar action in respect of feed grain produced in western Ontario. I am wondering whether any decision has been reached in that regard.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I announced last week that a meeting was to be held in Montreal between representatives of the Ontario winter wheat board and the Canadian livestock board. I expect the board to take a favourable decision on transportation costs in respect of wheat and corn moving from western Ontario to eastern Canada. An announcement should be made early next week.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

AGREEMENT RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT OF TOURIST FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Could the minister tell the house what kind of agreement has been concluded between the province of Quebec and Ottawa, because that province has apparently decided to develop tourist facilities only in its own parks?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the question of the hon. member should be put on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED REFUSAL TO RECEIVE MEMBER OF SOUTHERN RHODESIA GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister any objection to, or will he place any obstacles in the way of, a visit to Canada by a member of the de facto government of Southern Rhodesia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a hypothetical question and on that account does not deserve the usual full reply that I give to the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, so we may get one of those full replies which will be not understood by anyone in the house. Is it not a fact that the minister refused to see a member of the government of Southern Rhodesia and declined him the courtesy of making a visit to Canada and conducting a speaking tour in this country.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that I have refused to receive such a person; but I am aware that I belong to a government that has been doing everything it can to remove the discrimination that is practised by that government in Southern Rhodesia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to assist in the ministers' aim and to assist the government of Southern Rhodesia to resist the terrorists who are entering that country, would the minister now consider discontinuing financial aid to Tanzania for military training purposes?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should have thought that my hon. friend, who is a great believer in the commonwealth, would applaud the government for assisting this commonwealth country in the basic maintenance of its security.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CENTENNIAL TELEVISION SERIES ON PROCESS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister of which I gave his office notice. It is about the somewhat delayed centennial television series of this parliament. With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I need about a minute to say that on June 26—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that we have a short question period this afternoon and I am afraid that even a minute is too long.

Mr. Fairweather: Fair enough, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has had four notices of this question over the past 13 weeks, will he now tell the house what plans are being made so that arrangements can be proceeded with forthwith?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this matter is before the committee on procedure. My hon. friend is a member of that committee, and may therefore be able to make progress in it. When a report from the committee comes to the house it will be submitted to the Speaker.

INDUSTRY

REMOVAL FROM CANADA OF HEAD OFFICES OF LARGE COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry. In view of the proposed move of the head office of Massey-Ferguson from Toronto to Des Moines, Iowa, and in view of the consequent deleterious effect of this move on the Canadian economy, has the government any plans to forestall similar action on the part of other important industrial concerns which in view of the present economic climate in Canada may regard such a move as advantageous?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the announced symbolic walk this Saturday, led by His Excellency the Governor General and members of the government, from Rideau Hall to parliament hill, does this participation by the government indicate that there will be no further reduction in Canada's external aid program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, recently the Minister of Justice established a committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Carl Goldenberg to study constitutional arrangements. It seems this committee is willing to hear opinions from the public.

My question to the Minister of Justice is the following: Has the said committee received an opinion from the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) on whether he supports the concept of two nations?

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: I do not approve of republicans like you.

HOUSING

STEPS TO INCREASE PARTICIPATION BY PRIVATE CAPITAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether the government is giving consideration to the possible necessity of other measures being employed to divert private capital into housing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this matter was considered at length yesterday and the day before. I do not think the question in that form can be asked today.

Mr. Chatterton: With respect, Mr. Speaker, the information leading to this question has come to me since the debate finished yesterday. Perhaps the minister is ready to reply.

[Later:]

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, may I reword my question to the Minister of Finance? Is the minister in a position to inform the house whether the government is giving consideration to measures to force the private sector to make money available to the housing industry, as was indicated last Sunday in Vancouver by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, within the last few weeks and months the government and some of its agencies have been in touch with various lending companies, including chartered banks, encouraging them to play a full part in the financing of mortgages on homes.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

OBSERVANCE OF NATIONALIST CHINA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of the Prime Minister's answer to a question yesterday regarding the cancellation of the visit by Nationalist China premier, C. K.

Yen. Can the right hon. gentleman assure the house today that Nationalist China day on October 10 has not been cancelled?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the visit has not been cancelled. We learned this morning that the vice president who was to come was not able to leave because of the pressure of business. But the vice premier of the government will be arriving and he will carry on as the official representative of that country. We will be very glad indeed to receive him. He will arrive here accompanied by the minister of foreign affairs and the minister of trade, so I think that government will be very well represented in our official centennial celebrations.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONTRACTS FOR NEW DESTROYERS—SALE OF SONAR EQUIPMENT TO ROYAL NAVY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Defence Production, but first I would quickly say "St. Louis 2, Boston 1; game over". Has the decision yet been made with regard to the contracts for the lead yards for the new destroyers; and if so, what is it?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, it is expected that tenders will be called within a relatively short period. Decisions have been made as to which yards are judged to be competent to act as lead yards, and this decision has been communicated to the yards concerned.

Mr. McCleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us which are the lead yards?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this question cannot be asked.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Calgary North asked a question with respect to a report appearing in the United Kingdom press about Canadian designed sonar. The United Kingdom procured eight variable depth sonars from Canada which were produced by E.M.I. Cossor, Halifax, on a joint production line for the Royal Navy and the Royal Canadian Navy. These equipments are in service with the Royal Navy, and there is no indication that their performance is unsatisfactory. On the contrary, the United Kingdom decided to procure additional systems to fit a further eight ships and made arrangements with Canada to establish a production line in the United Kingdom. Production of these additional equipments is now under way and Canadian contractors are supplying various components for the new systems. The contractor in the United Kingdom, Cossor, has written a protest to the Daily Telegraph for the unwarranted news report.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to express my satisfaction that these reports have been found to be incorrect.

I have a supplementary question in regard to the tenders for the destroyer contracts. What was the reason for the long delay in these tenders being sent out?

Mr. Drury: There have been extensive consultations with the shipbuilding industry to devise, in agreement with them, a more effective and efficient method of calling for tenders than we have had in the past. Agreement has now been reached. These consultations have not led to any delay in the construction of the vessels.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

SUGGESTED SURVEY TO ASCERTAIN QUEBEC OPINION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Having in mind the current concern over Canadian unity and the lack of any real knowledge of the feeling of the population of Quebec on this matter, my question is as follows. Could consideration be given to determining their sentiments by means of conducting an impartial survey of Quebec opinion.

WATER RESOURCES

PEMBINA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think the minister will remember he promised to give me an answer to a question I asked him with regard to the possible start of construction, under the supervision of the International Joint Commission, of the Pembina river project in Manitoba and North Dakota.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am sorry I did not give an earlier answer to the hon. gentleman, who asked me the question some days ago. The commission's international Pembina river engineering board has completed its study. The commission has held a series of public meetings. It is now completing the preparation of its report to the two governments. Until that report has been received and until the government has had an opportunity to examine it, I cannot say what attitude the government will take.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for having recognized me. I wanted to put a question to the Minister of Labour but after due consideration, I have decided to refrain, because the answer might embarrass our distinguished visitors from England.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—CALL BY O.A.S. TO SUSPEND TRADING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is the government aware of a recent request from the Organization of American States asking that trade and financial exchanges with Cuba be reduced, and what policy does the government intend to pursue in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must point out to the hon. member that this question is too wide in scope and cannot be asked in such form at this time.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith (p. 1197), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) (p. 1201).

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in view of the relatively long period since this debate began in June I thought it might be helpful to the house if I spoke briefly this afternoon on the economic situation as I now see it, then on the outlook for revenue and expenditures, and conclude with some reference to the tariff changes resulting from the Kennedy round negotiations which I could not disclose at the time of the budget.

It may be recalled that on June 1 I said in my budget speech that the country was experiencing a period of readjustment following the overheated conditions of 1966. Some aspects of the economy were reasonably satisfactory, including the employment situation and our balance of payments position. I was able to forecast a fairly strong demand both for exports and for consumer goods. There had been some moderation in the growth of expenditures by governments as a whole on goods and services compared with the previous year and a flattening out was expected in business capital expenditures this year.

My budget speech underlined one most unsatisfactory aspect of the situation, namely, the continuing upward movements in costs and prices. I told the house that the rate of increase in consumer prices was more than we could tolerate on a continuing basis. It was evident that in general costs of production were rising more rapidly than prices, and I described one aspect of the situation in the following words:

> New wage settlements resulting from collective bargaining this year show increases as large as those of last year. Most of the increases now occurring in wage and salary rates, including executive salaries, are substantially in excess of the general increases in productivity that have been taking place. They clearly imply that further increases in prices are likely to occur.

All in all the budget speech forecast on June 1 was that the gross national product would rise this year by between 6.5 and 7 per cent including an increase in prices of not less than 3 per cent. Since June 1 the state of the Canadian economy has developed fairly well, indeed surprisingly like the forecast I made in my budget speech. If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, when we look at our country we find it to be indeed one of the most fortunate in the world and it continues to be very prosperous indeed. The problems that we face—and this is the first time in our history that we have ever faced any problems like these—are those of managing our prosperity. We have had now a continuing upward trend in the economy over more than six years and there is no suggestion whatever of any downward turn in the future.

This problem of managing our prosperity and of dealing with the pockets of poverty that unfortunately still remain is a very difficult one. We have never encountered anything like this before, nor has any other country. We are moving out now onto unexplored territory. When I was in Rio, I discussed these problems with the ministers of finance of other similarly fortunate countries and I found they echoed my words.

This year our grain crop has fallen short of the bumper crops of recent years but is adequate to meet our export commitments and expected demands. Industrial production has increased moderately. Business investment expenditures in the second quarter of the year were down slightly, as expected, both on construction and equipment. Urban housing starts were high in May and June but, as is well known, declined in July and August. Consumer expenditures on durable goods increased strongly in the second quarter of the year. Our balance of payments and exchange position during the summer has remained relatively strong, reflecting the favorable influence of Expo and the centennial year on our tourist trade. The total of all demands on the economy, including those of governments, has continued to increase just about as anticipated.

Total employment has increased modestly during the summer, and the seasonally adjusted figure of unemployment after reaching 4.4 per cent in June declined to 4.1 per cent in August. In the budget speech I indicated—I was very frank about it—that some temporary increase in unemployment was possible this year in view of our rapidly growing labour force and the slower growth rate this year in production. My predictions in this respect were mostly accurate except that I really expected that unemployment might rise even more than it has.

The undesirable rate of increases in prices and costs, to which I referred on June 1, has continued. The need for restraint has not lessened. I shall have more to say about this in a few minutes.

On the whole I would still expect the gross national product this year to increase by 7 per cent or a bit more, around the upper end of the range I mentioned in June. I said at the time that if the figures were higher than 6⅔ per cent it would probably be accompanied by a further undesirable increase in prices, and that has proven to be the case.

[Mr. Sharp.]

The most notable developments of recent months have probably been those in the capital market. Despite a continuing expansion in the money supply, rates of interest have increased further both in Canada and the United States. Indeed this has been a world wide experience. As I noted on Monday evening in this house, at Rio de Janeiro last week I found that these high interest rates were one of the main preoccupations of nearly all the many ministers of finance attending the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund. All of us agreed that never before had we been faced at one and the same time with easy money policies and high and rising interest rates. In the past we have associated high interest rates with tight money. Now for the first time we have high and rising interest rates associated with easy money.

In our own case, Mr. Speaker, these high interest rates reflect the attitude of investors on the one hand on the other hand the heavy demands in Canada for savings to finance housing, business investment and government requirements. They also necessarily reflect the high level of interest rates in the United States where similar conditions prevail and from which country we must import hundreds of millions of dollars in borrowed capital. The relationship between our interest rates and United States interest rates must be such as to attract into our country sufficient capital to make up the deficiency in our own savings.

The extraordinary condition of the capital markets is, I believe, influenced by three important factors. First, there is now unfortunately a widespread expectation of price increases continuing over a long period, which makes investors concerned about the real value of long-term bonds and leads them to demand higher yields in compensation. To remove this concern will require action that will dissipate this fear of inflation that overhangs the market. Second, there is an abnormal desire for liquidity, a preference by investors for holding highly liquid assets or short-term securities, and a desire by many businesses to have liquid assets so that they will be less dependent on borrowing in the future. Third, there appears to be a general expectation that the pace of economic expansion will quicken again before long and be reflected in continuing strong demands for capital.

Looking ahead to next year, I still see our own situation much as I described it on June 1 but complicated by the prospects of a stronger resurgence of spending, prices and incomes in the United States unless these are held in check by tax increases there. In Canada I would expect consumer demands generally to increase more strongly next year and government demands for goods and services to increase slightly less than this year. The prospects for business capital expenditures on construction and machinery are hard to foresee at this time. Because of the relatively low level of profits this year, business investment may increase relatively little next year unless strongly influenced by the situation and by opinions in the United States.

We have already discussed at length this week the outlook for housing. There will certainly be a strong demand for housing and we can expect more capital to be available to finance it.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, we are making a successful transition from the high rate of expansion of the past year to the more sustainable rate of growth that is now beginning to emerge. This has really been quite a remarkable period. There were many people, among them members on the other side, who predicted that we would soon be facing a recession and warned us about this. But I would suggest to them that nothing like this has happened at all. The situation has developed as it was forecast in the budget speech, namely, that we would move from a very, very rapid rate of expansion through a period of inventory adjustment and on to a more sustainable level. And I believe we are so moving.

It has been a really quite successful transition except for one thing, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the rate of increase in costs and prices is still much too high. I feel that we must—and we will—find some way to bring this inflationary movement under control even, if necessary, by letting the economy develop a little more slack for a year or two while price and cost increases taper off. We would certainly prefer to avoid the sacrifices of production and income which this would, of course, involve, but if we cannot collectively and individually exercise the restraint that is called for in wage and price increases in the present situation, then there would appear to be no escape from an essential cooling off period.

I think it is important for all of us in the house to realize that the root causes of the rising prices and costs that we are now experiencing are not located in any one place. I know that it is very easy for members opposite to point to the government and say "You are the cause". I suppose this is the natural thing to do. It is always quite natural to point to the government and to say that the government is at fault in a given situation. In the present situation the government does have a responsibility. I hope that we will discharge it, and all my colleagues on this side are determined that we will discharge it.

But even if we fully discharge our responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, there will remain a problem which requires the utmost co-operation of other governments and of the public at large. Restraint is needed on government expenditures. However, may I say, in order to clarify one point that always causes me some concern when I read it in some of the comments made in the press, that I am not urging business to restrain its investment in productive equipment and in new buildings. I believe it is essential that business should go on expanding and increase its investment.

The kind of restraint that I am urging here is restraint in the field of prices and costs. This is where restraint is needed. Our objective is to have a steady expansion. The problem that we face, the problem the United States faces and the problem the Europeans face is, how do you combine prosperity with stability? This is a very difficult problem; I hope we all realize that. I trust that our debate on the subject will illustrate our understanding of the nature of this problem, because it is only if we understand it that there will be the proper public response which is necessary if we are going to deal with it.

On June 1 I forecast budgetary revenues, after the proposed tax changes, of $8,960 million and budgetary expenditures of $9,700 million for the current fiscal year. I now expect that because of rising costs and incomes both of these figures will be up by about 1½ per cent, leaving the prospective deficit about the same. After reviewing the situation carefully I am now satisfied that the deficit this fiscal year will not exceed what I forecast in the budget and which I still believe is appropriate to an economy in process of transition from a period of too rapid expansion to one of a more sustainable growth rate.

In June I forecast our total net cash requirements for the current fiscal year at $1,590 million. As usual, this forecast excluded any amount that was required to finance any changes in foreign exchange reserves after the budget date. I see no reason to expect any increase in our total cash requirements this fiscal year, a large part of which will be met by reducing our cash balances. I shall be endeavouring, of course, to reduce our cash requirements below that figure if I can in order to keep to a minimum our demands upon the capital market.

I should like to re-emphasize the two points I have made because I have seen references in the press and elsewhere to fears that the budgetary deficit this year is going to far exceed our estimates, or that our cash requirements are going to far exceed the figures I put forward in the budget speech. In fact, I am satisfied that we shall stay within those figures. Ordinarily the government does not settle its future spending plans at this time of year. At present the situation we face in the capital market and the widespread concern over government expenditures require us to plan ahead as far as we can the general scale of our expenditures and revenues and our demands upon the capital market next year. The government is now engaged in a special effort to limit the growth in its expenditures next year. Many of our large spending programs are now related to the cost of provincial programs which we support, notably hospital insurance, higher education, assistance to those in need and equalization payments to provincial governments. We must also stand ready to assume our obligations with respect to whatever decisions the provinces make on medicare plans that conform to our legislation. To all of these this parliament has given a high priority.

Our public debt charges are increasing. The costs of our own operations increase as prices and wages increase and certain of the benefits we pay, such as veterans' disability pensions, must in all fairness be adjusted from time to time. Even with no new programs or major improvements, our expenditures must rise substantially and absorb most of the growth to be expected in our revenues. Yet a minimum of new programs and projects is necessary if our policies and actions are to meet the needs of a changing economy.

We are determined in our present review to screen out obsolete expenditure programs that cannot be justified in present circumstances. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) later in this debate will be talking about the efforts which have been made and the successes which have been achieved. We are determined to wield the knife on everything which we feel has low priority in whole or in part. We are making real progress but we will continue to be engaged on this task for weeks to come before we present the estimates to the house. Decisions already taken have required departments to postpone or eliminate many items that may be desirable but which must take second place to our other objectives. Already the Treasury Board has eliminated $650 million from the total amount requested by departments and agencies, and that is not the end. The President of the Treasury Board is grateful to those ministers who are responsible for the spending departments for the co-operation they have extended to him.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the minister wishes to refer to deductions and reductions perhaps he could supply the house with the actual figures and tables and the references in which they appear. I shall have more to say about this matter. If the minister is to refer to such figures I think the house is entitled to the information for which I have asked.

Mr. Sharp: I have nothing more to say today. I thought that my remarks would interest the house. I have not used general figures. I thought it a good idea to mention the extent to which it is necessary to reduce expenditures.

Mr. Monteith: This is a red herring.

Mr. Sharp: This is not the important point, however. The important point is our objectives with respect to next year, and I wish to define those most precisely. The figures I have put forward here with respect to the cuts which have been made in prospective expenditures are not, I agree, the vital point. I thought it would interest the house to know the serious problem that the government has been facing in carrying forward its policy of exercising restraint. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that most of the programs which have been examined have ordinarily been supported not only by all sides in the house but in many cases have been thought to be most stingy. When we present these expenditures to the house in the estimates I hope that the opposition which has been making speeches about economy will be prepared to show a little restraint and not criticize the government for failing to spend enough money.

The government's objective for the next fiscal year is to reduce the budget deficit substantially below the level of the current fiscal year. I am not talking about savings here; I am talking about our objectives in terms of budgetary policy. As I say, our objective is to reduce substantially the budget deficit in the coming fiscal year. From both a financial and an economic point of view I believe this will be necessary next year unless there is a major change in the economic prospects for that year. We will aim to produce at least a balance in the federal government's revenues and expenditures in terms of our national economic accounts. Such action is necessary to exercise the fiscal restraint on the economy required to check the inflationary price and cost increases now taking place.

I doubt, however, that even the most determined action on the part of the federal government will be sufficient in itself to arrest the kinds of inflationary price and cost increases that are now taking place. I am confident that we shall be able to secure the co-operation of the provincial governments in a similar effort through the consultations that we have with them. I wish to remind the house that the scale of spending and the scale of borrowing of provincial and municipal governments has exceeded that of the federal government this year, and even more so in the past year. When we in the government and parliament of Canada have taken the fiscal actions that we should take, then I believe they should be supported by a determined campaign to achieve by voluntary action a large reduction in the rate at which prices and costs are increasing, including wage settlements. I know this will be extremely difficult in an economy like ours which is so exposed to external influences. In the meantime I would hope that both industrial and labour groups will be considering and discussing among themselves and discussing with governments how best such a campaign might be organized to preserve Canada's competitive position in the world.

We must of necessity restrain our demands on the capital market. It is essential that we hold our government borrowing requirements next year, apart from what may be needed from time to time for exchange purposes, to a total less than we are borrowing in this fiscal year. To accomplish this objective it will be necessary to reduce some of our lending operations such as those for housing loans of a type that could be financed in the market. Our specific plans in this respect will be worked out in the capital budgets of the various agencies involved. Our objective is clear and I am confident that it will be attained.

At present the proper course remains to proceed with the tax measures I placed before the house in June. The removal of the sales tax on production machinery and equipment is an important measure to help achieve lower costs of production, and investment in such machinery and equipment is in fact a high priority objective. The removal of the sales tax on drugs does not involve a major loss of revenue and is part of a concerted plan to bring down the cost of drugs in Canada. It should go ahead now.

I wish to turn now to the Kennedy round, Mr. Speaker. The house will recall that I did not have an opportunity in the debate, nor when this question was debated, to put forward the comments of the Minister of Finance.

First, as to the tariff reductions perhaps I might begin by giving an indication of the scope of these reductions. Canada undertook to offer concessions in the Kennedy round equivalent in terms of their impact on trade to those offered to Canada by other participants. The tariff concessions made by Canada cover about $2.5 billion worth of imports, of which almost $2 billion come from the United States. On these imports we cut the average incidence of our tariff by about 25 per cent. The reductions will be found in virtually every sector of the Canadian tariff. In a negotiation of this scope it was necessary, and in my view desirable that we should examine and consider reductions in virtually every item, just as our trading partners were considering reducing each one of their tariffs.

Apart from a few industries such as textiles and footwear, rates of duty higher than 20 per cent ad valorem will now be exceptional. Producers enjoying such rates of protection should realize that they are being left in a specially protected position. This was done because it was evident either that greater reductions would create intolerable problems of import competition and unfair burdens of adjustment or that other countries were not offering meaningful tariff reductions on these products.

Rates of duty on final manufactures will generally be about 17½ per cent to 20 per cent, as compared with the 22½ per cent to 25 per cent rates now in effect. Duties on production machinery and other producers' equipment will generally be 15 per cent and there will be a new procedure established for relieving Canadians of duty on such machinery not available from Canadian sources. For intermediate products, rates will range downward from 15 per cent, while many basic materials will be free or close to free.

The reduction of duty on materials, intermediate products and machinery will, of course, be of assistance to those manufacturers who now have a lower level of ad valorem protection for their own products. This means, of course, that these manufacturers will still retain significant effective protection, that is, protection on the actual value added in Canadian production. In a number of important sectors the reductions made in the Canadian tariff reflect recommendations made by the Tariff Board in recent reports on sectors of the tariff schedules which had been referred to the board.

That is all I would like to say at this stage, Mr. Speaker, about the scope of the tariff undertakings given by Canada. Perhaps I might say a word now about how the government went about formulating its tariff offers. We had a number of considerations in mind which I would like to summarize.

First, and most obvious, we wanted to secure every worth-while tariff reduction in other markets that was put on the table by our negotiating partners and we knew we had to pay for each one. Our trading partners, who are just as tough bargainers as are Canadians, would ensure that they got as good as they gave. But we had to be sure that we gave no more than we got. That is what my colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon), called in his budget speech of 1964 the "principle of full reciprocity".

Second, we wanted to ensure a reasonable degree of balance and reciprocity for each major sector of our economy and for each major region. That, I think, we achieved.

Third, we wanted particularly to help our secondary industries break out of the confines of this small national market, and this we could do by getting reductions in other countries' tariffs and by cutting the costs of producing in Canada for that new and expanding market. That is why the tariff cuts on raw materials, semi-finished goods and production machinery are so important a part of the Kennedy round settlement. Indeed, it is my view, Mr. Speaker, that we are emerging from this negotiation with a much more rational tariff structure, but this was possible only because of the opportunities opened up by a major tariff negotiation.

Fourth, we wanted to give the consumers of Canada, that is, all of us, the advantages flowing from greater international competition and the resulting lower prices. I need hardly add how important this will be in assisting to control the cost of living.

Let me say a word about timing, about when we propose to implement the tariff changes. In the near future I propose to table a resolution to implement the tariff reductions. It will set out in detail and precisely all the changes in rates we agreed to except for those relating to chemicals which will be introduced later.

As I said in a public announcement at the end of June, some concessions will be introduced in one step and the effective date proposed is January 1 next. These concessions to be implemented in one step are: machines classified under item 42700-1; cigars, cigarettes, cut tobacco and alcoholic beverages; certain items in the following sectors—oilseeds, oilcake meal and vegetable oils, wire and wire products, and lumber and lumber products, some tropical products, and a few other products where staging would be undesirable or impracticable.

Changes in the chemicals and plastics schedule will be introduced in a single step as well, but not until July 1, 1968.

Concessions which are not implemented in one step will be staged over a period not exceeding four years beginning January 1. We have undertaken that with respect to these concessions the difference between the base rate and the final rate will be reduced by not less than one-fifth on January 1 of each year, starting January 1, 1968. This does not preclude us from reducing tariffs more quickly, and I am now reviewing our proposals in detail to consider what particular problems may make desirable some deviation from staging in five equal instalments.

As to the anti-dumping convention, at present we in Canada provide protection against dumping to producers of all goods of a class or kind made in Canada. That is to say, when an imported product is invoiced at less than the comparable selling price for that product in the country of origin, we apply a dumping duty equal to the difference between the invoice price and the proper value. We give no such protection to producers who have not been able to obtain a "made in Canada" ruling. To obtain such a ruling, Canadian producers must produce an amount equal to at least 10 per cent of domestic consumption of that product. Many Canadian producers with a smaller share of the market are denied protection against dumping. Many others who are not being damaged by dumping get protection they do not need. It can be argued that many Canadian users of materials and other goods have to pay more than they should because of this so-called automatic anti-dumping protection.

The new convention is based on the test of injury or threat of injury arising from dumping, and we are required, therefore, to adopt a system involving an element of judgment as to the impact of dumping. This should not preclude us from providing protection against injurious dumping quickly and effectively. In agreeing to proceed on this basis we will be getting major improvements in the United States anti-dumping procedures which in the past have given rise to a great deal of harrassment of United States importers of Canadian goods.

The new convention will lay down rules within which all signatories must operate and clearly Canada will need new legislation by mid-1968 to conform with it. We have now established a committee under the chairmanship of Mr. George Glass, the first vice chairman of the Tariff Board, to receive representations from all interested parties and to hold hearings on the kind of legislation that might best meet our needs within the terms of the new convention. We have already had a good deal of consultation with the industries and industry associations most likely to be concerned. When these representations have been considered we will bring proposals before the house seeking the necessary changes in Canadian legislation. That will provide an occasion for a detailed examination of this important issue.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the tariff reductions agreed to by Canadian negotiators in the Kennedy round, involving as they do a significant element of rationalizing of our tariff structure and associated as they are with a decisive move to freer trade by the other great trading countries, will recommend themselves to Canadian producers as a just payment for the gains Canada will make in foreign markets. Canada emerges from the Kennedy round with a degree of moderate protection where protection is required but without excess protection. That is what is necessary for Canada in this increasingly competitive free-world economy.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) I was reminded of the days when I was going through law school. In the courses on Roman law one was always coming across the phrase "pater familias"—the good, prudent man. It seems to me that the Minister of Finance has been working hard to burnish up an image of himself as a pater familias. But we are not at all deceived because we know the record of performance in some of the things he has been trying to do. Some of the difficulties he faces may be likened to a hair shirt which he and his colleagues fashioned but which they are asking others to wear on their behalf.

The minister assumed a rather sanctimonious air. He talked about the efforts being made to prune next year's estimates. I saw a press report a couple of days ago which said that the minister had effected reductions of about $1 billion in his colleagues' estimates. It said that the anticipated budgetary deficit for next year was $1,250 million and that when the minister looked at this figure he is said to have considered that $250 million might be tolerable.

The report did not explain that what is now going on has been the experience of every minister of finance. Now is the time of year when government ministers are called before Treasury Board committees where their departmental estimates are examined and considered in relation one to another. This process continues until the estimates are finally settled upon and printed in the blue book. It is not a new process.

A figure of a $600 million reduction was mentioned with respect to the estimates. All I can say is that it is fluff which has been pared. It is an old and established practice that each department, knowing its preliminary estimates will be cut back, puts everything down on paper. Then, following consultation with the Minister of Finance and other Treasury Board officials, the more valid options are chosen. These make up the final estimates.

What we will want to see is a comparison between next year's estimates and this year's expenditures. That is the crucial point because the main difficulty facing Canada is the monetary requirements of the government in competition with those of industry. I will return to that point, but unless the minister can show that with due adjustment for an increase in population, together with built-in statutory increases for certain expenditures, he is actually reducing expenses then all his talk is worth nothing.

To be fair I must say that all of the responsibility cannot be loaded on the shoulders of this minister and the government. As he quite rightly indicated, the municipalities and provinces combined spend far more than does the federal government. I know the dilemma which the minister faces with regard to budgetary control because only about 35 per cent of federal government expenditures come within budgetary control.

The dominion-provincial agreements cover tax transfers. These are increasing. They are deemed to be part of the monetary requirements of the federal government. Other statutory expenditures contain escalation clauses. Many social welfare payments are fixed by statute, and the obligation to meet them is beyond the control of the Minister of Finance. But having said that, I still believe that the Minister of Finance has a primary role to play in controlling his colleagues and setting the example for the rest of the country.

In receiving this second slice of the 1967 budget without any budgetary proposals we are in a position analagous to that of 1966 except that in 1966 we had a mini-budget in December. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is now almost impossible to refer back to the budgetary proposals of the budget we are supposed to be discussing. The situation has changed drastically since the budget was introduced.

The budgetary proposals of last June were almost stand-pat. I was reminded of a cartoon showing a cat treading upon eggs. The minister was walking very delicately, evidently afraid to upset what he considered to be a position of uneasy equilibrium. Today he is attempting to tread even more lightly on the self-same delicate eggs.

I wish to indicate that I am not going to make any reference to the information on the Kennedy round negotiations which the minister has given to us. That can be more adequately dealt with by my colleagues. Instead I want to talk primarily about the financial difficulties in which the country finds itself.

First I want to say I will not emulate so many members of the Treasury Board who, when in opposition in 1961 and 1962, went around preaching doom and gloom. I remember the rather notorious and damaging speech made at that time by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) in Halifax, in which he likened the financial position of Canada to that of a sinking ship. We know the results which such talk has on the economy and financial strength of the country, and to indulge in such talk now would be a great disservice to our country's financial position.

I do not say that our financial position is beyond repair, but it certainly could worsen. We must consider the unbridled surge forward in the cost of living. A budgetary deficit of $750 million is nothing to be sneezed at, but all we get from the minister is a pious hope that the deficit will work out at something below $750 million. Will it be $650 million? I am afraid I do not share the minister's rather sanguine hopes about a limitation on the budgetary deficit of only $750 million.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member a question? Has he overlooked what I said, that our aim was to balance the budget in national accounts terms?

Mr. Lambert: Frankly that is no explanation. You can talk about national accounts terms and other financial phrases to the public, but it is meaningless. The public wants to know who is responsible. If the accounts had been based on that basis of national accounts in earlier years the figures would not have been the same as those used by members of the present government when they were casting aspersions on the financial record of performance by the previous government. Let us not have any illusions about that. It really is a discussion about apples when really oranges are under consideration.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Let us look at some of the problems facing the country at the present time. There has been a diminution in the rate of capital investment. In my opinion this is the most important factor which we must consider. We would be able to advance the economy and assume these social welfare burdens, and many people believe these programs are desirable and absolutely essential, if the economy of this country was in a healthy state. I do not care how many pension programs, medicare or health schemes or other similar programs we can devise; if the Canadian economy is not able to support them in comfort, permitting growth both in population and economic development, they must be deferred or cut back. There is no sense in piling these burdens onto a sick economy. The economy simply cannot carry them. We are only deluding the people by attempting to do so.

It would have been good to hear the minister give us some indication this afternoon of the efforts the government is taking to encourage and increase our level of productivity. In my opinion many of the other things occupying the attention of governments and individuals are relatively minor in importance. The maintenance and the increase of the productivity of Canadian endeavour is of the greatest importance to the maintenance of our competitive position. Let us have no illusions about the results of the Kennedy round tariff agreements. In the short run they are going to create some grave dislocations in certain sectors. Many Canadian industries will have to sharpen their pencils if they want to remain competitive. We need not talk about production or investment of capital and other programs to encourage industry if the products of the investment or the industry remain unsold or unconsumed. Let us make sure we are able to dispose of the goods at the end of the line of production and that we are able to do so at a profit.

The minister spoke of an increase in the gross national product in current dollars of about 7 per cent in comparison with last year. However, with the present rate of increase in the cost of living this really means an increase of about 2 per cent in constant dollars. One merely has to look at the tables of the consumer and wholesale price indices to see the fantastic and unbridled increase in the cost of living in recent months. The minister was quite right when he said this was one of our major problems. Inflation at this time could be one thing that might trigger a flight of confidence from the Canadian dollar and a flow of capital from Canada which would result in the loss of that investment of foreign capital we sorely need. There would be an outflow of foreign investment and confidence in Canada would suffer a serious blow.

According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics the cost of living increased from January to August by 4.9 points, that is from 146 to 150.9. In August of 1966 the figure was 144.9, so there has been a six-point increase in the consumer price index in the last 12 months. The cost of food is of great importance to the individual, and the figures show that the cost has increased from 148.1 to 151.2. We have just concluded a debate in respect of the cost of shelter or housing. We observe an increase since August, 1966 from 163.6 to 171.8. In order to make some comparison, the figure for 1963 for this category was 150. In other words, since this government took office the cost of shelter has gone up by almost 22 points or about 15 per cent. Is it any wonder we have a housing crisis in Canada? People are beginning to believe that the government has buried its head in the sand to avoid seeing the pressures and difficulties the average Canadian citizen faces in respect of housing.

It is not my intention to refer in detail to the increase in interest rates. There was a slight decline last spring which allowed the formula under the Bank Act to be triggered, but since then we have seen a continuous rise in interest rates. By looking at the average figure referred to in the formula for the National Housing Act interest rate, being the average rate on government longs, shall we say, which was 6.10 in the month of September, we can see the position we have now reached.

This is not the only government that has difficulty in regard to bond issues. Conversion loan and cash money requirements are at an all-time high. I remember the late member for Welland standing in this house at the time of the conversion loans, assisted by his colleagues in the opposition of the day, castigating the then minister of finance because interest rates were 4¼ per cent, 4½ per cent and 4¾ per cent. Now we have effective rates which are over 6 per cent. Well. Let us consider for a moment Canada savings bonds. They have now moved out of the category of true savings bonds. They are now to be used as a form of annual conversion loans because there is no limit on the amount that can be invested or converted. What are the interest rates? Effectively around six per cent.

The city of Ottawa is another example of a level of government having difficulty in financing its expenditures. Its council called for tenders last week as part of a refinancing program. The civic authorities were astounded when the best offer was 7.4 per cent. Government agencies such as Quebec hydro, Ontario hydro and similar bodies are absolutely dependent on bond issues. This year they are paying rates of up to 7 per cent.

The minister said there were high interest rates in the United States. It is strange that it was not disclosed during the housing debate that the average rate in the United States in respect of loans for homes is 6.4 per cent whereas we have gone to 8¼ per cent as the ceiling under the National Housing Act. Of course, the rate on conventional loans has gone up to 8½ per cent.

An hon. Member: It is 9 per cent.

Mr. Lambert: An hon. members says it is 9 per cent. Well, I am not conducting an auction today. But the rate is certainly 8½ per cent, and if the additional one eighth were brought into the mortgage it would mean an additional 2 per cent over all. It was quite possible last year to negotiate a mortgage at an interest rate of 10 per cent in respect of the total mortgage.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask whether he is not aware that short-term interest rates are higher in the United States than they are here?

Mr. Lambert: Yes. I am also aware that certain levels of income tax are higher in the United States than they are in Canada.

Mr. MacEwan: The perfect squelch.

Mr. Sharp: That is completely irrelevant.

Mr. MacEwan: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Lambert: There is no reason why interest rates at all levels in the United States should be lower than they are in Canada. On the other hand, all the income tax rates in the United States need not be lower than they are in Canada.

Mr. Sharp: There is no relationship between the two.

Mr. Lambert: No, but there is room for difference.

The government has need of funds for the coming year. It needs these funds for refinancing. I trust that the minister's colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, will be able to indicate, because I believe this is crucial—perhaps this information appears in the budgetary papers but I was not able to put my finger on it—precisely how much money will be required for refinancing, in other words, for conversion purposes.

Mr. Sharp: It is all in the budgetary papers.

Mr. Lambert: I hope the minister will be able to indicate the precise amount of cash that will be required and also what the government expects to get out of Canada savings bonds in the way of new money in the coming year. It is Canada which must provide the financing requirements of the government and industry. We shall want to know the cash requirements, the net increase through Canada savings bonds, the refinancing requirements, the new cash requirements of the provinces and the capital needs of industry.

We know that some industries overborrowed in the past year because they learned their lesson in May of 1966 when money was so tight. Certainly there has been, shall we say, an overdemand on the monetary market by some corporations which are not going to be caught short again. They have borrowed in order to put themselves in a position of liquidity, as it is said by some. They have no difficulty carrying these additional funds because they can make money on short-term investments. Short-term paper is now paying such a rate that the carrying costs for the corporations of the extra money they were able to borrow and put away is exceedingly small.

I have read one commentary which I think is quite helpful at this time, although I must say I cannot agree with some parts of Mr. Meyer's article. I cannot agree with some of his statements because it seems to me he is able to engage in, shall we say, rationalization after the event. Mr. Meyer neglects some of the factors which were in existence at the time certain decisions were taken. He is now able to rationalize from hindsight. In any event, let us see what he says in an article which appeared in a recent issue of the Monetary Times, that for October, 1967. Mr. Meyer's article is headed, "Money And The Economy. Will Government Adjust?" I quote from the article:

> The slower rate of business activity this year would normally have been countered by monetary expansion and an accompanying reduction in the cost of money. The money supply is 11 per cent greater than a year ago.

We know that the Bank of Canada increased the money supply in the past year. I will come to that point later. The article continues:

> But though the cost of money did recede briefly through the spring, it has since risen to levels reached last year when the squeeze was at its worst.

According to Mr. Meyer the cause is, of course, the manner in which governments are pre-empting the market. In this article Mr. Meyer says:

> Net new government issues in the first quarter—

The first quarter of 1967.

> —amounted to $771 million, an increase of $545 million from a year ago. Net new corporate issues—

This is the telling point.

> —amounted to $547 million, a decline of $313 million.

I would say there are two reasons for this situation. First, in the early part of 1966 there was an effort by corporations to borrow themselves into a position of liquidity, as I have indicated. In addition, there is less requirement for money this year by corporations because there is a decline in capital investment. The incidence of higher taxes, higher costs and lower profits will always discourage capital investment. Mr. Meyer continues:

Both trends—the rise in government borrowing and the decline in corporate borrowing—have persisted.

I am sure that if the figures for the second quarter of 1967 were available to us we would find there has been a continuation of those trends. Then Mr. Meyer says:

Corporations were expected to withdraw from the market following increases in capital investment averaging 16 per cent a year over the past three years. There was room for more government borrowing. This condition, however, can't be expected to last indefinitely. Interest rates must come down and corporate borrowers attracted back to the market before any significant new expansion can be set in motion.

Mr. Meyer then says that the possibility of any reduction in government demand for funds over the next year, possibly two, is remote. Interest rates in this period will be about the same. Mr. Speaker, I am worried about the continuing dampening down of corporate investment in capital projects, which will continue. There are some indicators right now which show that I am not far off the mark in making this statement, because we hear reports that the amount of work in architects' and consulting engineers' offices is very small.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe that at this time members are entitled to 40 minutes in which to speak. If I remember the time rightly, I rose at about ten minutes after four. I believe, Mr. Speaker, you will find that this question is dealt with in standing order 31 (1).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): My decision was based on standing order 58 (7) which reads as follows:

No member, except the Minister of Finance, the member speaking on behalf of the opposition, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, shall speak for more than 30 minutes at a time in the budget debate; provided that 40 minutes shall be allowed to the mover of a subamendment.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: I apologize to Your Honour. I am grateful to the house for giving me this time but I must say that the error arose as a result of a consultation which I had with Mr. Speaker last night. I must conclude that the present Speaker and the former Speaker were jointly in error.

I should like to summarize what I have said previously and to bring my remarks to a conclusion. I feel that the prime purpose of this budget and of the activities of all governments must first of all be aimed at an increase of productivity. By increase of productivity we mean a better return for the dollars spent. This means, as the minister indicated, an exercise in restraint in wage demands and equally in the pursuit of profits. You cannot ask one sector of the economy to limit itself and not the other. Unless all Canadians exercise this restraint we will be committing economic suicide.

This is particularly true at a time when we are so vulnerable during the coming into force of the tariff changes resulting from the Kennedy round of negotiations. The government must implement cut-backs. We can only produce so many goods and services. The pie is no bigger than Canadians are willing and able to make it. We must be prepared to increase our productivity and by that I mean net productivity in the constant dollars, not in the 5 or 10 per cent annually inflated dollar. There must be cut-backs by governments at all levels and those cut-backs should be arrived at by the establishment of priorities tending to encourage productivity, in education, in the training of personnel and in those facilities tending to increase productivity. I will have something to say about some of the other activities in this country and some of the discussions which have taken place which are tantamount to the apocryphal story of theologians going through the exercise of determining how many angels could dance on the head of a pin. It seems to me these discussions are useless in facing and solving the problems that are before us today.

As I said earlier, we must concentrate on the health of the body economic, and unless we turn our primary attention to that all else will fall by the wayside. What purpose is there in working to construct a brand new constitution for a country that is sick economically? What is the purpose of setting up a system of social welfare and social legislation on a body economic that cannot support it? It seems to me that we must first establish these priorities. I am glad to say that the minister has been finally converted to the idea of priorities. This has been advocated by some of my colleagues and myself for a number of years. I will not claim pride of authorship, but first let us consider those matters which tend toward increasing the productivity of the country. Let us put first things first.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are times when it is a virtue to get to the point, and I trust I shall make my point without trespassing long on the time of the house. Speaking for myself and my sons, let me say that any person who seeks to destroy Canada is an enemy.

[Translation]

Countries have been doomed because their people lacked the will to survive, because they lacked the courage to fight back against evil. In my lifetime I have seen countries succumb to a few fascist rogues, and other countries succumb to a few communist rogues. I do not intend to see Canada succumb to a few separatist rogues.

[English]

My country is Canada—sea to sea. Every inch of it is mine by birthright and without fences. Within these vast borders there must never be a limit to our search for justice, for generosity, for accommodation. But no part of my country is negotiable, least of all for me the beautiful province of my birth and my boyhood. Members of my family have died overseas for Canada. How can I betray her at home or permit the dismemberment of "mon pays merveilleux"?

[Translation]

Our beloved Canada is not a mere accident of geography; it is a spiritual adventure that transcends both language and race. She is worthy of being possessed only by the large of heart. "Mon jardin, ce n'est pas un jardin, c'est la plaine!" We must live with the separatists, those "little foxes" whose ambition is to carve themselves, right in the midst of us, empires to the measure of their pettiness, but they must not be permitted to destroy our ancestral heritage.

[Mr. Lambert.]

[English]

Perhaps we of this centennial parliament have the duty now to declare that we stand firmly on guard for Canada. We stand on guard for all Canadians, present and future. We are the trustees of diverse traditions, of priceless resources and to no lesser extent are we the trustees of freedom for all Canada's sons. Nobody doubts that in the proper way we can produce a better constitutional instrument than we now possess. No one must doubt our resolution and determination to continue as a Canadian sovereignty.

[Translation]

The contest between love and hate—between faith and doubt—is not something new. There always have been separatists among us—those who hate the idea of a Canada not in their own image. Victory for the grand design must be won anew in each generation. May I refer to the words of one of Canada's great heroes of the past. Laurier speaking in French at Quebec city on St. Jean Baptiste day 1889 said this:

> Our country is not confined to the territory overshadowed by the citadel of Quebec; our country is Canada—the fertile lands bordered by the Bay of Fundy, the Valley of the St. Lawrence, the region of the Great Lakes, the Prairies of the West, the Rocky Mountains, the lands washed by the famous ocean where breezes are said to be as sweet as the breezes of the Mediterranean. Our fellow countrymen are not only those in whose veins runs the blood of France.—As far as I am concerned, loudly do I proclaim it, those are my fellow countrymen. I am a Canadian.

I love Canada and while many millions like me live, she will never be deserted nor betrayed.

[English]

A few months later, speaking in English Sir Wilfrid said the following in Toronto:

> In the face of this universal distrust, the duty of the Liberal party is to promote, or rather to continue, the policy of hope and exertion for mutual respect and confidence. In the face of disintegration, if disintegration be simply hinted at, it is the duty of the Liberal party to stand firm by the principle of confederation. I do not believe certainly that confederation is the last word of Canada's destiny. It can be looked at simply as a transient state; but whenever the change comes, the change must be a step forward and not a step backward... I am a Liberal and I believe in movement, in progress; but I do not believe in inconsiderate changes... Still less would I be of those who clamour for a constitutional change, because the state of things that now exists comes into conflict with their personal prejudices and opinions.
> If any there are amongst my fellow countrymen of French origin who have ever dreamed of forming themselves into a small community of Frenchmen on the banks of the St. Lawrence, I am not one of them. I am not one of them, I say—let my words be heard by friend or foe.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Let me refer, Mr. Speaker, to one of the great heroes of our own time, Vanier, whose presence amongst us served almost as a benediction. In his message delivered on July 1, 1966, which you will remember was mainly to the young people of Canada, he suggested that we examine our national conscience and say whether or not in 1967 we will as a nation be able to stand up under the world's scrutiny. He never ceased to think of us as a nation and as a family.

Let us never forget his challenge of New Year's day, 1967. He called upon Canadians to forget past bitterness and to build a future "which will make the progress of this century seem pale by comparison". Before his simple prayer that we may all go forward hand in hand, he said:

> Canada owes it to the world to remain united because no lesson is more badly needed than the one our unity can supply, the lesson that diversity need not be cause for conflict but, on the contrary, may lead to richer and nobler living.

According to the book of Ecclesiastes, the preacher informs us that to everything there is a season: there is a time to be born and a time to die, a time to kill and a time to heal, a time to break down and a time to build up. The question has been put: Do we now rise as a country or do we call it quits?

For inspiration, Mr. Speaker, I look to our old parliamentary colleague, Cy Kennedy, who epitomizes for me duty, steadiness, sacrifice and courage. All we must do is to ask what is best for Canada and follow that course fearlessly. For me the response is easy. I am not one of those sophisticates ashamed to declare love of country. Indeed, perhaps it is in the moment that Canadians declare their gut loyalty to Canada that we become a nation.

[Translation]

I love Canada and while many millions like me live, she will never be deserted nor betrayed.

[English]

I am particularly pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the new Order of Canada bears as its motto the words "desiderantes meliorem patriam"—"desirers of a better country". We are embarked on a great pilgrimage of faith in search of a better country. I am convinced that in Canada today many of our people still believe in that Lord of Hosts of the Hebrew prophets who brings down the loftiness of man and who humbles his haughtiness, who entered into a spiritual covenant to lead those who chose to be his people into the new Jerusalem.

The city of God is not built up on earth by the work of our hands alone. It descends from God out of heaven to those that cry out. That great student of sociology and culture—yes, and of history—Christopher Dawson, speaks of a ladder having been let down out of heaven by which mankind can escape.

What I urge is that in the agony of our self-examination as a country—one nation, two nations, a hundred nations, it matters not for we, like the world, are legion—we never lose sight of the affirmation that "He shall have dominion from sea to sea". If this is so, if in Canada He truly is King, then we have no fear. Who in Canada who believes at all can deny that we are all brothers? Who could deny at this point in our history, which is full of violence, wars and rumours of war, that some group of human beings somewhere must call a new world into existence based upon genuine brotherhood if only to help redress the balance of the old? What better place to start than in Canada.

I am not a wholly impractical fellow. I was a soldier, I was trained in economics, my profession is the law—all pretty mundane preoccupations. Yet I am absolutely convinced that the way of man is not in himself. Let us never overlook the mysterious and unpredictable aspect of history. I believe that already hidden spiritual forces are at work. Our sense of failure and helplessness in this land of plenty at this historic juncture of history compels us to reach out into the darkness for the hand that will guide Canada into a new starting point of progress.

Canadians of both tongues must now march forward together into the second century with heads high and with arms joined like our Expo symbol, in faith, in hope and in love. On this plane there can be no defeat for our nation nor any human being in it.

With the help of Him who will keep our feet from falling—long live Canada.

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to say a few words in the budget debate, an opportunity for which I have waited since June 1.

First, I want to say I am more than surprised at the conduct of the government when the session resumed a week ago on Monday, September 25. It was disgraceful that there was not even a corporal's guard of ministers in the house at that time to support the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). I wondered whether the Prime Minister had forgotten to tell his ministers that the session was reconvening on that day and as a result they were all absent.

I also wondered, Mr. Speaker, whether by any chance those of the Liberal party on the front benches who form the government at the moment thought that because their arch-enemy, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), was not in the house the Conservative party had decided to lay down and play dead. If they thought that, then I can assure them they have another think coming. Believe me, the spirit that the right hon. gentleman fostered in this party lives on and it is going to live on with our new leader.

To return to the budget, I should like to say a few words particularly about the amendment to the amendment which actually is the topic we are discussing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I thought there was an understanding that we would carry on with the budget debate today. At least, that is what was intimated to me.

Mr. Fane: And to me, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Does the house agree that we go back to the question under study?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Fane: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment to the amendment is what we are talking about now. When the budget was first presented by the minister on June 1 it was still something to talk about. I wrote a newspaper item which was distributed in western Canada. At that time I said:

> On June 1st the Minister of Finance took some hours to present his latest budget which, as far as I can see, doesn't mean a thing except perhaps another increase in the cost of living which is already becoming evident. I have not read one favourable comment about this budget in any of the Canadian newspapers nor have I heard anybody, other than Liberal members of parliament, with any good to say of it. It certainly doesn't do anything good for the residents of the prairie provinces.

[Mr. Fane.]

I still maintain that that is correct. I do not intend to talk much more about the budget because my hon. friend from Edmonton West, who is a neighbour so far as constituencies are concerned and a friend, has said just about everything that can be said about it from the financial point of view. I did want to talk about agriculture, Indian affairs, veterans affairs, defence, housing, the cost of living, foreign affairs and a few other matters, but I cannot do so in the 30 minutes each that it has been decided we are to be allowed. This time I must confine myself to the Department of Transport which needs to be discussed most urgently. Don't let anybody ever think that this is not a national issue. I want to talk about a particular case where the Department of Transport certainly has made an awful mess of things.

It is lucky that the former minister of transport had the wisdom, avarice, or whatever you want to call it, to kick himself upstairs by taking the appointment of chairman of the new Canadian Transport Commission before I was able to participate in this debate or I should have had some harsh things to say to him. I cannot make my remarks as bad as I should like to seeing that he is not here to defend himself. But he will know what I think by what I say. I hope that if I get really warmed up I do not lapse too much into western prairie slang. I hope that you will not call me to order, Mr. Speaker.

I want to say, first, what a disgrace it is for the former minister of transport to create a job for himself, establish the rules for it through Bill C-231 which was passed by the house, decide that the chairman of the board should get $40,000 a year, which is more than the Prime Minister gets, and then take himself off like the witches of Macbeth. They made the air to vanish into but they did not create $40,000 to await them at the end of their vanishing act. This does not seem right to me. The Prime Minister could have appointed the former minister to the Senate if he wanted to get rid of him. Now, of course, we have the former minister of national defence to finish the job of wrecking the transportation systems of this country and, God knows, he made one gosh awful mess of the Department of National Defence. We will all rue the day he did that. He will probably finish the job that the former member for Pickersgill began with the Department of Transport. I did not make a mistake when I said the member for Pickersgill. Politically he represented the constituency of Bonavista-Twillingate, but to my mind the first statement is correct.

When I criticize transportation in this country I do not wish to include Air Canada because they are doing a pretty wonderful job except for one thing. They do not operate enough aircraft in and out of Edmonton any more. They have given Edmonton the go-by. I hope that I cannot lay that entirely at the door of the former minister of transport, though he may have had a finger in that pie.

We have troubles with the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways which are deliberately destroying the services that they are supposed to provide for the people of Canada. Services are reduced and costs increase, as all other costs have.

Today I complain about a spur line being built from Fort Saskatchewan to a government subsidized Imperial Oil fertilizer plant six miles south of Redwater. The line is supposed to be in a designated area and is 12½ miles long. It has been possible to build this line because of clause 77 on page 66 of Bill No. C-231, which says that railway companies may build a spur line 20 miles long without coming to parliament. I believe they need an order in council only. Before this bill, six miles of line was the limit.

The Canadian National received permission to build this spur line which runs through the oldest settled area in Alberta. It runs through the finest farm land in Canada in what is now called the Fort Saskatchewan settlement. It used to be called the Lamoureux settlement. The original settlers there were called Lamoureux, the same name as Mr. Speaker. But they have been out there for so long that they are not called Lamoureux any more. The name is pronounced Lammory now. That is what they are called and that is the name of the settlement.

This settlement was started before the survey of western Canada. The lots are mainly river lots because the highway was the river then. The farms in Quebec too ran back from the river. But these farms are a little bigger than normal because in those days there was more room and there were fewer people in the west. Most river lots are about 300 acres each. There are quite a few of them and they extend for a matter of perhaps three or four miles. However, the railway got authority on April 27 to build a spur line there. On April 28 it wrote letters to all the farmers concerned, 23 in all, many of whom are descendants of people who settled on this land more than 100 years ago. This is not very long in the life of Ontario or Quebec but it is a long time in the life of what is now Alberta.

I said that this letter was written to these people by the Canadian National Railways land agent in Edmonton on April 28. On May 2 the surveyors were out, before most of these people had got their letters telling them that their land would be expropriated. "Expropriated" was the word used but the company did not expropriate the land; confiscated it. When a child of the government, a Crown corporation, can go into the oldest farming district in a province and drive a path right through the finest farming country in Canada we have indeed reached an unenviable point in our history. When I say that this is the finest farming land in Canada, I mean it. When other areas were faced with crop failure this year these people harvested between 60 and 65 bushels of wheat to the acre.

The railway company surveyed the land and decided to go right through the farms. They did not go around the edge of the concession, as it would be called in the east. It went right through at an angle, thus cutting the farms to pieces with the result that they are not worth a darn for farming any more. One man told me his farm has been cut into 14 separate pieces by this spur line. Remember, Mr. Speaker, there has been no real effort made by the C.N.R. to reach any settlement with these farmers. It is really a crime.

This is not the only route the railway could have taken. It could have linked up with the C.N.R. line five miles south of the plant that is being built. It could have gone six miles north into the town of Redwater where the C.N.R. runs. It could have gone eight miles straight west to meet the C.N.R. line at Gibbons. Yet it had to go through all these farms at an angle, thus destroying them. I have a plan here showing the alternative routes. It is available and it can be seen.

Everybody was happy when it was announced that the fertilizer plant was to be built six miles south of Redwater. But this plant also is built on two parcels of land comparable in value with the land which the railway has confiscated and is in the process of destroying. I should like to read a number of letters on this subject though I doubt that I will have time.

I was first informed of what was happening in a letter from a Mr. and Mrs. Keith written on May 17 and received by me on May 25. I at once wrote to the then minister of transport and one month later I received a reply from him, just a brush-off enclosing a letter from the C.N.R. saying they had considered all the alternative routes and decided that this was the only route they could follow because in the future someone might wish to start an industrial area in the land embraced by these river lots.

That, Mr. Speaker, is just plain, ordinary untruthfulness, because the company could have built this line a quarter of a mile north beside the road allowance at the north end of these river lots. It would not have caused any inconvenience really to the people concerned because it would have taken only a right of way 100 feet or 200 feet wide from the north end of their farms.

The company could have paid for this land and the line could then have followed what is called the Victoria Trail all the way out to the plant. I followed this route myself when I went to investigate. It would have been a perfect route. Public relations with the people concerned would have been excellent. The farmers would have been glad to be of service and to allow their land to be expropriated. They would probably have given it to the company if they had had an opportunity. However, the land agent did not go to see them until May 10 after the surveyors had been out on the land for eight whole days.

On receipt of the first letter I did not realize that the work would be started so quickly. I guess I was not given enough information. On July 18 I received a telephone call from the same Mr. Keith at the Fort Saskatchewan settlement. He told me that most of the line had already been bulldozed, that the roadbed was being laid and they were also building a fill across the big coulee that has the Sturgeon river at the bottom. The Sturgeon river is not a very big river. It may be as wide as this chamber at this point which is just before it joins the Saskatchewan river.

The work involved a quarter of a mile of fill. They diverted the river while they laid three or four culverts side by side, each culvert being 16 feet in diameter and 406 feet long, made of quarter inch steel. The fill is 400 feet wide and at least a quarter of a mile long. God knows what it will all cost. I suppose we will never get a true accounting on something like that.

The farmers wrote to many people. They wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), to the then minister of transport and to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene). They also wrote, as did I, to the Board of Transport Commissioners but apparently, they did not have anything to do with the matter. However, the Minister of Agriculture replied in part as follows:

> In any case I am given to understand that the C.N.R. is anxious to reach an amicable and reasonable settlement with all the land owners involved, as far as compensation is concerned.

How in the name of God, Mr. Speaker, can they ever hope after their actions to reach an amicable and reasonable settlement? I would not let them on my place if they were doing that to my farm. I would keep them off in the time-honoured western way with a shotgun and, believe me, I know how to use one. The minister's letter continued:

> I believe that it would now be in your best interests to communicate direct with the railway officials to let them know how much your claim is and what it is based on. I gather that the C.N.R. will not restrict claims to the actual land expropriated.

They jolly well couldn't, Mr. Speaker. Just think of the crops that were destroyed. The minister's letter went on to say:

> They are aware of other damages done to farm lands.

Then came this statement:

> If there is a silver lining in these kind of clouds, perhaps it is in the new crossing of the Sturgeon river that the C.N.R. has had to provide. This should be beneficial to you and your neighbours.

Ye Gods. After I was informed of the situation on July 18 and after I had visited the farmers concerned on Sunday, August 13, I wrote to the Prime Minister on August 14 and informed him of the situation. I told him I could hardly believe that he had been informed of a situation like this, because surely to heaven a man in his position would never allow Canadians in this our centennial year to be treated like these people have been treated.

These people never had a chance to make a deal with the C.N.R. Their land has been confiscated. It reminds me of what could happen in Hitler's era, in the U.S.S.R. or in communist China at the present time. These people's rights were not honoured or respected. Their fences were cut without them being told. Their cattle were allowed to run out into their crops and destroy them. The C.N.R., or whoever the contractors for the spur line are, are going to have one gosh awful bill to settle.

As I have said, they could have built the railway along any one of four other routes. If they had it would not have been 12½ miles that were involved, except for one route which might have been half a mile longer. In any event it would have been along the road allowance, which I understand is called a concession in this part of the country.

It is a shocking thing that this should happen in this country in this day and age when we are so proud and vocal about our freedom and the rights we enjoy. It makes me wonder whose freedom did I go to two wars to protect? Whose freedom was I looking after when I was 34 years in Canada's armed services? It now appears it was not worth a darn looking after the freedom of our private citizens or of land owners.

These people got a letter from the C.N.R. at the beginning of May informing them that their land was going to be expropriated, without any reference to their wishes at all. They were all busy putting in their crops. They could not leave their farming operations to attend to this business, so they hired the services of Farm Surface Rights Consultants Ltd. in Edmonton to look after their interests. The manager of that company appears to be working very hard. He is working on two other similar matters. One is a spur line in Saskatchewan where the people involved have experienced the same thing, and the other is a pipe line from the McMurray tar sands down to the storage place close to the railway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Let him continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fane: I would like to thank hon. members for their consideration in allowing me to complete my remarks. I have here an article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal on September 12 headed, "If You Think You Have Property Rights Try Dealing With The C.N.R." It was written by the wife of one land owner, one of the Lamoureux family whose ancestors first settled at Fort Saskatchewan about 100 years ago. Her husband is a fourth or fifth generation settler there. It reads:

During this centennial year we have heard many officials and dignitaries speak with great gusto on the traditional rights and freedoms enjoyed by the people of Canada. There have been long-winded dissertations on how these have been won by our forefathers.

I draw attention to one aspect of our legal structure where the theory of individual rights is flagrantly ignored. In actual fact, there are laws which are designed to allow individuals the least possible say in matters pertaining to their own property. The laws relating to the expropriation of property for the use of the railroads make a mockery of all those highsounding speeches which I hear.

Yes, I am one of a group of farm men and women who have been trying to get fair treatment from the Canadian National Railways. The manner in which they take possession of property to build a spur has to be lived through to be believed. I'm talking of the one for the new Imperial Oil fertilizer plant near Redwater. We have been living in a fool's paradise, blissfully harbouring the illusion that we had some degree of control over our own land. How innocent can you be?

Here is our experience with railway building:

The official announcement of the fertilizer plant was in all the local newspapers earlier this year. On April 28, we received a letter from the C.N.R. telling, yes, telling us, that a certain part of our land was to be used for the railway right of way. This plan had been registered with the land titles office and was subject to the Expropriation Act, for the sake of expediency.

This railroad was to be in operation by September. No plant of this size comes into being without years of planning, nor the railway which is to service it. Yet we were given no warning nor consideration until April 28, and were expected to say nothing.

On May 4th their real estate agent arrived. My husband was not home so the agent came back at a later date. The agent was then told that all dealing would have to be done through Mr. R. A. Doyle of Farm Service Rights, who had been retained to help protect our interests.

On June 7th, we discovered that our three parcels of land registered in the land titles office had been affixed with the expropriation stamp on May 19th. Later the nine acres were officially registered in the name of the C.N.R., neatly bisecting our three parcels of land into six parcels.

This is nothing more than stealing or confiscation, and those are my own words. The letter then continues:

All this without our knowledge or consent! To our astonishment, we discovered that this could be done quite legally under the C. N. Act. The only thing that remained in any sort of doubt was the price to be paid.

Subsequent legal action resulted in a decision which prevented any obstruction to the building of the railway but allowed the claim for property damage to remain.

Basically what is happening is as follows:

(a) The railroad has the legal right to lay a line right across our property. We have no control, nor the right to disagree.

(b) One hundred and five acres of the finest agricultural land in Canada are being violated for this purpose.

(c) The railroad company can coldly and contemptuously run a railway through a barnyard or 200 feet in front of your home.

(d) Prices offered for this land have been ridiculously low. There is no understanding of the irreparable damage to be inflicted on land of this value.

This plant is being built seven miles south of Redwater, which has railway service.

As I said, the C.N.R. runs through Redwater. The letter then states:

It is in a depressed area and has been given a 5 million grant by the federal government. Not one of us is against industry to further the economy of a district. But we do resent the manner in which it has been done. We all understand English and feel that a dealing in land, rather than a stealing of land, would not have been such an insult to our intelligence and personal rights.

Their date of expediency was well timed, for the month of May is a busy one for farmers. But they have the advantage. Every act concerning railways gives them the legal right to do what they please and to whom. What's more, they use it to the hilt. The construction is going on at another important time to farmers. While the railroad crew is on the land, combining will be at its height. Granaries will be cut off by the right of way. It could mean driving three or four miles to empty a load of grain, because as yet no crossings have been discussed.

When time is of the essence for the railroad, they use the term "expediency"; but when the farmers' bread and butter is involved there is no reciprocal expediency. Such good public relations!

This is not a case of complaining farmers griping about a few acres of land. This could mean you—any property owner from coast to coast.

The present laws are 100 years out of date. A change in these laws would restore my faith in our so-called traditional freedoms. Which one of our so-called leaders has the courage and integrity to use the means at their disposal to see that these laws are examined and changed so that when they speak of human rights, they mean all Canadians in every way.

That is a letter that Mrs. Madeleine Lamoureux wrote to the Edmonton Journal, which published on September 12 of this year.

I should like to take a few minutes to read a letter I received from Mr. Pickersgill in reply to a letter I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). The Prime Minister, being the gentleman he is, wrote me a very nice letter telling me he was compelled to hand over my letter to the Minister of Transport. He said he had done this and had asked for a full report. This reply was apparently dictated on August 30. I received it on September 19 at my home in Vegreville. The letter bore no date stamp from Ottawa or at the post office in Vegreville, so I do not know when it was posted. Mr. Pickersgill informed me that he had received previous representations.

[Mr. Fane.]

With a little more indulgence on the part of hon. members I should like to read this letter to illustrate the kind of attention the minister gave to these situations. This attitude cannot be construed as a political reprisal against these people, because this is the only polling division from which I have not received a majority vote during the last three elections. This division gave a majority to the Liberals. Apparently these people did not realize the champion they had in the Conservative member, probably because they did not make use of his services in time. Because they came originally from Quebec they were probably still voting for Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The former minister of transport went on to say in his letter:

• (5:40 p.m.)

The provision of transportation and communication facilities generally—highways and roads, canals, railway lines and terminals, airports—to a considerable extent involve use of land which might otherwise be devoted directly to agriculture. This also applies to the provision of manufacturing plant and commercial facilities and also to residential developments, all of which tend to use considerable areas of good agricultural potential. This is naturally a matter of some concern to all of us.

"This is naturally a matter of some concern to all of us,"—indeed. The letter goes on to say:

The railway reviewed the various alternatives before arriving at a decision as to the most practical route for this new line.

I would go to the mat with anybody who said that anybody used any judgment in routing that line. The letter continues:

A prime consideration in selection of the route was opportunity afforded to open up for future industrial development a substantial area along the north bank of the North Saskatchewan river —an area well located with respect to the river, situated downstream from and near Edmonton, on good highway, and enjoying good access to certain industrial materials and to western Canadian markets.

I am informed that, bearing in mind this consideration of opening up an area having promise of future industrial use, the conclusion was that the route finally selected is the most practical one, all factors considered. Had the location of the rail route been governed only by location of the industrial project now under construction south of Redwater, a different route somewhat roundabout but involving construction of less new railway line, could well have been chosen.

I am advised by railway officers concerned that a letter was dispatched under date April 27, 1967, to all property owners involved; that survey crews did not go on any private lands until May 2, 1967;—

Incidentally, these people live on a rural route. How long did they get to find out about it? Darn little time. The letter continues:

—and that between May 1 and 9 a railway real estate representative called on each owner (with two exceptions) at least once to open discussions concerning settlement for the lands involved, crossings, etc. The reason for two owners being missed was that property of these owners adjoins the Sturgeon river and it was necessary to establish the total acreage required for the Sturgeon river crossing before opening discussions with owners involved.

Can you figure something like that?

Subsequently, the railway received letters dated May 16 and May 23 from Farm Surface Rights Consultants Ltd. to the effect that this firm had been appointed to represent 16 owners—

That number has now been increased to 21.

—(of the total of 23 owners involved). As recently as August 15 the railway was still awaiting word from Farm Surface Rights Consultants Ltd. as to when the consultants expect to be ready to discuss the matter of settlement (compensation, crossings, any relocation of roads, etc.)

The former minister of transport went on to say:

I am assured that every effort will be made by officers of the railway to effect fair and reasonable settlements with land owners concerned respecting compensation for property required for right of way for this rail line, including severance damage and any other damages that might be caused to land outside the right of way during the construction period. It would appear the next step would be for the land owners or their representatives to agree to meet with the railway officers concerned in Edmonton with a view to working out mutually satisfactory settlements.

Regarding the National Transportation Act, this legislation, which increased from 6 to 20 miles the length of a line which may be constructed without authority of a branch line bill, was introduced in parliament in August, 1966, well before there was any decision respecting construction of this rail line or in fact industrial development in this area.

Did the minister forget the difficulty he had getting that bill through the house? Did he forget the objections made by the opposition and how he callously rode over almost every important amendment proposed from this side of the house? The only one we were able to save concerned the Crowsnest pass freight rates. Has the minister forgotten so quickly, or does he think I can forget a thing like that when he writes a letter like this to me? It just is not very sensible. In a letter that I received either from the minister or the C.N.R.—I shall not take the time of the house to read it now—I was told it was a matter of expense, that they took this route to save money.

They were saving money by not going into Redwater, Gibbons, Scotford or taking a route a quarter of a mile north of the one they have taken. They did not take that route because of the additional expense involved. When they say this to me they make me see red. Another factor involved was the distance they would have to haul the products into Edmonton. It would have been shorter to haul them up to Redwater and along the existing line, out to Gibbons if they wanted to build a spur eight miles long, or down to Scotford where the line would be only five and a half miles long. It would take six miles of line if they were to build a "Y" junction there.

The building of a new railway will cause the Canadian National considerable expense, but they complain of the expense involved in completing the line from Heinsburg in Alberta to Frenchman Butte in Saskatchewan. They haul all the products of the salt factory at Lindbergh back through Edmonton. They haul all the wheat, all the grain and all the cattle back through Edmonton.

They should have completed that little bit of line years ago when they had the roadbed partially built and then abandoned it. Talk about saving expense. Whom do they think they are kidding? Not me, for sure, because I do not kid that easy. I do not believe them. This is a crooked deal. I do not want to get involved in any further explanation, because it is just not right and it is not sensible.

If there had been a practical person on the survey team, in the railway company or in the Department of Transport, surely he would have realized that it would not have hurt to build that railway line a quarter of a mile farther north along the road allowance where it would not have destroyed this good land and would not have spoiled the public relations between the Department of Transport and these farmers and between the Canadian National Railways, the Imperial Oil Company and these farmers.

It is too late now to do anything about it because the right of way is built. I did not know about it in time to protest against it and to have it stopped. However, had I known in time I would have taken a lot more time in the house and nobody would have been allowed to forget about the indignity that these people have suffered through the confiscation, the stealing of their land by Canadian National Railways. As I said before, the C.N.R. is a child of the government, it is a crown corporation. You could perhaps expect someone to come on to your land with a gun or an army and to take it over, but surely we are entitled in Canada to some protection from government agents.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members for their indulgence in allowing me to complete my remarks.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is not in the house to hear these remarks because I was going to tell him that the fact he has made two speeches on the economic state of the nation within the last few days indicates the seriousness of the situation and the inability of the government, more particularly his own inability, to cope with the problems and to provide adequate solutions. One could expect the Minister of Finance to show the Canadian people how to manage their affairs. One could expect him to balance the books of the nation so that all debts would be paid and frugality and good management would produce prosperity and stability.

There are three examples I want to set before the minister which belie these assumptions. Things have gone wrong in our so-called prosperity. First of all let us look at the consumer price index which has shown a steady increase. The D.B.S. figures show that in July, 1965 it stood at 139.5, in July 1966, at 144.3 and in July of 1967 at 150.2. There is no sign of any halt in the increase in the consumer price index.

What this means to Canadians is that this year they are paying $150.20 for purchases for which they would have paid $100 in 1949. The people whom this situation affects most are those in the fixed income bracket, more especially old age pensioners and people who have received pensions from companies. It also strikes very hard at the low income groups. This is the effect which the policies of the government have had on the Canadian economy.

My second point is with regard to unemployment which has been a festering sore on our nation for many years. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics informs us that since 1965 there has been an upward trend in unemployment despite occasional seasonal fluctuations. In July, 1967 the number of unemployed stood at 330,000 in absolute figures. Shown a percentage of the labour force, the number of unemployed has increased steadily since the end of 1965 despite periodic declines. Graphs published by D.B.S. indicate a steady increase in unemployment since the beginning of 1966. In fact the D.B.S. tables, which are adjusted for seasonal variations, vary across the country. In the province of Ontario the number of unemployed is 3.5 per cent. In the Atlantic provinces unemployment is 6.8 per cent, and in the province of British Columbia, the Minister of Labour's home province, unemployment stands at 5 per cent. This is not a very encouraging picture with regard to the unemployment problem in Canada today.

The third item which should be brought to the attention of the government is the fact that interest rates have soared. The government has announced that the N.H.A. rate will be fixed at 8.25 per cent. This means that conventional mortgages will range from 9 to 9.25 per cent. I notice that the Minister of Labour is shaking his head. During the debate he told us that this was the maximum figure and that he hoped the lending institutions would not take advantage of it. He must have read in yesterday's newspapers that the guaranteed investment certificates of the National Trust Company now pay 6.75 per cent. Anyone with business experience must realize that these institutions must have an interest rate differential of at least 2 per cent so as to make a profit.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not know that the standard differential between N.H.A. and conventional mortgages is .5 per cent? This is accepted right across the country.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I dare to challenge the minister's statement. In Toronto alone the margin is at least .75 to 1 per cent. I would be very pleased to show him figures to prove that. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 5, 1967

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

• (2:40 p.m.)

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REGULATION OF CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-157, to amend the Broadcasting Act (cigarette advertising).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is simply to extend the powers of the Broadcasting Act to enable the Board of Broadcast Governors to regulate cigarette advertising in the interests of public health.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING CAPITAL AND BORROWING AUTHORITY, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Industrial Development Bank Act to increase the authorized capital of the bank from $50 million to $75 million; to increase the authorized borrowing authority of the bank to an amount not exceeding ten times the aggregate amount of its paid-up capital and reserve fund; and to make certain other changes in connection with the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR COMMENT ON STATEMENT BY QUEBEC PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

Would the minister care to comment on the statement of the premier of Quebec concerning national unity and the constitutional problems.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Willingly, Mr. Speaker. In the first part of his statement, the premier of Quebec has indicated that the first duty of the people of Quebec was to use their powers under the Canadian constitution as it is. That has always been the position of our government.

Secondly, he has indicated that certain rights of the French-speaking community in Canada should be included in the new constitution and that is exactly the position taken by the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) when he suggested a conference of the provincial premiers at the July 5 meeting on a constitutional Bill of Rights.

On these points we are in perfect agreement with Premier Johnson. We are happy that he is finally coming around to our point of view.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will this statement bring the Minister of Justice to call a federal-provincial conference at the shortest possible time to consider all these constitutional questions?

Mr. Trudeau: That is not, Mr. Speaker, the position of Premier Johnson.

He has indicated that the conference called by Mr. Robarts is most important, and that is also my view. We are most happy that this conference should take place and we hope that, on this occasion, those who for a long time have been uttering vague formulas will finally negotiate on fact. After that we will be happy to meet the provinces to discuss facts, not words.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put another supplementary question. In view of the fact that the minister has just said that the conference called by Mr. Robarts is most important, will he not change his mind and will he not attend as member of the government? Will he not change his mind and will he not personally represent the Canadian government at this conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, Premier Robarts indicated that it was an interprovincial conference. Under the circumstances, it would be difficult for the federal government to be represented there by one of its members since we do not want to interfere with provincial matters. However, we shall be very happy—in fact we have already said so to Premier Robarts—to send senior officials as observers.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, in view of his interpretation of the recent statement made by Premier Johnson.

Is the Minister of Justice aware of the fact that the Quebec premier, contrary to every stand taken by the minister himself in this chamber and elsewhere, is in favour of a particular status for the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sherbrooke is asking the minister whether he is informed of a situation and, as phrased, I do not think that the question is in order.

Mr. Allard: The minister does not seem to be informed at all, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—PROPOSED PLACING OF NUCLEAR MINES ON TURKISH BORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister is in a position to answer the question asked two days ago by my colleague the hon. member for York South. Perhaps I might be permitted to summarize the question. What attitude did the Minister of National Defence take toward the proposal made at the meeting of the nuclear planning group of NATO at Ankara? The proposal called for nuclear mines to be laid on the eastern border of Turkey which is also the border of the Soviet union. Can we be assured that Canada will oppose this proposal in view of our support of the principle of non-proliferation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the nuclear planning group of NATO was established last year in order to permit the allies of the United States to participate in the formation of nuclear strategy. As my hon. friend knows, the ministers of defence of the member countries met at Ankara to consider the progress of a number of studies presently under way. One of those is on the question of atomic demolition mines. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the nuclear planning group is not a decision making body but, rather, makes recommendations to the NATO council.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

The question of the use of atomic demolition mines as defensive weapons has been under consideration in NATO for some time. Because of the geographic situation of Turkey and the nature of the terrain of the Turko-Soviet border the Turkish government has been particularly interested in the possibility of using atomic demolition mines for the purpose of creating obstacles in the way of invading forces.

The nuclear planning group has accordingly been studying this question. Further study is being given to the matter, and the results are to be considered by the next ministerial meeting of the nuclear planning group in the spring of 1968. The Canadian position in connection with this proposal is primarily to assure ourselves that no arrangements would be recommended regarding these defensive weapons which could increase the danger of escalation or involve any form of nuclear proliferation.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Why is it, then, that in 1965 the Canadian government denied any knowledge of this matter and later, when it was brought out, decided that it was classified information?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Then I will ask the Prime Minister a straightforward question. When did this information become unclassified?

WINTER WORKS

QUEBEC—REPORT FOR FLEXIBILITY IN STARTING DATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

I should like to know the reply of the minister of manpower to the representations of the provinces, asking that the starting date for winter works be set by the municipalities rather than by the province.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I contacted Hon. Mr. Dozois who wrote to me on this matter, and I explained that we could not grant his request, because, from the administrative point of view, it would be absolutely impossible for us to control this program if each municipality were left free to choose a suitable date. That was my reply to Hon. Mr. Dozois.

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Speaker, I would have a complementary question.

Am I to conclude that this is just about the answer you would give if further representations were made by the province?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—INQUIRY AS TO MEDIATION EFFORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As warfare in Nigeria reaches a climax, has any effort been made by the government to mediate in an attempt to settle the dispute?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Johnston: Is consideration being given to striking a commonwealth committee which might be of assistance in mediating this dispute?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have had discussions with interested Canadians who have a wide acquaintanceship with persons in Nigeria, and a close knowledge of conditions there. We have held discussions with Mr. Arnold Smith, secretary general of the commonwealth secretariat in connection with this matter, and we have been in consultation with other countries. The hon. member may be assured that the matter is one which engages our active interest.

FISHERIES

PARTICIPATION BY B.C. IN FISHING VESSEL SUBVENTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries with respect to the recent meetings of the federal-provincial British Columbia fisheries committee. Was any indication given at those meetings that the government of British Columbia intends to participate in the fishing vessel regulations which were recently amended by the minister?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I understand that this matter was discussed but no decision was reached.

Mr. Howard: Am I correct in understanding, then, that British Columbia still does not participate in the subventions under the fishing vessel regulations?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—EFFECT OF FLOOD CONTROL WORKS ON COWICHAN RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Can the minister assure the house, as a result of these meetings, that he is aware of what I understand to be the imminent plans of the British Columbia government in connection with flood control on the Cowichan river on Vancouver island? If so, are his officials studying the impact these might have on the sports fishing on this world famous river?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand the provincial authorities in British Columbia have contacted our area director in Vancouver with regard to this project, and our departmental engineers are now studying the effect it may have on local fisheries.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Yesterday, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade), he stated that his department would make special efforts to check the unemployment crisis foreseen this winter in the province of Quebec due to the closing of Expo '67. Could he tell us when these steps will be made public?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall making the statement attributed to me by the hon. member.

Mr. Ricard: Please refer to page 2802.

EXPO '67

LACK OF AGREEMENT TO ENSURE TRANSPORTATION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a related question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has an agreement been made between the minister, the transport unions and Montreal Transportation Commission to ensure transportation to the exhibition site during Expo?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to work out the best transportation arrangements. Unfortunately it has not been possible to resolve this unhappy strike, which is depriving a great many people of the opportunity to see one of Canada's great centennial developments. I met with representatives of all three levels of government in Montreal last Friday to explore the situation, but unfortunately it has not been susceptible to solution so far.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—POSSIBLE SUBSTITUTE FOR AVIATION FUELING SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious implications for air transportation arising out of the strike at Consolidated Aviation Fueling Limited in Toronto, can the minister make a statement on the matter, and in particular tell of any plans the government may have for alternative service in order to prevent the possibility of a shutdown at Malton?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give a detailed report at the moment, but I am hopeful we can manage to maintain the service so it will not be necessary to close the airport facilities.

Mr. Fulton: As a supplementary question, has the minister plans in hand for that eventuality?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have been working on the matter for some time this afternoon, but I do not think it would be particularly useful to disclose what the possibilities might be in the event that there was a shutdown.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government giving consideration to issuing of economic guide lines to those whose activities have the greatest effect on the cost of living, as one means of trying to stem the rapid increase in the cost of living which has taken place during the past three months?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance indicated in his statement yesterday it is essential both for industry and labour groups to consider after consultation with, and I would hope co-operation from, governments how best we can achieve by voluntary action a reduction in the rate at which prices and costs are increasing.

As my hon. friend no doubt knows, this matter has been the subject of an extensive review by the Economic Council of Canada in its third annual report. The council found serious difficulties in the way of guide lines in the form of an "incomes policy", to use the phrase given in the council's report. Nevertheless the whole question of how to achieve the necessary restraints on prices and costs is a matter which is under continuing and active consideration.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. What category of the minister's priorities or guide lines requires the presence next week in Edmonton of four senior ministers, two parliamentary secretaries and a member of parliament to open the Camsell hospital, and are we to take this as an example—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is argumentative.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Finance expressing government policy yesterday in stating in this house, as recorded at page 2809 of Hansard, in the left hand column, about two thirds of the way down:

> I feel that we must—and we will—find some way to bring this inflationary movement under control even, if necessary, by letting the economy develop a little more slack for a year or two while price and cost increases taper off.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker; the minister was suggesting, and very wisely, that all governments, including the federal government, should reduce their demands on the capital market and on available resources. I am sure my hon. friend would approve of that.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister not aware that in ordinary language the expression "develop a little more slack in the economy" means to deliberately allow unemployment to develop?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman should tighten up his question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is argumentative.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

TERMINATION OF WORK AND CONSIDERATION OF ACCOUNTS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell us when the Centennial Commission mandate is to end, and whether the commission's financial statement is to be submitted for approval to the standing committee on public accounts?

Mr. Speaker: I do not see any immediate urgency in the hon. member's question. It seems that it could easily be put on the order paper.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO USE OF ELEVATORS AT CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether it is the intention of the government to completely ignore the terminal at Churchill during the winter months. I am wondering whether the box cars which have accumulated on the railway sidings in Saskatchewan and Manitoba as a result of the strike at the lakehead will be moved to Churchill, or is it the intention to have these cars taken down to the lakehead before the freeze-up?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I announced several weeks ago it is the intention of the Canadian Wheat Board to fill the elevators at Churchill this fall.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR SCREENING OF WINDOWS IN CHAMBER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, notice of which I have given him. In order to prevent any further impairment of the eyesight of members sitting opposite the three large and improperly screened windows on the west side of the chamber, will the minister take action to see that these windows are properly screened as they were previously, and as are the two windows on the southwest side of the chamber?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. Since I am very sure it is in the interests of parliament and the country that the eyesight of hon. members be unimpaired, I will look into the matter immediately.

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE BY RUSSIA OF NORTH PACIFIC SALMON TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries arising out of the question I asked him on Tuesday. In his discussions with the minister of fisheries of the Soviet union did the minister of fisheries for the Soviet union indicate that his country would be willing to join the north Pacific salmon fisheries treaty?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I believe the minister of fisheries for the U.S.S.R., Mr. Ishkor, made it very clear, particularly at a press conference in Vancouver when he said his country is not interested in joining the north Pacific treaty under its present terms.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO REGULATIONS RESPECTING INTEREST DISCLOSURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the minister was good enough to say that he might be able to indicate when he would be in a position to publish the regulations under the interest disclosure section of the Bank Act.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the regulations relating to cost of borrowing provided for in section 92 of the Bank Act and section 80 of the Quebec Savings Banks Act will be published in the Canada Gazette on October 11 and come into effect on October 16. I shall be glad to table these regulations as soon as they are published.

PUBLIC SERVICE

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF GLASSCO COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Could the hon. gentleman advise us when the government intends to put into effect the large number of recommendations of the Glassco report which have not yet been implemented? I ask this question in view of the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Finance in reference to what he called the severe question of inflation, or in his own quaint language "managing the prosperity".

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I shall be speaking in the budget debate on the matter of expenditures of the federal government. I should like to point out that practically all the major recommendations of the Glassco commission have been put into effect by this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I will not be argumentative. I simply ask the hon. gentleman whether he will arrange to accelerate the implementation of those recommendations which would make more credible the efforts of the Minister of Finance in his dealings with industry and labour.

Mr. Benson: I should simply like to say that the government and the civil service have been moving as fast as is humanly possible in the implementation of the recommendations of the Glassco commission. I believe that if someone were to ask Mr. Glassco, his reply would be that he is astonished to find how much has been done.

[Mr. Lambert.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FEDERAL AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA RESPECTING OCCUPATIONAL RETRAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister in a position to tell the house whether the province of British Columbia has as yet signed the agreement with the federal government with regard to the occupational retraining program?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the officials of both governments agree entirely on all the terms of the agreement, and we are now waiting for the signature of the minister of education for British Columbia.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—UN EXPRESSION OF DISAPPROVAL OF RACIAL PRACTICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he advise whether the Canadian UN delegation plans any initiative in the fourth committee of the general assembly designed to translate into more effective and more meaningful action the widespread disapproval of the discriminatory racial practices still being carried out by the illegal Smith régime in Rhodesia?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question would appear to be of considerable scope, and I wonder whether it should be allowed at this time. I notice that the minister appears to be anxious to answer the question. I may be wrong in my estimation of the question, and if this is so I will allow the minister to reply.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am glad to note the interesting conflict between this question and the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO HERRING FISHERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the lower prices for herring meal and herring oil does the minister or his government intend to take steps to ensure that there will be a herring fishery this winter on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Again I wonder whether this is a matter of immediate urgency, and whether it should not be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Howard: If I might be permitted to say so, Mr. Speaker, there is an element of urgency to the question because of the need for the fishermen to know as far in advance as possible what their position might be. At the moment it would appear that it might be a disastrous one unless the government can make a declaration about its position.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): It is not the intention of the Department of Fisheries to curtail in any way the herring fishery during the coming winter.

Mr. Howard: I did not ask that. I asked what is going to be done to assist them.

IMMIGRATION

STEPS TO RECRUIT IMMIGRANTS FROM IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I should like to ask him whether, as a result of the recent declaration of government policy on immigration, he has made any special effort on the part of the department to set up a new group of individuals within or behind the iron curtain or in those areas where the most difficulty has been experienced in trying to recruit or admit people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Korchinski: May I then rephrase the question and ask the minister whether any effort has been made to recruit members within his department to go behind the iron curtain so they may place more people in Canada than normally have been admissible?

Mr. Speaker: The rephrased question also should be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, since I do not see the Minister of Veterans Affairs in his place may I direct this question to the Prime Minister. Would it be at all possible to have copies of the Wood report made available to members of the house before the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs are before the house for consideration?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to find out whether this is possible, and if so it will be done.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabaska): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I apologize for not having raised this matter at the proper time, but I wish to make a correction to Hansard. It appears that I gave the impression in the country that I had available the meat of the Wood report. I hasten to say that I do not have access to the Wood report but only to the evidence which is, I believe, before the committee at the present time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO JOINT SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the recent statement made in Toronto by the Registrar General (Mr. Turner) on the advisability of creating in Canada a federal-provincial control on securities transactions.

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to convene a meeting of the premiers on that matter shortly or to put this item on the agenda of discussions for his meeting with the ten premiers next January?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is referring to a conference to be held next January; in the circumstances, the question could easily be put on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry. In view of the pessimistic report, released on Monday of this week, regarding the future of steel at Sydney, may I ask the hon. gentleman what efforts will be made by the government to assist in this very serious problem?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the recently issued report is now under study. It is my proposal to have a meeting with the senior management officials of DOSCO to see what can be done.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the hon. gentleman what success he has had with his representations to the president of the new transportation board, the former minister of transport, regarding the restructuring of freight rates in the shipment of steel from the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Drury: None as yet, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of Treasury Board. Has the government yet reached a decision on the introduction of legislation to increase the pensions of retired civil servants, as recommended on May 8 by the special joint committee on the Public Service of Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the matter still on the cabinet's agenda?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. minister when he anticipates that a decision will be reached?

Mr. Benson: In due course, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO TENDERS FOR NEW DESTROYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry a question supplemental to the one asked yesterday by the senior member for Halifax, concerning the four new d.d.h.'s. Could the minister allay the fears that exist in this regard, because they are growing and are real in Halifax, by indicating that the tenders for these four new ships will be called this fall.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEwan: "Yes" what?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALBERTA—DEATH FROM MALNUTRITION OF INDIAN CHILD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but in his absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary could answer. Has the minister received a copy of the highly critical report of the coroner's jury convened to investigate the circumstances surrounding the tragic death from malnutrition of the 14-month old Indian girl on the Peigan reserve in Alberta? If so, what action is being taken to implement its recommendations for programs to avoid similar tragedies?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and bring it to the attention of the minister when he returns to the house.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

QUALIFICATIONS REQUIRED FOR APPOINTMENTS ABROAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister's department given any consideration to appointing to ambassadorial or lesser positions people who understand the language of the country in which they will serve after appointment, or are these appointments based primarily on whether the people concerned are purely Liberals.

An hon. Member: How can you be "purely" a Liberal?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Korchinski: This is a serious question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question may be very serious, but it would be just as serious if it were placed on the order paper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE LEGISLATIVE CHANGES RESPECTING JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. I would ask the minister whether he can indicate to the house when he might be preparing for introduction changes in the law based upon the recommendations of the committee on juvenile delinquency.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we are now in the final stages of preparation of a draft discussion paper, which will be forwarded to the various provincial authorities. We shall be proposing a meeting perhaps a little later in the year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SIR ROBERT MENZIES OF AUSTRALIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have the permission of the house to draw attention to the presence in the gallery of a very distinguished commonwealth and world statesman, the former prime minister of Australia, Sir Robert Menzies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the right hon. Prime Minister undertook to look into the question of whether the request of the provinces for a conference on medicare would be acceded to. Can the Prime Minister now give us an answer?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately the Minister of National Health and Welfare had to leave yesterday. I hope to be able to do this tomorrow morning.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISITS TO CANADA BY MEMBERS OF FRENCH GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin).

Can the minister tell us if the French ministers who are coming to Quebec one after the other to sign agreements with that province are invited to Ottawa and, if so, why they fail to come as they might be expected to?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member—and he knows it very well—that all those ministers are always invited to Canada and that our relations with the government they represent are normal.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Trudeau)? I assure you it is not the one I put yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, can the hon. minister tell us whether since the Conservative party and the member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) have adopted the "two nations" theory, the committee headed by Mr. Carl Goldenberg has reported to him on the matter, and whether he agrees with that theory?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question may be different, but it is just as out of order as the one asked yesterday.

TRADE

REASON FOR DECREASE IN EXPORTS LAST AUGUST

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could the minister explain to the house why exports fell off in August after a series of rises? Does this, in his opinion, reflect the inflationary pressures that are making it more difficult for our products to be sold?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): With regard to the last part of the question, Mr. Speaker, the answer would be in the negative. Generally speaking, exports last August were down compared with August of the year before because of three main factors. One was the fact that wheat was not moving as well this year, partly because of the strike on the great lakes. Second, we were in a period when the automobile industry was changing over its models. Third, last August, for a variety of reasons, was an extraordinarily good export month.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a related question. Is the government presently taking any action which would result in the greater use of the metric system by Canadian industry, thereby improving Canada's competitive position in a large segment of the world market?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a very general question. I do not believe it is so urgent that it cannot be placed on the order paper.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 4, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith (p. 1197), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) (p. 1201).

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, prior to the adjournment last evening I was directing my remarks to the Minister of Finance and I stated that the mere fact he has made two speeches in the last two days with regard to the economic state of the nation clearly indicates the seriousness of the situation and the inability of the government and more particularly his own inability to cope with the problems and to provide adequate solutions. When one thinks of the Minister of Finance one thinks of a person who has attempted to show the Canadian people how to manage their own affairs, to show how he would balance the deficits of the nation, and how, by practising frugality and good management, we would have prosperity and stability.

I pointed out to him that this has not been so since he has taken office and I set forth three examples to prove how miserably he has failed to come to grips with these problems. The first example was the consumer price index which has shown a steady increase in the Canadian economy. I indicated to him that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics' figures show that the consumer price index has increased from 139.5 in July, 1965 to 144.3 in July, 1966 and to 150.2 in July, 1967. This would indicate that the Canadian people are paying, as of July of this year, $150.20 for purchases for which they would have paid $100 in 1949. I also told the minister that in my opinion the people whom this situation affects most are those who live on fixed incomes such as the old age pensioners and people in the lower income bracket.

The second problem with which the minister has failed to deal is unemployment. Unemployment has been a continuing festering sore on the Canadian economy. D.B.S. figures inform us that since 1965 there has been an upward trend in unemployment despite occasional seasonal declines. In July, 1967, the number of unemployed stood at 330,000 in absolute figures. Shown as a percentage of the labour force, the number of unemployed has increased steadily since the end of 1965 despite periodic declines. I said that graphs published by D.B.S. indicate a steady increase in unemployment since the beginning of 1966. In fact the D.B.S. table, which is adjusted to seasonal variations, indicates that in Ontario the number of unemployed is 3.5 per cent. In the Atlantic provinces the number has increased to 6.8 per cent, and even in the province of British Columbia the figure stands at 5 per cent. This is a disgrace to the Canadian economy.

The third point I mentioned concerns the high interest rates which were reflected in the recent increase in the N.H.A. rate on mortgages to 8.25 per cent. I indicated to the minister that in areas such as Toronto interest rates vary from 8.75 to 9 per cent. At that point the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) challenged the figure of 9 per cent and suggested that in Toronto interest rates for conventional loans only varied .5 per cent. I should like the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour to know that according to the information I have received the rate on loans on prime properties in Toronto stands at 8.5 per cent and on secondary properties the variation is between .25 and .5 per cent, which would bring it close to 9 per cent. The interest rate on prime properties in Sudbury stands at 9 per cent and the interest rate on prime properties in London, Ontario is 8.75 per cent.

I also pointed out that the guaranteed investment certificates of the National Trust Company now pay 6.75 per cent and that in order for the company to make a margin of profit it would have to lend money at a rate of interest between 8.5 and 9 per cent. These were three of the items that I mentioned in the house last evening.

Yesterday we heard the remedies which the Minister of Finance proposed to some of these problems. He stated that the real causes could not be found in any one place and he suggested there may be two areas in which the government and business can show restraint. The first one was restraint on government expenditures, and he indicated that the government has made special efforts to trim down the estimates for the next year and that it will be his aim to reduce our present deficit.

The cutting back of government expenditures has also been proposed by the Conservative party. In fact the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) yesterday took the government to task with regard to government expenditures without making suggestions as to what expenditures the government should reduced with the exception of the social and welfare areas. He said in fact that if we cannot afford to pay for old age pensions and medicare programs we should make cut-backs in those areas. This appears to be a far cry from the pressure which the Progressive Conservative party tried to apply during the early part of the year to increase old age pensions for the senior citizens of the country. The Conservative party has not indicated, nor has the Minister of Finance, that in cutting back government expenditures we should cut subsidies to the wheat farmers or cut our defence budget thereby affecting the maritime provinces and the province of British Columbia. The members of that party have not suggested that we cut the subsidies to the coal industry and no suggestion has been made with regard to a cut-back on educational grants or other social services.

It is true that government expenditures have risen within the last few years but it has been to cover an increase in social and welfare programs, educational grants, transportation, interest on the public debt and subsidies. All these increases have been necessary for the over-all good of the country and they are to be expected. The Economic Council of Canada stated that in the future the government must participate in these types of programs if the progress and prosperity of the Canadian people are to continue. All too often increases in government expenditures are translated into a criticism of increasing government waste in its departments and agencies and of the application of Parkinson's law as well as excessive bureaucracy and lax administrative control. It is necessary that the government adopt better measures of reviewing and auditing government expenses, but this is secondary to its main function of determining the priorities of the government in facilitating high standards of performance in the nation's economic and social development, for example, with regard to education, health and welfare, transportation, resources development and the improvement of the quality of life of all Canadians.

• (3:30 p.m.)

We in the New Democratic party feel that the government has failed miserably in determining the priorities for its expenditures. The most flagrant example is this regard in the field of housing. The serious shortage of housing today is an indication of the lack of foresight and leadership of the federal government in respect of an urgent and pressing problem.

The solution of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) appears in Hansard for Monday, October 2, where as reported at page 2730 he recognized the problem and stated:

> —there is no doubt that now there is a shortage of housing accommodation in Canada. This shortage, of course, is particularly to be found in the very rapidly growing urban centres, one of which I help to represent in this House.

The minister then set forth his solution to the housing problem in Canada and as reported at page 2731 said:

> The first problem we have to deal with, if we are going to face up to the housing problem adequately and not in a partisan fashion, looking at the realities of the situation, is the shortage of capital or I might say, if you want to put it another way, the shortage of savings.

Then the minister went on to set forth the necessity for high interest rates to attract United States capital to participate in the economy; otherwise there would be a drop in the housing program. The minister said:

> Canadian rates must be high enough in relation to those of the United States that they will attract into Canada the capital required to supply our deficiency. This is just a fact of life. There is nothing we can do about it unless we can increase our own savings—

That is his solution to the housing problem, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) would be in the house because I wanted to remind him that in the symposium on housing held in Toronto in the spring of this year the former president of Central Mortgage and Housing, Mr. Mansur, took an entirely different approach to this problem. The minister has stated that there is a shortage of savings. Mr. Mansur stated that the real problem with housing in Canada today is not a shortage of mortgage funds but the high cost of houses. The main elements in the high cost of houses are the high cost of land, the high cost of labour and materials, and the high cost of interest rates. In fact, Mr. Mansur put it rather dramatically and said that there was enough mortgage money pouring out of the ears of the finance companies to take care of this problem but it was just that we have outpriced ourselves because of the high cost of housing.

This is a far different approach from that taken by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Finance who say there is a shortage of savings and that we do not have the necessary capital. We in the New Democratic party say that there is a shortage of savings by the Canadian people, that it is the lack of direction and the misallocation of funds to meet the present economic and social needs of the country that is the cause.

I should like to give hon. members an example. Many people say that Canadians are great savers. There is plenty of evidence to support this contention. In 1947 Canadian savings amounted to $6 billion, in 1950 to $7 billion, in 1955 to $10 billion, in 1960 to $15 billion, in 1965 to $25 billion and 1966 to $27 billion. This indicates the tremendous savings that are made by the Canadian people.

The problem as we see it is the direction of the savings of the Canadian people. The main bodies that control the savings of the Canadian people are the lending institutions. For example, I should like to mention the direction of Canadian investments by the Canadian life insurance companies. In Canada life insurance companies do about 50 per cent of the insurance business; the balance is in the hands of United States and English companies. According to the superintendent of insurance, total investment in 1965 on the part of Canadian insurance companies amounted to $12 billion. These investments comprised four main categories—bonds, stocks, mortgage loans and other assets. The report of the superintendent indicates that only 65 per cent of this $12 billion was invested in Canada. The remaining 35 per cent was invested in the United States, the commonwealth and other countries. We feel that there should be a high percentage of the savings of Canadians directed to investment in Canada so as to take care of the economic and social needs of the nation.

Although one is disappointed at the investment picture of the insurance companies, one can be greatly disturbed when one looks at the mutual funds in Canada. They have no social conscience whatsoever. In fact, most of the investments of the mutual funds are not placed in Canada. The great majority of these funds, the savings of the Canadian people, are invested in the United States. Therefore we feel that the government must give direction to the savings of Canadians so as to provide the necessary money for the development of Canada. There would not be this serious housing crisis today if the government had given direction to the lending institutions in investing the savings of the Canadian people.

Another area where Canadian savers could place their money is in the Canada Development Corporation, which could be another useful instrument in the development of Canada by providing an opportunity for Canadians to participate in the development of the country and giving them a fair return on their money. However, Mr. Speaker, the government has been talking about this corporation for quite some time but as yet has not taken any action. One is therefore led to believe that the main reason the government has not taken action is that the very institutions that give money to the government at election time have either discouraged or restrained the government from doing so. We as Canadians cannot buy back Canadian industry, as has been stated by one of the ministers of the government. We must direct the investments of Canadians to the development of industry and to meeting the social needs of the country.

Another area where the government could show leadership is in resource industries such as mining, oil, pulp and paper and the like. Here the government should be giving direction and encouragement to develop our manufacturing industries in Canada and help them specialize so they can supply the home market as well as compete successfully in the international market. Too many of our natural resources are being exported to countries like the United States, where in turn manufacturers make the products which we in Canada have to buy back again. We feel that greater emphasis should be placed on our natural resources and more opportunity given to Canadian companies to develop these resources to their full utility so they can make products we now have to buy from our neighbour to the south and are also able to compete successfully in the international market.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Perhaps the best example of this is to be seen in the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) as they appear in the minutes of the meeting of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs of June 13. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) asked the minister the following question having to do with the production of nickel in Canada. On page 57 of the report the following appears:

I would like to ask the minister to make some further comments on a matter that he discussed in the house on June 5 with my colleague, Mr. Saltsman, on the question of the nickel production and supplies of nickel for the domestic market.

I have here a report in the Globe and Mail of April 20 of the annual meeting of the International Nickel Company, and this does not seem to track very well with the reports of D.B.S. and with your own statement, Mr. Minister, about the production of nickel. Mr. Wingate had this to say:

"Production this year will be a record but not as great as last year's deliveries of 500.2 million pounds, which included 100 million pounds of U.S. government surplus nickel sold at no profit."

I was wondering if I could get some explanation of what that means.

I have also had reports of domestic users who have been restricted in their deliveries while at the same time our exports to the United States have been increasing. The fact is reported that in 1966 we exported 1.7 million pounds more than we produced.

I was wondering if the government has in mind any possibility of stockpiling a certain amount of it here in Canada rather than leaving some of our domestic users in short supply and continuing the exports to the United States at the rate they are presently being undertaken.

The minister replied:

The stockpile in the United States has distorted the supply and demand figures. There has been a drawdown on the stockpile which gave the impression that there was a greater availability of nickel than there really is from world production. World production is not able to meet world demand at the present time, and the stockpile is getting pretty well eroded. The strike at Sudbury last year distorted the production figures considerably and set back the supply side of the supply and demand relationship.

International Nickel has been pressed to meet demands on a world basis for nickel; they have not been able to cope with it. In this situation, they have undertaken to provide to Canadian users—

This is the important sentence:

—100 per cent of their utilization of last year.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands then said:

But with no provision for any expansion in their operations.

Later he said:

Does the government not think that the primary objective of the government should be to see to the expansion of Canadian industry that is dependent on nickel supplies?

The minister replied:

We think that is a primary objective; but, as I said, we have got to balance that against our export commitments, and we attach great importance in Canada to a high level of exports.

That shows that the government puts great stress on export of our natural resources. I think the evidence is obvious, as we see it, that the government will give to Canadian industry only 100 per cent of the utilization of 1966, with no provision for expansion. We say that Canadian natural resources should be made available first to Canadian manufacturers. Canadian industry should be developed first and only the surplus ought to be exported.

The N.D.P. also feels that an investment advisory board ought to be set up to guide the investment of retained earnings of Canadian corporations within the country. Such a measure would cope with many economic and social problems. The Minister of Finance is quite familiar with the technique involved. Not long ago he imposed a 5 per cent surcharge tax on Canadian corporations. He allowed them 5 per cent on their money and promised to return it with interest within a period not to exceed 36 months. The minister became generous and returned their money to the corporations within a much shorter period. Now the minister talks of an excess of demand in the Canadian economy. Perhaps he ought to impose a similar tax again, but this time he might be well advised to lead our corporations toward the best types of investment to keep our economy stable and growing.

To dampen inflationary tendencies the minister said yesterday that he would ask industry and labour to restrain themselves with regard to prices and wages. I submit it is only fair, if labour unions in Canada are to go through the complex process of negotiation, mediation, conciliation and arbitration before going on strike for higher wages, that Canadian corporations ought to be placed in a similar position. That is why for some time we have urged the government to set up a prices review board. It would examine any unjustifiable increases in the prices of Canadian goods. As the government imposes the restrictions I have mentioned on labour, surely it has a duty to impose similar restrictions on industry. Just asking industry to restrain its pricing policy while at the same time proposing a complex process for the trade unions to follow is not fair in the circumstances.

Substantially, Canadians must run their own economy for their own development; they should not be the tools of corporations when it comes to direction and development. This party feels that if we were to implement the measures I have tried to outline Canada would enjoy more stable growth and our people would become the first priority.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the lead-off speaker for the official opposition, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), yesterday complimented the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for polishing his image as a "pater familias". I am not a lawyer; my background is engineering. I shall have to take the hon. member's definition as being correct. At any rate, he translated it to mean "the good, prudent man". I agree with him. I think the present Minister of Finance is a prudent man. Certainly he is a good manager. He has the vital interests of the Canadian family at heart and is doing a first class job.

Mr. Knowles: Another polisher.

An hon. Member: Don't smile.

Mr. Davis: No doubt the hon. member feels that we shall take full credit for the developments of the last few years. No one can do that and the Minister of Finance would not wish to. The enterprise, initiative and hard work of the Canadian people have caused the economy of the country to increase in a remarkable way, in a dramatic, unprecedented way. In the last half dozen years our volume of output, not the value inflated by price increases, has gone up by nearly 40 per cent or considerably more then one third. Exports have gone up by more than 50 per cent. Housing is up 20 per cent; unemployment has been cut by one-half. These are important developments and I believe everyone in the country can take pride in them. Certainly we on the government side can take pride in them.

Hon. members who remember the economic situation of a few months ago will recall that the economic wizards were talking then about the economy of north America being on a knife edge. There might be a recession of some considerable consequence ahead and there was uncertainty in some quarters and a lack of confidence. Today, a few months later, optimism has become the rule. But the budget which was drawn up in the spring to deal with that knife edge situation was, I think, an appropriate one. It was a budget which had been kept roughly in balance.

I should like to deal briefly with the budget and its orders of magnitude in terms of the type of accounts the economists usually draw up, those which show how government expenditures affect the economy; whether they are either inflationary or deflationary. The national accounts analysis of the budget was published along with the other budget papers tabled by the Minister of Finance on June 1 this year. It shows that the government ran a surplus on national accounts in 1966 of some $576 million. This, roughly speaking, was a 6 per cent surplus in terms of the economic impact and it had a depressing effect on the national economy; it cooled down an overheated economy to that extent. In 1967 the budget surplus on a national accounts basis was $141 million, a surplus of roughly 1½ per cent. The budget as submitted for this year shows a deficit of $228 million on a national accounts basis, a deficit amounting to 2 per cent, not 20 per cent or 200 per cent, as some of our critics would have us believe, but 2 per cent. The impact on the economy was inflationary to the extent of only 2 per cent. This was the budget drawn up in the spring to deal with the knife-edge situation which existed six months ago.

We have heard from the Minister of Finance that he is currently cutting back drastically in 1968. He can now see a more dynamic and continuing situation ahead. Our six-year upswing is going into its seventh year and it looks as though a buoyant situation will continue for a long time to come.

Some levelling off is possible. We have used up a lot of the slack in the economy. We have put to work a lot of people who were unemployed and we have put to work a lot of plants which were idle. Hence there is some slowing down as an economy which is flat out begins to operate as I hope it will for many years to come.

There are several other figures to which I want to direct the attention of the house. There is, first of all, the order of magnitude of the transfers to the provinces. I said we were running a deficit of 2 per cent on a national accounts basis. We have a total budget on that basis of the order of $11 billion. Of that amount, $2 billion goes to the provinces as a direct transfer into provincial treasuries. Thus, if hon. members want a true picture of what the federal government spends for federal purposes within the B.N.A. Act, it can be said we were running a surplus of nearly 20 per cent. The federal government has certainly balanced its budget. It is handing over to the provinces no less than $2 billion and the provinces are using this money for local and provincial economies.

It is not easy to produce figures showing the extent of federal assistance province by province, but one can get some indication of them from the reports of the Economic Council of Canada. Reading the second report of the council I find that in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island at least 50 per cent of the provinces income is derived from Ottawa in one form or another—equalization payments, payments in connection with joint cost programs, and so on. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick federal assistance ranges between 30 per cent and 40 per cent. In Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan it is about 20 per cent and even in the so-called "have" provinces, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, federal support for all provincial purposes, including municipal purposes, amounts to about 15 per cent.

Thus, when we look at the federal budget we are looking at more than the national accounts as they relate to moneys taken in and expended for purely national purposes. We are looking also at surpluses generated for payment to the provinces, not only to those with low average income and high unemployment but to all of them.

We have certainly introduced a number of expensive programs in the area of social security. However, I should like to point out that most of these are not in themselves inflationary. We have made new expenditures and in some cases we have obliged the provinces to incur new expenditures. But we have always made sure that the revenue necessary to meet these payments is available. The programs have been organized in that fashion.

Consider, for example, the old age assistance legislation. I well remember how bitterly both the official opposition and the New Democratic party criticized the increase in taxation which the Minister of Finance introduced to meet the cost of increases in these pensions. But as a result of the action he took the whole of the old age pension account is now in balance. As much is being taken out of the economy as is necessary to make these benefits available to our older citizens. The old age program, as it has been managed by the minister, is not inflationary.

The Canada Pension Plan is not inflationary. There were many who said that more would be taken from the Canadian people in the form of contributions than would ever flow back into the economy through reinvestment by provincial governments. Ottawa has been the keeper of the accounts; it has been collecting this money and passing it on to the provincial governments. The plan has not been inflationary and the money paid out has not exceeded income contrary to the dour expectation of pessimists opposite. It has not had a depressing effect on our economy; it has not, of itself, been inflationary.

The unemployment insurance fund is in the black. It was in the red back in 1961 and 1962. Today it is managed in such a way as to be substantially in balance. Even the government legislation having to do with medicare contains its own provision for balancing income and expenditure. If people take a sufficiently broad view of the medicare scheme they must realize that there will be few, if any, more doctors at work after the plan is introduced than there are at the present time. The doctors will not suddenly be submitting larger bills and charging higher fees to their patients. In other words, a different system of accounting will be in effect. The manner of collection and payment will have been changed but the economic impact of keeping our accounts in a different way will not be appreciable. Indeed, I have sufficient faith in the medical profession to think that medicare will not be inflationary at all and that we will be getting good value for our money under a financial scheme which sees a mixture of public and private plans in effect across the nation. These new arrangements in themselves are not inflationary.

What can be controlled and certainly influenced by the actions of the government
