That Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 5 and 6 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"ant to subsection (3) before a Justice of the Peace, that".

Hon. John Wise (for the Solicitor General of Canada) moved:

That Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 14 to 17 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"arrest shall cause the inmate to be brought before a person designated by the Chairman of the Board

(a) where that person is available within a period of 24 hours after the inmate is arrested, without unreasonable delay and in any event within that period; and,

(b) where that person is not available within the period referred to in paragraph (a), as soon as possible".

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Parole and Penitentiary Acts

Motion No. 32

That Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 19 and 20 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"ant to subsection (3) before a Justice of the Peace, that".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could clarify the purpose of the motion moved by the Government, as has been our practice to this point.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, under Section 15.31 of the Parole Act, the CSC is required to refer a potential detention case to the board not later than six months before the inmate's presumptive release date.

Section 15.33 allows the Commissioner to refer a case within the six-month period under limited circumstances because of new information or changed circumstances. Upon proclamation of the Bill there may be inmates, whose presumptive release date is less than six months away, who should be referred to the board but do not fit the conditions defined in Section 25.33.

It is the intention of the Government that the detention provisions of the Bill be effective immediately upon proclamation. Correctional authorities must be able to refer inmates from a detention review hearing within the first six months of operation if public safety is at stake. Consequently, we are moving that a traditional provision be added to the Bill to allow clearly the referral of potential detention cases within the first six months. Any such referral will have to be made as soon as practicable, and the procedures normally applicable to the review will apply with such modifications as circumstances require.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, having heard that explanation, it is quite clear that what we are doing is streamlining justice in the interest of time. I am totally opposed to the provision which is being suggested by the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) in the amendment before us. It is important to note that if we are serious about dealing with the concern about the violence in our communities, and if we are serious about dealing with the very real problem of violent crime, this Bill and the approach taken in it are fundamentally wrong and misguided. Surely we should be looking at the causes of violent crime. We should do, to the greatest extent possible, what we can to eradicate the causes of violent crime. However, the Government does nothing whatsoever to deal with that factor.

As well, it is important to examine conditions within our federal prison system and to recognize that conditions in many cases are appalling. It was in 1976-77 that a special subcommittee of Parliament unanimously recommended that unless there were major changes within the prison system, further crises would in fact erupt. A number of recommendations were made in respect of using imprisonment as a last possible resort. Instead, we sentence people to some of the longest sentences in the western world. Our sentences are far too long, and far too many people are in prison. It should be very clearly set out in the Criminal Code that prison should be the last possible resort for a judge and should only be used when all else fails. Surely the rule of law should apply within prison walls as well as outside prison walls. We have seen too many instances, whether it be at Kingston Penitentiary or elsewhere, where prison officials arbitrarily ignore the law, whether it be commissioners' directives, criminal law or other law.

The purpose of this grouping of amendments is to ensure that the decision to revoke an individual's liberty is not made by a person appointed by the chairperson of the National Parole Board, but at the very least is made by a justice of the peace. In any other deprivation of liberty clearly it should be and must be a justice of the peace or an independent judicial officer, as opposed to some person designated by the chairperson of the National Parole Board, who is given the power to arrest and detain an individual for some considerable length of time. I would hope that the Government would recognize the importance of this series of amendments and move to accept it.

In looking at the whole issue of prevention, as I mentioned earlier we pay lip service to it within the prison system. There are totally inadequate work programs; some of the best work programs have been shut down. Prisoners themselves are the first people to say that they want to work. They want the right to work in institutions, not just on meaningless, mindless drudgery, but on real jobs which will provide them with skills to help them to obtain jobs outside prison.

There may be Conservative Members who want to speak in this debate. I would welcome their participation. However, I note the hypocrisy of the Government's approach in saying that it wants to cut down on violent crime, but at the same time starves institutions of resources for dealing with prisoners who may in fact be violent. Recent figures have shown that there are only 65 psychologists working in all federal penitentiaries in Canada. Many institutions have fewer than three of them on staff. For example, Kingston Penitentiary with over 400 prisoners, many of whom have serious problems, has two-time psychologists. Instead of this backward approach which will increase the level of violence in our communities, why do we not get serious about prevention? Why do we not recognize that we need more resources within institutions to deal with sex offenders, those offenders with psychological and personal problems. Instead, we have seen the federal Government cutting back on programs for sex offenders. The case-loads of psychologists within institutions are absolutely enormous. Basically, handling units have very serious problems and are completely unable to cope with them, given the resources which they now have.

I reject the approach taken in this legislation, as do my colleagues. We suggest that it is about time the Government took seriously its mandate to prevent violent crime, not to increase the possibility of violent crime through legislation such as this. I call upon the Government to adopt the motions which are now before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 24 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). A vote on Motion No. 24 will also apply to Motions Nos. 25, 31, and 32. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it. The motion is defeated.

Motion No. 24 negatived.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There seems to be some confusion with regard to Motion No. 31 which is a Government motion.

Mr. Robinson: It was just defeated.

• (1940)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Mr. Wise for the Solicitor General moved Motion No. 31.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have already voted on Motion No. 31. The Speaker ruled and I am quoting now from the ruling of the Speaker:

Motion Nos. 24, 25, 31 and 32 will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 24 will also apply to Motion Nos. 25, 31 and 32.

That was the Speaker's ruling. The Speaker's ruling was not in any way disputed. There was a vote on Motion No. 24 which was negatived. That, in turn, negatives Motions Nos. 26, 31 and 32. It is completely out of order at this point to suggest a separate vote on a motion that has already been negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): On the very specific point brought to the attention of the Chair by both the Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), I can inform the House that there has been an error, a transposition. Motion No. 31 should have read Motion No. 31A, the motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby and not Motion No. 31 per se. That is where the error and the confusion comes from. If the House would bear with the Chair, I would propose to the House that the vote would apply to Motion No. 31A and not Motion No. 31.

Mr. Robinson: No way, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am putting that proposition to the House. Is that acceptable?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, clearly such a disposition would require unanimous consent. I am certainly not prepared to grant unanimous consent to that suggestion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): That would, therefore, dispose of the matter.

That leaves us with Motion No. 31A to dispose of at this point.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 31A

That Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 12 by striking out lines 16 and 17 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"before a Justice of the Peace".

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 31A is a motion which would ensure that the principle to which I referred earlier that a hearing should take place, not before a person designated by the chairperson of the National Parole Board, but before a justice of the peace and that that principle should apply at all stages within this Bill. I would hope that even though we have defeated that principle in the previous motions which were put to the House, perhaps the House might now recognize the error of its ways and adopt Motion No. 31A.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived.

Motion No. 31A negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We now move to Motion No. 26 to be debated on separately and voted on separately.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

that Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out line 17 at page 14.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to delete the reference in sub-paragraph (i) of the schedule to assault. In view of the fact that that offence can be committed in many different ways, including ways which do not involve any violent conduct at all, I would suggest that this unduly extends the scope of the Bill and I hope we would be prepared as a Parliament to delete that reference, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived.

Motion No. 26 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We will now move to Motion Nos. 29 and 4. I direct the attention of the House to the fact that they have not been dealt with at a previous time this morning when they were previously grouped together. The Chair will now put them to the House at this time.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

that Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 23 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"class of penitentiary after the"

Motion No. 29

That Bill C-67, be amended in Clause 11 by adding immediately after line 32 at page 17 the following:

"(3) this section applies to inmates released on mandatory supervision after the coming into force of this section".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I remind Hon. Members that the motions will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

● (1950)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, in many ways these two motions go to the heart of this Bill and deal with a very fundamental issue. Very briefly, the issue is whether this legislation is to operate retroactively or to apply from the date upon which it is proclaimed. As the Bill is now worded, it would apply to those prisoners who are already incarcerated as well as to those who were sentenced after the adoption of this legislation. In my view it is profoundly unjust and unfair to apply this legislation to prisoners who are already in institutions having been sentenced under a particular regime and then denied the right to which they should be entitled, the benefit of the earned remission that they have accrued during that sentence.

The prisoners that we are talking about were sentenced by judges who were well aware of the provisions of the Criminal Code and various parole Acts affecting sentence. There have been a variety of court cases on this point. It is very clear that judges have taken this into consideration in determining the appropriate length of sentence. Indeed, in the British Columbia Court of Appeal it was held that remission and parole are proper matters for consideration in the determination of sentence in appropriate cases.

A recent study on sentencing by Professor John Hogarth dealt with this important question. In that study provincial court judges were asked to indicate whether they adjusted their sentences in light of the possibility of parole being granted or, presumably, mandatory supervision. Two out of three judges who were interviewed admitted that they did increase the length of sentence imposed. The majority of provincial court judges admit that they evade the directions of the Ontario Court of Appeal on this matter.

This means the prisoners who are now in federal institutions have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment based upon the existing provisions of mandatory supervision and parole. We are now changing the rules in midstream. We are telling those prisoners that even though they were sentenced on the basis of a previous regime, we are going to apply the new rules to them as well. I suspect that that is in breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of Canada as well as being fundamentally unfair, unjust and unworkable.

This point was made by many witnesses who appeared before our committee. For example, the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies pointed out that the detention order could be applied to all prisoners regardless of whether they were convicted before or after the coming into force of the Act. As they said, it is blatantly unjust to prisoners to apply retroactively measures with such potentially serious repercussions.

We have the views of the John Howard Society of Canada. They say that Section 11(i) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides that no accused can be sentenced to a higher punishment merely on account of a legislative increase in penalty after commission of the crime but before sentence. In other words, increased penalties cannot be applied retroactively. The John Howard Society also refers to Section 7 of the Charter. It seems clear, therefore, that applying the gating order provisions to prisoners who are already serving their sentences and have earned their remission before the passage of the legislation is a blatant violation of Section 11(i) and Section 7 of the Charter.

Finally on this point, the Canadian Bar Association and the Criminal Lawyers Association said:

Our associations are particularly concerned with the retroactivity of these various legislative proposals . . . . Simply put, these sections would make the new regime of "gating" and "one shot mandatory" applicable to persons who have already been sentenced.

They continue:

Is this Committee assured that Sections 5 and 12 of Bill C-67 will survive attacks based on Sections 7 or 15 of the Charter? Is it fair for Parliament to change the rules without some prior notice?

Do you not face the very real possibility that many prisoners will now decline release on mandatory supervision entirely, particularly with regard to the findings of the Ouimet Committee to the effect that at that time only about 60 per cent of eligible prisoners applied for parole because prisoners "prefer to complete their sentence in the institution rather than place their—remission period in jeopardy"?

These are grave issues of justice and liberty. Once again the Government has said that it does not care about those provisions and is prepared to apply the whole thing retroactively.

In the House of Commons in the United Kingdom in July of 1910 Winston Churchill put it very clearly. He said:

The mood and temper of the public with regard to the treatment of crime and criminals is one of the most unfailing tests of the civilization of any country.

I suggest that if we adopt the legislation now before the House we as a Parliament and a nation will have failed that test, not only from the perspective of prisoners but also from the perspective of the communities which we represent and from the perspective of the victims of crime. I, therefore, urge the Government to accept this amendment and to ensure that we are not harshly applying these rules retroactively but that if they must come into effect we apply them from the date that the legislation is proclaimed.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those against the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 4 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 29. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 29 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Motion No. 28 and Motion No. 30 seek to amend Clause 11 of the Bill. At the direction of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) Motion No. 30 will be debated and voted on separately. Motion No. 28 will not be proposed and will be dropped from the Notice Paper.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 30

That Bill C-67, be amended by deleting Clause 11.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Motion No. 30 which is now before the House is to delete Clause 11 of this Bill. Clause 11 is the clause which would implement a scheme of denying earned remission to those individuals whose mandatory supervision has been revoked when those individuals fall within a particular category set out in the legislation. This so-called one shot mandatory supervision will have a very serious impact on the population of our prison system which is overcrowded. Indeed, the correctional investigator was recently very critical of the federal penitentiary system in that it double-bunks prisoners. To the extent that this Bill is going to add to the population of our prison system, it will obviously cause very significant problems.

I would also note that as the Bill is now worded it would deny earned remission to those prisoners whose mandatory supervision is revoked merely as a result of the contravention of terms or conditions of "mandatory". The Senate Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee unanimously recommended that this should not be the case. I refer to their interim report to the Senate of May 14, 1986. They are referring to one shot mandatory supervision, in other words, the denial of the right to earn further remissions to certain inmates whose mandatory supervision has been revoked.

I might pause here to note that the whole concept of earned remission has been strongly supported by prison guards as well as by prisoners. It provides some incentive for good behaviour in the institutions. As it stands now, if you are not eligible for earned remission then there is no incentive for good behaviour. If we eliminate earned remission for these prisoners we will simply make them that much more likely to cause problems and aggravate tensions in the institutions. They have absolutely nothing to lose.

The Senate committee said that the scope of the amendment on mandatory supervision was considerably narrowed in the legislative committee. Only inmates who have been made the subject of formal consideration for detention under the Bill, but who are not detained by order of the board, are to lose the right to earn further remission on reincarceration following revocation of their release on mandatory supervision. This amendment, however, fails to take into account the criticism that an inmate may have his release revoked for contravention of terms and conditions of that release which have nothing whatever to do with his or her perceived or potential dangerousness. Even the narrow class of inmates who would become subject to the one shot amendment should not lose the right to earn remission by reason of a technical or minor breach of conditions which results in revocation. That right should only be lost if there is a criminal conviction while on release.

How can Members of the House disagree with that unanimous recommendation of Liberal and Conservative Senators? After all, if mandatory supervision is revoked because an individual travels more than 25 miles beyond the area in which he is supposed to be residing, or if he has a drink when he should not, or if he takes out a line of credit when he is not supposed to take out, we are going to throw the person in jail. Not only that, they will not have any opportunity to earn remission on the remainder of their sentence. That must surely constitute cruel and unusual punishment.

In addition to that, it will add to overcrowding of institutions. What we have proposed is that if this one shot mandatory supervision is to apply, at least make sure it applies only where an individual has been involved in criminal activity, not where he has merely breached a term or condition of his mandatory supervision. That is the reason, among others, that we have suggested that this provision in Clause 11 be deleted. I hope Members of the House will support this very reasonable and modest proposal.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 30 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Motion No. 30 negatived.

Hon. André Bissonnette (for the Solicitor General of Canada) moved:

Motion No. 30A

That Bill C-67, be amended

(a) by adding immediately after line 32 at page 17 the following:

"12.(1) Notwithstanding subsection 15.3(3) of the Parole Act, as enacted by section 5 of this Act, the Commissioner may, within six months after the coming into force of that subsection, refer the case of an inmate to the Chairman of the Board pursuant to that subsection later than six months before the presumptive release date of the inmate, but the Commissioner shall do so as soon as practicable after the belief referred to in that subsection is formed with respect to that case.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection 15.3(2) of the Parole Act, as enacted by section 5 of this Act, the Service may, within six months after the coming into force of that subsection, refer the cases of an inmate to the Board pursuant to that subsection later than six months before the presumptive release date of the inmate, but the Service shall do so as soon as practicable after the opinion referred to in that subsection is formed with respect to that case.

(3) Where the case of an inmate is referred to the Board pursuant to subsection (2) during the six months immediately preceding the presumptive release date of the inmate, subsections 15.3(5) to (7) of the Parole Act apply to that case, with such modifications as the circumstances require."

(b) by renumbering Clauses 12 to 14 as Clauses 13 to 15, respectively".

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I just want to compliment the Government for simplifying this Act through this wording.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the reading of this particular motion by the Chair and I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General could clarify its purpose.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the section concerned allows the Commissioner to refer a case within a six-month period under limited circumstances because of new information or changed circumstances. Upon proclamation of this Bill there may be inmates whose presumptive release date is less than six months who should be referred to the Board but who do not fit the conditions defined in Subsection 15.3(3). It is the intention of the Government that the detention provisions of this Bill be effective immediately upon proclamation, and correctional authorities must be able to refer inmates for a detention review hearing within the first six months of operation if public safety is at stake. Consequently, we are moving that a transitional provision be added to clearly allow the referral of potential detention cases within the first six months. Any such referral will have to be made as soon as practicable and the procedures normally applicable to the review will apply with such modifications as the circumstances require.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 30A standing in the name of the Hon. Solicitor General. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

Motion No. 30A agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Since Motion No. 33 and Motion No. 34 affect the same line of the Bill, the Chair has consulted with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and will select Motion No. 33 for debate. It will be debated and voted on separately. Accordingly, Motion No. 34 will be dropped from the Notice Paper.

• (2010)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 33:

That Bill C-67 be amended in Clause 13 by striking out lines 40 to 43 at page 18 and lines 1 to 16 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

13.(1) Three years after the coming into force of sections 15.2 and 15.6 of the Parole Act and the schedule thereto as enacted by sections 5 and 8 respectively of this Act and subsections 24(3) to (5) and section 24.11 of the Penitentiary Act as enacted by subsection 10(2) and section 11 respectively of this Act shall cease to be in force.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 33, which is now on the floor for debate, would provide in effect for a sunset clause within this legislation. Many of us would argue that the sun should not rise with this particular legislation, but at the very least if it does rise it should set three years after it comes into effect. That is precisely what the purpose of this motion is. It would provide that the sections in question, the heart of this Bill, would cease to be of any force or effect three years after the coming into force of the Bill.

What that would do is to ensure that the Government puts substance into its promise that it intends to undertake a comprehensive review of correctional law. This review is long overdue. It has been ten years since Parliament last examined the whole question of corrections and prisons in our country, and what we have seen is a prison system which has grown out of control.

It is a system in which prisons are built not on the basis of correctional criteria, but built on the basis of patronage, such as Port Cartier Prison, which by sheer coincidence happens to be located within the Prime Minister's constituency, or Renous Penitentiary, which was built by the previous Government on exactly the same socio-economic conditions, pork-barrelling to help a Liberal Member in New Brunswick.

We believe the time has come for a very fundamental review. Even the Nielsen task force said that it was about time that we recognized that the $800 million plus a year that we are spending on corrections should be reviewed. We are sending far too many people to prison in this country and not using alternatives to imprisonment, wherever possible. We are not emphasizing prevention of crime, which is so fundamental.

The legislation before us which would be the subject of a sunset clause contains many very serious implications, the first one being the loss of inmates' earned remission and the possibility of any earned remission. Second, I would note that prisoners who were incarcerated prior to the passage of the Bill would automatically and arbitrarily have their sentences basically increased by one-third because of the fact that judges will not have taken into consideration in sentencing the fact that an individual would serve the total amount of time.

It would grant new quasi-judicial powers to the National Parole Board when we have seen clearly that it has not used the powers which it has with any great degree of wisdom. Judicial powers are the mandate of the courts, and not the mandate of a Parole Board which has been appointed by the Government of the day, and the members of which in too many cases have been appointed on the basis of partisan political considerations. We have seen a lot of former Members of Parliament who finally found their resting place on the National Parole Board. Surely that is not acceptable with a body which has such sweeping quasi-judicial and judicial powers.

The Bill will lead to an increase in tension between and among inmates and penitentiary staff, which may increase the level of violence within institutions. It will lead to overcrowding, which may also lead to such violence because of increased stress and the total absence of any meaningful programs within the penitentiary system. It will lead to increased psychological damage to prisoners and their families. It will lead to an increase in the level of violence in our communities due to the fact that the prisoners who have been designated as the most dangerous of all are going to be released directly on to the street without any form of surveillance whatsoever.

I would note as well that the Elizabeth Fry Society in Halifax pointed out that a Government which endorses a free enterprise system should not consider the counterproductive measure of removing all incentives from confined human beings. As they say, the increased anxiety and bitterness generated among the inmates who will have their rights denied by the passage of this Bill increases the potential of even more violence in society once these embittered people are released from the human warehouses in which they now find themselves.

The suggestion that there be a sunset clause is not one which is particularly radical. The Senate unanimously recommended such a sunset clause. The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs in the report to which I referred earlier recommended that. It said the following:

The fourth and final issue has to do with the duration of this proposed legislation, and the process by which it should be reviewed. The Solicitor General has indicated that Bill C-67 is in many respects a stop-gap measure intended to deal with some pressing issues pending a more thorough revision of corrections legislation in the near future.

The last time we heard about a stop-gap measure which was just a temporary measure pending more fundamental review was on the prostitution legislation. Members of the House remember that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) said that Bill C-49 is a stop-gap measure, an interim step, and he promised that he would be bringing in more comprehensive legislation to deal with the issue of prostitution. Of course the Government got cold feet and backed off. The so-called stop-gap measure, a repressive sledge-hammer piece of legislation, remains on the books today. It is a piece of legislation which was criticized by the Government House Leader when he was a distinguished member of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. That legislation is on the books today. It was a stop-gap measure and certainly was not followed by any comprehensive legislation.

That is the fear that we have with this legislation which is now before the House. We are told it is a stop-gap measure, but we know very well that it is likely to be the end and not the beginning of any meaningful change.

The Senate recommended that there be a sunset clause and I quote:

—committee is of the opinion that the Bill should contain a "sunset" clause which would deem its provision to have no force after a certain date. We would fix that date at five years from the coming into force of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, they are a fairly conservative body over there so I suggested three years, but the principle of a sunset clause is one which was unanimously supported by the members of the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, and I would hope that this House would see the wisdom of supporting a similar provision.

Finally, I just want to draw to the attention of the House an excellent article which was written by Graham Stewart, the Executive Director of the John Howard Society of Kingston and district. His article, which is entitled Mandatory Supervision: Politics and People, sets out very clearly the arguments for abolition of mandatory supervision. Mr. Stewart also appeared before the legislative committee studying this Bill and made very powerful and compelling arguments as to why we should not adopt this backward approach. In the article Mr. Stewart sets out the objectives of mandatory supervision and shows how these objectives have not been realized since it was adopted in 1970. He concludes:

From a correctional perspective, the Committee—

The committee which studied mandatory supervision, a committee established by the Solicitor General—

—could not possibly have produced a more scathingly critical indictment of Mandatory Supervision.

He then suggests:

—the money spent on Mandatory Supervision could be spent much more effectively; first, in demystifying the correctional process for the public, and secondly, by ensuring that housing, employment and family support networks are maintained for inmates and ex-inmates. This action may not satisfy those who seek punitive revenge, but it might do something to save ourselves and our neighbours from being victims of future crimes. That seems reasonable to me.

That seems reasonable to this Member of Parliament and to this Party as well. I suggest that far from saving ourselves and our neighbours from being victims of future crime, if we adopt this legislation we will be adding to the level of violent crime in our society. For that reason I propose that we reject the Bill before the House, that we adopt the sunset clause, and that we come to our senses and recognize that it is time to examine the fundamental approach taken in this country to corrections, correctional law and the prevention of crime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 33 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost.

• (2020)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will recap very briefly. The Chair has already stated having procedural difficulties with Motion Nos. 1, 5, 6, 7, 12 and 15. It also stated its intention to hear procedural arguments on these motions. I will offer this opportunity to Hon. Members if they have procedural arguments to make on the motions that have been declared out of order.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to say that I have had discussions with the Clerk at the table, who was most helpful. On the basis of those discussions and that review, I certainly have no objection to the proposal of the Chair with respect to the admissibility of the motions before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Therefore, the ruling, as the Chair had stated, is now definitive and I declare the motions out of order.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Solicitor General of Canada) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

Motion agreed to.

PAROLE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There are three report stage motions on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code. They will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That Bill C-68, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 43 to 45 at page 4 and lines 1 to 25 at page 5.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the focus of my concern in the discussion of Bill C-67 and Bill C-68 was on the Draconian and unacceptable provisions of Bill C-67. Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 now before the House are largely of a technical nature, although they address important concerns that were raised by witnesses during the course of the committee hearings.

I was pleased to receive the assurance of the Minister during the hearings, and following the amendments that were tabled, that the amendments put forward to Bill C-68 by the Government did in fact respond to the major concerns addressed by the Canadian Bar Association and the Criminal Lawyers' Association. On that basis, I believe that the three motions in question do speak for themselves and, while I would certainly seek to have them put before the House, I do not intend to elaborate on the motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 1 negatived.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-68, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out line 30 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"14.(1) Where on or after".

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 2 negatived.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That Bill C-68, be amended in Clause 32 by striking out lines 38 to 42 at page 16 and lines 1 to 7 at page 17.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 3 negatived.

Marine Atlantic Inc.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Solicitor General of Canada) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Motion agreed to.

MARINE ATLANTIC INC. ACQUISITION AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-88, An Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and say a few words with respect to third reading of this Bill. I understand that some colleagues may want to add a few words about the Bill.

Let me simply indicate to the House that the ferry services in Atlantic Canada have not done a bad job. In fact, they have done a very good job. We have heard that they could do better. We have heard that perhaps the sea lane links to Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland should in effect, be extensions of the Trans-Canada Highway. I must say, as an Atlantic Canadian, that is not a concept that I have opposed. Indeed, it is one that I supported for 25 or 30 years.

The Bill in front of us tonight does not deal with that. It deals with the simplicity of giving form and legal structure to a child of Canadian National Railways, born some seven or eight years ago in the form of CN Marine. At the time, all in this Chamber were agreed that when CN Marine, Incorporated found its feet, found itself in the position of being able to serve Atlantic Canadians in terms of freight, passenger and vehicle traffic between the mainland and the islands and the intercoastal trade, that we would place it in a position of being independent, separate and apart; indeed, we describe it as an entity on its own and a Crown corporation responsible to itself.

There is always a conflict when we ask an agency to respond to the needs of another agency that, in fact, serves an entirely different goal. The matter in front of Your Honour tonight gives body and spirit to that. It gives to the management and employees of CN Marine its own identity. We call it Marine Atlantic, Atlantic Marine, and we do so because it reflects the Atlantic regional nature and concept of the effort and activity of CN Marine. We call it that because in fact it does finally separate it from CN. We do so because we believe that, and so do the employees. They are quite prepared now, today, and tomorrow to stand up on their own, to build for Atlantic Canadians that type of service, that type of facility, that is required by people living in Prince Edward Island and in the great Province of Newfoundland.

We would hope that members of this Chamber would give it expeditious passage. It was dealt with, I must say, with expedition. I must commend the Chairman of the legislative committee. Regretfully, he is not able to be with us this evening. I would commend the members of both opposition Parties for their role in rapidly dealing with this. I would commend them for their very reasonable consideration of evidence that was given to us by the President of CN Marine, who will become the President of Marine Atlantic. I would ask that this matter pass somewhat expeditiously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will call on the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Angus: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I think there is the suggestion that Mr. Baker should have the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson). I am sorry about that.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am glad Your Honour has the name of my riding correct, and I want to tell my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party that I am Mr. Henderson, not Mr. Baker. Anyway, the first name is correct.

Mr. Angus: George is such a great speaker.

Mr. Henderson: I do not want to ever insinuate that I am as great an orator as is my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), although we share the same first name.

I would like to briefly speak on Bill C-38. We will not prolong the Bill this evening. Changing the name of CN Marine to Marine Atlantic is not really a significant change. I would like to address the service itself. Ferry service should be made more efficient for the customers. The customers of whom I speak are people from my province, the great Province of Prince Edward Island and also those who visit from other parts of North America, who find themselves, on many occasions, waiting quite extended periods of time in order to get on the ferries. Increasingly, they also find it is becoming more and more expensive.

Almost every year, we see increases in the ferry rates, but we do not see a corresponding increase in efficiency to the travelling public. Not only are we paying more to use the service, but we seem to find, almost annually, fewer and fewer crossings. In my riding, in the last year and a half, I have heard many complaints from truckers. They are taking produce, mainly potatoes, but also some other perishables such as fish, and they must leave at certain times in order to catch the ferry. Some times of the year, certainly in July and August when the tourist traffic is heavy, we find that there are long line-ups. Sometimes they have to wait for two or three crossings before they can actually get their trucks on the ferry, because they are competing with the tourist industry. That delays them. When going to Montreal from Prince Edward Island with a load of fresh fish, three or four hours delay has a tremendous effect on the quality of the product and, if it is too long a delay, can reflect in the price paid back to the producer.

It is very important that the Government not only change the name of CN Marine to Marine Atlantic but that it also insist, in the mandate that is given to this Crown corporation, that it provide the proper kind of service to the travelling public. Of course, if one lives in Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, where the Borden ferry reaches the mainland, one can get into one's car and drive to Vancouver, British Columbia, without paying any kind of a toll at all on the Trans-Canada Highway or other highways. Unfortunately, if one is from Newfoundland or Prince Edward Island and one leaves Summerside or Charlottetown or Tignish, one must pay the cost of using that ferry, going back and forth.

I have had in the past, and I will have in the future—unless some Government in the future does something about it—some sort of disagreement with that sort of concept. I believe that the residents of the Provinces of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland should have free access on the ferry in order to give everyone right across the country an equal opportunity. It should be the same as it is for those who live in Ontario or Manitoba, or in any other province, where one can drive on the highways without paying for the cost.

Some people have said: "What about Vancouver Island?" I believe it is a different situation on Vancouver Island. If one is a British Columbian and comes from Vancouver Island, then one is part of British Columbia. However, that area falls under provincial jurisdiction. All the different islands and areas are tied up making them one province. I make that remark because Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland are somewhat different. I would not say that there should actually be more than one free crossing. However, there should be at least one.

Those are my remarks. I hope that the Government of Canada and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will not be content to say: "We have done something for CN Marine by changing its name". I hope that they will carry that just a little bit further and insist that this new Crown agency provide the kind of service that is necessary in order to give the people who are living on the two islands an equal opportunity and to make them equal partners with the rest of Canada.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join in briefly in the debate on Bill C-88, an Act which will carve out Marine Atlantic Inc. from CNR. Before I start I would like to apologize to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) for having referred to him by the name of one of his colleagues. Perhaps I did it because to someone from central Canada, such as myself, all the folks in Atlantic Canada look the same. I suspect that the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) will begin to look the same as the Hon. Member for Egmont as he adds a few years to his age. I apologize to the Hon. Member.

I find it ironic that we are dealing with third reading of this Bill today. I realize that is not because of any plan—God knows there is no plan in this place these days. It is ironic that on the day that another decision has been announced by Canadian National Railways with respect to a change in services provided in Atlantic Canada, and when we recently saw a carve-out of another arm of CN, that we are today in effect finalizing the fragmentation of that great company known as the CNR. Today we are carving out the marine side, at least as it applies to the ferry service. Earlier today there was an announcement made with respect to the privatization of the Moncton shops, and whatever that may mean.

Mr. Nickerson: It means we are going to save the jobs in Moncton.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member talks about perhaps saving the jobs in Moncton. Time will tell. Perhaps the answer to that question will be determined at the next election, especially in respect to what the people of Moncton think with regard to the decision that was made by CN and, ultimately, by the Government of Canada.

A decision was also made to privatize the CN trucking operation, CN Route. I find it ironic that today of all days we are in the process of finalizing what in theory is just a paper move. We are changing a name. We are changing the ownership from indirect ownership by the Government of Canada to a direct ownership. I am a bit worried about that. I am worried because I am not sure what the ultimate impact will be on the people of Atlantic Canada. I am not sure that there will be no change, as the Government suggests. The Government suggests that there will be no change in service and no change in the way in which Marine Atlantic Inc. operates vis-à-vis CN Marine.

We have been told that there will be no change in the rates, other than those that are normally applied through inflation. Time will tell. I hope that this move will not have a negative effect on the people of Atlantic Canada. I say that because of my belief in this nation. We would be quite happy if there were a negative change and if it were taken out on the Government of the day. That would help those of us on this side of the House. I do not say that in a partisan way. I strongly believe that what we should be doing is supporting the people of Canada.

The area upon which I would like to focus is an area which has caused the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) to have a gleam in his eye for the 20 years or more that he has been in this House. I refer to the extension of the Trans-Canada Highway—

Mr. Forrestall: I agree with that.

Mr. Angus: —to include those vital links to our water-isolated provinces in Atlantic Canada. Someone who lives in northern Ontario can drive from Thunder Bay to Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver without having to pass through a toll booth and without having to pay a specific fee to use a surface transportation link. As a Canadian, that person finds it disgusting to know that the people in Atlantic Canada, who have no choice when it comes to communicating with other parts of this land, have to pay a fee to use that extension of the Trans-Canada Highway.

I moved an amendment in committee which would have ensured that Marine Atlantic Inc. would operate under the same fee structure as the Trans-Canada Highway. In other words, it would operate at no direct charge to the user. Had the Government the fortitude to accept my amendment, it would have united the country in a real way and not just a theoretical one.

In order not to mislead anyone, I want to make it clear that we taxpayers would share even more than we do today in the cost of providing those services. Through our federal tax dollars we would pay for the ease of access from Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland to the mainland to ensure that those Canadians, those residents of those waterbound provinces, would have the same access in the sense that it would not cost them any more than it costs you or I, Mr. Speaker, to reach another part of this great nation.

Obviously, the chance for us to make that change has been lost. Given this Government's fascination with cost recovery and user pay, it is doubtful that under this administration there will be a change for the better. I warn Hon. Members that there will be a change for the worse. As the Conservative Government applies more and more user fees, the people of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland will have less access to the same services to which we in the rest of Canada have access.

Last Friday I received some information regarding a cost-recovery Bill that was passed in the United States which gives that Government the power to charge for customs services. It gives it the power to charge every truck, every package of mail that goes through customs and every commercial vessel that enters into American waters a fee. This is directly related to the costs of Marine Atlantic and it will come home to roost with this Government.

Every time a ferry docks at Bar Harbour in Maine, it will have to pay $397. That does not seem like very much, but we must look at the frequency of visits to that community. That community in the United States is one which we service though we probably do not have to. However, we do so because it is appropriate and important for the people of the community of Yarmouth that we have that link.

We as Canadians will have to pay more. Marine Atlantic will have to come up with another $66,000 per year in fees that it will have to pay for the service. One of two groups will have to pay for that. It will either be the users through tolls charged by Marine Atlantic or an increase in the subsidies which are already at around 55 per cent. Those subsidies are paid by the taxpayers of Canada.

The Government will have a hard time fighting against the imposition of user fees in the United States because it believes in user fees. It believes that we should draw more and more money from the specific users of a service. It does not believe that we as a nation have a responsibility to provide the infrastructure and the transportation and communication links. The Government will be like a toothless tiger if it goes to Washington to complain about this new fee that will be charged as of July 7.

I know that Government Members from Atlantic Canada understand the negative impact of that kind of approach. I regret that this is the situation in which we find ourselves. I regret the impact that this will have on the users of Marine Atlantic and on the communities in Atlantic Canada.

Before I close, there are a few other things I wish to say. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) was present in the House tonight and perhaps he is watching us now on television. We know that the potato producers in Prince Edward Island do not have any alternatives. If they want to get their produce to market, they have to rely on marine services. Anything that the Government does that will have an impact on their costs will clearly have an impact on their ability not only to sell produce, but to actually receive a return for their labour. I would caution the Government to avoid excesses and to avoid this fantasy it has of getting more money out of the users of these services. Ultimately, this will kill agricultural, commercial, small business and fisheries industries in Atlantic Canada.

We will support Bill C-88. We recognize that it only enacts something which actually happened over a year ago and we accept that. However, I will repeat what I said earlier and that is that we wish the Government had come to Parliament first to have the Bill debated before the carve-out actually occurred. Let us think about that. In the future, legislation should be debated and then things should happen, not the other way around.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on Bill C-88. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), has said, a great deal more must be done than to merely change the name of this company from CN Marine to Marine Atlantic Inc.

Mr. Forrestall: You had 30 years to do that, Russ, and you didn't.

Mr. MacLellan: I would also like to comment on what the Parliamentary Secretary is mumbling about, and that is the CN system of companies which I feel have become a national disgrace. They have been allowed to get out of hand and to go their own way without any concern for the people of Canada. For instance, I look at what Petro-Canada has done to Canadians at the pumps through the exorbitant price it is charging for gasoline and the way it is ripping off the producers by charging a lower price than comparable producers receive in the United States—

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Without reflecting on the Chair, I wonder whether the Chair might want to give some direction to the Chamber with respect to relevancy. We are dealing with the change in the name of a Crown corporation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): Of course the Hon. Member should respect the rules and I am sure that he will keep his remarks relevant to the subject matter of the Bill in question.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will keep my comments relevant. I go on to say that I can see that Petro-Canada will follow in the footsteps of the CN family of companies.

Nevertheless, I am very pleased to see that CN Marine has been spun away from CN. I hope that will make a difference. I hope that the influence of CN on CN Marine will be broken and that it will not be tied by an umbilical cord of nonsense, impropriety and services which run contrary to the benefit of the people of Canada.

CN Marine has had to bear a very difficult weight on its shoulders by being associated with CN. It has had to pay for marshalling services for which it really should not have had to pay, costs which should have been the responsibility of CN Rail. CN likes to say that it was not getting any funding from CN Marine or any of the subsidiaries or from the Government of Canada and that it was totally self-sufficient. It was bleeding enough from companies like CN Marine and VIA Rail to make up for any loss it would ever have had to make up. Of course, VIA Rail is not in question here tonight, but VIA Rail has been stymied even more than CN Marine.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont, has said, the very fact that this name is being changed will not alter the activities of the new company unless the Government gives it proper direction. It will not change unless the Government listens to Canadians and considers the connection between North Sydney and Port aux Basques an extension of the Trans-Canada Highway. The great increases that have recently been put on should stop and the service should be run in the best interests of the people.

The Government recently spent a good deal of money for a new vessel, Caribou, which has good sleeping quarters and can be a very positive feature of the gulf crossing. However, what has CN Marine done? It has put the Caribou on during the day crossing and has put a ferry, which does not have any sleeping accommodations, on the evening runs. Therefore, there is no sleeping capacity in the evening and all sorts of sleeping capacity during the day.

What kind of service are people getting on the gulf crossing? They are waiting for hours. The new vessel, which was supposed to be able to turn around quickly, is leaving port in North Sydney two hours late because the loading ramp and vessel do not coincide. CN Marine originally located in Moncton, and rightfully so. Initially it was a spinoff of CN, and CN has its Atlantic quarters in Moncton. It was only right that it should be located there. However, in addition to having its headquarters in Moncton, this is a company which has a legal office in Halifax and a gulf headquarters in St. John's, Newfoundland. Neither city is served by CN Marine. They are there for political reasons. It is because the Members from those two locations, who are both Ministers of the Government, felt that the Crown corporation should have a presence in their constituencies.

Particularly in the case of St. John's, jobs were taken away from North Sydney and an area of Cape Breton Island with an unemployment rate of approximately 40 per cent. I do not begrudge St. John's, Newfoundland or any other community jobs. However, we should not take from one area of the country to give to another. We should not do so arbitrarily, at the expense of relocating people who have lived in communities all their working lives and of putting them in an area which does not have any relationship to the company through which they will be employed.

Marine Atlantic Inc.

Granted, the subsidy for CN Marine is extensive. It has been stated tonight that the subsidy is 55 per cent. Undoubtedly it is a weighty expense for the Government of Canada. However, it is also important to consider service to Canadians. Service to Canadians must be foremost. This is really what CN Marine and the new company, Marine Atlantic Inc., must be all about. In addition to the subsidy, the Government of Canada is paying to Atlantic Container Express, which ships directly from Montreal to St. John's, a subsidy of millions of dollars per year to compete against CN Marine. What will be the result of this? Because Atlantic Container Express is being subsidized to compete against CN Marine, CN Marine will lose more money and will have to be further subsidized. Therefore, the private sector and the public sector are both being subsidized by the Government of Canada. However, if we took the subsidy off the private sector, the subsidy to the public sector would be less and Canadians would save millions of dollars per year. This is the burden under which the new company will have to operate. This is the burden of complete inattention and unconcern on the part of the Government for a service on which people in Atlantic Canada must rely.

What is CN Marine doing with regard to public relations in the communities which it is serving? For example, in North Sydney, CN Marine will not do a thing to promote its downtown area. It will not erect a sign indicating where the downtown is located or how one gets there. In fact, it discourages people from leaving their cars and going to the downtown area of North Sydney, although it is only a few hundred feet away.

These people are waiting for hours in their cars to take the ferry to Newfoundland, and CN Marine and the Government of Canada have provided nothing for them to do while they are waiting. It is really a case of discouraging people from taking the ferry service. It is not that they could take an alternate service, but it has a direct bearing upon Newfoundland tourism. If people hear about long waits and overdue ferry departures, they will be discouraged from taking the service to Newfoundland. In effect, it is discouraging tourism in that province at the same time as the Province of Newfoundland is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to promote it. The Government of Canada is working contrary to the Province of Newfoundland and acting against the interest of that province.

Also a little game is being played by the federal Government and the Province of Newfoundland. The federal Government, through CN, is discussing the possibility of closing completely the rail line in Newfoundland. The Province of Newfoundland is saying that it does not want that. One of the terms of union in 1949 was that the rail line would be maintained, and it cannot be closed unless the province gives its permission. Of course there is the question of what the Province of Newfoundland will take for its permission or how much it will accept. That is something we have yet to determine.

One can believe that a figure will be reached because CN is playing its old game of let the services deteriorate until they get so bad that no one will want to use them or they will not be safe to use. Then a large amount of money will have to be put into this system in order to bring the services up to standard, and no one will be able to afford it. In that event, the province is faced with the likelihood that the service could be closed.

What would be the result of the railway service in Newfoundland being closed? It means that there would only be a short period of time before the next step is contemplated, that is, the closing and shutting down of the rail line between eastern Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island. This is the secret agenda which CN likes to work over at the expense of people in Atlantic Canada. This is the secret agenda which it denies. This is the secret agenda which it works on and plans toward. Such was the situation in the shops in Moncton. There was no indication or statement with regard to those shops. CN was asked many times what it would do with them. It was announced today that they would be sold to the private sector and that there would be no loss of jobs for the people in Moncton. I should like to know how the federal Government will enforce that. Once the shops are sold, how will the federal Government prohibit the private sector company from reducing the workforce? Once it is sold, it is sold. There is no way unless we get special conditions from the purchaser beforehand, and I do not believe any of these conditions have been obtained.

In closing, I should like to say that the situation in Atlantic Canada in respect of transportation is a very bad one. This Act may or may not have a positive bearing. It remains to be seen. It is largely upon the back of the federal Government to give proper instructions to the new company to operate in the best interest of Atlantic Canadians and to ensure that subsidies are maintained, so that rates are not increased to such an extent that no one will be able to use them.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-88. Hon. Members opposite were attempting to distract me from my duty and to prevent me from participating in this final opportunity to try to restore to the House of Commons some sense of sensitivity, understanding, and appreciation of the values which make Canada the kind of country it is. When Hon. Members opposite find the courage, integrity, and backbone to rise in their places to defend this measure, they would have us believe, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) attempted a few days ago, that Bill C-88 is a Bill about a change of name for a Crown corporation.

This bill would formalize in law, in legislation, the severing of the relationship between CN Marine and CN that has taken place over the last year. The Parliamentary Secretary and other Members opposite want us to believe that nothing more than a name change in Bill C-88 is what is on the agenda of the House of Commons tonight. Nothing could be further from the truth. Above and beyond simply changing the name of CN Marine to Marine Atlantic Inc., the implications of the Bill are profound for the people of the Atlantic region.

The Government of Canada is asking Members during these dying days of Parliament, when it hopes the people of Canada and Members of this Parliament are not paying attention, to slip through this Draconian measure called Bill C-88 which will force upon the Atlantic region a user-pay philosophy. With one broad sweep of the sword, one foul vicious insensitive and cruel sweep of the sword, the Government of Canada is attempting not only to sever CN Marine from the main company, CN, but it is attempting to impose on the people of Atlantic Canada a user-pay concept that fails to recognize those things that make the Atlantic region of this country unique and different from the country as a whole.

It is interesting to note that Bill C-88 received first reading in the House of Commons in December, 1985. I want you to note that date, December 1985, Mr. Speaker. It was September, 1985 that the ministerial task force on program review, more colloquially and commonly known as the Nielsen task force, the task force of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), submitted its report to the Cabinet of Canada. It was a task force established to assist the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in setting within his Department a program of expenditure reduction.

In September, 1985, that task force looked at the Atlantic region of Canada and said it was possible for the Government of Canada, by walking away from some concepts we hold near and dear in this country, to save some dollars, to alter the bottom line of the ledger of the Government of Canada. That task force, which reported in September, 1985, a scant two months before this measure found its way on to the floor of the House of Commons for first reading said, and I am paraphrasing, that the cost of ensuring that the people of Atlantic Canada would feel, with respect to transportation systems, a sense of being first-class Canadians was a cost too high. The price was too high. The Nielsen task force report recommended that the Government of Canada could achieve substantial savings in the Atlantic region by lowering the level of service to Atlantic Canadians provided under CN Marine by lowering the quality of service and by increasing the rates.

The Government of Canada was so proud of that one year initiative undertaken under the direction of the Deputy Prime Minister that for the first time in the history of Parliament, the Government of Canada did not provide free copies of the report. The Government said to the people that if you want to know what the Deputy Prime Minister is suggesting in all regions, not just Atlantic Canada, for a mere $300 or $400 we will send you a copy of the 27 volumes.

What is the Government attempting? What is the Government doing to reduce the deficit? A Conservative Member said the Government is attempting to reduce the deficit. The Government said it would reduce the deficit by identifying a whole series of programs and government initiatives that represented fat and waste. We on this side of the House, who would endorse such an exercise of cutting fat and waste, have been waiting with bated breath for the Government to come forward with a long list of scurrilous and disgusting and wasteful programs.

We have waited in vain because there is no long list. Instead what we have seen is Bill C-96 which would cut $8 billion from the national deficit by transferring that $8 billion on to the backs of the provincial Governments. Members and the Canadian public would say what is Bill C-96, what does that officious sounding name denote? It happens to be a Bill that would cut from the health and education programs some $8 billion by transfering that deficit on to the backs of provincial Governments.

In the same vein, with the same insensitive approach, the Government of Canada has produced Bill C-88, a Bill to sever CN Marine from CN, to set up a separate Crown corporation in order to identify the cost of providing that service to Atlantic Canadians and to be able to target better fare increases and system reductions in the Atlantic regions.

Atlantic Canadians being frugal people, and I am proud to say I am an Atlantic Canadian, do not mind any Government cutting the fat away from the system, but when the Government wields the long arm of the sword indiscriminately and slashes through the fat into the muscle and bites deep into the bone straight through to the marrow and bleeds that marrow out of the system—the marrow which is important in preserving the body—then the people of Atlantic Canada begin to wonder about this faithless, mindless approach—

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder what relevance the Hon. Member's comments have to Bill C-88 which is merely to change the name of CN Marine to CN Atlantic Inc. I see no relevance in his comments whatsoever. I hope you will ask him to make his comments relevant to the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) would be wise to review the Bill. I have difficulty finding his comments relevant to the subject matter. Maybe he could further inform us.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Seeing how the Speaker has demonstrated a level of intelligence that would suggest the Speaker is open to being educated to the reality of Atlantic Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: Let me say to the Speaker, that the people of Atlantic Canada think indeed that a measure—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Come on, Brian.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It seems the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has provoked another point of order.

Marine Atlantic Inc.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I seek the Chair's advice as to whether or not the comments of the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) are a challenge of the Chair. They are at the very least totally unwarranted and unjustified.

• (2120)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order. The Chair does not intend to pursue the matter. I listened very carefully—

Mr. Nunziata: Tell them to stop interrupting a good speech.

Mr. Beatty: If we hear one, we won't.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order. It is not good to interrupt the Speaker to ask him to stop interrupting other people. I remind the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) that, according to the Canadian Constitution, education is a matter of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is because of the great respect I have for the Speaker that I agree with you. I am delighted to learn that education is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, as if I ever had any doubt on that matter. However, I would remind you that the Bill which I was referencing, Bill C-96, which expresses the same kind of governmental mentality as Bill C-88, would cut about $5 billion from the education system of the country. That Bill originates in this Parliament rather than in provincial legislatures. Being the fairminded and objective person that you are, Mr. Speaker, you will acknowledge that fact. It is only because of the warped mentality that gives rise to a disinvestment in our youth through a cut in the education system that I make reference to Bill C-88 which indicates a lack of confidence in the Atlantic region.

Members ask how my comments are relevant to Bill C-88, which is merely a name change for CN Marine. Because you are a fairly objective, honest, caring, sensitive and dedicated servant of the House, you would obviously want to know how Bill C-88 represents much more than a simple name change of CN Marine. Members opposite laugh their way through this session and into oblivion. Oblivion will one day catch up with them for this insensitive behaviour.

Members should know that in Atlantic Canada the level of service provided by CN Marine, or the new company, Marine Atlantic Inc. as designated by this Bill, is not the pleasant scenic route by the sea. We in Newfoundland do not take CN Marine ferries for the pleasant scenic route by the sea. We take them because, contrary to popular opinion, we do not have trucks which float on water, and neither do we occupy, despite common misconceptions, God boots which allow us to walk on water. The CN Marine ferry service is the only way in which we can move our people, goods and services around the Atlantic region on a practical day-to-day basis.

This Bill does substantially more than simply changing the name of the service. It takes out of the pockets of CN Marine, the company which exists in advance of the passage of this Bill, some $30 million in accumulated revenues which the company has built up to allow it to fulfil its capital program which is to provide three new ferries for the East Coast ferry system. Through the new financial arrangements provided for in this Bill, $30 million is taken out of the pockets of CN Marine.

Those Members who sit amidst the glitter of the chandeliers, who are blinded by the shine of the marble, who are caught up in the richness of the texture of the wood and have forgotten from where they come may not think that $30 million is a lot of money. To the people of Atlantic Canada who are riding a ferry service little better than a cattle car, that $30 million represents an investment in the hope that the system might become civilized. This Bill takes that $30 million of accumulated revenue, hits it like a neutron bomb and vapourizes it away from the CN Marine company, in due course vapourizing the hopes of Atlantic Canadians to be served by a ferry service which indicates that the Government has some confidence and faith in and appreciation for the people of Atlantic Canada.

That is how my comments are relevant. I know that you, Mr. Speaker, feel much more informed and have much more empathy for the people of Atlantic Canada, having heard those pearly words of wisdom which I uttered on their behalf.

Before I was so rudely interrupted by Members opposite expressing their insensitivity for the region, I started to say that Bill C-88 was another step along the course of user-pay. Members should ask themselves what user-pay is. What is this concept which says that the people of Atlantic Canada shall pay a price to live in Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Forrestall: Oh, come on.

Mr. Tobin: The Member had an opportunity to speak but he found neither his legs nor his backbone nor his integrity nor his courage nor his tongue to speak in this place. Suddenly he stands and mumbles unofficially from his seat utterances which make no sense and make a contribution to this place equivalent to that of an unguided missile. If he wants an opportunity to speak, I will gladly take my seat and allow him to speak because I would like to hear a defence of this Bill.

Mr. Forrestall: You're boring.

Mr. Tobin: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the user-pay concept which the Government of Canada intends to foist upon the people of Atlantic Canada would be equivalent to the Government of Canada saying to the grain farmers on the prairies that because their prices are the lowest in 60 years they, the grain farmers of the prairies who till the soil and preserve the breadbasket of Canada, should walk away from their fields. Is there a Member of Parliament who would suggest that to the grain farmers on the prairies?

Proposing this Bill and seeing it pass is equivalent to telling the dairy farmers of Ontario and Quebec, who receive a $300 million subsidy a year, that because their milk production is inefficient and uneconomic, they should slaughter their herds. Is there a Canadian who would tell the dairy farmers of Quebec who receive a $300 million subsidy for their herds every year that they ought to slaughter them? Not even the Newfoundlanders, who are the beneficiaries of a scant $25 million subsidy to provide a ferry service which the Government of Canada now wants to cut out, would say that to their fellow Canadians in the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

If Members opposite cannot find their legs and tongues, I at least beg them to find their courage and stand for a Canada which treats all its citizens as first-class citizens, regardless of where they live, and defeat this Draconian measure, Bill C-88, which is described as a mere name change.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my friend and colleague for a most informative and eloquent speech. I knew very little about this piece of legislation until I walked into the House and listened to my colleague. In the few short moments that my colleague has spoken, he has enlightened me tremendously with respect to this piece of legislation.

Being a Member from the urban riding of York South—Weston in the metropolis of Toronto, at times I am not as familiar as I should be with matters of concern to Atlantic Canadians. I would like to indicate to my constituents and all the residents of Metropolitan Toronto that we are well served when a Member such as the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) considers this piece of legislation and criticizes the Government because government Members are not standing up to speak out in favour of their constituents.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a specific question regarding user-pay. I understand that a number of weeks back the House considered Bill C-75 in amendment to the Canada Shipping Act. That Bill, too, introduced a form of user-pay. During his submissions, my colleague indicated that the legislation was another step along the way toward user-pay, another step toward reducing the deficit by making the less fortunate pay for services which before now—

Mr. Forrestall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Nothing in the Bill before us in any way alters any charges or costs to the taxpayers whatsoever. Aggrandizement is one thing, and it is rather useful, but can we stay with the Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I was going to say that I take the point made by the Parliamentary Secretary as being a point concerning the rule of relevance which, from time to time, does merit some consideration in this House. I say for the benefit of all Members that we would do well to keep it in mind.

I believe the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) was about to conclude.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague pointed out, that is precisely the point. Members opposite are so irrelevant they cannot find their tongues to speak.

Mr. Forrestall: Oh, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Forrestall: I will not have the likes of that impugn my motives in this Chamber.

Mr. Nunziata: Far be it for me to in any way impugn the motives of the hon. gentleman opposite. I will not in any way question his motives but I will question the motives of this Government. I would like to put my question to my colleague. Why is this Government introducing this legislation which it claims is a simple name change? I suspect that there is method to its madness. This is part of a scheme to take from Atlantic Canadians something which they have cherished for so many years. Why? What is the motive, my friend? Tell us.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, let me simply say that when the Government has succeeded in laying waste to the Atlantic Canada landscape, it will not really matter much whether that destruction has been wrought by accident or design. The result in the end will be the same. The Government of Canada, either because of insensitivity or, frankly, stupidity, will have altered the nature of the regions of this country by imposing a user-pay concept that strains and tears at the fabric of this country, which in turn defines for Canadians a sense of national identity and national unity. The Parliamentary Secretary could not be more wrong, and he generally tries to be somewhat relevant in his comments, nor more inadvertently, accidentally misleading when he says to Parliament that this Bill represents nothing more than a mere name change.

This Bill is an attempt to hive off the ferry services of Atlantic Canada which are essential in particular to the island province of my colleague from Egmont. They are essential to my own island Province of Newfoundland as a means of moving freight and people. The Government of Canada has lifted the gun to its shoulder, drawn the long bead with its eye, targeted the victim, Atlantic Canada, and this Bill is the bullet it intends to shoot into the heart of the economy of my region by attacking the most fundamental and necessary means of transportation in that region.

Members opposite may sit and huff and puff and twist and turn, but their silence is what Atlantic Canadians shall remember them for. They are only noticeable for and represented by the echo of their silence in this House, their inability to stand against the whip of party discipline and speak on behalf of the people who sent them here. They should oppose this legislation which would deny Atlantic Canada its unique and valued contribution to the Canadian mosaic. This Bill says to the people of Atlantic Canada that they shall pay a heavy price for where they chose to live in this country. The people of Atlantic Canada do not appreciate this Genghis Khan kind of consultation which will ride roughshod across their traditional rights and ignore the very nature of this country.

I will say this. The people of Atlantic Canada are tolerant. They are patient. However, they shall never forget that it was this Government, in its haste to balance the books, that decided the people of Atlantic Canada were expendable and the services they have come to depend upon can be wiped away at the slash of a pen.

I advise Members opposite from Atlantic Canada not to sleep soundly at night because the people of Atlantic Canada shall pass their judgment, as surely as I stand here, come the next election. I warn those Members that the people are weighing our words, watching us here, and they have not seen Members opposite find the courage to stand in their place and speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I must take this opportunity to try and bring some semblance of rationalization to this debate. What we are endeavouring to do here tonight is not to crush Atlantic Canadians. We are here trying to do service to a matter initiated by the Party, of which the Hon. Member who has seen fit to satisfy his ego on the floor here tonight as opposed to doing justice to the Bill, is a Member, the very Party he supports. We are here giving order and legitimacy to Marine Atlantic, not Marine Atlantica. We are simply doing that. We are changing absolutely nothing. If he has objections to CN Marine, then let him address his remarks and comments to his present and former leader, and former Ministers of Transport in his Party. Do not stand in this Chamber and lay upon me, Sir, any lack of concern about Atlantic Canada. You, Sir, are a puppy. You are a young man; grow up in your concern for Atlantic Canada and be honest when you are on your feet in this Chamber. You might just last around here a little while.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), only a couple of seconds.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I hope you make it at least 15 or 20 seconds. Even Newfoundlanders have trouble in less than three seconds making an articulate comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Well, there goes the time.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

• (2140)

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the hour is late. Members opposite are getting rather testy when Members on this side of the House are making worthwhile submissions that go to the very heart of this particular piece of legislation. I would have preferred to have my colleague, the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) carry on with his submissions. I did not intend to speak to Bill C-88, but listening to the Parliamentary Secretary provoked me into making some submissions with regard to Bill C-88.

As I indicated earlier, I am a Member from an urban riding in Metropolitan Toronto, and Bill C-88 does not directly affect in any manner my constituents in York South-Weston. We have no ferry services in my particular riding. In fact, we have very limited ferry service on Lake Ontario.

The Parliamentary Secretary stands up and has the temerity, the unmitigated gall to criticize my colleague, the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe for standing up for the people of Atlantic Canada. I have been in this House close to two years and day, after day, after day, my colleagues from Atlantic Canada stood up in this House of Commons and have spoken out for the people of Atlantic Canada. Not only have they stood in their place and spoken in this House of Commons, they have spoken at caucus and they have spoken across the country. They are doing a service not only to their constituents, but to all Atlantic Canadians.

What about the Atlantic Canadian Members across the way? They are quite content to sit on their hands and to hurl cheap insults across the way. They have the temerity to criticize Members of the Opposition who dare speak up for Atlantic Canada.

I suggest if you take a poll in Atlantic Canada and ask the people who live there who was speaking out for their best interests, they will name Liberal Member after Liberal Member. They will say these are the politicians in Ottawa who are speaking out for Atlantic Canada, not Members like the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) who is content to simply sit on his hands while this particular piece of legislation is debated.

I challenge Members opposite to stand up for a change. We can respect Members in this House who stand up and express an opinion with regard to a piece of legislation. We may disagree on this side of the House with the submissions made on that side of the House, but at least we will know that Parliament is being served, democracy is being served. What we are doing is debating, the cut and thrust of debate, requiring different points of view.

What we have found day after day in this House is that the Liberal Members are standing to speak, the odd New Democratic Member is standing to speak, and there is a wall of silence across the way. I note that the Government House Leader is in the House today. Rare is the time, rare is the occasion when the Government House Leader will stand in his place to speak out for the people of his riding, the people of his region in Canada.

We are dealing here with what we consider to be an extremely important piece of legislation. My colleague, the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe went on at some length as to the concerns he had with respect to this particular piece of legislation. I must commend my colleague for his submissions with regard to this Bill.

The Parliamentary Secretary and other Conservative Members in the House say it is only a Bill to change the name, an Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc., and to provide for other matters in relation thereto.

If you read through the legislation as I have, there are four pages to the legislation with a schedule. It would appear at first glance that that is the intent of the legislation, to simply change the name, or to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. I would like to know from Conservative Members of Parliament why they have brought forward Bill C-88. We do not know. Is it part of a master plan with respect to transportation in Atlantic Canada? Is it because the Conservative Government is paranoid with regard to the deficit and this is part of the cost-cutting plan of this Conservative Government? We do not know because Members opposite do not have the courage to stand up, to explain to the people of Canada what this particular piece of legislation is all about.

We on this side of the House are left in a position where we must speculate as to what the Government is doing. We know, and I am sure you will agree with me, that it is difficult most of the time to understand what this Government is doing because it is obvious, given the legislative agenda that has been presented to the House over the last 20 months, that this Government has no direction, it has no vision for Canada, it simply does not know where it is going. It is like a ship adrift in the high seas without a captain.

Speaking of captains, we had the pleasure last night of watching the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) explain his position on free trade. Mr. Speaker, you are shaking your head, and you might ask what the relevance is of the Prime Minister's performance last night on national television to Bill C-88.

An Hon. Member: What is the relevance of free trade?

Mr. Nunziata: The Conservative Member way down in the corner says, "What is the relevance of free trade?"

An Hon. Member: The Prime Minister was good last night.

Mr. Nunziata: The Member says the Prime Minister was good last night. I am not sure what he was referring to.

If I may continue, the Government, through the Prime Minister, last night tried to explain to the people of Canada what it is doing with regard to free trade. One of the reasons why the Prime Minister found it necessary to go on national television, the first time in the short mandate of this Government, is because he realized that the people of Canada did not understand what the Government was doing with regard to free trade. There was mass confusion from the Conservative benches. If the Members opposite would stand up and try to explain themselves, then it would not be necessary for the Prime Minister of Canada to go on national television to try to explain himself with regard to free trade.

Likewise, with regard to Bill C-88. The Members opposite should stand up to indicate why it is necessary for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to be authorized to require all the common shares of Marine Atlantic Inc. held by the national company. The national company is defined in the legislation as the Canadian National Railway Company, CN in other words.

This Bill, pursuant to clause 4, authorizes the Minister to acquire all the common shares of Marine Atlantic Inc. which are held by the national company. The Bill goes on to state that shares acquired by the Minister pursuant to clause 4(1) shall be held by the Minister in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada.

Members opposite have not indicated why it is necessary to allow the Minister of Transport to acquire all the shares of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to hold those shares in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada. The Bill authorizes CN, the national company, on the direction of the Minister, to transfer to the Minister all the common shares of Marine Atlantic Inc. held by the national company.

Again, there appears to be some redundancy with regard to the legislation. I know that some Members opposite may want to speak. If there is some indication that they want to do so, I would be pleased to resume my seat. However, since no Member opposite is standing to speak to this legislation, I am pleased to continue.

The Minister of Transport is a man of integrity. In the two years that I have been in the House of Commons, I have found that he is one of the finer Ministers in the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: I have absolutely no hesitation in saying so. The Minister has been honest and forthright in my dealings with him throughout the course of this Parliament. He and his staff have attempted to assist in every way possible in dealing with concerns relating to his Department. When questions are put to the Minister in the House, he honestly tries to answer with the least amount of partisanship, unlike many of his colleagues in the Cabinet who believe that Question Period is meant as an opportunity for them to take cheap partisan shots at the Opposition.

Since the Minister has displayed integrity and honesty, and has attempted to give explanations, I hope the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary will share some of the Minister's qualities and offer some explanation as to the intent and purpose of this legislation.

We know that this legislation will indeed be referred to the committee where we will have an opportunity to further consider it and hear from the various interest groups.

Mr. Angus: It's third reading.

Mr. Nunziata: I am advised that the debate on this legislation is drawing to an end, thank goodness. It has been a very long day, Mr. Speaker.

The Government would like to pass this Bill and move on to Bill C-75, which is another piece of legislation of extreme importance to Atlantic Canada. It affects Atlantic Canadians very directly, especially with regard to clause 4 which was met with almost universal objection.

I will conclude my remarks because my friend and colleague from Newfoundland, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe has returned to the House. I know he will have several questions to ask me and will perhaps comment on the submissions I have made on his behalf.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this, but is the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) aware of the impact that Bill C-88 will have on the Toronto Island ferry? Will he comment as to the ramifications for his constituency?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party should ask that question obviously illustrates the ignorance he has with regard to CN Marine. Of course, it has no impact at all. The mere fact that the New Democratic Member should ask such a silly question would indicate the depth of his knowledge with regard to Bill C-88 and the impact of this legislation on Lake Ontario.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a comment. First, I want to say that I am pleased that my colleague from the great City of Toronto has found the time and was disposed to stand tonight and speak to Bill C-88. I think it speaks volumes about his vision of Canada, that he would decide, contrary to the comments of my learned friend, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), who usually makes much more sense than he did with his question tonight, that notwithstanding the fact that this Bill has no impact on his constituents or on Toronto, that he would stand and speak on behalf of Canadians. He has decided, as a Member of the Parliament of Canada, that it is his responsibility and indeed part of the privileges he enjoys as a Member, to stand and speak on behalf of his fellow Canadians, no matter where they live in this country.

One of the prevailing problems in this Parliament during the course of debate is that Members who come from farming constituencies profess to be experts on farmers and the only ones who have any empathy for the farming constituency. Members who come from the urban centres consider themselves the experts about urban centres and the only ones who can profess to have any empathy for urban constituencies. There are Members from Atlantic Canada, some of whom profess to be the only experts on Atlantic Canada and the only ones who can have any empathy for Atlantic Canada.

There are those who believe that all of us own a piece of Atlantic Canada and believe that every Member of Parliament should be able to call the smallest bay home. Unfortunately, they discover that when it comes time to stand up in defence of the poorest regions of this country, those Members who do not come from the poorest regions say to themselves that it is not their home turf and none of their business. They say: "It is their problem, let them sink or swim with it."

Therefore, I find it refreshing and encouraging that a Member of Parliament from the great City of Toronto would stand in his place today and expand upon his vision of this country by ensuring that the voice of Atlantic Canada, small as it may be, because Members opposite have decided not to speak, will be heard. When Conservative Members have exercised their option to imprint their derrières upon the cushions that grace the chairs of this House, it is refreshing that a Member from Toronto would stand and expand upon the problems, the frustrations and the aspirations of the people of Atlantic Canada.

I want to say to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) that the people of Newfoundland say a collective thank you. It is the Hon. Member's type who makes this country a better place. It is his type which shall ensure that even as the Government tears at the fabric that holds this country together, and even as the stress and strains grow, we know that ultimately the country shall survive because there are those who can see beyond their own backyards.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—INDEXATION OF PENSIONS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the adjournment debate tonight as a follow-up to the question I put on May 2 to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) concerning pensions for public servants, the military and the RCMP. It is now 10:03 p.m. and it has been a long day. I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that your day started about 15 hours ago, as did mine.

However, the day started many years ago for our federal pensioners, whether they were in the RCMP, the Armed Forces or the Public Service. I want to see that they get a fair shake for their paid-for pensions. I feel that the Government is coming very close to making some type of an announcement on the pension issue. I hope to hear that good news before Parliament recesses for the summer. I wish to give credit to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and his staff who I know have been working for many months to ensure that an equitable solution is realized. They have certainly worked hard and long on this matter since we came to Government.

I have asked questions in the House numerous times on this issue. The answers have been consistently the same; that is, the Government will keep the promises it made during the election campaign to maintain indexed pensions for those who paid for them. My role is to question the Government, when appropriate, and to defend the interests and concerns of my constituents in Ottawa—Carleton and, on occasion, those from other parts of Canada.

As Hon. Members know, in the National Capital Region, and in the riding of Ottawa—Carleton which I represent, there are many military people, many RCMP people and many public servants who are on pensions already. There are many more who will be on them very shortly. I feel it imperative to speak on their behalf, not to question policy directions which the Government might be taking but to question the issue of input into the decision-making process as far as their indexed pensions are concerned.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), referred to this same issue on June 12. In the Adjournment Debate he asked whether pensioners had been involved in the negotiations and, if so, at what level. He went on to say that he had asked numerous questions in the last year or so concerning the issue, as others and I have done in this Chamber.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada has been very effectively representing the concerns of public servants on their pension issues and those who will be receiving pensions shortly. The PSAC has been very vocal on their behalf at the bargaining table. The Federal Superannuates National Association has been doing all it can as well to represent superannuates. It has become slightly frustrated at the lack of full representation on the Minister's advisory council.

The FSNA has observer status on the council, but it does not have full membership. The council is composed of six members from management and six members from the union. The association would like to have more representation. The Minister has indicated that he is willing to expand the council to ensure that the association has direct participation. I suggest that there might be one elected person and one appointed person, which would give a stronger voice in an advisory capacity. I think that the RCMP should also have a representative on the council, either as an elected representative or as an appointed one. That representative could be a person who is on active duty in the RCMP or possibly one who has retired, again to give the RCMP a better voice in pension decisions.

The Canadian Armed Forces Pension Association, represented by its duly elected President, Ed Halayko from London, and his colleagues, met with the President of the Treasury Board on February 5 of this year for the first time and had some input into the process. At that time, they expressed some of their concerns. As I am sure you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, these are very proud people. They are ex-servicemen and women and indeed we are very proud of the efforts they made to make Canada a safer place to live. I feel that they too should have more say and should have representation on the advisory council, possibly through an elected person or an appointed one. That would give them more input into decisions made on their pensions, but that has not happened yet either.

There is some confusion over responsibility for the management of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the RCMP Superannuation Act. The Canadian Armed Forces Pensioners Association, which speaks for about 75,000 retirees, though it has a very limited number of paid memberships, is concerned about the $13 billion it has put into the fund.

I would like to emphasize that it is important that a decision is made very shortly. I am disappointed that there was not more input into the process from retirees of the RCMP and the Armed Forces. I suspect we will hear very soon that the Government will keep its campaign promise to index pensions, and I hope that we will hear this before the end of the session so that we may take the good news back to our constituencies across the country. I hope we may be able to tell our constituents that a positive decision has been taken concerning pensions for all of those who paid for them and are very deserving of them.

Unfortunately, these people have not had as much input as they would have liked into the process, with the exception of PSAC through the bargaining table. However, in the months and years ahead, we hope the Government will see fit to include more of them on its advisory council so that the Government may listen to their good counsel and benefit from their many years of experience.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, regardless of the hour, it is clear that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) will continue to make his clear and very well meant representations on behalf of the many people who are affected by the pension policy that will be forthcoming from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret).

In trying to address some of the issues the Hon. Member has raised, the first point I would like to touch on very quickly is the response to the question of June 12, 1986. Basically that response dealt with the complexity of the issue and the real concern over the Government dealing piecemeal with a decision that has not been adequately considered or consulted on. In fact, a good measure of the length of time it has taken to produce the final result has been used to make sure that all of the important and complex issues have been addressed as adequately as possible.

The anxiety of the pensioners, as has been adequately reflected by the words of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton is very clear to the Government and the President of the Treasury Board. It has formed the background of the concern of the Government for making sure we provide the fullest possible consideration for members of the Canadian Armed Forces, the RCMP and the Public Service who are all affected by the ultimate decision.

The Minister has regularly reported to the House on the progress of all considerations, and in the fall he reported that actuarial studies were being conducted and that he would propose no changes without full consultation. As time went on, he advised that discussions were under way and that the documents were before Cabinet. Finally, last week the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister indicated again that the Minister's advisory committee on PSSA had been reviewing matters.

Throughout all of these reports, the Minister has said that the reforms would be made with due respect to equity and justice for all concerned and with due regard for the commitments of the Government made during the election campaign and in the interim. Since in fact a package of reforms is under discussion, it seems necessary to wait for an over-all agreement rather than release it a piece at a time. That would open up the entire agreement to public discussion.

I should like to make a special point concerning the fact that there was no real representation from the group being affected. In fact the advisory group was making decisions, and it was on the President's advice that the First Vice-President of the Federal Superannuates National Association, which represents some 35,000 federal pensioners, was appointed to one of the six chosen positions. Prior to this appointment, there was no representation from the affected groups. We have made a step in that regard. Perhaps there is more to do. That matter will receive consideration by the Government.

In conclusion, I have been personally assured—and the Government wants to assure those interested people who will be affected—that the education process which is under way is completed. Ensuing consultations have been virtually completed, and we anticipate further information from the President in a very short time.

EXTERNAL AID—ETHIOPIA—CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT POLICIES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House the connection between government policies and human suffering in Africa, particularly in Ethiopia. Much of that suffering has been due to natural causes, but there is reason to believe that much of it has been due to the tragic excuse for leadership forced upon many of the countries concerned, especially Ethiopia.

For example, as was reported in the May 30, 1986 edition of The Globe and Mail, an assistant professor of economics at Bloomsburg University and a native of Ghana wrote that more than two million Africans perished from famine last year and that millions were still in danger. He continued by indicating that the basic causes of the agricultural decline in Africa could be found in Government policies of exploitation and oppression of peasant farmers.

To that I add the testimony of Dawit Wolde Giorgis, the defected head of Ethiopia's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission who is now in the United States, having turned his back on the Marxist Government of which he was once a part. He left it because of the contradiction he found between the support from the West which was needed by Ethiopia and the Soviet alliance to which his Government was committed. In an interview in The New York Times, he called it a drought problem but said that it was more of a policy problem. He went on to say that drought complicated the problem and that if there were no change in their policies, there would always be millions of hungry people in Ethiopia. Since then he has been interviewed by both the BBC and the CBC. In the course of those interviews he said:

> The leadership in Ethiopia lives in a fantasy world created by its own policies and imagination.

It is evident that these policies of fantasy and imagination have contributed to the suffering of the people over which the regime presides through extravagant spending on military purposes. Almost half the national budget goes to the armed forces. Some $8 billion worth of Soviet military equipment is being imported by a country dependent upon the West to help feed its people and to help provide necesssary medical care.

To that we could add a tragic and indefensible human rights record of such magnitude that, according to the Economist's World Human Rights Guide, Ethiopia has the worst record of any country in the world. For example, there are an estimated 10,000 political prisoners at least. Some of them, like the family of the late Emperor, have been incarcerated for over 10 years without even a charge being brought against them. It is not only people of that standard. Only last week an Ethiopian man visited my office who had been released from a political prison in that country after being incarcerated for seven years simply on suspicion. He was allowed to go free finally when the police informed him that he was no longer suspect. He has never been charged, let alone found guilty of any offence against the country.

With that kind of Government in charge in Ethiopia, not only there but in similar Governments in charge in other countries of Africa, we have to be concerned as a Parliament with the way in which Canadian food aid, development aid, is being used. Is it being used to shore up radical, oppressive, militaristic regimes or can our Government use the leverage which is surely within its grasp to exert a moral influence on immoral regimes that can persuade them if not to turn to justice, at least to moderate injustice? I am sure that great, great numbers of people in various African countries would cry out with gratitude to any democratic Government that would use the power within its grasp to act on behalf of those who cannot act for themselves. This is not to say we should not be as active in aid causes as we have been. Quite the opposite. But it is to say that we should not be active as an aiding and developing country without using the influence and the opportunities that are before us so that we can thereby lift the level of the lives of people for whom we have some responsibility and where we have some opportunity.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) has raised a critical issue. The Government of Canada clearly shares his concern over the possible diversion of necessary funds to accommodate needs within an individual country, particularly when the issue in the case of those who are drought stricken in Africa has been brought so well before us and is so well known to us, whether through press reports or through the specific efforts the Government has taken to determine for itself the needs and causes.

It would be unrealistic, however, for us from the Canadian Government's point of view to restrict our efforts in assisting those who are in dire need, dying of starvation and facing constant pressures, to that point where we were not assisting them where we could. We have made special efforts through special envoys and considerations to make sure that any aid we have provided finds its way to the necessary areas and to those people needing it. Those efforts are continuing.

It would be also unrealistic, in direct response to the question of the official who has resigned, to expect that with any Government, with any set of policies, with any bureaucracy, there would not be individuals or problems that would not compound certain situations. That could be said of any country anywhere in the world today. It would also be unfair to say that in this situation in Ethiopia or in other African countries similarly afflicted that policies themselves were the sole cause of the problem.

I could refer the hon. gentleman to the United Nations General Assembly debates several weeks ago, which Assembly was dealing with this issue. I am not sure if there was an emergency debate, but there was a full debate much in keeping with efforts made by other UN initiatives, such as the Bruntland Commission looking at environment and development. All of these issues overlap, and they are being considered.

Canada most of all from from public statements that have been made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is very cognizant of the special pressures that exist in Africa and has responded with special economic measures to try to help in a general way not only Ethiopia but other African countries to ensure that human rights are respected in so far as possible, whether in Africa or in other countries throughout the world. Our record is well established and we continue to try to improve it. We continue to try, where we can, to ameliorate and improve the condition of the people directly affected.

WOMEN—INQUIRY IF GROUPS SUBSIDIZED LAST YEAR WILL RECEIVE SAME AID THIS YEAR. (B) SIZE OF FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on May 30 I raised an extremely important question with regard to funding for women's organizations in Canada. The Minister replied, suggesting that the Department was not anticipating radical cuts but he would not be at all specific and certainly would not say that the women's organizations would not be getting adequate funding or even the same level of funding they received in the past. His reply covered up the fact that the Department itself does not seem to know how much money will go into the budget for women's programs. In fact, organizations have been given 40 per cent of the funding they received last year and they have no idea how much they will get for the full year. They are, therefore, not able to plan, and some organizations have experienced real difficulties.

The National Action Committee has reported that there have been delays for many organizations across the country. These have been reported to me and other members of our caucus by Quebec and British Columbia women's organizations which have had the same problem. The North Bay Women's Centre had to close down for four months due to delays in funding. The Regina Status of Women had its application turned down although they thought they had met the requirements. It took nearly a year to process the application of the Alberta Status of Women.

Media Watch has heard rumours that there will be cuts of between 5 per cent and 40 per cent. They have only been able to maintain their overhead and regular operations. They have had to put staff on lay-off notice twice this spring. A staff member had to leave because she could not live with the financial insecurity. The National Association of Women and the Law has had to lay off staff. On account of the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association, the Parliamentary Task Force on Child Care has been extremely stretched and does not have funds to carry on the work it should be able to do.

The 1986-87 Estimates do not even list an amount for the women's department. There is only a global amount for something called citizenship development. That is a cut from previous years. We know that the 2 per cent cuts in discretionary spending will hurt the Secretary of State and women's programs especially because they are in a discretionary area.

Women's organizations have expected increases because they had been promised them in the past. There was a large increase in 1984, albeit perhaps for the wrong reasons. There was an election in 1984. The right thing was done, whether or not for crass reasons of political opportunism. Women's organizations were promised subsequent increases for the next five years and have not been getting them.

Women's organizations play a vital role in Canadian society. They need and deserve stable funding. I do not think the Government understands that Canadian women's organizations are different from women's organizations in other countries. They are not the same as the organizations in the United States or Europe. They do extremely important work. They help to develop Canada. They unite urban and rural women, union and non-union women, women working full time in the home and women in the labour force, women from visible minorities, native women and disabled women. All kinds of women come together. This is a unifying force.

The women's movement has enormous support in Canada from women and men. It is a positive experience for people. It is social change which people see as beneficial. A few very small groups are trying to promote the idea that the women's movement somehow represents far-out groups which do not represent the vast mass of Canadian women. This is totally unsubstantiated. These groups are doing important work for Canada, which work is recognized by Canadians.

A better way to fund the work would be through the tax system. I would like to have a tax credit system instituted. In filling out their income tax forms and child tax credit forms, people would have the opportunity to allocate a certain amount of money to women's organizations. The same could be done for other voluntary organizations in culture, the environment and other areas which contribute to Canadian society. It is somewhat incongruous that the Canadian Government funds its own lobbyists. I think it would be far healthier if Canadian women and men could themselves decide which organizations to support.

In this kind of new way of allocating funds, the Government would be a bookkeeper on the basis of instructions in effect from taxpayers. I think that would be highly desirable. It could be a basis for stable funding and, of course, we want to see more funding for this extremely vital sector which does so very much for Canada. What we have instead, I am sorry to say, is a Government which does not give adequate recognition. We now have a crisis on our hands. In fact, it is only tomorrow that the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) will be meeting representatives from some 60 women's organizations. They are being flown to Ottawa to discuss a crisis which need never have occurred at a substantial cost, more than $70,000, which is more money than some organizations get in their regular funding.

To conclude, I call on the Government to see that we have a stable, adequate system of funding for women's organizations that do so much for Canada.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is anxious to know whether women's groups who received funding under the women's program last year will receive the same support again this year.

Several factors must be considered by the Department of the Secretary of State in determining which groups will receive Government assistance, and for which objectives and at what levels.

A number of factors must be considered.

[English]

The existing track record of groups is important. To what extent have they fulfilled their objectives over the past year? What are their priorities for the coming year and how do these accord with the priorities of the women's program? The number of requests received in the various areas for which funding is provided is obviously another variable. Equally important is the amount of money available for grant purposes.

[Translation]

As Hon. Members are aware, all departments have been asked to help reduce the deficit by proceeding with certain budget cuts.

[English]

The Secretary of State was most anxious that the women's program of his Department not experience heavy cuts in view of the program's absolutely essential role in promoting the advancement of women. It is not only an essential role, it is a catalytic role, one which cannot be easily replicated.

The Minister is very broadly committed to ensuring that there will be no severe cutbacks in the women's program, and the result is there will be only a 5 per cent cut, which is certainly reasonable if we consider that reducing the deficit, like advancing the status of women, is one of the Government's priorities.

On June 26, the Secretary of State will be meeting with representatives of 58 women's groups to discuss ways of minimizing the effects of this cutback. Our Government's commitment to promoting the status of women is important. The women's program is an excellent vehicle for disseminating subjects of interest to women, promoting their autonomy and improving the economic conditions they have to face.

[English]

Now that the program's budget level is known, decisions will be going ahead on the many worthy applications received. I understand that last year the women's program funded over 700 organizations. The funding covered diverse issues such as violence toward women, economic independence, the Charter of Rights, legal, health, cultural and educational matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, it is clear that the Secretary of State intends to continue his vigorous support of women's organizations in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CALL FOR COMMONWEALTH ACTION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the weak response of Canada to the grave injustice and insult of apartheid in South Africa is certain to cause a crisis within the Commonwealth. Canada has the opportunity now to take the lead by imposing strong economic and diplomatic sanctions against the South African Government. The black nations of the Commonwealth can only feel a sense of dismay at our feeble protests in the face of flagrant disregard for human rights by the oppressive regime of apartheid in South Africa.

Mr. Ramphal, Secretary General of the Commonwealth, has said: "If the Commonwealth is to be true to itself, it has no option but to be in the vanguard of the final push against apartheid". The late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker would have added eloquently to those words by concerted action. Why are we doing so much less?

INDUSTRY

WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT COMPANY RECEIVERSHIP—EFFECT ON EMPLOYEE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, Bruce Stanley did not understand what the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion meant when the Minister said he was seeking a private sector solution to the problems at White Farm Equipment in Brantford. However, Mr. Stanley knows now. First, the Government refused to give loan guarantees to the company. That meant White Farm was forced into receivership and Bruce Stanley lost his job. Then the receiver took control of the pension fund as an asset of White Farm. That meant Mr. Stanley lost his pension. For his 14 years of service he was offered $2,000 in cash or an RRSP. He needs the money now, but when he takes the measley two thousand bucks, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) will cut off his unemployment insurance.

Now Bruce Stanley fully understands the Government's private sector solution. It means he lost his job, he lost his pension, and he lost his unemployment insurance. If anyone on the government benches wants Mr. Stanley's phone number, I would be happy to provide it. I do not know what to say to him.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ANXIETY OF PEOPLE OF SAGUENAY-LAC SAINT-JEAN REGION CONCERNING NEW PAPER PLANT PROJECT IN MATANE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that Saguenay-Lac Saint-Jean residents are anxious concerning the proposed establishment of a new paper plant in Matane.

No, Mr. Speaker, people in my region have nothing against a new project which would create jobs in Matane. Far from it, Mr. Speaker! We in the so-called remote regions know only too well how difficult it is to stay afloat, and how much we have to work to attract new job-creating investments to our regions.

Appreciative though we may be of such job-creating projects, the management and staff of the Abitibi Price Company are increasingly worried.

Are we about to create new jobs in Matane, only to the detriment of other workers in the Saguenay-Lac Saint-Jean region, more particularly in Jonquière and Alma where Abitibi Price is investing $218 million to upgrade its products?

I do not have the answer, Mr. Speaker, but this is a serious matter. I think it is imperative that my constituents be given the full details about this project before our Government decides to award grants.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NATIONAL OPTICAL INSTITUTE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF START OF CONSTRUCTION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 5, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was in Sainte-Foy to announce the start of construction on the National Optical Institute.

S.O. 21

This project was made possible as a result of the Canada-Quebec subsidiary agreement on scientific and technological development.

This world centre for excellence has received a mandate to become self-financing within five years. The institute is a private company, which means that close co-operation with the private sector, government and all parties in the industry is essential to its success.

Thanks to this major project, Quebec City is becoming one of the most important hi-tech centres in Canada, and as a Member from that area, I am very, very proud.

This is one more example of the emphasis placed by our Government on the development of high technology, co-operation with the industry and national reconciliation!

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY AND ROAD SYSTEM

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, next Tuesday the Government of Canada will announce that it will continue the Newfoundland Railway. I welcome the announcement. It is no more than the people of Newfoundland deserve, and no more than this Party did when it was in Government by putting $77 million into the railway. However, that does not absolve the Government of Canada from reaching a comprehensive roads agreement. Newfoundland urgently needs roads to be built—the Trans-Labrador Highway, a road across the northern peninsula to Roddickton and Englee, a road around Hare Bay, and the Trans-Canada Highway itself. The Government of Canada has an obligation to build those roads in Newfoundland and, while I welcome the announcement next Tuesday of the continuation of the Newfoundland Railway, I call upon the Government to make a long-term commitment to building the necessary roads in Newfoundland and Labrador.

EMPLOYMENT PLANNING

ACQUISITION OF HUMAN RESOURCES IN MINING SECTOR

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) recently announced a series of projects that were approved as part of the Innovations Program, one of the components of our Canadian Jobs Strategy.

Mr. Speaker, one of these projects is the human resources acquisition program for the mining industry. It is aimed at setting up a practical training and placement program for graduates in mining technology. Over the next 19 months our Government will be investing nearly one million dollars for Canadian youth.

As a Member of a responsible Government and a Member representing from a mining area, I have complete confidence in the ability and skills of our young people and we will continue to do everything we can to help them become integrated in the labour market in Canada and in Abitibi.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

NANOOSE, B.C., EXPERIMENTAL TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this week on Vancouver Island, in the spirit of protecting the earth and her children from radiation and nuclear war, people from Campbell River in the north and Victoria in the south will walk toward Nanoose to protest the Canadian Forces maritime experimental test range. To the best of our knowledge the Government has not yet signed the agreement allowing for the continued use of the Base by the U.S. Navy. People fear that the Americans may be pushing for a further expansion of the Base as they did successfully in 1967 when the present agreement was signed.

In the meantime, while our Government continues to be very secretive about negotiations with the Americans, U.S. submarines, armed with nuclear weapons, continue to use the Base at an accelerating rate. This Base does not serve Canadian interests and is a continuing threat to world peace. It must be converted to peaceful use.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, last Monday night the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) went on national television to talk about the problems Canadians have in trade with the U.S. He spoke of the shakes and shingles issue, of the softwood lumber issue, and the number of import harassments that Canadian businessmen face when they trade with the U.S.

He went on to say that Canadian businesses could not compete with the Americans because they have 260 million in their market-place. That, Sir, is just the point. That is the very market that we want to open up to Canadian businesses. We want our businesses to enjoy the economies of scale that the Americans enjoy. I want to thank the Leader of the New Democratic Party for making the case so clearly in favour of the free trade negotiations which have started.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

ALLOCATION OF FUNDING TO MAKE PUBLIC BUILDINGS ACCESSIBLE TO DISABLED PERSONS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Jobs Strategy is not only a worth-while training and employment development program, it is also proving to be of major benefit to disabled Canadians.

Under the Job Development Initiative $1.4 million has been allocated to date to help make public and private buildings accessible to disabled persons. These funds have been used for structural modifications and the purchase of special equipment for the disabled.

Job training that benefits the disabled—what an excellent way of not only helping unemployed people gain valuable work experience, but also of providing greater accessibility for the disabled.

That is the kind of combined benefits that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is having for all Canadians from coast to coast.

AGRICULTURE

PRICE OF FARM FUEL IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of this House the peculiar situation in which Prince Edward Island farmers find themselves.

Unlike other consumers, farmers are charged two different prices for fuel. When they fill up at a gas station they pay one price, but when they buy in bulk for the farm they pay a higher price. It costs about ten cents a litre more for gas to plough a potato field than it does to fill up for a Sunday drive.

Why should farmers put up with this undeserved discrimination when the fruits of their labour is cheap food for Canadians? That does not make a lot of sense to P.E.I. farmers.

I call upon the Government to instruct Petro-Canada to lower the price of bulk fuel sold at the farm gate. After all, is Petro-Canada not supposed to be working for Canadians? Does that not include our hard pressed farmers?

BANKRUPTCY ACT

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, a task force on insolvency commissioned by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has recently presented the Government with recommendations that have won support from business, labour, creditors, and consumers.

Everybody who has had to work with the current Bankruptcy Act knows that it is sadly out of date and places many hardships on employees and suppliers in particular. Change is long overdue and I hope the Minister will put legislation before the House as soon as possible.

The recommendations in the report that would give adequate and reliable wage protection to employees at little cost should be endorsed by all Members of this House.

Unfortunately the Minister's task force did not recommend any measures to help businessmen who might have supplied inventory to a bankrupt firm. If suppliers are not protected, one bankruptcy might very well push a supplier himself closer to bankruptcy.

I ask the Minister to consider allowing unpaid vendors the right to reclaim goods supplied up to two weeks prior to a bankruptcy or receivership. Small businesses are leading our recovery and we should try to help them in every possible way. Bankruptcy legislation is no exception.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

EXPORTS OF TRITIUM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, when the tritium recovery plant at Ontario Hydro's Darlington nuclear station is completed in 1987 Canada will begin exporting tritium to the United States and probably other countries possessing nuclear power. The Department of External Affairs and the Atomic Energy Control Board have approved Ontario Hydro's export plans despite the fact that tritium is not included in any non-proliferation treaty between Canada and the U.S. This is despite the fact that over 90 per cent of all tritium goes into making new hydrogen bombs, into refreshing existing bombs, and into neutron bombs. This is also despite the fact that tritium is the U.S. military's number one weapons priority, and the U.S. has the power to seize all available supplies of tritium within its jurisdiction.

At best, the export of Canadian tritium will boost the nuclear arms race by freeing up U.S. stocks of tritium for military purposes, and by lending moral support to the current weapons build-up. At worst, Canada could provide enough strategic material to add hundreds of extra nuclear bombs to the U.S. stockpile. I call on the Government to reverse this misguided and dangerous decision.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

First, however, I would like to call to the attention of the House the seventy-eighth birthday of our friend and former colleague, the Hon. Stanley Knowles.

• (1415)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister has said that the Auto Pact is not to be reopened, and that our cultural industries are not on the negotiating table. Once again the Prime Minister was contradicted by a key American official, Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative. He responded on behalf of the American Government to the Prime Minister's speech on Monday night. He said:

> President Reagan and Prime Minister Mulroney have agreed all issues should be on the negotiating table.

Will the Secretary of State explain for the Government and the Prime Minister, once and for all, whom are we to believe?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I agree with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in congratulating the Hon. Stanley Knowles, as do all Members on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In looking for guidance as to the American negotiating position, it would be well to listen to Mr. Yeutter. In looking for guidance as to the Canadian negotiating position, the Leader of the Opposition can rely on the words of the Prime Minister of Canada.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Apparently, the Americans seem to sense a conflict, because they are constantly contradicting not just what is said by the Prime Minister but also by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. They claim that everything is negotiable, whatever the Minister and the Prime Minister may say to the contrary. Are the main U.S. parties right and the Prime Minister wrong, and how, in these circumstances, can Canadians be expected to believe our Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction. The Americans are talking about what they want to discuss. We talk about the things Canada wants to discuss.

[English]

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): They certainly have a different understanding of what it is about. I am afraid the Secretary of State will be in for a rude surprise.

What about a contradiction by one of his own Ministers and colleagues? Despite the fact that the Prime Minister cited the Auto Pact, which is a sectoral agreement, and cited other sectoral agreements in Toronto, the Minister for International Trade said in Winnipeg yesterday: "We are not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is not my habit to interrupt, as the right hon. gentleman knows, but perhaps he has a question, please?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is a Wednesday, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of International Trade said: "We are not in any way moving toward a sectoral type of agreement." Will the Secretary of State explain why the Prime Minister continues to recite examples of sectoral trade yet is contradicted by his Minister of International Trade?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am in agreement with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that it is Wednesday.

There is no contradiction, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would know if he paid the House and the people of Canada the courtesy of quoting the Prime Minister in entirety. The Prime Minister made very clear, both in his speech to the people and in his speech in Toronto on Friday night last week, that we are seeking a comprehensive trade agreement. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should have more respect for the people of the country than to leave a contrary opinion.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT ALL COMPANIES MEET AUTO PACT PROVISIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Prime Minister continues to speak favourably of the benefits of the Auto Pact for the Canadian manufacturing sector and many Canadian workers. Will the Minister accept the strong representations of the existing Canadian auto industry, both workers and management, and immediately require all companies selling into the Canadian market from offshore, including the Korean and Japanese, to meet the current Canadian Auto Pact requirements with respect to content in this country, parts and equipment, as well as production, in order to preserve the benefits of this industry for the Canadian manufacturing sector? Will he make that commitment today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, these are representations which have been received and are being considered. Certainly it would be our hope that all manufacturers in the auto industry would, in due course, achieve the target to which the Hon. Member refers.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the Acting Minister why, when it comes to the offshore companies, the Koreans and the Japanese, it is enough to be a matter of hope. Does he not realize that the 133,000 Canadian auto workers in the hundreds of communities dependent on the well-being of the auto industry expect more than pious hope from this Minister? Why will he not make a commitment to make the offshore manufacturers play under the same rules for content and production as the North American manufacturers? Why does he want to put this healthy Canadian industry at risk? Give us a commitment today.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the representation of the Hon. Member into consideration and note that he is against the Koreans and the Japanese and other foreign—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I never said that.

Mr. Mazankowski: —manufacturers investing in the Canadian automobile industry, and I regret that very much.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): That's twisting the facts, and you know it.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of External Affairs. Auto manufacturers, parts producers, and Bob White told us this morning that the safeguards in the Auto Pact have created the progress and jobs in this sector to which the Prime Minister referred on Tuesday night. Will the Government clearly state that the safeguards in the Auto Pact must continue for the sake of the future of this industry?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, replying, I think, for the eleventh time, the Government of Canada believes that the Auto Pact serves Canada's interests well, and we do not see any purpose in changing a system that works. May I ask the Hon. Member if he had the permission of the Hon. Member for Oshawa to meet Bob White?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, we had the permission also to meet Moe Closs, the head of Chrysler, who had exactly the same message as Bob White about the future of this industry and the dangers that it faces because of lack of policy from the Government.

NEGOTIATOR'S INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is the following. Since Simon Reisman has rejected the need for safeguards in the Auto Pact, can the Minister assure the House that Mr. Reisman has been told by himself or by the Prime Minister that he must fight to preserve these auto pact safeguards despite his personal views?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the Hon. member for his response. I can assure him, for the eleventh time, I think—

Some Hon. Members: Twelfth.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —that Mr. Reisman follows the instructions of the Cabinet of Canada in carrying out the negotiations.

Mr. Langdon: I must say, Mr. Speaker, it is very hard to understand what the instructions could be. There are so many varied signals.

REQUEST THAT AUTO PACT PROVISIONS APPLY TO KOREAN AND JAPANESE COMPANIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Government now, at this stage, also extend these safeguard requirements to the Korean and Japanese companies so that there is a level playing field here in Canada and fairness that exists for all the companies that are producing in the automobile sector and producing jobs for our people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that suggestion is properly directed to me but on behalf of the Government I will take the representation of the Hon. Member as notice, and it will be considered with the attention we accord to all of his suggestions.

REQUEST THAT PROVISIONS APPLY TO OFFSHORE AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I do have a question to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has told us, now several times, how important it will be to maintain the Auto Pact. How is it possible to maintain the sanctity—the sacred trust, if you like—of the Auto Pact when 30 per cent of the automobile market in Canada is now being taken by offshore producers who are not subject to the same rules of the Auto Pact? Is it not important that those auto pact rules be applied to offshore foreign auto producers in order to ensure the negotiation and the Auto Pact can be totally safeguarded and protected?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Hon. Member if that question is put to me in my capacity as chairman of the committee of Cabinet responsible for the negotiations with the United States?

Mr. Deans: We didn't know you were.

Mr. Rodriguez: You answer the questions, not ask them.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister does not know what his job is, I do not know why he is asking me to determine what it is. We are quite aware of the confusion that is going on now that we have had it confirmed.

RESTRICTIONS ON AUTOMOBILE IMPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister another question in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs, if he wants to answer it. Does the Government intend at a very early date to extend the existing import limitations or restrictions on offshore foreign automobile makers as an interim measure until such time as they agree to meet fully all the auto pact requirements under the present North American Auto Pact agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot dispute that, if one wanted confusion, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is the source.

As regards the rest of his question, which appropriately lies in the domain of another Minister, I will take it as notice.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED IMPOSITION OF RESTRICTIONS ON CANADIAN DIPLOMATS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the South African Government has completely muzzled the press, thus giving the South African Government licence to slaughter the black population, while Ambassador Babb is free to cross the country painting a picture of racial harmony in South Africa. We have now been informed by officials in External Affairs that the Canadian diplomatic corps is subject to the same limitations. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirm that these restrictions are being applied to our diplomatic corps? Has the Minister invited the South African Ambassador in to give notice of Canada's protest against the imposition of these restrictions on both the press and our diplomatic corps?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Babb was called in and the very strong objections of Canada to the state of emergency were expressed in that consultation. I could not help but be struck by an observation made by Oliver Tambo in Paris today, that a state of emergency is not a Government.

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the question I originally asked with respect to the restrictions on our diplomatic corps has not been answered. But let us take it as a given that these restrictions are being applied.

Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs willing to warn the South African Government that if these restrictions are not removed from both the press and our diplomatic corps that we will have to impose additional, appropriate sanctions against the South African diplomatic corps?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly prepared to consider that. I hope that the Hon. Member would agree with me that our principal preoccupation now must be to do everything practical we can to bring a speedy end to the regime of apartheid. In our view that means turning great attention in the weeks to come to the possibility of the Commonwealth, in which Canada plays a leading role, being able to move forward against apartheid.

TRADE

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. We have the impression that the Government does not want culture on the table in our free trade negotiations with the United States. This has been said several times, and most recently, on May 22, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I will not quote him. In any case, it is in Hansard. But then, how can he let two members of the Canadian negotiating team say what they said on Monday: "The question of copyright and intellectual property will be on the table with the Americans", a statement that could well upset the Minister of Communcations. What I want to know is: How can the Government let our negotiators negotiate culture, if the Government's policy is to exclude culture from these negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I may point out to the Hon. Member that cultural matters are not what is at stake in trade negotiations.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIALS STOP SAYING CULTURE IS NEGOTIABLE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister is repeating the answer he gave before. My question is: in that case, how can the Government let its officials repeat they are going to negotiate matters connected with culture? Doesn't the Minister realize this is creating a great deal of concern in cultural circles in Canada? If culture is not on the table, we should instruct our officials to stop saying so.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is aware that the article he is quoting—I think it appeared in La Presse—was based on a briefing for several officials, which dealt with the general subject matter that will be discussed during the negotiations. This reporter put a certain interpretation on that briefing. I think the question is whether culture can be discussed within the context of trade negotiations, and the answer is no.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA REGION MALADMINISTRATION—MINISTER'S MEETING WITH CHIEFS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. After arranging a meeting with Manitoba Chiefs to discuss follow-ups to last week's report substantiating their charges of widespread abuse and maladministration in the Manitoba region of his Department, the Minister would meet with only eight Chiefs rather than the 23 who had come to represent their bands. Why was the Minister not willing to meet with all of the Manitoba Chiefs so that they could present their plan for dealing with problems in their area? Why did he announce his plan without consulting the Chiefs, the people who are most affected?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this gives me the opportunity to advise the Hon. Member that I met three times this morning with Indian people from Manitoba, once entering the office, prior to 8 a.m., once with a smaller delegation in my office and later on outside with a number of the groups. There was no plan passed at all. I indicated to them, as I indicated in the House on previous occasions, that the action plan will be developed in conjunction with the Indian people of Manitoba and the independent auditor. The independent auditor returns from Germany this weekend and he will begin that process next week. That is the way we intended to proceed, and that is the way we will proceed.

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister commit himself to meeting with all of the Manitoba Chiefs who are present in Ottawa today to discuss and consult with them the way in which he will go about dealing with the very serious problems in the Manitoba region of his Department? Will he have a proper consultation?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, last week it was determined by all parties that the appropriate way to deal with this would be to have an action plan developed by the independent auditor. At stake, of course, is the credibility of our programs in the whole of Manitoba, and indeed this affects all the Chiefs, all the Councils, and all the Indian people in the Manitoba region, not merely only those who come to Ottawa. My task is to make sure that Indian people in Manitoba know that we are carrying out a process that is going to be effective for all of them and not only those who speak to the Hon. Member.

PLAN PREPARED BY MANITOBA CHIEFS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and is on the same subject. I want to know if the Minister is aware of the very carefully drafted plan that has been drawn up by the Manitoba Chiefs, first to clean up the mess in the Winnipeg regional office of Indian Affairs, and second to replace it with a new system, a system of Indian self-government that has been carefully designed within that plan.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, indeed I am. The plan was presented to me. I made sure that the independent auditor had a copy of the plan and he is aware of it as well. The reason I gave the answer I did to the previous question was to make sure that people understand that we already have the plan. It is important to make sure that the independent auditor, having the plan in hand from the Indian people, will be able to develop an action plan that will be effective and will rectify the situation.

ROLE OF CHIEFS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, because of the seriousness of the situation in Manitoba and the fact that the allegations have now been substantiated by the auditor, can the Minister advise the House how quickly we can expect to have this mess completely cleaned up? Does the Minister intend to involve the Chiefs at each step along the way in that process?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we intend to involve the Chiefs, Councils, and the Indian people of Manitoba. Second, it is hard for me to put a date on it. I met with the independent auditor last Thursday. He left to go to Germany on Friday and he is returning Sunday. I will see him as soon as he gets off the plane.

We have no intention of fooling around with the matter. I indicated at the outset that we are going to rectify the situation with all due speed. We want to do it well, and that is why we are proceeding in the way we said we would proceed.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

WAGE SUBSIDY FUNDING OF NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure she is very supportive of and recognizes the contribution of non-profit and volunteer groups in this great country of Canada. Since she has now had plenty of time to consider the Colleen Stewart memo from Toronto, will she now reject one of the recommendations referred to in the memo which is to reduce the wage subsidies in the job-readiness stream used by non-profit organizations from 100 per cent to 50 per cent? Will she today say in the House that she will keep the wage subsidy at 100 per cent and not reduce it to 50 per cent which would kill off many of those volunteer groups?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been very pleased with the co-operation we have received from both the non-private and the private sectors in developing the Canadian Jobs Strategy. We think it is very successful. The proof is that we have so many more applications for that program than there have ever been for any other program. We will continue to involve both the private sector and the non-private sector in the programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy in the future.

SIZE OF WAGE SUBSIDY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, for once I would like to get an answer from the Minister. I would like to ask her very specifically whether or not she will reject the recommendation made in this memo that the wage subsidy be reduced from 100 per cent to 50 per cent. Will she reject that recommendation, yes or no?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we will be only too glad to look at any contributions that the private sector wants to make to this program. We do not have a majority of the projects presently being awarded to the private sector. In fact, in the major program, Job Development, some 73 per cent of the projects go to the non-private sector, to non-profit organizations and to educational institutions, and they are all funded 100 per cent.

FOOD AND DRUGS

DISCOVERY OF DIOXIN IN FOODS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What is the Minister's response, or the response of his Department, to Dr. Davies' report made on behalf of the International Joint Commission in Toronto recently relating to dioxin found in ordinary, everyday foods of Canadians?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I have stated in the House before that the samples Dr. Davies used and the very narrow base upon which the findings were conducted have been seriously questioned by a number of other scientists. As well, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that the Department, through HPB, has been determining levels of dioxin for at least the last 10 years. All studies indicate that there has been no increase in levels.

The monitoring systems and machinery we use enable us to identify trace amounts. We will continue to do exactly that kind of work. I can state very clearly that, from our findings, the food-chain is not at risk. Should there be any difficulties discerned even with that system, we will obviously take action.

THE ADMINISTRATION

COST OF PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO PARIS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Today's newspapers report that spring in Paris for the Prime Minister and his retinue cost over $500,000. We also know that the tab for meals and hotel accommodation was close to $329,000.

I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he can possibly justify such expenditures while expecting Canadian families to accept a lower indexation of family allowances?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the highlights of the Prime Minister's trip with certain Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party was the convening of a conference of francophone countries, a first ever in history. This is something the Canadian Governments had been seeking to achieve for quite some time. It was only a dream for the previous administration, but this Government made it reality and a source of pride for Canadians.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, Canadian pride does not carry a price tag. Canadian pride is not up for sale!

• (1440)

COST OF PERSONAL SERVICES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): How can the Secretary of State for External Affairs justify inclusion in that specific bill of springtime in Paris for the Prime Minister and his entourage? Included in that bill is $27,630.72 for unspecified personal services. Who or what were those unspecified personal services?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no lessons to learn from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East on the contribution of the House of Commons or of anyone in public life to pride in the country, nor does the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The delegation to the first Francophone summit not only involved representatives of the Liberal Party and of the New Democratic Party in this House—

Some Hon. Members: One each.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —it also involved representatives of provinces in which there is a significant Francophone presence. It involved a number of representatives of Francophones hors Quebec. It was not simply a demonstration of the effectiveness of Canada in international diplomacy. Without Canada the conference would never have come to be. It was also a clear demonstration to the nations of the world that the Francophone reality of Canada is a reality across our country.

EMPLOYMENT

COMMUNITY COLLEGES' APPRENTICESHIP FUNDING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Will she confirm the fact that her Department has either decided or is about to decide to eliminate funding for statutory pay for students of community colleges under CEIC funding and apprenticeships? Will she confirm that her Department has cut off statutory holiday pay for these people?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm that.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would she immediately undertake an investigation to find out why community colleges in Ontario have been advised that in fact that is about to occur, and to ensure that it does not happen? Will she do that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take the Hon. Member's representation into consideration.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

NANOOSE BAY, B.C., TEST RANGE—CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It will probably be the only question of substance he will receive in this Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Schellenberg: As the Minister is aware, the agreement between Canada and the United States for the joint operation of the Canadian Forces Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, is due for renewal. Could the Minister indicate to the House when that agreement will be renewed, what the term of the agreement will be, and whether there is any substantial change over the previous agreement?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, just before coming into the House I was informed by officials that the Nanoose agreement had indeed been signed for a period of 10 years. I have yet to confirm that, but I have no reason to doubt the information which was conveyed to me.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

OCCUPATION OF MANAGEMENT OFFICES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Yesterday in the House the Minister indicated that he was not prepared to intervene in the situation at the Cape Breton Development Corporation because of the elections for union officers which were taking place. I remind him that the elections are over. The new president and the new officers support whole-heartedly the cause of the seven labour leaders who are occupying management offices. Will the Minister use his rightful authority to intervene and meet with the new president of UMW and those labour leaders to address their serious concerns about job displacement in the coal industry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that Mr. Burke, the newly elected president, will in fact meet with those who are staging the sit-in to familiarize himself with the issues and to get a broader understanding of their views. I would expect that the Hon. Member would want him to take a certain amount of time in developing his strategy insofar as what transpires next. Perhaps he might be able to convince his fellow workers to remove themselves from the offices of Devco.

Mr. Dingwall: I thank the Minister for his response.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET UNION REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I talked with the new president, Mr. Burke, an hour ago. He has already met with the seven labour leaders, and he has jointly agreed with them to end this occupation of the management offices if in fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has a question, I hope.

Mr. Dingwall: Is the Minister prepared to meet with the new president and those labour leaders forthwith? If he gives them an affirmative answer, they are prepared to end the occupation of those offices. It is in the Minister's court.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware—at least I have not been informed—of whether Mr. Burke has attempted to reach me or contact me. That may have been the case, but I am unaware of it at the moment. My office has been in touch with the Chairman of the Devco board to see whether in fact members of the board or my office might play a useful role in trying to resolve this difficult problem. However, I assure the Hon. Member that we will take his suggestion seriously. We would hope that a satisfacatory resolution can be arrived at, and I assure him of my fullest co-operation.

FISHERIES

SKEENA RIVER SALMON FISHERY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He is fully aware of the dangerous situation his Government has designed and promoted regarding the salmon fishery in British Columbia, particularly on the Skeena. Could the Minister reveal to Canada and to the House any policy on enhancement and allocation, or does he expect the policy regarding the fishery to be created by the courts and the media?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think I can respond to the Hon. Member's question. He, perhaps above others in the House, would know that on May 5 the Minister of Fisheries and I met in Vancouver with all interested parties in the salmon fishery. We established a joint working committee to look at matters respecting conservation, preservation, and enhancement of the fishery, and at a co-management scheme. As I recall it, the Hon. Member applauded that at the time.

CO-MANAGEMENT PROPOSAL—REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL MEETING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Minister will recall, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was thrown out of the meeting and the co-management proposal was publicly withdrawn. Will the Minister attend a public meeting, along with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, before the end of June somewhere in the B.C. northwest, or is this issue not important enough for the two Ministers to put it on their agenda?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely wrong when he says that the Minister of Fisheries was thrown out of the meeting or that indeed the co-management scheme was withdrawn. It is absolutely untrue. I think it can be said that the consultative process is beginning to move nicely. One difficulty was that there was a perceived legal uncertainty in respect of the four by-laws. As the Hon. Member knows, recently I have taken steps to ensure that the legal uncertainty with regard to those by-laws was removed during the time the process of discussion and consultation with the joint work group was in place. I wish the Hon. Member would quit playing politics with this matter and help us along.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON FEDERAL SURPLUS REAL ESTATE DISPOSAL PROGRAM

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Federal surplus real estate disposal program phases I and II began a few months ago.

Can the Minister tell the House if this process has enabled Treasury Board to make savings and attract private sector investment capital, and does he expect similar fall-outs from phase III of the program?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): First, Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will be pleased to learn that this Government is committed to encourage significant private sector investments.

As to our Government's decision to dispose of surplus buildings, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is this: 250 real estate deals have been concluded so far; $60 million will be added to the public treasury; Canadians will save close to $4 million in terms of taxes and services related to vacant buildings; and, finaly, more interesting still, we have learned that the private sector might invest in excess of $1 billion. That, Mr. Speaker, is what we on this side of the House call good business!

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

CREATION OF JOBS IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On May 30 the Minister told a press conference in Cape Breton that the Government had created 844 jobs in that area since the new tax incentives came into effect. There are a lot of unemployed Cape Bretoners who would love to know exactly where those jobs are. Will the Minister table today a breakdown of exactly where those jobs are?

• (1450)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to provide the Hon. Member with that information. In addition to that, I am advised by my colleague that through the work programs under her auspices 1,372 additional jobs have been created in Cape Breton.

Mr. Gauthier: Table those too.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, there were less jobs created by the Department of Employment and Immigration than were created last year. The Government is so busy patting itself on the back that it does not realize we are losing jobs daily. If the Minister's job creation program is so great, will he tell us why there are fewer jobs in Cape Breton today than there were a year ago?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I certainly disagree with the premise of the question. I can assure the Hon. Member that there are many more projects and participants in the Canadian Jobs Strategy which will create more jobs in the future. They will be long, durable jobs, rather than the kind of fluff the Hon. Member created when his Party was in office.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO NEW YORK

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It has to do with the peregrinations of the Prime Minister who took three trips costing close to $1 million. I am particularly interested in the New York sojourn which cost $62,000. The Prime Minister rented a room for $1,200 a night, and Fred Doucet, his assistant—

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Benjamin: That wasn't the YMCA.

Mr. Axworthy: It might have been the YW.

Mr. Rodriguez: Does the Deputy Prime Minister think that this is the kind of example the leadership of the country should be setting with respect to restraint? Is this what he calls giving an example, or is he like the preacher who says, "Do what I say, not what I do"?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Name names.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that the colleague of the Hon. Member who put the question indicated the ridiculous nature of this kind of grasp for headlines in the House of Commons. He suggested that the Prime Minister of Canada, when representing this country at the fortieth anniversary sessions of the United Nations, should stay in the YMCA.

Mr. Benjamin: Why not?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why not? I thought that that was a casual suggestion. Obviously it was not. Obviously that is the position of the New Democratic Party. In our view this is a country of standing and pride in the councils of the world. We should act that way, as we do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Now we know why the Iron Ore Company is laughing all the way to the bank.

Orals Questions

SIZE OF SPENDING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I am not asking the Prime Minister to stay at the YMCA.

Mr. Gauthier: Why not?

Mr. Benjamin: I am.

Mr. Axworthy: How about the Holiday Inn?

Mr. Rodriguez: Does the Prime Minister think that this kind of lavish spending, like some Middle Eastern sheik, is the kind of example that Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order!

Mr. Axworthy: The word is "potentate".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member could complete his question quickly.

Mr. Rodriguez: Does the Deputy Prime Minister think that this kind of lavish spending, like some Middle Eastern potentate, is the kind of example we should be holding up to the Canadian people while at the same time cutting back on their services and programs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we now have evidence of division in the NDP on the YMCA.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Was it Visa or Master Card?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I guess the only way we can judge that is to see where Premier Pawley stays when he next comes to Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: He takes his own tent wherever he goes.

Mr. Benjamin: He stays at my place.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Hon. Member to refrain from making inflamatory comments about the Middle East.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOW LEVEL AIR DEFENCE CONTRACT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. At a House of Commons National Defence Committee meeting on April 17 the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance for the Department of National Defence told us that while there was no specific provision in the Estimates to pay for Low Level Air Defence, the Department had in fact identified funds within its present budget to pay for the Low Level Air Defence system.

Will the Minister tell us now from what items of the National Defence budget money is going to be taken in order to pay for the system? Will the transfer of such funds adversely affect the present or future status of any one of the 33 military bases in Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance was exactly correct in his answer. The Low Level Air Defence was approved by Cabinet within the last two weeks. It will be in next year's Estimates. You do not put it into Estimates until it has been approved.

With regard to how this will affect military bases, it will be a great boost to our base in Chatham which will be the school for Low Level Air Defence It will have a positive effect on that base.

Mr. Hopkins: He did in fact say that there was money in there for it.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDING

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of National Defence assure the people of Canada today that the presidential designs and theatrical ambitions of the Prime Minister of Canada will not be a financial drain on the Department of National Defence by, for example, using the Hercules aircraft to make his own home movies? Will he assure us—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Order, please! Perhaps the Hon. Member has a question that is supplementary to his first question. This is not a supplementay question. Does the Hon. Member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Hopkins: Will he assure us that all such money, with reference to Low Level Air Defence, will be properly allocated to the Canadian Armed Forces where it belongs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, of course it will be properly allocated. The capital budget of the Canadian Armed Forces represents approximately 27 per cent of the total budget. That capital is allocated in such a way as to provide the military with the equipment it needs to make up for 15 years of neglect by the previous Government. We are trying to do that as orderly and quickly as we can.

RAILWAYS

FUTURE OF CN SHOPS IN MONCTON

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Canadian National says that Canadian General Electric has expressed an interest in a locomotive manufacturing plant in Moncton. The chief executive officer of Canadian General Electric says that intensive negotiations will begin shortly.

Considering the nebulous state of these negotiations, how can CNR be so specific about the number of people that CGE would keep, the number that would be laid off, the number that would be retrained, and the number that would be retired early?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: What is going on in the negotiations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member has been more than a minute already on that question.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to be forthcoming, on the part of both CNR and Canadian General Electric, and to inform the workers of the extent of their plans, they have used the figures which were in the press release as a basis for the negotiations. They may not be entirely accurate, but on the basis of the preliminary discussions those are the numbers they have come up with.

I think it is encouraging that, of the 1,022 employees, 800 jobs will be secured and 200 people will be eligible for transfer or other benefits pursuant to the corporation. I think it is a good deal for everyone.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is three o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, it is three o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin: This is a good time to tell me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Perhaps if the Member had not taken so long on his first question he would have had time for a supplementary question. Unfortunately it is three o'clock.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I took no longer than anyone else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Order, please.

CODE OF CONDUCT

TABLING OF REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION AND OBSERVANCE—EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES OF CANADIAN COMPANIES OPERATING IN SOUTH AFRICA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I rise to table in both official langages a report on the administration and observance of the Code of Conduct concerning the employment practices of Canadian companies operating in South Africa. A limited number of complete sets of the annual public reports issued by 14 of the 17 companies covered by the Code are available from my office. I understand the three reports still outstanding will be submitted shortly.

If I may, I want to add a word of thanks to the administrator, Mr. Albert Hart, and the Canadian companies who co-operated with him and whose annual public reports are now for the first time available.

STATEMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL OF CANADA

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CLASSIFICATION OF INFORMATION AND SECURITY CLEARANCE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform the House that the Government has undertaken a major reform of its policies governing classification of information and personnel security screening. The current policies have been criticized from all quarters, and justifiably so. Too much information has been classified and far too many security clearances are being requested by departments. The policy on security classification of individuals is a full three decades old, dating back to 1956. Cabinet Directive 35, which guides the security screening process, dates from 1963.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it's time that the Governement brought its security system into the eighties. We are particularly conscious of the mounting cost of the security clearance program and the growing backlog of requests from departments for clearances based on these old policies. In far too many cases, security clearances are unjustified and unnecessary. Such a system undermines security, instead of ensuing its effectiveness.

[English]

I am announcing measures today which will ensure a significant reduction in the demand for security clearances, and require that security clearances undertaken are justifiable, equitable and effective. Our new policy is guided by four basic principles. First, we want to ensure that only Government information in respect of which protection from unauthorized disclosure is essential to the national interest is classified for security purposes, and that this information is effectively protected.

[Translation]

Second, we want to reduce the number of positions in the Government of Canada that require the incumbent to be security screened.

[English]

Third, we want to better protect the rights of individuals affected by the Government's administrative security system.

[Translation]

And fourth, we want to upgrade the security of Canada by more effectively managing the resources dedicated to the security screening and information classification and protection programs.

[English]

Under the new policy, information will only be security classified if it falls into one of six areas: national defence; international affairs; national security, including hostile and subversive activities and threats to the country's security; confidences of Cabinet; federal-provincial affairs; and selected economic interests of Canada. I want to underline that in no way will this new classification system have any effect whatsoever on a person's right to access under the access and privacy legislation.

To reduce the number of positions which require the incumbent to be security screened, the test will be whether an individual has regular and consistent access to classified information as part of his or her official duties. The level of security clearance will be tied directly to the degree of injury the incumbent or contractor could cause if he disclosed information or material assets classified in the national interest.

Based on the degree of injury there will be three levels of security clearance. I believe the vast majority of classified information can be held in the first level, the lowest level. Much tighter control than is now the case will be exercised on the information placed in secret and top secret categories, therefore reducing the necessity for higher level clearances.

[Translation]

The criteria to be used in rejecting a candidate for a security clearance must be up-dated and made more equitable. Security investigations must also be done in a completely fair and defensible fashion and with the consent of the applicants, ensuring that the rights of any individual subject to security screening are upheld.

[English]

Our security screening criteria will be brought fully into line with the provisions of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. The Government has redefined the rejection criteria so that to be rejected on grounds of disloyality there must be reasonable grounds to believe that individuals are engaged in or may engage in activities which fall within the definition of a "threat to the security of Canada." Under CD 35 a person could be rejected if considered unreliable, not because he is disloyal. This is no longer supportable. Under the new policy, doubts concerning an individual's reliability must be linked to loyality for the employer to reject a candidate for a security clearance. The employer must have reasonable grounds to believe that a person is unreliable.

I want to emphasize to the House that I will soon issue a formal directive to CSIS governing the provision of security assessments which will give the Service detailed guidelines on how the Government expects the new security policies to be put into action. Under my new directive, CSIS may not conduct any security clearance investigation for a department or agency unless the written consent of the individual is first obtained. I will also direct that CSIS conduct all investigations for security clearance purposes in a manner consistent with this consent by the individual and the principles of natural justice, including obtaining consent for the recording of any interviews. CSIS may interview individuals in order to give them an opportunity to resolve any security concerns which might have arisen in the course of the investigation.

I also reaffirm the Government's commitment to a fair and equitable review procedure for those denied security clearance. Under the CSIS Act, the Deputy Head must notify any person denied a security clearance within ten days and of their right to complain to the Security Intelligence Review Committee.

[English]

The CIRC has demonstrated its value as a review mechanism by the careful, thorough and fair manner in which it has investigated and reported upon those cases which have so far come before it, and the way in which it has brought the principles of natural justice into play in those cases.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to direct this new system effectively, the Government has charged Treasury Board with responsibility for the overall management of the new policies. The Treasury Board will assist each department in implementation of the program and monitor compliance with it. CSIS will maintain a central index of all security clearances to assist the Treasury Board and the deparments in the management of the screening program.

[English]

The new policies I have announced today are based on two requirements: the need for more responsible management of the Government's security system to improve national security; and the need for a fairer and more equitable treatment of public servants and others who do business with the Government.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the Solicitor

General's statement. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Minister for providing the Opposition with a copy of his remarks in advance of his statement in the House. It is a courtesy which members of the Opposition appreciate and indeed require if they are to comment in an informed manner on various Government initiatives. I would only hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will in future extend the same courtesy to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) before he goes on national television to make statements about free trade.

We in the Opposition welcome the initiative which the Solicitor General has taken regarding reforming the Government's security policies. My colleague from York Centre, a former Solicitor General, has commented on a number of occasions on the need to revise the Government's security policies. Indeed, it can probably be said that the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) got the ball rolling toward setting in motion the review and reform we now have before us. The reforms we have before us today are in some respect the culmination of significant reforms initiated earlier in this decade by the previous Liberal Government. For instance, the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service Act, which reformed the security service in this country, gave us a much more precise definition of what, in fact, constitutes a threat to the security of Canada.

This is defined as follows: one, espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage; second, foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person; third, activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state; and fourth, activites directed toward undermining, by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada.

Another piece of Liberal reform legislation which has a significant bearing on these new security policies is the access to information and privacy legislation passed by the Trudeau Government in 1983, and currently undergoing a thorough review by the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. In fact, the access to information legislation forms the basis of this new policy by adopting the same definition of information subject to security classification.

Under this policy announced by the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) information will be security classified if it falls into one of the following areas: national defence, international affairs, national security, confidences of Cabinet, federal-provincial affairs, and selected economic interests of Canada.

Of course, the major piece of reform legislation implemented by the former Liberal Government was the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The new security policy has had to take the Charter into account in so far as it respects the rights of the people affected. It has had to take into account that Canadians now have freedom of conscience and religion; freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication; freedom of peaceful assembly; and freedom of association. I am informed by officials in the Department of the Solicitor General that they believe this new policy is in accord with the Charter, and with the equality rights committee's report. Certainly we in the Opposition will follow closely the administration of this policy.

As the Solicitor General pointed out, the policy on security classification is almost as old as I am, going back to 1956. Cabinet Directive 35, which governs the security screening process, dates back to 1963. Indeed, the 1956 policy, which will be replaced under these new initiatives, talks about sealing wax to protect secret papers in transit. In an age when high speed coded electronic messages are, in most cases, standard operating procedures, it is clear that the old security policies are just about as antiquated as the Minister of Justice's new pornography legislation relating to the general definition of pornography.

It is clear that the old procedures had simply broken down. The volume of information being classified is staggering, and the number of security clearances for public servants and contract employees with the federal Government was getting completely out of control. In 1982 there were 76,000 security checks conducted on public servants. In the last fiscal year this number was reduced to 69,000. Officials in the Solicitor General's Department have said that these new policies could reduce the number of security clearances in most Departments by about 25 to 30 per cent. In some Departments, I am told, the figures could even be higher. If that is the case, then it is a welcome development.

In terms of cost alone the old policies placed a heavy burden on the federal treasury. I am told that a standard field investigation for an individual security clearance could cost anywhere between $1500 and $4000. With the number of people requiring clearances under the old policies it is evident that not only was it ineffective, it was also costly.

Again, with respect to the reduction in the number of security clearances required, we in the Official Opposition will be watching the numbers carefully in the future to ensure that the new policy is, in fact, having the desired effect.

In conclusion, once again I would like to thank the Solicitor General for providing me with an advanced copy of his policy. We welcome the initiative taken by the Solicitor General. It is the culmination of an effort that began a number of years ago. We all agree that the present system is not adequate and we anxiously await the implementation of this new policy which the Solicitor General has introduced today.

Statements by Ministers

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I would first echo the comments of my colleague the Hon.Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) in thanking the Solictor General (Mr. Beatty) for having provided me with an advanced copy of his new policy, as well as a briefing by his officials, which was most helpful.

The whole question of security clearances and the classification of documents is one that has been a matter of serious concern for a number of years. We have waited far too long for these important changes. In 1983 the head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, appearing before a committee of the Senate said, "unnecessary security clearances, unnecessarily high levels of classification, and unnecessary snooping into the lives of individuals are not only wasteful of our resources, are not only morally repugnant, but they are discriminatory".

Those are strong words, and clearly in my view those words are merited by the current policy. What we must look at is the extent to which the new changes announced by the Minister in practice are going to get rid of this very serious attack on civil liberties, which is the basis of current policy in this area.

Cabinet Directive 35, which was dated in 1963, in fact was effectively superseded by the 1984 Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. There is a mechanism for review of security clearances and so on.

In examining the early decisions of the Security Intelligence Review Committee on denials of security clearance, I must say that those decisions are not encouraging at all. The decision involving Mr. Andre Henrie, for example, or the decision involving Jack Gold, in both of those situations, was really quite disturbing in a free and democratic society.

It is when we examine the fine print of the Minister's proposal that I believe in many respects these proposals are giving the illusion of change. Unfortunately the discretion which is left to Deputy Ministers is so broad that there may be no effective change at all.

What are the definitions that the Minister relies on for the classification of documents? He relies on the definitions which are found in the access to information legislation. The definition sections in the access to information legislation have been criticized by witness after witness appearing before the Justice Committee as being far too sweeping, as, in effect, allowing the Government to hide any information it wants. Those are precisely the same definitions this Minister is using to classify government information. That is no progress at all.

What about the second major element, the definition that is to be used for security clearances? What we find the Minister saying is we will use the definition from the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act of threats to the security to Canada. Once again, that definition is so broad, so openended that, in effect, those Canadians who are not engaging in any unlawful activity whatsoever could be targetted by it. If, for example, a Canadian sends money to a church group in South Africa which supports the African National Congress that individual could be targetted under the definition of threats to the security of Canada.

By adopting the sweeping definitions in the access to information legislation, and the wide open definition in the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Bill on threats to the security of Canada, we have seen no effective change at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these measures give only the illusion of change. The definitions used by the Government are so vague and allow so much discretion tht there is no real change.

[English]

Two groups in particular affected in the past by the security clearance provisions will see no effective relief, or at least there is that possibility. Members of parties in this country that many of us might disagree with, but which are legal parties, are targeted still by this definition. The Communist Party of Canada, which is a legal party in Canada and which is entitled to run candidates, and indeed has elected candidates provincially and federally in the past, would deny a person a security clearance.

With respect to homosexuals, the old policy denied homesexuals the right to security clearances. I have a letter from the RCMP, Assistance Officer in Charge of Internal Security, who states that homosexuality is a reliability weakness identified in Cabinet Directive No. 35. There is no guarantee that that policy is being changed either, despite the recommendations of the equality rights Committee.

My concern about the announcement of the Minister is that we are really getting the illusion of change. What we are effectively seeing is smoke and mirrors, with no real substantial change at all. In fact, we may be moving backwards, because hidden in the Minister's announcement is a suggestion that much tigher control than is now the case will be exercised on the information being placed in secret and top secret categories. We are moving backward in this area, rather than moving forward with effective whistle-blower legislation, for example.

I am pleased that the Minister has eliminated the secret tape recording of public servants. I commend him for moving quickly on that once I drew it to his attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, there has been no effective change.

[English]

The changes are largely illusory and the criticisms which were made by many Canadians, including the head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, remain well founded. These provisions continue to be discriminatory and excessive.

Finally, I suggest that in view of the fundamental importance of these measures, they should be comprehensively reviewed by the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General soon, hopefully early in the fall.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO GROUNDS OF GOVERNOR GENERAL'S RESIDENCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a series of petitions, about 20 of them, asking the House in Parliament assembled to urge the National Capital Commission and the Governor General to make the grounds where the Governor General's residence is located accessible to the general public and that the decision to close access to these grounds be revoked, so that all Canadian citizens may enjoy a visit to Rideau Hall.

[English]

I want to thank all those who have sent me these petitions in order to attempt to change this decision.

LOCAL MEASURED TELEPHONE CHARGES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table in the House a petition signed by many residents of my constituency of Burnaby who recognize the concern that the telephone pricing scheme known as local measured service, or charging for each local call, means that having a telephone will cost significantly more for most people, particularly senior citizens and the handicapped and those who rely on their telephones, such as voluntary agencies. They call upon Parliament to direct the CRTC to deny to telephone companies such as B.C. Tel, the right to charge for each telephone call and to order the retention of a monthly rental for telephones.

DECOMMISSIONING OF LIGHTHOUSE—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition calling for a full public inquiry into the need for staffing lightstations on the West Coast of British Columbia as a result of the directive of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to eliminate staffing of lightstations at Lawyer Island, Boat Bluff, Pointer Island, Chrome Island, Trail Island and Pointer Pass. The same Minister has also directed staff reductions at Lucy Island, Putteney Point, Cape Mudge, Pt. Atkinson and Saturna Island. The petitioners humbly pray that the House will take action.

USE OF PENSION INCOME IN CALCULATION OF UI BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): It is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents from Halifax and Prince George, Sicamous, Revelstoke and Kamloops, British Columbia. They ask that the Government of Canada reconsider the decision to have pension benefits deducted from unemployment insurance benefits, thus effectively eliminating the benefit to the worker of the pension package. They are asking the Government to ensure that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without the deduction from pension income.

CONTINUATION OF MAIL BOX DELIVERY SERVICE TO RURAL AREAS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by approximately 100 residents of rural Thunder Bay who object to the possible decision by Canada Post and the Government to eliminate the individual mail box delivery to its rural customers and replace it with central mail boxes many miles away. They call upon Parliament to direct Canada Post to halt its discriminatory cut-backs in service to rural residents and to maintain individual mail box delivery on its rural routes.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-290, An Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (non-discriminatory practices).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to allow some flexibility and opportunity for churches and religious organizations. This requires some amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act, which this Bill will accomplish.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER THIRD READING STAGE OF BILL C-96

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved:

Time Allocation

That, further to the notice given on Tuesday, June 17, 1986, by the Minister of National Revenue and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117 in relation to Bill C-96, An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, one sitting day shall be allotted to the third reading stage of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

She said: Mr. Speaker, soon after it came to power, this Government introduced a program for economic renewal, which accompanied the economic and fiscal message of November 1984. In it the government envisaged the possibility of limiting the rate of growth of transfers to the provinces as part of a strategy to correct our fiscla situation and stabilize the state of our finances.

More than a year ago, in May 1985, the federal Government announced its decision to limit the rate of growth of transfers under Established Programs Fianacing. At the time the growth of most other categories of expenditures under federal programs had either been reduced or stopped altogether. Transfers to the provinces could not completely be insulated from the Government's efforts to reduce its deficit.

• (1530)

There were no secrets and no surprises.

Bill C-96 was introduced after extensive and prolonged consultations with provinces which began in November of 1984 and continued through to December of 1985. The subject of transfers was discussed with provincial finance Ministers on at least six separate occasions: November, 1984; January, 1985; May, 1985; September, 1985; November, 1985; and December, 1985. EPF was also discussed at the First Ministers Conference in Halifax in November of 1985.

As a result, the provisions of the Bill reflect these federal-provincial discussions and our desire to achieve deficit reduction in the most balanced and reasonable way possible.

The Bill was drafted in early 1986 and given first reading on February 14, 1986. Second reading began in May, and the Bill was referred to committee. The legislative committee on Bill C-96 heard from 18 groups representing a wide variety of interests: organized labour, academics and students, doctors, nurses and other health practitioners, health consumers, and so forth. The Bill was subsequently reported without amendment.

I testified before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance in the course of its "pre-study" of Bill C-96. I tabled an explanatory paper for the information of Senators and Members of Parliament. I also testified before the House legislative committee on Bill C-96. I have responded to opposition questions and made clear the case of the Government.

This Bill has now been debated for 11 days. This Bill has been debated for 37 hours. There have been 125 Hon. Members who have spoken. Hansard will show that the debate is exhausted and the argumentation has become repetitious. Enough is enough.

There is always much talk about the national debt and the need to do something about it. The previous Government talked a lot about deficit reduction. In November of 1981, the Hon. Allan MacEachen, then Minister of Finance, said, "I believe we must reduce our deficit and borrowing requirements substantially". He went on to say, "Some restraint must be applied to our transfers to provinces". This Minister boldly proclaimed: "Now I have set myself the task of cutting back the deficit". As we all know, the deficit was not cut back. Government expenditure grew, and debt charges mounted. That is the situation which compelled the Canadian electorate to defeat the former Government. That is the legacy our Government was elected to rectify. Now we must act. Nothing will be gained by delay or protracted indecision. Indeed, much will be lost.

Public debt charges are growing in size and gaining in momentum. If this situation is not addressed, debt charges will erode our ability to sustain the vital social services Canadians now enjoy. More and more federal revenue will be eaten away by spiralling debt charges, and less and less will be available for vital social services. Ultimately, we can only provide what we can afford.

We have carefully reviewed our resources, and the provinces were involved in that discussion. We are collectively working to reduce our over-all debt load. The provinces are also concerned about the federal deficit and the obstacle it represents to continued economic growth of our entire country. Reducing this obstacle to growth benefits both levels of Government. Provinces now enjoy the benefits of Canada's strong economic performance. Provinces will continue to benefit from lower interest rates, increased employment, rising housing starts, and a growing economy.

This transfer to provinces will grow at rates which can be sustained. EPF transfers will total $90 billion over the next five years. That is $25 billion more than over the last five years. Surely this is ample evidence of the federal commitment to health care and post-secondary education. I urge Hon. Members opposite to join with us in support of a measure which both confirms the high priority given by this Government to these social services and the urgent necessity of confronting the federal deficit.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that I am very astounded that the Government would use Standing Order 117, an order which places time allocation on third reading debate on this most important Bill. I noticed that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) had a little problem with her voice in speaking, and maybe she needs a doctor. I think this very Bill that we are discussing this afternoon is one that will have a tremendous effect on our health care system, on our doctors, our hospitals and our senior citizens. Every individual in Canada who requires some measure of health care will be affected by the Bill. I am astounded that the Government would use time allocation, a Draconian measure, to silence the voice of the people for further debate on an issue as important as this.

I say that I am astounded that the Government is cutting off debate. The reason I say that is that just yesterday I received a telex by special delivery, as did other Members of Parliament, from 128 of the 147 physicians practising medicine in the Province of Prince Edward Island. I will read the telex into the record today. It is addressed to me and it states:

> The following list of P.E.I. physicians hereby petition our Members of Parliament, and Parliament, to give favourable consideration to the recommendations of the Canadian Medical Association related to Bill C-96;
> 1) That this legislation be restricted to a short-term basis only—and only if absolutely essential to the future economy of the country:
> 2) That the financial disadvantages to the Atlantic provinces be excluded from the provisions of this legislation, i.e. that they continue to receive increasing financial support for health care programs on the basis of the existing, established program-funding formula:

The existing formula, now in place, before the legislation changes it—

> 3) That the federal and provincial Governments immediately proceed to negotiate a formal agreement for the future financing of health care in Canada. That agreement should: (a) clearly delineate to the Canadian public the constitutional, fiscal, moral and political responsibilities of both levels of Government to finance health care and (b) provide a level of federal financial support that is inversely related to the fiscal capacity of the provinces or otherwise recognizes and compensates for the fiscal inability of some provinces to provide health services that are reasonably comparableed to those of more affluent provinces.

That telex has the signatures, as I mentioned before, of 128 of the 147 practising physicians in the Province of Prince Edward Island.

The Minister of State for Finance just said, "We have had extensive and long discussions with the provinces and different groups". In other words, she said, I believe, they met six times. Well, what kind of discussions were those? When we find that the Canadian Medical Association, universities and provinces are condemning this legislation, we must wonder what kind of two-way conversation took place. It looks to me as though they went to meet with the provinces and with different organizations, and they said what they are saying by Standing Order 117; "We will talk, we will talk so long, but it will be a one-way conversation".

For the Government and for the Minister to stand in her place today and bring down this sort of a Draconian measure with respect to a Bill as important as this is evidence of the desperate situation in which the Government finds itself.

A couple of my colleagues and I attended some hearings in Atlantic Canada with respect to the issue of EPF. We met with hospital administrators who told us, as I am sure they will tell any other Member of Parliament who takes the time to inquire how this Bill will affect them, that they are already overburdened, They are already underfunded in terms of meeting the real needs of health care in their areas.

We also met with student unions, groups of students who are having extreme difficulty obtaining some sort of education in the out-lying areas of this country. They are finding it extremely difficult to do so because they know that if this Bill goes through and passes, as it is, their tuition fees will increase. These people are already in areas of the country in which they are unable to obtain half-decent summer employment. Some of them in my area will not be able to find any jobs at all this year. Where will they obtain the money to go to university? It is just an impossible situation. As a result, the educational system in the country will deteriorate, and once again we will have second-class citizens in different parts of the country. That is not at all what we should be striving for in this great country of ours. There should be universal access in every part of the country to the education system.

A news release put out by doctors in Atlantic Canada spells out quite clearly that some 87 per cent of doctors in that area have petitioned their Members of Parliament not to reduce extended federal funding for health services by over $21 million over the next five years. That is what it will cost in Prince Edward Island alone. It is also pointed out in the news release that in addition to the losses cited for P.E.I., Newfoundland stands to lose $95 million, Nova Scotia stands to lose $145 million, and New Brunswick will lose $117 million. These are the very areas of the country which can least afford it.

The Minister mentioned that the Government was elected on a policy of economic renewal. We now find out what that term means. It means shifting the tax burden from Ottawa to the provinces. If the provinces are to try to keep up with any sort of a national health care system or educational system they will have to increase their taxes. That is just what the Government is trying to do. It is trying to reduce its deficit while increasing the deficit of the provinces. My constitutents tell me that tax is tax, whether they pay it to the federal Government or to the provincial Government. Why should there be this extra tax burden? The Government may be able to show on paper, in a couple of years, that the deficit is decreasing, while the provincial deficits will be increasing as a result of its actions. I feel that the Government is certainly headed in the wrong direction by trying to shift a tax burden of $8 billion over the next five years from the federal Government to the provinces. That is just not the way to go about it.

In the last election campaign we heard a great deal about co-operation, this great new co-operative spirit between the federal Government and the provinces. I guarantee Hon. Members that as a result of this Bill that co-operation will disappear. I cannot see any provincial Premier of any political stripe agreeing to this sort of Bill.

I know my time has almost run out. However, I would like to go on. I would like to be able to expand on some of my arguments as to why this Bill should not go ahead. However, under Standing Order 117 I am not permitted to speak at any greater length. I believe the Government will receive its just desserts when it goes to the polls the next time around. I tell every Member opposite that this legislation is very severe legislation for any Member of Parliament who is trying to get re-elected, particularly those from Atlantic Canada. We cannot afford this very unjust legislation, this Draconian measure which is being brought forward by the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the Government's proposal. I think it does not realize the kind of problems this measure will cause for the provinces, both for our education system and our health care system, for young and old. A provincial Government cannot maintain these systems without sufficient funding. I am positive the system will start breaking down in a matter of years. I think the Government fails to realize the problems that will result for most provincial Governments. I am sure that in a few years, the federal Government will have to review this legislation.

[English]

As I see it, the problem is that the Government has moved with undue haste, not so much in closing off the debate, although I confess that is a bit of an aggravation, but in its effort to cut back on the expenditures at the federal level. It has done one of two things. First, it has either transferred the responsibility to the provinces or it has decided that the systems, both the post-secondary education system and health care, should be reduced as to their effectiveness and openness.

We in Canada have prided ourselves for years in the educational system that we have been able to provide, both for the young and for those who seek to continue their education as necessity requires throughout their lifetimes. Equally, we have prided ourselves for many years in terms of the accessibility of our health care system. We need only look to the Province of Ontario to see what occurs when there is insufficient funds made available for the provision of necessary services. The strike by the doctors, albeit motivated more by greed than by good judgment, I think, nevertheless reflects a fundamental problem of funding within the health care system.

Over the years I have seen, as have many other Members, Governments moving to close wings and remove beds from hospitals which, frankly speaking, were necessary if the level of health care we had up until a few years ago was to be maintained. What I find most disconcerting is that for reasons yet to be explained the Government has decided to run serious risks with the future of accessible health care—accessible in both senses; that is, from the point of view of geography and from the point of view of finances.

I do not think there are many Members of any age in this House who do not recall the problems of the early 1950s, and prior, when there was limited access to health care other than through private plans. Those Members will recall—and if they do not personally recall they would find out about it through discussion with people who lived during that period and were parents of young families—the amount of debt that they were encumbered with as a result of requiring extensive health care.

What will happen as a result of these measures, the one affecting health in particular, is that we will return to a time when there will not be the accessibility that we have come to expect. In our judgment, we are doing that unnecessarily and without justification. We are now embarking upon the taking of risks without adequate justification, and I could predict the end result of that. My predictions are not always correct, I admit, but nevertheless, in this case I think it is based on some factual information. I predict this will have serious deteriorating effects on the availability of hospital and medical care for Canadians throughout the country.

We are not talking only about the Province of Ontario but about every province. In fact, some provinces will be hit harder by the cut-backs than others. The fact is that even after 20 or more years we have not yet been able to achieve that system of health care that affords to everyone reasonably accessible health care within some fair and definable geographic area. I know that in some parts of northern British Columbia, in northern Ontario and Quebec, in the Maritimes and in substantially large parts of the Prairies, getting to a hospital is a chore in itself. If one happens to be unfortunate enough to live in a less densely populated area which once had a small cottage-type hospital available, given the propensity of Governments to cut back in recent years the chances are that that hospital has been either cut back or closed. The chances are that that particular service has not been replaced by any adequate means of transportation. How often have we heard of elderly and sick requiring care who cannot be transported at a speed sufficient to arrive at hospital in time to be looked after?

With those things in mind, it causes me and my colleagues great concern when the Government moves to reduce the amount of money available for the health care system. That is exactly what the Government has done.

I spoke the other day about this same Bill and I dwelt at some length on the question of post-secondary education. Having said that, I would like to refer anyone who is interested to that particular speech. However, I want to spend a moment or two right now talking about the problem of health care.

For years we have argued that before any decisions are made about the suitability of the level of funding we must take a look at the health care system as it exists, and we must modernize it and bring it up to date. We must make sure that it does in fact use the latest technologies and that we are not overlapping responsibilities. We must ensure that we are taking full advantage of all of the new methods and are not encumbering doctors with jobs that could be done by other health care practitioners. We should try to understand that there are various levels of health care required for different people. For instance, the aged do not necessarily need to be in old age homes if they are provided in-home care, but they are not. It has been proven over the world that in-home care is cheaper than institutionalization. If we were really looking for a way to cut down on the costs of health care, we would be doing a reasonable and accurate analysis to determine whether we are now using all of the most modern and acceptable techniques across the country. However, we are not doing that.

As I am sure many Hon. Members did, last night I watched on television an account of the events taking place in Ottawa and other parts of the country at emergency care units which are being closed down. Doctors decided that they are not going to work. I am not going to argue with them if they do not want to work. I suppose there is nothing I can do about that. There is nothing worse than to be sick and have a reluctant doctor, I suppose. There is nothing worse than to need an operation and have it done by a fellow with a scalpel in his hand and a bitterness in his heart. Whether we or someone sends them back to work or not, clearly they are not going to do the kind of work they ought to be doing. I think that is fair to say.

I was sickened to learn that emergency rooms decided that they would not provide any care at all. Most emergency units, with or without doctors, ought to be able to provide some level of emergency care for people who are in need. The nurses and interns who were in the emergency units ought to have been able to continue to run the units. There should have been a clear delineation of responsibilities in order to take full advantage of all aspects of the system.

Therefore, I suggest that where the Government is falling down lies in the fact that it is looking at only one thing. It feels that if we squeeze the pot smaller, we will in one way or another improve the system of health care. I suggest that that is wrong. It may well be that we could in fact spend fewer dollars, but I do not know if that is true or not. One thing I do know for sure is that that decision cannot be made until we first decide if the system is adequate in its provision of care. We have not yet made that decision and that is why in essence we find this legislation unacceptable and we find the closure motion inappropriate.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) had to say about Bill C-96.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, Bill C-96 has been the subject of 125 speeches in 11 days of debate in the House, which is a lot more than 30 hours of debate altogether.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government believes in post-secondary education. The Conservative Government is aware of the important of medical and health care services in each of the provinces.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is also aware of the national debt, that Liberal legacy worth more than $200 billion, yes, I said $200 billion, while in 1968, and when the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance and until 1975, there had been no debt or very little.

Mr. Speaker, between 1968 and 1984, the national debt rose to over $200 billion. And in 1984, if we had not been careful, our deficit would have been $39 billion per year.

I think that, in this debate, we should remember that we are not talking about cuts in transfer payments to the provinces, we are talking about a reduction in the growth of those transfer payments. And that, Mr. Speaker, is entirely different.

We took drastic measures. In the last Budget of February 1986, Mr. Speaker, we said: All departmental expenditures will be limited to a 3 per cent increase, the only exception being transfers to the provinces which will continue to rise 5 per cent annually.

In my estimation, Mr. Speaker, it goes to show what this Conservative Government is prepared to do with respect to post-secondary education and hospital services. But it shows as well that we are respectful of the mandate we were given in 1984, which was to work towards reducing both the annual deficit and the national debt, Mr. Speaker. And this is in addition to job creation.

We have been working hard since September 4 and I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is to be commended for his outstanding performance. We have made it a point to boost the Canadian economy from coast to coast. The evidence of that can be seen in Quebec, among other provinces. We have reached a settlement with Quebec, and the equalization payments have been reduced precisely because the economy has improved in Quebec, as in most other provinces. This is why the equalization payments were lower. This is something we can be proud of. Although post-secondary education and health care come under provincial jurisdiction, the federal Government has decided to help the provinces. But this is a federal statute, no agreement has been signed, Mr. Speaker, and tomorrow morning the federal Government could conceivably decide not to make transfer payments to the provinces, yet it would no be contravening the provisions of the Constitution or of any federal or provincial law. I think we must realize this. Transfer payments to the provinces are made by the central Government on a voluntary basis to help them pay for education and health care.

Again, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely nothing to force the provinces to report to the federal Government concerning how these funds are spent, be it for post-secondary education or health services. The provinces decide, the money is theirs.

Mr. Speaker, 125 Members have spoken to a Bill that has been discussed since November 1984 with the provinces went through first and second reading and was referred to a legislative committee, where it received no other recommendation except that the House proceed with third reading and passage of the Bill. The Legislative Committee made no further recommendation.

The eighteen groups were heard on Bill C-96 before the Legislative Committee, Mr. Speaker, eighteen groups which came to voice their concerns. I kept in constant touch with Members of the Government who attended the committee sessions, to find out what these groups had to say. They expressed their concerns, but their concerns involved areas that fall under provincial jurisdiction: health care and post-secondary education. Each province, with the Budget it will receive from the federal Government under this legislation, will decide whether in Quebec, in the Maritimes, in British Columbia or Alberta, whether in each of these provinces they will continue to offer the same services or will cut down on these services. That is entirely a matter of provincial jurisdiction, not the federal Government's.

The Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has also finished its "pre-study" of Bill C-96. All is well, Mr. Speaker, except for the Opposition. The Opposition has simply decided to prevent Bill C-96 from taking its normal course, otherwise it whould have already gone through the third reading stage by now.

It is really too bad because we have some important Bills. We have a lot of business to finish before the end of the session, but the Opposition, as I said earlier, insists on bringing in an incredible number of speakers who all say the same thing. Every Member who spoke—I was here for the first reading and second reading—repeated what the previous speaker had said, and the same applies to the amendment tabled this week.

I think we are wasting precious time which should be used to consider all the other Bills we have to deal with, Mr. Speaker. I could mention C-90 and C-103, which have been prepared by the Department of Finance. All our departments have Bills. We are being held up for no good reason on C-96 which has been discussed with the provinces since November 1984. If the Opposition had its way, we would even celebrate the second anniversary of the date on which the subject was first discussed by the federal Government and the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is high time the Opposition realized that there are no cutbacks, and that for the last five years the federal Government has given the provinces $65 billion in transfer payments. There will be $90 billion over the next five years, Mr. Speaker, and no matter how you figure it out, $90 billion less $65 billion works out to $25 billion more over five years. If Hon. Members of the Opposition cannot understand that over the next five years $25 billion more will be given as compared with the five previous years, then we will buy them an adding machine, have them take accounting courses—

An Hon. Member: They will not be able to use it!

Mr. Vincent: —we will have to do something because they are wasting the time of the House; indeed we will increase transfer payments to the provinces over the next five years.

An Hon. Member: We are responsible people!

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, they will increase faster than the expenditures of federal departments. They will go up 5 per cent a year, whereas the federal departments will be limited to a 3 per cent increase.

Mr. Speaker, I think Hon. Members have to be logical and realistic. I see that my time is up, so I simply want to stress the fact that we do need to invoke closure, go on to other importants questions as soon as possible and end the debate on Bill C-96 which has the support of most Members of the House.

• (1600)

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I feel obligated to rise and speak on Bill C-96 this afternoon. As everyone who has paid attention to the debate over the last few days knows, Bill C-96 will have the effect of cutting $8 billion from health and educational services by 1992. We have heard individuals say that there will not be any cuts.

On a more serious note, we have heard a Member on the Government side say that we are wasting the time of Parliament and of Canadians. Nothing could be further from the truth. Today we also have an additional component, namely, for the tenth time in this Parliament the Government, with its absolute majority, has the temerity to cut off debate. The Opposition recognizes that with the numbers in the House we cannot win any vote in the life of this Parliament. We knew that; Canadians knew that. However, what Canadians and the Opposition do not accept is that we are unable to debate the business of the country in this Chamber. That is the greatest irony.

We have a Government with an absolute majority which is afraid to discuss issues and to give the Opposition a chance to articulate the concerns of Canadians from one coast to the other on the two crucial elements which form the basis of Bill C-96. It is a shame that with over 200 Members the Government does not have the courage to listen to what Canadians are saying through their elected Members of Parliament. However, despite what I have said about closure, the Hon. Member said that we were wasting time. I would submit, with all due respect, that the Member reflects how out of sync are the Government and the Conservative Party with the aspirations of average Canadians on the street, whether the street happens to be in Newfoundland or in Victoria, British Columbia. If government Members chose to travel and to meet with individuals in their own constituencies, they would know that this particular piece of legislation cuts across two elements of society—on the one hand, the young vis-à-vis education and, on the other hand, the old vis-à-vis health services. They are two crucial programs.

As an hon. friend said earlier, there is only one taxpayer. There may be three levels of government, but there is only one taxpayer. Whether it comes from the federal, provincial, or municipal coffers, that taxpayer wishes to have the services which are part of the social contract of the individual with the country.

When we travel across the country—and it is the same in my constituency of York West—and talk with senior citizens, we find out what issues they are concerned about. To a certain degree they are concerned about the pension issue. However, they are also concerned about the health issue, the standard of health care, the delivery of health care, the affordability of health care, and the accessibility to health care. Those are their concerns and they are our concerns with this Bill. We are not wasting the time of Canadians when discussing the merits of this legislation. The Government may believe that it is okay to cut $8 billion by 1992 from health or education if we debate the issue for 25 hours. We are not saying that 30 or 40 hours of debate will make this any better. However, this is the only forum that the Opposition has to prevail upon the mindset which seems to paralyse the Conservative Government. One hopes that because of this debate the Government will finally see that there is something to be said about the Opposition's position.

When I travel across the country and meet with young Canadians the topic of education always comes up. I attended a youth forum two weeks ago at the University of Toronto with Senator Hébert. Virtually the only thing we talked about was accessibility to education. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet Ministers talk about Canada moving ahead with new technology in the 21st century they always bring up education. They say that our institutions must provide our young people with the know-how to compete in the international community. They say that young people must have a chance to grow and develop through our university and college system in order to have the tools to work with in the market-place so that our country and their own lot can be improved.

What are we to tell the young people? What is the Government telling the young people by cutting $8 billion from education and health services in eight years? What are the young people to say about the leadership at the national level? Very often we say that young people do not have fire in their belly any more. In the 1960s and 1970s young people did not talk only about youth issues and education. They talked about the issues of the day. They articulted on the type of world they would like to have. They talked about the disparity between rich and poor. They talked about the gap between the "haves" and "have nots". They talked about war and peace.

Yes, there is now a silence among the youth of the country. Is that any wonder when they do not have motivation, when they are not inspired by their Government to move on to greater things? The Government is moving backwards. It tells the people that although it speaks of education they are not getting the dough to improve their opportunities. You cannot do that with either the young people or the old.

With regard to health care, we in Ontario are witnessing what happens when medical doctors begin to pull away from the medical system. We have seen the reaction. Last weekend the Hospital for Sick Children had a telethon on the CTV network. Why should it be necessary to have a telethon for the Hospital for Sick Children? The York-Finch Hospital in my own constituency has been engaged in a door-to-door campaign to raise funds. Constituents are asking me why they should give to the York-Finch Hospital. It is not that they do not want to give; everyone will find $5 or $10 to give to the York-Finch Hospital or the Hospital for Sick Children. The point is that they assumed that part of the tax moneys they have to pay each year goes toward health care, toward acquiring new equipment for the York-Finch Hospital and toward building the new wing at the Hospital for Sick Children.

The hospitals are forced to campaign to raise more funds. They are forced to ask Canadians to give a little extra. They are forced to be the recipients of telethons. They do not like that. They do not like to go door-to-door and almost beg for money in order to be able to provide the health care system which we need and deserve. They, like other Canadians, look to their governments for that leadership. They expect the Government to have the foresight to provide that system.

In 15 years ours will be an aging population. Unless we build the infrastructure now to care for that aging population we will be out of step with the needs of Canadians. If we do not plan now we will not be able to provide the services that will be required in the future. The same applies to education for our young people.

I would like to emphasize once again that Bill C-96 is a betrayal of Canadianism. It is a betrayal of two unnegotiable essential services which Canadians have come to enjoy and expect as part of their citizenship. We have been able to show world leadership in education and, perhaps more important, education. If this Bill is allowed to pass, today will be a sad day for Canada with respect to educational opportunities for our young and a health care system for our aged.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed with a great deal of sadness that we must stand today to deliver a speech on the closure motion which the Government has now introduced on one of the most important Bills that this House will deal with in this session of Parliament. Bill C-96 will cut $5,600 million from the post-secondary education and health care budgets of the country.

This is possibly the best example we have had recently of the tyranny that a huge majority of government Members can provide. The Government has now introduced closure 10 times. It has said that it does not want to hear any more discussion or debate. It does not want to hear Parliamentarians from all sides of the House present the views of their constituents on this issue.

I can understand why the Government would bring in closure today. I can understand why the Government would take the position that it does not want any more discussion. This Government measure is quite Draconian, extremely regressive and antipeople. If I was introducing such a negative Bill I suspect that I, too, would like to minimize debate.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) stood in her place and said that this Bill went to committee where 18 groups appeared. She omitted something very crucial, that virtually every one of the groups represented at committee spoke against this government initiative. They said that Bill C-96 should not be proceeded with as the Government was attempting. That gives more fuel to the argument that in its present form this Bill is premature. That is why we decided to attempt to hoist this Bill for six months. We wanted to give Members of Parliament a second look at this process and hoped to convince the Government that to cut billions and billions of dollars over the next five years from post-secondary education and health care is wrong.

I must tell you that over the last few weeks, when I returned to my constituency, I made a point of asking people if they knew the Government had a Bill before the House to cut back spending on education, training, research and health care. The typical reaction was sort of a blank stare and gaping mouth. People could not believe the Government of Canada was actually cutting back on health care and post-secondary education. What western industrialized nation other than Canada is cutting back on the money invested in their most important resource, the people of their country?

When you look at the record of that Government it has not always cut back in all areas. It spent $1 billion for the bank bail-out. That is $1,000 million it found over the weekend to help the banks. Then there was the $1 billion tax deal for Dome Petroleum. That did not cause any concern. There was another $1 billion on the Gulf Oil sale. That did not cause any concern. Then of course we get into some other things such as the billions in tax concessions of one sort or another to the corporate sector, for which we get very little in return. By the Government's own admission that is costing billions and billions of dollars in lost taxes. If the Government was interested in cutting back, it could cut back there, to say nothing of the $500,000 capital gains exemption. All those people selling race-horses or jewellery or speculating in land in foreign countries or on foreign stock exchanges do not pay any taxes on the profits from those transactions. We say this is unfair. To give away hundreds of millions of dollars, nay billions, to corporations and wealthy individuals and then say we can no longer afford to invest as we have in health care and post-secondary education is wrong. It is for those reasons that we in the New Democratic Party, along with representatives of the Liberal Party have said, let us pause at this point and examine this matter.

Members of this House from British Columbia have seen the educational system in that province literally fall apart. You would have to look long and hard to find a single educator or any other person seriously interested in education who would say that the Province of British Columbia has not devastated its educational system. People with special needs no longer have appropriate teachers or classrooms. Gifted young people no longer get the kind of education which will enable them to develop their skills and talents as they should. People who live in the rural areas of British Columbia do not have access, because of geography or financial circumstances, to proper educational opportunities. In the province from which I come education has been cut to the bone. As a matter of fact, even the bone has been cut into. When I see that as a result of Bill C-96 some $650 million will be cut from what that Province would normally get for post-secondary education and health care, I just shudder. What kind of educational system will we then have in that part of Canada? I suspect a similar case can be made for other parts of the country as well, and we are very, very concerned.

Many witnesses came before the committee and literally begged the government Members to give second thoughts to what they were doing with Bill C-96. Delegations representing various elements of the health care and post-secondary education systems came before the committee and literally cried to government Members to stop proceeding with this Bill. I do not think there was a single representative who said, proceed with the Bill.

Are members of the Conservative Government really representing the views of their constituents? I would be very surprised if there are many Members of the House, and I would certainly like to hear from them, who have gone back to their constituents, explained that the Government is cutting $5.6 billion over the next five years from education and health care, and then heard them saying go for it. That is a great idea. I suspect those of us who have held public meetings on these issues in our constituencies will all say that the reaction has been total and universal; stop proceeding with this Bill. Do not go ahead. The country cannot afford to take this regressive step.

If we feel that cutting back our investment in health care is the way to resolve the challenges and issues facing the country in that area, we are very wrong. While recognizing that rationalization of the system must occur, we must also recognize that there should first be an examination and analysis of the system regarding the allocation of funds before we hack away at the money invested. For that reason we are disappointed that this Bill is even before us, and even more disappointed that the Government has introduced closure so we can no longer have the opportunity to reflect the views of our constituents on this legislation.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion for time allocation with respect to Bill C-96. I was in the House yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and I think we have been hearing the Opposition for quite a long time on this subject. They are not offering any alternative solutions. They propose amendments but no real alternatives. And it's all just talk, talk, talk, along the lines of: It's a sad day for Canada, and it's this and it's that. Always the same old song, except that when I look around in my riding, Mr. Speaker, everything is fine. My constituents are not sure why, but the economy is in good shape. It costs less to take out a mortgage, so they can go to the bank and refinance the mortgage on their house. When they want to go on a trip, they go and see their bank manager and they say: Well, since interest rates are lower, I suppose we could afford a trip this year. In any case, things are o.k., or at least a lot better. They don't quite know why but they are just fine. So I think that in the next election, Mr. Speaker, we will be able to present Canadians with some really concrete achievements.

The other day, for instance, I was listening to the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), and I don't know what the definition is for b.s. where he comes from, but where I come from, when we say someone is shooting b.s., it is not exactly a token of respect. Where I come from, it is not a term of endearment. The Hon. Member said that Mr. Roger Hamel, President of the Chamber of Commerce, was shooting b.s. I don't know what he meant, and I wish he would tell me. In any case, I thought it was a bit odd, because it is not a term that is generally used to be nice to someone. The Opposition says the Government promised consultations and co-operation. The Minister's Parliamentary Secretary just said, Mr. Speaker, and I don't know what they mean by consultation, but we have had 125 speeches in eleven days of debate. The Legislative Committee, is a product of our parliamentary reform, is meant to give Members a chance to express their views on a Bill before proceeding with second and third reading in the House. Speaking of parliamentary reform, it is high time Opposition Members said: All right, we agree with the Government because the deficit . . . The Opposition always got itself elected, Mr. Speaker, by wasting the money of the Canadian people. They just turned on the money tap, as wide as it would go, and they practically gave it away, without bothering to make many financial projections. There comes a time when you realize you are living beyond your means. It's like a family, where the father realizes he has a problem when his income is so much per year and his expenses are more than that. There comes a time when he asks his children to sit around the table and talk. My father used to do that. He would say: Listen, Dad has a problem. There isn't any more money. That new bicycle you wanted to buy this year will have to wait another two or three years.

Dad cannot give you money to go out tonight because he does not have any left. As a federal Government, Mr. Speaker, we are taken to task for legislating on the back of the provinces, but I wonder who did benefit from that money in the past 20 years. Somebody did. Perhaps the friends of the Liberals did somehow, because we Conservatives have not been on the receiving end of the Government generosity over the last 20 years.

Mr. Speaker, we know that making cut-backs is not a very popular approach. Of course not. If you cut yourself it hurts for a few days, you end up with a small scar and then forget all about it. For the time being we are trying to rationalize, and that is not very popular.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member, and I go back to the remarks of my colleague, the Member for Port au Port—I am having a hard time with the name of his riding—the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who said he wanted to see a Parliament where Members sometimes find enough courage to assume their responsibilities. Well, it so happens—

Mr. Nunziata: I would ask that you note that there are fewer than 20 Members in the House. I would ask you to note the lack of a quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There is a quorum, not including the occupant of the Chair. Debate shall accordingly continue.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague from York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) wanted—because what I was saying made sense, so he took a moment to raise a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, it so happens that the courage of the Conservatives is to face facts and say: Look, we have been living beyond our means, it is just like a credit card bill, when you get it, you pay. If you fail to pay, they take the card away from you. That is what courage is all about, and this is what we have been doing since September 4.

Mr. Speaker, this is the House of democratically elected representatives, and we were elected on September 4 to carry out this rationalization. It is frustrating! I can understand the reaction of Hon. Members opposite watching this Government accomplish things which the Liberals and even the NDP Members—this is something they do not talk about—but the Liberals were in office during 20 years, they could have done something, but no, they just made sure they were elected and then spent money like drunken sailors.

It takes courage, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has that kind of courage. He is not afraid to talk about difficult years like 1986, years when time has come to tighten our belts and say: Listen, if we want to leave a prosperous country to our children, we must now make difficult decisions, but they have to be made—

Mr. Champagne: —they have not been made—

Mrs. Bourgault: —they have not been made by the Liberals, and I thank my colleague from Champlain.

So the parliamentary reform—and I am getting back to that, Mr. Speaker—consists in admitting that the Government is right. Why not? That is what Members of the Opposition wanted. To admit that the Government is right. And now and again, I must admit it and we said so on many occasions in the House, we did accept amendments introduced by the Opposition. We have admitted that indeed Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition was right in certain instances. We agreed to bring in the amendments they had recommended.

Now the time has come for them to do the same thing and admit that we are right with respect to Bill C-96, that we have been talking about it for the last 11 days, and that we ought to put an end to the debate.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wanted to make on this closure motion. I hope the debate will come to an end so that the House may go on to other important matters in the next few days.

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable regret and chagrin that I rise in my place today to speak to this closure motion by the Conservative Government. I would like to begin by commenting briefly on this particular motion. It has been referred to as a Draconian measure by this Conservative Government. Indeed, it is. As we look across the aisle in the House of Commons we see 200, and I guess it is nine Conservative Members of Parliament. We had two defections from the Conservative ranks over the last two years. So there are 209 Conservative Members of Parliament. This is the tenth time in less than two years that this Government has invoked the undemocratic measure of closure.

One would ask why it is necessary for this Government to use such an irresponsible, undemocratic and Draconian measure to silence the Opposition. We are few in numbers on this side of the House, 69 members in the Opposition against 209.

An Hon. Member: Only one. Where are they now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope Hon. Members would not reflect on attendance in the House.

Mr. Nunziata: Sixty-nine versus 209, an overwhelming majority, indeed. Why the necessity for closure? There are rules in this House that say Hon. Members can only speak once to a particular motion before the House. It is not as if we could prolong this particular debate ad infinitum. There are limits. Indeed, we had quite a number of speakers, but we were nearing the end of our ability to prolong the debate with respect to this very crucial piece of legislation. Why then would the Government invoke closure? It makes absolutely no sense at all. It is indicative of how this particular Government operates.

This is a measure that we consider to be one of the most important pieces of legislation that this House has dealt with over the last two years. The Bill proposes to cut $8 billion from health care and education in Canada. The ramifications will be absolutely and utterly devastating to every region in the country. Yet this Government, in a callous and irresponsible fashion, is ramming this Bill through and silencing the Opposition. I do not know whether the Government can cite any group or organization or individual in Canada that is supportive of this Bill except, perhaps, the 209 Conservative Members of Parliament.

Witness after witness appearing before the committee objected to this legislation. Every last provincial Government in Canada objected to this legislation. Why then is the Government insisting on passing it?

We in the Opposition have pointed out the inadequacies of this legislation. We have pointed out what the negative impacts will be on all regions of Canada. We are simply asking that the matter be held in abeyance for six months in order to give an opportunity for the Conservative Government of Canada to understand that the people of Canada do not want this legislation, that it is harmful and dangerous and pierces the very heart of our nation.

When you start attacking education, when you start attacking health care you are attacking the heart of our country. These are values which we hold very dear. These are institutions that help make our society the best country anywhere in the world. Our educational system and our health care system are the envy of every last country in the world. We have the best system of education and health care. I am convinced of that.

This Government with this particular piece of legislation cutting $8 billion from those two very important areas is going to render health care and post-secondary education, not to second-class, not to third-class, but to last class, because the Members across the way have no class.

• (1640)

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, and I know that at times you are embarrassed to admit that you are a Conservative Member of Parliament, that the Government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope that the Hon. Member would not reflect on the Chair in one way or another. I enjoy listening to the Hon. Member's speech, and I hope he will keep to the debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Out of great respect for you, Mr. Speaker, because I have the ultimate respect for your deliberations and fairness, I will refrain from commenting about the Chair. Let me comment about Conservative Members of Parliament generally.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Comment on the Bill.

Mr. Nunziata: Conservative Members, before and during the election campaign, stood tall and told the people of Canada to elect a Conservative Government and they would guarantee to every Canadian a new era of national reconciliation. They talked about a new era of reconciliation and national consultation. They told the people of Canada that they would listen to their views about legislation, rather than ram it through. Those words ring hollow today. Where was the consultation? Where is the new era of national reconciliation with respect to Bill C-96? Perhaps the Government listened to a limited number of groups and organizations, but every one of them objected to this Bill. If the Government was true to its word, which invariably is not the case, then it would not pass this regressive legislation.

Is it any wonder that after less than two years in Government the Conservative Party has frittered away its mandate and has frittered away its trust with the people of Canada, because they no longer trust the Government or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)? The electorate has a right to expect its politicians to fulfil their promises, including their promises not to do certain things. The Government, lead by a Prime Minister who is greatly lacking in credibility, honesty and integrity, has frittered away its mandate. The Conservatives had overwhelming support on September 4, 1984, and shortly thereafter, but it has gone. Every public opinion poll that has been published in the last number of months indicates that the Liberal Party is leading the Conservative Party in popular support. Indeed, in the Province of Quebec the New Democratic Party, of all political parties, is leading the Conservative Party. The Hon. Member who spoke previously stood in her place and said: "Everything is well in the state of Denmark". But everything is not well for the Conservative Party. Is it any wonder, when the Conservatives try to ram through legislation like Bill C-96?

Bill C-96 will render our health care and post-secondary educational system third class. In my Province of Ontario there will be $3 billion less in federal transfer payments over the next five years. Imagine the impact of this on health care and post-secondary education in the Province of Ontario. There will be fewer hospital beds, and if we think there is a problem today with the doctors' strike in Ontario and the closure of emergency wards in an increasing number of hospitals, wait until we see what happens when a total of $8 billion is withdrawn from health care and post-secondary education.

We in the Opposition have tried to make the Government understand that this legislation is not only bad, it is wrong. The impact on our economy will be devastating. Rather than listening, the Government has decided to invoke closure. The people of Canada are watching and they understand what is happening with the Conservative Government.

I note that you are about to indicate that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. It is regrettable that we are not given an opportunity to further discuss this important piece of legislation. I would ask for unanimous consent to carry on with my remarks, and I am sure you will find that unanimous consent opposite.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the motion presented by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) with respect to Bill C-96, which concerns transfers made by the federal Government to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the total time spent on debating this Bill and the number of Members who have had a chance to speak in the course of eleven days of debate, during the 37 hours at least of debate we have had on this Bill, I think there comes a time when a Government that is responsible and has consulted all ten provinces, that has consulted with the Opposition, both Liberals and New Democrats, a Government that is concerned about the country's financial situation and has a concern for social justice and fairness to each of the provinces, there comes indeed a time when that Government must decide to deal with the question once and for all.

That is what the Minister of State (Finance) has done with this motion. It means that enough time has been wasted by the Liberals and the New Democrats on useless verbiage, and that we should now proceed with more important matters, with measures that will stimulate the Canadian economy by means of new legislation and new regulations introduced, not on a partisan basis but for the benefit of all Canadians, fairly and equitably.

Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) spoke earlier of a sad day for Canada, a day to remember, because the Conservative Government was cutting transfer payments, when he said this I think he was completely mistaken. Why was he mistaken? I will explain. When the Liberal Party was in power, there were increases of roughly 7 and 8 per cent a year. I don't think mistaken, but if I am, I am sure someone will say so. Seven and eight per cent per year on transfers to the provinces, at a time when inflation hovered between 12 and 15 per cent. That was the situation when the Liberals were in power. We are giving a 5 per cent increase. Less than what the Liberals gave, granted. However, thanks to the sound management principles of the Progressive Conservative Government, the inflaton take is now around 4 to 4.5 per cent.

So in terms of net gain, the provinces are better off with what we are giving them than they were under the Liberals, because even when they were getting a 7 per cent increase, they had to forego the 5 per cent they needed to keep up with inflation. The increase we are giving them is a better deal, because the inflation rate has gone down.

Mr. Speaker, that is what I call responsible government. This is a Government that is serious about its responsibilities, that negotiates with each province and considers which areas should be given priority treatment. We are aware, Mr. Speaker, that post-secondary education is important. We realize, Mr. Speaker, that health problems are a serious concern. However, Mr. Speaker, we must be realistic. And the fact is that we were left a deficit of $200 billion by the Liberals.

When we were elected on September 4, 1984, Mr. Speaker, it was not to make empty promises, it was not to waste money as the Liberals did during their 20 years in office, but it was to restore economic order. By restoring economic order we are in a better position to be more generous with the provinces, to make sure that they get fair treatment rather than mere promises. They expect concrete measures, Mr. Speaker, and that is what we are now giving them.

It has been said over and over again that 125 Members have spoken to this Bill, that they were able to tell the Government everything they wanted to say, so I would suggest the the Liberals are mistaken when they claim that we do not consult. Mr. Speaker, they are more mistaken still when they say that we did not speak to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, there were more than six meetings with the provinces on this subject during the past year alone. These meetings involved discussions with every provincial Minister of Finance. I think it is perfectly normal that the Ministers of Finance of each province are not quite satisfied. But if we look at the provinces' individual budgets, we see that they also have to put their finances on a sounder basis. Each province has certain choices it must make. We saw this with the Liberal Peterson Government. We saw it with the Liberal Bourassa Government. They are cutting back too. And these are Liberals. I don't understand why the Federal Liberals keep telling us they would not make cuts, but on the other hand, I do understand because spending was a habit with them. And they tended to ignore who was paying the bill, but in fact, it was the average Canadian taxpayer who was paying, Mr. Speaker, and they are the ones we want to help today. It doesn't make sense to let the federal Liberals say things that in the final instance would penalize Canadians, because where would the extra money they want to spend come from, Mr. Speaker? From the taxpayers' pockets? No, we won't do that. We have rationalized public spending in order to stimulate the Canadian economy.

I can hear the federal Liberals in Quebec saying: You have cut back payments to Quebec, and that is outrageous. I may remind them that in 1985-86, we are going to spend $4.091 billion, and in 1986-87, it will be $4.329 billion. Of course, they don't understand about increases because Liberals don't know how to count. That we have seen. The New Democrats, who believe the Liberals, think they are right, but then, they don't know how to count either. Mr. Speaker, the message we want to get across in the House and to the Canadian people is that we have to give a reasonable increase that takes into consideration two basic factors: the federal Government's ability to pay, which is very important, and that each province receives a fair and equitable part of these federal transfer payments.

Mr. Speaker, when we sit down and establish these two equations, the inevitable result is a fair deal, and we must not forget that we have to give 5 per cent today, even if it is more than the inflation rate, because we have to live with a situation we inherited from the Liberals. We have no choice. We have to live with it. However, Mr. Speaker, first of all and above all, we want to protect transfer payments to the provinces over the long term. We do not intend to throw money around recklessly and thus jeopardize a transfer program that is so important and so vital to our provinces, especially to Quebec. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I fully support the motion presented by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), and I take my hat off to her, because at last we have a Minister of State (Finance) with character and the guts, unlike the Liberals.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to have to be speaking on such an important subject as Bill C-96 on a motion of closure. This is a very important matter for Canadians concerning the cuts in funding by the federal Government for post-secondary education and health care to the provinces. The reasons we were given for closure by the Minister were very unacceptable. She pointed to the large number—actually, not a terribly large number, but a respectable number shall we say—of witnesses who came before committee, and the committee heard them. Here we have a perfect example of the kind of consultation we are getting from the Conservative Government. Yes, 18 witnesses from 18 organizations were heard, and they all told the Minister that the Bill was unacceptable, that it would cause a great deal of harm to the health care system and to post-secondary education. The Government listened but it did not act. It is not really a question that we need more hours of debate; it is that we need a Government that is prepared to listen to people, to listen to good sense and to listen to good recommendations.

One of the promises the Conservatives gave in Opposition was that they would go back to the 1977 formula for funding. Of course, what we see in Bill C-96 is that they are not going back to the funding in 1977; worse, they are cutting what was promised since then. This is an entirely unacceptable and, indeed, very dangerous proposal they have presented us. They would have us believe that these cuts are necessary for other economic purposes, and they talk very piously about cutting the deficit. The deficit, of course, is not even being cut. It will grow at least by $29 billion this year. They would like to think that if they keep it under the magic figure of $30 billion they are doing us all a favour. The estimate of $29 billion is probably an underestimate, because the Conservatives have not been very good at estimating interest rates or petroleum prices. We will probably have an even higher deficit than $29 billion.

The Conservatives are not cutting the deficit, so what are they doing? They are continuing spending and, indeed, increasing spending in some other areas dear to their hearts, such as trips for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on the Prime Minister's Office, the camera crews, and all of these frills. They have not shown any kind of restraint in these areas. We would certainly like to see restraint in those areas as a first priority, instead of cuts in post-secondary education, in the training of our young people and retraining for others so they will have the skills for the new technological age in which we live, and adequate health care. Instead, what are they doing? They are diverting money from these social programs into other areas of expenditure. The option they have is simply to collect more taxes.

The Government is indeed a continuation of the previous Liberal Government that simply provided enormous loopholes to the corporations. If the Government began to close some of these loopholes it would have more money for post-secondary education, for research and for health care. If we look at the scale of these loopholes we find it is quite instructive. Let us look at what is being collected: personal income tax, $37.7 billion; corporate income tax, $11.7 billion; sales and excise taxes, $18.9 billion; and other taxes and revenues up to $13.3 billion. These amount to a total of $81.6 billion.

What the Government does not tell us about is the very substantial number of giveaways. We can only make guesses as to precisely what these are, and by my calculation this raises the figure up to $26 billion for 1986-87, when we include the corporate giveaways which are listed, and of course we do not even have them all. For much of the data that the Department of Finance reports it is stated that the figures are not available. It is not to say that they do not exist, but that they are giveaways, which make these a very conservative estimate. Of course, we also have unpaid deferred corporate taxes. This figure now totals $32 billion. If one collected even the interest on that, that would be in excess of $4 billion. That kind of money is very substantial, yet we have a Government that is not prepared to go after money. Instead, what it is doing is cutting the social programs. If it needs to cut spending why does it not look at some other areas of Government spending?

For example, just to give an outline of the very high expenditure items, Armed Forces and veterans expenses are more than $11 billion; External Affairs, even if we do not count aid and export development, which are not strictly speaking External Affairs, but rather subsidies to the business sector, amount to more than $1 billion—$1.3 billion; for the courts, for police, for regulatory work, for legal work, the amount is $3.26 billion. That is an enormous amount of money going toward building prisons, including a new prison for the riding of the Prime Minister. Money is spent on legal advice; so there are more contract lawyers. Much of this involves paying off political favours. This is an enormous amount of money. If I were looking for restraint I would look to these items rather than to social programs, the training of our young people and the retraining of others to allow them to obtain better jobs.

In the area of tax collection and finance the total is $3.5 billion a year. That is the amount of money it takes simply to manage financial affairs, to run a big department and to collect taxes. That is a great deal of money. I am sure that there could be economies there. Other administrative charges amount to over $2 billion a year.

However, instead of looking at these important areas the Government cuts into the social programs. The Government admits that our young people, people coming into the labour force, good scientific training and research and development are part of the engine of growth. Yet it has cut into this engine of growth, an extremely misguided move.

The last Conservative Member who rose to speak on this issue defended the Government. I think it is worth referring to what the Quebec Government's reaction was to these cut-backs in federal transfer payments to that province. Quebec, as well as the other provinces, is very much concerned with the losses it will suffer as a result of the passage of Bill C-96. I would like to quote from a letter written by Premier Robert Bourassa to an NDP representative. He wrote:

[Translation]

I am sure you know that Quebec Finance Minister Gerard-D. Lévesque announced during the budget speech that his Government had been forced to impose a corporate surtax. The purpose of this surtax is to offset the Quebec treasury revenue shortage due, first to a $66 million payment which Quebec did not receive under the equalization program, second to the $82 million health and post-secondary education transfer payment reduction. The Government of Quebec has promised it would reconsider this surtax imposed as a result of federal cut-backs if the federal Government lives up to its commitments concerning equalization, withdraws Bill C-96, and begins immediate negotiations with the provinces.

[English]

The same could be said for other provinces, in the sense that they have asked for negotiations, as was the case back in 1977 when the change was made. This was a negotiated change. We would certainly like to see a negotiated arrangement with the provinces, one that would be acceptable to them and would meet their needs in the important areas of health care and post-secondary education. Instead, more money is being collected in the years in which these cut-backs in post-secondary education and health care financing will be made. However, the Government is directing that money into the private sector. It is continuing its corporate give-aways while adding to other programs, such as export development, which is basically a bonus to Canadian businesses. Even the SEED Program is a way of steering money away from programs which used to be in the non-profit community support sector. That money is now being steered into the private sector.

I see that my time has expired. I simply want to say in closing that this closure motion is shameful. The provinces need this support. It is an important part of Canada's social structure. We should go on to discussing reasonable arrangements with the provinces in these fields.

Time Allocation

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak to the Bill C-96 debate closure motion. Since April 25 more than 125 Members have had an opportunity to take part in the debate on this very important Bill. Mr. Speaker, had they done so to make interesting observations and make suggestions which might have benefited all Canadians, it would have been excellent. But most of them saw this as a chance to make every kind of accusations against our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), against Ministers, and against Members of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, since April 25 these Members have done little more than peddle falsehoods. To say that transfer payments to the provinces will be reduced as a result of Bill C-96 is a false statement. There has never been any question of reducing transfer payments.

The Party in office has stated over and over again that the purpose of this measure is to slow down the growth of transfers to the provinces, not to reduce them. As everyone knows—including Opposition Members—$25 billion more will have been paid by 1990.

Mr. Speaker, to try to say and make Canadians believe that these measures will endanger our education system and our health system, that the number of beds in provincial hospitals will be reduced is, in a way, a form of exaggerated demagoguery.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill has nothing whatsoever to do with cutting down the number of hospital beds or reducing health and education services throughout Canada. Quite the contrary, the purpose of this Bill is to protect and continue to help support these services. Because if the number of services increases and the same high quality we have today in Canada is to be maintained, we must ensure that the provinces receive funds from the Canadian Government every year, funds that are to be increased annually in proportion to the rate of inflation.

Of course we all realize that no one can give more than he has or spend more than he earns. And every time we ask Canadian taxpayers for more, Mr. Speaker, the same taxpayers are always paying for these services.

If we were to continue increasing transfers to the provinces in accordance with the policy adopted in 1977, it is clear we would very shortly reach spending levels that would be unacceptable and unrealistic.

Mr. Speaker, in September 1984, Canadians decided to elect a responsible Government, a reasonable Government, a Government that would try to control spending, a Government that would try to control the deficit, a deficit that was leading us to bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, if you want us to go on debating this Bill . . . it has been discussed for many hours with the same things being said over and over again, at first, second and third reading. They have been saying the same thing all along. That is why I was very happy to speak to this motion for time allocation.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member who just spoke. I do not know to whom he is listening, but obviously he cannot be listening to the same communities to which I am listening. I do not know what the post-secondary education community in Quebec has been telling the Hon. Member, but that community has been telling me that this particular measure will mean disaster for that community and, indeed, disaster for the young people of Canada.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that the implementation of this particular measure along with other measures the Government has brought in may be responsible for the present standing of the Tory Party in the polls in Quebec. I suggest to him that when the time of accounting comes, these measures will all be before the people. I hope we keep a record of who has said what on this debate, of who has spoken for this measure and who has spoken against it.

The Hon. Member has said that we are slowing down the rate of growth, not cutting funds to post-secondary education. That is a question of semantics. What is the difference between slowing down and cutting? If one cuts back on speed while driving a car, one slows down the car. What is the difference? The reality is that in my own Province of Newfoundland, over the next five years we will receive $187 million less than we had anticipated—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Not true, you're going to receive more.

Mr. Rompkey: Less than we had anticipated. We will receive $187 million less than we expected to receive, $187 million less than had been agreed to by the Government of Canada and the province. The reality is that the Government of Canada unilaterally abrogated an agreement between the Government of Canada and the province—

Mr. Vincent: It's not an agreement, it's a law.

Mr. Rompkey: The Government has told Newfoundland it will receive $187 million less than it promised to pay that province.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): It's not true.

Mr. Rompkey: It is absolutely true, Mr. Speaker. The facts are incontrovertible. I challenge the Hon. Member's veracity on that point. Clearly he is not being straightforward. What he is saying is not in accordance with the facts. There will be $187 million less going to the Province of Newfoundland over the next five years than the Government of Canada had agreed to spend in a formal arrangement agreed to with the provinces.

The Government abrogated that agreement unilaterally and that is the reality.

I do not care if we call it cuts or slowdowns or whatever, the fact is that the province that has the least fiscal capacity in Canada is going to receive, in order to deal with the education of its young people, its most prized possession, $187 million less over the next five years. That is the reality and those are the facts. Government Members can say whatever they like about the difference between cutting and slowing growth.

The Hon. Member has said that no one can give more than he has. I agree with that. I also agree with the principle of reducing the deficit but the Party opposite was elected to govern and therefore elected to make choices. It is choosing to reduce the deficit by cutting back on a section of society which, I would suggest, is the most important we have that is young people.

Yes, we do have to reduce the deficit but we have to make choices as to where those cuts will be made. I say that when the day of reckoning comes at the time of the next election the people will be able to choose who were for young people and who were against them. I say in all honesty and with all sincerity that this measure hits directly at young people.

University professors are leaving Canada by the hundreds. Research is at an all-time low. Our system of post-secondary education is not just second-rate now, it is third-rate. At a breakfast meeting this morning attended by government Members we heard from the Canadian Association for Continuing Education. At that meeting it was very clearly stated by the teachers themselves that there is probably not one first-class institution left in Canada. That is the reality.

Yes there is a deficit, and yes we have to cut that deficit. Yes, we have to make choices, but do not choose to fight the deficit on the backs of the very people in Canada to whom we should be giving an opportunity. We can talk all we like about industrial strategy, economic policy and free trade, but if we are not going to give young people an opportunity to take part in the jobs the Government says it will create, where is the justice? Where is the fairness of it?

The Government has now added insult to injury. Not only has it told young people that it will fight the deficit on their backs, it has told the Opposition that we cannot talk about it anymore. The Government has now taken from us the last power we have as an Opposition. We do not have any more power. We are 40 and 30 against 211. The only power we have is to hold Bills up and talk about them. The only power left to us is our voices, and we were put here to use our voices in the first place. That is what Parliament is all about.

The Government is going to bring in this measure, but more than that it is going to stop opposition Members from talking about it. It is going to take away from the Opposition the only power it has left. That is the reality of what is happening today and that is what is shameful. That is how the Government has added insult to injury.

I would like to make one more plea to government Members. This is about the fifth time I have spoken on this Bill in the House. My colleagues have spoken as well. One more time, we want to say this to government Members. For God's sake, look at the matter again. If they are going to reduce the deficit and make choices, do not choose against young people. Choose against trips abroad and bank bailouts to cut the deficit, but do not choose to take away from those people the only opportunity they will have to take part in the kind of country government Members tell us they will create. Again, government Members should change their minds before it is too late because the day of reckoning is going to come. During the next election campaign the young people of Canada will size up those who were for and those who were against this Bill. If the standing of the Tory Party in Quebec is low now, it will be absolutely wiped out at that time.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, here we are again with another government Bill and another closure motion designed to reduce the amount of time Hon. Members may speak on a very important piece of legislation. Let me say at the outset, with all due respect to the government House Leader, that this is yet another example of the Government's inability to control the schedule of the House of Commons. This Bill has been before us for quite some time, as have a number of other importance pieces of legislation. In the final days of the sitting of this Session we find that the Government is trying to ram some Bills through. It is regrettable.

Let me deal for a few moments with the ramifications of this Bill. Let me begin by talking about my home Province of Ontario and what we see as being the impact of this legislation that is now being rushed through on the ability of the Province of Ontario to provide for the health care and post-secondary education needs of its many citizens.

Earlier today we heard an argument about whether there would be a cut-back or a reduction in the amount going to the Province of Ontario, or to any of the provinces, or whether it was a slowing of the growth of revenue sharing. An arrangement was made a number of years ago between the provinces and the federal Government which set out some rules. In fact, it was a long-term plan. It provided the provinces and the federal Government with a long-term understanding of how revenues would be transferred from one to the other. It provided provinces with the ability to make long-term plans for the provision of services, such as the reconstruction of universities, and for the provision of moneys for instructional staff and materials, to ensure that future generations received the kind of education which was appropriate and needed.

Let us look at the Province of Ontario. In 1986-87, it will receive $146 million less than it would have under the previous agreement. In 1987-88, it will be $243 million less; in 1988-89, $388 million; in 1989-90, $547 million; and in 1990-91, $722 million, for a total reduction of over $2 billion over that five-year period in the transfer of funds from federal income tax and corporate taxpayers to the Province of Ontario. In turn, the province will transfer those funds to post-secondary educational facilities and the health care system throughout the province.

By reneging on that agreement, the Government is in step with the previous Government. It is finding ways to shift the burden on to provincial Governments. In turn, partially because of that and partially because of their own philosophy, they will transfer the burden to the local level, whether it be in the form of a reduction in provincial support to municipalities, a reduction in grants to universities and community colleges, or a reduction in the amount of money available for hospitals and medical services. Ultimately it ends up back at the property taxpayer level, one of the most regressive forms of raising money for the public good. That form of raising money is not based upon one's ability to pay but upon the value of one's property and how much that value has inflated over the years, not through anything one has done but because the market-place has set the worth of the property.

By continuing that process, once again the Conservative Government of Canada has indicated that it is not much different from past Liberal Governments. It is just that the Conservatives are in power and the Liberals are not. If there were a switch and the Liberals were back in power, it is guaranteed they would be doing the same thing. They are great in opposition, but the same is not true once they are in power. It seems as if there is a disease on that side of the House.

Ms. McDonald: How great are they in opposition?

Mr. Angus: They are great. They oppose everything. They are the saviour of the average Canadian. However, when they are in power, they forget about that and get back into bed with their corporate friends.

In the moment or two remaining, I want to mention that the reaction of the Province of Ontario was really quite an interesting one. The Liberal Premier of Ontario met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the First Ministers' Conference back in November and said:

> We are also dismayed by the federal Government's plans to cut established program funding transfer payments for post-secondary education and health. These cuts will amount to about $6 billion over the next five years. These cuts, which were announced without consultation, speeded up by a year without discussion, will weaken our country in the very areas where we must marshal our greatest strength.

That is what he said last November. However, what has he said since? Where is that great white hope of Ontario? He has been silent. Why has he been silent? It is because deep in his heart he agrees with what the federal Conservative Government is doing and finds it difficult to oppose those actions.

As a result of the Bill, more and more pressures will be placed upon our hospitals, our health care system, our colleges, and our universities. Today, Ontario does not have funds to do what it needs to do. For example, northwestern Ontario does not have the funds to provide a proper continuing education program, not in Thunder Bay, but in Atikokan, Kenora, Rainy River, Lake Nipigon, and other such areas. They cannot go out to where people live to provide them with the same opportunities which are available in Thunder Bay or downtown Ottawa.

In conclusion I say that this is a very regressive step. I hope the Government will learn to regret it through time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.27 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion before the House have expired, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117. Accordingly, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

The question is on the motion of Mrs. McDougall:

> That, further to the notice given on Tuesday, June 17, 1986, by the Minister of National Revenue and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117 in relation to Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, one sitting day shall be allotted to the third reading stage of the said Bill; and
> That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinon the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

POINT OF ORDER

QUERY RESPECTING EXTENSION OF SITTING

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): May I, with the indulgence of the House, raise a point of order? It is 24 years today that our House Leader in the Liberal Party was elected to the House. I would just like to underline that event.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I think we should also call to the attention of the House that today is the twenty-fourth anniversary of the election to this House of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I think it should be brought to the attention of the House that yesterday was George Hees seventy-sixth birthday and he has been here forever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the House should also realize that the 12 surviving members of this place out of 96 elected in 1968 will be celebrating the occasion under the auspices of your Assistant Deputy Speaker at 1800 hours today and none of the rest of you are invited.

Mr. Speaker: In which case I am not paying for it.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my real point of order was to the House Leader on the government side, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Given the mood of celebration, will the Minister give us the undertaking that the additional minutes today on Statements by Ministers will not be added at ten o'clock so as to allow us to celebrate the twenty-fourth anniversary of Mr. Gray?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will take it as a representation. I am very irritated when I am not invited to a party.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 564 will be answered today.

[Text]

DIAND—STUDENT ALLOWANCES

Question No. 564—Mr. Parry:

Motions for Papers

1. Does the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, directly or indirectly, pay allowances to students studying away from home and, if so, does the Department pay (a) $150 per year for clothing allowance (b) Grades 8 to 11, $10 per month for personal allowances (c) Grade 12, $20 per month for personal allowances (d) are these allowances uniform across the country?

2. On what date were these allowances last increased and from what levels?

3. Does the Department have any plans, at present, to adjust these allowances for inflation?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development provides clothing and personal allowances to eligible students studying away from home, through payment directly to the student or by funding an Indian Band or organization for this purpose.

The clothing allowance provided varies across the country in regard to both eligibility and amounts provided or allocated, and in many cases reflects local circumstances. In some circumstances, the annual per student clothing allowance provided by the education program extends to a maximum of $350, while in other circumstances, the clothing allowance is not provided by the education program.

A personal allowance of $10 per month is provided to eligible students who are in Grade nine or higher or who are of the age of 14 years to 17 years. A personal allowance of $20 per month is provided to eligible students who are 18 years of age or older. Generally, these personal allowances are uniform across the country, however, some exceptions exist where Bands manage the allowance services and where students are given an allowance along with the responsibility for making their monthly room and board payments.

2. The rates for personal allowances and the approach used in providing clothing allowances were established on April 22, 1970 in an Education Assistance Policy issued by the Department.

3. Although there is no plan at present to adjust these rates, I have asked my Department to include a review of the Education Assistance Policy in departmental work plans for the upcoming years.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question indicated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, this day's sitting will be extended by 21 minutes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): If I might draw to the attention of the House the matter of Private Members' Business. There have been some adjustments in the order of business as a result of discussions among the Parties and I have a draft order here. I am not sure that I need to read it because it has been distributed.

The effect of the order is that the order for consideration of Private Members' Business on Thursday, June 19, 1986, Wednesday, June 25, 1986, and Thursday, June 26, 1986, shall be changed to read as follows: Thursday, June 19, 1986 Motion No. 118, Mr. Caccia; Wednesday, June 25, 1986, Bill C-208, Mr. Isabelle; and Thursday, June 26, 1986, Motion No. 86, Mr. Attewell. The order has been distributed. Rather than take up the time of the House I think you will find a disposition to accept the draft order as distributed because it simply refers to routine matters thereafter.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent necessary for its introduction granted by the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the order carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

INTERNATIONAL LAND BOUNDARY ACT (CANADA-ALASKA)

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved that Bill C-270, an Act respecting the International Land Boundry between Canada and the State of Alaska, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to launch into what I believe will become an historic debate for Canada. This involves part of our sovereign boundary between Canada and the United States, which is something that has come to be contested somewhat more strongly by the United States in recent years.

I think it is important that the House of Commons go on record by voting this into law and demonstrating our exertion of our sovereignty and understanding of sovereignty in relation to this boundary. The territorial boundary that it will entrench in law through a vote of the House is from Cape Muzon, at the southernmost extremity of Dall Island, across to Cape Chacon at the southernmost extremity of Prince of Wales Island and on into the Portland Canal. The reference in the Bill to the closing line from Cape Muzon across to Langara Island will be deleted when the Bill goes to committee so that there is no uncertainty whatsoever as to exactly what is being done by the House and why.

I was somewhat alarmed earlier today when the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) called my office in regard to Bill C-270 and its entrenchment in law. His office stated that this would: "Prevent us from negotiating the A-B line".

For more than a century Canada has claimed and exerted territorial jurisdiction over Dixon Entrance and the Hecate Strait. The history of the A-B line started long ago, in 1825 in the treaty struck between Russia and Great Britain. Members will recall that in 1867 the United States acquired Alaska from the Russians for $15 million. Both the 1825 treaty and the 1867 treaty referred to line and line of demarcation. Those are very important points in terms of international law.

During the gold rush in the 1890s, particularly during the period of 1898, there were troubles in Yukon and Alaska regarding the large movement of men and women from the United States and Canada up into the gold fields. At that time, following the assassination of President McKinley, Teddy Roosevelt became President of the United States and brought pressure to bear on Prime Minister Laurier to move forward to negotiate and settle the boundaries between British Columbia and Yukon and the State of Alaska, those being the Canada-U.S. boundaries. The Hay-Herbert Treaty was struck and went through the U.S. Senate. A number of points in relation to the Panhandle were settled, almost all of which were against Canada's interests. Six of the main points gave major parts of Canada away.

However, the one part of the boundary that stayed in place and was in Canada's interest was the A-B line at 54°-40′N. This was confirmed in 1867 by an American, Captain W. A. Howard, a U.S. revenue marine, in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury in Washington. He said: "We left Ward's Harbour, stood down Clarence Strait entering Dixon's Passage, our southern boundary line". Certainly, at the time of the acquisition of Alaska from Russia, the Americans were totally aware that in international law the A-B line, or 54°-40′N, was their southernmost land and territorial boundary.

We must assume that the international law of the world, then and now, was applied in 1903. Therefore, if 54°-40′N was only a maritime boundary, only the southernmost point of the Panhandle would have been settled. Therefore, if the case in 1903 was that this was simply a maritime boundary, then the southernmost point on either Dall Island or Prince of Wales Island would have been the southernmost point of the boundary. Instead, there was a line of demarcation, and it is clear that Parliament has a responsibility to act and vote this into law.

If the boundary was not meant to come within three miles of land, why did the United States agree to it being drawn within three miles of land? That is a question that no one in the United States, either legal scholars or historians, has been able to answer. Clearly, the U.S. has slept on its rights over time and has not thought about bringing forward any issue.

In 1984, an area south of the A-B line was offered for sale by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior. I was glad to have been able to raise it in the House, along with my colleagues in the NDP, and force the issue with the then Liberal Government. Mr. MacEachen, who was the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the time, sent a note to the United States, and that property inside Canada that was offered for sale by the United States was withdrawn.

Last October, Secretary Shultz met with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and asked Canada to consider negotiating the A-B line, the 141st meridian, and the Strait of Juan de Fuca boundaries. I, and I do not believe any Canadians, would object to delimiting the offshore to the 200 mile limit at the Strait of Juan de Fuca and at the A-B line. However, the current Conservative Government proposal to negotiate the internal A-B line is treacherous to say the least and perhaps bordering on treason. Mr. Shultz has appointed Edgar Durwinski, a 25-year Republican member of the U.S. Congress, as the U.S. negotiator on this matter. Futhermore, the U.S. State Department has been working on this issue and there have been discussions of the negotiations between our Secretary of State for External Affairs and the British Columbia Government. I understand that this process is continuing to this very day. Those discussions leading to negotiations have been taking place for almost six months.

International Land Boundary

To discuss or negotiate the A-B line from Cape Muzon to Cape Chacon into the Portland Canal would be wrong at law. Such an attempt by the Government, whether it is involved in free trade negotiations or trying to cozy up to the U.S. administration, would be wrong because any negotiation of that would lead to giving up part of Canada's sovereignty. It would give up major anadromous fisheries, particularly sockeye, but other species as well that come down south of Cape Muzon and Cape Chacon and can be intercepted by the U.S. fleet. There is the military question regarding the entrance and exit of U.S. Trident nuclear submarines which the Americans have been advocating. There is the access to gas and oil rights under the Dixon Entrance, as well as the prospects of poly-metallic sulphides which have been discovered under the area.

I hope that Members of the House will address this Bill with a sense of urgency so that it may go to committee where any questions by Members, officials or scholars can be addressed and any required change of wording can take place. The Bill could then return to the House for its final process of debate and be voted on by the House and entrenched in law in the interest not only of this generation of Canadians but all future Canadians.

As I stated earlier, to negotiate the A-B line and consider any such move is treacherous at best and treasonous if there is to be any consideration of moving that boundary in the interest of the United States. I look forward to hearing other Hon. Members support the entrenchment of the A-B line.

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, were it only so, I would be the first to support the Bill by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). However, the Hon. Member has substantially misinterpreted the actual situation.

Bill C-270 purports to recognize and declare that the Canada-Alaska land boundary is the boundary established in 1903 by the Alaska Boundary Tribunal. Indeed, that is a fact. The boundary that divides the lands of Canada and Alaska, in this area, is undoubtedly the boundary established in 1903 by the Alaska Boundary Tribunal. No one would dispute or challenge this, in Canada or in the United States.

So far then, the only criticism that should be levelled against Bill C-270 is that it is redundant and unnecessary. It merely states the obvious. What is wrong with that? The trouble with redundancy is that it can make certainty uncertain at times. A solution without a problem may all too easily create a problem. Of course, the boundary dividing the lands of Canada and Alaska is too well established to be threatened. However, Bill C-270 could only give this boundary a different status than that enjoyed by the rest of Canada's long boundary with the United States. Why should it have a different status? Which is the superior status, and which the inferior? Either way, Bill C-270 could raise troubling questions not only for British Columbia but for all other parts of Canada that share a common land frontier with the United States.

It seems, however, that Bill C-270 is intended to deal with more than the boundary dividing the lands of Canada and Alaska. Clause 2 of the Bill states:

> For greater certainty, the Canada-Alaska boundary includes the A-B line running from Cape Muzon to Cape Chacon to the mouth of the Portland Canal, and a line running headland-to-headland from Cape Muzon to Langara Island.

There is some indication here that the Bill is intended to define not only the boundary for the land but also the maritime boundary between Canada and Alaska. Unfortunately, however, this intention has not been translated into clear legislative drafting; quite the contrary. As a result, it risks prejudicing Canada's position, not advancing it.

There is no doubt that the A-B line was indeed established by the 1903 Alaska Boundary Award and that it divides the lands of Alaska and Canada. That is the common view of both Canada and the United States. The United States, however, insists that the A-B line is, strictly speaking, a land boundary only, in the sense of a line for the allocation of land territories alone, and not for the allocation of sea areas under the sovereignty or jurisdiction of either country. Canada, on the other hand, has always taken the position that the A-B line is not only a boundary dividing the land but a maritime boundary as well, and that the waters south of that line are Canadian, together with the seabed below them.

Regrettably, because of its imprecision, Bill C-270 could be seen to adopt something like the U.S. view of this matter instead of the Canadian one. The language of the Bill, given the history of this dispute, requires greater precision if it is to avoid being interpreted in such a way. Clause 2 states that the land boundary includes the A-B line but does not make clear that it divides the sea as well as the land.

There is yet another anomaly at the end of Clause 2, where the boundary is said to include "a line running headland-to-headland from Cape Muzon to Langara Island". Unfortunately, the line from Cape Muzon to Langara Island was never part of any line established by the Alaska Boundary Tribunal in 1903. As a maritime boundary between Canada and the United States, moreover, a line running from Cape Muzon to Langara Island would make no sense from Canada's perspective, because such a boundary would give the United States a far greater sea area than it has ever claimed west of this line. Clearly, Bill C-270 not only tends to confuse the U.S. and Canadian positions but it also mixes apples and oranges, lateral limits and outer limits in the sea. If it is intended to clarify matters, it really has not succeeded very well.

I have no doubt that the Hon. Member sponsoring this Bill had the most laudable intentions in mind when he put it forward. But it would be too easy to say, "Oh well! Why fuss about a few technical drafting problems? Let's deal with what was intended rather than what was said". These so-called "technical drafting problems", however, could have unfortunate consequences for Canada. Certainly, it is possible to correct them; but these problems are symptomatic of other difficulties that arise even if we ignore the language of Bill C-270 and address its intentions instead.

Let us imagine for a moment that the Bill before us did enshrine in clear statutory form the longstanding Canadian position with regard to the A-B line in Dixon Entrance. We would still have to ask ourselves whether such a Bill would truly achieve its objectives, or whether it might harm the very interests it sought to protect. I assume that these objectives and interests would be to secure Canada's maritime sovereignty in Dixon Entrance beyond all doubt or challenge. But can any Bill do this any more than a Bill stating that rainfall of North Dakota is not permitted in Manitoba?

The answer is clear. No domestic law or other unilateral action can of itself resolve a boundary dispute with another sovereign state. International law and practice lay down a few basic guidelines for the settlement of maritime boundary disputes between neighbouring countries. I would bring these to the attention of the Hon. Member for Skeena. These were well stated by the Chamber of the International Court of Justice in its 1984 decision in the Gulf of Maine case as follows:

> No maritime delimitation between states with opposite or adjacent coasts may be effected unilaterally by one of those states. Such delimitation must be sought and effected by means of an agreement, following negotiations conducted in good faith and with the genuine intention of achieving a positive result. Where, however, such agreement cannot be achieved, delimitation should be effected by recourse to a third party possessing the necessary competence.

Of course, it can be said that the A-B line in Dixon Entrance is itself the result of a third-party settlement by the Alaska Boundary Tribunal. That, indeed, is Canada's position regarding the status of the A-B line as a maritime boundary. The United States, however, does not accept that position. Successive Canadian Governments have recognized that the only way forward in this matter is either by negotiation or international adjudication. So far, negotiation has been the preferred route, although it has not yet brought about the result we in Canada would like to see. Any Bill enshrining the A-B line as a maritime boundary in Canadian law might well rule out the possibility of a negotiated settlement and virtually force Canada to refer the dispute to third-party proceedings. Is that what the Hon. Member for Skeena wants? Is that what this House wants? International adjudication is a valuable last resort, but one to be entered into by design rather than by mere accident.

Hon. Members will be aware that discussions on the West Coast boundaries were suspended in 1979, pending the conclusion of the Gulf of Maine case. With that case behind us, the United States has suggested that the time may now have come to revert to the other maritime boundaries, at least to see if there may be a basis for some negotiated settlement. The Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) has taken this proposal under advisement and has sought the views of the B.C. Government to assist him in determining where Canada's best interests might lie. And he has made it clear that he will only decide the matter in accordance with Canada's best interests.

Whether we negotiate now or later, or whether it is ultimately decided to refer the question to third-party settlement, we must still ask ourselves whether any version of Bill C-270 might advance the Canadian position. I have already indicated that domestic legislation would not solve the problem under international law. But could it have some effect on the United States? Let me ask the question another way. How would Canada react if the U.S. Congress were to adopt a law of its own regarding the maritime boundary in Dixon Entrance? Such a law, we can be sure, would incorporate an equidistance line dividing Dixon Entrance equally between Canada and the United States.

That, of course, is the U.S. position regarding the maritime boundary in Dixon Entrance. So far, the United States has only declared its position in a public notice in the U.S. Federal Register, and has done so on the express condition that such notice is without prejudice to any negotiations with Canada. A law adopted by the U.S. Congress in response to some variation on Bill C-270 might not—

• (1820)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude since his time has expired.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude. I would like to point out again that the way to solve this problem is through negotiation and, as a last resort, through an international tribunal. To pass Bill C-270 would only confuse the issue and weaken Canada's bargaining position.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I just want to add some brief remarks to the debate on Bill C-270. First, I want to say that we in the Liberal Party support this Bill. I wish to congratulate and applaud the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who has brought this Bill before the House today. As I read the Bill, and as has been pointed out quite clearly, we are talking about the Canada-Alaska boundary, commonly known as the A-B line. In this respect there was a settlement back in 1903 by an international tribunal.

The Bill also states that there is evidence to indicate an attempt on the part of the United States to expand its de facto maritime control in the Alaska Panhandle region. I certainly agree that there is evidence to that effect. I will not go into the history of that, nor will I go into the history of the boundary line since that was clearly put on the record by the Hon. Member for Skeena. He has put a great deal of work into presenting this Bill to the House today.

I wish to make some remarks on the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary. He stated that the Bill is not clear in its legislative language and that there are technical drafting problems. I certainly do not see that in the Bill. However, if we were to refer the Bill to committee, then if there are some technicalities which need to be changed in drafting to make it somewhat clearer, by all means let the committee perfect it so that we can have a Bill which gives us some certainty. It is stated in a clause of the Bill:

For greater certainty, the Canada-Alaska boundary includes the "A-B line" running from Cape Muzon to Cape Chacon to the mouth of the Portland Canal, and a line running headland-to-headland from Cape Muzon to Langara Island.

As I understand the purpose of the Bill as set out by the Hon. Member for Skeena, it is to enshrine in law the boundary established by an international tribunal in 1903 between Canada and the United States. Because of situations which have arisen over the last few years in terms of disputes between Canada and the United States concerning boundaries, especially as they relate to fisheries, if there is any way that Parliament can clear up and allow greater certainty through legislation, then by all means we should go ahead as expeditiously as possible and pass this Bill. We should do this for for the protection of Canada and for the protection of our fishermen and our mineral resources.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I once again wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Skeena for bringing this Bill before us today. I hope it will receive the consent and approval of all Members of this astute Chamber.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy today to have an opportunity to rise in support of Bill C-270 introduced by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). He has spent a great deal of time and effort, energy and talent examining the reasons behind Bill C-270.

I suspect there is something ominous happening here today. To put that remark into some context, let me give Hon. Members a little historic sketch of how today's discussion came to the floor of the House of Commons. I wish to take Hon. Members back to 1825 when, as they will recall, there was a treaty struck between Russia and Great Britain with respect to the Alaska boundary. At that time the primary interest was the fur trade, specifically the otter fur trade. However, it was appropriate at that time to clearly re-establish that boundary, and the A-B line as we call it today, latitude 54°-40′N, was the parellel identified as the appropriate boundary. It was agreed to by all of the parties involved.

A few years later, when the United States purchased the area called Alaska in 1867, for a sum of $15 million in cash—which was probably one of the best purchases the United States has ever made for a territory—it also agreed during the negotiations of that purchase that the line that would separate Alaska and the area we now call British Columbia would be the A-B line, or the area called latitude 54°-40′N. A few years later there was some question as to whether or not this was the appropriate boundary. Thus President Roosevelt struck the Hay-Herbert Treaty in 1903.

This was a treaty negotiated by three American representatives, two Canadian representatives appointed by Prime Minister Laurier and a representative from the United Kingdom. They examined a variety of areas concerning Canada-U.S. boundaries that were in some dispute. They unanimously agreed on this particular issue with respect to the A-B line. In fact, the vote of the international tribunal which looked into this particular boundary issue was six to zero. It agreed that, yes, this was the appropriate boundary, one that had traditionally been in place for, at that time, a number of decades.

On July 6, 1909, Canada also decided to take a position on this matter when the Cabinet of the day passed an Order in Council, which essentially reasserted its position that the A-B line was the boundary between Alaska and Canada, or Alaska and British Columbia—between the United States and Canada to be specific.

Those of us who have an interest in history, or a professional interest in history—and I know there are a number of historians in the House today who will confirm this—know that the cry "54-40 or fight" was the battle-cry of the Americans when those people living in Oregon wanted to establish the northern boundary of the territory of Oregon right up to the Alaska boundary. This move was essentially designed to eliminate that part of Canada and make it a continuous border of the United States. It is not surprising that the battle-cry was "54-40 or fight", since that was the identified boundary between, at that time, the United States and Canada, with respect to the area now known as the West Coast of British Columbia.

What my colleague from Skeena is suggesting is that there are all sorts of historical precedents that would clarify the A-B line as our northernmost boundary along that part of the coast.

We have to ask why it is that the United States now wants to extend that boundary southward by between 9 and 12 miles encompassing a territory, I suspect, of in excess of 200 square miles. What is the purpose? The geological survey of Canada outlines the potential of significant gas and oil reserves in that area, and that might be a reason. We are also aware of the very rich fish stocks in the area, which would be another reason. We are also aware of the strategic importance, in terms of coastal shipping, for the movement of ships in that area. It could have a strategic use militarily. Or what else? What is the motive behind the interest of the United States in pushing the A-B line farther south into Canadian territory?

The Parliament of Canada, through an Order in Council, established 54-40 as the boundary; and an international tribunal between the United States and Canada re-established that as the boundary. It has always been considered to be the boundary in historic treaties between the United States and Russia and between Britain and Russia.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena, is simply saying that because there is apparently some question about the validity of this boundary, the House of Commons of Canada should re-establish what has always been the case and what every Canadian has always known to be the case, and should once and for all by a Bill passed through the Parliament of Canada, establish this boundary. What amazes me is that there seems to be some reluctance and hesitation on the part of the Government to do this.

We have heard from one Hon. Member who suggested that this Bill is redundant. Theoretically, I suppose it is redundant because it has been established time and time again that 54-40 is the boundary between our two countries. However, there seems to be some question about this in the United States so my hon. friend from Skeena is simply saying that we as representatives of the people of Canada should send a very clear message that the boundary between the Alaska Panhandle and British Columbia is 54°-40′N latitude.

If there are discussions that need to be undertaken, I urge all Members to do so. Let us hear about it. Let us pass this Bill today, get it into committee, hear from witnesses expert on international boundaries, from scholars who have examined this in the past and from concerned Americans. Let us find out what arguments they could possibly put forward against the historic precedents we have outlined in part today. Let us take this to committee and have a thorough examination of it. Then let us continue on with the decision-making process from that point.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I would like to read into the record a letter which might be helpful in this debate. The letter is addressed to the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) and is from Mr. Edward J. Derwinski, Counselor, Department of State, Washington, D.C., and pertains to this particular matter. The letter reads as follows:

I want to assure you that negotiations on Dixon Entrance are not taking place. They will not begin until your Government informs me that it has consulted with the affected fishermen and is ready to proceed.

I understand that representatives from External Affairs are still dicussing the matter with Canadian fishermen.

As you are aware, since the 1930's, our Governments have made efforts now and again to resolve maritime boundary issues. These talks have included the Dixon Entrance area, where the A-B line drawn by the 1903 arbitral panel is deemed by Canada to be a maritime boundary and by the United States to allocate islands. (The U.S. claims an equidistant line.) In 1976, when Canada and the U.S. each declared 200 mile fishing zones, these differences became more prominent.

George Shultz and Joe Clark have a gentlemen's understanding that they would work together to try to solve some of our longstanding differences, like the Pacific Salmon Treaty and acid rain.

Dixon Entrance falls into this category. For our part, we firmly believe that discussions on Dixon Entrance have to take place after each side fully consults with its fishermen. Whenever the Government of Canada is ready to meet, we are prepared to sit and talk about this.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver—Burnaby (Mr. Cook), indicated that negotiation is the best way to resolve this difference and international adjudication is the last resort. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) might well respond that Canada cannot be forced into third-party proceedings against its will. Strictly speaking, he would be right since the United States and Canada are under no binding reciprocal obligation to refer their disputes to adjudication. However, if we reject negotiation and refuse adjudication, the result is an impasse. An impasse can lead to incidents and incidents can lead all too easily to confrontation in the disputed area. Each side scrambles to stake out its claim at the expense of the other. I need hardly spell out the implications of such a development in the Dixon Entrance area. Currently there is a modus vivendi in the area that is relatively satisfactory to both sides. To be sure, there have been incidents from time to time, but thanks to a policy of mutual restraint, these have been isolated and have remained manageable.

Any version of Bill C-270 would put this delicate equilibrium at risk with unpredictable implications for fishing patterns and offshore resource exploration in the disputed area. The impact on the halibut fishery could prejudice local interests. What about the implications for the Pacific salmon treaty? Surely the last thing we should contemplate at this stage is to say or do anything that might interfere with a successful implementation of the salmon treaty.

We have other outstanding maritime boundary questions to resolve with the United States: seaward of Dixon Entrance; seaward of Juan de Fuca Strait; in the Beaufort Sea; and both landward and seaward of the boundary fixed by the International Court of Justice in the Gulf of Maine area. In addition, we have boundaries to settle with Denmark in the Lincoln Sea and with France off the coasts of Newfoundland and St-Pierre-et-Miquelon.

I have only spoken of the possible implications of Bill C-270 on Dixon Entrance. I do not wish to address its possible implications on other areas in question at this time. Let me only say that I doubt that they have been given adequate thought in the preparation of Bill C-270. That Bill is flawed not only in its drafting but in its very approach to maritime boundary problems.

We do not need legislation to protect Canada's position in Dixon Entrance. We do not need it to convince ourselves of the rightness of Canada's position there. We do not need it to convince the United States of our own convictions. Finally, we do not need it for the greater certainty that Bill C-270 promises but does not truly deliver.

Other speakers on this and earlier occasions have discussed the historical background to the A-B line, the matter we are discussing today. I would like to update that history with some of the more recent events. Since World War I, various incidents have occurred which tend to support Canada's position regarding the status of the A-B line. For example, in 1924, a United States cruiser seized a Canadian fishing vessel in Clarence Strait seven and one-half miles north of the A-B line and over five miles from the nearest United States shore. The U.S. reportedly justified this seizure on the grounds that the vessel was fishing well north of the international boundary. This incident would appear to suggest that the United States considered the A-B line to be a boundary for both land and sea.

It is also worth noting that until at least 1931, the International Boundary Commissioners concerned with fixing the Alaska boundary did not treat the A-B line differently from other sections of the Alaska boundary. In particular, during the 1920s, the American Commissioner tried to persuade his Canadian counterpart to agree to request their Governments to move the boundary line from Cape Muzon to the middle of Dixon Entrance because its position at Cape Muzon was anomalous as it meant that there was no United States territorial sea off Cape Muzon. In the 1940s, there were unsuccessful attempts to settle the issue by negotiation. Efforts to negotiate a settlement were made again in the 1970s, but these efforts too did not succeed.

Throughout the years from the late 1890s to the present, Canada has maintained that the waters of Dixon Entrance are Canadian and Canadian practice since that time has been consistent with that position. In this regard, several more recent Canadian measures are particularly noteworthy.

For example, in 1964 when the fishing activities of Russian and Japanese vessels off Canada's West Coast began to increase, the Canadian Government issued them a warning to stay out of the Dixon Entrance and Hecate Strait. Both Governments heeded the warning and apart from a few minor incursions, their fishing vessels have not entered these waters.

In addition, in 1971 under the authority of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, Canada delimited its exclusive fisheries jurisdiction within Dixon Entrance and Hecate Strait by means of the A-B line and a line drawn across the Dixon Entrance from Cape Muzon to Langara Island. This action by Canada was protested by the United States. Nevertheless, Canada's position on the status of Dixon Entrance and Hecate Strait has remained unchanged.

Before closing, I would like to refer briefly to Bill C-104, the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act, which was introduced in the House on April 11, 1986, by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie). That Bill is designed to reinforce Canadian sovereignty by creating a more comprehensive legal regime for Canadian offshore areas. The Act would put an end to uncertainty about the application of Canadian laws in all these areas by extending both federal and provincial laws to the offshore.

Of special significance in the context of today's debate is the fact that the proposed Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act includes a provision in Clause 16 that deals with the question of historic waters. That clause is a consequential amendment to the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act. When read together with the definition of internal waters in the same Act, it will amply confirm, if any confirmation is needed, that our historic waters form part of Canada's internal waters and are therefore subject to Canadian sovereignty in the fullest sense of the term.

The proposed amendment regarding historic waters is linked to Clause 9 of the Bill on the offshore application of Canadian laws. That clause would enable the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to certify any geopgrahic area to be part of the internal waters or territorial sea of Canada. In other words, the Government has already introduced legislation which removes any necessity, if any could be said to exist, for legislation along the lines intended in Bill C-270. Furthermore, it does so without creating problems of the sort described by other speakers during the debate.

I opened my remarks today with a reference to the long and colourful history of the Dixon Entrance question. All Members of the House will agree that this brief account of that history, and of the state practice in the area generally, supports the view that the A-B line is the boundary for both land and water inside Dixon Entrance. That is Canada's long-standing view, and it is this view that Canada can and must affirm in any negotiations with the United States.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, there is no mention of the word "fish" or "fisheries" in the contents of Bill C-270. However, in the next few minutes I hope to show that we cannot talk about the Dixon Entrance without some discussion of fisheries, particularly Pacific salmon and Canada-U.S. co-operation regarding this great resource.

Those in the Pacific area of Canada know that there are five species of Pacific salmon. By far they are the most important fish stocks on the Pacific coast in both quantity and value. While they have been known by a variety of names, they are perhaps most frequently referred to as sockeye, chum, pink, coho and chinook. These five species differ in important respects, including their productivity, dependence upon freshwater habitat, size, behaviour, susceptibility to fishing gear, and other qualities.

Salmon have been used by native Indians for time immemorial, and the fish have supported an industrial fishery for more than a century. Therefore, Bill C-206 raises an important question in that it affects our fisheries. Historically salmon became the region's second export after furs when the Hudson's Bay Company began exporting salmon from Fort Langley on the Fraser River in 1830. The first commercial cannery in British Columbia began operations in 1870. Of course, canneries had expanded throughout the coast by the turn of the century, as had the exploitation of salmon stocks.

Until 1903 any variety other than red salmon—that is sockeye, chinook or coho—was rejected by canners. Those of us who have lived in the western part of Canada for a long time know that it is the red sockeye which is most in demand as far as canned salmon is concerned. However, because of poor salmon runs in 1903, canners began processing the much more prolific pink and chum salmon. The use of this fish increased sharply in 1911 in response to a disappointing catch of Fraser River sockeye and increased demands for canned salmon. Since then, pinks and chums have held an important place in the commercial salmon fishery in British Columbia.

According to recent catch statistics, the current harvest of Pacific salmon breaks down roughly as follows: the commercial sector dominates the catch, taking some 93 per cent of the total; net gear takes almost all the sockeye, pinks, and chums, while troll gear takes most of the coho and chinooks; the sport fishery takes a significant share of chinook and coho and little else, and accounts for about 4 per cent to 5 per cent of the total catch; and the Indian fishery accounts for about 2 per cent and is directed primarily at sockeye.

Almost since commercial fishing of Pacific salmon began in earnest in the late 1880s, capture of salmon bound for rivers of one country by fishermen of the other has created controversy between Canada and the United States. The earliest disputes arose over American catches of sockeye salmon bound for our Fraser River in British Columbia. Since then the scope of the controversy gradually widened to include problems of interceptions by Vancouver Island fishermen of coho and chinook salmon bound for the rivers of Washington and Oregon; by Alaska fishermen of salmon bound for the rivers of British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, and Yukon; and by northern British Columbia fishermen taking Alaska-bound salmon. I am sure the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) knows about those controversies and the involvement of fishermen from the United States and Canada.

The first bilateral accommodation occurred in respect of the management of the fisheries for sockeye salmon bound for the Fraser River. In the late 1880s, United States and Canadian fishermen began fishing vigorously for sockeye salmon bound for the Fraser River. United States fishing took place on the approaches to the river, in the extensive chain of islands at the northern entrance of Puget Sound, whereas the Canadian fishery was concentrated in the estuary and in the river itself. At that time the Fraser run had a marked four-year period, with runs in the 1893-1897-1901 cycle being much more abundant. In lean years Canadian fishermen viewed themseleves as being at the mercy of their United States counterparts who had, as it were, first crack at the fish. There were also concerns on the part of Canadian and American authorities regarding possible overfishing. That concern exists today; it is an ongoing concern.

In 1908 Canada and the United States formed an International Fisheries Commission to prepare a system of uniform and common international regulations for protection and preservation of the food fish of each nation. That kind of co-operation has characterized the fisheries every since. For Fraser River sockeye, the Commission agreed to apply a three-week mid-season closure and to institute a 48-hour weekly closed period the remainder of the season. However, the regulations were not enforced, and the Commission soon became defunct.

A major disaster, the Hell's Gate rock slide, changed all that. It all but destroyed the major up river sockeye run in 1913 and forced the Governments to renew their joint consideration of the Fraser River problems. Canada took immediate action to clear the slide, but when the runs of all cycles began to decline after 1917, it became apparent that other measures including limitation of the fisheries would be necessary.

Again, negotiations were started. It took until 1929, 16 years after the Hell's Gate slide, for an agreement to be signed. Another eight years elapsed before the agreement came into force, and yet another nine years before the Commission, established under the agreement, could exercise regulatory powers over the fisheries. There was much difficulty in reaching any kind of accord during those years.

In the 1950s increasing fishing pressure on Fraser River pink salmon became a matter of grave concern. As a result, in 1957 a protocol to the Fraser River Sockeye Agreement was negotiated. It placed pink salmon on the southern approaches to the Fraser River under an international regulatory regime similar to that for sockeye.

At about the same time, the net fisheries of both countries began to extend seaward from the traditional inshore fishing areas. Such seaward extensions increased the incidents of interception and posed severe problems of competitive overfishing. In 1957, the two Governments reached an informal understanding wherein each country, on a voluntary basis, established administrative lines—the so-called surf lines— seaward, from which net fishing was prohibited.

Although the negotiations which took place between the early 1900s and 1957 overcame some of the difficulties, new problems continued to emerge. In the 1960s the Americans became increasingly concerned about the growth of the Canadian troll fishery. This fishery operated not only off the coast of British Columbia, but also off the coast of Alaska. On the Canadian side, northern British Columbia fishermen were again deeply concerned about the location of the surf line off Alaska.

These negotiations were eventually completed and a satisfactory arrangement was made. It appears that both sides are now following more closely than ever before the measures to control the fisheries. We feel that the Pacific salmon treaty, which established this co-operation, would be in jeopardy if this Bill were allowed to proceed. We intend to do nothing which might prejudice its smooth and successful implementation. Bill C-270 could all too easily have such an effect.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, in discussing the question of Dixon Entrance, it is important to remember that boundary delimitations are more than a matter of law and that they may have a significant impact on the allocation of both living and non-living resources in the area concerned. In the brief time allotted to me I would like to focus on the non-living resource potential of the area surrounding Dixon Entrance.

First, it should be noted that the subsurface geology of Dixon Entrance has not been studied extensively but certain inshore tests, seismic profiles and extrapolations based on wells drilled in Hecate Strait and on Graham Island have offered some clues to assist us in estimating the prospects for oil and gas in and around the area in dispute. The results of these analyses indicate, for example, that the volcanic and sedimentary rocks under Dixon Entrance may be sufficiently thick and deep to permit the generation and entrapment of certain hydrocarbons. In general though, the all-over oil and gas potential in the area is believed to be modest at best.

The infrequency of exploration activity in the area and the generally negative results of such activity appear to confirm the modest estimates regarding the potential for oil and gas in that area. The first federal permits for oil and gas in Dixon Entrance were acquired in August, 1961, by Huskey Oil and Calgary and Edmonton corporations. Following a perfunctory seismic exploration program these lands were subsequently surrendered. In December, 1964, Pan American, now AMOCO, filed on permits north and west of Graham Island including the area of Dixon Entrance north to the A-B line. At the same time, outside the entrance, permits were taken up to an equidistant line with the caveat placed on those submerged land areas impinging directly on the line.

Seismic exploration and onshore geological surveys were also undertaken in the area in 1966. Successes, however, were few and far between as evidenced by the fact that the permits inside and outside the entrance were surrendered in December of 1967.

South of Dixon Entrance in Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound and within the Queen Charlotte tertiary basin Shell Canada acquired exploration permits for about 3.5 million hectares. The company conducted geological mapping and offshore seismic surveys and drilled eight exploratory wells in the period from 1967 to 1969 with generally negative results. In 1970 Shell entered into a farm-out agreement with Chevron Canada Resources whereby Chevron would earn an interest in the Shell offshore area by conducting seismic surveys and drilling two deep exploratory wells.

Currently, submerged lands held by the petroleum industry for exploration purposes include two blocks in Dixon Entrance, a small block by Union Oil Company of Canada located immediately northeast of Graham Island and the north end of a large block in Hecate Strait held by Shell Canada Resources and operated by Chevron Canada Resources under the terms of the farm-out agreement to which I have already referred.

The United States has also indicated some tentative interest in the oil and gas potential of the area. Indeed, in 1984 the United States took the first steps toward calling for bids for offshore leases which would have included an area claimed by Canada outside Dixon Entrance. This action prompted a Canadian protest. Subsequently Canada was informed by the United States that the proposed offers of lease sales had been withdrawn due to lack of interest by the petroleum industry.

Notwithstanding Canadian holdings and some American interest in the area, little new has been learned about the resource base in the area since the late 1960s. This is due in large part to a moratorium on exploration and oil tanker traffic in the area which was imposed in 1972 by the federal Government. This moratorium was intended to prevent crude oil tankers travelling through Dixon Entrance, Hecate Strait and Queen Charlotte Sound enroute from the Trans-Alaska Pipeline terminal as Valdez, Alaska. Subsequently a federal Order in Council indefinitely relieved existing offshore exploration permit holders from their obligations to conduct exploratory drilling in these waters and prohibited any further drilling.

In 1981 the Province of British Columbia declared the area an inland marine zone. At the same time an indefinite moratorium was placed on offshore exploration in Johnstone Strait south of Telegraph Cove and in the Straits of Georgia and Juan de Fuca. These respective moratoria are still in effect.

In June, 1984, the federal and British Columbia Ministers of the Environment appointed a five-member environmental assessment panel to conduct a public review of the environmental and related socio-economic effects of any renewed program of petroleum exploration off the west coast of Canada north of Vancouver Island. At that time consideration was being given to lifting the moratorium so that exploration programs could be pursued. Accordingly, the west coast offshore exploration environmental assesssment panel was asked to develop recommendations on the terms and conditions under which petroleum exploration could proceed in a safe and environmentally responsible manner.

During the the course of the review the panel gathered information on the environmental and related socio-economic effects of the proposed offshore exploration program and held two series of public fora in November, 1984, and in the latter part of 1985. Chevron Canada and Petro-Canada were designated by the federal and provincial regulatory bodies as proponents of the offshore oil and gas exloration.

All mineral resource interests are relevant to the issue of the boundary in the Dixon Entrance. I fail to see how they are advanced by Bill C-270. I cannot support this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PAROLE ACT AND PENITENTIARY ACT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada) moved that Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, a year has passed since Bill C-67 was introduced in the House for first reading. The Bill was called for second reading on September 12 of last year. The House of Commons committee studied it, along with Bill C-68, from September to December. Hours of deliberations devoted mostly to Bill C-67 have led to several amendments which, without affecting the important protections it affords to Canadians, respond to criticisms made by committee members and witnesses. When the Bill was reported to the House on January 23, I was confident then, as I am now, that we had legislation which met the interests of the diverse groups involved.

The Senate has created a pre-study committee which has been sitting since the beginning of February. Members of that committee have not only called officials of my Ministry and myself to appear before them on several occasions, they have visited penitentiaries and talked with staff and inmates. As a result of their deliberations I have decided to incorporate into the law the guidelines the Parole Board will follow in determining whether an inmate should be detained.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have rarely seen a Bill dicussed at such lenght in committee by both Houses. I am glad that we have finally reached third reading stage and I hope that this bill will receive Royal Assent without further delay.

[English]

Canadians deserve the measures contained in Bill C-67 which the Government promised in its first Speech from the Throne some two years ago. These measures alone will not solve the crime problems of Canada but they will correct some of the anomalies which threaten the safety of law-abiding citizens. The Bill will allow the National Parole Board to detain up until the last day of their sentence those inmates who, by all professional accounts, are considered likely to commit a crime of violence against another person. Until now the few offenders who met such criteria had to be released automatically by law on mandatory supervision. No one could prevent such releases.

As the law stands today, when the courts sentence you to prison for nine years, you are back out through the front door after six years unless you have committed a serious offence while in prison, such as participating in a riot or knifing someone while you are there, or some other offence. For the vast majority of inmates, earned remission is appropriate and desirable. It is the Government's intention to see it maintained. However, there is also a small minority of violent criminals, sentenced to prison because of violent acts, who have shown no inclination whatsoever to change their ways and become productive members of society. Their very release from prison threatens the safety and, in some cases, the lives of innocent Canadians. It is that handful of cases we are attempting to address with this legislation.

There is something wrong when, as has happened all too often during my tenure as Solicitor General, I receive a telegram from a provincial attorney general begging me to do whatever I can to prevent the release of a dangerous inmate from prison under mandatory supervision; an individual sentenced to prison because he committed a violent offence, has shown no inclination whatsoever toward reforming himself, and who poses a grave threat to society. The only response I can make, however, is that there is nothing we can do beyond informing the police that this individual is going to be released. That is wrong.

I have had to meet with too many victims and too many families of victims to allow this situation to continue indefinitely. I think it is wrong and they think it is wrong that all too often you can have a situation where a violent criminal is sentenced to prison, released after two-thirds of his sentence, is then automatically out the door, can then commit another offence, be back in prison and back out the door all in less time than the initial sentence was for. That mocks the very principle of the rule of law. It destroys respect for the law. It deeply grieves victims and law enforcement officers who see it happen.

What are we talking about in this Bill? We are saying that in a small number of cases out of the 11,000 inmates we have in the federal correctional system, about 100 a year, and it is hard to be entirely certain because the Bill is not yet law, will be affected by these provisions. First of all, we will be dealing with inmates sentenced to prison for one of the violent offences described in the Schedule of the Bill. It would need to have been clear to the Correctional Service of Canada, the professional case management officers, that this individual has shown no sign whatsoever of rehabilitating himself and that his release from prison would pose a grave risk to innocent members of society. What would happen then? The National Parole Board of Canada would take the decision regarding parole. They have the expertise, experience, background and training to take decisions as to whether or not an individual is too risky to release, whether or not he is ready for reintroduction into society, or whether he should be kept behind bars as part of the sentence passed by the courts.

The National Parole Board would have the ability to take the decision as to whether or not that individual would be able to automatically gain release and be returned to the streets. In those cases where the Parole Board said it was clear to them in their professional judgment, with their years of experience, that an individual is not ready for release and the risk to society was too great, they would have the ability to hold him in prison for up to the duration of the sentence prescribed by the courts. We are not asking to hold them beyond that time. We are saying the maximum time would be the time prescribed by the courts when they passed sentence. However, there should be that discretion in a handful of cases where people's lives or safety would be in jeopardy by releasing the inmate.

You can be certain that I consider detention of an inmate beyond his expected release date resulting from earned remission a remedy of last recourse. Consequently, the most thorough procedural safeguards possible are afforded the inmate. The Parole Board will make this decision after consideration of criteria set out in the law and the inmate will have all opportunities to know the case against him and present his arguments to the Parole Board.

The Government has taken into consideration the criticism that extended detention may simply postpone the problem. We believe the Correctional Service and the Parole Board can use the extra time to intervene with those few dangerous offenders and attempt to reduce the risk they pose to society. If at any time during this period there is evidence presented to the Parole Board that the individual has mended his ways, that it is possible for us to take this risk responsibly by releasing him into society, the Parole Board has the ability to then let him out. At any time there is a change in the individual's behaviour or approach, at any time it becomes apparent that it is possible to take a chance on his release, this can be done.

Those people who argue that holding a dangerous inmate in prison for the duration of his sentence prescribed by the courts is wrong because he may still be dangerous at the end are making an argument against incarceration period. It is an argument in favour of never sending someone to prison. What we are saying is that in cases where people are not ready for release they should not be released during the period prescribed by the courts. In those cases where an individual is ready for release, let us take that chance, let us gamble on him and attempt to ensure he becomes a productive member of society. However, with dangerous violent criminals, let us stand with innocent Canadians and ensure that their rights are protected.

I want to remind the Members of this House that the more restrictive measures of Bill C-67 are balanced by provisions which accelerate the consideration for parole of those offenders who pose a very low risk of reoffending.

This Bill will require for the first time that the National Parole Board consider at the earliest possible date of eligibility whether an individual should be released on day parole. The effect of this will be that in the case of good risks, of inmates who do not pose a serious threat to society, more of them will be finding their way out of prison earlier. I think that is appropriate. It will also be balanced off so we will be able to better protect innocent Canadians from those people who pose a very grave risk to society.

Having spent most of the past 14 years as a private Member of Parliament and not as a Cabinet Minister, I am sensitive to the need to fully involve Members of the House of Commons and of the Senate, and to accommodate their concerns to the greatest extent possible. For too many years I sat in opposition as an individual private Member of Parliament, and all too often what we saw was the Government ignoring attempts to improve legislation, or to have input into decisions that were taken. It is for that reason the Government waited until yesterday before calling Bill C-67 for report stage. We wanted to give the Senate committee, whose pre-study was approved by the Senate in December, a chance to express its views before the ability to move amendments in this House of Commons was closed off.

In committee we listened and we amended the Bill to make improvements. I invited the Senate to engage in a pre-study which would ensure that they could have full hearings and have as much input as possible. As a result of their making reports, the House of Commons would be able to consider those reports before the Bill came to report stage in the House. After that point it is not possible for us to make amendments.

We sat literally for months after the House of Commons committee had completed its consideration and reported the Bill to the House. We invited participation from the Senate committee for suggestions in ways in which the Bill could be improved. I gave to them my sincere undertaking that we would listen openly and in good faith, and that where improvements were suggested which did not detract from the principles of the Bill, which would help the Bill to work better and better protect Canadians, that we would make those amendments. There is a time to listen and there is a time to act. We have listened and we have been responsive where reasonable concerns have been raised, but now is the time to pass this Bill. Bill C-67 is supported by the vast majority of law abiding Canadians. I have no doubt about that.

What ordinary Canadians have told me since my appointment as Sollicitor General can be summarized as follows: Canadians want us to find alternatives to imprisonment for offenders who are not dangerous; however, they also want to be protected against dangerous criminals who have shown no interest in their rehabilitation.

[English]

One of the issues that remains in contention with some of the Members in this House is whether the National Parole Board should be taking this decision, or whether the courts ultimately should have the power to make a decision, and weighing whether somebody is ready for release. It is the courts that set sentences in the first place. It is the courts that prescribe the sentence when the inmate is first sent to prison, that is the role of the court.

After that time the expertise and experience of the National Parole Board of Canada is brought to bear on the case to ensure that those people who are ready for release from prison are released on a timely basis, and that those people who are simply too dangerous, who have made no effort toward reform, are not released in order to protect innocent members of society.

If there is a mistake in procedure, if there is a violation of an inmate's rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms all of that is appealable to the courts. The question that remains is with whom should the power be vested to take a decision? Who has the expertise, the background, which is the more appropriate body to decide whether an inmate has rehabilitated himself and is ready for release or not? Clearly, any of us who weighs that would have to come to the conclusion that it is the National Parole Board of Canada that has that expertise. The Board makes these decisions on a daily basis and should continue to be able to take them.

Taking this power away from, investing it with the courts, would add to delays, would give to the courts a power which they do not seek. It would be to ask a body, which has already played its role in a process at the front end, where it should be, to assume a responsibility throughout the whole process as to whether or not it was appropriate for an inmate to be released at that point.

The purpose of Bill C-67 is limited. It does not seek to change the nature of the sentence by the court. It is focused only on the remainder of the sentence, which is the responsibility of the Solicitor General to administer. It assumes that if a dangerous offender's status were appropriate it would have been so determined at the time of sentencing by the court. That is the time in which the court should have been involved.

That is why I believe that the National Parole Board is clearly the appropriate agency to take this decision. If an individual's rights are violated, under the Charter of Rights that can be appealed to the courts. If there is an error in procedure that can be appealed to the courts. As to the merits of release of an individual, it should more properly be made by the National Parole Board.

There have been too many victims to delay this Bill further. I have heard from their families, they have written to me, and I have had occasion to listen to them in person. There is no more difficult portion of my job as Solicitor General than to have to sit with the families of the victims of violent crime, to have to sit in one case with the families of some young girls who were allegedly assaulted by an inmate who was released under mandatory supervision. In this case he was released a month early because the controls that the National Parole Board has on inmates under mandatory supervision are less than the controls they have on somebody released on parole.

We have the bizarre situation that because an inmate was so dangerous and such a threat to society, in the view of the National Parole Board, the Board was forced to release him a month earlier than they would have released him if he had been less dangerous. That is a travesty, and it is precisely that sort of situation that this Bill is designed to address. There have been too many victims.

We should do what we can as parliamentarians to say that this victimization must stop. I have seen them, I have met with them, I have read their letters, I have heard their voices when they have spoken to me about their experiences. Nobody pretends, least of all me, that this Bill will end for all time violence by released offenders. There is still a date after which offenders are released. We do not attempt to alter the sentence that was passed by the courts. We cannot guarantee that there will not be violence after that date. Nobody can guarantee that.

There is only one guarantee and it is this; that every further day of delay jeopardizes innocent people. When we continue to talk, it is their safety that is at risk. That is why we have to act now. We have debated this Bill, we have studied this Bill, we have amended the Bill where amendments were needed. Now is the time for us to stand with the vast majority of Canadians in saying that we will do everything within our power as parliamentarians to put an end to the senseless violence. Canadians ask no more than that of us and, surely, they have a right to expect nothing less.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, as the Solicitor General spokesman for the Official Opposition, I am pleased to rise this evening to speak with respect to Bill C-67. I would like to make it absolutely clear at the outset that the Liberal Party supports the general thrust of this legislation. When I spoke at second reading stage on September 12, 1985, I made it clear that the Liberal Party is concerned about the release of violent offenders. I indicated at the time that Bill C-67 is similar to legislation that was introduced by the previous Liberal administration.

We agree that something must be done and that there is a problem with mandatory supervision. We agree that there should be some method by which the violent offenders could be detained until warrant expiry, if necessary, as an ultimate way of ensuring the safety of the public.

Where we disagree in a very fundamental way is with regard to who should make that decision—whether it be the National Parole Board or the courts. I too listened to the groups. I also participated fully at committee and listened to all those who appeared there to make representations and submissions of their point of view with respect to this Bill. I have been convinced that that ultimate decision should be made by the court, for a number of reasons that I will indicate during my submissions.

Before doing so, I want to comment briefly on the process. The Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) commented about the process that we have gone through over the last year. He appeared to be laying blame at the door of the Senate for the fact that it has been a year since this legislation was introduced. I believe it is highly unfair of the Solicitor General to lay the blame for the delay at the door of the Senate, when the delay is quite properly the responsibility of the Conservative Government of Canada.

The Bill was introduced last June. It was not brought on for second reading until September, 1985. It was referred to committee where it was given consideration and reported out of committee late last year. We have waited since late last year for the Bill to be brought forward. It was only brought forward at report stage yesterday and the Government was intent on rushing the legislation through, knowing full well that the House is scheduled to adjourn at the end of next week.

This is not the only piece of legislation that the Government is trying to muscle through the House in the dying days of this semester. Earlier today, the Government of Canada, for the tenth time in less than two years, introduced closure with respect to Bill C-86, a measure that would cut $8 billion in federal transfer payments to the provincial Govermment over the next five years. There are other pieces of legislation, including the Young Offenders Act which we also dealt with yesterday, which the Government is trying to rush through.

It leads one to wonder whether the Government is doing a disservice to legislation by simply piling it up and trying to rush it through in the last few days of this session. The cynics would suggest that the Government is intentionally backing up important pieces of legislation, knowing that the summer recess is coming and hoping that the Opposition will simply rubber stamp it through.

I want to indicate to the Solicitor General that we in the Opposition do not intend to obstruct the passage of this Bill or, for that matter, any Bill that is of benefit to Canada and will make our society a better place. We do, however, regret very much the method by which the Government has proceeded over the course of the last two years in dealing with legislation. It has told us at the outset that legislation is important and urgent, and that it is imperative that it be passed by Parliament. We were told that in June, 1985, with regard to this Bill. Yet here we are, a year later, over six months after the committee has dealt with it, and the Government brings the Bill forward.

If it was so important and urgent, why did the Solicitor General wait so long before bringing this Bill forward? The Solicitor General will blame the Senate, but that is a separate body. He had the right as the Solicitor General, as a representative of the Government of Canada, to bring the Bill forward forthwith and pass it through all stages in the House and then have it referred to the Senate. However, as a result of his procrastination, we can be assured that this Bill will not be given speedy passage and will not become law for many months yet. The responsibility belongs to the Solicitor General.

For him to stand in his place today and say that with every passing day the threat to society is heightened and that the public safety is threatened, is an absolute farce. If that were the case, and the Solicitor General were in fact as sincere as he would have us believe and as honest as he would like us to believe, then this legislation would have been brought forward six or seven months ago. Yet he waited until this very late date.

When this legislation was introduced, I indicated that given the fact we were supportive of the Bill in principle we would ensure its speedy passage. Notwithstanding the fact that those statements were made on the public record, the Solicitor General waited. I suspect that one of the reasons why the Solicitor General waited so long is that there is considerable opposition in his own ranks. We know that during the pre-study of this legislation in the Senate, Conservative Senators supported the reports which have been submitted to the Solicitor General but which he totally disregarded. He knows as well as us that there are Conservative Members of Parliament who object very vigorously and adamantly to certain aspects of the legislation.

I am sure that all Members of the House, and indeed those in the upper chamber, support the principle of this legislation. I include representatives of the New Democratic Party. I am sure that when the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) speaks to this legislation, he will indicate that he is concerned about public safety. I am sure he will say that the NDP would like to see measures that will enhance public safety in whatever way possible. However, as is their prerogative, I suppose the NDP will argue in favour of inmates and inmates' rights.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member for Burnaby for having such an interest in the cause of inmates, those incarcerated. It is far too easy for politicians and the general public to be against inmates who are serving time in federal or privincial institutions, and to suggest that they are somehow the complete authors of their own misfortunes and that society has no responsibility. I think we must be grateful that there are those in society like Clare Culhane of the Prisoners Rights Group, who is outspoken and has dedicated her life to the pursuit of fairness and justice for individuals in federal prisons. There are also those in this House who have taken an interest in the plight of prisoners.

As the Solicitor General spokesman for the Liberal Party over the last two years, I have received literally dozens if not hundreds of letters from inmates in prisons throughout Canada who have had grievances with respect to their periods of incarceration. When I was appointed as the Solicitor General spokesman for my Party, my initial reaction was, "Well, inmates do not vote. They are degenerates in society. They have breached some very fundamental laws of society and they are being punished for their crimes". My first reaction was not to bother responding to mail from inmates, or submissions from those who would like to assist those in federal institutions. However, over the course of the last two years, I have come to understand and sympathize, to a certain degree, with the plight of individuals serving prison sentences in Canada. Oh, sure, there are a handful serving time in federal institutions who are absolutely degenerate in every sense of the word. They are but a few. I am speaking of the Clifford Olsons and others who are serving lengthy prison terms for multiple murders, for brutal rapes or brutal assaults against young children or against senior citizens. They are but a handful. The others in federal prisons are serving time because, in a fleeting moment of passion, perhaps in a fit of anger, they have digressed from society's norms and have in some way committed a crime to warrant incarceration.

We know there are great numbers of individuals in federal institutions, and we are speaking of federal inmates here tonight. The Solicitor General indicated that their population numbered 11,000 across Canada. A great number of those do not deserve to be in prison, and even the Solicitor General would agree. Prisons should be a sanction of absolute last resort.

Yesterday, when we were dealing with the report stage of this particular piece of legislation, I indicated that every effort should be made to decrease the prison population in Canada for a number of reasons. We know there are those serving time in federal institutions, sentences of two years or more, who have not committed violent crimes, who have not, in any physical way, harmed society or any individual member of society. They have committed property crimes or fraud, for example, robbery of an unarmed nature. Those are the prisoners I would suggest should not be occupying prison cells, because to deprive a person of liberty should only be the ultimate sanction of the state.

There are those in this House, most of whom sit on the opposite side, who would suggest that the ultimate sanction should be the death penalty. We know that a great number of Canadians believe in the death penalty. I, for one, do not, for moral reasons. I do not believe that the state has a right to end the life of any individual, regardless of how miserable that life might be, regardless of what crime has been committed.

Mr. McDermid: Even if they take someone else's life?

Mr. Nunziata: That is right, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe anyone, any human being, has the right to take anyone else's life. I do believe, however, that in certain cases, the ultimate sanction should indeed be life imprisonment, but those cases are few and far between.

I think that we in Canada should consider ourselves to be extremely fortunate because of the safe nature of the society in which we live. I, for one, would not trade Canada for any country in the world. This is my country of birth, one of which I am extremely proud. One of the many reasons I am proud to be a Canadian is because of the safety of our streets, of our society because it is, without question, one of the safest countries anywhere in the world.

Mr. Robinson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if perhaps I might seek some guidance from the Chair as to the time limit which is in effect for the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), as we are approaching the 20-minute limit. I do have a number of questions for the Hon. Member and I want to have some indication as to what the rules provide.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has the floor for an unlimited period, without questions at the end.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that I do have unlimited time in order to make my submissions. Rare indeed is the opportunity to make submissions as fully as possible. I would be pleased, notwithstanding the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, to allow for questions at the end of my submissions. I am sure, given the reasonableness of the Solicitor General, that he, too, will agree to questions. I would be very pleased to justify any of the submissions I make here this evening and to try to answer, to the best of my ability, any questions that might be presented by any of my colleagues in the House of Commons.

If I might continue, I was speaking of Canada and its safety. It is safe for anyone to walk the streets of Ottawa late at night and in the early morning, to walk the streets of Toronto, or Montreal, or Edmonton, or Calgary, or Halifax, or Stephenville—

Mr. Robinson: Or Burnaby.

Mr. Nunziata: —or Burnaby, or Vancouver, or even the streets of Revelstoke in British Columbia, where I was born. It is safe to walk the streets at night. One has to be careful of the bears in Revelstoke, the four-legged variety. They might get a little nasty at night if one dares to walk between the mother and her cubs.

• (1940)

However, the point is that regardless of where one lives in Canada it is a safe country. I think that is something of which to be proud. Of course, we do have violent crimes now and again. That is inevitable given the fact that we are 25 million people or so. Given human nature it is inevitable that there will be conflict. There will be those who will not adhere to the laws of the country, to the rules and regulations of society. Ever since Confederation we have had cause to be proud of the safety in our streets. In this respect one need only compare our country with the United States of America to appreciate what I am saying.

One cannot walk on the streets of Detroit, Los Angeles, New York, Miami or Chicago late at night and be safe, or even feel safe and secure, knowing that no one will mug, rob, rape, assault or attack one. One just cannot do that there. For example, we all know that the City of Detroit has more murders in one year than the whole of Canada has in the course of one year. I recall not long ago when the City of Detroit was trying to break a national record of sorts with regard to the number of murders committed in one particular year. This just illustrates how sick some people are in society. At the time I recall someone telling me that they had been listening to some radio station late one night toward the end of the year in Detroit. The city was closing in on a particular record with respect to the number of murders committed in any one city in the United States. There was actually a countdown on this radio station. It was counting down the number of murders before a national record would be broken. The disc jockey said: "Come on, you murderers, get out there and kill. There are only nine more, eight more, seven more" et cetera. They even uncorked the champagne when the record was broken. That could only happen in Detroit. It could never happen in our society. It could never happen in Canada. However, my story illustrates the mentality of certain people. It illustrates that, for example, in the United States crime is accepted as a way of life and that it is very upfront and visible. So we are fortunate to be living in Canada.

We have one of the highest incarceration rates in the world, something which I am sure my friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), will point out. If because of that we have one of the safest societies in the world, then I suppose one can argue that it is a good result, we should keep incarcerating people if that ensures that we have some degree of safety in society. I do not believe that particular argument has tremendous merit, since there are costs associated with incarcerating people. I indicated earlier that when one considers the 11,000 inmates in federal institutions we cannot consider them all as being in the same category, as being in the same group.

On a number of occasions I have had the opportunity to visit federal prisons. I have had the opportunity to speak to inmates, those who have been convicted of first-degree murder, second-degree murder, rape, armed robbery and crimes dealing with narcotics. There is a whole spectrum of prisoners in our federal prisons. I referred earlier to the sickies, those who are so far gone that, in my view at least, they are not rational, not sane, for the purposes of the criminal law. However, they were deemed to be sane, although I believe, as do a great many people, that it takes an insane mind to commit premeditated murder, to plan, in a very deliberate way, to take the life of another human being. One has to be sick to do that. How can one possibly be a sane human being and decide to rape and kill a young person, a child, as it happens now and again? How could anyone believe that a Clifford Olson, for example, is sane? In my view, one has not to be in full control of one's mental state before one can do that. There are those types of individuals in federal institutions, and there are not many of them, probably a handful, who would do that. Then there are individuals who have been convicted of second-degree murder or manslaughter.

Before I had the opportunity to visit federal prisons I thought, as do a great many people, that those who are serving lengthy prison terms in federal penitentiaries are the worst type of inmates with whom to deal as far as the correctional authorities are concerned. But that is not the case at all, as anyone who has had the opportunity to visit federal prisons will say. I invite my colleagues in the House to take that opportunity some day. I am sure the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) would facilitate a visit for any parliamentarian who would like to visit a federal prison. Those inmates are not the toughest to deal with. After a period of time, those inmates—and I am talking about those who are serving 10, 15 or 20 years—come to recognize and accept the fact that they will be serving a long period of time in an institution. So they have a stake in ensuring a certain level and degree of calm in the penitentiary. They do not want to see riots or trouble. They do not want to see fights. They want their environment to be clean. They want to ensure that the food is good. They want to ensure that their environment is as pleasant as possible, because they know that they will be there for a long period of time.

You might ask, Mr. Speaker, which offenders are the most difficult to deal with. According to Correctional Services people and inmates to whom I have spoken, the most difficult people to deal with are those inmates who are serving short sentences. In prison jargon, those inmates are called deucers.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in Canada we have a two-tiered system of incarceration. There is the provincial system and the federal system. All individuals who are sentenced to two years or less serve time in a provincial institution, and all individuals who are sentenced to a period of incarceration of two years or more serve their sentences in federal prisons. That is why we often hear in the media that so and so was sentenced to two years less a day or so and so was sentenced to two years plus a day. That is the method used by courts to ensure that individuals serve their time either in federal prisons or provincial prisons.

I am not dealing here with provincial prisons. In federal prisons, the inmates who cause the most trouble are those who are serving short sentences, the deucers. It is those who are serving sentences of two, three, four or maybe even five years in length. The reason they are the most difficult to deal with is that they do not care if they break the rules of the institution. If an inmate is serving two years plus a day, he does not care whether or not he earns remission.

Let us take as an example an inmate who is serving two years plus a day. He knows that the day he walks into that prison, regardless of what he does, with the exception, of course, of committing another crime, he will earn remission. I believe the formula is that for every month he serves, he gets 15 days off for good behaviour or for participation in prison programs. The result of that is that any inmate is released after serving two- thirds of his or her prison sentence. That is automatic and is called mandatory supervision. It was introduced in 1970. Later on, I would like to review the origins of mandatory supervision and trace its rather unfortunate history over the course of the last 16 years.

Returning to the example of the inmate who is serving two years plus a day, he knows that he is going to get a third taken off the time of his sentence. Right off the bat—

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to return to the question of having an opportunity to ask questions of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I understand it is the Chair's ruling that there will be no opportunity to ask questions at the conclusion of the Hon. Member's speech in view of the fact that he has unlimited time. In those circumstances, I would seek some clarification as to whether or not it would be possible to seek unanimous consent to question the Hon. Member at an appropriate time during the course of his remarks in order to seek clarification on those remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is free at any time to ask unanimous consent of the House for questions.

Mr. Nunziata: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for giving me a breather.

As I was saying, the sentence of that inmate will be automatically reduced by a third. We are dealing with an individual who will, after serving about 18 months or so, be released. He has nothing to lose if he breaks the rules of the prison. He will get himself into fights and he will destroy the facilities.

Not long ago, I spoke to an individual at Joyceville prison who is part of the Prisoners' Committee and he was fighting mad. He said: "I have a bunch of deucers in here who are ruining everything". He said that they were supplied with basketballs, baseballs, bats and what-not and the deucers would take the bats to the basketballs or would boot the basketballs right out of the prison yard so the rest of the inmates would not have the opportunity to play those sports. That man was fighting mad at the deucers because they were making it very difficult for those who are serving longer periods of time.

The point I am trying to make is that there are misconceptions about federal inmates in society. I think we have to be careful, particularly since we are in a position to pass laws here in Parliament, to ensure that we do not base our decision-making processes on the myths that exist with regard to inmates, offenders and convicts. For the most part, the subject of crime, inmates and prisons is a very emotional one. It is very easy for us to have our opinions affected by certain myths or misconceptions that exist regarding federal inmates. I would caution my colleagues not to lump together all 11,000 federal inmates and classify them as being the dregs of society and degenerates.

There is a large percentage, though I do not know exactly what it is, of inmates who are one-time offenders and in all likelihood, after being released from prison, will not commit another crime. I am speaking of those who are truly remorseful because of the criminal acts they have committed and truly want to be rehabilitated. There are those who want to rehabilitate and are sorry for what they have done. They are prepared to serve their time and are prepared to readapt to civilian life in a law-abiding fashion.

When considering Bill C-67, I would simply ask that we try to put a human touch on our deliberations and try to understand with whom we are dealing. We are not dealing with monsters. Some of them, yes, can be classified as monsters. However, it is patently unfair to describe all prisoners as monsters. We have to put a human touch to it.

I should like to refer to one of my constituents, but I will not mention her name. A few years ago her husband committed a very serious crime. He was convicted of second degree murder and was sentenced to a very lengthy period of incarceration. This constituent came to my office with her child about a year and a half ago and asked for assistance because of an internal problem her husband had in the institution. I could not help but feel for her when she told me what she does every week. She boards the bus in Toronto to go to Kingston to see her husband. She takes the child along so that she can see her father. This has been going on for years. Her husband will become eligible for parole in a number of years. I have corresponded with him, but I have not yet had the opportunity to speak directly with him. However, through the correspondence one cannot help but feel for him, his wife, and his child. He admits that he did wrong. He knows that he breached a fundamental law of society. He does not resent in any way the fact that he was incarcerated. He believes that serving his time will be his way of paying back, but he also recognizes that he could never repay that lost life.

There are those people inside and outside the House who would argue that he should have been put to death, that there should have been capital punishment for him because he murdered another individual. Having met with his wife and child and having read the correspondence, I cannot help but be impressed with the fact that there is still hope for this family unit, notwithstanding the heart-wrenching turmoil through which the family has gone over the last number of years. They still have hope, and they still have love for one another. They long for the day a number of years off when they will have an opportunity to live their lives together, the day when this individual will have the opportunity to walk out of the gates of the prison as a free man.

I say all this simply to suggest that when we deal with inmates or prisoners, let us not lump them together. Let us try to understand who they are. Let us try to understand that they are human beings.

At this point I should like to interject the fact that our paramount concern is the safety of society. We recognize that such individuals have breached the laws of society and that by so doing they have deprived themselves of their own liberty. The protection of society should be a paramount consideration, but I do not think that society can completely absolve itself of responsibility. Yesterday we dealt with the young offenders Bill. At times we must ask ourselves why a child of 8 years, 10 years, or 12 years of age is a hardened criminal. We must ask ourselves why children of such a tender age are hardened criminals. It is not the fault of the child; it is society's responsibility. We collectively must take that responsibility. As we sit here in the House of Commons, in the plushness which surrounds us, it is all too easy not to accept any responsibility for the ills in society. Each and every one of us sitting in the House of Commons is fortunate to know that we are financially comfortable. The Lord knows that we in the House, at least for the time being, do not have the worries of a great many of our fellow citizens. However, there is group of people out there in society who are the poor and the unfortunate.

For the most part it is from within that group that our prisons will be filled in the future. We know that a child of 8 years, 10 years, or 12 years of age, who becomes a hardened criminal, who starts to burglarize, who starts to steal, or who becomes violent, will be an offender later in life. As a society we have to take some responsibility for these people. We must try to determine who are these people and why they do what they are doing. For years and years criminologists, sociologists, psychiatrists, and various other experts have tried to understand crime. They have tried to understand why people break the law, why people do not accept some very standard and basic rules. It is more likely that one born to poverty will lead a life of crime than one born with a proverbial gold or silver spoon in his or her mouth.

I should now like to review the legislation before us and try to apply some of my concerns to it. This piece of legislation was introduced over a year ago, and there were reasons for bringing it forward at that time. One reason was that the concept of mandatory supervision introduced by the Liberal administration in 1970 was simply not working as well as it should have been working. At the time of its introduction it was felt that society required some control over offenders after they were released into the community. On listening to the Solicitor General tonight, one would almost think that with the passage of Bill C-67 we could unequivocally guarantee the safety of society. I believe that something very important has escaped the Solicitor General. I do not think he recognizes that some day in the future nearly all inmates will be released.

The Solicitor General used the example of someone who was incarcerated for nine years. He said quite correctly that after six years, because of mandatory supervision and the concept of earned remission, the individual who was sentenced to nine years in prison would be released by operation of law at six years. Let us assume for a moment that there is no such thing as mandatory supervision, that after this individual was sentenced it was up to the Parole Board to decide when that individual might be released.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, an inmate becomes eligible for day parole after serving one-sixth of his or her sentence and becomes eligible for full parole after having served one-third of the sentence. It is important to distinguish clearly between parole and mandatory supervision. There is a sea of difference between the two concepts. For the most part, parole is successful. There are inevitably cases where parolees commit crimes while out on parole, but generally speaking parole is more successful than mandatory supervision. That is because an individual who is sentenced to nine years in prison knows that if he is of good behaviour for three years, if he co-operates with the authorities, participates in prison programs, is remorseful and is able to show the authorities that he will not create another crime when released and can be integrated into society, he or she will become eligible for full parole after three years. That person is going to do his best to ensure that his record is such that when the Parole Board considers his application for parole he will be considered a prime candidate for parole and released into the community. Of course, there are certain conditions to that parole, such as that he report to a parole officer once a week, sign in with a local police station, continue to reside in a particular community or stay away from alcohol and drugs.

What happens if the person is not granted parole after three years? Let us assume that for some reason the Parole Board decides that the person should not be released into society because he has not displayed conduct becoming a law-abiding citizen and has failed to co-operate with the correctional authorities. He has the opportunity to apply for parole again at a later date.

There are those who, regardless of the number of times they apply for parole, will be denied parole because they have been bad in prison, because of their violent nature or because of their previous criminal record. If the person who is sentenced to nine years in prison is a bad apple, he would know that regardless of what happens, he is able, by operation of law, to earn three years worth of remission. This is the law of Canada. Every inmate is entitled to earn remission while serving time. There is a reason we have the concept of earned remission. It gives the correctional authorities in the prisons of Canada a carrot to dangle to ensure the proper conduct of an inmate. As long as an inmate has hope that his or her sentence might be reduced there is an incentive for that inmate to be of good behaviour.

If the Parole Board decides in its wisdom that this inmate is not going to be released on parole, he is entitled to be released after six years. Under Bill C-67 if this particular inmate falls within certain criteria, the National Parole Board, according to established criteria and procedures, can issue a detention order which is reviewable every year.

Using the example of the nine year sentence, let us assume that this legislation is in place and the Parole Board decides after six years that this inmate is violent and should be kept incarcerated for a further period of one year, and after that decides to keep him in again. After that there is no option. That person may be serving time in a maximum security institution. After the inmate, who has committed a violent crime, has served the nine-year sentence the doors of the prison must be opened.

Imagine the situation, Mr. Speaker. Imagine what is going through the mind of that individual. He committed a crime and was sentenced to prison for nine years. He was refused parole after three years and was possibly turned down on a number of occasions after that. The National Parole Board decided to issue a detention order a first and second time and then the doors are flung open. He goes from maximum security to the streets.

One must think what we are doing in this particular case. What is that person to do? We have no authority or control over that individual. We cannot attach any conditions to his release. We cannot say that he must spend time at a half-way house in order to learn life skills. We cannot prescribe that the individual must continue to reside in a particular community. The state loses complete control over that individual.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to an individual whose warrant expires and who is then out in the community without any form of supervision. I wonder if I might have unanimous consent to ask the Hon. Member to elaborate on a proposal he made some time ago with respect to the status of these individuals—

Mr. McDermid: Order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) continues in debate.

Mr. Nunziata: It is rather unfortunate that we heard so many noes from across the way. Here is our opportunity to—

Mr. McDermid: We are enjoying your speech too much. We do not want to waste it.

Mr. Nunziata: —debate this legislation. The Hon. Member for Burnaby would like an explanation on a particular point and Hon. Members opposite are refusing to allow him the opportunity to ask a question.

Mr. McDermid: He already did. Give us the answer.

Mr. Nunziata: In any event, the facts speak for themselves in so far as where the Conservative Government stands regarding this democratic institution and trying to make it work.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear where this Government stands on the democratic process. We have now allowed the Hon. Member to babble on for an hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order, of course.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I very much resent that particular Hon. Member of Parliament standing up, as he rarely does, to babble. He does not have the courage to stand up and make submissions or represent the constituents of Brampton—Georgetown. He has never had the nerve, of course, over the last two years to do so. He continually persists in interrupting Hon. Members when they are speaking. If he does not want to sit here and listen and participate in the debate, I simply ask him to go home, go to bed, and not wake up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cook: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest respect to the Chair, there is a rule of relevance in this House. I wish the Hon. Member would stay with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair feels that the Member has been most relevant so far in the debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, for the Hon. Member to stand up and suggest that I am not being relevant would suggest that he should clean his ears out. I have been trying to lay out what led up to the introduction of this legislation. The moment I start quoting Shakespeare, he can stand up in his seat and suggest I am not being relevant. However, I suggest to him that when I do begin to quote Shakespeare—

Mr. McDermid: In many instances Shakespeare would be more relevant.

Mr. Nunziata: —I will continue to be relevant. Whether it is nobler in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune or to put up with a sea of Conservatives, I suggest it is well worth the fight and we are enjoying it immensely. We will take the slings and arrow any time—

Ms. Copps: The quality of mercy is not strained—

Mr. McDermid: Tell them what to say, Sheila.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member get back to the Bill, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I was being serenaded by my friend and colleague from Hamilton East. It is a pleasure to note that she has now graced—

Ms. Copps: And the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow).

Mr. Nunziata: And the Conservative Member for Calgary South, who has been listening very attentively to my speech over the course of the last hour. I know she will have a whole host of questions to ask once I have completed my speech. However, I would like to welcome my colleague from Hamilton East to the House for this evening's debate. I know she would like to participate.

Getting back to my submissions—

Mr. Cook: About time.

Ms. Copps: To be or not to be.

Mr. Nunziata: To be or not to be. Before I was politely interrupted by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, we were talking about an individual sentenced to a nine-year term of imprisonment, denied parole on a number of occasions, and, given Bill C-67, being forced to spend the rest of his sentence in prison. I asked Hon. Members opposite, including the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), and I will repeat myself because I know that at times it is difficult for that Hon. Member to understand, given his obtuse nature, that if you open the gates of the prison—

Mr. Robinson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with great respect to my friend from York South—Weston, I wonder if the reference to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) as obtuse is really parliamentary. It may be accurate but is it parliamentary?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not consider that to be a point of order. Would the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) please continue in debate.

Mr. McDermid: Very serious debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Given the fact that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown did not respond, I am sure he agrees with me when I call him obtuse. He has been called obtuse in the past and if the shoe fits, wear it. Res ipsa loquitur, as they say.

We then have this person who has served nine years of his life in prison. We then open the prison doors because by law he must be released into society. Imagine for a moment this person who has not seen freedom in nine years. He has been kept incarcerated, perhaps in a segregated unit, for nine years. He has to be released into society with no conditions, no supervision, and no ability to exercise any kind of control. I suggest that what the system is doing in that case is nursing a time bomb. Over the nine years this individual has built up resentment, hate and vindictiveness which he might not otherwise have done. You then release him into society. Would it be any wonder if he committed another crime when he was released?

We have to take into consideration the fact that at some point in time, in line with Bill C-67, the inmate has to be released. If the purpose of this legislation is to protect society, we cannot say that we are at least protecting society for another three years in this case. I submit that we might very well be increasing the chance that this inmate will commit another violent crime. If you just release him from maximum security prison into the community, the likelihood of his committing another crime is enhanced. Simple logic will tell you that. I suggest that society would be better off, and there would be less likelihood of this person committing another crime, if there were a method by which some type of control could be exercised over the individual after he was released into society.

Those facts were taken into consideration some 16 years ago. Over the years we have had a number of commissions which have considered the concept of prisons and release and parole and mandatory supervision. We can go back to 1956, 30 years ago, when we had La Commission Fauteux which studied this particular area. In 1969 there was the Ouimet Commission.

This Commission also examined this issue, Mr. Speaker.

• (2030)

[English]

Then in 1972 we had the Huguesson Commission that studied this whole area of correctional law. In 1974 we had the Goldenberg Commission. All four commissions recommended that there should be a period of supervision after you release an inmate into society. That is a major factor that this Government should take into consideration.

The Solicitor General might argue that with the case of the nine-year prison term the National Parole Board might simply keep the person incarcerated for two extra years and in the ninth year of his prison term might decide to release him and attach certain conditions of residency, conditions that the individual not consume alcohol, smoke cigarettes or dope, or whatever the case might be.

How is society being served by keeping an individual incarcerated? That is the question we have to ask. The administration preceding this Conservative administration appointed a special committee to look into the whole area of sentencing. It became known as the Canadian Sentencing Commission. It was originally known as the Sinclair Commission named after a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario. For health reasons he could not complete his task, and Judge Archambault, who was an expert in this area, was appointed to carry on the work of Mr. Justice Sinclair.

The previous Liberal Government felt it important that we look into the whole concept of sentencing. It relates to the legislation very directly because what we are dealing with here is the other end. After a crime has been committed an individual is convicted beyond a reasonable doubt and then he is sentenced. What we are dealing with in Bill C-67 is the release after the inmate has served his or her sentence.

The Canadian Sentencing Commission is going to consider sentencing procedures in Canada. I am sure a lot of Members recall a few weeks ago a special report on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation program on, The Journal, where the disparity in sentencing across Canada was looked into. The show had four or five different cases of varying degrees of manslaughter. It was pointed out that the sentences ranged from no period of incarceration for manslaughter to a lengthy period of incarceration of some 15 or 20 years. The crimes were then compared. There was one crime where a father literally shook his child to death. He was convicted of manslaughter. There was another case where an individual somehow pushed a friend over a balcony after a period of drinking and was given a particular sentence. What the program pointed out in a vivid fashion was that there is a very serious disparity in sentencing in Canada.

Judges have no rules by which to guide themselves when they hand out sentences. The Journal concluded with an interview with the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario. He said he would welcome guidelines. He said he did not want to be too restricted in his judicial discretion, but he would appreciate guidelines.

Before being elected to the House of Commons I had the opportunity for a few short years to practise some criminal law. I found in my limited experience that there was, indeed, a problem with the disparity in sentencing. I could sit in a court of law on any given morning and watch a judge banging his gavel in case after case of drunk driving, for example, handing out a particular sentence, and walking into the next courtroom and then handing out a sentence which might be doubled or tripled.

There are those who suggest that there should be a median where the judge would have the flexibility to go 25 per cent one way or the other. As you know, there are very few crimes in Canada that carry a minimum prison sentence. First degree murder has a mandatory prison term of life imprisonment with parole eligibility after 25 years. With the exception of murder and, perhaps, a second offence of drunk driving and importing narcotics, all the other crimes in the Criminal Code of Canada would allow a judge to permit a person who is convicted of a crime, other than those mentioned, to walk away without a period of incarceration. The person could be released with an absolute discharge, a conditional discharge, required to be released on probation, fined or compelled to perform community service work. That is happening more frequently. My experience is with the Province of Ontario where, more often, judges are requiring those convicted of crimes to provide service to the community by working for voluntary organizations or municipal Governments, rather than sending them to prison.

Given the very nature of the sentencing procedure in Canada, the court has considerable discretion in handing out different types of sentences. Even though there is no minimum sentence for a particular crime, there is always a maximum sentence, so that in the worst possible case, the judge has the authority to impose the maximum sentence. Depending on a decreasing scale of seriousness, the person could be given a reduced prison term.

A few years ago it was felt that our sentencing procedure in Canada needed very drastic reform, given the disparity of sentencing. Therefore, the commission was established and, as I understand it, it is required to report in the near future. I am sure that once the commission reports, its recommendations will be far-reaching and the House will no doubt give thorough consideration to the report. It could very well result in some drastic changes in our prisons and further changes to mandatory supervision.

There are those in society who recognize the problem of sentences. There are also some very responsible people in society who are advocating total abolition of parole. At first glance, one would ask what type of madness would lead one to advocate abolishing parole, since it is a system that has been with us for hundreds of years.

According to the President of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, Canada should abolish parole, time off from prison for good behaviour, and fixed minimum sentences as part of a major overhaul of the way criminals are sentenced. This was stated by the President of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, Mr. Justice Allen Linden. He is a very learned individual and a former professor of law and colleague of yours, Mr. Speaker, at Osgoode Hall law school.

Ms. McDonald: And a good Liberal.

Mr. Nunziata: A good Liberal and a good friend of mine. He was one of my professors and he taught me well in the law.

Mr. McDermid: You were doing fine until then.

Mr. Nunziata: I hear some laughter across the way. Are Members opposite in some way impugning the integrity of the President of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, a justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario?

Mr. McDermid: No, just one of his students.

Mr. Nunziata: I am advised by one of my colleagues that one of the more senior members of the Conservative Cabinet did not even get through law school. We know that certain sons and daughters of Cabinet Ministers did not quite make it the first time around either. However, that is another story altogether.

Perhaps we can get serious for a moment, as the Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) is suggesting. I think Calgary is a very lovely city and I understand there was a beautiful chinook there today.

Mr. McDermid: Do you know where it is?

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member opposite asks me if I know where it is. He does not even know where the end of his nose is at times.

Mr. McDermid: That was a zinger.

Mr. Nunziata: Getting back to Bill C-67, Mr. Justice Linden, President of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, has done an absolute superb job over the last years, notwithstanding the suggestion that he might, in some fashion, be supportive of the Liberal Party. He has done very positive work and the Law Reform Commission has presented some very progressive discussion papers during the course of his tenure. Some of those recommendations have become legislation.

I want to quote Mr. Justice Allen Linden, who taught me torts in law school. I will never forget—

An Hon. Member: I hope they are not cooking them.

Mr. Nunziata: We are not talking about tarts, we are talking about torts. Tarts are tasty; torts are costly.

When referring to the parole, time off from prison for good behaviour, and fixed minimum sentence, Mr. Justice Linden said: "These mechanisms unnecessarily distort and complicate the process of sentencing". This suggestion is made by a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario and President of the Law Reform Commission of Canada. He is a very responsible individual who served with distinction during his tenure as an active member of the judiciary. He is saying, as a judge, that we should abolish these mechanisms because they unnecessarily distort and complicate the process.

What did Mr. Justice Linden mean? Perhaps it is even presumptious of me to try to determine what the justice meant, but I think it is obvious.

Let us again consider the case of the individual who was sentenced to nine years. Let us assume that the jury decides to convict this person beyond a reasonable doubt for a particular crime that this person has committed. The judge has the responsibility to sentence this individual. Let us assume that there is no minimum sentence for the crime that was committed. What factors must the judge take into consideration and what factors is he allowed to take into consideration when sentencing this individual for that particular crime?

Before sentencing the individual, the judge will hear from the Crown prosecutor and defence counsel as to sentence. Unless an agreement has been struck between the Crown prosecutor and defence counsel, the Crown prosecutor will invariably argue for a lengthy period of incarceration. First, he will argue that the crime was violent and that the individual has shown no remorse. He will say that there must be specific deterrents, but more important, general deterrents so that this person could be made an example to society at large. He will then describe the crime and may bring forward witnesses to suggest that this person is of bad character. If the individual has a criminal record, the Crown prosecutor will introduce that as evidence.

On the other hand, defence counsel will try to convince the judge that he or she should hand down the minimum sentence, taking into consideration a number of factors. Of course, defence counsel will emphasize certain factors and de-emphasize others. He might bring forward character witnesses to say what a fine individual this person was, what a fine family person, et cetera. Then he might cite a number of cases involving similar circumstances to support his position that a lenient sentence must be handed down.

After the Crown prosecutor and defence counsel make their submissions, perhaps including various reports, such as medical reports, the judge must then decide what sentence should be handed down for this individual, taking into account these submissions by the two adversaries in our court system. Of course, he will reach back into his experience over the years. He might have heard a similar case just prior to this one and might use that as a yardstick. He then must make a decision as to the length of the particular sentence. As one can well appreciate, it is not a perfect art, but a sentence must be handed down.

The reason I have spoken at some length about sentencing is that even though the rules of law might state that a judge should not take parole or mandatory supervision into consideration, judges are human beings, and a judge will take into consideration the fact that the person he is about to send to prison will become eligible for parole after a period of time. This is exactly what Mr. Justice Allen Linden meant when he said that these mechanisms unnecessarily distort and complicate the process of sentencing, because in the back of the judge's mind—

Mr. Robinson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has referred to considerations which judges will examine in imposing sentence. I wonder if I might seek the unanimous consent of the House to ask the Hon. Member a question with respect to a study that was done of sentencing and the factors which are taken into consideration during sentencing, a study which showed very—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Prior to the Hon. Member asking his question, will unanimous consent be given?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately for the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), there is no unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) may continue with debate.

Mr. Nunziata: Once again, Mr. Speaker, we find that Conservative Members of Parliament are stifling debate, yet once again—

Some Hon. Members: Stifling?

Mr. Nunziata: Well, Mr. Speaker, they invoked closure today with respect to Bill C-96. Unfortunately for them, they do not have the opportunity to end the debate, but they are attempting to stifle the debate.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby, who has been listening very attentively for the last hour and a half—

An Hon. Member: When he's in the House.

Mr. Nunziata: —had some very important questions that he would have liked to ask.

An Hon. Member: Where is he now? In the Press Club?

Mr. Nunziata: And we have found that over the course of the last few hours, all that Conservative Members of Parliament can do is to continue to heckle and try to disrupt the proceedings of the House. I must admit, it is not true concerning the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), and that is quite clear. There are the odd Members of Parliament on the Conservative side who are responsible and have taken considerable interest, and so the Hon. Member has said to her Conservative colleagues across the way, "Let us get serious".

An Hon. Member: We are all very responsible here.

Mr. Nunziata: Returning to the subject of Bill C-67, as Mr. Justice Linden pointed out, these mechanisms unnecessarily distort and complicate the process of sentencing; because a judge will know, when he sentences an individual to up to nine years in prison, that after six years, by operation of law, as a result of earned remission, that individual will have to be released into society. Obviously, that must be a consideration, even though there might be some rule that states he is not to take into consideration such factors. Not only will a judge—because a judge is a human being—take that fact into consideration, but a judge will also take into consideration the potential for parole. Therefore, when a judge hands down a sentence of nine years, he knows that the person will be out in six years.

Now that we are introducing Bill C-67, can Your Honour see how the Bill will further distort and complicate the process of sentencing? Whereas prior to Bill C-67 a judge would know full well, within a high degree of certainty, that an individual would be released after serving two-thirds of his or her sentence, with Bill C-67, a judge would no longer know that. I would very respectfully submit that that would affect sentencing. That is why I also mention the sentencing commission; because when the sentencing commission comes down with its report, it will no doubt consider parole and mandatory supervision. Your Honour might find that once the Archambault Commission hands down its report, this Parliament, once again, will have to consider this particular area.

It might very well be that before this particular Parliament rises to go to the polls once again, we might again be considering this legislation, or legislation that will affect the whole concept of mandatory supervision and parole.

Mr. Justice Linden made these comments in October of 1985 in a paper prepared for a seminar of the Candian Institute for the Administration of Justice. That was several months after this legislation was introduced in the House, in June of 1985, but it was before or during committee consideration.

In the place of the existing system of sentencing Mr. Justice Linden proposes one that would outline typical sentences for normal examples of each criminal offence. What does the justice mean? He means that instead of having a system where one simply stipulates the maximum sentence as found in the Criminal Code of Canada for a particular crime, or the minimum sentence in the odd case when one is dealing with the importation of narcotics or a second offence for drunk driving or for murder, there would be a system which would outline simply a typical sentence for normal examples of each criminal offence.

There are degrees of violence, or degrees of offences. All murder is not alike. As Your Honour knows, one can commit murder by pulling a trigger and firing a single bullet. One can commit murder by stabbing an individual with a single thrust. Then, again, one can commit murder by blowing up a house in which there is a person, or by blowing up a car in which there is a person. There are various methods by which one can commit murder.

As well, of every crime that is outlined in the Criminal Code, there are those that can be committed in an uglier fashion than others. What the judge is saying is that there should be a "normal" example of each criminal offence. The judge could then distinguish or deviate from that example, depending upon the seriousness of the crime. Mr. Justice Linden says that there is too much disparity in sentencing. In effect, he confirms the report which was aired on CBC's The Journal. He says that judges are told what sentence to impose in the worst case of each crime and that sometimes they are given no choice in imposing a minimum sentence as well.

However, he said, quite correctly, that there are no guidelines for normal cases. I submit that judges who deal with criminal matters in Canada would welcome and appreciate guidelines, some direction, some assistance. This is the reason why, prior to sentencing an individual, a judge will ask the Crown prosecutor and counsel for the accused for submissions in order to gain some assistance to help him or her decide what type of sentence should be handed out. I am certain that most judges would welcome some type of guidelines. The guidelines might very well suggest that the judge take into consideration parole or mandatory supervision. We know that Mr. Justice Linden has advocated the total abolition of that; but there are ways of retaining the present system, I would suggest, while providing guidelines for judges.

For instance, Mr. Justice Linden says that hijacking, manslaughter, aggravated robbery and aggravated sexual assault should be among those offences calling for a bench-mark sentence of seven years. Mr. Justice Linden explains that the bench-mark sentence would be the typical sentence. He is saying that if someone is convicted of hijacking, manslaughter, aggravated robbery or aggravated sexual assault then the bench-mark sentence would be seven years. He goes on to argue in the paper he presented to the Canadian Insitute for the Administration of Justice that judges should still be free to make an individual sentence lighter or tougher as the circumstances warrant. In his paper he condemns the out-dated sentences provided in the Criminal Code. He applauded the fact that the previous Liberal administration commissioned a royal commission to study the whole concept of sentencing.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as I pointed out earlier, criminal law provides for sentences up to and including life imprisonment for breaking and entering, even though only 55 per cent of those convicted of such a charge are actually jailed. Is it any wonder that there was a necessity, and is a necessity still, to review these out-dated sentences in the Criminal Code? I do not think that there would be too many people in Canada who would argue that breaking and entering should carry a prison term of life imprisonment.

Mr. Justice Linden also states in his report that our sentencing principles and practices are antiquated, complex and based on a multitude of differing philosophies. Most important, they are often unfair. Some of the factors considered by judges when imposing sentence may be clearly discriminatory. He states that employment is often cited as a mitigating factor and that the unemployed may therefore receive less lenient treatment. He asks this question: "Is this bias appropriate?" Mr. Justice Linden points out that the ideas he puts forth in his paper are his own and not necessarily those of the Law Reform Commission of Canada.

The reason I felt it necessary to comment on some of the suggestions made by Mr. Justice Linden is because in my mind it is important to consider when we are dealing with Bill C-67 what is happening when a judge is sentencing an individual. I believe it is important to understand that at the time of sentencing judges take into consideration a number of factors, including the fact that the particular individual would at some point in time be released on mandatory supervision.

As I pointed out a few moments ago, there have been four separate commissions which have studied this whole area, one in 1956, one in 1969, one in 1972 and one in 1974. I would commend to all Members a discussion paper entitled "Mandatory Supervision, a Discussion Paper". It is a report of the Committee on Mandatory Supervision dated March, 1981. It is a very thorough report prepared for the then Solicitor General of Canada, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). At that time he felt it important to have his Department thoroughly consider the concept of mandatory supervision. The concept was in force for approximately 11 years at that point in time, but there were problems with it. It was felt that it was important to study the area in order for the Department to come up with suggestions.

This particular report looks into the history of mandatory supervision. It points out that the concept of mandatory supervision began in the United States in the 1950s. It points out that in the United States in the 1950s there was a growing belief in the corrective value of release on parole and the control and assistance provided by parole supervision. A national conference on parole convened by the United States Attorney General in 1956 recommended the same conditions and supervision for those being released as a result of remission.

The Canadian delegates to this conference returned to Canada with this recommendation. Some 14 years and several task forces later mandatory supervision was instituted in Canada, in August of 1970. As Hon. Members know several committees and commissions, the National Parole Board and the police identified the need for a program to provide supervision of all inmates released from prison.

This Bill could very well have the effect of ensuring that there would be no supervision whatsoever, if an individual is kept incarcerated until warrant expiry. I will not refer to this particular report at length. However, I commend it to Members of Parliament, for those who would like a thorough understanding of the history of mandatory supervision in order to understand the problems associated with it and to understand some of the statistics that have been compiled with regard to it. No doubt this report is available from the Department of the Solicitor General.

I would once again like to make it absolutely clear and certain that the Liberal Party does not object in principle to this legislation. I had a discussion with the Solicitor General about a particular provision of the Bill with which the Liberal Party is very concerned. I understand as well that the New Democratic Party is also very concerned with this provision which would allow the National Parole Board to make a decision with regard to whether or not a detention order should issue.

Before I refer to the report of the Senate committee that pre-studied this legislation, I would like to briefly describe how the legislation would work. As the Solicitor General pointed out, the National Parole Board will be given the opportunity under the legislation to decide in certain cases whether or not an inmate should be released. The National Parole Board first will consider the type of offence the particular inmate was serving.

The Schedule to Bill C-67 outlines what offences should be considered by the National Parole Board. Basically, the legislation would provide an opportunity for the National Parole Board to consider those inmates who are serving time for violent offences. There is a list of some 20 to 25 offences included in the Schedule. The list includes causing injury with intent, the use of a firearm during the commission of an offence, pointing a firearm, prison breach, manslaughter, attempt to commit murder, causing bodily harm with intent, overcoming resistance to the commission of an offence, assault, assault with a weapon or causing bodily harm, aggravated assault, unlawfully causing bodily harm, assaulting peace officer, sexual assault, sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party or causing bodily harm, aggravated sexual assault, kidnapping, robbery, arson, setting fire to other substances, setting fire by negligence and conspiracy to commit murder.

If an inmate is serving time for one of those particular offences which are considered to be violent in nature, the National Parole Board has the authority to decide whether or not that particular inmate should be subjected to a detention order which would be in effect for the period of one year. The inmate could have that detention order reviewed after the first year.

The Bill would authorize the National Parole Board, according to established criteria and procedures, to retain in custody until warrant expiry or place under strict residential conditions those inmates considered to pose a clear risk of violent conduct beyond a release date that would have been established by earned remission. In the case of which I was speaking earlier, after six years the authorities would have the opportunity to keep that person incarcerated. This legislation would allow inmates convicted of the violent offences specified by the criteria only one chance for release on mandatory supervision by denying them the opportunity to earn remission following a revocation of a first release.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the Senate committee that pre-studied Bill C-67 had some very serious concerns with regard to what is known as one-shot mandatory supervision. In a few moments, I will refer to the report of the Senate which made some very persuasive arguments as to why there should not be one-shot mandatory supervision.

Bill C-67 would establish procedural safeguards and criteria that would limit the application of the measures to only the most dangerous offenders. That is according to the Solicitor General. The legislation would assure that the procedures and practices of the National Parole Board complied with the duty to act fairly and provide equality of treatment and to equip the Board to manage better its operations.

Perhaps I can digress for a moment and comment briefly on the National Parole Board. Notwithstanding the fact that at times the appointments of various members of the National Parole Board have been labelled as partisan in nature, I for one believe that for the most part, the National Parole Board is doing an extremely effective job. As we all know, the sister of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), Marcia Clark, is a member of the National Parole Board.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Is that Simma Holt you're talking about? Don't you criticize Simma.

Mr. Daubney: What about Keith Davey's wife, 20-year appointment?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, I don't want you to get personal.

Mr. Nunziata: The Government House Leader who is not sitting in his seat—I am not sure if that is because he was demoted—referred to Simma Holt, a former member of the National Parole Board, who was dumped unceremoniously by this insensitive Conservative Government in order to give the Government the opportunity to appoint one of its own. Another Conservative Member of Parliament suggested that the wife of a Senator was appointed to the Board. I did point out that in the very near past, appointments have been partisan in nature but we have not overly criticized those appointments. The moment I started to talk about the composition of the National Parole Board, we heard from Members opposite talking about Liberal appointments to the National Parole Board.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you want to throw in the towel on Rod Blaker?

Mr. Nunziata: I can speak at length about Conservative appointments to the National Parole Board. As I was saying, the sister of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and former Prime Minister, Marcia Clark, was appointed to the National Parole Board representing—

Mrs. Sparrow: Sister-in-law.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) indicates that it was the sister-in-law of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Marcia Clark. Marcia married Joe's brother, in other words.

Mr. Merrithew: Brilliant deduction.

Mr. Nunziata: The point I am trying to make is that under Bill C-67, we are giving authority to the National Parole Board to determine whether or not a particular individual should be deprived of his or her liberty. For the last few moments, we have heard from Members opposite through their heckles about the partisan nature of appointments to the National Parole Board. It is true that individuals have been appointed to the National Parole Board because of family connections, whether it is being the sister-in-law of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the wife of a Senator or a former Member of Parliament. That causes me concern and it should cause concern to each and every Hon. Member. Do we want to give the ultimate authority to the National Parole Board to decide to deprive an individual of his or her liberty?

There are those people who would argue that that is what they are doing, that is their job, and that they must decide whether or not an inmate should be released on parole. However, there is a difference. An individual released on parole is not entitled by law to be released on parole. An individual who is released on parole is released on certain conditions, and that parole can be revoked if the conditions are not met. On the other hand, mandatory supervision means that an individual is released by the operation of law; by the laws of Canada an individual who is serving a period of incarceration must be released.

There are those people who would argue that the ultimate authority on whether or not an individual should be released, after the date on which he or she becomes entitled to release by virtue of the earned remission provisions of various pieces of legislation, is the court. That final decision, it is argued, should be a decision of the court. The court, at first instance, makes the decision on how long a period of time the individual should be incarcerated. That one provision is the provision which most offends Members of Parliament on this side of the House.

We appreciate and support the thrust of this piece of legislation. We support the general principles which form the basis of the legislation, but we are very concerned about the fact that there is not judicial determination of detention.

When the Solicitor General spoke, he indicated that this particular piece of legislation would only affect a handful of the 11,000 inmates in federal prison. Those were his precise words. He said: "Perhaps about a hundred a year". He was not quite certain about how many inmates would in fact be affected by the legislation. That was a bit surprising. One would have thought that given the fact the Solicitor General was introducing this important legislation, he would at least have some idea about how many individuals would be affected. He was not able to tell us; he said that it would be perhaps a hundred, a handful. If that is the case, if we are only dealing with a hundred individuals, then why not allow the courts to make the decision?

When I spoke with the Solicitor General shortly after Question Period today, he indicated that it would make this system too cumbersome. He argued that if these matters were referred to a court for final determination, there would be a tremendous backlog. How could there be a backlog if we are only considering about a hundred a year, spread across Canada? Is it too much to ask that the judiciary make the final determination? In that way we can be assured that there is ultimate fairness in this particular situation.

We are not arguing that violent offenders should be released into the community. As I indicated earlier, we want to ensure that society is protected and that society will be protected even if the inmate serves his or her full sentence and then is released into the community.

As the Solicitor General pointed out, the Senate considered this legislation and tabled two reports, one of which was dated May 14, 1986 and the other of which was dated June 12, 1986, less than a week ago. Well, we heard from the Solicitor General, and he seemed to be blaming the Senate for the delay in bringing forward this Bill. I have here the Senate's twenty-first report which was given to the Solicitor General over a month ago, on May 14, 1986. Even though he had the authority and jurisdiction to complete all stages of Bill C-67 before that period of time, he suggested something which was quite laughable. He suggested that one of the reasons he waited so long to bring forward the Bill was that he wanted the Senate to pre-study it. The Senate pre-studied the Bill.

If he were sincere about giving the Senate the opportunity to pre-study the Bill, in order to receive submissions, ideas, and recommendations on amendments to the Bill, why would he totally dismiss the recommendations of the Senate? I would suggest that the whole process of pre-study as enunciated by the Solicitor General was a farce, and that the Solicitor General did not in any way intend to listen to the Senate. He has spoken on a number of occasions in a very disparaging and derogatory fashion about the Senate. Why would he start listening to the Senate now?

I should like to commend the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I am sure the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who has listened very attentively to my submissions, will stand in his place when his opportunity comes and will commend the Senate.

Mr. Robinson: That hurts.

Mr. Nunziata: He says that that would hurt. The Hon. Member for Burnaby represents a political Party which likely will never, ever—

Mr. Robinson: Go to the Senate.

Mr. Nunziata: —form a national Government in all likelihood; it might form a coalition Government some time in the future.

An Hon. Member: With the Grits.

Mr. Nunziata: With the Conservative Party, of course. He is a member of a Party which advocated the abolition of the Senate. I know, with all the certainty I can command, that that Member will stand and congratulate the Senate, the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I know he will do that because he unequivocally agrees with each and every recommendation which the Senate committee made on Bill C-67 in its twenty-first and twenty-second reports. Who would suggest that the Senate does not work? As of June 12, it had submitted 22 reports; that is a lot more than many committees.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could Your Honour give us the final indication from the House Leaders on whether we will be adjourning for the night at 10 p.m. or at 10.21 p.m. if we take the ministerial statement into account?

Mr. Speaker: All the Chair can tell the Hon. Member is that at the moment the Chair understands the House will be sitting until 10.21 p.m.

• (2130)

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length. I note that certain Conservative Members of Parliament are encouraging me to continue with my submissions. I would be very pleased to but I am about to wrap up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Rare is the case when Conservative Members of Parliament will applaud me.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member has not ceased speaking. I accept that. I am simply indicating to the Hon. Member and others that the Hon. Member has the right to be heard in order.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this day the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), our House Leader, was given standing applause because he has served 24 years in the House of Commons, a very distinguished record. I would just like to point out that I only have to wait 22 more years to get standing applause from Members opposite as well.

Mr. Blenkarn: You won't be here.

Mr. Nunziata: If I were a betting man, which I am not, I would bet on the number of Conservative Members who will be re-elected in the next election. You can be darned sure, Mr. Speaker, you can bet your mortgage and your bottom dollar, that you will not have 209 Conservative Members elected in the next Parliament. It was an aberration in Canadian political history never to be repeated again.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, the Chair does believe that the Hon. Member is stretching the rules of relevancy slightly with these comments.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, what I mean to say is that given the type of legislation which the Government is introducing, an example of which is Bill C-67, is it any wonder that the Government will go down to the greatest defeat ever in the history of Canada?

Mr. Speaker, if I can become serious for a moment—

Mr. Beatty: I doubt that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nunziata: This is serious legislation. I know the hour is late and I promise I will not speak beyond 10.21. I will conclude my remarks. I want to touch on only one or two other areas and then I intend to resume my seat in order to give Members of the House an opportunity to ask questions.

I would like to refer to the twenty-first report of the Senate committee which is dated May 14, 1986. However, before referring to this report, I would like to point out that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is not a study group or task force of the Minister. The Minister would have us in this House and all Canadians believe that the Senate committee was a creature of his Ministry, that somehow he created that committee to consider this legislation. The Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs does not report to the Solicitor General of Canada contrary to what the Solicitor General of Canada might like or believe or want. It is a committee of the Senate and reports to the Senate. Perhaps in the future the Solicitor General could keep that in mind when he refers to this particular committee.

The Standing Committee of the Senate was referred the subject matter of Bill C-67 in advance of it coming before the Senate. Pursuant to the rules of this House and pursuant to Parliamentary tradition it is possible to refer a Bill to the Senate of Canada in order to allow pre-study of it. The Senate was asked to give some sober pre-thought to Bill C-67. I would like to commend the committee for the work it did on Bill C-67. It did not simply read Bill C-67 through and submit a report. This is not a lengthy piece of legislation. It is comprised of only 19 pages.

The Senate called a great number of witnesses. It listened to the various interest groups involved including the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society, correctional officials and a great many other groups and organizations. In addition to listening, the committee considered reports from various groups and organizations. It also went to a number of prisons in order to talk to inmates, wardens, guards, and other people associated with the prison system.

After consideration of Bill C-67, the committee decided to submit an interim report which is the twenty-first report. It is pointed out that the report was not intended to be exhaustive and that the committee would continue its prestudy of the Bill pursuant to the order of reference. In its twenty-first report the Senate committee pointed out four areas of concern. The first area of paramount concern is the area which causes the Liberal Opposition in this House considerable difficulty, that is the issue of judicial determination of detention. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate what the committee had to say with respect to this very important issue.

It said that the first issue has to do with the question of what is the appropriate body to make decisions with respect to the detention of allegedly dangerous inmates beyond the date of their eligibility for release on mandatory supervision. It was the opinion of the committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32, on June 6, 1983, in the first session of the thirty-second Parliament, namely that the court rather than the National Parole Board should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates who would otherwise be eligible for release on mandatory supervision. The committee said that having heard the comments of the Solicitor General with respect to the appropriateness of the board taking on this responsibility it must, with respect, disagree.

While recognizing that the legislation attempts to ensure that inmates are afforded the best procedural safeguards available to administrative tribunals, the committee was still of the view that such decisions affecting, as they do, the liberty of individuals are more appropriately addressed in a judicial rather than administrative forum where affected inmates would have recourse to all the procedural rights and protections available in the criminal courts as well as the distinct right of appeal.

That in a nutshell is what the Senate committee had to say about this very important issue. Senator Earl Hastings is a member of that committee and I would like to publicly thank him for his involvement. For quite a number of years he has had a very keen interest in this area. I know this legislation is very important to him. He has closely monitored the Bill through all stages and on a number of occasions he attended committee to hear testimony.

The House of Commons committee which dealt with Bill C-67 also heard from the John Howard Society. That organization indicated its opposition to the enactment of this or similiar legislation. They submitted a brief and I would like to read from that brief. The Society said it was its intention to suggest amendments which would lessen the problems associated with the Bill as it currently stands. It did so at the request of a number of Members of Parliament who felt the Bill will pass in some form but may be subject to modification. They believed that the Solicitor General would listen. He indicated on a number of occasions that he would but, as you know, the Minister did not attend committee. I suggest that was a betrayal.

I now want to refer to the section of their brief dealing specifically with the issue of judicial determination of detention. They say, in reference to the enormous authority which Bill C-67 vests in the Parole Board, that they believe special safeguards are necessary to ensure the authority is used fairly and judiciously. For that reason, and because the Bill has the effect of lengthening the term of incarceration beyond that which the court anticipated, they recommended that the prisoner designated by the Parole Board to come under the special provisions of this Bill have the right to appeal the decision to a court of law. The appeal court must have authority to reverse the decision of the Parole Board.

What the Society is recommending very strongly is that this discretionary power should rest with the courts. They believe that would make the system a lot fairer. Yet once again the Solicitor General has totally and absolutely disregarded their very persuasive arguments. The Minister will often stand in his place and applaud the work of the Society. He will stand up and congratulate them. He will tell them what wonderful work they are doing. He would not hesitate to try and score some political points by applauding the Society. However, when it gets down to the crunch, he totally disregards them and tells the Society they are out to lunch, he does not agree with what they are saying.

One would hope at the very least that he would have some very persuasive arguments to put forward in order to substantiate his position that the National Parole Board should make the final decision with respect to whether or not a detention order should issue. We have not heard any persuasive arguments. I suppose he has been convinced by the sister-in-law of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that she should be given the authority, along with her colleagues in the National Parole Board. The Solicitor General certainly has not listened to the John Howard Society or the Elizabeth Fry Society, an organization which the Solicitor General would not hesitate to commend for the very fine work it does with regard to female offenders.

The Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies, which is an association consisting of all the Elizabeth Fry Societies across Canada, made a submission to the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs with regard to the proposed amendments to the Parole Act, the Peniteniary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code. This particular submission is dated April 17, 1986. The brief consists of 35 pages.

I wonder whether the Solicitor General has taken the opportunity to read through this very worth-while brief. I would be pleased to refer a copy to him. Given the actions of the Solicitor General, it appears that he has not listened to the Elizabeth Fry Society and has not read this brief. It includes a table of contents at the front of the brief, and perhaps I can refer to it in order to indicate the depth to which the Elizabeth Fry Society went in order to try to persuade the Government of Canada and, the Solicitor General to understand their concerns.

There is an executive summary, a background and then an overview. There is a section of the brief consisting of some five pages entitled "Parole Board Review Prior to Day Parole Eligibility". There are then two pages of recommendations in that particular area. There are another 15 pages devoted to what is entitled "Parole Board Power to Detain". The members of the Elizabeth Fry Society list a number of reasons for their objections.

They object to the selection of offences, the breadth of application, the conviction and sentencing for future behaviour, disclosure of information to the prisoner, the loss of right to earn remission and the value of remission. They object because violence is not predictable. They object by reason of the vagueness of the grounds for determining likelihood for future violence. They object because of the community resource availability, and they object because of the retrospectivity of the legislation.

The members of the Elizabeth Fry Society have also devoted a portion of their brief to the issue of one-chance mandatory supervision, which I hope to address in due course. They also address the six-day hold without warrant provision, and then they make some technical comments. The final recommendation is to rescind mandatory supervision.

I want to refer specifically to the portion of the brief which deals with the issue of judicial determination of detention, that paramount issue that the Opposition is concerned about, and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was concerned about. In the executive summary at page (i) of the brief of the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies it says:

> Bill C-67 would give new powers to the Parole Board to place a detention order on certain prisoners until warrant expiry, or until the order is lifted. These powers will effectively change the role of the Parole Board to a detaining body (which we normally leave to the courts which ensure due process)—

They go on to say the following:

> The fact that the Parole Board would be able to use this detaining power in relation to anticipated rather than actual behaviour, based on criteria contained in Regulations, which are themselves broad and which can be amended without Parliamentary scrutiny, make the provision particularly offensive to existing traditions of due process within the Canadian criminal justice system. It is likely that the new provision will also be found to contravene Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

An interesting point the Elizabeth Fry Society makes is that they believe, given their experience, that the retroactivity provisions could contravene Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I wonder whether the Solicitor General has had the foresight to refer the legislation to some constitutional experts to determine whether or not the Bill complies with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies at page 17 of the brief make some further submissions, specifically with regard to the concept of judicial determination of detention. I would like to quote from page 17 of the brief, which is entitled "Conviction and Sentencing for Future Behaviour". It was pointed out yesterday I believe by the Member for Burnaby quite correctly, that it is impossible to predict with any degree of certainty future behaviour. I suppose there would be those who would argue that you can predict within a certain degree. Given a certain amount of information about a particular individual, you might be able to decide whether or not this person is likely to be violent at some future point in time. It is not a science.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) has referred to a report of the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. I wonder if I might seek unanimous consent to have a copy of this important report appended to the Hansard of today's date?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that such a request is not possible.

• (2200)

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I note that the hour is ten o'clock. Is it the intention of the House to sit until 10:21?

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member is raising a point of order about his own speech. That is difficult, however. The House sits as long as the rules require it to sit. According to the rules, the House will sit to 10:21 p.m.

Mr. Cook: I rise on a point of order, which is out of my deep concern for the throat of the Hon. Member who has been speaking for three hours now. I wonder if I might seek unanimous consent to call it 10:21.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Having heard that there is not unanimous consent for that suggestion, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that Members opposite would like to call it 10:21. I can give the guarantee to the Hon. Member that I will not speak beyond 10:21.

An Hon. Member: We will give you unanimous consent to continue.

Mr. Nunziata: If I might continue, Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to enjoy it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At page 17 of the brief by the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies, under the heading "Conviction and Sentencing for Future Behaviour"—

An Hon. Member: Do your job, Herb.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps we could have some silence on the other side of the House. It is most distracting.

Mr. Taylor: Why? You are not saying anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course, the Hon. Member is entitled to the respect from the House that he would normally give himself, I am sure, in such circumstances.

Mr. Nunziata: The Elizabeth Fry Society at page 17 of their brief discusses conviction and sentencing for future behaviour. I was commenting with regard to the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who said that it is like trying to predict the weather. Even the weather person, flawed as that person might be with regard to predicting the weather, is occasionally right whether or not they predict sunshine or rain. The point to be made is that even though one cannot accurately predict human behaviour with respect to future criminal or violent behaviour, it is no reason to stop trying. It is important to at least try to predict human behaviour in an attempt to ensure the greatest protection to society.

I agree that there should be some discretion and that there should be some determination as to whether or not the particular violent offender should be detained in custody. The John Howard Society also agrees, according to the brief which they submitted. The Solicitor General agrees and the New Democratic Party agrees, I believe. There are many other groups, organizations and individuals who agree with this principle.

However, we disagree about who is to make the decision. I certainly have been persuaded by the Senate committee and the submissions made by various groups and organizations that the ultimate decision should be that of the court.

Let me quote from the brief of the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies. They say:

> The proposals place the Parole Board in the traditional role of a court, effectively giving it the power of conviction and sentencing, but for behaviour that has not occurred. This cannot be permitted in our justice system. Firstly, CSC's review and that of the Parole Board, based, as they would be, on behaviour that has not yet occurred, offends and sets aside a fundamental principle of justice, that of being held accountable only for behaviour that has occurred or been actively planned. Secondly, the legislated review and hearing process do not provide the safeguards that apply in court (such as right to counsel, strict rules of evidence, right of appeal, etc.) and yet the consequences of the Board review could be extremely serious for the prisoner, resulting in a mandatory period of loss of liberty considerably longer than that which was anticipated in court at the time of the initial sentencing.

These two factors make the proposal unworkable; it will mostly likely be challenged under the Charter and perhaps invalidate it. It is preferable to seek societal safety in other ways.

The Elizabeth Fry Society made some very important submissions. They were ignored by the Solicitor General. He has ignored the Senate committee, the John Howard Society and the Elizabeth Fry Societies.

What about the Correctional Service of Canada? I want to produce a document that refers to the Correctional Service of Canada. It is entitled "Release on Mandatory Supervision of Mentally Disturbed and Dangerous Inmates". It is a report that was put together by the Correctional Service of Canada under the heading "Evaluation and Special Projects, January 8, 1985." The Correctional Service of Canada is responsible to the Solicitor General, whose predecesor introduced this legislation. His Department stated in this report that the Correctional Service of Canada encouraged the ministry to retable at an early date the proposed legislation to allow for a court review of the mandatory supervision release of dangerous offenders. They go on to state that: "It should be noted, however, that this only postpones the problem until warrant expiry, at which time it is no longer possible to make supervised release plans for these offenders."That was stated by the Correction Service of Canada.

The Elizabeth Fry Societies, the John Howard Society, the Senate committee and even the Correctional Service of Canada argue that the court should make the ultimate decision as to whether or not an inmate should be detained until warrant expiry.

They point out that detaining an inmate until the completion of his or her sentence only postpones the problem until warrant expiry. Yet the Solicitor General of Canada cannot seem to understand that at some point an inmate will be released and that an offender who has been deemed to be violent must be released. Even though that offender would have to be released at some point down the road—and we just want to point out the difficulties—we believe that the authority should rest with the courts.

Well, enough on that point. That is the crucial point about which the Opposition is concerned. There are other concerns that were raised by the Senate committee and by the Opposition at the committee level. Briefly, if I might, in the few minutes that are remaining, I would like to—

Mr. Valcourt: Keep on. Extend the hour.

Mr. Nunziata: I note that the Conservative Member opposite has just indicated that he is prepared to extend the hour. I am prepared to carry on, if the Hon. Member wishes to continue on with the debate, if he wishes to speak. I would be pleased to resume my seat if he will give me the undertaking that he will give this Bill the consideration that I have given this particular piece of legislation.

If I can return to the submissions I was making before I was interrupted by the Conservative Member who just woke up, the second point that was discussed in the twenty-first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs was the issue of entrenching guidelines in the legislation. The Solicitor General will argue, "Well, we listened to the Senate in that regard because we did in fact entrench some of the guidelines in the legislation". It was not enough. We argued that the guidelines should not be brought forward by way of regulation. We argued, very strenuously, that the guidelines, with regard to the whole concept of detention and the area addressed in Bill C-67, should be part of the legislation itself in order to ensure that the Governor in Council could not amend or change, almost at whim, these regulations that affect the very liberty of an individual.

What did the Senate committee state with regard to this most crucial issue? It stated, and I quote: "The second issue concerns the decision to allow the Governor in Council to make regulations dealing with guidelines with respect to detention orders, the right to assistance at hearings of the board and to such detention orders and the withholding of information from inmates subject to the detention process." Our comments on these matters would be equally applicable if the courts were the decision-makers with respect to detention orders. "The committee considers that the substance of the regulations contemplated to be made pursuant to Section 15.6 of the Parole Act as it would be amended by Bill C-67 should instead form part of the legislation itself." The proposed section would give the Governor in Council authority to make regulations establishing guidelines with respect to the application by the board of subsections 15.3(7) and 15.4()4 and Section 15.5.

"It is clear to the committee that any such guidelines will have an effect upon decisions touching personal rights and liberties and that policy directions as to how these decisions should be reached ought to be given by Parliament itself".

I would like to underscore that, Mr. Speaker. The Senate further stated: "We hold the similar view with respect to the power to prescribe what information may be communicated to or withheld from an inmate about the evidence which will be presented at a hearing to determine whether that inmate's incarceration should be continued, and with respect to the power to determine whether an inmate is entitled to assistance at a hearing, and the kind and extent of such assistance, as well as the persons or class of persons who may provide it. In this latter regard, we note that the right to counsel was guaranteed under Bill S-32 as proceedings of this nature would have been conducted before a court. In addition, Section 15.6(2)(b) allows the Governor in Council to prescribe the offences, the commission of which will trigger an automatic review. Once again, this is a matter critical to the liberty of incarcerated individuals and, in our view, the offences should be determined by Parliament itself".

In a very succinct fashion, the Senate, as it often does, is able to make a very persuasive argument as to why the guidelines should be entrenched in the legislation rather than being part of the regulations. I note that the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) is nodding in agreement, as is the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer), whose riding abuts my riding of York South—Weston.

Mr. Beatty: He's nodding off to sleep.

Mr. Nunziata: We are very appreciative of that, Mr. Speaker.

I have said enough with regard to the issue of entrenching guidelines in the legislation. I note that I have but a few minutes in which to speak and I have just barely touched the surface of some of the concerns, but I will terminate my submissions at 10.22 p.m.

The other very major concern put forth by the Senate committee, that was considered as well by the Elizabeth Fry Society, the John Howard Society and a number of other individuals and organizations, was the issue of limiting one-shot mandatory supervision. I referred to this particular aspect of the Bill some time ago, and I pointed out that there were concerns.

What the Senate basically had to say about this particular aspect of the Bill was that the one-shot mandatory supervision or the denial of the right to earn further remission to certain inmates whose mandatory supervision has been revoked is objectionable to the committee, and I quote from the committee report as follows: "We note that the scope of this amendment was considerably narrowed in the legislative committee of the House of Commons. Only inmates who have been made the subject of formal consideration for detention under proposed Section 15.4 of the Bill but are not detained by order of the board are to lose the right to earn further remission on reincarceration following revocation of their release on mandatory supervision".

The following is most important, Mr. Speaker: "This amendment, however, fails to take into account the criticism that an inmate may have his release revoked for the contravention of terms and conditions of that release which have nothing to do with his or her perceived or potential dangerousness. Even the narrow class of inmates who would become subject to the one-shot amendment should not lose the right to earn remission by reason of a technical or minor breach of conditions which results in revocation. That right should only be lost if there is a criminal conviction while on release". That is important.

Your Honour will recall that yesterday, very specifically, the Hon. Member for Burnaby pointed this out and proposed an amendment—which was not agreed to by the Solicitor General—with regard to Clause 4 of the Bill. One might ask, what is Clause 4 all about? Under Clause 4, where an inmate is released on parole or subject to mandatory supervision—and that is what we are discussing now and that is what the Senate committee was discussing—"the inmate shall comply with any instructions given by the parole supervisor in respect of any term of condition of parole or mandatory supervision in order to prevent a breach of any such term or condition or to protect society".

The problem is that if an individual released on mandatory supervision fails to comply with the instructions, any instruction, of a parole officer, then his mandatory supervision, his release, might be revoked. If it is revoked, then the individual would not have a further opportunity for mandatory supervision. Why you might ask would one be concerned? A parole officer might say to an individual released on mandatory supervision: "I don't like the people with whom you associate. I don't want you to associate with Conservative Members of Parliament—"

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present in both official languages the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. This report deals with simplification of the Income Tax Act and makes extensive recommendations concerning how Budgets should be prepared and how tax measures should be contemplated so that when presented in a Budget they are drafted simply. It is the view of the committee that simplification of the tax system ought to be a primary concern, while promoting equity and economic growth. The committee has recommended that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) use a questionnaire type tax reporting form on a trial basis for 1986.

The committee also makes extensive recommendations with respect to how the current Income Tax Act ought to be rewritten to make it readable. You will know, as do others in this House, that it is virtually impossible for Members of Parliament to understand the Income Tax Act. Indeed, senior tax practitioners have indicated they cannot understand the Act themselves. It is with that view that the committee makes this report.

CUSTOMS TARIFF—PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee in both official languages on Bill C-111, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff Act and to amend an Act to amend the Customs Tariff Act.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT TO MAIL DELIVERY SERVICE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition on behalf of more than 25 constituents resident at 121 Trudelle Street who wish to express concern about their postal service. They call upon the Minister responsible for Canada Post to take steps to ensure that mail delivery to that building be improved and, in particular, they request that it be delivered earlier in the day.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the continuing saga of tabling petitions concerning the closure of the Rideau Hall grounds by order of the National Capital Commission, I would like to table another six petitions which ask that the authorities reconsider this decision and allow residents and tourists to visit the grounds at Rideau Hall. They recognize that security concerns must be looked after, but the public of Canada should be allowed to enjoy the 120 acre park. The modus vivendi, that is the security measures should be installed appropriately so that the public can be allowed to visit these grounds.

REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION OF NEW POSTAL STATION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constitutents in Calgary East I have the honour to present a petition asking Parliament to direct Canada Post Corporation to construct and operate a new postal station in the northeast sector of the City of Calgary in order that 80,000 residents of that area need not continue to face extreme overcrowding, lengthy travel requirements and poor service.

Mr. Speaker: There is a request to revert to tabling of committee reports. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

PRESENTATION OF THIRD AND FOURTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the third and fourth reports of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business in both official languages. The third report deals with the proposals of the Standing Committee in order to rectify problems relating to Private Members' Business hours. The fourth report deals with the selection of votable items pertaining to the second draw which took place on June 10, 1986. I note that pursuant to Standing Order 36(1)(b) the fourth report is deemed adopted when laid upon the Table.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-119, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-120, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

JUDGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-121, an Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in relation to judicial matters.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SHIPPING CONFERENCES EXEMPTION ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-122, an Act to exempte certain shipping conference practices from the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act and to repeal the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, with respect to all these Bills the Government has just tabled, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) whether he expects the House to adopt them all before the summer recess, for it seems to me we have only a few days left and it is a little bit late to introduce such major Bills.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): The question of the agenda for the House of Commons is a matter of ongoing discussions between the House Leaders. We have discussed what Bills are doable, as it were, before the end of this session. If he checks with his House Leader he will see that that matter has already been discussed and answered to his House Leader's satisfaction.

TRANSPORT—POWER TO TRAVEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are three items that have been a matter of discussion between the parties. I think you will find a disposition to have the following draft orders introduced by unanimous consent and passed unanimously without debate. They have to do essentially with respect to committees. The first order relates to the Standing Committee on Transport:

> That, in relation to its permanent Order of Reference on the Annual Report of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, dated September 9, 1985, and pursuant to Standing Order 96(2), the Standing Committee on Transport or a sub-committee thereof be empowered to adjourn from place to place inside and outside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the appropriate staff accompany the Committee or sub-committee and members of the Committee as the case may be.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. That motion takes unanimous consent for introduction.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of information, is there any time limit to this motion? Is it an unlimited motion that can be used by the committee to travel anywhere in the world?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As an administrative matter the agenda has been presented not only to the Board of Internal Economy of the House of Commons, but to the House Leaders. The liaison committee has allocated sufficient funds to allow for the travel. So all bases have been touched with respect to this particular travel.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I accept the statement of the Minister that this has been discussed by the House Leader, and if our House Leader has agreed then it is acceptable to us.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heared the terms of the order. Is unanimous consent granted for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: That being so, shall the order carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Carried and so ordered.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—POWER TO TRAVEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Another order, Sir, again subject to discussions with all parties, including House Leaders, who have consented, and the appropriate budget has been approved by the Board of Internal Economy and the chairman of the liaison committee. I think you will find a disposition to receive the following order unanimously and to pass unanimously without debate. It states as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources or Members of the Committee be empowered to travel to Calgary, Alberta, Norman Wells, Inuvik, Tuktoyaktuk, Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, Fort McMurray and Cold Lake, Alberta, from August 11, 1986 until August 14, 1986 and that the appropriate staff accompany the Committee as it deems fit.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent necessary for its introduction?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being such consent shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Carried and so ordered.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS—POWER TO TRAVEL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): The final order has to do with the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations. Again, this matter has been discussed between the parties and the House Leaders and consent is forthcoming all around. I would ask this matter be received unanimously and passed unanimously without debate. It reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding the Order of the House made on Tuesday, May 27, 1986, the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations be empowered to present its report not later than Thursday, June 26, 1987; and

That a message be sent to the Senate to request that the Senate unite with this House for the above purpose.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent necessary for its introduction?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being such consent shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Carried and so ordered.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER THIRD READING OF BILL C-96

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions:

June 17, 1986—The Minister of Finance:

That, further to the notice given on Tuesday, June 17, 1986, by the Minister of National Revenue and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 117 in relation to Bill C-96, An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, one sitting day shall be allotted to the third reading stage of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with motions there is a matter standing under Government Notices of Motion on the Order Paper which would normally be transferred. It is the motion under Government Notices of Motion with regard to June 17, 1986, the Minister of Finance. The House has already adopted an order with regard to time allocation. The Chair will either transfer that motion or accept it as being withdrawn.

Pursuant to the Standing Order, this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

Committee Reports

PRICING OF DOMESTIC WHEAT AND ITS PRODUCTS

CONCURRENCE IN THE FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moves that the first report of the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat and its Products, presented to the House on Thursday, June 5, 1986, be concurred in.

• (1120)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to move a motion of concurrence in a special report of the House prepared by seven Members of Parliament. It is probably somewhat rare that an opposition Member would move concurrence in a report of a committee on which the Government has a majority. However, I think the price of wheat in this country is an issue on which we all must agree and one on which we must act quickly if the farmers are going to stay on the land.

While the recommendations of the seven members of the committee were essentially unanimous, of course individual members had some differences. The committee was composed of the Hon. Member for Huron—Bruce (Mr. Cardiff), the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig), the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson), the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) and myself. The committee worked well and it was obvious during our hearings in six different cities that there is a real crisis in agriculture today. The western farmer has not faced such a crisis since the 1930s. In fact, farm income for western Canadian farmers is at approximately the same level as in 1933, in 1933 constant dollars.

I am pleased that the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) is in the House today. I am calling on him to agree with the recommendations in this report and implement what the Members of three Parties are recommending on behalf of western farmers.

We are faced with a real crisis. The price of wheat is at approximately the 1933 levels, and one can imagine what that means by considering if one's income in another walk of life was at the same level in 1933, in terms of constant dollars. That is why many thousands of farmers are either going bankrupt or facing serious financial difficulties. They will be unable to make ends meet unless we do something.

This special committee was mandated to the narrow study of two-price wheat in this country and to examine, to a very limited extent, the question of parity pricing. I think all of us on the committee realize that we cannot solve the farm problem simply by considering two-price wheat. Two-price wheat represents only 9 per cent of our wheat production in Canada. Another 10 per cent or 11 per cent of wheat production is in feed grains and some 80 per cent of our wheat production is exported to other countries around the world.

I am talking about the problems as they face western Canadian farmers because about 95 per cent of the wheat produced in Canada is by farmers in the Wheat Board region in western Canada; another 4 per cent is produced in the Province of Ontario; and, the remaining 1 per cent is produced primarily in Quebec, with some in Atlantic Canada. Therefore, this is basically a western Canadian problem.

The solution to that problem is not a domestic wheat price increase. The solution is to bring back some sanity and order to international trade. Presently, there is a tremendous trade war between the Europeans and the Americans, both of whom are massively subsidizing their farmers in the export of grain around the world. We state in our report that the United States is spending some $53 billion American in their agriculture for the next three years in order to subsidize the American grain producers. Some $1 billion of that is being used to subsidize American wheat exports around the world. That $53 billion American is the equivalent of $75 billion Canadian being spent by the United States for subsidies in the next three years, or $25 billion Canadian each year to subsidize the American farmers. How can we compete when the Americans are subsidizing their farmers by some $25 billion Canadian each year?

The U.S. Farm Bill is providing tremendous subsidies for the export of grain. For example, the Americans are selling wheat to Algeria for $104 a tonne, with a subsidy of $54 a tonne. In other words, they are giving one free bushel of wheat for every two bushels they sell to Algeria, as is the case with Morocco. The Americans are after our barley markets in Saudi Arabia and may be after our wheat markets in Syria and other parts of the world. The Americans are fighting against the Europeans, particularly the French, in places like Algeria, Morocco and Egypt. However, if the French are displaced from those markets, the Europeans will go elsewhere and fight for some of our traditional markets.

The real victims of this trade war between the Europeans and the Americans are the Canadian farmers, the Argentinian farmers and Australian farmers. There are only five great grain exporters in the world: Europe, the United States, Australia, Canada and Argentina. That is the current situation.

In addition, as a result of a drop by 19 per cent in world prices for better quality grains, the initial price of wheat went down. The initial price of barley dropped by some 27 per cent this year. Therefore, farm income will decline very rapidly in Canada.

The U.S. loan rate is $2.40 a bushel, which is in effect the price of wheat in the world. We hear much speculation from the Office of Majority Leader Senator Robert Dole and the Office of Mr. Lyng, the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, that the loan rate in the United States could drop from $2.40 U.S. a bushel to $2.10 U.S. a bushel. The prices would then be lower than those in the 1930s. If that happens and we do not respond, tens of thousands of farmers will go under and we will see the disappearance of many towns and villages and a rural way of life that is so important to this country.

I believe that all Parties in this House agree that if one segment of our society is in trouble, through no fault of its own, whether it is farmers, fishermen, loggers or anyone else, it is incumbent on the nation as a whole to come to the support of that segment of our society. The farmers in western Canada are in serious trouble, through no fault of their own but because of a trade war, world prices and the increased production of grains in countries like China and India that are becoming increasingly self-sufficient. Consequently, our western Canadian farmers are in trouble.

Some may ask if they could improve their efficiency. As the Hon. Member for Crowfoot, the Chairman of our committee said, the western Canadian farmers is the most efficient farmer in the world with the possible exception of the corn producers in the State of Iowa. Our farmers produce food very cheaply for the people of this country. In fact, we have the second cheapest food in the world in terms of the percentage of our disposable income that is spent on food. We spend about half as much on our food as we did in 1947, which proves that our farmers are not at fault for high prices. Our farmers are very efficient and extremely productive.

Our committee made nine recommendations which I believe should be taken very seriously by the House. I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to accept these recommendations.

The first recommendation is that we retain the present two-price system for wheat. That two-price system has been in place since 1967, when it was brought in to protect consumers. This two-price system meant that when the world price of wheat went high Canadian consumers would not have to pay as much for bread. On the other hand, if the price of wheat in the world was very low, the Canadian price would be somewhat higher so that the farmers would have a better deal and be able to survive on the farm.

What has happened in the 19 years we have had a two-price wheat system? Our committee reports that the consumers have benefited from the two-price wheat system by some $469.5 million because the Canadian price was lower. What about the farmer? On the other side, the two-price wheat system has helped the farmer by only $3.1 million, because only for short periods of time was the Canadian price higher than the world price, so the farmer benefited by $3.1 million and the consumer, when the Canadian price was lower, benefited by some $469 million. Up until now, the two-price wheat system in this country has meant that bread has been lower in price than it might have been; it has meant that the price of Shreddies for everyone in this country has been a little bit lower than it might have been because the farmer, in effect, has helped the consumer keep the price down.

What we are asking in the report is that the consumer now help the farmer by allowing us to increase the price of wheat from $7 a bushel to $10 a bushel for domestic purposes. With an increase of $7 to $10 a bushel, which is an increase of $3 a bushel which will go directly to the farmer, the wheat content will increase by 4.5 cents in a 16 ounce loaf of bread. An increase of 4.5 cents in a 16 ounce loaf of bread is not very much for the consumer to pay to help keep farmers on the land and to ensure that people in my riding, in Swift Current—Maple Creek, and other ridings do not go bankrupt because of the trade war between the United States and Europe.

Wheat for $10 a bushel is only part of the solution, because that concerns only 9 per cent of our production in Canada. However, with such an increase, there would be an extra $220 million in the pockets of western Canadian farmers which would help those farmers in my riding and in other ridings stay on the land. It will help to keep our farm food production system very efficient.

I appeal to the urban consumers represented by urban Members of Parliament in this House by saying that if the farmers are forced off the land and if we have fewer farmers and large corporate farms, the price of food will rise in this country and the people who will suffer in the long run will be the consumers, through an expensive food policy. If the price of food is to be kept down in Canada, we should keep the family farmer operating, and the price of food will be reasonable.

Therefore, I would ask the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), who is in the House today, to agree to the position we took in committee and increase the price of domestic wheat from $7 a bushel to $10 a bushel.

In my few remaining minutes, I want to mention that recommendation No. 3 is that when export prices improve again the Canadian Wheat Board should review the $10 a bushel wheat price; in other words, if the price of wheat rises internationally from $3 or $3.50 to $5 or $6, we can review the domestic price with a view to dropping it so the consumer will once again get a break in the price of wheat-based products.

To me, recommendation No. 4 is the most important, and that is that the Government should consider a deficiency payment or combination of deficiency payments and stabilization payments for western Canadian farmers. As I said before, domestic wheat is only about 9 per cent of our production. Another 80 per cent is exported; another 10 per cent or 11 per cent goes into feed grains. With the world price of wheat being so low, I believe the farmers of this country must receive a deficiency payment from the federal Government if they are to survive. Our committee, with five Conservative Members of Parliament, unanimously states that the Government should consider a deficiency payment to the farmers of western Canada.

One might ask what the amount should be. In the United States, the farmers are receiving the equivalent of $25 billion Canadian a year. There are more farmers there and it is a bigger economy. However, what the organizations that represent farmers are stating in this country is that the farmers of Canada should receive $1.5 billion to $2 billion in deficiency payments. I argue that if we can afford to spend, as the Government did last year, $1 billion in bailing out the banks and bank depositors because two banks in Canada collapsed, then surely to goodness we can spend $1.5 billion or $2 billion on a deficiency payment to keep western Canadian farmers in business and on the land. If the farmer is on the land, he or she will be productive, will pay taxes, make a contribution to our society and create jobs.

When the farmer is better off, we are all better off. I know that my friend from Alberta, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) would agree with that. When the farmers are better off, they will be spending money, creating jobs in the towns and cities of Canada for the young people of Canada. When the farmers get another $2 or $3, they spend $5 or $6. When the farmers spend money they stimulate the economy. It is a Canadian-owned enterprise. The federal Government now must come, on behalf of Canadians as a whole, to the benefit of the farmers, and provide a deficiency payment to ensure that farmers stay on the land. In my opinion, that is the most important recommendation we make in the report.

We also make other recommendations by saying, for example, that we must protect the historical production patterns in terms of wheat production in this country. We must also look at mechanisms to protect our wheat-based industries if the higher domestic wheat price makes them less competitive.

We are also saying, as recommendation No. 7, that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should very closely monitor the price of wheat-based products to ensure that there is not undue price escalation, and if the Department identifies unreasonable pricing to the consumer, a public inquiry into the pricing practices of the entire system should be pursued. Many times, the middleman, be it the miller, the processor, the retailer or the wholesaler, will add two or three cents, or five or six cents, or seven or eight cents to the price of a loaf of bread when the price of wheat increases. I maintain that these are unjustifiable price increases. We made a recommendation that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs closely monitor the price of wheat-based products to ensure that that does not occur.

Another very important recommendation we make is that the Government consider the possibility of a refundable low income tax credit for low income consumers. Bread is a basic staple of life. Low-income people eat lots of bread. If the price of bread increases by 4.5 cents or 5 cents or 6 cents or 7 cents a loaf, then there should be a refundable tax credit so low-income people, even if they do not pay taxes, can file an income tax form and receive a tax credit back from the Government, or $100 or $200 from the Government, whatever we calculate the increase in the price of bread to be for the average low-income family.

Finally, I refer to the ninth recommendation, which is that we lead the way as a country, as one of the five great exporting nations of the world, to ensure that this issue becomes one at GATT and to make sure that we negotiate a meaningful grains agreement by which the price of wheat will be based on the cost of production so that the farmer will receive his just return and so that consumer nations on the other side will not be charged excessive prices at certain times in the international wheat cycle.

I close by making an appeal to the Government of Canada to accept the recommendations of the committee. Parliament was generous enough to recognize that there was a problem. A committee was struck from all three Parties. Several tens of thousands of dollars were spent in going around this country and studying the situation. We have now made a recommendation, coming from all three Parties, for an increase in the price of domestic wheat from $7 a bushel to $10 a bushel and for a deficiency payment for western Canadian farmers. I appeal to the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the Minister of Agriculture and the Prime Minister to accept the recommendations that are made in this report.

Mr. Speaker, the situation in Canada is quite dramatic. The average family income in western Canada is about the same as it was in 1930—50 years ago. I hope the Government of Canada will accept the recommendation of the special committee of the House and raise the price of a domestic wheat bushel from $7 to $10, a $3 increase for western Canada families.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Government of Canada will act on our recommendation to consider the advisability of awarding a compensatory payment to western Canada farmers. Mr. Speaker, I know that residents of Montreal, Quebec City, Vancouver and Toronto are prepared to pay a fair price for bread, so a $3 increase for a bushel of wheat means that a 16-ounce loaf of bread will cost 4.5 cents more as a result of rising wheat prices in this country.

[English]

We live in a democratic country, and I hope the Government will accept our recommendations. If it does not, then a great many farmers will go bankrupt, a great many farmers will disappear. Here is a chance to do something about that. What we are saying is that part of the solution must come from the consumers in terms of paying higher prices for wheat-based products such as bread, cereal and pasta. It is the minority part of the solution which comes to the tune of about $220 million. I believe, and the committee did not set a figure on this, that we need a deficiency payment whereby the majority of the money to solve the western Canadian problem in the short term must come from the taxpayers. If we do not do that, farmers will disappear, we will lose traditional wheat markets, and once the international trade war is over our farmers will not have those markets.

I stop my comments here. I make an appeal to Ministers to accept the recommendations which have been made by members of the Conservative Party, by myself and by the Hon. Member for Algoma. If we do this then we can at least keep our farmers on the land for a little while longer, at least until the international grain situation improves, and until we find the real solution to the problem of western Canadian farmers in the international arena.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and ask a question of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). In carrying out his duties on the committee, along with myself and four other Conservative colleagues and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), he did a service to the country in hearing the interests of the producers, the processors, the consumers and those who can be affected by an increase in the domestic wheat price which, in turn, will manifest itself in some modest increase in the price of wheat-based products. The Hon. Member very passionately and properly explained the problems facing Canadian agriculture, in particular the grain sector at the present time, owing to the disastrous effects on world prices as a result of the trade war which is escalating between the European Economic Community and the United States.

This is a situation in which the United States guarantees its producers $4.38 U.S. per bushel, while flooding the world market at the same time with wheat at $2.40 U.S. per bushel. In fact, the American situation is exacerbated by the export bonus programs which are in place with the result that for every two or three bushels of wheat sold under contract an additional bushel can be thrown in free of charge. There are a number of export enhancement and credit programs which are leading the Americans toward infiltrating and getting into grain markets which were traditionally Canadian.

In a rare spirit of unanimity the committee has put forward a number of recommendations. I was concerned that the Liberal member of the committee dissented, insofar as the two-price wheat system is concerned. He preferred not to see an increase in the price of domestic wheat from $7 to $10 per bushel. His answer was the typical Liberal answer. He suggests that the entire solution to the problems facing Canadian farmers is for the Government to come to their rescue. I think the rest of the committee recognized that the two-price wheat proposal is only part of the solution. Members of the committee agreed that once that proposal is implemented the Treasury may indeed have to supplement the two-price benefit. However, I was concerned that all in all the solution put forward by the Hon. Member for Algoma was simply to raid the government Treasury again, to futher mortgage tomorrow in order to pay for today's programs. After all, that is what has placed this country in the economic difficulties in which it finds itself; that is, a national debt of $235 billion, interest charges which consume one out of every three government revenue dollars and one out of every four government expenditure dollars. The level of expenditure on interest on the national debt, if left without taking any reponsible action, any restraint, would result in interest charges consuming the entire federal revenues by the year 2000, with the result that there would be no moneys left for any of the social programs to which Canadians have become accustomed.

Be that as it may, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, in particular, for his recognition of the fact that the consumers in this country should shoulder some of the burden, that the burden of these low world prices should be shared not just by the producer and not just by Government but by—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek, but the Chair wants to assure itself that it is clearly understood that this is a period for questions and comments and that if the Hon. Member has a question that he put it. After all, it is a short period of only 10 minutes.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, thank you for reminding me of that. This is a subject in which I am most interested. That was my comment.

Can the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville confirm my understanding that he feels it is right and proper that the consumers of Canada should shoulder some modest increase in the price of wheat-based products in order to help out a very productive sector of agriculture in this difficult time?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I concur with that analysis. I was somewhat surprised that the Hon. Member for Algoma did not agree with increasing the price of wheat from $7 to $10 per bushel. However, he can speak for himself later on.

I agree that the consumer should pay part of the package in terms of helping western Canadian farmers. As I said before, the two-price wheat proposal has worked to the benefit of the consumer to the tune of $469.5 million since 1967, and to the benefit of the farmer by only $3.1 million. The time has come for the consumer to help the farmer. I think farmers, like everyone else in our society, want to get their money out of the market-place. They do not want subsidies or charity. They do not want hand-outs. They want a fair deal from the market-place in this country, and in the world. The big problem is the world problem. The domestic wheat problem is only 9 per cent of the problem; but it can be part of the solution. The big solution has to be the international one. However, for the time being, I think the consumers of Canada will have to contribute an extra couple of hundred million dollars to the farmers to help them stay on the land.

I remind Hon. Members that when business people put up prices they do that because they want to increase their profits or expand their plants, or whatever. One reason for the price of a car going up is that the wages for people who make the cars go up and so on. I do not quarrel with the fact that we have well paid auto workers. I want them to be well paid. I am a very strong supporter of the new Canadian auto workers union. I hope that they will continue to make good wages so that they can have good standards of living. Of course, when their wages go up the price of a car goes up a bit. So when the wages of a farmer go up, through an increase in the price of a bushel of wheat from $7 to $10, then it is only natural that the price of bread will go up. In a 16-ounce loaf of bread the wheat content on a $3-per-bushel increase amounts to only 4.5 cents. It is only 4.5 cents per loaf for a 16-ounce loaf of bread which we eat in Yorkton. I ask, is 4.5 cents too much to pay to help some farmers stay on the land?

For those reasons I agree with my colleague from Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). I think you can see yourself, Mr. Speaker, that we have agreement here from different sides of the House, from different Parties, different regions and different ideologies. All we need now is for the Government to agree, then we can all go home happy for the summer.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to a $1-billion bail-out of the banks in his remarks. Is the Hon. Member aware that if that exchange of money had not taken place there would have been a great many little people, including farmers, and throughout Alberta, hurt very badly, one to the tune of $325,000? That would have put him out of business completely if the federal Government had not bailed out the banks. As far as the residents of the City of Red Deer are concerned, that so-called bail-out of the banks was worth $50 a citizen to each and every person who lives in the City of Red Deer. Kanata, Ontario, was found in the same position. It was really not a bail-out of the banks; it was a bail-out for a lot of little people across Canada. Does the Hon. Member recognize that?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, of course I could and I checked my rhetoric very closely. I think I referred to both the banks and the depositors; if I did not, that is what I meant to say. Of course much of the money went to international banks that had deposits in the two banks that went under. As well, there were many depositors including people in my riding who had money in those banks.

The point I was trying to make is that if we can make a decision over a weekend to spend $1 billion to help those people in trouble, surely to goodness we can do the same thing for the farmers of western Canada. We could make a tremendous economic contribution to Canada. I think the Hon. Member would probably agree with that.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have a chance to say a few words on the motion for concurrence in the report on the domestic price of wheat moved by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). The committee did a lot of very important work examining the feasibility and benefits of increasing the domestic price of wheat and the impact that would have on agriculture.

At the present time, the domestic price of wheat is about $7. The posted price at Thunder Bay of No. 1 Northern Wheat is something very close to that. However, come July 1 we expect that the international price of wheat will drop. In fact, the initial price posted by the Wheat Board is $3.54. We can see that in the coming crop year, agriculture in western Canada and in the wheat growing areas of eastern Canada is going to face a tremendous drop in income. That was the message we heard most strongly in the West as well as throughout the country.

Agriculture is facing the most serious challenge it has faced since the 1930s. In fact, the price of wheat that we expect in the coming crop year will in real dollars approach the level it was in 1933. It was very appropriate therefore that this committee examine the question of a domestic price of wheat.

A domestic wheat-pricing mechanism has been used throughout the years to provide subsidies to consumers, amounting to something like $469 million. Very little of that has gone to the farmers. Perhaps something in the order of $2 million or $3 million has gone to the farmers, and that information is all contained in the report.

The key issue is that the downturn we will see in wheat prices, as posted by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), of 20 per cent in gross revenues will have a devastating effect on the agricultural community. I do not think anyone can really appreciate how devastating it will be. If the commodity price goes down by 20 per cent, land values will probably go down by 10 per cent. A young farmer who is highly leveraged will not only see his income decrease, but will see his equity decrease as well. The situation is very grim.

I suppose the most distressing part of the situation for Canadian wheat growers is that American commodity producers are receiving deficiency payments which lift their prices from something like $3.50 to about $6.10 per bushel. The European Economic Community farmers in France, Germany and the U.K. are benefiting from similar kinds of support programs. The impact of the world downturn in wheat prices will not be felt as much by them as it will be by Canadian farmers. In fact, one analysis in a Chase Econometrics study which I read suggests that net farm incomes will drop as much as 20 per cent this year across the entire country. We are facing a very difficult problem.

I was quite pleased to note that in eastern cities, most consumer and retail groups seem to be very conscious of what is happening in Canada, particularly to western grain farmers who produce 96 per cent of the wheat, as well as other wheat growers in eastern Canada. These groups seem to be sympathetic to and concerned about this problem.

Let me refer to a couple of recommendations made in the report. One is that Canada continue to pursue in a very active way having agriculture commodity pricing and marketing put on the agenda at the general agreement on tariffs and trade meeting which will be held in Uruguay this fall. Unfortunately, when the Group of 7 heads of Government met in Japan, wheat was not one of the commodities recommended to go to GATT. The seven leaders talked about services, foreign investment and intellectual rights being referred to GATT for negotiation, but bringing farm commodity prices under the general provisions of the GATT arrangement was not recommended. I was pleased to have read a press report yesterday indicating that the European Economic Community is pressing for agriculture commodities to be brought under the GATT.

The committee also heard a lot of testimony indicating that profit levels in the milling industry in particular are very high. We were not able to substantiate that, but a report that was often referred to by witnesses indicated that the profit levels in the milling industry in Canada approached $21 per tonne compared to some $3.50 per tonne in the United States. The committee was concerned about, but was not able to authenticate that charge. It recommended in the report that the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Department do a careful investigation of the milling industry and, if indications of price gouging are found, that a full public inquiry be established by the Government to look into that, and supposedly take action in that regard.

The committee enumerated two solutions for dealing with the farm income problem. One was to increase the domestic price of wheat from $7 to $10. If the Government decides to do that, it will generate some $220 million worth of benefits for farmers. Unfortunately, the total impact on Canadians could be as high as $675 million, because in some sectors the value added is not 100 per cent but is up to 200 per cent. If the domestic price of wheat is increased by $3 per bushel, a 24-ounce loaf of bread will contain 6.5 cents more wheat, but the consumer price will be 13.5 cents higher per loaf. In other commodities the increase would triple rather than double.

Increasing the domestic price of wheat will generate approximately $220 million for Canadian agriculture, but at the same time we will have to pay almost twice that to the millers, the bakers, the distributors and the retail stores. In fact, some groups indicated that when the price of domestic wheat rose by only $1 back in the early spring, it should have resulted in an increase of about 2.2 cents per 24-ounce loaf of bread. Additional costs in the price of grain would double that to around 4.5 cents. In some markets, such as those of the corner stores or smaller towns which do not have the highly competitive situation that exists in supermarkets, the increase was actually in the order of 10 cents or almost double what we were generally told would be the market activity. Although we found that the increase for a 24-ounce loaf was 13.5 cents, in many markets it could have been much higher than that. That solution is one solution, but I personally favour a direct deficiency payment, about which I will talk later this morning.

The repercussions or resulting impacts of the domestic price increase are almost as worrisome as the fact that farmers only receive about a third of the additional costs, while the millers, bakers, and distributors receive two-thirds. If we increase the domestic price by $3, in order to protect our baking industry we would have to provide tariff protection. In many markets we would see wheat-based products flowing into Canada, and I assume we would have to provide tariff protection of at least 13 per cent, 15 per cent, or 20 per cent. At a time when the Government is attempting to negotiate a free trade agreement, I just cannot imagine that it would want to impose a tariff on wheat-based products coming into Canada. However, if the Government does not do that, certainly the pasta industry, the bread industry, and many other baked products industries will have a very difficult time, because the projections for wheat prices this year indicate a possible $6 per bushel difference. If the world price goes down by approximately $4, and our domestic price is $10, we will be looking at a $6 differential and obviously a tariff would be required.

The committee made another recommendation which it thought would be necessary if the domestic price were increased by $3 per bushel. It recommended a refundable tax credit for low-income families. The committee staff has estimated that to cost about $115 million. Therefore, it equals more than half the value which farmers would realize from the $3 increase. That detracts from the desirability of the $3 per bushel increase.

Another concern registered by the committee was that if we increased the domestic price by $3, we would have a drastic change in marketing and production. We have already seen some change this year. For example, last year Ontario produced some 220,000 bushels of hard spring wheat, and this year the projection is that it will be 3 million bushels. Likewise, soft winter wheats have been traditionally produced in Ontario. I am sure southern Alberta, which produces about 33 per cent, would look with great desire upon producing more soft winter wheats because of the differential in price that may go as high as $6 per bushel. I think the committee recognized that, and that if the Government were to use this mechanism it would have to put in place some method of market controls so there would not be drastic distortions.

Also the committee recommended that this should be a short-term proposition. Let us look at the world situation. If the world market price rises, we should lower the domestic price once farmers are receiving an adequate return on their cost of production.

The recommendation which I favour is one that has less repercussion; that is, to move to a straight deficiency payment. The Liberal caucus and the Liberal Party have recommended a payment of some $30 per tonne to reinstate, essentially, the 1985-86 crop year initial prices. We estimated that on the wheat portion this would cost $660 million. I think that amount reconciles with the $750 million or $800 million figures discussed in committee which would be required to re-establish 1985-86 initial prices for western grain. Of course, consumers will pay. If the world price drops to $4, there will be a $3 advantage for which consumers will pay.

When we look at the prospect of a $3 increase, which delivers only $220 million to farmers, it seems to me that a straight deficiency payment would provide three times that amount or some $660 million. That would be much more adequate for wheat production. We would not have to get into the problem of imposing tariffs. We would not have to get into the problems of production and marketing controls among various wheat producing portions of the country. We would not have to get into the question of a refundable tax credit. We would not have to worry about rebates being provided by the Canadian Wheat Board to wheat-based product manufacturers who market their products in the United States. All in all, we would put in place a fairer system, because it would be distributed to all producers, not just those in the No. 1 and No. 2 wheat pools, as would be the case with a strict benefit through the domestic wheat price system.

I hope the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board will be able to announce today a deficiency payment of adequate size. I recommend to him that it be at least $30 per tonne, based upon No. 1 wheat. At least we would then come to grips, in an initial way, with the kind of Herculean demand or problem facing the Canadian wheat producing industry which will have a devastating impact upon western agriculture, especially in this coming year. There will be a smaller impact upon wheat producers in eastern Canada as well. However, since 96 per cent of wheat production is in the West, the impact of the anticipated low prices will be very serious. I hope the Minister will be able to make that announcement today or in the very near future, because we are only five weeks or six away from the start of the new crop year.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—BILL C-119

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the Introduction of Bills, there was, unfortunately, some administrative confusion on our side. We purported to move four Bills but physically had only three. I have discussed this matter with the Deputy opposition House Leader and with representatives of the New Democratic Party. I think that if you were to put this motion to the House, Mr. Speaker, you would find unanimous agreement to withdraw the Western Grain Stabilization Act Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous agreement to withdraw the Western Grain Stabilization Act?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: Earlier proceeding declared null and void.]

PRICING OF DOMESTIC WHEAT AND ITS PRODUCTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nystrom:

That the first report of the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat presented to the House on Thursday, June 5, 1986, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment and then ask a question of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I personally want to commend him for his excellent work on the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat. I was pleased to note that he correctly identified and elaborated on the problems faced by Canadian agriculture and the difficulties in which the Canadian farmer finds himself.

I am concerned though that the Hon. Member dissented to the report which was agreed upon by the rest of the committee. He called for a straight deficiency payment as the sole answer. If I understand the Member correctly, he feels the Canadian consumer, despite the history of the two price wheat system, ought not to shoulder at least some of the burden through perhaps a modest price increase in wheat-based products. The Hon. Member suggests that the answer to this and presumably all other problems is for Government as always to raid the treasury, to borrow more money, to increase the national debt and the interest charges that go with it. Yet this policy and attitude has clearly placed Canada and Canadians in a rather severe economic situation.

I heard earlier the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) state that the benefit of the proposed increase in the domestic wheat price from $7 to $10 a bushel would be something in the order $220 million to Canadian wheat producers. I ask the Hon. Member for Algoma to remember that, according to records of Agriculture Canada and Statistics Canada, the total farm debt outstanding in 1984 was something in the order of $21 billion. A 1 per cent increase in interest rates then could manifest itself in a $210 million additional expense to Canadian agriculture by way of interest costs. Similarly, if deficit reduction measures are successful and lower interest rates result, then there could be a resulting decrease in interest costs. That is surely what responsible deficit reduction measures should be trying to attain.

I know the Hon. Member's concern for agriculture and I know that he would not want to see the Government get into a Catch-22 situation where by rushing forward with payments out of the treasury we would compound the problem by increasing the national debt, and increasing interest costs. This would put upward pressure on interest rates, which in turn would cause the farmers more grief than they already have. I know that calling for a straight deficiency or a stabilization payment has appeal. It is awfully easy and it is simple, but I suggest to Hon. Members that it is also very seductive and highly dangerous. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Algoma, considering the problem and the history of the two-price wheat system, which has helped the consumer in the past, that perhaps now in this time of difficulty for Canadian wheat producers turnabout is fair play and the consumer should bear some part in the solution to this problem. It may well be that the situation will call for deficiency payments as recommended by the committee. Surely the Hon. Member cannot expect the treasury to bear the entire burden of this and every other problem facing our society. Would he elaborate on that please, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that if the domestic price of wheat is maintained at $7, as I would suggest, and the world price drops to $4, consumers will be paying some $220 million in the months ahead—if those projections occur. The net benefit of the $3 increase is $220 million whereas the actual over-all cost to the country is up to $675 million and there is a disproportionate benefit to the millers, bakers, distributors and retailers. On top of that, Mr. Speaker, there is a benefit of $220 million to the farmers, yet at the same time the Government is putting in place a low income refundable tax credit that will cost $115 million, which is more than half of the benefit to the farmers, plus all these other problems of putting in place a tariff and production and marketing controls. As a result, the net benefit to the farmer is low, yet you create all these distortions.

It seems that what we want to do is to deliver in the most efficient way possible as many dollars as possible to the farmer. By raising the domestic price of wheat is one way, and maybe the Government will decide to do it that way. The amount of money paid out to manufacturers, distributors and retailers together, along with the low-income refundable tax credit, will cost something like $785 million, yet the farmer gets only $220 million. That does not seem like a very efficient way to me.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) I assume have to look at the repercussions of imposing a tariff. You do not put on tariffs like that in a minute, but you would have to so to protect the bakery manufacturers. In places like Vancouver, the Washington State manufacturers already have 20 per cent of the market. The pasta people say they will be wiped out because everybody will be shipping Durum wheat to Italy where it will be processed. The European Economic Community will put on variable levies and then there will be the reconciliation benefits as the pasta comes back out. This does not seem to me to be very efficient, when we are trying to provide a substantial benefit to farmers.

I think there was general agreement in the committee that we need to provide a substantial benefit to the farmers. If we go the domestic price increase route then we have a very substantial cost. It provides only about one-third of what is generally discussed as being needed as a basic deficiency payment, and then you have to provide a deficiency payment as well. The distortions and the net benefit to the farmer are so low compared to the straight deficiency payment that it does not seem to me to be a good thing.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Is the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) asking a question, Mr. Speaker? I will concede to her if that is the case.

The Hon. the Government Deputy Whip.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. According to him, it was better to give wheat producers a support payment to help them get through this crisis. As I recall, during the debates of the committee on which I sat we came to the conclusion that the kind of financial assistance the producers need at this time would amount to about $700 million. Chances are we would have to borrow that amount to help them, so if the Government were to go ahead this would only make our debt that much heavier. Otherwise, without a loan, it would have to let the deficit grow, and we know the deficit has an impact on interest rates. Experts have even told us that if interest rates were to go up by 1 per cent, the wheat producers for instance, the very people the committee recommended for help, would have to pay $210 million more as a result of this additional 1 per cent interest. So I wonder whether my colleague would agree that this solution did entail an element of risk?

• (1220)

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that people believe the money used to fund agriculture is borrowed money. How do we know that the borrowed money is not that used to pay for the Prime Minister's trips to New York and France? We cannot identify what the borrowed moneys are used for. In our own minds we decide what our tax money is going to be used for, but in fact it all goes into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The problem facing agriculture is a lot more grave than those facing the two banks that went broke last year, yet, the Government was able to make a decision on that. I do not believe this expenditure is any less deserving than the expenditures we make in other fields of government activity. This is an enormous industry which faces very serious problems. I do not believe we can solve the problem with anything less than a deficiency payment, because the percentage of wheat used for domestic purposes represents less than 10 per cent of the total production. We hope that the issue of trade between the United States and the European Economic Community will be resolved, but if it is not surely we are not going to walk away from the farmers.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, in the course of this debate, I noticed some of our fellow citizens in the visitors' gallery and I want to welcome them to their Parliament and their National Capital. I was delighted to see they were here for this debate. Although not as spectacular as question period, which will start at two o'clock, the subject of this debate has a far greater impact and is far more important to them personally than the proceedings that will start at two o'clock this afternoon.

That is because, Mr. Speaker, this report and the work done by the committee that examined the pricing of domestic wheat, are a perfect example of the principles that should guide this Parliament, our Government and all Members of this House. I am referring to the co-operation and support one part of the country should show another that is experiencing a crisis.

It is true that wheat is consumed across this country, Mr. Speaker, but it is produced, it is mainly grown in Western Canada, and to a lesser extent in Ontario, while less than 1 per cent of our wheat is grown in the other provinces, including Quebec. Mr. Speaker, our wheat growers are in trouble, but the problems they are facing are not of their own making. It is not because wheat growers in Western Canada are not productive enough or made the wrong decisions or did not work hard enough or were not smart enough to cope with and prevent the crisis they are facing today.

No, it is because the world price paid for their wheat has dropped dramatically and probably will drop even more until it reaches a level where they can no longer continue their operations and make a profit as well.

Our special committee, on which I sat as vice-chairman, made its recommendations in this report with a view to protecting Canada's rural economy and our agri-food industry. Although most of our wheat is grown in the West, it is sold to the processors who are located in Central and Eastern Canada. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the jobs in the agri-food industry are in the latter two areas.

Therefore, the purpose of today's debate is to explain to our colleagues in the House and to our fellow citizens that, when examining the pricing of domestic wheat, the special committee was also concerned about the agri-food industry and the consumer. And that, as was explained by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), is because any increase in the domestic price of wheat automatically increases the price of products that contain wheat.

It was our duty to ensure that any solution we proposed to deal with the wheat grower's problems would not harm our agri-food industry, our processors, our manufacturers of wheat-based products and especially the consumer, and there again, especially those Canadians on low incomes who are far more dependent on such products. I am thinking for instance of the various kinds of pasta that make up a large part of the diet of those Canadians who unfortunately are not as well off as many of us in this country.

The challenge to be met by our committee was: to provide an emergency solution for a whole industry that is mainly concentrated in one part of this country, while protecting another industry that is mainly located in another part of the country.

In our report we have tried to deal with this problem. We had to use a mechanism that was already in place, since we did not have time to set up other mechanisms that, as the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) said, and rightly so, might have resolved the problem on an ad hoc basis, without the need for setting up all kinds of controls and monitoring agencies and quota systems to cope with any over-reaction from processors who will have to absorb any increases in the production price and the price of the primary ingredient of their food products.

The existing mechanism was the double price system for wheat, including a domestic price, which the Government of Canada has been able to control over a number of decades. The system has been in existence since 1967, Mr. Speaker. Initially, it was aimed at helping producers who were faced with prices that were far too low on the international market. The two-price system for wheat was also developed and maintained, to help consumers and prevent major increases in the prices of certain food products, such as bread, pasta and other wheat-based products.

This is why, after making an in-depth assessment of the need to retain this two-price system to ensure the survival of wheat producers, especially in Western Canada, but also in part of Ontario, the members of the Committee did decide to maintain this system because it could be used immediately for the 1986-87 crop year which will begin on August 1 in Western Canada.

Second, we were well aware of the fact that the crisis facing Western wheat producers is the result of external factors, namely the enormous subsidies which farmers in Common Market countries in Europe receive from their Governments to sell their wheat at a more than competitive price, which creates inequities on the world market.

The United States, which are also major wheat producers, reacted by introducing a protectionist bill to keep up with the enormous subsidies which exist in Common Market producing countries.

Our wheat exports have given us in the past a standard of living which would not have been possible in Western Canada, or indeed in other regions, but unfortunately, our country relies a lot on exports, much more than other producing countries. We are therefore facing a crisis because our producers rely on the world market to purchase 80 per cent of their production.

As for the remaining 20 per cent, Mr. Speaker, 10 per cent are for human consumption and it is this part of the production that we have had to examine.

When we look at the recommendations contained in this report, we find that it recommends an increase from $7 to $10 a bushel in the domestic price of wheat. What is really unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, is that the $3 a bushel increase will bring only about $180 million at the most, of relief to the wheat producers for whom the crisis means a shortfall in their income of maybe $700 million compared with last year.

The initial price of wheat announced by the the Canadian Wheat Board will mean a shortfall of this magnitude for wheat producers. In our opinion, if we were to avoid causing too much upheaval in the agro-food industry and hitting the consumers too hard, and if we wanted to add controls and safeguards for the consumers, such as when we ask for the assistance of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or suggest a tax credit for the disadvantaged, the maximum increase permissible would bring up the price to $10.

Accordingly, where do we get the difference in losses between the $180 million at the most that can be derived from a serious and responsible increase, and the $700-odd million needed to have them back in a situation similar to that of last year? This is why we also recommended that an extra payment be added to the increase in the price of domestic wheat.

Earlier, my colleague for Algoma (Mr. Foster), in answer to my questions in which I suggested that if we had covered that loss of revenue simply by an added payment, without changing the domestic price for wheat, replied that perhaps hundreds of millions would have to be found. But, finally, could he explain where those hundreds of millions would come from, which would have to be added up to the national debt . . . Could we over-burden the agro-food industry or the farming industry with an increased interest charge that would result from increasing the deficit in order to allow a full added payment without changing the domestic wheat price? We would not know where those additional funds would come from and they could as well be attributed he said . . . for instance, to the expenditures incurred by the Prime Minister's Office. I would suggest to him, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister's Office can only spend within the budget that was approved in the Estimates, and this has nothing to do with the national debt. Moreover, he referred to the western banks which were in difficulty and which the Government chose to help because their depositors were in a critical situation. He said that if the Government had $1 billion to spend helping the Banks, why would it not have $1 billion to help wheat producers?

That argument does not hold, Mr. Speaker, because the Government did not help those banks. What the Government did, and indeed it was a critical situation, it helped depositors, small municipalities, people with small savings, even unions, farmers' unions, even farmers. My colleague for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) gave instances of farmers in his constituency, in his municipality, where everybody would have lost $50 because of the debt the municipality would have been left with had not the Government of Canada helped those depositors. It is therefore twisted logic to suggest that the Government is able to find funds when it wants to. This is not the way things work. And, anyway, perhaps it is because of the approach to the national debt which the previous administration had, and which was supported by the Hon. Member for Algoma that at one time we found ourselves with those interest rates between 22 and 25 per cent that sent our western wheat producers belly-up and which may have sent farmers in his own Ontario constituency belly-up too. Because whenever interest rates increase by one point under the pressure of a growing deficit, an extra $210 million must be paid by wheat producers. And as we very well know for those producers, especially the younger ones with the most productive farms, loans are absolutely essential to remain on top of things, to get the equipment needed for large farms to remain viable, and 22 per cent interest rates are an unacceptable burden to anyone. Not only to wheat producers or farmers generally, but also to homeowners. Just how many of them have lost their properties when interest rates were sky-high during the 1982 crisis?

Mr. Speaker, having considered all these challenges and problems, the Committee has come up with the recommendations which appear in its report.

I, for one, believed that it was really an emergency response to recommend a price increase for wheat from $7 to $10 a bushel. I was personally quite concerned about the consumers, especially the least affluent of them, having to assume an excessive increase. That is why we have this recommendation that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs be empowered to control the increase passed on to consumers.

It is for that reason also, Mr. Speaker, that, as indicated in the Minutes of Proceedings, it was I who moved a motion that the two price wheat policy be temporarily maintained and that it be used to help producers in a crisis situation. However, I had suggested a more modest increase.

Mr. Speaker, in a democratic system, the voice of the majority should prevail whether we agree or not with a proposal. That is why I find that, generally speaking, this report, with its control measures, the monitoring power granted to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, a recommendation to the Government of the day to negotiate a better treaty to support the world price for wheat and make our producers more competitive—was a responsible approach.

That is why I have accepted that my motion calling for a price increase to $8 on January 1, and to $9 next August, be defeated. Mr. Speaker, I have been persuaded that wheat producers needed these $180 million right away, at the end of crop year 1986-87, and that thanks to our monitoring and control measures, we could effectively protect consumers.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that the Government of Canada, my Government, might seriously consider a proposition I made: instead of increasing domestic wheat prices it should impose a business transfer tax on the entire wheat processing industry and set these funds aside for the agri-food sector. This would make it possible to help producers through critical periods, and consumers would pay only for the portion going to the producers.

These are my closing words, Mr. Speaker. I strongly urge the Government to give serious consideration to this mechanism I am proposing, for I think it would be widely accepted by consumers and their associations. I think we should review the two-price system for wheat because, very useful though it may have been in the past, it is no longer adequate to cope with the kind of crises we can expect as a result of all these world market fluctuations.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) who participated throughout in the hearings of the special committee on the pricing of wheat, and who, I think, brought to the committee a very welcome, useful and somewhat different perspective.

She will recall the suggestion by one of our colleagues, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Shellenberger), that consideration be given to the imposition of some sort of a levy or tariff at or near the point of retail sale on wheat based products, with the idea that that levy could be captured intact and somehow a mechanism be devised to return the entire benefit of that levy back to the producer of the particular commodity. In this particular case it is wheat.

Certainly at first blush the suggestion by our colleague has considerable merit. I know that it was raised from time to time during the hearings and I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to give her reaction and comment to that proposal.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to comment on this. Yes, it was a rather imaginative suggestion from our colleague.

[English]

As my colleague from Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) knows there were a few drawbacks to the suggestions made by our colleague. One of them was that the emergency was staring us in the face. We had to have some help for our wheat producers for the 1st of August. The tariff or tax that our colleague was suggesting, although it did have some equity features and various other aspects which would have solved a lot of the problems, could not be put in place immediately.

Therefore, it was very difficult for us to want to rely on such a recommendation when we did not know exactly how this mechanism was going to work. That was one of the drawbacks.

A second drawback was the fact that it would be a tax on food. We do not have a tax on food in this country, and there is something a little abhorrent about taxing food. We find that having to pay a tax when we go to a restaurant is not very pleasing, but to put it on food, and particularly on bread and pasta, which is consumed in the major part by the poorer people in our society, was something we were uneasy with.

There was also a third drawback, and that was when we consulted some of the Finance Department officials about it. They pointed out to us the difficulty of implementing such a tax or a tariff because of the fact that it would be based on the wheat content in the products. There would not be a tax on the wheat itself, it would be on the product that was derived from the wheat. Therefore, how would you define which product would be taxed and which product would not? That was one problem.

Another problem was that it would be at the retail level. Since bread is sold in hundreds and hundreds of small stores, the idea of every one of these little family corner stores having to amend and modify its cash register in order to have to collect this tax on some items, and maybe not on others, presented some difficulties.

It did have advantages. As a matter of fact, in our report we mention that we realize that using the domestic price of wheat to help the wheat producers was an emergency situation, and we should look at other ways of generating some funds so that we can help producers when they are in a crisis situation.

One of the things that was suggested was that we look at various mechanisms which would permit the raising of funds from the middle people, the manufacturers, and make sure that, whatever the price of wheat is, the benefits of any increase that would go towards the price of wheat would be given to the producer.

Therefore, I think that if the Government of Canada accepts our report it will be looking at the mechanism that was suggested by our colleague and would then be able to see whether we can overcome the drawbacks that I have mentioned.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this concurrence motion. The committee faced a difficult task in looking into the problems of the two-price system for domestic wheat. It became obvious that the question of increasing the price of domestic wheat was more complex than originally thought and needed to be considered very carefully.

While it is the Government's responsibility to decide whether it will accept these recommendations, particularly the two-price recommendation of $10 per bushel for domestic wheat, it should recognize a number of valuable points raised in the report.

First, the report may have increased the awareness of other parts of Canada, other than the wheat-producing areas of the Prairies and Ontario, about the problem facing grain producers and the need for more cash flow in farming generally.

The recommendation of $10 per bushel was clearly recognized as not being a solution, but simply a means of adding a little extra to the coffers of the wheat producers.

Since this recommendation somewhat ignores the total problem of cash flow, the committee went on to suggest that while this may help, there will still be a deficiency for grain producers as far as cash flow is concerned.

Since we use only some 10 per cent of the wheat we produce, this recommendation would add some 35 per cent to the price of perhaps 1 or 2 per cent of the total grain produced. This does not represent a bail-out of farmers across the country.

The report also recommends deficiency payments for grain producers which may ultimately be the most effective and worth-while of all the recommendations. The report recognizes the effect that increasing the price of domestic wheat may have on low income consumers and suggests that the Government should protect them from large increases, if it accepts the recommendation.

The report also warned against the danger of increasing the cost of wheat products which may have to compete against imported products and recommended that the Government ensure that this did not happen.

It is obvious that the committee did a very thorough job in not only looking at the problem of cash flow, which was its particular mandate, but looking at other problems which arose as part of the whole approach.

The greatest value of this report, apart from its recommendations which are now before the Government, is possibly the fact that it will make the rest of the country aware of the need to do something about the cash flow of grain producers so they may continue to operate even with the current low price for grain?

The Government will have to consider several alternatives to inceasing the domestic price of wheat. One of the alternatives suggested in the report is deficiency payments. Some action has already been taken with respect to the cost of production, an area in which the Government can possibly do more if it decides to increase domestic payments. The Government has taken steps with respect to the price of farm fuel and has removed the federal tax on both diesel and regular fuel to the point where the tax is only a fraction of a cent per litre. Fertilizer is a major cost to wheat farmers, and while its price has decreased somewhat, it is only because the farmers have not bought as much fertilizer. The price of fertilizer has not even been affected by the reduction in the world price of oil. This is an area in which the Government could take action.

The Government has not taken steps to reduce the input costs to farmers, such as the cost of chemicals, and therefore reduce the requirement for large deficiency payments. If the cost of production can be reduced by a few dollars per acre, the requirement for bringing deficiency payments up to the cost of production will not be so great.

I hope the Government is prepared to produce its debt review structure for which we have been waiting. Such a mechanism would not particularly increase the income of farmers, but it would help them to remain in business. We hope this debt review structure will have the authority to force creditors to recognize that there is a problem and farmers must be given the opportunity to recuperate from the disasters of the low price of grain.

The farmers are carrying a $28 billion debt and, much like the situation faced by the Government, much of their cash flow is used to service the interest on that $28 billion debt. Maybe that is a good place for the Government to start. Maybe we should be eliminating, as far as possible during these times of low commodities, the cost of servicing that debt.

The Government has also taken some action, at least, in freezing the cost of transportation, which has become another major factor over the last few years, in delivering grain to the world market. But most of all, I suppose what the Government must do, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) expressed it a few weeks ago, is to try to break the cycle of subsidies that are being paid in other countries and to put the structure of the sale of farm products, particularly grain, much closer to the cost of production level than is presently happening, with the U.S. and the European Common Market subsidizing as much as 70 per cent of the cost of production.

I must also express my concern that the Government has not consistently placed before the agricultural community a policy which indicates that it is really serious about making it possible for the farmers to stay on their farms. In fact, just last week, the Deputy Minister suggested that the main policy approach of the Government of Canada must be the elimination—although I am sure he did not use that word—of 20 per cent of the farmers during the next few years, and to help ease the pain of getting those farmers off the land. It would be interesting to know if this is the basic policy that the Government is accepting, that it has moved away from the protection of the family farm and is now finding methods of getting 20 per cent or more of the farmers off the land, into the transition program and, consequently, no longer producing. However, I would point out to the Government in this case that, farmers being what they are, eliminating a certain portion of the farmers from the structure will not solve the problem, because the farmers who take over the land will produce grain on the same land and if they cannot receive cost of production, they will not survive very long. We will still be facing exactly the same problem as we do now in the pricing of grain.

As in the past, we again call on the Government, even as it considers these recommendations and makes decisions as to how they will be implemented,to take a global look at agriculture and the possibility of establishing some kind of parity pricing, which would mean that in all of the agricultural areas, all of the commodity producers could look forward to a price which would at least give them the cost of production. In cases of emergency, that cost of production does not need to be much higher than exactly the basis of the input plus the cost of the land, in some kind of a capacity so that a large portion of the farmers can survive.

The Farm Credit Corporation told us just yesterday that it feels that 22 per cent of farmers across the country are in some kind of financial difficulty and that as many as 6,000 people to whom it has lent money are no longer able to make any payments on their debt and that 2,000 of them are beyond saving. That situation is growing. If it is that bad now, it will be worse by the fall. In the grain-producing part of the country, with prices going down on August 1, we can expect a fairly major increase in the percentage of farmers who will be looking someplace else to make a living.

Although I am not wildly supportive of increasing the price of domestic wheat to $10, I think that if it is the only direction we can go, then we must accept it, with all the problems that are there; but there are other ways of doing it, and I hope that the Government will look at them. The main one, also a recommendation of the committee, is that the Government recognize the need for deficiency payments to increase the cash flow. There should be recognition that a very small portion of our total grain production would be affected by increasing the domestic price of wheat and, consequently, going through the process of protecting the low-income consumer and ensuring that our wheat products are still competitive in the world against the exports that we will have to face, may make it much easier for the Government to say, "Let us establish a deficiency payment level, put that in place, and not worry about the domestic price of wheat". In the process, not only would the wheat producers be helped a little bit, but it would help all grain producers quite a lot. That would be a solution recognized by the committee, but it would not have the real, inherent problems with which the Government would have to deal if it were to accept the recommendation of two-price wheat or the domestic wheat price at $10 a bushel.

I hope that the Government takes a good look at the report and then recognizes that there are other ways of dealing with the problem, ways which are less difficult and more likely to solve the numerous problems faced by farmers, not only those in the grain area, but also those involving most of the commodities that are today much lower in price than the cost of production.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). The Hon. Member was not part of the committee on the pricing of domestic wheat, but I know him to be a farmer and certainly to understand the problems of agriculture. While he recognizes the limitations inherent in any suggestion of raising the price of domestic wheat, he does appear to support that notion in principle and also, I think, finds favour with the fourth recommendation the committee made, that is, the unanimous recommendation that the Government give consideration to a deficiency and/or stabilization payment for the crop year beginning August 1, 1986.

One of our colleagues in the House, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), has in the past brought forward a suggestion that consideration be given to some sort of tariff or levy on groceries, in essence, that stem from agricultural production. He suggested that such a levy be placed at or near the point of retail sale with the idea that if that levy could be captured and returned back to the producer, to the grower of the produce, in this case wheat, it might be a more efficient and better way to deliver a benefit from the consumer back to the producer. It is true that some people might call that a tax or a levy on food, but there are many, many other taxes and levies which impact on the cost of food all through the chain. Is the Hon. Member aware of this suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin concerning the notion of a tariff or a levy? Does it find any favour with him?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I have to agree with the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) who spoke on this subject earlier. I, too, have a natural abhorrence to adding a tax on to the products which come from wheat, and that it is what it would be seen to be. In fact, it would be a continuous reminder, possibly a negative one, that we have a real problem in buying and using our own grain. I would rather suggest that a recommendation be made along the lines of the statement made by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) in committee not long ago. He suggested that there must be some way of putting up the domestic price of wheat while not having it multiply as it goes through the chain. From my reading of the report I know that the committee looked at that possibility. It seems to me that the mechanics of keeping the price down as it goes through the chain from miller to processor to baker and to retailer would be easier to accomplish than the collection of tax would be, although it would require a structure which some people would find abhorrent.

My short answer to the Hon. Member's question is that I can see the value in such a system in terms of getting the extra money into the operation. However, I think it would be doing something which all of us have avoided doing as much as possible for the last many years.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate concerning the report of the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat and Its Products. This is a committee which was formed as a result of a Private Member's Motion moved on December 13 of last year to the effect that a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a Bill with the objective of providing higher returns for wheat producers from wheat sales for human consumption in the domestic market-place while avoiding undue hardship to processors, consumers and other wheat users.

In moving such a motion last December I made reference to the farm income crisis facing Saskatchewan and Canadian agriculture, with particular reference to the grain farmer. Some 80 per cent of the Canadian wheat crop is marketed internationally, which accounts for much of Canada's favourable balance of trade in agriculture. The remaining 20 per cent of Canadian production is used domestically, with approximately half of it going toward animal feed and the other half finding its way into wheat-based products for human consumption. Unfortunately, record world wheat crops have increased carry-over stocks, depressed prices and lowered expected volume. I would like to give some background with particular reference to my Province of Saskatchewan where there are some 66,000 farmers.

The average farm size is about 1,000 acres. The average capital investment is $480 per acre. In 1984 the average net income per farm was $15,000. For the year 1985, according to figures provided by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, after deducting operating expenses and depreciation, the average realized net income for each one of those farms was something in the order of $5,500. From that sum of $5,500 the farm family has to find room to make payments on the principal on loans, to meet all of its other expenses, including living expenses, food, clothing, utilities and so on. This sum of $5,500 represents the farmer's labour, as well as his return on a capital investment of some $500,000. Since those comments were put forward last December, the situation has deteriorated considerably.

The initial price of wheat announced for the forthcoming crop year, 1986-87, which commences August 1, is 81 cents per bushel less than last year. It was against that backdrop that the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat and Its Products was finally formed in the month of March, with a mandate to conduct hearings on the domestic wheat price and also on parity pricing.

The committee was heartened, I believe, by the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that the range under which domestic wheat would be priced would be increased from the existing $5 to $7 range per bushel to a range of between a minimum of $6 and a maximum of $11 per bushel. In doing this I believe that the Prime Minister signalled to wheat producers and to committee members that he was prepared to take a serious look at the domestic wheat pricing situation. The seven-member committee heard representations and received presentations from interested groups representing all of the players: the consumers, the processors and the wheat growers. These hearings were conducted in cities across the country and here in Ottawa.

Basically, three alternatives presented themselves to the committee. The first was simply to maintain the current domestic wheat price of $7 per bushel. I believe that that was found to be unacceptable because Canadian wheat producers, while perhaps being the most efficient in the world, cannot fight the combined treasuries of western Europe and the United States which are subsidizing their producers to the hilt.

It is not accpetable to suggest that increased returns to farmers should come entirely out of the federal Treasury. It should come as a surprise to no one that there was a minority, a partial minority, opinion put forward by the Liberal member of the committee. His suggestion was simply that Government make payments directly to the farmers out of the federal Treasury. I am not surprised at that because, after all, deficits are nothing new to members of that Party. Deficit-financing was, and appears to remain, that Party's answer to everything. It seems to think that we should mortgage tomorrow to pay for today's programs. It says: never pay today what you can refinance tomorrow, and continue to roll the debt over and let someone else worry about it down the road.

The idea of making a deficiency or a subsidy payment directly to farmers out of the federal Treasury is an interesting one. It is easy and it is simple. I said earlier that it is rather seductive and dangerous because the federal deficit today, with the combined excesses of the past, comes to some $235 billion. The carrying charges on that deficit are in the area of $25 billion to $28 billion per year. Thus, one out of every four government expenditure dollars goes to service that debt, and one out of every three revenue dollars gathered by Government today pays interest on the debt. In fact, without the interest charges on the national debt the Government is very close to balancing the books, even in the face of historically low wheat and oil prices.

To his credit the member of the New Democratic Party who sat on the committee recognized that the consumer is part of the equation and ought to bear some of the impact of the effect of the world grain subsidy wars on Canadian producers along with the farmers and the Government. He recognizes that the problem with borrowing to finance all that is required to assist agriculture at this time puts the Government and indeed all of us in a classic catch-22 situation. Each time the Government resorts to the Treasury or borrows more money, upward pressure is put on interest rates. Interest rates, of course, are the price of money and reflect the supply and demand. They tend to move upwards when there is demand for it. If the Government borrows more, there is a crowding out effect and the competition for money increases, with the result that interest rates rise.

I should point out that back in 1984, Canadian farm debt in the aggregate was estimated to be some $21 billion. No doubt that figure has increased since that time. A 1 per cent increase in the interest rate on a debt of $21 billion plus comes to something in the order of $210 million. That sum is roughly equivalent to the amount of benefit to grain producers that an increase in the domestic wheat price of $3 would provide. In other words, a 1 per cent interest rate increase across the board would pretty well cancel out the benefit of an increase in the domestic wheat price from $7 to $10. Clearly it is unacceptable to resort to the Treasury as the entire answer.

The second alternative with which the committee was faced was to increase the domestic wheat price. Increasing the domestic wheat price is, I believe, a vote of confidence in the concept of two-price wheat, a concept which has been in effect in Canada for many years. The basic premise of it is that a price range is set within which domestic wheat can fluctuate up and down depending on conditions and circumstances. When world wheat prices are high, the domestic wheat price would be fixed at or near the bottom of the range so as to protect Canadian consumers against unusually high prices. Conversely, when world wheat prices are low, as it appears they will be for the foreseeable future and particularly for the crop year commencing August 1, the domestic wheat price should be fixed at or near the top of the range so as to provide some measure of assistance to Candian grain farmers who face unreasonable foreign subsidization.

While the negative impact on prices of wheat-based products was observed by the committee, the advantages to an increase in the domestic wheat price far outweigh any down side. The two-price wheat system is well known, is established and has worked reasonably well in the past. Second, it produces a transfer of funds to the wheat producer at the lowest possible administrative cost. Third, and very important, it provides flexibility to respond within a stated range to changes in world price conditions. The domestic wheat price can move up and down in inverse relationship to the world price. Fourth, as I mentioned earlier, the announcement made by the Prime Minister gives some hope to producers that the Government is cognizant of the problems they face and that within the limitations inherent in the two-price wheat system, some adjustments can be made.

The third alternative facing the committee was to consider replacing the two-price wheat policy. The committee listened to many points of view and heard some suggestions that the Government should fund the entire program. Some suggested that the Government should get rid of the two-price system altogether leaving us with just one price, the world price. The committee heard suggestions that the Government should consider some sort of levy or tariff at the point of sale, and indeed, at first blush, the suggestion of a tariff or levy on agricultural-based products at or near the point of retail sale does have some appeal. Such a system could theoretically minimize the impact of a wheat price increase being built on over and over again in the food-chain between the farm gate and the supermarket shelf.

How nice it would be if it were possible to capture a levy at a point of sale and return it intact to the farm sector. Unfortunately, as has been pointed out earlier in debate, there are a number of pitfalls which attach to the food levy concept. First and most compelling is the notion that this would be construed as a food tax. I think that notion has been found to be distasteful to the majority of Canadians. Second, and this is an important factor as well, the administrative mechanism required to put forward such a program promises to be exremely expensive. We were advised informally that such a mechanism might cost something in the order of $100 million to establish and run. Clearly Canada does not need another bureaucracy which could so dissipate the benefits of any such levy or tariff.

At present, there is certainly no mechanism in place nor any intention to impose a system whereby a tariff or levy could be imposed on the sale of agricultural-based products at or near retail sale. Such a mechanism would require a considerable lead time to establish and certainly would not be available to respond to the problems of today even if the philosophy or principle behind it found favour with the committee and the House. The symbolism involved in a levy on food is, I think, such that it would certainly require all-Party consent before such a levy would be put forward. Clearly I think there is no suggestion of that and indeed no enthusiasm from any source concerning it.

We have been considering all of the alternatives and emphasizing the one constant theme that we heard throughout the hearings, which is the inadequate return to wheat producers. This theme was repeated time and time again, not only by farmers and farm groups but also by consumers, processors and other wheat users. It became obvious that the committee must find a way to lend assistance to this sector of Canadian agriculture. The subsidization of the Common Agricultural Policy of the European Economic Community is now being met head-on by the Americans who are determined to retain their traditional market shares. In fact, the Americans are entering into markets which had been traditionally Canadian. It is essential that all means of enhancing and improving returns to wheat producers be retained. Therefore, the committee made a series of recommendations.

The first recommendation was that the current two-price wheat policy be retained. The second was that the domestic wheat price be increased to $10 per bushel. This, incidentally, should manifest itself, if adopted, in an increase of approximately 25 cents per bushel across the Canadian Wheat Board area and something in excess of that in the Ontario area. It was also suggested that if this is implemented, it should certainly be reviewed and monitored from time to time. This is important because it should be understood that this recommendation is of an interim nature. If Canadian grain farmers were receiving $6 per bushel today, there would be no need for a domestic wheat price increase or for a domestic wheat policy because all involved in the process would be most pleased.

The fourth recommendation, and the important one put forward by the committee, was that the Government give consideration to a deficiency or stabilization payment for the forthcoming crop year. In dealing with this recommendation, it is important to note that some farmers may be beyond help. Rightly or wrongly, some farmers bought assets at the wrong time and may have outbid others for land and cannot now expect the prudent ones to save them.

This recommendation is not a cure-all and it is certainly not a panacea. The Government cannot and indeed ought not try to devise schemes to prevent all farm failures. Some farmers will fail as will some small business people and some professionals. The Government is not in a position to guarantee everyone's success or to put forward a freedom from failure policy.

Considering the compelling situation facing Canadian agriculture, I believe that the Government must make a reasoned and measured response in the face of these difficult world conditions to assist Canadian agriculture to survive over the next several years and to give efficient young operators a fighting chance to succeed in the future.

In my travels I detected that producers do not expect miracles. They do not expect Government to cure all their problems, problems which they recognize are not the making of the Government or the making of Canadian agriculture. I also detect that producers would be satisfied if their returns for the forthcoming crop year, for the 1986-87 crop year, were equal to what they will receive for the current crop year, the 1985-86 crop year. That would be my personal suggestion to the House.

In saying this, I recognize that at this time it is simply too soon to determine what support would be necessary because world wheat stocks, while they are large, could certainly disappear in a hurry, and that has happened in the past. To make an early panic payment for political expediency would not serve the country well. If in fact part way through the next crop year prices have materially improved, the need for Government involvement would certainly be lessened or in fact could disappear.

The point is that we are talking about a crop year which has not yet begun, the crop year that will begin on August 1. In the meantime, farmers can rest assured that the Government understands the problems of agriculture and is indeed sympathetic to them.

Concerns were raised with the committee about possible change in production patterns motivated by the increase in the domestic wheat price. Therefore, the committee suggests that the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) try to ensure that the two-price wheat policy continue to reflect historic market share. In other words, if 95 per cent has previously gone to the Canadian Wheat Board area and 5 per cent elsewhere, then the benefits should continue to be so allocated regardless of any changes in regional volume.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that my time is almost up. I should like to conclude by saying that the establishment of the two-price wheat committee is consistent with a long line of initiatives which have been put forward by the Government, by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and by the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board. It must be noted that the recommendation to increase the price of wheat domestically from $7 to $10 per bushel is a partial response. If conditions continue and unfold as projected, clearly that increase in domestic wheat price, if it comes about, will not be enough. If these future forecasts prove correct, clearly more action is necessary—consequently, the fourth recommendation concerning the deficiency or stabilization payment. Indeed, we have commitments from the involved Ministers that the Government will continue its support of agriculture.

The report of the Special Committee on the Pricing of Domestic Wheat means many things. Should Government act on it, it will mean more for the farmer, as I mentioned earlier. It will mean marginally higher prices to the consumers of wheat-based products. I trust they will recognize that this is an interim and urgent measure designed as a response to the crisis in which Canadian farmers find themselves. The report noted that the pricing regime intended to prevent undue increases to consumers. There was a stated intention to prevent regional dislocation. Also the report recognizes that the two-price wheat system is not an entire answer but rather part of the solution, and certainly the Government Treasury is not the entire answer. As well, the report emphasizes the importance of trade negotiations both through GATT and through the pursuit of an international grain agreement.

Finally, I should like to say that I think it represents a bit of a triumph in terms of parliamentary process and parliamentary reform, in that a Private Member can put forward a motion with some expectation that something may come of it. In terms of that process, we have been able to follow a Private Member's Bill which in turn has manifested itself in a special committee, which in turn has been constituted to travel the country and has been in a position to formulate a report to the House. That process indicates that Private Members can have meaningful input, input which can and does influence government policy.

I see that my time has come to an end. I thank the House for providing me with that time.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). It will not surprise any of us that in a very masterful way, of which he is capable, he has presented to the House the considerations presented before the parliamentary committee which produced the report on the pricing of domestic wheat. I was particularly interested in listening to what he had to say on the subject of alternatives which were considered by the committee, in light of the fact that the recommendation is an increase from $7 to $10 per bushel in the price of domestic wheat.

The Hon. Member indicated that this recommendation was a partial response, thinking in terms of the global situation and what the Americans and the Common Market are up to. It is also a partial response in terms of the domestic situation. My abiding concern with the recommendation is that it is a 10 per cent solution for a 100 per cent problem. The amount of wheat being produced in Canada which goes on to the domestic market is but a small fraction of the total production. Therefore, this increase to $10 per bushel in the domestic wheat price will only have a limited and partial effect.

The Government is committed to ensuring that wheat producers or farmers are able to carry on and obtain some return for a fundamentally important activity. The wheat farmers are one of at least four groups in the chain. As well there are the processors, the retailers, and the consumers.

I have read in the report the concerns outlined by the processors about a counter-productive step being taken if we go to a $10 per bushel price. I have also heard talk that the high domestic price would result in significant price increases to consumers, increased imports, and a decline in the entire sector, ultimately resulting in a small and less stable domestic market for Canadian agricultural production

The situation affecting producers is one in which I have particular interest. The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek spoke of the producers or farmers in his locale. In Etobicoke—Lakeshore, for example, we have Christie bakeries. Everyone knows "Mr. Christie, you bake good cookies". Christie Brown & Co., which makes cookies and crackers, is the largest cookie and cracker manufacturer in Canada. The President of the company, Mr. R. J. Verdun, indicated the following:

> I appreciate the plight of the wheat farmer. I don't appreciate the logic of undercutting the competitiveness of Canadian producers which can't be in the farmers' long-term best interest in lieu of simply providing temporary deficiency payments to farmers.

I have also spoken at length with the plant manager at Christie Brown which has 800 employees and is looking at significant lay-offs because of biscuits and cookies which are being produced with lower-priced American and European wheat flour. Manufacturers abroad are able to produce products which are coming into Canada at a much lower price, and our market is very seriously challenged.

Morrison Lamothe Inc. is one of many such companies in my riding. Its president, Mrs. Grete Hale, pointed out the following:

> We are in the specialty bakery business and the present retail prices of our products will have to rise by 10 per cent to 13 per cent.

That is, given the proposal to go to $10 per bushel. She continued:

> Such substantial increase as it occurs in such instance will cause a decline in consumption because of higher cost to the consumer and eventually a reduction of employment.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am becoming concerned that I may not have a chance to respond to the excellent points being raised by the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): So is the Chair. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) would like to wind up.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to come to a quick conclusion. I have heard at great length from Local 426 of the Bakery, Confection and Tobacco Workers International Union. In short, theirs is a concern that was clearly described in the committee report.

In the Hon. Member's view, does the recommendation adequately respond to the concern of the processors, the bakers, those who work in the bakeries, because the processors do represent one important part of the chain? Does the Hon. Member not agree that what is very important ultimately is fairness throughout the chain?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to the position put so eloquently by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) who represents, I am sure, the consumer and the processing end of the equation. It is very important that we hear from someone with that sort of constituency in the debate today. Too often there is the possibility that we hear from one side only. Thus far we have heard from those who are most sympathetic to the position of the grain farmer.

Indeed, there is a good deal of truth to what my colleague has put forward. This is a partial solution. Indeed, it is a 10 per cent solution. Clearly, as the quote from the Christie representative indicates, there is a general recognition across Canada of the plight of the grain farmer against an impossible back-drop of international price subsidization. There is a world wheat war going on and the Canadian producer finds himself on the sidelines watching. In fairness, we cannot stand by and watch that happen.

Through the workings of the two price wheat system, from time to time there have been benefits passing from the Canadian wheat producer to the consumer through that system. I am suggesting to the Hon. Member that that turnabout is fair play. This is a time I believe in our history when the producer is up against it and, therefore, it is quite right and proper that there be a transfer, if you like, from the consumer to the producer through the two-price wheat system.

I also recogize the concerns which the Hon. Member expresses with regard to the processors. One of the great regrets I personally had in participating in the domestic wheat hearings was the compressed amount of time and the inability to be able to question in depth the representatives of the processors. We were told that in addition to the wheat flour cost component in bread, the bakers, for example, would want to add another 60 per cent on top of that to the ultimate pricing of bread. They stated that this was for such things as returned products, production waste, selling commissions, discounts and so on. As I mentioned, it is regrettable that the time available to the committee did not permit closer examination of these claims and the opportunity to question industry representatives thereon. In any event, accepting their figures and current pricing methods, it appears that an increase in the domestic wheat price as suggested could manifest itself into an increase on a 16 ounce loaf of bread of perhaps 7 cents and on a 24 ounce loaf of bread of perhaps 10 cents. Similar mark-up activities would take place on other wheat-based products.

The committee was aware of the problems expressed, and it is a case of trying to work out a fair and equitable solution for all Canadians. I have every confidence that the Ministers involved and the Cabinet will accept the report, examine it and come forward with the appropriate recommendation. I note that the Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board is in the House. I believe he wishes in the remaining time available to respond on debate. I am, therefore, prepared to concede the floor to him.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would it be possible to ask one short question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes, if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Towers) to ask a short question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) for the effort he has put forth. During the hearing, was there any discussion that the actual amount of flour going into a loaf of bread would mean an increase in the cost of the loaf of bread of only 4.5 cents if the bushel of wheat were raised by $3? Most of the processors say the price will increase 15 per cent, when in actual fact it will be less than 4 per cent as far as the extra cost of the flour is concerned.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question put by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), I think I can tell him that for each $1 per bushel increase in the domestic wheat price, the impact on the wheat flour component in a loaf of bread is 1.5 cents on a 16 ounze loaf, but bread in Canada is packaged in different ways. In western Canada it is generally, I am told, in 16 ounce loaves. In the east, it is 24 ounce loaves. For each $1 increase per bushel in the domestic wheat price you would see a 1.5 cent increase in the wheat flour component on a 16 ounce loaf and a 2.25 cent increase in the pricing of a 24 ounce loaf. If you are talking about an increase from $7 to $10 a bushel, this could manifest itself in about a 4.5 cent increase in the wheat flour component of a 16 ounce loaf of bread and about 6.75 cents or 7 cents in the pricing of a 24 ounce loaf.

In addition to that, the processors indicated there were other items such as selling commissions, returns, discounts, production waste and other things. I, for one, would be interested in pursuing that further to learn more about how these things are structured and why they would have to increase proportionately with any increase in the domestic wheat price.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, first I want to pay tribute to the committee. As everybody knows, the committee did a very good job. On reading its report and seeing the work that went into it and the information provided, you cannot help but congratulate the Members who served, especially when you consider the amount of time the committee was given to perform its task. Let me mention the members of the committee: the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), Chairman; the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), Vice-Chairman; the Hon. Member for Huron—Bruce (Mr. Cardiff); the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig); the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom); and the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). They all deserve some thanks and gratitude.

It is interesting to note that the Hon. Member who just spoke pointed out that this was an interesting committee and report. It effectively made use of one of the new House rules for the first time that allows a private Member to bring forward a motion, have it proceed, with the potential that it could end up as a Bill to influence what goes on. There have been some changes in the House in the way the place operates. When you see the results, it is a step in the right direction in having this place function and perform in the way the people who sent us here expect it and in many ways have a right to expect it.

In my remarks I would like to do two or three things if time permits. The first is to give some perspective on Canada's position as a wheat producer. About 500 million tonnes of wheat are produced in the world every year. Of that, Canada produces between 4 and 5 per cent. Our production over the last number of years has varied between 20 million and 25 million tonnes. That is not a lot of wheat when you think about it. We like to think that western Canada is the bread basket, but those figures put that in a different perspective. The amount of wheat that we trade is much more significant. About 100 million tonnes of wheat are traded in the world every year. Of that amount, Canada contributes up to 20 per cent. We are, therefore, much more significant in terms of trade than in terms of total production. That is one of the reasons we find ourselves in considerable difficulty with regard to prices.

Due to our soil, climate and efficiency, I believe that Canadian producers are as efficient as producers anywhere in the world. We are not being hurt because we are inefficient but because of circumstances outside of normal market forces. I am referring to the subsidies in the European Economic Community and, to a lesser extent and more recently, in the United States. As an illustration, Europe used to be a major customer of Canadian wheat growers in particular. In the last 20 years Europe has moved from being a major customer of ours to being a major competitor. In fact, two years ago the European community exported more wheat than did Canada. That is very interesting to note.

In 1984-85, Canada exported 16.9 million tonnes and the European Economic Community exported 18.5 million tonnes. Europe has become a major exporter of wheat almost totally through subsidies. The subsidy on a tonne of wheat moving out of the European community on to international markets is now around $120. Our initial prices are now $160 a tonne and will move to $130 on August 1. That says something about the subsidies which we face on international wheat markets.

We do not think that we, as a country, have much business telling the European community what to do internally. What they do and how they pay their producers is their business. However, we think it is legitimate for us to be interested in the subsidies they provide as they move on to international markets. We are very concerned about the subsidies the Europeans are providing because they very much affect our producers and the international markets on which our producers have to compete.

The Americans are also very concerned. They feel they have lost their world market share because of the Europeans and their subsidies. At the beginning of this year the Americans stepped in with the U.S. Farm Bill. The Americans have lowered prices in order to get back the world market share they believe they have lost. From our point of view that is a questionable assumption on their part. We do not think they have lost nearly as much market share as they say they have. They believe that through large subsidies on the international markets, which have the effect of lowering prices, they can regain some of the market share they have lost. We do not think that will work. We think that there is more to being a good supplier than simply having a low price. You must have consistency of supply.

Canada has a very good reputation internationally. We have never embargoed any country on grain sales. That has resulted in Canada gaining the reputation of being a reliable supplier. We have very good quality grain. We have a first-class inspection and grading service in the Canada Grain Commission, which serves us very well internationally and allows us to maintain our reputation. We also have a selling system in the form of the Canadian Wheat Board which serves us very well in times like this. We presently have long-term agreements with the Soviet Union, Brazil and Egypt. There is no country which has longer term agreements than does Canada. That speaks to our reputation and our ability to continue to sell.

We do not think the Americans will get back their market share by simply lowering prices. The Americans are very concerned about their balance of payments and the fact that they are consistently running very large deficits. They want to sell more grain to reduce that. However, they will not rectify the situation by selling the same amount of grain at a lower price. In fact, that will make things worse.

We think that a couple of the assumptions which underlie the U.S. Farm Bill are fallacious. They assume that by reducing price they will increase demand. That is not borne out by fact. The BICEP program in the United States has been in effect for over a year. The record shows that prices have gone down, but the Americans have not increased their market share.

We also question the assumption that if you reduce prices to producers they will produce less, thereby addressing the oversupply problem. In many cases the normal reaction to lower prices is to produce more. If you are getting less for your commodity one way in which to maintain cash flow is to increase the amount sold. That is what is in fact happening in many cases. Since we believe the assumptions underlying the U.S. Farm Bill are fallacious, we question how it will be effective in getting back market share.

The irony in this situation of lower grain prices is that the two areas of the world that have increased production more than Canada, Argentina or Australia are the United States and Europe. Yet, it is those producers who will be shielded more from world prices than will other producers. We have done studies on the amount of subsidies provided. In Canada, government subsidies on a tonne of wheat are roughly $35 Canadian a tonne. In the United States they are approximately $95 Canadian a tonne, and in the European community they are about $103 Canadian a tonne.

If the Americans believe that the U.S. Farm Bill will effectively lower supply, they should be lowering prices to their own producers, which they are not doing. As indicated by the figures I just quoted, the American producer will receive approximately $95 per tonne of wheat in the coming crop year while Canadian farmers will receive approximately $35 a tonne, a ratio of about three to one. One can see that it will be very difficult for Canadian producers to be shielded from the low prices which were caused largely by the Europeans and the Americans.

I would like to conclude by referring briefly to the recommendation in which the committee asks that the Government refer to mechanisms to ensure that the two-price wheat policy continues to reflect historical regional market share of all wheat types utilized domestically for human consumption. I believe there are ways to deal with that, as I believe there are ways to deal with the recommendations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid it is two o'clock.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OIL-FILLED HEATERS CONTAINING PCBS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan) should stop dilly-dallying and immediately withdraw the De'Longhi heaters from the market. He should also strengthen the inspection of products entering Canada to protect the consumer and prevent this from happening again. This matter has been dragging on for too long.

• (1400)

On May 6 the Minister issued a warning about oil-filled heaters manufactured by De'Longhi containing PCBs in concentrations as high as 800 parts per million. On May 6 the public was warned to disconnect the units and place them in a secure area until further notice. Details of the product withdrawal were to be announced as soon as a plan was finalized. Six weeks later Canadians are still waiting for a plan of action. While these heaters are sitting around, their withdrawal, whenever announced, will be conducted on a voluntary basis.

The company concerned has clearly broken the law by importing 38,000 units containing PCBs.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO PAGE STAFF

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, late last night I had the pleasure of joining our House of Commons pages at their farewell dinner. The evening was filled with fun, laughter, and some touching moments as the pages reflected on their year working with us here in the Chamber.

These 40 outstanding individuals have come to Ottawa from every part of Canada to work as pages. They have demonstrated their exceptional abilities and eagerness in all capacities, and always responded swiftly and efficiently to our requests. They have served us in a courteous and friendly manner no matter our mood, and we have never heard them complain about any task they were asked to do. Their attention, initiative, and resourcefulness have proved invaluable to all Members of Parliament.

On behalf of the Liberal Party and every Member of Parliament of whatever Party, I would like to thank the pages for all the effort and dedication they have shown us this year. They are certainly appreciated and we are sorry to see them leave. I wish them all the best of luck in their future endeavours.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DANGERS POSED BY ICE-BREAKERS TO INUIT ECONOMIC ACTIVITIES

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, the residents of Arctic Bay in the High Arctic are getting a raw deal in the annual resupply by ships such as the ice-breakers Lady Franklin and M/V Arctic. These ships are prematurely breaking the traditional transportation routes of the Inuit across the sea ice and jeopardizing the narwhal hunts and tourist initiatives of that community.

I call on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) to consult with Arctic Bay and Crosbie Shippers of Montreal to seek a more equitable timetable for the annual resupply to avoid conflict with the community's traditional and economic activities.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ELIMINATION OF REGIONAL WAGE DISPARITIES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, federal blue-collar workers employed in Atlantic Canada will receive wage parity beginning in August, 1987. The federal Government has shown sensitivity towards general labourers and trades employees by treating them equally in each of the Atlantic provinces. The original two-zone scheme was devised more than 20 years ago to pay higher wages to workers in areas with higher costs of living. Moncton and Halifax comprised one zone, and the other comprised the remainder of the Maritimes. The two existing pay zones in the three maritime provinces will finally be incorporated into one, eliminating current wage differences. This problem, which had long been outstanding, has now been resolved.

Much has been said from time to time about the lack of attention the Government has shown to Atlantic Canada. This fair and progressive action by the federal Government demonstrates who is in support of and behind Atlantic Canada. It is indeed the Government of Canada.

PEACE

PRESENTATION OF BOOK OF PRAYERS TO LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, later today I will be presenting to the Library of Parliament a beautifully produced book of sacred text and prayers prepared in May at a conference at St. Paul University here in Ottawa on the quest for peace in our day. The participants have all signed the book and are presenting it to Parliament as a token of their aim, which was to see how different religious faiths could be used as a basis to bring people together in the cause of peace.

The calligraphy is by Quinn Redekop, aged 14, the son of one of the members of the worship committee. The book contains text and prayers from 16 religious traditions, many of them non-Christian, and is a testimony to the seeking by many Canadians and other people around the world of international peace.

SMALL BUSINESS

SASKATCHEWAN SILICA SAND PROCESSING PLANT—SOD-TURNING CEREMONY

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, on June 13, in Hudson Bay, Saskatchewan, I had the pleasure, along with the Hon. Neal Hardy and president/owner Edward Budnick, of participating in a sod-turning ceremony celebrating the start of a $3.5 million plant to process silica sand, which is used in a multitude of products from toothpaste and glass, to computer chips and tiles. The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) provided $375,000 from his office and this will create 25 permanent jobs.

This silica sand deposit has been known for 40 years. Others have tried to develop the area. However, the most significant part of the day was to learn how Mr. Budnick, while not being paid anything for a road be built for another company, persisted, hounded, badgered and begged for over 10 years to get the lease on the property so he could bring the project to where it is today. This is an example of the type of people in my constituency. We will thus add another unique industry to a unique constituency.

PORNOGRAPHY

DEFINITION CONTAINED IN BILL C-114

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell you about the many reactions we have seen these past few days concerning the Bill on pornography. The least we can say about this Bill is that it did not create a general consensus. The major criticism against Bill C-114 is that the general definition of pornography includes normal sexual acts, bestiality, and any other sexual act. There is something unrealistic about putting everything in the same basket!

I am not the only who feels this way, Mr. Speaker, even Dalton Camp agrees with me.

[English]

He really believes that the Minister of Justice has gone too far. In The Toronto Star he says that the section depicting various modes of intercourse is broadened to include other sexual activity. That could include Roy Rogers kissing his horse. Even the editorial board of The Globe and Mail agrees with me. According to it, the heart of the pornographic Bill is a puritanical throwback which makes a mockery of the legislation. Does the Minister need to hear more about it?

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF CANADIAN MUSIC

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC FESTIVAL

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, 1986 is the International Year of Canadian Music, an occasion on which Canadians have much to celebrate. For over 300 years music has been composed and performed in this country. Around the world Canada is renowned for the vitality and diversity of its composers. Our music is recognized for its exceptional quality. This year the Canadian Music Centre, in conjunction with the federal Government, established a secretariat to promote and co-ordinate a year of concerts, conferences, recordings, and anniversary celebrations.

As part of the celebrations the National Arts Centre is presenting a week long festival of contemporary music this week, featuring works by major Canadian composers. Entitled "Now Music", the festival is the most extensive presentation of contemporary work yet undertaken by the NAC Orchestra. I hope all Members will join with me in paying tribute to Canadian composers during the International Year of Canadian Music.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

GENERIC DRUGS LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada have known for some time that the Conservative Government plans to do away with generic drugs. As late as last month the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) promised a Bill within two weeks or, at the most, two months, to reduce the availability of generic drugs to Canadians. However, today's Toronto Star tells us the Bill will not be tabled until the fall at the very earliest. What do these delays mean?

Certainly the Government continues to ignore representations of consumers, seniors, labour and public interest groups who have said their members cannot afford to have generics taken away. Instead, generic drugs are now a part of the free trade talks to be simply bargained away. This may be an improvement over the give-aways to the U.S. in the form of repeal of the Foreign Investment Review Act and the National Energy Program, but it is certainly not in the best interests of Canadian consumers. The reality for all Canadians is that if the Government goes ahead with restrictions on generics, the policy and the labels on the bottles should clearly read "Made in U.S.A.".

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDS FOR JOB CREATION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne) recently announced that $16 million will be earmarked for job creation under the Innovations program. In 1986, this program is designed to provide financial assistance for projects which advocate new and creative solutions to labour market problems.

Since it usually takes two or three years to assess projects launched under this program, the Government will allocate about $50 million to this sector over the next two or three years.

Such initiatives attest to the Government's commitment to create employment opportunities for young people. If the private sector, young people and the Government make concerted efforts and pool their resources, we will find a solution to the problems of young Canadians.

HUMAN RIGHTS

BALTIC STATES—SOVIET UNION'S TREATMENT OF CATHOLIC CHURCH

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, in June of 1941 the Soviet Government began a callous policy of mass deportations from the countries of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. To date more than 760,000 people have been deported from those countries.

An ecumenical service was recently sponsored by the Baltic Federation of Toronto to commemorate this tragic event. This service also reminds us of the present Soviet policy of suppression and intimidation against the Catholic Church in those countries.

In 1983 the Soviets arrested two leading priests of the Catholic Church, Reverend Alfonsas Svarinskas and Reverend Sigitas Tamkevicius, founding members of the Catholic Committee for the Defence of Believers' Rights. They were then sentenced to ten-year prison terms.

Widespread protests and 123,000 signatures on a petition by Lithuanians have demanded their release. I urge my colleagues and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to add their voices to these pleas and to pressure this oppressive regime to restore the basic human right of freedom of religious belief.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED SALE OF MAINTENANCE SHOPS IN MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, CN has delivered a severe blow to the Atlantic region. It has announced that it intends to sell its railway shops in Moncton. This decision will mean the loss of at least 600 jobs in a region of high unemployment.

Last summer the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) gave a strong commitment, that he would not support any massive lay-off at the shops. The Minister is not keeping his word. He is not honouring his commitment and he is allowing a Crown Corporation to take 900 people off its payroll in Atlantic Canada.

The people of my area feel very disillusioned with the Minister and the Government. They feel they have been treated unfairly by CN and by the Minister of Transport.

Canada's employment growth rate this year will be better than that of all major countries. For this we must be thankful to Canadian businessmen and businesswomen who have been working with our Government to achieve such an outstanding economic performance. CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL ROUTE SERVICES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of this House the treatment being accorded residents of rural routes by Canada Post and the Government of Canada.

The method being utilized by Canada Post trying to close rural routes is deceptive. Modest and temporary requests for adjustments are ignored.

While the Government may not be responsible for the methods being used by Canada Post, it must assume the ultimate blame for the elimination of rural routes by having demanded Canada Post be totally self-sufficient by 1987-88.

The Government's cynicism is flagrant. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet spend freely for their own wants, for example: the largest Cabinet in history, a monstrous staff, presidential amenities, oversized delegations such as four Tourism Canada officials attending a mid-March American Society of Association Executives Convention in Orlando taking five star accommodations rather than four star, unnecessary major airport upgradings in the Prime Minister's riding, bank bail-outs, Senate appointments, patronage trough-wallowing and high-priced home movies, while postal customers in remote areas—

ECONOMIC GROWTH IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention some of the signs of strength demonstrated by the Nova Scotia economy since September, 1984.

The May inflation rate was 3.5 per cent, below the national average of 4.1 per cent. Total exports in April, 1986, were up 30 per cent compared to April, 1985. Total value of building permits in 1985 were up by 18.9 per cent compared to 1984. Total housing starts in 1985 rose by 51 per cent, to their highest level in eight years. Retail sales have increased by 14.5 per cent since the election. Realized net farm income is estimated to have increased by 7.5 per cent in 1985.

With these kinds of results Nova Scotians can finally look forward to the future with optimism.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. POSITION ON FINANCIAL SERVICES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on trade. There is more chaos today on the trade front, just when we were beginning to think that the Prime Minister was back to his original position on a comprehensive free trade pact.

The Americans indicate to us that financial services are not going to be on the table. Since financial services are not going to be on the table, do we have a comprehensive negotiation or not? If it is going to be sectoral, as perhaps the Americans themselves are now starting to recognize, why can we not take our cultural industries and the Automobile Pact off the table as the Americans want to take off the financial services?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, they will be comprehensive negotiations. They will not be sectoral negotiations. The United States will decide what it wants to put on the table, and we will decide what we want to put on the table. We are not discussing cultural industries and cultural policy in the context of trade negotiation. We have no intention to discuss the question of an Auto Pact which, in our view, works well for Canada, and there is no need to change something that works well.

These matters have been repeated innumerable times in the House of Commons. I presume that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition keeps repeating questions because he cannot find a consistent policy of his own to follow.

FREE TRADE—EXTENT OF NEGOTIATOR'S MANDATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, once again I may observe this afternoon that our policy represents the unanimous position of our caucus.

Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question: Last night, an interesting confrontation between Mr. Reisman and Mr. Murphy on television confused the issue even further. Mr. Reisman claimed that our social programs were not on the table and Mr. Murphy said they were.

Could the Secretary of State please explain the situation? Does Mr. Reisman have a specific mandate? Perhaps he could table that mandate here in the House, so that we will know what is going on and whether Mr. Reisman has received clear instructions, so as not to add to the general confusion every evening.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it will be interesting for the House of Commons to see today's unanimous policy, and tomorrow there will be another unanimous policy from the Liberal Party!

As far as the Government's policy is concerned, Mr. Reisman has a mandate, and I am not going to tell the United States about it in my answer to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition here in the House.

[English]

CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR'S INSTRUCTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Putting it very simply for the Secretary of State of External Affairs and to circumscribe some of his new-found enthusiasm and eloquence in the House, are there matters beyond the scope of Mr. Reisman, as chief negotiator for our country, to negotiate? If Mr. Reisman has been told by the Secretary of State of External Affairs and by the Prime Minister that there are matters beyond his power to negotiate, would the Secretary of State let the people of Canada know so we can have precision as to the scope of the negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may repeat my response to the Leader of the Opposition's first question, the question of cultural matters is not a matter of negotiation in a trade negotiation. We see no reason to change an Auto Pact which is working well. The social programs of Canada are not at question in a trade negotiation.

These matters have all been repeated several times. They are well known to the country. I look forward to the occasion when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, in fact, finds a unanimous policy that will last longer than one day, so he can stop repeating questions to me in the House.

UNITED STATES POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. He has just stated that matters such as the social programs and Auto Pact are not to be discussed. Yet Peter Murphy, the U.S. negotiator, said yesterday that the United States has the right to study the impact of Canadian social programs and the Auto Pact. When will the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister contact Mr. Murphy's boss, the President of the United States, and tell him that they do not have the right to study these matters and that we get the negotiations off on a proper footing so that we both understand what we are talking about?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition should at least become consistent in its outrage. The Leader of the Opposition is outraged that the United States would determine what they want to discuss. Now the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry pretends outrage that we would determine what we want to discuss. We will decide what Canada discusses at the table. What the Americans might put on the table is their business. What we might put on or take off the table is our business.

FINANCIAL SERVICES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we are outraged about the dialogue of the deaf that is going on, where you are both talking about totally separate things. You do not do something that is as historically important as this and talk about two different agendas and two different items.

If Mr. Murphy is saying that the Government of the United States has a right to study everything, why are we acquiescing in the Government of the United States pulling financial services from the agenda?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, now the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is consistent with his Leader and inconsistent with himself.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN COMPANIES' NON-COMPLIANCE WITH CODE OF CONDUCT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday we received the report of Albert Hart on the activities of Canadian corporations in South Africa operating under the voluntary Code of Conduct. The Minister indicated that the Canadian people could judge for themselves the behaviour of those companies under that code. The more important question is what the Government thinks of a situation in which five companies are paying wages which are below the minimum level for living in South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He will know that it was as a result of an initiative by this Government that, for the first time, the responses to that Code of Conduct were made public and are now a matter of public scrutiny and debate. As far as I am concerned, I do not approve of those practices by the Canadian companies. I would hope that those practices will change.

The reason we put the facts in public view is so that the pressure of public opinion, which is clearly effective in a country like ours, will be joined with the pressure and advice of the Government of Canada in trying to encourage a change on the part of those companies in what we consider to be a continuation of the Candian fight against apartheid.

Oral Questions

APPLICATION OF SOUTH AFRICAN LAWS TO CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State knows, some of the companies in violation of the voluntary Code of Conduct are required, pursuant to South African segregationist laws, to segregate black workers from white workers at on-site accommodations. What advice would he offer to those companies which are faced with this inconsistency between the Code of Conduct and South African racist laws?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we would urge Canadian companies to follow Canadian standards and the Canadian Code of Conduct. If they are seeking information as to how they can do that in a way that is consistent with South African law, we certainly are prepared to aid them in resolving that particular problem. However, we believe that there is a Canadian standard that is very clearly at variance with the practice of the Government of South Africa. We think that the practice of the Government of South Africa, in following an apartheid regime, is abhorrent, and we want to see Canadian practice conform to our standards, not South African standards.

REQUEST FOR MANDATORY APPLICATION OF CODE OF CONDUCT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, if a Code of Conduct can be expected to work effectively, would it not make a good deal more sense to make it mandatory and require those corporations which do not adhere to the Code of Conduct to remove themselves from South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is clearly an option. The point I made to the Hon. Member earlier is that the step that the Government has taken is to have moved the question of compliance into the public domain so that the country and Parliament are in a position to exert influence upon those Canadian companies now. That is my preferred option. There is another.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT HOLD DISCUSSIONS WITH COMPANIES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were certainly ashamed to learn that five of our companies were breaking the Code of Conduct and treating blacks like cheap labour. I am glad that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government, for that matter, are not happy with the situation. We have yet to hear what concrete steps the Government is willing to take to bring this exploitation to an end. Is the Government at least willing to meet with the companies and persuade them to respect this voluntary Code of Conduct? If they do not want to do that, will the Government make it mandatory?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the publication of this Code of Conduct is supported by all Parties in the House, although it was not the practice of former Governments to require that publication. The Hon. Member has asked me whether I am prepared to meet with the representatives of the Canadian private sector that are active in South Africa. I have met with them. We did that early in the evolution of our process. We are prepared to meet with them again.

The point I want to make is that we have now secured a situation where these facts are in the public domain. I believe that the companies in question are, among other things, subject to public opinion. I hope that public opinion will be strong and clear.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, personally, I think these Canadian companies should withdraw altogether from South Africa, just like the U.S. House of Representatives said in its motion last night.

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE ACTION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he is going to show he has some backbone and stop waiting for public opinion in Canada to have some impact on these companies. When is the Government going to take concrete action instead of waiting for these companies to make up their minds to follow a voluntary code?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, under the Liberal Government, the companies concerned were not required to publish a record of their performance. Under the Liberals, they could hide those details. But that is history, and now companies must provide disclosure.

I hope there will be a strong reaction from the public, because our present option is the one we prefer. But I repeat that there is another option.

[English]

STERNSON COMPANY'S FAILURE TO REPORT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Two of those companies mentioned in the report are located in my constituency. They are Massey-Ferguson, or Massey Combines as it is now known, and Sternson Ltd. Sternson Ltd. has not even taken the opportunity to report. What specific action will the Secretary of State take against Sternson Ltd. to make certain that it reports immediately on its financial undertakings in South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to work very closely with the Hon. Member, as the Member of Parliament for the region, to try to encourage that company not only to report, but to encourage that company and others to comply. In my judgment we now have a situation where there is a way by which the facts can become known. That did not exist before. Other options are open to us, such as the option of resorting to forced action by the Government of Canada. I would very much prefer to have public opinion work and achieve a change that way. I believe this is a multi-partisan matter and I would welcome the co-operation of the Hon. Member in achieving that goal.

MASSEY-FERGUSON CORPORATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, has the Secretary of State already contacted Massey-Ferguson, which is a multinational corporation, and, if so, what has he told Massey-Ferguson with respect to paying substandard wages in a country that is already notorious for paying very low wages to its black population?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not contacted Massey-Ferguson or the other companies since I tabled the report in the House yesterday. What the Government has done that is new, is take steps that cause the information to come into the public domain so that Members of Parliament, the public, and others who are interested, are in a position to act. I hope they will act. I hope there will be change. I repeat the point: if there is not change as a result of that kind of action, there are other options for the Government to consider.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. I have in my hand a Government document in which the Vice-President of the National Research Council states that industrial research funds will be transferred to the space program, to be managed by the space program, as an activity separate from industrial research. In the document the Acting President of the National Research Council confirms the accuracy of this assessment.

Given this evidence, I would ask the Minister to correct the impression that he left with the House earlier this week, to level with Canadians, and admit that the industrial research program has indeed been cut and that some 2,000 small Canadian firms will lose vital research support.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I do not know from what document the Hon. Member is reading, but let me tell him that the industrial research program is designed to build a basis on which we can expand our economy with future-oriented jobs. This is what the space program is designed to do, to create 100,000 new, future-oriented jobs, and $5 billion worth of industrial spin-off to private firms and small firms. That is what the program is designed to do.

The Hon. Member now tells us that he and his Party wish us to walk away from space. Well, this is not what is going to happen.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, when will the Minister admit that the effect of this decision will be to cut research funds from some 2,000 small Canadian companies over the next five years? When will the Minister be able to report to the House the truth about this question? When will he provide Parliament and the Canadian people with information that we can believe?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member chooses to believe what he hears on the streets, I will never be able to satisfy him. I told him what the program is about and what happened, and if he chooses to seek information that is less factual than what he hears from me, I am sorry, but I cannot help him.

MEDICAL CARE

DOCTOR'S TELEVISED STATEMENT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the Minister ask the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the Province of Ontario to investigate a statement made by Dr. Shelley McLean on The National two evenings ago? She said: "If one patient dies now, we may be preventing a hundred patients from dying in five years".

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deans: She made the comment in response to questions about the closing of the emergency section of the hospital in Cornwall.

An Hon. Member: Moral blackmail.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member raises is a most serious issue. I want to say to him that I know he recognizes—I am not trying to push responsibilities from one level of jurisdiction to the other—that Ontario has the responsibility of maintaining health care in the Province of Ontario. I called the Minister of Health for Ontario, roughly at noon today. He was not in, but I spoke with a member of his staff and requested an update to see whether or not the services in Ontario were being provided and to see that people were not being put at risk.

I have publicly said that I would hope the disagreement between the Government of Ontario and the doctors could be resolved; not only amicably. I have great difficulty when people's lives and health are being put at risk because two groups are in conflict with each other.

REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF DOCTOR

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Would the Minister agree that this statement is in violation of that doctor's Hippocratic oath and ask that she be suspended from practising in the Province of Ontario until such time as an investigation is conducted into this matter?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not aware that the Minister has any ministerial responsibility involving the licensing of doctors. That is my dilemma.

Mr. Benjamin: He didn't say that, he didn't ask that.

Mr. Deans: I asked the Minister to ask the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Mr. Benjamin: He just asked the Minister to make representations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent.

PROPOSED SALE OF MAINTENANCE SHOPS IN MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On January 15 of this year, the Minister clearly stated in this House, as reported at page 9791 of Hansard, that the CN shops in Moncton were not for sale. Why is the Minister now allowing CN to proceed with the sale of the CN shops?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to which the Hon. Member refers is somewhat selective, in the quotation that he is using. What I did say at that time was that CN shops were not for sale but that Canadian General Electric had expressed an interest in establishing a locomotive manufacturing facility in Canada and, within the context of the rationalization of the shops, that that was being considered; and, to be perfectly technical, at that time the shops were not for sale, and a proposition was not ratified—

Some Hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, a proposition to enter into the negotiations was not ratified by the Board of CNR until last Sunday.

Mr. Robichaud: So much for a first promise.

POSSIBLE LAY-OFFS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, why has the Minister now broken a second promise, the promise that he would not support massive lay-offs? How can he allow the loss of 600 jobs in an area with 15 per cent unemployment?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member uses those figures he is simply distorting the facts. I would encourage him to stop and to cease and desist from doing that, because he has no licence to disseminate fear and apprehension in the minds of the workers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister is coming close, very close, to unparliamentary language.

Mr. Mazankowski: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member, and I know that this is a very sensitive subject, that he is doing a great disservice to the people of Moncton, particularly the workers. It is quite apparent that the Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: —is opposed to the establishment of a new locomotive manufacturing facility in Moncton.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FINANCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of State for External Affairs, if I may. While Mr. Reisman and Mr. Murphy continue to argue publicly about what sectors are to be discussed, the United States has unilaterally pulled the financial sectors off the bargaining table. I want to ask the Minister if the Government does not see that this kind of contrast points out the great inequalities in bargaining between the two countries and shows the dangers that we face if we continue down this course.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that a distinguished former university professor knows better than that. The facts remain as they have always been, that the Government of Canada can decide what it wants to put on the table and keep on the table, and the Government of the United States decides what it wants to put on the table and keep on the table. Nothing has changed.

SOCIAL POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): In that case, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is prepared to talk—so, talk. Let me ask him if in fact he will act right now, unilaterally, and say, "Despite Mr. Murphy's comments yesterday, we are not prepared at any time, or in any way, to talk about social policy in the course of these free trade talks".

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member thinks that was tough talk, "he ain't seen nothing yet".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I do not know what passes for tough talk in the New Democratic Party.

Look, Mr. Speaker, the question of social programs is not an issue in discussion on trade. The question of cultural programs is not an issue in discussions of trade. The question of the Auto Pact is not something we propose to raise or have result in a change in the system that we think is working perfectly well. That, by my calculation, is the one million two hundred and thirty-seventh time I have given that answer in the House of Commons, and I would hope that the New Democratic Party would get in touch quickly, by telephone, with the CLC to get some new questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

OCCUPATION OF MANAGEMENT OFFICES—CONCERNS OF MINE WORKERS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Can the Minister tell us whether he intends to respond to certain concerns expressed on behalf of miners employed by the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to acknowledge the tremendous work that the Hon. Member has done—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will finish his answer, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: —as well as his support and his advice.

As I indicated yesterday to the House we will be treating this matter very seriously. We have had a number of discussions. I personally discussed the issue with Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia this morning. We have discussed it with union leaders. We have discussed it with the Chairman of the Board of Devco. Arrangements are now being made to organize a meeting between senior officials of DRIE and representatives of those who are engaged in the sit-in. Hopefully we will be able to resolve the outstanding issues referred to in the protests of the sit-in miners.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL UNDERTAKING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion for taking such positive action with regard to this most serious situation. However, I ask him in all sincerity whether he can give an undertaking to the House that before the end of June substantive answers will be given to the United Mine Workers of America with regard to the high unemployment at the Cape Breton Development Corporation, as well as the future direction that that corporation will take? Can he give us that undertaking?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can give the Hon. Member the undertaking with respect to the time-frame. However, I can give him the undertaking that we will sit down and discuss all the outstanding issues to which the miners have referred.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF REPORTED SALE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and concerns the sale of Canadair. When is the Government going to select one of the purchase offers for Canadair? And could the Minister give the House the assurance that, considering the precedent set by de Havilland, a parliamentary committee will examine the sale and have a chance to communicate its conclusions to the House, before the sale is finalized?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this matter is still in the hands of the CDIC. I have not received its recommendations, and so I am not able to give the Hon. Member the undertaking to which he has referred.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY REVIEW

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are very serious concerns about jobs and about ownership in this particular area. Is the Minister aware of the very serious pledge made by his predecessor who said: "We want to assure all Canadians that the divestiture will be administered responsibly with an opportunity for appropriate parliamentary review"? Will the Government guarantee that that review will take place by a committee and that it will be able to report back to Parliament before the sale is finalized in the fall?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I undertook to meet with representatives of the unions yesterday. We had a very good meeting and a very good discussion. I think they went away satisfied. The Hon. Member should recall the fear and the apprehension that he spread in this House with respect to the potential takeover of de Havilland. I think history speaks for itself—de Havilland is flying high.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

VIDEO TAPING OF PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It pertains to the Prime Minister's extravagant spending of taxpayers' money for his own personal glorification. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain to unemployed Canadians who can barely afford the necessities of life why the Prime Minister of Canada spent taxpayers' money to the tune of $2,483.21 per minute so that the American people could have the opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member, I think, can conclude his question.

Ms. Copps: This is his question.

Mr. Boudria: Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the people of Canada why the Prime Minister spent that kind of money for his greatness to be seen on television by United States citizens?

An Hon. Member: That's out of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He used Taiwanese film.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member is talking about the gathering of videotape for a—

Mr. Ouellet: If you don't know the answer then sit down.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am getting coached in the House of Commons by the Hon. Member for Papineau.

Mr. Ouellet: Indeed. Sit down!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He often helps me with my French, and that I don't mind.

[English]

The situation is very clear, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We know that. What is the answer?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will explain it, if I am given a chance by the Opposition. The answer is that, starting with the Trudeau Government in earlier years, there has been the practice—

Mr. Dingwall: He was Prime Minister longer than you.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —of gathering material that can then be made available for communication, for distribution, to television stations in the United States to increase the profile of Canada in that country. That process, when it is followed, is a particle of the cost that would be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister knows that this is long, too. Supplementary question.

Mr. Marchi: That's a hell of a particle!

INQUIRY CONCERNING DURATION OF PRACTICE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform Canadians how long they will have to put up with this kind of extravagance, just so Americans will have a chance to the Prime Minister's face on television?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not an extravagance. In fact, if Canada had opted for one of the other media, such as newspaper advertising, the cost would have been much higher.

[English]

The facts here are that videotapes were taken of a very significant, newsworthy event involving Canada and the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The judgment on its newsworthiness was made by the some 1,400 American television stations that used the footage, therefore bringing attention to Canada, therefore helping Canada to increase a consciousness of Canada, the kind of consciousness that is very necessary if we want to resist countervail actions on our timber, if we want to prevent the kinds of actions that were taken on shakes and shingles, if we want to maintain a strong Canadian—

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF PROPOSAL TO BUILD ARMAMENTS PLANT IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I was concerned to read an article in The Globe and Mail today which suggests that the Government is reconsidering the Thyssen proposal to build a plant in Cape Breton to build armoured personnel carriers, including tanks, for export to countries in the Middle East. Is the Government actively reconsidering that proposal by Thyssen?

THREAT OF U.S. BARLEY SALES TO ISRAEL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board or for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I regret to inform the House of some bad news. The United States has just targeted Israel under its export enhancement program for the sale of 200,000 tons of barley. That represents our annual sale to Israel. I wish to ask either of the Ministers whether or not the Government is now considering any special action in order to counteract this American initiative on a country-by-country basis? As Hon. Members know, this will totally devastate our grain producers in western Canada.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, we have been aware of the BICEP program. It has been in effect since June of 1985. The success that the Americans have had in terms of increasing the sale has not been effective. Hon. Members should know that this type of thing will not devastate western Canada in terms of sales. The big problem is with respect to prices. The Hon. Member should know that we are selling wheat at the same record clip that we have been for the last two years. Sales are there. The big problem we have is with prices.

Mr. de Jong: That's not going to sell back home, Charlie.

Mr. Mayer: We have discussed that many times in the House.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that the United States has just targeted Israel for 200,000 tons of barley per year, a traditional Canadian market, and that it is now talking about increasing its sales to Saudi Arabia from 100,000 tons to one million tons per year? Is the Minister aware of that? If he is aware of it can we expect any concrete action to counteract it on a country-by-country basis? It is an important question.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the one correct statement which the Hon. Member has made is that it is an important question. We are aware of that. The Hon. Member should know that Canada has taken the lead in raising the agricultural trade subsidy issue internationally. The Prime Minister raised it in Tokyo. We have to give him credit for that. We managed to convince the major exporting countries to hold a meeting recently on the West Coast. I think there were some results there. We are aware that in addressing it we should address it in what I think is the best forum possible and that is the international forum. With everyone's co-operation, we will be able to address it globally at the next GATT round.

TRANSPORT

CANADIAN COAST GUARD NAVIGATION SERVICES' COSTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport.

Does the Minister of Transport know that yesterday all participants in the Montreal economic summit, without exception, voiced their opposition to Bill C-75 and, considering all these views against clause 4, is the Minister now prepared to delete that clause from Bill C-75 for the time being?

• (1450)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that a number of safeguards have been put into this particular clause, a clause which I know has generated some controversy but one which I believe is now considered to be fair. The imposition of the charges would not take place before January 1, 1988. There is a consultative mechanism and an appeal process. There are many safeguards, and I think the Hon. Member would agree that this is the first time there have been such safeguards in the imposition of these kinds of enabling charges.

METHOD OF PAYMENT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, all those who are against this law are not satisfied with the verbal—let alone the legislative—commitments of the Minister.

Could the Minister assure all the interested parties that he will include in clause 4 of the Bill a guarantee to the effect that payments will not begin before 1988, that they will not exceed $20 million a year, and that they will end in 1990, as he is alleged to have promised the Quebec Minister of Transport?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, those conditions are clearly on the record. As I have said, there is a consultative process and there is a 90-day provision for Gazetteing. There are appeal mechanisms, and we are requesting a modest return of something like $20 million. After all, the cost recovery on the Coast Guard services right now is something between 3 per cent and 5 per cent and we want to increase that to a minuscule 7 per cent. That certainly is not very much considering the services provided. I think all industries recognize that there has to be some provision for cost recovery, and I would hope that when they understand the kind of protective mechanisms we have put in place, they will find this Bill acceptable.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR BAN ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare who will know that the Canadian Cancer Society and other organizations today held a press conference revealing some new information about public knowledge, or indeed the lack of public knowledge, of the connection between lung cancer and tobacco smoking. Will the Minister accede to the very urgent demand of the Canadian Cancer Society and other organizations for a ban on cigarette advertising? Will he accede to the demand not just for self-regulation, not just for three-inch warnings instead of one-inch warnings, not just skaters instead of skiers, not just for bluewater canoeists rather than whitewater canoeists, but for a real ban?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the press conference was held. I think one correction should be made, not to the Hon. Member's question but to the press release which leaves the impression that I might have had a meeting with the organizations. That was not the case but I am aware of the press release. This is not a new position taken by these organizations. I have said to the Hon. Member a number of times, as I have also said in public, that the Government is looking actively at what response it should make. I have also told the Hon. Member and the organizations that held the press conference today that I will take one more look at what the tobacco manufacturers' council will say at the end of the month.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, since he has played the numbers game before on the grounds that this advertising ban would not be effective enough, I wonder if the Minister could tell us how many lives he would consider it worth saving. If 10 per cent of those 35,000 lives could be saved, would that be worth it? If only 1 per cent, or 350 lives, could be saved, would that be worth a ban on advertising? Indeed, if one life could be saved by a ban on advertising, would that be worth it?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are 30,000 deaths related to smoking each year. My job as Minister of National Health and Welfare is to try to prevent all of those deaths.

FOOD AND DRUGS

DEPARTMENT'S VIEW OF BEEF PRODUCTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister is aware that the Canadian beef industry is suffering from a dramatic decline in demand and he will also be aware that his Department has, for over 15 years, published misinformation that has been used by home economists, health care professionals, and the media. Will the Minister inform the House what actions he is prepared to take to correct this misinformation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree that the Department might have been publishing misinformation. There have been various studies done outside the Department as well relative to beef. I can tell the Hon. Member that with what has been happening in the beef industry, with the reduction in fat in cuts that are now being sold, from the point of view of the Department of Health beef is not only a safe product but it is a good product, and one that the Department and other health professionals are promoting for use by Canadians.

MEDICAL CARE

CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION'S REQUEST FOR OHIP BOYCOTT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the Minister aware that the Canadian Medical Association has put out a memo to all doctors and hospitals outside Ontario asking them to support the Ontario medical strike and asking them also to bill patients directly and not through the provincial program, OHIP? If he is aware of that, what has he done to make sure that Canadians, and Ontarians in particular, have universal access to hospitals and medical care?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in an earlier question I was asked what action I had taken and I said I had phoned the office of the Minister of Health in Ontario to—

Mr. Nunziata: It's the Canadian Medical Association.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Would you let me answer, please? I said that I had phoned the Minister's office, because it is under provincial jurisdiction, to ensure that access and portability be maintained under the Canada Health Act. I have received a report from the Government of Ontario indicating that there is no evidence from the Minister's point of view that access or portability has been denied. I have also indicated that the Ontario Government, under OHIP, will recognize and accept OHIP payments for residents of Ontario outside Ontario since that is within the legal requirements of the Canada Health Act. I have been assured by the Province of Ontario that it will honour all those bills.

INQUIRY IF OTHER PROVINCES WILL RECOGNIZE ONTARIO'S HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question.

I should like to know whether the Minister can assure all Ontarians who will be travelling throughout Canada this summer, as tourists or otherwise, that they will be able to obtain medical care in hospitals and be attended by physicians in case of accident or serious illness, without prejudice to their ability to pay? Will all provinces other than Ontario recognize Ontario's health insurance plan?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have every assurance that Ontario residents who are travelling are being given that service under the Canada Health Act, and specificially the portability clauses. I also want to indicate to the Hon. Member that doctors outside Ontario may sign or fill out the interprovincial benefits form which will allow them to get paid by OHIP. If that is not done and if there is a direct payment by an Ontario resident, OHIP will also cover that. I have every assurance today from the work I have done, and the assurances I have received from the Province of Ontario, that Ontario residents outside Ontario are being protected.

FIREARMS

CUSTOMS INSPECTION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister is aware of my concern and the concern of various police and customs officers about the number of weapons being imported by wholesale gun dealers. The concern is that customs officers have no training to determine whether automatic weapons have been properly modified to make them legal in Canada. Can the Minister inform us what action the Government is taking to ensure that illegal automatic weapons are not entering the country?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, first let me thank my hon. colleague for the interest he has shown in this subject. I appreciated the observations he made at a meeting we had not long ago. He knows that our Department is very diligent in making sure that all regulatory requirements that govern the importation of prohibited weapons are followed, and when our Department lacks the necessary expertise to match the type of weapons with the consignment or to make sure that these weapons are permanently converted for semi-automatic use, we obtain the services of firearms experts, usually the local police, to help us in this regard. We go on to seize any prohibited weapons that are located and, if necessary, we are prepared to make arrests.

INSPECTION TRAINING PROGRAM REQUESTED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to endorse a program of training individuals to enable them to inspect firearms better, and to designate four or five major centres through which large commercial shipments of guns must be processed?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting suggestion. I certainly give my colleague the undertaking to consider it seriously.

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period I inadvertently gave the wrong figure to the House regarding United States stations which used or expressed interest in using the satellite feed publicizing Canada. A full 600 United States television stations used that feed. That amounts to a fraction of the cost of one advertisement in any U.S. daily newspaper.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29

RAILWAYS—POSSIBLE CLOSURE AT CN SHOPS AT MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 29, I informed you today of my intention to ask the House for an emergency debate on a situation that I consider to be extremely serious. The subject of debate would be the decision by the Crown Corporation, Canadian National, to sell its railway shops at Moncton.

[English]

This CN decision to close its main shops in Moncton was taken unilaterally and without any input from Members of the House. It means that over 600 jobs will be lost. During the past year more than 1,000 workers have lived in insecurity and uncertainty. In September, 1985, 225 workers were laid off. On Tuesday, another 450 were told that they would have to retire early, be transferred, or lose their jobs.

[Translation]

The CN shops at Moncton are one of the major employers in New Brunswick. Considering the fact that the province's unemployment rate is 14.6 per cent, the second highest in Canada, it would be irresponsible to approve such a decision.

[English]

Yesterday the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick passed a unanimous motion expressing its opposition to the announced major reduction in employment at the CN shops in Moncton. The Legislative Assembly urged the Government of Canada to honour its duty with regard to regional development, in particular in the Moncton region.

Since this decision places in jeopardy the jobs of 1,022 workers of a Crown corporation in a region of extremely high unemployment, I feel it is of crucial importance that Members of Parliament be given the opportunity to debate this decision immediately.

Therefore, I respectfully request an adjournment of the House for an emergency debate on this important issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair received in proper form the application of the Hon. Member and of course has, as he would expect, examined carefully the application.

Without doubt the matter is a serious one, but the Chair must determine whether in fact the application conforms with the provisions of Standing Order 29. The Chair must advise the Member that the terms of Standing Order 29 have not been met and I must, therefore, decide not to accept the application.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I admit my ignorance, but are interventions allowed before Your Honour hands down a decision?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Benjamin: That is too bad.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know what I mean when I say that they are not allowed, but sometimes people do around here intervene. In fact, the Hon. Member will know that the Chair must receive an application in writing at least an hour in advance. What happens is that the Member is obligated by the rules to read into the record only the application which has been presented to the Speaker in writing, and that is the basis upon which the Speaker makes his ruling.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 505.

[Text]

INMATES FOUND IN POSSESSION OF DRUGS

Question No. 505—Mr. Nunziata:

1. (a) In (i) 1984 (ii) 1985, how many inmates in federal penitentiaries were found to be in possession of illegal drugs (b) in how many case were the drugs discovered after a return from (i) escorted (ii) unescorted temporary absence?

2. In how many cases was the inmate charged (a) under the Criminal Code (b) with flagrant or serious misconduct under Section 39 of the Penitentiary Service Regulations (c) with an intermediary offense under Section 39 (d) with minor misconduct under Section 39?

3. In each case in part 2, how many inmates (a) were found guilty as charged (b) had the charges dropped (c) had a portion of their earned remission revoked?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada is concerned:

1. (a) 592 inmates, (ii) 379 inmates. (b) (i), (ii) The Correctional Service of Canada does not keep records in a manner which would permit the production of the requested information without considerable expenditure in personnel resources.

2. (a) (b) (c) (d) Please see answer to part 1 (b) (i) (ii).

3. (a) (b) (c) Please see answer to part 1 (b) (i) (ii).

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, June 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arranagements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Ms. Copps (p. 14483).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate today at third reading stage of Bill C-96 which is entitled:

An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

People might get the impression from that title that the Government of Canada plans to support post-secondary education and health care beyond the levels at which they are normally supported. Of course, that is quite contrary to the reality of the situation. The Bill should actually be entitled "The Government now makes drastic cuts to post-secondary education in Canada and incredibly drastic cuts to the health care system of Canada". That would be a more realistic name; it would actually describe the reality of Bill C-96.

I want to state very clearly that as far as the New Democratic Party is concerned, we oppose Bill C-96. We have opposed the Bill since the Government first thought of drafting it. We have opposed it at every step of the way. We have opposed it at second reading and in committee. One of the reasons we opposed the Bill in committee was that the legislative committee, in its wisdom, asked 18 different groups to appear before it. Those groups represented the post-secondary educational system across the country, the Canadian health care system, and consumer groups. They were people with considerable expertise in the fields of health care and post-secondary education. The position taken by each of these 18 witnesses was virtually the same, stop the Bill; do not proceed with the Bill to make cuts to post-secondary educational and health funding.

It is in that spirit that members of the New Democratic Party raised the issues at public meetings in their constituencies. We held a number of public meetings and attended public gatherings. For myself, I discussed Bill C-96 both formally and informally with representatives of the faculties of the three universities in British Columbia and with student organizations from the colleges, technical institutes, vocational schools, and universities in British Columbia. I heard representations from the faculties of the two colleges in my constituency, Cariboo College and Okanagan College which has a campus in Salmon Arm. I discussed the matter also with student groups which represented those two colleges.

Beyond that, the matter was raised on a number of occasions with people interested in proceeding to studies at the post-secondary level from secondary schools in British Columbia. I also discussed the matter with their parents. In many cases today parents must find about $6,000 per year to send a son or daughter from the interior of B.C. to one of its post-secondary institutions. In many cases to find $6,000 to send a member of one's family, or perhaps a number of members of one's family, to pursue studies at a university, college, technical institute, vocational school, or business school of one kind or another is not an easy task. In some cases it makes it impossible for people to pursue their interest at the post-secondary level.

I want to indicate my concern, being especially interested in the Bill as a Member from British Columbia. British Columbia has experienced the realities of a harsh, extreme conservative Government, the Social Credit Government, for many years. We have seen what that Government has done to the educational system both at the public school level as well as at the post-secondray school level. We have seen what that administration has done to health care in British Columbia. It has been devastating, Mr. Speaker. I have yet to hear an expert, someone who has recognized credentials in health care or post-secondary education that has not condemned what the Government of British Columbia has done in these two areas. I have listened to countless reports. I have read countless articles in professional and laymen's journals on health care and post-secondary education denouncing what the Government in British Columbia did to post-secondary institutions and health care throughout the province.

You will recall in 1977, Mr. Speaker, when the decision was made to change the funding formula for post-secondary education and health care. In 1977 there was funding on a 50-50 basis. For every dollar a province spent in health care or post-secondary education the federal Government essentially matched that dollar. If $500 million was spent in a certain province in those two areas, the federal Government granted $500 million to that particular province.

In 1977 the decision was made to change the formula. What we heard was: "all hon. gentleman and ladies, we no longer need to go through all of the bookkeeping of this matching dollar for dollar, and that based on population growth and on growth in the economy, that is how payments to the provinces from the Government will be reflected." There was the assumption that with this kind of block funding, as it is termed, there would still be a matching of 50-50. If the federal Government increased its funds to the provinces, naturally the provinces would increase their contribution to assist and develop the health care system and post-secondary education system that Canadians needed and deserved. That has not happened.

If we just look at some recent statistics, for example 1982-83, the funding intended for universities in British Columbia from the federal Government was $206 million. In 1984 that amount was increased to $236 million, an increase of about $30 million over two years. That was money intended for universities only. The assumption was that the Government in British Columbia would match that increase and pass it along to the universities. I am sad to say that that was not the case. The total provided by the province to the three universities actually fell in that interval from $316 million to $299 million.

While federal grants to universities across the country were actually increasing year by year as a result of the formula determined in 1977, some provinces, including British Columbia, were reneging in their contributions. Today we find, as many many groups have now brought to our attention as parliamentarians, that the federal Government pays totally for all post-secondary education in B.C.. In other words, if you look at all of the money spent in the Province of British Columbia on post-secondary education, you will find that that is equal to the amount of money which the federal Government contributes alone. We can say that in spite of the fact that education and health care is a provincial responsibility by the Constitution of Canada, the federal Government finds itself in a situation where it is providing all of the funding to post-secondary education and most of the funding to health care in the Province of B.C. The same thing exists in other provinces, but not to the same degree. British Columbia is the worst offender.

This is not the only difficulty that we have in the Province of British Columbia. As far as young people participating in education beyond the secondary school level, going to colleges, universities, technical schools or institutes of one kind or another, are concerned, we have the lowest rate of anywhere in Canada. Fewer people per capita in the Province of B.C. go on to post-secondary studies than in any other area of Canada. Considering the complexity of the world as we know it, the rapidly changing world and workforce, the fact that British Columbians are not being trained and educated as are people in other provinces at the post-secondary level causes many of us much concern.

British Columbia also has the notoriety of being the only province that has an all debt student aid program in Canada. When you look at the various aid programs provinces have for students, B.C. is the worst of all in Canada. Not only do we have fewer students participating in post-secondary institutions, we have less support system to enable them to do so. For an average person it costs $6,000 on an annual basis to send an individual on to further education and training.

Bill C-96 reduces the amount of money that traditionally would go to our post-secondary education and health care systems by $5.6 billion over the next five years. That is a cut of $5,600 million over the next five years. British Columbia alone will have a cut of $650 million. What alternatives does that leave a province like British Columbia? It can increase its deficit by $650 million. That is one thing; simply pass this incredible debt burden along to the province and the people of British Columbia and put them further and further into debt. Another alternative is to increase taxes at the provincial level in British Columbia to make up the $650 million shortfall. Or we can cut services. Any of these options causes all kinds of problems. The last alternative is likely the one the Social Credit Government of B.C. will follow. The provincial Government is anti-education, anti-intellectual and in many cases anti-people. Consequently the first reaction of that Government will be to cut services. As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, that alarms me considerably.

Over the last few years we have seen the public school education system destroyed in British Columbia. I could recount untold examples of the reduced levels of educational opportunities young people in B.C. are now experiencing. For example, science is a rapidly changing field, yet there are many classrooms where four and five students have to share a textbook published 15 or 20 years ago which does not reflect the realities of the scientific world today. There are considerable needs for young people with special learning problems, yet learning assistance teachers and various support groups and classes have all been cut from the budgets. At the other end of the spectrum where you have groups of gifted and talented students who should be nurtured and encouraged into new and creative areas to develop their talents to the maximum, programs of that kind have essentially disappeared. We could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. We have literally seen the life snuffed out of our educational system.

Similarly with health care. When you go into our emergency wards the first thing you see is a big sign on the door saying you have to pay a fee to have a broken arm or a racked up shoulder attended to. You have to come up and pay a user fee to get into a hospital in British Columbia. I cannot imagine the intolerable situation further cuts will create right across Canada but especially in the Province of B.C. where people have already been so hard pressed in the area of education.

With regard to operating grants for universities in my province, in 1972 the provincial government expenditure was about 6 per cent. The last figures we have are for 1980-84. At that time the expenditure was down to just over 3 per cent. Over that period of time we saw a decrease in support for our universities. At the same time student enrolments are skyrocketing. I have all sorts of graphs and charts which indicate that while enrolments are going up, while the number of patients in hospitals are increasing due to our aging population and while costs are going up as a result of inflation year after year, the operating grants to hospitals, universities and colleges are decreasing. This is very serious.

I have raised this matter in public meetings in my constituency, as I am sure have other Parliamentarians. I can honestly say that the public is shocked when told that the Government of Canada believes it is now appropriate to reduce expenditures on post-secondary education and health care. People simply do not believe that. They believe I have my facts wrong, that I must not be telling the reality of the situation. I then produce a copy of Bill C-96 which shows that the traditional contributions to the provinces are being reduced by $5.6 billion over the next five years. In the Province of British Columbia people are shaking their heads in disbelief at the provincial government reducing opportunities for our human resources to be educated and trained to maximize talents and expertise. Now they find that the Government in Ottawa plans to do the same thing with grants for post-secondary education and health care. They find that unbelievable.

I would like to say in conclusion that this move by the Government is, in a sense, very biased against certain Canadians. It contains a geographic as well as an income bias. Those people who come from middle and low-income families will find it even more difficult to pursue post-secondary education and obtain appropriate health care. If you live in an area of Canada which does not have a post-secondary education institution nearby to enable you to commute from home, the additional cost will be prohibitive. It is now an impossibility for growing numbers, particularly those in the outlying regions of Canada, to pursue their studies. For that reason I encourage the Government at the eleventh hour to reconsider Bill C-96 and stop it in its tracks before it goes any further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any questions or comments? There being no questions or comments, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) on debate.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was under the assumption that you would normally go from one side of the House to the other. There are several government speakers this afternoon and perhaps you would be kind enough to recognize—

Mr. Gauthier: That's not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not consider that to be a point of order. I did not see the Hon. Member rising. He has to be pretty fast on his feet if he wants me to recognize him.

Mr. Nickerson: It's just that I am so far away.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would be delighted to listen to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). I have recognized the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. If the Hon. Member wants to speak after the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has spoken, I would be glad to recognize him.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): And we will be pleased to listen to him.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, that just proves the assertion we have made all along, that members of the Government simply are not quick enough to keep up with the Opposition.

The debate we are engaged in is probably the most important debate that has been conductd in this House all year. It goes to very vital issues which affect the lives of everyone: the quality of our education and the quality of our health care. It is very important that in this debate everyone attempt to deal with the issues in a clear and cohesive way, and with the proper information.

I want to draw the attention of the House to comments made by a Conservative Member of Parliament from the Province of Manitoba, the Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay). In committee hearings on Bill C-96, which took place on Monday, June 9, the Member for St. Boniface was accusing the Government of Manitoba, which appeared that day, of engaging in the worst and biggest piece of disinformation since the days of Tokyo Rose, a person who I presume was in operation before the Member for St. Boniface was within range of conscious hearing.

I make the case that if the Member for St. Boniface was a little more interested in serving the interests of the people of Manitoba and less in acting as a flack for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he would not have engaged in a very serious and inexcusable development of information that was not accurate, thereby twisting and distorting the case which was being made.

The Member for St. Boniface was trying to make the case that the present provisions of Bill C-96 were more than generous, that they would be of great help and assistance to those people who want quality health care and education in the Province of Manitoba, and that it was one of the most fair and equitable measures which could be instituted. He cited some figures which indicated that during the period from 1979 to 1985 there was only a 7 per cent increase in funding under the Established Programs Financing and a 50 per cent increase in inflation. Those are not the facts. That is simply not the case. In fact, for that period of time the funding under the Established Programs Financing increased 106 per cent and the rate of inflation was only 80 per cent. There was a net 26 per cent increase in federal funding for education and health care. This totally and completely refutes the facts alleged by the Member for St. Boniface.

Why are members of the Government so intent on distorting? The reason is in part that they know that this Bill is a clear contradiction of a commitment which was made by the presesnt Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in August of 1983 when he promised all the provinces a fair share of funding for health and education. On August 24, 1983, the Prime Minister spoke in the Crocodile Room of the Peter Pan Motel. We see that the Prime Minister has substantially up-graded the places in which he stays. It is a big jump from the Peter Pan Motel in New Glasgow to the Pierre Hotel in New York.

In the Crocodile Room of the Peter Pan Motel the Prime Minister declared, with all the wonderful sincerity to which Canadians have become accustomed, that the Government would restore the federal share of health and education to a minimum of 50 per cent and that in some places such as New Brunswick and British Columbia it would be more than 50 per cent. Those brave words are now being camouflaged by the statements of the Members opposite as they realize that the real intent of this Bill is to substantially reduce the federal share in these programs.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Crocodile tears.

Mr. Axworthy: My colleague reminds me that from the Crocodile Room to crocodile tears is now the basic formula for Conservative Members of Parliament. What a difference two years makes, and what a difference two years will make in the future.

I would like to speak about what this debate means to the individuals involved. The net result of EPF cut-backs for the Province of Manitoba by the year 1990-91 will be a loss of $89 million. You could take the figure even higher if the Government had committed itself to the principle of the Peter Pan Motel statement and the shortfall would be $300 million.

What that $89 million means for university students is a doubling of tuition fees from $989 to $2,000 a year. Put yourself in the place of a family who wants their child to go to university. Think of the difference it will make. What will it mean for a lot of modest income families who have already been hit by an excessive number of tax increases in the Government's Budgets? What it really means is a large number of students will not be able to attend university in Manitoba. That is all it means. They simply will not be able to go.

Let me give you another figure to put this thing in perspective. The proposed shortfall in funding amounts to the entire operating budget of Manitoba's community colleges. Once again the province is faced with either raising taxes substantially or cutting back on the opportunities for people to receive training in community colleges.

The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) has been a prime spokesman for the Conservatives, telling us what awful things the Liberals did when in Government. I tell you that when it came to community colleges, the federal Government assisted the Province of Manitoba. We assisted in substantially expanding Red River Community College to the extent of 1,200 seats. We brought in a new business management program for the University of Manitoba. We helped build a brand new technical vocational high school which is available to students of all ages on a 24-hour basis, six days a week. We assisted in developing the Keewatin community college and developed a new program at the University of Brandon so they could reach out to native people around the province. We expanded opportunities for community college education. The present Government is reducing those opportunities. That is the difference between the two Governments. We believed in education as an investment. We believed in giving people the opportunity to develop new skills to meet new challenges in the workplace. We did not undertake programs which would cut back on those opportunities.

Let us talk for a moment about health care in the Province of Manitoba. The shortfall resulting from this new Act will equal the total of all doctors' fees paid in the province. We know what a difficult problem it is for the provinces to negotiate acceptable fees for doctors. We see this incredible tragedy occuring in Ontario. Yet here we can equate the cut-backs to the total of all doctors' fees. Another figure is even more dramatic. The shortfall under this legislation amounts to the full operating cost of 78 of 80 hospitals in the Province of Manitoba. However you calculate it, it amounts to complicity by 210 members of the Conservative caucus from one end of the country to another in an act of severe surgery on our health care system. There is simply no way we will be able to maintain the quality of service we require.

I must appeal to Conservative Members of Parliament who know better. They have been involved in education and in health care and know what the requirements are. I appeal to their best judgment. Why do they allow those sort of crazy characters in the Department of Finance to get away with this? We have heard so much from Conservatives about how the market dictates and we have seen the results. The fields of energy and trade are in total chaos. The economic structure of this country is dissolving. Why do they allow the public sector to withdraw from those areas which clearly have to be supported by public funds?

I think what they are gambling on is that somehow the provinces will be unable to withstand the political pressure in their own jurisdictions and will have to maintain the quality of service. Do you know what that means for an average Manitoba family by the year 1990-91, about four years away? It means an additional tax load of $1,200. This is not acceptable. The Government says we all have to share in the sacrifice involved in bringing the deficit down. We all have to share in the great national goal of getting our fiscal house in order. Yet how can they argue that the burden is being shared equally when the top 3 per cent or 4 per cent of income earners get a grab-bag of tax benefits such as the $500,000 capital gains exemption? That is sheer discrimination. That is not sharing the burden equally.

We go back to that famous phrase of the Minister of Finance. He said what we have to do is encourage people to get richer and that will help the economy grow. Look at the price we have to pay. Look at the anguish created.

The Government says that the most important economic initiative it has put forward is the free trade proposals. The Prime Minister says he is going to fight an election on making Canada more competitive and productive. We are going to do battle with those Americans under the free trade system. He is asking us to undertake a great leap of faith, but he then ties anchors to our feet.

How do you become more productive when you cut back on education? How do you get more researchers, better managers, more productive industries when you cut back on universities and community colleges? How can you tell Canadians to go out and take on the world and become smarter and brighter when you cut back on research programs? We heard today in the House that $60 million is being cut from small business research programs. How do you expect Canada to meet new competition if you bring the barriers down and force us to go out and compete with the U.S. or the Japanese or the Europeans who put far more money into their educational programs, not to mention research and development? Yet we are cutting back. What an incredible contradiction. It makes you wonder who formulates public policy.

We have the Department of Finance sort of shrinking our ability to educate and train people and do research. We have the Prime Minister on television on Monday night saying that this is Canada's chance to grow and prosper. We are talking about the charge of the light brigade in this House. We have a bunch of people who think that somehow it is romantic to run into a total and complete wall of fire, and destroy the country while we are doing it. There is nothing attractive about that. If that is the kind of risk the Prime Minister is putting on the table, then I suggest he read the history of British generals and see how many times they made mistakes, because that is what he is asking us to do.

I am here today to say that in Manitoba, a province of a million people, a productive, a useful province, look what the Government is going to do to it. It is going to squeeze it dry and force people to leave. It is going to force it to cut back on the very institutions that have given vitality to our province. We are not big and rich in resources. We do not have the kind of economic dynamics of southern Ontario, and we rely on our wits and the skills of our people to survive. We take great pride in our institutions.

In my constituency we have one of the best universities in the country, the University of Manitoba. It has supplied everything from the ambassador of Washington to half the scriptwriters in Hollywood. This will all come to an end soon, because this Government is going to turn off the tap.

In the Province of Manitoba we know we must move and change our economy. We must shift into a higher phase of high technology to allow our resource sectors and our agricultural sector to become more productive.

In the meantime the Government wiped out the National Research Centre that was going to Winnipeg.

Mr. Dick: You had too much.

Mr. Axworthy: They say we had too much. What a stupid statement to make. How can they say that a province can have too much research. How can they be so silly, as that Conservative Member, that somehow by getting even, by having some kind of political revenge movement you are going to cut back on the ability of a province to help its farmers and manufacturers become more productive? That shows the kind of peevish, small mindedness of this Government, when its whole attitude is that it would rather wreak some degree of momentary political satisfaction, and sacrifice an opportunity for an important region of this country to keep up with the modern demands of a new age.

It is no wonder this Government is falling into disfavour. It is no wonder that the Prime Minister in the Province of Manitoba has an approval rating of 22 per cent, the lowest record of any Prime Minister in this country in that province. It is no wonder when the Government is cutting back on the hospitals, the research centres, and the community colleges simply to show how tough they can be. I will tell you, it will not take long for the people of Manitoba and the people of Canada to show them just how wrong they are. The clock is ticking and the time is running out.

The point of the debate today is that in the meantime a lot of hurt can be done. A lot of students will not be able to go back to school. A lot of people will not get the kind of health care that they require, or the outreach programs in the inner City of Winnipeg and the northern communities of our province. The people will not have the kind of health care they require simply because a smug, self-righteous group is saying it wants to cut back on Government expenditures. It is going to share the burden. There is no sharing of a burden, the Government is simply shifting the burden to those least able to pay and those regions least able to support those programs. As long as we can we will oppose the intent of this legislation and make an appeal to the people of this country to give a clear message to the Conservative Members of Parliament, that they have gone too far.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) had to say. In fact, last week, I had a chance to visit the beautiful city of Winnipeg. I noticed that in his speech, the Hon. Member said that we were hardly interested in education and were cutting back on education. I wish he would explain something for me. I visited the Canadian Research Institute, an impressive $35 million building that is completely empty and that was supposed to be used by the National Research Centre. I would like to know why the National Research Centre decided against occupying this building in July 1984, a month or two before the election.

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. The answer is very simple. In the first economic statement put forward by the present Minister of Finance the Government of Canada cut back its allocation to the NRC. It was as simple as that. The NRC had been given a grant to put up a building, to buy the equipment and put in the staff, to make that a major centre for industrial technology in Canada. We were going to become a world class centre.

Mr. Dick: Why didn't you people fill it? It was empty when you people were there?

Mr. Axworthy: Once again we have one of these stupid comments from a Conservative Member. The fact of the matter is that we made the decision to locate the NRC centre there, we provided the funding, the construction was started, the staff were moving, and at the very time the Government made its decision in the economic statement staff were on their way from around Canada to go to Winnipeg. Everything was planned. Everything was going into place. Everything was going to happen—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Does the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) have a question or a comment?

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: I don't think the Hon. Member understood my question. I mentioned the National Research Centre's decision not to move into the building in July 1984. If I remember correctly, we were elected in September 1984. I wonder how the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) could have planned a Budget to prevent staff and equipment from entering the building, since the NRC's decision was made in June 1984. Your Government built the Institute. If that is how the Liberal Party was spending or spreading money around at the time, I wish the Hon. Member would explain why a building that cost $35 million is empty.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, let me explain something about the geography of Manitoba. It gets very cold in the winter and you do not move into a building that has not yet been built. The building had not been completed until 1985. The decision to build the NRC was made in 1984. The funding was allocated, planning was underway, the construction was started and the hole was dug. In June of 1984 all you had on that site was a big hole and some basic mouldings going in. The building was not completed until 1985.

When the present Government was elected in September of 1984, in its economic statement of, I believe it was in November, the Government eliminated the funding that would have allowed the building to be filled. Now they are racing around trying to find some replacement for it. You cannot fill a building that has not yet been completed. All the planning had been done and the NRC was ready to go, until such time as this Government withdrew, cut its budget and said it would not go ahead with the NRC in Winnipeg. That is why a lot of people in Winnipeg will never forgive this Government; it took away their future.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, as a western Canadian I think that the pie should be shared equally across the country. When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was a Minister in the previous Government, it seems to me that there was something in the neighbourhood of $700 million to $800 million poured into his riding. As a westerner from Saskatoon, where we did not have any Liberal Members at the time, I wondered why all this extravagance was taking place in one particular constituency and one city and was not being shared throughout the country.

We now have empty coffers and are forced to pull back. I think that is the prudent step to take when one has overspent. The Hon. Member believes that it was realistic to overspend and cause an imbalance in those days. Why should he stand up now and be so self-righteous and criticize us for trying to be prudent with government spending?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, first, the Hon. Member has his figures wrong. The fact is that a number of important federal investments were made in the Province of Saskatchewan. For example, there was the major decision to move the Hydrology Institute to the City of Saskatoon to provide that city with a very important research facility. If the Hydrology Institute went to Saskatoon because of a Liberal decision, we equally felt that Winnipeg should be designated as a centre of industrial technology, as part of a national research plan. There was no attempt to concentrate on one region or the other. We were attempting to develop an industrial strategy for western Canada.

Mr. Ravis: What about the other $700 million?

Mr. Axworthy: The Member throws figures around, but the figures are not accurate. The fact is that we signed industrial agreements in every province. Furthermore, we left a lot in the regional industrial fund so that Members opposite could make the same kind of claims after they came to Government, as a result of a program that we put into place.

We were also building major highways in western Canada. We undertook the $640 million modernization of the railway system that has been a very important catalyst in giving western Canada not only a modern transportation system but in helping it to industrialize.

Members opposite keep coming back to the point that they are trying to be prudent. What is prudent about giving a special deal to 3 per cent or 4 per cent of the wealthiest Canadians on a capital gains tax write-off, while at the same time charging average families in Manitoba and every other province an extra $1,200? That is not being prudent, that is being unfair. That is the difference.

The Government says that it wants to trim its sails. We were doing the same thing and we had a deficit reduction plan that was on the same track.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: They laugh. The fact of the matter is that our formula was working as well as theirs.

Mr. Dick: You did not convince the Canadian people.

Mr. Axworthy: It was just as important because we set the ground work for ecomomic recovery in this country. We brought the inflation rate down to 4 per cent or 5 per cent. That began to happen under our Government because of our initiatives. The fact is that the Conservatives can take advantage of it, but they should be on their knees every day thanking God and the Liberals for helping to create economic recovery in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: Do you think anyone believes you?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Dick: If the Liberal Party was doing such a magnificent job in lowering inflation and reducing the deficit, why did the Canadian people not believe the Liberals when they tried to sell their great plan in the summer of 1984? They kicked you out and elected the biggest majority in history.

Mr. Axworthy: If the Hon. Member is going to use that as an indicator, I would simply ask him, if he is doing such a wonderful job, why has the percentage of popular support for his Party fallen from 58 per cent to 37 per cent in two years? That has been the most precipitous drop in public opinion of any Government in the history of Canada. If the Member is typical of most Tories, who simply gauge the effectiveness of their policies by public opinion polls, I suggest he should be far more concerned about what his Government is doing and should vote against this legislation. It is legislation like this that has provided that major drop in support of his Government after only two years.

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member referred to the construction of the National Reseach Council in Winnipeg. What were the Conservatives saying about that during the last election campaign, while construction was still going on? Did they indicate that they would shut it down if they were elected, or did they indicate that they would do something for science? We know what the Conservatives ultimately did for science.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting question which perhaps relates to the previous question. The Conservatives made many promises. However, the closing down of the NRC was never mentioned. In fact, several Conservative candidates with whom I debated, with some success at the time, were saying that they supported that initiative. They thought it was wonderful that a city in western Canada would be given the opportunity to move into a new high-technology age. They endorsed the concept that all the regions of Canada should share equally in the development of new high-technology.

When that decision was made in November, 1984 it came as a tremendous shock to the people of that province. They realized that our chance to move into a new age of high-technology was stopped suddenly and dramatically short by a short-sighted Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has terminated. Debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that you were able to recognize me. I understand that it might cause considerable eye strain to see from one end of the room to the other, being so far away.

The subject of Bill C-96 is not only worthy of debate, it is worthy of prolonged debate. On the one hand it concerns the very heart of social expenditures in Canada, expenditures on health and education, while on the other hand it goes to the way Canada ought to arrange its national finances. Therefore, the subject matter has been worthy of prolonged debate, and the Government has seen to it that there has been adequate opportunity for that debate. The time comes when constructive criticism degenerates into mindless opposition. That is what we have seen happen over the last few days. For that reason, it was necessary, by means of time allocation, to put the Opposition out of its misery, so to speak.

We have witnessed peculiar spectacles in the House over the last couple of days. We have seen a contest between the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) as to who could use up the most parliamentary time and do a better job at preventing Parliament from doing the legitimate job for which it was elected. I believe that one Member spoke for two and a half hours while the other spoke for some three hours, saying absolutely nothing during the whole period. As parliamentarians, we cannot countenance that type of negative activity.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on behalf of the Government this afternoon and to set the record straight. I will deal with the truth, which I know is a rather alien concept for some Members opposite. However, that is what I intend to do this afternoon, because we have heard much from the other side and not nearly enough from the Government side.

The intent of Bill C-96 is to preserve the integrity of the system of health and education funding in Canada. When one considers the financial mess left by the previous Government, it will become evident that it put the whole social system in jeopardy. Were we to continue along the same road as the previous Government, making expenditures that were much greater than revenues, building up a greater debt and having to devote a much greater proportion of revenues to interest payments and amortization on that debt, thereby allowing even less to be spent in these important social areas, the long term effects would have been obvious.

The Government, when it came into office on September 17, 1974, had to put in place a system, a plan, over a series of years, because it has taken a long time, many years of Liberal Government, to get into this mess, and we cannot get out of it overnight. We know that it will take several years. We had to put into effect a plan that would preserve necessary social expenditures on the one hand, and put our financial house in order on the other. That was done. It was announced on three major occasions, with the economic statement in 1984 and with the Budgets in 1985 and then again in 1986. Most of the elements of the plan are now in place. If we look at the projections, we will see that by about 1990-1992, the trend will have been altered. We will then be back on a sound financial track.

What the Bill does is ensure enhanced payments to the provinces for health care and for higher education. It is not cutting back at all. This is a red herring that has been dragged into the debate by Hon. Members opposite. Nothing could be further from the truth, because what we do with the Bill is ensure that payments will continue to increase to the provinces. Payments will remain at the 50 per cent level, the magic figure that we have worked on for so long in this country. We will not, I repeat, be cutting back. In fact, transfer payments under EPF from the federal Government to the provincial Governments will increase at the rate of about $1 billion a year over the next five or six years. At present, the transfer of payments amounts to $16.7 billion a year. If we look forward to the 1990-91 fical year, by that time they will have increased to $20.7 billion a year. I defy anyone on the other side to explain how that might be a decrease. To my way of thinking, it is an increase of $4 billion a year in transfers to the provinces.

In the time period to which I have just referred, the total aggregate transfers from the federal Government to the provincial Governments will be some $90 billion, and that will be an increase of $25 billion over the amount of moneys transferred in the previous five-year period, a very significant increase in the amounts of money that will be made available to the provinces and territories of this nation.

Other Hon. Members have taken the opportunity to describe the real or imagined effects on the provinces from whence they hail. I, would like to do something similar with respect to the area of Canada which I have the honour to represent in the House.

The transfers under EPF to the Northwest Territories, in 1985-86, amount to $31.6 million. It is not as big as the amounts considered when one speaks of the Province of Ontario or the Province of Quebec, but it is a very significant amount of money. In the 1986-87 fiscal year, this amount will be increased to some $34 million. Here again, we have an increase of $2.5 million, a significant percentage increase. This is important; maybe relatively even more important to the area that I represent than it is to other parts of the country.

We have made great progress in the last 30 years or so in the field of health care. It was not that long ago that major killers in the area I represent were diseases like tuberculosis and pneumonia. Nowadays, very few people, if any, die of these diseases. The expectation of living to a ripe old age has been increased substantially. The infant mortality rates have decreased equally substantially. This has been due to the hard and diligent work of people in the employ of the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Health Department of the Territorial Government and, indeed, medical practitioners in the private sector. However, this has not been done without money. Anyone who has lived in that part of the country will know the importance of federal dollars that have gone into the area to help pay for these greatly appreciated increases in the level of health care in the territories. It is the same when we come to education.

In many areas, formal education is only a generation old; two generations at the most. We have a long way to go. Those moneys used for the purposes of higher education will be of inestimable benefit to the people of my area. We know it is something on which we must concentrate. The manner of life has significantly changed and will continue to change. Our young people must have the advantages of a full and proper education at the highest level if they are to be able to take advantage of the new opportunities as they occur.

Indeed, the financial provisions of the Bill go out of their way to assist those lower income areas of Canada. For the 1985-86 fiscal year, there is to be a supplementary equalization for those low-income provinces and territories, in the amount of some $285 million. That demonstrates that the Government of Canada remains generous, as generous as it possibly can be, with those areas of the country that are probably unable to afford all these benefits out of their own pockets. It is part and parcel of the Canadian home, where we help those who are least able to help themselves. However, the Government must bring expenditures more into line with revenues. This was the mandate given by the people of Canada to the new Government in 1984, because they realized, under the old system, that we were on the road to ruin.

If we look at the financial plan we find that by the year 1990-1991 the passage of this Bill will result in a saving of some $2 billion a year, and the aggregate saving between now and then, a five-year period, will be in the region of about $5.5 billion. I should note that projected expenditures of the Government of Canada in that year, 1990-91, by a combination of incentives, will be reduced by about $27 billion. The reduction of $2 billion in EPF transfers is, to my way of thinking, quite reasonable to expect. I think there will easily be compensation by increases in efficiency, greater efficiency in the provision of necessary services in the health and educational fields to Canadians. I do not think that it will bring about any unnecessary hardships on the citizenry of Canada.

In conclusion, I believe that this is realistic and necessary legislation. It combines fiscal responsibility on the one hand with a real commitment by the Government to ensure high quality and high quality education for all Canadians on the other.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, after listening to my colleague bragging about the merits of Bill C-96 I would like to ask him how the provinces can be expected to administer health services after being deprived of millions of dollars? Can he explain to me how they will manage to make these budget cut-backs? By reducing the number of hospital beds? Or by closing down certain departments or clinics? Or emergency services? In addition, will they have to reduce services to the elderly? Or will they cut down on cancer research?

Earlier I was listening to my colleague who said that tuberculosis is on the decline, that we have fewer cases in Canada. I should simply point out to him that the number of tuberculosis cases in Canada has been increasing this past year.

Speaking of health, one of my colleagues who was a director of a major hospital in Montreal told me that, given the new AIDS cases, hospitals have limited accommodation because these cases cost a lot of money. When budgets are slashed, hospitals must limit the number of such patients.

I would like to know whether my colleague can answer these questions. Would he answer this: How does he think hospitals will be able to take in more patients and administer with that much less money—$8 million in this case?

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, there we have it again. The Hon. Member continues to refer to budget cuts. In fact, that is not the case. For the province of the Hon. Member, the Province of Quebec, in 1985-86 the payment will be $4.09 billion. The following year, in 1986-87, the amount will be $4.33 billion. That is an increase of about one-quarter of one billion dollars. I would imagine that, especially with the Liberal Government in Quebec, which the hon. lady seems to favour so much, the province will be able to use that additional one-quarter of one billion dollars for many good and useful purposes. My suspicion is that it will not be forced to cut out hospital beds. Rather, with that amount of new money it could very well bring into being even more hospital beds than are in place now, if it does not choose to divert the money to some other purpose.

With respect to the question of medical research, it should be noted that in addition to EPF transfers the federal Government spends something in the order of $1.5 billion annually in other health-related fields. That is direct spending. Some of that money would go to medical research. There are also granting institutions funded by the Government that put money into that very good and valuable purpose. I think that the fears which the Hon. Member brings to the floor of the House of Commons are completely unfounded.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, my colleague mentioned the Government of Quebec, so I will refer him to the statement made by Mr. Gérard-D. Lévesque about the financial cut-backs advocated in Bill C-96. In my opinion, the Province of Quebec does not feel particularly pampered, nor is it particularly pleased with what is being proposed in Bill C-96. I think that Mr. Lévesque reacted publicly and said to the federal Government that before making such drastic cut-backs—he does not think you are doing them a favour—the federal Government might be well advised to clean up its own act, tend to its own garden as it were, and then cut down federal expenditures so as to be able to make more equitable equalization payments to the provinces. That is in response to what he said about the Government of Quebec.

This may surprise the Hon. Member, but once more, when we are speaking about education, I would really like to know how these cut-backs will be made. There are certainly departments in universities which will have to restrict the number of registrations and universities which will have to close.

As far as research is concerned, there is cancer research in the field of medicine, as well as architectural research and high technology, which is now very important in our universities. There have been major cut-backs in these areas which everyone has deplored.

Could you explain once again how the universities will apply these cut-backs in your opinion?

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the question is the same except with the word "education" substituted for "medical services". My reply is exactly the same with the interchange of those two concepts.

We are not cutting back expenditures; we are increasing them. I am not surprised that the provinces are saying that they would like more. One who has been part and parcel of a municipal Government knows that when the province comes along and says: "You will only receive a certain amount of assistance to fund a new sewer project", it is a natural reaction to say that more is needed. So of course the provinces are saying that they would like more. However, when they come to think about it, when they realize the financial situation of the provinces and of Canada as a whole, they must come to the realization—any sane and reasonable person would—that what the Government is doing in this Bill is the fairest and most honest for all concerned.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. I listened with interest to his remarks.

Coming from the region of Canada from which he does, the most one would have expected from him in the way of support of this Bill is that he would have remained silent in his seat. However, for him to stand up and take the position that what is being proposed in this Bill is good for the people who sent him to speak for them here in this place is an amazing proposition.

When he was answering my colleague's question he took the position that there would be no cuts because, after all, every year the provinces would receive more under the new formula than they would have received before. He said that, naturally, they would like still more, but that is just human nature. I have some news for the Hon. Member. We are not talking about the simple fact of human nature; we are talking about the existing agreement which was cut back by the present Government. When we look at the "might have been" we are talking about what his part of Canada might have received if the present Government had allowed the old arrangement to continue into the future, instead of cutting back that arrangement established by the Liberal Government. When one looks at that and compares it to what has been imposed upon Yukon, the Northwest Territories and the other provinces by the new Government, then these are cuts. These are multi-billion dollar cuts when added up over a five-year period.

The people he represents are not as stupid as he hopes. The Governments are not asking to be given more than they would otherwise receive, on the basis of human nature. What they are saying is that they have done their planning on the basis of a federal Government which believed in medicare and which got the provinces to enter the medicare system by promising it generous support forever. That Government is now falling back on the Constitution and what it considers to be hard times, although when one looks at some of the other items on which this Government has money for it is hard to say that the Government is facing the realities of hard times.

Because his constituents know this, I want to ask the Hon. Member this question. Is the real situation not that there are small increases in the forecasts provided for medicare, and these increases are far less than the increases which would have prevailed if the existing agreement had been continued into the future? Is that not the real situation?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, by that question, the Hon. Member displays his ignorance of financing systems that have been put in place for the Northwest Territories. He should have known that the system there is much different than it is in most parts of Canada. In fact, most transfers of funds from the federal Government to the territorial Government take place, not by virtue of EPF or CAP but rather under a system of operating capital subventions from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. That is where it is carried in the federal Budget.

The new Government did what the territories wanted for many years but were never able to negotiate previously, and that is to put into effect the system of formula financing. This system ensures that the Territories receive on an escalating basis those moneys they need for the very important purposes of health and education. In fact, what is happening in the Territories is that each year an ever increasing amount of transfers is taking place, and that will happen until the Territories have their own form of revenue, presumably by way of royalties from natural resources.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson)—Finance—Transfer of family farms—Tax inquiry; the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms.McDonald)—Trade—Imposition of tariff on imported books—Request for withdrawal. (b) Government policy; the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault)—National Revenue—Control of charitable organizations.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Ms. Copps (p. 14483).

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Have the 10 minutes of questions and comments expired?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There were more than 10 minutes.

Mr. Frith: My apologies.

[Translation]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will be able to make his comments after my speech.

[English]

It is remarkable to think how many people in Canada miss the marvellous goings-on that take place in the House of Commons on quiet afternoons like this one. It is an experience which few people want to miss to see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) praying for the Conservative Party to get on its knees to thank the Liberal Party for the great prosperity which was left to it when it took office. Perhaps it is an even more shocking experience for Canadians to listen to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) talk about the mandate given the Conservative Party when it reached power. Of course, the mandate with which it reached power was a mandate directly and completely contrary to what the Government is now planning to do with respect to this piece of legislation.

For those who have been trying to make sense of what is taking place here today, for the last 45 minutes or an hour there has been a debate between a very black pot and a very black kettle, each attempting to point out how dark and dingy the other is. We are talking about a reduction which has gradually taken place since 1977 in the level of support provided by the federal Government to the provincial Governments.

Looking at the percentages of support the federal Government provided to the provinces in 1977-78, the federal share of health and post-secondary education financing was 48.7 per cent, almost 50 per cent. At that time, the Liberal Party began to reduce systematically the amount of money which was to be made available for the provinces to provide these basic services to Canadians. By 1982-83 the figure had fallen to 42.6 per cent, reflecting the elimination of a revenue guarantee which provinces had enjoyed in the past. By 1985-86 the figure was much the same when the Conservative Party took power. Then the Conservative Party, with a mandate to return to the percentages of 1977, instead followed precisely in the footsteps of the Liberal Party before it by cutting back yet further the amount of direct financial assistance provided to the provinces for these basic services.

According to the stastistics, by 1988-89, 39 per cent of the cost of health and post-secondary education will be covered by federal expenditures. By 1990-91 only 36 per cent will be covered. In other words, we started off in 1977 with about half of these crucial expenditures covered by the federal Government and we will end up in 1990-91 with just over one-third of them being covered.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic can make the case that this is not a cut and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry can make the case that this is all the fault of the Conservatives, but the actual fact of which the people of Canada should be aware is that this has been a systematic attack, first by the Liberals and then by the Conservatives, on the capacity of the provinces to provide for health and post-secondary education services.

Perhaps money spent on health and post-secondary education is looked upon by some Hon. Members as wasted money, as money that goes down the drain. That seems in fact to be the philosophy that has been followed in the attempt to cut back support by the other two Parties in the House. In fact, such expenditures are anything but wasted. They are anything but an attempt to lose possibilities for Canada. Above all it is an investment just like any company makes; only in this case it is an investment by a country in the skills and abilities of its people. In the case of health, it is an investment in the workforce, students, and retired people who will be better off. As a consequence of this investment, they will be able to contribute better to the country. In the case of post-secondary education, it is even more clear-cut. We are talking about an investment in the institutions and agencies which provide people with the skill and ability to make a contribution to society and to be competitive in the future international economy.

These cut-backs have taken place systematically from 1977. They are in fact counter-productive to the future of Canada. They are ripping away at the very basis of our future. They are, to use an old English cliché, very much pound foolish and penny wise. They are attempting to cut back in areas where cut-backs will have devastating effects upon the future of our young people and upon the future of our workforce, indeed upon the future of our entire population.

At this point I should like to talk about mandates. The Conservative Party of Canada fought cut-backs when it was in opposition. It said that cut-backs would have a damaging effect upon the country. For instance, the PC campaign handbook for the 1984 election specifically indicated the PC position in respect of post-secondary education. In part it read:

> We would return to the 1977 funding formula though we cannot compensate the provinces for their six and five funding losses.

Perhaps it was nice of the Conservatives to admit that they would not compensate the provinces for past losses, but at least there should have been honesty. They should have said to Canadians that if they were given a mandate to do it, they intended to cut back even further than the Liberal cut-backs of the past.

Every Canadian has suffered and will suffer as a result of the cut-backs. I could take you, Mr. Speaker, through province by province to give examples of the kinds of cut-backs which have occurred in hospitals and universities. In fact, ordinary Canadians are bearing the burden for what has taken place. However, it is particularly striking to see the consequences of the effort of the Conservatives to accelerate cut-backs and to take cut-backs yet one step further. I should like to quote from a letter which one of our representatives received from Robert Bourassa, the Premier of Quebec.

> You probably know—

—Mr. Bourassa was saying—

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act

—that the Quebec Finance Minister, Mr. Gerard D. Lévesque, announced in his budget speech on May 1, 1986, that our Government has had to impose a surtax on business. This surtax will compensate for the shortfall in revenue of the Quebec Treasury caused, on the one hand, by the $66 million payment which Quebec did not receive under the equalization program, and on the other hand, by the $82 million reduction for 1986-87 in transfer payments for health care and post-secondary education. The Quebec Government has promised to reconsider this surtax imposed because of federal cut-backs if the federal Government keeps its commitment regarding equalization, withdraws its Bill C-96 and initiates negotiations with the provinces immediately.

Mr. Speaker, this Government told Canadians that there would have to be discussions and negotiations with all the provinces before such changes were made. However, the Government did not keep its promise. It decided to do the opposite. This Government decided to do exactly what the Liberal Government had done before. This Government decided to make cut-backs, and even though the Members opposite pretend that they are not cut-backs, it has been shown that they are indeed cut-backs and that will be very hard on all Canadians.

[English]

It is with sadness that we see this kind of back stabbing of the Canadian people, this elimination of investment which is so crucial to our future health care and post-secondary educational facilities.

Surely it is possible, somehow in this Parliament, to have us come to our senses. These expenditures must be made. We should see them as investments in the future of Canada and cease this bloodthirsty attack on the tremendous needs of people across the country in terms of their future and the future of the country in respect of post-secondary education and health.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question. Would the Hon. Member explain his idea of how the six and five program applied to the delivery of health care when it was instituted in 1982?

• (1640)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I was quoting from the Conservative campaign handbook at that stage. I assume that under the six and five program there were attempts to reduce government expenditure, and as part of that reduction in government expenditure there was damage done to the amount of funding which was supposed to be available for post-secondary education and for health care. I made that reference because the key part of the commitment in the PC campaign handbook was to provide full funding from the past, but that mandate has not been respected. Indeed, the Conservatives have gone in the opposite direction. The Conservative Government has followed the course of the previous Government rather than respecting the promises which were made to the Canadian people.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member admit to the House so it is a matter of record that when the six and five program was introduced it specifically precluded health care? Health care was not affected by the six and five programs. I want that clear for the record, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne). Excuse me, but did the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) have any further comment?

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment. I would prefer anything that I say to be put on the record by me rather than by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), much as I respect him. I think, however, that the six and five program, while it may not have cut back health care funding, did have an impact with respect to post-secondary education. If the former Minister had been following my speech closely, he might have noted that I was quoting from the PC campaign handbook with respect to post-secondary education.

[Translation]

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Hon. Member's speech, and I was astonished when he informed the House that the Progressive Conservative Government had failed to consult the provinces before it decided to introduce this Bill. I wonder whether he realizes that in November 1984, January 1985, May 1985, September, November, December 1985, we had discussions with the provincial Ministers of Finance on this matter. When he says that we never consulted with the provinces, I wish he would explain why we met with the provincial Ministers of Finance, and perhaps he would care to withdraw what he said and say: Mr. Speaker, I made a mistake, it is true the Progressive Conservative Government consulted with the Ministers of Finance before bringing this Bill before Parliament.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, we have here a typical case of Conservative consultation. It is consultation that consists in making announcements and decisions and letting the provinces know about them. If it is true there is sufficient consultation, why did the Quebec Premier, in his letter, and that is the letter I quoted in this debate, why did he indicate that it was necessary to negotiate with the provinces? Why would he make such a suggestion if there is so much consultation on a decision that is a very difficult one for Canadians to accept?

[English]

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to again speak on Bill C-96. I would like to give a little background before getting into the specifics of the Bill, because it is misleading and unfair not to do that. You cannot take this one Bill out of context without looking at the Government's record and looking at the broad range of initiatives on which we are moving ahead.

Let me go back to November, 1984 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made a statement of financial direction, further confirmed by the May, 1985 budget, that financial transfers to the provinces would be included in deficit reduction measures so as to spread expenditure restraint as broadly and as fairly as possible. That announcement was made over 20 months ago.

Bill C-96 moderates the growth of the Established Programs Financing transfers as part of the general effort to restore stability to federal finances. Transfer payments, as many Members have said, are not being cut. They are still growing at a faster rate than other government program expenditures at about 5 per cent a year, as opposed to 2.9 per cent for discretionary spending. Even with the reduced rate of growth, EPF transfers will rise faster than inflation and faster than other government program expenditures. Transfer payments this year are expected to total $27 billion, $20 billion in cash transfers and $7 billion in tax points. EPF is the largest component of transfer payments. This year EPF is a $15.3 billion program contributing to the cost of health care and post-secondary education. That is approximately $508 per capita plus $42 per capita to finance extended health care services such as nursing homes. In the next five year period, EPF transfers will total $90 billion. That compares to the previous five years when total expenditures were $65 billion. It is an increase of $25 billion. To put it in another perspective, it is an increase of almost 40 per cent over the period we are discussing. As a result of slowing the rate of growth of transfer payments by 2 percentage points, some $2 billion will be saved in the 1990-1991 fiscal year.

Members will recall that there was an extensive consultation process on this important topic. The provincial Premiers met with our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Halifax. The final decision made by the Government was for a 5 per cent increase. That, as I have pointed out, is something in the order of 66 per cent over a 3 per cent level. It is a very general rate and is indicative of the Government's care and sensitivity to these two important topics of health care and post secondary education.

This change is part of the fiscal strategy to change transfer payments to reduce the deficit by some $20 billion in 1990-1991, and to cut $75 billion from the projected level of the national debt by the end of the decade.

Let us keep in mind that federal assistance for health care and post-secondary education has increased from $1.1 billion in 1967-68 to some $15.8 billion in the 1985-86 period, an average compound increase over that period of about 16 per cent. Growth of EPF cash and tax transfers will continue to be linked to the growth of the Canadian economy. The need for a firm and stable financial foundation to be maintained in order to ensure the high quality of health care and post-secondary institutions must be stressed. That is very central to the thinking of the Government. I will continue because we cannot pull out only one project and talk exclusively of it without knowing the background and without being honest about the realities of the fiscal situation in the country.

At the time of the November 8 statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the national debt was rising much faster than the economy was growing. The net public debt increased from 16.6 per cent of GNP in 1974-75 to some 45 per cent in 1984-85. As was stated, a status quo policy would result in net public debt rising to 63 per cent of GNP by 1990-91 and debt charges would rise to account for three-quarters of the deficit. Mounting debt burden and service pose a serious threat to the long-run growth of the economy. Those are some highlights from the statement the Minister made only weeks after we became the Government.

In the May 1985 Budget the federal Government proposed limiting the growth of transfer payments to provinces to effect savings of $2 billion by 1990-91. By 1990-91, cash transfers in respect to equalization in health care and post-secondary education are expected to represent about the same share of total federal program expenditures as they do today, which is 18 to 19 per cent. The May 1985 Budget was to reduce this year's deficit by $4.4 billion. It took 100 years to accumulate a debt of $18 billion, but it took the previous Government only approximately 15 years to create a staggering, awesome debt in the country of approximately $200 billion.

I would like to mention some highlights of the February 1986, Budget. Spending on non-statutory programs was predicted to decline by $500 million. That was the first decline in 20 years in that sector of our spending. Over the next five years, non-statutory programs are expected to grow by 2.7 per cent a year. The February 1986 Budget would reduce the deficit to under $30 billion and by the end of the decade it is expected to be cut by $22 billion. By that time our national debt will no longer be growing faster than the economy. By 1990, the deficit will be $26 billion less than it would have been had the Government not taken this responsible action and reversed the wild and irresponsible spending of the previous Government. By 1990, the cumulative effect of the deficit reduction measures will be to cut the projected growth of the national debt by approximately $97.5 billion.

I would like to touch on another initiative which the Government has taken to stop the leaks and the irresponsible spending of taxpayers' dollars. I would like to talk about the scientific research tax credits. There was an article in The Globe and Mail yesterday about Bell Canada which took advantage of an $85 million tax credit on some partnership units in a papermill in a same-day tax flip. The treasurer of that organization readily admitted that they had no plans to keep that investment. They had it for only hours but enjoyed a $85 million tax break. As announced in the last Budget, the Minister of Finance has shut that program down.

When scientific research tax credits were announced by the previous Government, a budget of approximately $200 million was allocated to it. Since the controls which should have been on that program were poorly thought out, it will end up costing Canadian taxpayers well over $2 billion, 10 times its original budget. We will also be eliminating tax shelters in recreational vehicles and yachts. We halted income splitting through interest-free loans between family members. We stopped the so-called "carve out transactions" in the oil and gas sectors.

We prevented the use of trust to distribute investment income tax free. Those are only a few of the measures that the Government took in its most recent Budget to show the fiscal responsibility and integrity which Canadians expect of the Government.

I do not intend to go off on a tangent, but I would like to refer to a topic which I intend to address next week when my Private Members' Motion will be debated. I am going to be following through on the thrust of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Bill in the United States which President Reagan signed into law last December. It essentially compels that Government to achieve a balanced Budget over a five-year period, with some exceptions. My motion is rather open-ended. I want it to go to committee so that the members of the committee and, subsequently, the House can decide if legislative steps need to be taken to bring our House completely into order in terms of fiscal responsibility.

I am looking forward to some discussion on that Private Members' Motion next week because I think it is vitally important. It is a crucial subject for Canadians. There is a growing awareness of how critically important this is to the country. We are not only throwing numbers around. This relates to the fiscal health of the country and our ability to increase social programs as we want to do. Due to the bizarre spending and giving away of taxpayers' dollars for well over a decade, the Government's ability to manoeuvre and improve certain programs has been impaired.

The reality is that almost 40 cents of every tax dollar must go to service the debt which was left to the Government to tackle. We are tackling it in a responsible way. We are not turning our back on it. We have had to consider hundreds of programs which were started in past years.

I want to commend all those who were involved in the Nielsen task force which went on for approximately 18 months. It studied 989 different projects within the Government. Dozens of men and women from the private sector devoted their time to come to Ottawa week after week to take a fresh look at these programs to discover how we could eliminate waste, utilize better ideas, and use tax dollars in a more efficient and prudent way. Many of us were very pleased when the report was tabled in the House. We were pleased with the process.

The report has been allocated to the respective committees and I am very hopeful that hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars will be saved in the coming months and years. Never before in recent decades has any Government undertaken such a comprehensive look at how tax dollars are treated and how they should be treated. The approach taken was very comprehensive and I am expecting tremendous results from it.

Another illustration of how comprehensive our progress has been is what has happened on the job creation front. We had to create a strategy of how to control spending while creating economic growth. The record there stands for itself. With regard to job creation alone, almost 600,000 new jobs have been created and almost 300,000 of those were for women. Youth unemployment has dropped from 18.4 per cent to 15.4 per cent since the Government was elected. Almost 60,000 jobs were created for the youth of the country.

There are other very responsible steps being taken on different social programs. Our system of unemployment insurance has not had a serious study in years and years. Now, thanks to the Minister responsible, the Forget Commission has toured the country and listened to dozens and dozens of witnesses. I am sure we are going to see a caring and sensitive approach to making improvements there.

Contrary to what the Opposition would have Canadians believe, this is a caring Government. We care so much that we want to get our financial house in order so that we can provide programs for the needy, the elderly and our youth. We are doing that while not turning our back on our responsibility to restore fiscal integrity to the Government. You cannot go on for decade after decade ignoring your revenue while spending so much. We had a Government which realized that its revenue was $65 billion but still put in place plans to spend $100 billion.

Let me repeat that Bill C-96 does not cut funding. It reduces the rate of growth of that funding by some 2 per cent a year while still increasing transfer payments by some $25 billion over five years, an increase of almost 40 per cent. Let me repeat and underscore the fact that deficit reduction is vital to the health of our economy. When interest rates and inflation fall, as they both have, it is due to better economic conditions. That has a very important impact on our health care and post-secondary education systems. They both benefit tremendously. No one cares as much as we do about the need for health care and post-secondary education systems second to none in the world.

As well, let me remind everyone that the job outlook some two years ago was pretty bleak for the youth of this country. However, thanks to the restored confidence the people of Canada have in this Progressive Conservative Government, the outlook for our youth after they get a post-secondary education is extremely bright. Our record can be examined in minute detail. It will show our sensitivity, how much we really care about all the people of this great country, our youth, the elderly, and the taxpayers.

Let me just touch on that point as well. We are one of the most highly taxed countries in the world. One of the last things the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) wanted to do in his Budgets was to impose further taxes. However, given what we inherited, there was very little choice. Canadians will examine the situation in total, not in isolation like the Opposition. They are going to be with us. Not without some reluctance, of course, but Canadians will respect our approach. It is for those reasons that I am very proud to be part of a Government which is turning this country around and restoring fiscal responsibility so that the outlook for Canadians in the future will be a lot brighter than it would have been under the previous Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will admit that during the last election campaign there was no suggestion that the federal Government would cut back its commitment to post-secondary education, research and medicare in the way it has. What the Government said it was going to do was to bring the Budget back into what the Conservatives considered a more proper balance and cut out the tremendous billions of dollars, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put it, of waste and extravagance in the Liberal Government. When I look at what the Government had to do to make savings in the Budget, the most important programs in the country being cut, I am reminded me of that promise. What happened to that promise? What has the Government done about that?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, let us talk about what was promised in the last election. The key promise was change. Change from fiscal irresponsibility. We certainly delivered on that. I do not know where the Liberal Government thought the money would come from but it certainly burdened the future of this country for I do not know how many years.

Canadians wanted change, and let me speak primarily about fiscal change. They wanted to restore the confidence of foreign investors in Canada. They wanted to restore the confidence of Canadian investors. The Hon. Member will know, if he checks the record, how much capital left this country. Investors did not want to be bothered coming here after they looked at things like FIRA and that agency's red tape and negative attitude. We inherited that situation and I think we brought about a tremendous amount of change. The Minister of Finance's latest Budget predicts a deficit under $30 billion. Discretionary spending has seen a reduction for the first time in 20 years. Money does not grow on trees and the taxpayers know that. They have been burdened unnecessarily because of excessive spending for 15 to 20 years. They want change and we have a very responsible Government and extremely able Minister of Finance who are going to bring about change.

I think Canadians have a growing understanding of what really happened over the last 15 years. I touched on the Nielsen task force report concerning some 900 programs which had never been looked at by the previous Government other than in a patchwork way. I could go on and on about the changes this Government has instituted, including a number of social programs, such as the Young Offenders Act, which the Hon. Member had a lot to do with at one time, some changes to that, and pornography, on which I think some very effective legislation is coming down.

We were asked for changes for the good, changes for confidence building in this country, and now capital is starting to be returned. People are looking on the brighter side of what just might happen down the road for this country in job creation and a better outlook with the responsible action, words and deeds of this particular Government.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I remember the last election campaign well, too, and I think the Canadian people were promised a change. I wanted to go beyond that because they were not promised the changes that have been delivered. They were promised that this Conservative Government had discovered billions of dollars of waste and extravagance and that the Government was going to be able to save the Canadian taxpayer's money by rooting all that out.

What I want to put to the Hon. Member is that Hon. Members in the Government did not find billions of dollars of waste and extravagance, but that to bring the budget down they have cut programs that impact on the provincial level of Government, and that they are using the same theory they used to get elected.

Members of the Conservative Government told the Canadian people that there was waste and extravagance in the spending of the former Government. I am going to speak in a few minutes on some of the waste and extravagance of the present Government which exceeds anything I have ever heard of in my career as a Member of Parliament. They did not find the waste and extravagance. What they have done is to say that there is waste and extravagance in the provincial programs. The Government is going to cut medicare and post-secondary education because the provinces are wasting money, the hospitals are wasting money, and post-secondary educational institutions are wasting money, so there will not be any reduction in quality, but there is going to be an elimination of waste and extravagance at the provincial level by the restraint that the federal Government is imposing on them.

I want to ask him whether he thinks that that kind of a line, which is the only possible interpretation of the events, has any credibility at all with the Canadian people. Is that not the reason this Government is taking such a pounding in public opinion?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to a few of the points my hon. colleague has made. With all due respect, he has a very selective memory. Let me just start with two or three points. First of all, something that has been created over some 15 years is not about to be changed overnight if we are going to approach things in a balanced and caring way as we work out a way out of this. He has not brought up what this Government did in the privatization area. Thanks to the privatization program of the Minister, de Havilland now is more viable than it has been in decades thanks to Boeing's world-wide sales network. Hansard will show the kicking and screaming and wailing that went on about that. Now there will not be a drain on the federal Treasury that there had been before.

We are tackling other institutions as well under the Minister responsible for the Post Office. That is an organization that has needed fiscal monitoring. The Minister in the last Budget has directed Canada Post to come up with operating plans that would show a break-even within two years or so. I could go on and on about other programs.

I want to stress again that after we inherited something like we did from the previous Government I am really quite impressed with the remarkable progress we have made in some 20 months or so, if one starts to enumerate all the achievements.

If you want to have a selective memory, if you want to turn a blind eye to what I think are tremendous achievements, you can do that, but you are not going to fool Canadians. They are going to be looking at our record in a total way. They will look at the promises on fiscal responsibility on which we had to deliver, and I can tell you they will be behind us 100 per cent because of the courage that we have had to tackle these issues, and not just in a cold, calculating way but in a balanced way that cares about the lives of average Canadians. We have done that, whether it is the sales tax credit in the last Budget, or looking at the child tax credit where some $300 per child will be paid in advance to help families so they will not have to go to loan discounters.

There is a host of things that are on the social and caring side as well. I think the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is being a little too selective in the points he is tackling. He has some things in his own backyard. It does not happen in politics, but he might even just compliment the Government on ensuring the long and healthy life of de Havilland. I think it has some 5800 employees. I think I said several months ago that not only will those jobs be retained, I think you are going to see hundreds, if not thousands of new jobs created as the months and years unfold thanks to a privatization process where it is no longer bleeding this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to use almost all of my 20 minutes, but I have just had a discussion with my very good friend opposite, the Member from Mississauga, and I am quite content and have agreed to limit myself to a very few remarks to give him the opportunity to speak in this debate as well.

I cannot resist, in beginning my remarks, commenting for a moment on the situation at de Havilland. I want to assure Members of the House, as the Member for the area that houses the de Havilland plant, that I am very happy to see the increase in employment at de Havilland. I am very happy to see the increased sales of planes that are occurring. I have never doubted that Boeing was a good company and that it could provide to the company a discipline in management that was lacking or that could have been improved on, if I can put it that way. That is not my grievance about the deal that was made to give that company to the Boeing Corporation.

My grievance is twofold. First, an opportunity was lost to develop a truly Canadian company which, even if we had followed the promises that the Conservatives made during the election campaign, could have been offered as the model that the Government used in its election campaign. Its model was the British National Aerospace Corporation. A certain proportion of the shares would go to the Canadian people, a certain proportion to suppliers and employees, and a certain proportion to some Canadian corporations that are knowledgeable in that industry.

That was what the Government said it would do during the election campaign. I would have been content to have seen that done rather than to put it into the hands of an American company and to tie its fate to decision-making at the highest level in another country. That is one of my regrets about it.

The other regret I have about it comes precisely to the point made by the Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell), and that is the terms of the agreement. Of course I am glad to see the jobs there, and I am glad to see the planes being made, but wait until the Government gets the bills that it agreed with Boeing it will pay. Wait until the insurance commitment cheques start being demanded. Wait until the financing arrangements are made that the Government agreed Boeing could have for foreign sales, financing arrangements which were more generous than the ones that were available to de Havilland when it was operating as a Crown Corporation trying to make sales abroad.

An Hon. Member: They were losing hundreds of millions of dollars a year.

Mr. Kaplan: No, for the last two years it had not been losing hundreds of millions of dollars. It did lose hundreds of millions. I cannot rewrite history, it did. But at the moment when it was moving into a period when the books were showing small losses and coming profits, that was when it was given to an American company and that was when agreements were made to subsidize and support the activities of the company to a very high degree. As I say, I am happy with what I see and am not complaining about that aspect of the Government's Budget.

We do not operate the way they do in the United States. We have a system of responsible Government in which the Government is entitled to get its Budget intact. With its majority, it is entitled to everything it puts in the Budget.

It is not like the United States where the President must propose his ideas to Congress, negotiate with them and convince them to support his idea. In our system, the Government—especially with its large majority—has the confidence of the House and gets its Budget. If the Government had stuck to its guns on deindexing the old age pensions for senior citizens, it would have been able to inflict that on the Canadian people. That is its right under our system of Government.

However, we on this side of the House also have some rights. We are exercising those rights today, one of which is to show the Canadian people that this Budget is opposite to what the Government promised it would do. The Conservatives did not say that they would reduce the Budget by cutting back on medicare, reducing medical research or cutting back the budget of the National Research Council, as my hon. colleague, the Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) showed today.

The Government did not promise that it would balance the budget by cutting back on medicare, after encouraging the provinces to go into medicare a decade ago on the basis that the Government would support them.

The Government said it would balance the budget by finding the waste and extravagance of the Liberal Government. After two years of looking for waste and extravagance in the former Liberal Government, it seems the Conservatives are stuck with passing the buck to the provinces by cutting back programs which are among the most popular, necessary and just programs that we have in Canada. The Government had to resort to that action in its attempt to meet those budget promises.

As far as waste and extravagance is concerned, I would like to know—

[Translation]

How can a boy from Baie-Comeau pay $1,200 a night for hotel accommodation in New York? And how can he pay half a million dollars for a one-week stay in Paris? That is what I would like to know—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Stupid!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Kaplan: Not only that, but how can he do that after promising during the election campaign that he would run a thrifty Government?

[English]

He gave the Canadian people the impression that his background prepared him for restraint and that that was the colour he would put on the Government. We have seen the patronage appointments by the Government, we have seen its style of living, and the waste, extravagance and luxurious way in which it operates. If the Budget is going to be cut, it will be cut on the backs of someone else.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member—if all the documents pertaining to access to information on the previous Government had not disappeared— would have the nerve and courage to table the expenditures of the former Government, of the old gang of mandarins, right before our television viewers and the people in the galleries. Would the Hon. Member have the courage to do that?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Everybody knows about your expenses!

Mr. Kaplan: —if I may have the floor—

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): We know, and everybody knows!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to try to answer. I do not know the figures myself, but the Conservative Government did promise to do away with such excessive expenses. I have no idea whether that was the case, I do not have the bills of the former Government.

But the one thing I do know is that this Government has them. It has those bills. And when it has them, it makes them public. Since Government Members have not tabled the comparable figures of the previous Government, the figures they must have because bills of this kind do not vanish, I say that since there are no such bills which the Government could make public, I come to the only possible conclusion that their expenses are much higher than those of the former Government, otherwise they would have made them public. That is my own conclusion.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a few figures about transport. Since the election of this Government in 1984, the use of airplanes has decreased by 22 per cent compared with the last year under the Liberal Government, which represent a savings of $2.5 million since 1984. If the Hon. Member wants figures, I can give him some.

I also have comparative figures on the hours of use. In 12 and a half months, the Liberals used an average of 2.65 hours in flying time a month, while the Progressive Conservative party has used 205 hours of flying time a month in 19 and a half months. If the former Minister and sad new Member wants figures, I can give them to him. The average number of flights each month for the previous Government was 54 and it is 42 for the new Government.

I therefore find it hard to understand how these people can say that there has been an increase in expenditures when it has been proven statistically and openly in the public accounts that the previous Liberal Government used Government airplanes shamefully and that, with our desire for change, we have reduced expenditures by 22 per cent since our election.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment these facts.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I may have a different understanding of the subject than the Member opposite, but I never considered the use of government airplanes as an extravagance. I think that the government airplanes are there for Ministers to use when there are good reasons for which they cannot use ordinary flights.

When we talk about the former Government, I can recall that every Minister had to be in the House for every vote because we would not have the majority to carry the votes. In circumstances like that, government airplanes were there to serve the Ministers and permit us to get back to the House in time to vote, yet be able to travel around the country as we were expected.

As I say, unless the airplane is given to the Minister to use—

An Hon. Member: You can say that without laughing.

Mr. Kaplan: I do say so and I am not laughing about it. I do not believe that using a Government airplane for proper purposes is an extravagance. I believe that the airplanes are for the use of Ministers when they cannot handle their public affairs properly with commercial airplanes.

I do not believe the figures used by the Member opposite prove anything that he wants to suggest. The cost of hotels and the amount of entertainment bills are the figures that have just come out about the Government. It is that kind of figure which should be given, not how much time the Minister spent flying in government airplanes.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) and the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) and I can tell you that the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean did not dare to quote figures because he does not have any.

As for the comments of the Hon. Member for LaSalle, I can tell that he has been absent for a long time because he does not have the latest figures, which include an amount of $800,000 for the Prime Minister. I challenge you to say that these $800,000 are included in your figures. You are quoting old statistics and you know it. The same figures have been quoted in this House for eight months. The Conservatives have fewer—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: You are leaving! Give us figures.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): I am coming back!

Mr. Rossi: The $800,000 of Mulroney are not included.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please! Order!

Mr. Rossi: You have no figures. You are always speaking through your hat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please! Order!

Mr. Rossi: Give us some figures! You do not have any! Why do you not speak?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The period for questions and comments has expired.

[English]

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this Bill involves one of the fiscal arrangements between the federal Government and the provinces. There are extensive fiscal arrangements between the federal Government and the provinces. Indeed—

Mr. Rossi: Lanthier, tu parles à travers ton chapeau!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, does Your Honour think I could possibly have order in this House? Do we have to put up with the kind of yelling and screaming that is going on here?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order. As all Hon. Members know—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it would be nice if we could have a little bit of decorum in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, there are several fiscal arrangements between the federal Government and the provinces. This Bill deals with one of those fiscal arrangements. However, before we go into the whole question of whether this is a terrible, bloodthirsty attack on the moneys that the provinces have to fulfil their constitutional requirements, let us go, for a moment, over the various fiscal arrangements, because they are very substantial.

First, there is equalization, a situation in which the federal Government uses the resources of the country and equalizes those resources among the provinces to ensure that all provinces have equal fiscal capacities, as far as is possible, to perform their constitutional requirements; and there is no change in equalization.

The second arrangement is called the Canada Assistance Plan, one in which the federal Government shares equally, dollar for dollar, with provincial Governments on social assistance programs.

Then there are the tax collection agreements whereby the federal Government acts as a fiscal agent for the provinces to collect taxes for them without any charge whatsoever to the provinces, no charge back at all. The Government collects the money for them and remits it to them without charge as part of the fiscal arrangements of the country.

Then there are tax sharing agreements, and tax agreements whereby the federal Government pays taxes to the provinces for provincial sales tax, for example, those various arrangements that make this country work when there are two taxing authorities. There are a number of other arrangements whereby the federal Government, for example, does things in provincial areas that are really transfers to the provinces for their responsibilities. For example, in post-secondary education, we run a Coast Guard college. We run universities under the Department of National Defence. We make grants to universities for natural science and engineering, to research councils, to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, and to the Medical Research Council. We make capital grants for a whole series of matters that are within the jurisdiction of the provinces, and those matters are all transfers. In the year 1980-81, which is really the last year for which I have figures, those grants amounted to well over $2 billion.

We are now told that the change in this Act is a bloodthirsty attack on the provinces, "a bloodthirsty attack". What kind of a bloodthirsty attack is it? It is a reduction in the total amount of a transfer by a portion of the anticipated increase in Gross National Product, by reducing any real increase of GNP by 2 per cent, provided that does not affect inflation. So, if there is inflation, and we do not have any growth at all, the provinces get all the inflation and all the growth in the economy, except for 2 per cent. Now, this is a "bloodthirsty attack", yet.

Well, Sir, I want to demonstrate today that, far from a bloodthirsty attack, it is a very sensible Bill, a very conservative Bill, one that would indicate that the Government really understands the needs, the requirements, of the provincial Governments.

In 1981, there was a full study by a special parliamentary committee which issued a report called Fiscal Federalism in Canada, and it was tabled in August of that year. The report analysed all of the fiscal arrangements between the provinces and the federal Government, and the federal Government's capacity to make payments and the provincial Governments' capacity to raise revenue at that time. The task force report concluded that there did not exist, at that time, any long-term structural mismatch between the federal Government and the provinces and that the current arrangements were appropriate. But that was before we had a Government that ran up, in a four-year period, the national debt of this country of over $120 billion, and that was before we had to use 27 per cent of the revenue collected in this country to pay interest, and that was before we had a massive recession, brought about in part by a national energy problem and in part by the Budget of November of 1981 that just tore the country apart, ripped apart its economy, and ripped apart the receipts of the Government. That was before we had a situation in which deficits, had we not turned the corner when we took over in 1984, would have exceeded well over $40 billion in that year. There is now a situation of financial mismatch.

I point out that the provincial Governments are all able, on a national accounts basis, to balance their books without going to outside markets to borrow money. They have all borrowed the money they need from provincial pension plans and from the Canada Pension Plan and they are not required to go out in the market, like the federal Government is, to beg and borrow and issue T bill accounts and do whatever is necessary to squeeze from the markets every last nickel and dime. Indeed, the deficit of the Province of Ontario are down. The deficit of the Province of Quebec is down. The deficit of every province in the country, in fact, is down this year, with the exception of the Province of Alberta. And I really cry for it! It does not even have a retail sales tax. It has the fiscal capacity to be without debt and it has a Heritage Fund. So it continues to put money into its Heritage Fund, that is why it shows a bookkeeping deficit. Well, is that not just terrible?

Mr. Rompkey: And they vote for you guys. God knows why, but they do.

Mr. Blenkarn: So what we have is a situation that started in 1981. Since then, the fiscal situation of the country has dramatically changed. We now have a fiscal mismatch that we did not have in 1981. In 1981, we were looking at the history prior to 1980, really, in terms of the financial activity and records that we could examine. We are now looking at the records and projections we must examine that result from an unconscionable burden of debt foisted on this country by the previous Government, and that the Liberals should filibuster the Bill without realizing the fiscal imbalance they created by their past activities indicates their lack of competence and the reason they are in opposition.

Let us get down to exactly what we are really talking about. This year, the reduction in the possible increase in EPF transfers to all provinces is $318 million. Next year, it will be $681 million. The total transfer this year is $16.729 billion. Next year it will be $17.7 billion. That amounts to an increase of $1 billion. And we hear members of the Opposition saying that this is ripping apart Confederation and destroying things.

Let us go back to look at their financial position. When we took power we had to do some things that we did not want to do. We did not want to increase taxes. But we had to be responsible because of the debts imposed on this country by past mismanagement. One of the things we had to do was to change the indexation on personal exemptions and on transfers for help for children. Those were tax increases which are progressive. In effect, if there is inflation, and there is, they increase revenue and reduce allowances from taxable income.

The provinces use the federal government tax base on which to raise their revenues. Almost all of the provinces collect 54 per cent of the federal government tax revenue collected. So if the federal Government collects one dollar of federal tax, then the average province collects 54 cents in provincial tax. The effect of the changes on personal income tax in the May 1985 Budget for the year 1985-86 was to increase provincial revenue by $80 million. For the year 1986-87, their revenues will be increased by $250 million as a result of that one fiscal measure alone.

I would like to go on. We have made some changes with respect to business taxes. We just eliminated the scientific research tax credit. That will increase provincial revenues drastically, since no longer will they be sharing in that tax credit type promotion. We have also changed the inventory allowance. No longer will corporations be entitled to automatic inventory allowances from taxable income. No longer will corporations in most of the country, save for Atlantic Canada of course, be entitled to investment tax credits, which again change the corporate tax base and tax amount. This year we have changed the gross-up with respect to dividends. In effect, if one collects dividends one is likely to pay more income tax on those dividends than were paid previously.

Next year the effect of these tax changes will result in at least $200 million a year more going to provincial revenues. However, we are not finished. We have been called the gougers and we have been called a terrible Government because we expect to pay our bills. We have increased sales taxes. When we took over we allowed a 1 per cent sales tax increase to go through. We increased that again last year by 1 per cent and again this year by 1 per cent. That amounts to three full percentage points of federal sales tax on manufactured goods.

Mr. Riis: A regressive tax.

Mr. Blenkarn: What does that do? What will happen to provincial sales taxes? Sales taxes provincially are charged at the retail level. If the manufacturers tax goes up then the provincial tax goes up. It goes up not only by the increase in the federal tax but by the profits and overhead on the federal tax. Their sales tax increases have been literally phenomenal as a result of this federal change. I do not have the exact figures in that regard. However, I want to tell Hon. Members how it works.

In effect, the federal Government has taken all the heat from the Opposition for increasing taxes.

Mr. Riis: You did it!

Mr. Blenkarn: The result of those tax increases has been to increase dramatically the revenues of the provinces. The $318 million which the provinces will lose in EPF this year has been more than made up; and the $600 million they will lose next year will be more than made up. If we were to carry on with the EPF transfer the way it is set out without this Bill, we would have been looking after the provinces with two hands instead of one. Surely to goodness it is the obligation of this Government to understand where we are going financially. It is important that we use those tax increases which we impose on the people of the country to handle the financial problems that were incurred as a result of the past 15 years of mismanagement and misallocation of resources.

Mr. Riis: What about the bank bail-out?

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, the bank bail-out. It was not a bank that was bailed out. Indeed, the chartered banks of this country bailed the Government of Canada out.

Mr. Riis: Tell that to the Bank of America, to Wells Fargo and to the Bank of Hong Kong.

Mr. Blenkarn: And what do we do? We handled the credit unions in the provinces and looked after their accounts, their pension plans and their farmers. Members of the New Democratic Party would not have us do that. I would like to see them handle it. The fact of the matter is that for the first time in a decade and a half—

Mr. Riis: You bailed out a bank.

Mr. Blenkarn: —a Minister of Finance came in and said he would have a certain deficit, a deficit of $34 billion, and he has a deficit that will be less than that. For the first time in the history of this country the President of the Treasury Board has given a set of Estimates in which every Estimate has come in less than he said it would.

Mr. Riis: And a special remission to Dome, and to Gulf.

Mr. Blenkarn: The increase in the cost of carrying the ordinary expenses of Departments was frozen last year. Until 1990 it will be increased by one two-tenths of 1 per cent every year.

We have fiscal responsibility on this side of the House. We will make this country grow again. We will be out of deficit. With a little bit of luck we will be out of deficit completely and be able to start paying back that horrendous legacy that Trudeau left us by 1990.

We have to demand some sense of responsibility from the Opposition.

Mr. Gurbin: Don't expect it.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says that I should not expect it. That is true. The opposition Parties together were responsible for spending, spending and spending that which the country could not create. We now have to pay the burden caused by that overspending. Part of the burden has to be shared around the country.

Mr. Riis: How about Blais-Grenier's trip to Europe? Europe on $5,000 a day. How do you explain that?

Mr. Blenkarn: Part of that burden will have to be shared by provincial Governments. We have compensated them for that cost by allowing for increases in their revenue. Those increases in revenue are more than satisfactory.

I would like to give Hon. Members a few illustrations in this regard. The Province of Manitoba was here crying before the Finance Committee. I noticed that no other province was foolish enough to come in to cry.

Mr. Riis: Name the provinces that support this Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Province of Manitoba, this year, has a 10.3 per cent increase in revenue, and that is truly phenomenal. That province may lose $13 million in EPF transfers, but the transfers from the federal Government are up $39.4 million in total.

Mr. Rompkey: But it's not going into education.

Mr. Blenkarn: And this weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth goes on. What money the provinces borrow, they borrow for 3.5 per cent less than what they paid when the former Government was in office. They have massive new employment and a booming economy. Here they were weeping, wailing and crying about a $13 million contribution to a massive problem that was created by an alliance between the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party as evidenced by the opposition to this Bill and the lack of fiscal understanding.

[Translation]

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for my colleague. I heard him mention earlier that the provinces now had reason to complain about equalization, and that he knew of no province that was forced to levy taxes because of federal equalization payments. I suggest the answer to that was provided in the Budget speech made by the Quebec Finance Minsiter, in which he said that transfers to provinces were not the cause of the federal deficit; that the federal Government was transferring its deficit to provinces; that the federal Government had brushed aside any true negotiation with the provinces; that the federal Government is making inconsistent fiscal decisions when cutting down its funding of health care and post-secondary education while introducing progressive exemption of capital gains and phasing out the oil and gas revenue tax in the producing provinces.

Also, the Quebec Government was forced to introduce a surtax on corporate income tax, to raise employer contributions to health services and to increase capital gains tax in order to compensate for federal cuts in EPF funding and the revenue losses under the equalization program because of the federal Government's failure to ensure a minimum 95 per cent of entitlement flowing from the 1984-85 Budget.

Mr. Rossi: They will be losing $2.3 billion in the next five years.

Mrs. Pépin: They will therefore be losing $2 billion in the next five years. So, when I hear my honourable colleague say that the previous administration had also been very irresponsible in its financial management and that, thanks to this new Conservative wave, the Government will be able to save millions of dollars, I wonder if the purpose of this Conservative Government is not to create two classes of citizens, bailing out banks at the expense of low income citizens. I should like my honourable colleague to tell me if we are witnessing the creation of two classes of citizens by eliminating the rich; then we would be left only with poor people. Is that one of the purposes of this Conservative Government? I will add simply that he may think he is knowledgeable about this, but the Quebec Government is absolutely against Bill C-96, for it must overburden Quebecers with taxes because of unfair equalization payments.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, let us talk about oil and gas taxes before we talk about anything else. I suppose my hon. friend would have us increase taxes through the PGRT, the IORT and others that nearly destroyed the oil industry in western Canada, and would destroy it even further now that oil prices are falling and there is a virtual mad depression out there. That is the kind of economic nonsense we hear from members of the Liberal Party.

Let us understand what happens to provincial finances. We increased taxes at the refinery gate at the federal level. Provincial sales taxes are calculated on the basis of the price after payment of federal taxes. Therefore, the provincial Governments have dramatically increased their revenues from all sources including oil and gas, and not because they have had to do anything wrong. All they did was charge a percentage tax and if the base is lower, they collect less but if the base is higher they will collect more. The effect of the federal taxing system has been to increase provincial revenues.

With respect to income tax in the Province of Quebec, I very much appreciate that the Province of Quebec is different from the other provinces in Canada in that Quebec looks after its own personal income tax and its own corporate income tax. The figures I gave this afternoon represent the situation that exists in the other nine provinces. The other provinces collect a percentage of the federal personal income taxes and the federal Government does the tax collection for them. In the Province of Quebec, there are separate tax rates contained in a separate tax Act and citizens of the Province of Quebec must file separate tax returns. The consequence is that instead of benefiting from federal tax increases, the Province of Quebec has had to impose the same kind of tax increases, the same increase in the federal tax system that was reflected in the automatic increase in provincial revenues for the other provinces.

As far as the debt situation of the Province of Quebec is concerned, I think the Hon. Member knows that the deficit of the Province of Quebec is down in excess of $350 million this year. That is a rather dramatic change in fiscal position which occurred even though this is the first year of a new Government since an election has just taken place.

If the Hon. Member analyses the matter very closely, she will know that the amount of change is rather inconsequential. If it had been larger, the provincial Treasurer, as I am sure she will appreciate, would have come before the legislative committee to make active presentations here in Ottawa. While I appreciate that provincial Treasurers like to make good solid speeches and blame Ottawa, which is the easiest thing to do, the facts are the following: the economy is a lot stronger today than it was, interest rates are down dramatically and provincial revenues are up dramatically.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member for Mississauga

South (Mr. Blenkarn). As usual, he tells the whole truth. This is something we have not seen for years from Members of the Opposition. He is tying in the need to reduce the deficit to our fiscal responsibilities.

What he has not mentioned and what I wish to ask him about is that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business led by Mr. Bulloch and the Business Council on National Issues led by Mr. D'Aquino have both been saying consistently and constantly for over a year now that the federal Government is not going far enough to reduce the deficit of Canada. How does the Hon. Member for Mississauga South react to those comments from those very distinguished businessmen who represent the interests of hundreds of thousands of companies and workers across Canada?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, of course, this Bill does not deal with the federal responsibility to reduce the deficit faster or to increase taxes imposed. There is no question about it, though, that there is a heavy demand from many people in Canada for us to get after the deficit. Let it not be said that this Bill is an effort to pass the deficit on to the backs of the provinces because it is not.

What I had hoped to point out this afternoon was the effect of the federal tax changes which automatically enrich provincial revenues. That automatic enrichment of provincial revenues should mean that the provinces can well afford, because of the change in the fiscal arrangement of revenue collection, to handle these reductions in the increases of federal transfers. If we do not do what is proposed in this Bill, the fiscal position of the federal Government will be even worse. We would be collecting the taxes and passing them on to the provinces even though the effect of tax increases would be to increase provincial revenues in any event.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RESEARCH INTO TOXIC CHEMICALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of protecting the health of Canadians, present and future generations:

(1) by renewal of funds for research into toxic chemicals.

(2) by telling Canadians of progress made in the removal of toxic wastes from the American side of the Niagara River.

(3) by providing for the upgrading of waste water treatment facilities and generally raising the profile of toxic chemicals in all areas of health research and preventive policy making.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am putting forward this motion because we in the Liberal Party have regretfully come to the conclusion that the Government is abandoning, and in some way has abandoned, its responsiblity to protect the health of Canadians in relation to toxic chemicals. The Government has been in a retreat since November, 1984. It has been inconclusive and inept in matters related to toxic chemicals in particular. It has shrouded itself in secrecy in not letting Canadians know what is the content of certain understandings. It has been repressive, and in particular I am referring to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and his relations with the scientists in his own Department and the scientific documents they may produce or make public.

I should like to back up these statements with some specific facts. Before doing so, and in the limited time available, I say to the House that if the Government is in retreat, it is because it has decided to trade the health of Canadians for the sake of reducing the deficit. It has reduced the investments which were planned to expand toxicology research across Canada.

The Government has been inconclusive and inept. On the eve of negotiations with environmental authorities in Washington, it gave away Canada's position by revealing that there was a disagreement between Ottawa and Queen's Park, Ontario. It has shrouded itself in secrecy in that it decided not to publish a document about an understanding or proposal which was brought to Ottawa last October by the Washington counterpart to our Minister of the Environment. It has been repressive in relation to the freedom of expression of opinion by scientists in Environment Canada.

Here are the facts in chronological sequence. In November, 1984, the Government shelved the Guelph Toxicology Centre, the $8.5 million which was meant to set up a centre for excellence in the study of toxicological matters. This would have provided an opportunity for scientists already trained for that purpose. Also it would have provided an opportunity for young scientists who are still to be trained and are looking forward to an opportunity to develop a career in that specific and very important field.

In November, 1984, the Government also eliminated the environmental secretariat and related research which was carried out by the National Research Council. It cut Canadian Wildlife Services by some $3.8 million and the capacity for assessment of and response to environmental threats in Environment Canada by $12.2 million and 25 person-years.

In March, 1985, the Government did not renew the annual $2.5 million for research on toxic chemicals in the Niagara River. In May of that year, the then Minister of the Environment met with Lee Thomas, the head of the United States Environmental Protection Agency in Washington. She returned to Canada, promising an American plan for full and speedy action on the Niagara River to clean up toxic dumps.

On May 31, 1985, the same Minister committed the federal Government to playing a lead role in the development of options for the destruction of PCBs at the national level. Since that time we have not heard a word about it.

In October, 1985, Lee Thomas came to Ottawa with some kind of plan for the clean-up of the Niagara River. There was no statement by the Minister at the time. The report itself was kept under wraps in Ottawa, while it was released for public consumption and debate south of the border.

In December, 1985, the Royal Society of Canada and its U.S. counterpart produced a substantial report on the pervasive presence of toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes. Again there was no government response nor action to follow up on this important work.

From November, 1985 to March, 1986 there was the St. Clair River saga, a monument to the Minister of the Environment and his grandstanding, indecisiveness, and fear of being contradicted by his own departmental officials. He belittled his departmental scientists. He distanced himself from them. When he could not cope with the real facts of life, he declared that the whole mess was a provincial matter.

In May, 1986, the Minister of the Environment went again to Washington, nearly a year from the day his predecessor promised a speedy and comprehensive plan to clean up the Niagara River. Not only did he return, pretending that he had made a great achievement, but he returned without any consideration having been given to excavation and destruction of toxic chemicals, to which the Minister claimed to be formally committed when it suited the occasion.

I should like to refer to the most serious part of the developments in May of this year. As a negotiator, the Minister gave away a disagreement between himself and the Ontario Minister of the Environment, thus letting Washington clearly understand that insofar as the U.S. position was concerned, it could drive a wedge between Ottawa and Toronto and settle for the lower of the two positions, namely, the position of the Government of Canada, unfortunately.

This sequence of activities confirms the sad conclusion that the Government is strong on promises and very shaky on delivery. Until now we have not seen any results which are worth speaking or writing home about. The Minister's actions last May actually resulted in a delay of another year. There was not a single ounce of reduction in toxic waste. However, he managed to describe the event as a step forward. The press release which he issued at that time listed accomplishments in the same manner as his predecessor listed them a year before, namely, a recognition of the problem as being serious and the need for a plan of action with timetables and targets.

The Minister has been treading water for a year on the Niagara River issue. Because of his eagerness to be friends with Washington, he will continue to tread water for another year. We still have not seen the agreement which was signed by the Minister of the Environment in Washington on May 14, 1986. Meanwhile, the health of some five million Canadians continues to be at risk. The Government has shown an inability to do anything about it.

Part of the motion before the House this evening deals with the lack of response of the Government to the pressing need for an upgrading of waste water treatment facilities, a matter which is of serious importance particularly in the Great Lakes and in the St. Clair River. We in the Opposition cannot understand why the Government is not introducing policies to deal with these particular problems. It should be assisting with the installation of updated and environmentally friendly technology, strong on the prevention side, at industrial plants. Such a program would help the companies do exactly that. It should assist also with the installation of sewers which would separate contaminated from clean water and would ensure that the water is only discharged after proper treatment. It should assist with the replacement of current mechanical monitoring techniques, which belong to ancient times, with computerized technology.

The more we look at the record of the Government over the past 21 months, the more we see a series of promises which are not backed up by substantial, tangible results. It is time for the Government to account for itself in environmental matters related to toxic chemicals.

I am anxious to hear what the Parliamentary Secretary has to say in defence of what looks like not just a shaky record but a real sham.

• (1810)

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Liberal critic for the Environment, suffers most of all from inaccuracy. He has a great deal of selective reporting, selective amnesia and really a regrettable attitude in understanding what is really going on. The more he gets away from any real responsibility and any real information, the worse his speeches become.

Over $700 million in expenditures and over 10,000 people in Environment Canada are, for the first time since 1979, led by a Minister who is able to understand the problem and to deal with the real issues.

Mr. Caccia: He didn't begin in 1979.

Mr. Gurbin: I am going to give specifics—

Mr. Caccia: It is high time you did.

Mr. Gurbin: —that will identify the selective discrepancy in the comments made by the Liberal critic for the Environment. The Member talks about research into a number of areas relating to toxicology. One of the very first things this Government did was to make a long-term commitment, the kind of commitment necessary in research, to acid rain. Eighteen million dollars a year for five years is guaranteed. It is on the table, it is a commitment of the Government and it has been for over a year now. Second, we set up the wildlife toxicology fund. We needed more funds in research. Last year we spent over $500,000—

Mr. Caccia: You cut $4 million and came back with $1.5 million.

Mr. Gurbin: Last year we set up $500,000, doubled because of the industry's component. This year it is over $700,000 already, doubled again by industry. There is $1.4 million in new money, new funds for new projects into wildlife toxicology research.

The Member across the way says something like "the world is falling apart. Funds have been cut here and there." In the two years, 1984-85 up to 1986-87 with moneys committed, if we look specifically at the research budget for Great Lakes programs, we have no diminution of scientists. There were 90 and there are still 90. The Member is inaccurate and wrong if he says otherwise. We have 253 person-years, increasing to 274 person-years. We have $15.95 million, increasing to $19.2 million, an increase of 20 per cent in two years, year over year.

Mr. Caccia: He does not know his facts.

Mr. Gurbin: I wish the Member could have done as well when he was the Minister.

Mr. Caccia: You lost $7.5 million over two years.

Mr. Gurbin: On the toxic programs to which we are committed as a federal Government, not the kinds of programs the Member for Davenport is talking about, those things that were fitted in or created to make it look good for somebody at a point in time, the budget has been nearly doubled. Our effort, our expenditures and our person years on toxic programs specifically have been doubled from 45 people to 75 people and from $2.7 million to $4.8 million. Those are specific figures and those are the facts, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing that slips by very quickly is the understanding of what is ongoing and what is being supported by the Government, particularly when we start talking about the toxicology research and the efforts initiated, made and being carried on—

Mr. Caccia: The Guelph Toxicology Centre, for instance.

Mr. Gurbin: As an example, there are programs in British Columbia at the University of Victoria in aquatic toxicology and at the cancer research centre in human toxicology. At Simon Fraser University they are dealing with environmental and industrial toxicology. The University of Western Ontario is involved in pharmacology and toxicology. Carleton University is involved with regulatory toxicology. The Institute for the Research on Asbestos is involved with programs, the University of Montreal is involved in drug and occupational toxicology and Memorial University is dealing with environmental toxicology. We have other centres, namely the University of Saskatchewan Toxicology Research Centre and the Centre de Recherches en Toxicologies du Québec which is dealing with human toxicology.

Mr. Caccia: What the Member—

Mr. Fretz: Why don't you listen?

Mr. Gurbin: I am going to stop, Mr. Speaker. I could go on with lists of things to which we are continuing and increasing our support. What about the Medical Research Council? It got $150 million. That medical research council did not know where its next dollar was coming from when the Member opposite and his Government were in charge. That Council did not know what was coming next year or the year after. It was seriously hampered in its efforts to make a valuable contribution on behalf of Canadians—

Mr. Caccia: You are skating on thin ice.

Mr. Gurbin: —in the areas of toxicology and research.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Gurbin: Next we come to the Americans.

Mr. Caccia: Talk to us about the Niagara River, not the Americans.

Mr. Gurbin: This is where this Member is right out to lunch, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caccia: Talk about the Niagara River.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order. Order, please.

Mr. Gurbin: I will change my tone if the Member opposite—

Mr. Caccia: You are being ridiculous.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Caccia: Talk to us about the Niagara River and how you botched it up. That is what you should be talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) should know that Members from all sides of the House get equal time. If things keep going the way they are going now, the Parliamentary Secretary will have to speak longer because he keeps being interrupted. I do not think it would necessarily be the wish—

Mr. Caccia: If you are—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Please do not interrupt the Speaker. I am sure that would not necessarily be the wish of the Hon. Member for Davenport. If Members will bear with us, the period for speeches is approximately 10 minutes. After that we move on to other speakers.

Mr. Riis: Maximum 10 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I sat and listened to the Hon. Member, which I often have to do. I would appreciate the same respect from him as I give him. He may not like what I am saying because it is the truth.

Mr. Caccia: You're on thin ice again.

Mr. Gurbin: I have not enjoyed many of his comments.

This gets to the nub of things. I would be interested to see the Hon. Member for Davenport put his credibility on the line by telling us how much toxin there is in the Niagara River. Nobody knows. The beloved Niagara River Toxic Committee Report, an excellent report does not indicate that. The estimates range between one million and nine million tonnes. This Member would have us as a Government commit ourselves to reducing one-half of one million tonnes a year loading, which is roughly what the report said, when there is probably more like nine million tonnes a year. It makes no sense to try to go forward on the basis of what has been suggested without knowing from where we start and what needs to be accomplished.

Mr. Caccia: Studies.

Mr. Gurbin: We need no more studies, Mr. Speaker. What we need to establish with credibility is the exact loadings in the river so we can determine what has to be done and specifically where the responsibilities are.

Mr. Riis: That is a study.

Mr. Gurbin: There are many examples. I am running out of time because of the interruptions, Mr. Speaker. I regret that because there are many other specifics.

Just let me finish off on the subject of the Niagara River. What has eluded Governments before and will continue to elude anyone who came at it from the point of view that we can sit here, dictate and try to fabricate some grand plan or scheme ourselves and not enter into constructive agreements necessary to do something—

Mr. Caccia: Why don't you come up with a proposal?

Mr. Gurbin: We have a proposal and an objective on which we have been able to reach agreement with the Americans. Within one year from today we will know how much toxic material is going into the Niagara River and how much is coming out. We can subtract and find out then—

Mr. Caccia: You have plenty of studies telling you that already.

Mr. Gurbin: —what needs to be done, in what specific areas and where the responsibilities lie. We can then set specific targets and goals for the individual components of the problem. We have established clearly that with the United States we will be able to achieve the real reductions which we need. We think that 50 per cent by 1995 is a reasonable objective. Quite likely we will be able to achieve even better. If the Hon. Member wants to get into a discussion with his friends in Ontario, he will have to do that with them. That is not our purpose here. We are here to co-operate with all governments and to try to get something done.

• (1820)

Mr. Caccia: Exactly.

Mr. Gurbin: We won't do that by putting headlines in the press. That is not the way to get the job done.

Mr. Caccia: You are putting the headlines in. Your Minister put the headlines in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Gurbin: The Hon. Member's final point was about waste water treatment and he raised the profile of toxic chemicals. I would like to put something on the record other than the rhetoric which preceded my comments. We have issued a State of the Environment report. It is as full an explanation and documentation of specific information as has ever been made available to Canadians at any time in history. This is the first time this has been accomplished. There is no restriction on any of the information available.

That is an example of our efforts to ensure that we put out accurate information to which people can refer with confidence because it is accurate and has scientific credibility. We have made available to the public all information available to us which we have confidence in. We are committed to doing that and we will continue to do that. We will not editorialize without confidence in the facts and figures. Whenever there is scientifically credible information available, it will be forthcoming.

The Member talked about separation of sewers, which is a long-term problem. For the first time leadership is being shown at the federal level in dealing with the whole range of water problems in Canada.

Mr. Caccia: Oh, come on.

Mr. Gurbin: This was never done before and it is high time it was done.

Mr. Caccia: It has been done for decades.

Mr. Gurbin: The Cabinet of Canada has given the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) responsibility for all matters dealing with water. We are in the process of developing a national water policy which has eluded former Governments. This has clearly placed the responsibility for looking after all matters related to water including purity, quality and a number of other issues. This is the first time this has been done and it is high time. It shows leadership—

Mr. Caccia: You can say that seriously, can you?

Mr. Gurbin: —which was sadly lacking in former Governments in which the Hon. Member participated.

I conclude, regrettably, by adding one more small comment. The only thing I can find that was accomplished during the period of time that the Hon. Member had responsibility for the environment was a regulation which came into effect three years after it was first gazetted. It, in fact, did precious little by way of real action to enhance and improve the environment of Canada. That is a regrettable record for anyone.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Member Hon. for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), for bringing this issue on to the floor of the House of Commons. I listened with interest to the report of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin) on the action taken by the Government to deal with toxic chemicals and wastes.

I am one of many Parliamentarians who are very proud of Environment Canada, and particularly its officials with their expertise and outstanding talents and abilities. We are proud of the contributions they make and the way in which they call a spade a spade. Many of the scientists and other people in Environment Canada call it right on. I want to give them credit for that. A certain amount of confusion enters my mind due to the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary. He was expounding on all of the wonderful things the federal Government is doing to meet the concerns of the toxic chemical and toxic waste emergency which is developing.

I have in my hand Environment Canada's report card on what Canada is doing in terms of environmental programs. This report card was issued only a few days ago. It breaks down the various sections of the environment: acid rain, toxic waste, water quality, wildlife, forest conservation and so on. It rates each one of these areas in terms of government action. Just for clarification, this is Environment Canada's evaluation of the state of affairs of certain environmental areas of the country.

After having listened to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment, I am perplexed when I look at this because Environment Canada gives Canada an "F" for failure on toxic waste. It says that there are poor disposal practices and that urgent action—not studies—is required to identify health risks, set standards, and implement control measures. This is now emerging as Canada's number one environmental problem. Environment Canada gives its Government an "F" for what it has done and what it is doing.

Mr. McDermid: That reflects on the previous Minister, too.

Mr. Riis: This is dated May, 1986. We are perhaps talking about past administrations, but we are certainly talking about the present administration which has been in place for nearly two years. It should be introducing all sorts of measures. People might ask what sorts of action we could take. I would like to suggest a few which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), has articulated in this House on a number of occasions and in letters to the Minister of the Environment. He has suggested, for example, passage of the Canada Safe Drinking Water Act. We have a lot of drinking water. Why not have an Act which provides for the taking of safe measures? That includes support for the upgrading of waste water treatment facilities.

I was an alderman for many years in the City of Kamloops. I remember applying through CMHC for funds from the federal Government to help construct facilities to treat sewage to help improve the quality of drinking water. I can recall that literally hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars were spent by the federal Government to assist municipalities to develop that type of infrastructure. There is no longer any money available to help the hard-pressed municipalities of Canada to upgrade the treatment of their water.

Mr. Caccia: Are you listening, Gurbin?

Mr. Riis: The Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill suggested the passage of an environmental bill of rights. I believe that Canadians can expect certain rights with regard to the quality of the environment. There is a toxic nightmare beginning to occur in this country as a result of inaction by the Government as the build up of toxic chemicals and toxic waste takes on deadly proportions.

My friend from Winnipeg—Birds Hill suggested the implementation of the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission calling for stiffer penalties for polluters. He suggests the speedy introduction of tough amendments to the Environmental Contaminants Act. He suggests the establishment of a super fund for the complete removal and destruction of toxic wastes stored in Canadian dump sites. Note the words "complete removal" rather than, as this Minister is suggesting, a slow bleeding off over the years of a limited number of toxic chemicals.

The Member goes on to suggest increased Government funding for toxicology research, including the complete restoration of programs such as the Herring Gull Egg Program and the Guelph Toxicology Research Centre which were cancelled a year ago. He also suggests increased Government funding for upgrading municipal water treatment facilities and, of course, waste water treatment facilities as well.

These are positive suggestions from members of the Opposition. These are things that the Government could act on. What has the Government done? Adjacent to my own constituency in Lone Butte, British Columbia, Bradbury Industries plans to build a plant to produce Pentachlorophenol and Tetrachlorophenol, otherwise known as PCP and TTCP, both of which contain dioxins. The Bradbury plant poses a very serious health risk to the local population and those who will ultimately be using those chemicals.

I suggest that if the Government is as serious as it says it is, here is a good opportunity to take the initiative and provide leadership. It can say we are going to do what Sweden has done and the United States is about to do and ban the use of PCBs. Why wait? All the evidence I have ever seen indicates very clearly that these are not an appropriate chemical to use. There are simply too many hazards associated with them. Doing that would remove the concerns the people of Lone Butte have because this type of highly toxic chemical is being manufactured and produced in their vicinity.

The Parliamentary Secretary seems to have slipped a little bit in his recollection about what has been going on over the last little while, particularly concerning the Niagara River. I want to remind him that last fall the EPA administrator, Mr. Lee Thomas, presented an action plan to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) concerning how the U.S. proposed to deal with the discharge of toxic chemicals into the Niagara River. That action plan was totally unacceptable because it did not envision the actual excavation of the most toxic dumpsites along the river, but merely proposed to somehow contain and extract them over a period of up to 50 years.

At that time the Minister expressed his disappointment with the original plan. I recall him saying it was like holding jello in a sieve, or something of that nature. However, he seems to have changed his tune. Although he continues to favour excavation over extraction, on May 14 he apparently endorsed a revised EPA plan which continues to advocate extraction over excavation for the most deadly of the dumpsites such as Love Canal, Hyde Park, 102nd Street, and the S site. Furthermore, the Minister has not managed to secure any timetable for this plan. Instead, Canadian and American experts will complete by July 1, 1987, a technical documentation of the pollution control measures needed to reduce the direct discharge into the river, including timetables and targets for clean-up.

The best the Minister could offer was a possible 50 per cent reduction of certain chemicals by 1995. That is unacceptable. It is an example of a country caving in to U.S. pressure. It is an example of a Minister of the Environment who simply does not have the courage of his convictions. If what he says is true, it is certainly not being presented in any kind of legislative or funding initiative.

We are very, very concerned about what appears to be going on or not going on. Therefore I want to say a special thank you to my friend from Davenport for enabling us to put on the record of the House of Commons the track record of this Government in dealing with toxic waste. The report card of Environment Canada itself gives the Government of Canada a nice big failure.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) moved a motion this evening, urging the Government to consider the advisability of protecting the health of Canadians, present and future generations, in three ways. Actually, our Government is in favour of increasing toxicological research on toxic chemicals. The need for intensifying toxicological research and the superior quality of training received by toxicologists in Canada have been recognized for years by the universities, governments and industry. As one of the biggest employers of toxicologists in this country, the Department of National Health and Welfare firmly supports this view, and I think it is encouraging that both the Government and the universities have responded to this need. In fact, over the last ten years, toxicological research and training in Canada has expanded considerably.

Today, we have a number of multidisciplinary research programs in toxicology at several universities and institutes in Canada.

As my hon. friend mentioned earlier, we have the University of Victoria (aquatic toxicology), the Cancer Research Centre of British Columbia (human toxicology), Simon Fraser University (environmental and industrial toxicology), the University of Western Ontario (pharmacology and toxicology), research on asbestos, the University of Montreal (drug and occupational toxicology), Memorial University (environmental toxicology). Three more centres are emerging, and I am referring to the Research Centre at the University of Saskatchewan for agricultural toxicology, the Guelph-Toronto Toxicology Centre, again, environmental toxicology, and the Quebec Toxicology Research Centre, for human toxicology.

Most programs in Canadian centres receive federal funds in the form of grants, contributions or service contracts. The Department of National Health and Welfare finances toxicological research under the national program for research and development on health matters. Last year, the Medical Research Council of Canada set aside more than $150 million for financing this type of research and medical training, especially in medical toxicology.

The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada is conducting a program of strategic funding for mesological toxicology. In 1981, the National Research Council set up a new associate committee on toxicology in order to help further development of this discipline in Canada.

Notwithstanding last year's budgetary restrictions, the Department of the Secretary of State, through its Minister and as part of its program for specialisation centres, made a start-up contribution of $2 million to the Saskatchewan Research Centre.

These details are given to put into perspective the financing problems caused by recent cutbacks. I hope Canadians are now convinced that toxicology is alive and well in Canada and that it is expanding. We realize more should be done, and the Department of National Health and Welfare will be seeking other ways to respond to this need. For instance, it will be necessary to rely more often on the results of toxicological research conducted in other countries.

In this context, Canada supports the OECD's efforts to harmonize the various countries chemical regulatory programs. It supports also its objective of reciprocal acceptability of toxicological data between various trading partners.

We also refer more frequently to the criteria description emanating from international organizations such as the International Program for the Safety of Chemical Substances, a joint program of the World Health Organization, the United Nations Environmental Program, the International Labour Organization, and the International Cancer Research Centre.

As for the Hon. Member's second recommendation dealing with the toxic wastes in the Niagara River, the pollution of this river from individual, industrial and municipal discharge of pollutants and by from nearby the drainage into the river of toxic wastes dumpsites, is a source of major concern. The Hon. Tom McMillan, the Minister of Environment, could say a lot more to the House about this.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is mainly preoccupied with the possible contamination of drinking water as well as fish which could be eaten by the population.

There are 29 individual sources of industrial and municipal waste on the American side of the Niaraga River, and 61 major toxic waste dumpsites on that side of the river, within a three-mile wide stretch of land along the river. Individual sources identified in the United States are responsible for 89 per cent of the total pollution load, estimated at 1,400 kilograms per day.

An important responsibility for evaluating the quality of the water in the Great Lakes and to determine the impact of that water on human health lies with the Great Lakes regional office of the International Joint Commission and its committees responsible for scientific matters and water quality, as well as various standing committees and study groups. Under the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, officials from National Health and Welfare Canada sit on those committees and advise the International Joint Commission on the potential health hazard due to from chemicals in the Great Lakes basin.

The Government of Canada is attempting to reach agreements with other countries, including the United States, in order to reduce the discharge of potentially harmful chemicals or to clean up pollution sources. Most synthetic organic chemicals found in the Niagara River, and consequently in Lake Ontario and even the St. Lawrence River come from former dumps in the State of New York. We want to make sure that this federal Government, through meetings with the Governments of the United States and the State of New York, and through our embassy in Washington, the International Joint Commission and the joint Canada—U-S Committee on Toxic Chemicals in the Niagara River, will urge the United States and the State of New York to help Canada keep the Niagara River clean.

In a way, our concerns are shared by the American officials. In the State of New York, there is a licencing program for pollution control and waste disposal systems. That program is based either on U.S. national technological standards or on mandatory State standards on the quality of water, whichever are more stringent. In October 1984, American officials on the Committee on Toxic Chemicals in the Niagara River agreed on the need for binational management of toxic discharges into the Lake Ontario basin, but they also expressed the view that a first step would be to review the whole matter of the sources of toxic matters which are discharged in Lake Ontario.

The 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement assigns numerical values to selected contaminants which persist in the environment. The program of the State of New York to control limited sources on the American side of the border has now been implemented and licencing systems are now in effect or about to come into effect. Evaluation of this program shows that, when the authorized final limits are reached, dumpings of contaminants in the river will be reduced.

The action taken until now to clean up the Niagara River has resulted in a major and certified decrease of certain persistent chemicals which flow into Lake Ontario from the river, compared with the record high load of polluants reached between the mid-sixties and early seventies. Based on existing control programs, it is expected that the dumping of residual toxic products in the river will continue to decrese. The long-term monitoring program which has been recommended will enable us to determine whether this in fact happens, and it will be used as a starting point to consider possible changes to our monitoring strategies.

Major corrective action has already been taken, especially on the Love Canal location, to prevent the migration of dangerous waste material by infiltration. The Government is determined to sign agreements and to cooperate with the United States to reduce pollution in the Niagara River and Lake Ontario.

As for the improvement of sewage treatment facilities, the Hon. Tom McMillan, Minister of the Environment, plays a major role at the federal level. However, this activity comes mostly under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

And I can tell you that in Quebec the Government pays for 90 per cent of all municipal water purification projects and the municipalities pay only the remaining 10 per cent.

With respect to raising the profile of toxic chemicals in all areas of health research and of the preventive decision-making process, the Department of National Health and Welfare has established programs designed to keep the Canadian public informed about the nature and extent of hazards inherent in exposure to toxic chemicals. Allow me to give a few examples of the main activities under this ongoing program.

First, the staff of the Health Protection Branch closely monitors the programs of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry, but the 10-minute period had expired. Debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State (Mines) (Mr. Fretz).

• (1840)

[English]

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to take part in the debate today and to respond to the motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I am pleased to speak to this Member's motion and his request that the federal Government consider the advisability of protecting the health of Canadians, present and future generations, by providing for the upgrading of waste water treatment facilities. I heartily agree with him that is an important issue to bring before us today.

I want to address one of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) who, in reference to the state of the environment report, stated that the report gave the Department of Environment an F on toxics. There was a full release of this information. Never did this Department, the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary ever attempt to hide that report. We accept and we recognize the terrible record that is here before us. There has been no claim by this Department that we have been perfect, unlike the apparent hypocrisy of the former Minister of the Environment. Never have we made that statement. We did not hide the report. We did not attempt to keep it from the public, the caucus or Opposition Members.

I will tell you why in two words; we care. The Government, the caucus members on this side, care about the environment. We care about Canadians and we care about the future. We care about our children and our grandchildren. That is why we are willing to share that information. That is why we are willing to be right up front and let everyone see the record that is there that, indeed, is less than perfect.

As Hon. Members may be aware, on March 6, 1986 the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) signed an agreement with the Hon. Jim Bradley, Minister of the Environment for Ontario, which renewed the commitment of funds by both Governments for Great Lakes research and clean-up. This is a tremendous step forward. The $82.1 million agreement respecting Great Lakes water quality is a six-year pact which provides additional money for upgrading sewage treatment plants and for phosphorous control programs as well as for surveillance and monitoring.

Under this agreement, the federal Government has committed $9.7 million to Ontario alone and to area municipalities it will contribute an additional $50.4 million to upgrade existing sewage treatment facilities or build new ones. No one knows better than I how important that is.

My riding abuts the Niagara River, adjacent to Lake Erie. My constituents draw their water downstream from Lake Erie. The residents of Niagara Falls draw their water further on down Lake Ontario. No one, least of all the Hon. Member for Davenport has to tell me the importance of having clean water at our disposal.

Canada and Ontario have a long history of co-operative agreements to control water pollution, which dates back to 1971, when the federal and Ontario Governments signed the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. This most recent pact not only reaffirms but re-establishes the commitment of both Governments to continue to share the cost of pollution control on the Great Lakes.

Another aspect of the upgrading of waste water treatment facilities, and a very important one I might add, is the research into the development of improved technology for the treatment of waste water. Treatment plants, be they industrial or municipal, are facing even more complex problems. As the contaminants in our waste water are becoming more difficult and costly to remove, alternative, innovative and cost-effective solutions must be found.

I had the opportunity recently to visit Environment Canada's waste water technology centre in Burlington, Ontario. I was impressed with the equipment and the expertise there. Departmental scientists are developing and demonstrating innovative processes to deal with waste water produced by both industrial processes and municipalities. Let me cite an example, Mr. Speaker, because I can tell by the animated look on your face that you are interested in this subject. If the waste water from industrial processes can be cleaned up before it is sent to municipal sewers, the sewage treatment plant does not have to be as complex or as costly.

The major theme of the waste water technology centre's current municipal waste water program is that if municipal waste treatment processes can be modified, and wastes can be reused or treated more efficiently by using less energy, the end result will be cost reductions and a cleaner environment. I note that a difficult problem to solve in regional Niagara is finding places to put the sludge. We are working on that, along with Regional Niagara.

Work is under way at the centre on a number of projects to improve municipal waste water treatment technology. For example, on-line monitoring equipment and computer control are being evaluated at a full-scale sewage treatment plant. This technology may provide more reliable control over the discharge of pollutants, while at the same time reducing operating costs and making more efficient use of the treatment plant. We are most interested in doing whatever we can to reduce costs and bring today's high deficits under control.

In another project, the feasibility of converting sewage sludge to oil and a coal-like material is being demonstrated. In many urban areas, sludge disposal is a serious environmental and economic problem. In these and other projects, the centre's staff not only work with industry, but with municipalities, provincial agencies, universities, consultants and other federal Government departments—along with the Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Minister of the Environment who are doing such a fine job throughout the country—to develop innovative solutions to waste water treatment problems.

Let me address another aspect of the upgrading of waste water treatment facilities, namely the larger issue of sewage infrastructure. It comes down to the two words that I used initially, and what were they? We care. It is because as Conservatives, we care. What is it?

Some Hon. Members: We care.

Mr. Fretz: That is right. The issue of sewage infrastructure includes the repair and replacement of aging sewage treatment systems and the separation of storm sewers from sanitary sewers. That is an important consideration in Fort Erie. Crystal Beach is part of that municipality because we have regional Government. The separation of storm sewers and sanitary sewers involved a tremendous cost factor and created many problems for us in Crystal Beach. When the storm water got into the sewage pipes, it created many problems as well as that extra cost. Other aspects to this sewage infrastructure include upgrading treatment processes, from primary to secondary treatment, for example, and building new sewage treatment plants so that more Canadians have access to sewage treatment.

I see that I only have four minutes left, Mr. Speaker. Environment Canada, in collaboration with the Quebec Department of the Environment, developed a co-operative arrangement for a technology exchange to deal with waste water. I will try to finish quickly, Mr. Speaker, but it will be difficult because I have much to say.

I want the House to remember these four points involved in the co-operative arrangement. First, it involves joint planning of technology development projects and technology transfer; second, co-ordination of effort and resources allocated to technology development and transfer; third, joint programs for technology development and transfer; and fourth, creation of a joint committee to implement the technology transfer.

In conclusion, I have presented for Hon. Members, particularly the Hon. Member for Davenport who has listened so attentively, the extent of the Government's activities related to this issue and have emphasized the fact that important and significant events have already occurred to ensure that health of Canadians will not be compromised by insufficient waste water treatment. Why? Because we care.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate. The Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard).

Mr. Caccia: Back up your words with facts. If you do that, we will take you seriously.

An Hon. Member: Come on over, Charlie.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, if they keep this up, they will use all of my three minutes. I want to speak to this issue as well.

I believe that the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is one of the most important Private Members' Bills we have seen introduced this session.

Mr. Caccia: Do not kill it, then.

Mr. Winegard: They will not let me speak, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it matters which Government is in power in the next few years, although I hope it is us, because all governments will have to deal with major environmental problems.

In some cases these problems have been sprung upon us, while we have brought other problems upon ourselves. Let us consider PCBs for example. When oils containing PCBs began to be used many years ago, no one really knew the risk. These oils were poured on our roads without regard for the consequences which we know only too well now. I believe all Governments have been in a reactive mode for many years, which is clearly unacceptable. Governments must become more active in this area and I believe that has happened. I hope Members of the House appreciate the efforts of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin) in coming to grips with this issue.

We believe that environmental protection requires a two-pronged approach. We must clean up existing problems, of which there are many, and we must prevent future problems. Since you are cutting me off, Mr. Speaker, let me conclude by sayng that you may be assured that we will look after the future.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Ms. Copps (Hamilton East) (p. 14483).

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-96 concerning fiscal arrangements between the federal Government and the provinces and federal contribution for post-secondary education and health care.

First of all, I would like to point out that although the reductions in equalization payments provided under Bill C-96 were announced in the May 1985 Budget, the Conservative Government did not say when these reductions would be introduced nor what amounts were involved.

That is why I think we should take a closer look at what happened between the May 1985 Budget and the announcement that equalization payments would be reduced, made at the First Minister's Conference in Halifax, in November 1985.

The House will recall that last summer and last fall, there was talk of reducing the deficit, and many observers seriously wondered whether the Conservative Government would be able to do so.

At the time there were several bank failures, and there was the decision made by the Conservatives to pay compensation for unisured deposits, which means deposits over and above $600,000. We criticized that decision because it meant defending the assets of the rich at the expense of the average depositor. The Liberal Party's position on the subject has not changed.

Another measure announced in the May 1985 Budget was also pretty questionable, and I am referring to the capital gains tax exemption. This measure will cost the federal Tresury $1.25 billion between now and 1991. This measure reflects a social choice that is not the Liberal Pary's choice.

Mr. Speaker, my point is that the choices made by the Conservative Government are not always intelligent choices, And that is whay is the matter with Bill C-96.

This Bill will reduce payments to the provinces for post-secondary education and health services during the next six years. This means that the federal Government will save about $8 billion at the expense of students and patients. These reductions are also being made at the expense of our technological future and scientific progress, because ti si a well-known fact that to remain competitive with other western countries in technology, science and the human sciences, we must not cut back but continue to re-invest.

Also, when one considers the significant cuts that will be affecting the provinces, when one considers also certain services that we would like to establish, like child care for instance, one realizes that right now the first answer is: Sorry, the federal Government is not transferring the necessary funding, there is no way we can provide for those services.

However, if we look closer, we find that in Canada one child out of five is poor. We have 43 per cent of mothers with children below age 3 who work full-time. Also, 46 per cent of mothers with children below age six are working full-time, because of precarious economic circumstances. Only 29 per cent of families in Canada live on one salary. In 42 per cent of families, couples with children, both parents have to work for otherwise they would live below the poverty level.

At present there is a 15 per cent ratio of conventional families, while in 52 per cent of single parent families women are the breadwinners.

Now, if we consider introducing child care, which in my view should be a priority with the Government of Canada, and if we have that kind of budgetary cutbacks, the provinces will certainly refuse to get involved in that.

I do not believe child care is merely a women's concern. Child care is the concern of society, of the family, of the couple and at present the birth rate is 1.6 and will decline to 1.4 within a year or two. And when we look at the increase in the number of senior citizens, providing those essential services to our children would be simply a quid pro quo, because they will have to support us when we become seniors.

When we held hearings across Canada, we had presentations from numerous parent groups. They were not only women, fathers were there too telling us about the need for such services. There was a submission from someone in Vancouver who compared child care to automobile parking lots. Of course, at first we were all startled, because we did not see the connection. But they made the point that we have cars, which are very important to us. We take good care of our cars because they cost quite a lot of money. Also, if you have problems with your car, you bring it to a serviceman, there being no point in taking it to the service-station around the corner because we want our cars to be kept in good condition. When you go to work, it is understood that there are parkings for your car. If you rent an apartment or buy a condominium downtown, it is understood in the lease or purchase agreement that you will also have a parking space. If we compare parking spaces for cars and facilities for children, we find that our priorities are very different in these two cases. If you have a problem with your car, you just call the office and say: I am having car problems. You will be told: Fine, go to the garage, you can come in one hour late, there is no problem. When you get to the office, you will be told: Is your car fixed? Do not worry, I had the same problem last time. However, let a woman phone and say: I have a problem because my child is sick and the sitter has not arrived. She will be told very nicely that it had better be the last time because, otherwise, she will have to look for another job.

I think that this shows what our priorities are and what they should be.

If Bill C-96, which deals with equalization, is adopted, the federal Government will obviously lead the way, but it will be very difficult to apply this Bill in practice.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, if we think about the cut-backs provided by Bill C-96, we find that some Canadian universities will have to reduce their budgets drastically, which will check the progress of both students and teachers. In the province of Quebec, for instance, I know that there have been major budgetary cutbacks, resulting in subscriptions to specialized magazines not being renewed, so that students are not even aware of new developments in their own areas of expertise. Some teaching positions have been eliminated, and then hiring was frozen. A whole generation of scholars do not find employment in the current university system, while the students enrollment continues to grow.

The new reductions imposed by Bill C-96 are, in my opinion, outright unacceptable, because they were supposed to take effect on April 1, 1987, and not on April 1, 1986.

The brief submitted by the Association of Canadian Community Colleges to the Senate Standing Committee on National Finance emphasized the importance of investing wisely to maintain or even improve Canada's competitiveness in the academic field.

I remind the House that there are currently over two million Canadian men and women who attend community colleges and who are certainly privileged, as far as postsecondary education in Canada is concerned.

Community colleges certainly do not agree with universities when the time comes to talk about financing, for they all seek the lion's share; however, if there is one point on which they all agree, it is about the need to continue investing in postsecondary education. It is urgent to invest in hi-tech industries to meet international competition head on.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-96 runs in the face of the Conservatives' election promises. As a matter of fact, at a meeting of the Quebec Conservative caucus held on July 1984, the following proposal was adopted: To respect the federal obligation to finance health care in the provinces pursuant to established programs financing and, on an equal basis, provide the provinces with additional funds to establish or improve such programs as are recognized by a national conference of Ministers of Health and health care professionals as being the most likely to improve the general health of Canadians and reduce the costs of the system in the long term.

Throughout the election campaign the Progressive Conservative Party did not hesitate to criticize the 6-and-5 program, yet today not only does it reduce federal transfer payments but it does so one year ahead of time.

I would like to say how Quebec Finance Minister Gérard D. Lévesque reacted to the reduction in equalization payments. He stated that most provinces had acted with much discipline and moderation with respect to the control of expenditures, and he urged Ottawa to look in its own backyard and see to what extent it might cut down its own expenditures.

I would also like to tell the House how some pressure groups have reacted. Earlier I mentioned the Association of Canadian Community Colleges, I will now refer to the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Medical Society, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

• (1910)

[English]

Dr. Donald Savage, President of the Canadian Association of University Teachers, said that the consequence of Bill C-96 will be poorer quality education and a decline in laboratories and libraries. He said that Queens University library is rated eighty-fifth among North American universities and McGill is fifty-ninth. He thinks that the consequence is that good people are beginning to leave.

Furthermore, according to Dr. Savage, such a measure would mean cut backs 20 times the reductions imposed by the Liberals and opposed by the Conservatives at the time.

I heard one of my colleagues say that the present Government had created a number of jobs since September 1984. He even mentioned the figure of 600,000 jobs. I would like to elaborate on this figure. When they mention creating 600,000 jobs, I would like to point out that most of these jobs are part-time jobs that do not provide social benefits in proportion to the number of hours worked. The Hon. Member also pointed out that many jobs were created for women.

I agree some jobs were created for women, but today, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is in trouble because the programs set up specifically for women in non-traditional occupations were cut as of April 1986, without prior notice. As a result, all women who were hired several months before and were expecting to get training were sent home. There was also a special program for women working in the home who wanted to re-enter the labour market. All these programs were cut, and today, a women who has worked at home for years no longer has a chance to train for a new career.

I therefore think that those are two important problems which the Conservative Government has been unable to solve. When we look at Bill C-62 on equity employment, we realize that those are fine words, but it is quite difficult to implement such a bill,since there is no penalty for those who will ignore the legislation. I should like to be more specific since we are now talking about the number of jobs created by the Conservative Government, but the statistics should be more complete and more acurate.

[English]

According to the Canadian Medical Association, this federal funding change will result in an ever-increasing two-tiered health care system, one for those living in rich provinces and another one for those living in provinces with a lower fiscal capacity.

Furthermore, the President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Roger Hamel, urged the federal Government to spend more on universities. He said that the business community is increasingly concerned that the squeeze on post-secondary education funding will make it impossible for universities to meet the demand for research and development, or even to provide adequate basic instruction for students.

• (1920)

As we can see, Mr. Speaker, there were such protests against Bill C-96 that I sincerely believe that the Tory Government would be well advised to amend it.

I also heard a while ago one of my Conservative colleagues tell us how the Liberal Government had been inconsistent and had burdened Canada with a terrible financial problem. On the other hand, the Conservative Government is supposed to solve all the problems. Let it be so, but on the other hand they always compare with what is being done in the United States. I hope that we will not become the second United States and do everything they have done because now their poverty rate has really gone up.

It has also been stated that over 40 per cent of Americans cannot get medical care because they do not have the required funds. The same thing should not happen in Canada.

I would like to say once again that I am against this Bill. I think that it is an altogether unacceptable measure following which postsecondary institutions as well as health care institutions in Canada will lose $8 billion. In Quebec alone, $2 billion are wiped out. I am convinced that Canadians will remember this at the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my honourable colleague. As she knows, over the past year, the Government has made several expenditures which some of us have very seriously and rightfully questioned, and I am sure you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker. For instance, Canadian taxpayers, through their taxes, had to sink approximately $2 billion in what is commonly referred to as the banking bail out fiasco. We have learned also these past few days that nearly $1 million has been spent in travelling expenses for three little trips made by our Prime Minister. We have even learned today that nearly $40,000 was spent on a few minute long television program, so that Americans can have the great privilege to see our Prime Minister's mug on their TV screen. Could she tell us if, in her opinion—

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, do you really feel that it is proper for a Member of the House to use such an expression when dealing with the Prime Minister of Canada. Whatever its political stripe I think the Prime Minister of Canada deserves to be shown a certain amount of respect. In this connection, I think that we should follow the example of the Americans who, whatever their party affiliation, always address their head of state as "Mr. President". I therefore rise on a point of order to ask the Hon. Member to show a little more respect to the Prime Minister of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): The Hon. Member's point is well taken. I therefore ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) to mind his words when he refers to the Prime Minister. The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following my honourable colleague's admonition, I will refer from now on to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as he has just suggested, as the President of Canada. I have noted his parallel with the President of the United States.

We can therefore assume, from what we have just heard, that the Prime Minister of Canada is not only the head of the Government, but that he should be recognized from now on as a head of state.

The Hon. Member for LaSalle—Ville Emard seems to think that he is a head of state. In my book, Mr. Speaker, he is only the Government leader, and it is my Queen who is my head of state and nobody else.

However, I will drop this matter to ask my colleague the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), who has just made an excellent speech in the House, whether she feels these expenditures—wasted, in my opinion—which the Government can make are sensible and reasonable, considering that we no longer have any money, as evidenced by the bill we are dealing with tonight in the House, that we are lacking the necessary funds, because of these extravagant expenditures, to do the job. I should like her comments on this.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, looking back on the 1984 election campaign, I recall clearly well that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who was the Leader of the Opposition at the time, railed against Liberal patronage throughout his campaign. The lesson must be twice as hard to swallow today as the Conservative Party appears to be twice as bad as we were. In fact, when they talk about budget cuts and they say that we should listen with very great care, when we know that women's programs . . . When we know that funds for the shelters for battered women have been cut, when we know that groups of women are still waiting to know if their program is going to be continued and we read in the papers about the rather shameful Government spendings, we are left with some serious questions.

If the Government wants to be believed and indeed trusted, I think it is time that they start putting their action where their mouth is, that they start doing what they say because people are now trusting this Government less and less. They tell us to do something while the Government act in a different way.

Therefore I think that there must be ways of increasing the Government's credibility.

We also heard promises respecting women. We were told that women would be a priority when the Conservatives came into power. But just as far as appointments, are concerned,the figure of 20 per cent is hardly reached. Recently, two press releases were issued by the Prime Minister's Office: one was about the appointment of a ten-member board of directors in the sports field, and each and everyone of those appointees were men. So, one woman. On the same day, another press release told of the appointments of 17 people on some other, board of directors, and that time we were lucky: there was one woman among those 17 people. At that rate, I am afraid it will be rather difficult to meet the objectives of the Conservative Government, and I believe that if it wants to increase its credibility, it is going to have to act differently, especially with respect to expenditures.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, I want to protest against a statement made a few minutes ago by the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), who said that the program for women rejoining the labour market developed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) was a failure and a fiasco and that no money has been allocated under this program.

Mrs. Pépin: I said that the program was in difficulty.

Mrs. Bertrand: A few days ago, I announced in my constituency three programs for women rejoining the—

Mrs. Pépin: In your Conservative constituency.

Mrs. Bertrand: —labour market, for an amount of $412,000, and this was the fifth such project. This is a program for which the Hon. Member for Outremont has asked to help women rejoin the labour market, and there was no such program before this year. Under the previous Government, there was no opportunity for these women to join or rejoin the labour market.

This is what I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that employment programs in the Department of Employment and Immigration were in jeopardy. I am willing to admit that I am glad the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi allocated some money to training programs for women. However, if you look at the entire Montreal area, there are programs there which had been in existence for years and were working well, but are now in trouble for lack of funds.

I should ask the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi to—I can give her the names of those groups, they are well known, but their programs were cut in April, without notice.

This is important. If she wants to look after women, she should check immediately and press for changes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) for a question or a comment, but it should be brief, there are barely two minutes left.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, since it was alleged that few women had been appointed, I would like the Hon. Member for Outremont to compare, honestly and objectively, our record since we took office with a mission to introduce change, and the record of the previous Liberal Government. She can take whatever criteria she likes, whether it be the last year or the last five years. I would very much like to see an honest comparison between the appointments we made since our election in 1984 and the ones made before.

Mrs. Pépin: First of all, I would like to remind my colleague that the Liberal Government was responsible for appointing the first woman Speaker of the Senate, the first woman Speaker of the House, the first woman Governor General. The Conservative Governement—

Mr. Blais: The 200 billion deficit—

Mrs. Pépin: We are talking about appointments, sir. The Conservative Government dismissed Mrs. Betty Hewes, who chaired the Canadian National, not because she was not efficient, but because she was a Liberal.

Mr. Blais: She said so herself.

Mrs. Pépin: I told the Prime Minister then that he had replaced Mrs. Hewes by a man, that I was willing to admit that a Conservative government could appoint Conservatives but that it could not replace a woman by a man, as his Government had done.

I think it is an insult to all Conservative women who are told they are not capable enough to hold that position. And I hope the women who belong to the Progressive Conservative Party will let the Government know that no more such appointments should be made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) for allowing me to speak now. I appreciate that.

Since the Hon. Member has talked about women and positions for them, I want to say that I am waiting for the day a woman will become Prime Minister of Canada. I am waiting for Mila. Perhaps it is Mila I am waiting for.

[English]

As I said, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) for allowing me to make a few remarks on this Bill. I have to go to committee later tonight along with the Hon. Member who is from Calgary.

I want to make a few remarks because this Bill affects my home Province of British Columbia a great deal and it affects British Columbia at the worst possible time. I am told that there will be a cut-back of about $5.6 billion over the next five years in the distribution of money to provincial Governments throughout Canada. The Province of British Columbia will lose $650 million over the next five years. This province has already suffered a lot from provincial cut-backs imposed by the Bennett Social Credit Government. British Columbia has already cut back education to quite a drastic degree. This will mean even more cut-backs for education. We must remember that this is at a time when the province is suffering, as are other provinces in western Canada, because of uneven economic growth in Canada and certain external forces which we find difficult to control.

Most economic institutes have predicted great growth in the next few years for central Canada. Informetrica and various other economic institutes have predicted a movement of people and money to central Canada, to Ontario and Quebec. I do not begrudge them that growth; I envy it, especially when it does not mean growth in the western and in the Atlantic provinces. We out West right now are getting a triple whammy.

In Saskatchewan the prices of wheat have reached historic lows. Farmers are in real difficulty. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) have pointed out the difficulties in Saskatchewan many times. As for the Province of Alberta, Your Honour knows that the bottom has fallen out of oil prices. They have dropped from about $28 U.S. per barrel three months or four months ago to $12 U.S. per barrel. That is a dramatic drop. I see Hon. Members from Alberta in the House. They could tell us, as they already have, that the Alberta economy is in trouble.

I should like to return to my Province of British Columbia. Those who have listened to Question Period will know that the Americans have placed a 35 per cent duty upon the shake and shingle industry. In fact, that has almost closed down the entire industry. It has put some 4,000 people directly involved in that industry out of work, some of whom are my constituents. It is even more difficult when the Government cuts back $650 million in payments to the Province of British Columbia. This is why I say it is a bad time to do so.

Why is the Government doing it? I suppose it is to save money because it has to deal with its deficit. Yes, it must deal with its deficit, but I cannot help but wonder if there are other ways to deal with its deficit. One way of dealing with a deficit is to collect more money in taxes and to give less money away in tax write-offs and so on. Today's newspaper contains a story about Dome Petroleum, a huge oil company which is in financial difficulty. There is talk of selling Dome Petroleum. One of its biggest assets, next to its producing properties which are all mortgaged to the hilt by the banks, is a $2.3 billion tax credit. In other words, it could be a tax deduction but Dome cannot take advantage of it because it is not making any money. What will Dome do with it? It will probably sell it along with the company to another company which would not have to pay $2.3 billion in taxes to the federal Government.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has headed a New Democratic Party tax probe. That group has travelled the country and has tried to consult with ordinary Canadians. I should like to refer to the message which that probe has been receiving, as I have attended some of its hearings. I know my friend has spoken on the matter in the House and will be reporting on it at greater length shortly. However, the message has been that the Canadian tax system is not a fair one. Most Canadians get their taxes taken right off the top of their cheques. Other Canadians, especially certain companies and so on, are not paying any taxes at all. Some rich people making a fortune are in fact not paying taxes at the same level as ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Riis: Or at all.

Mr. Waddell: Or at all. That is an area at which the federal Government could look to get more money rather than cut back on funds to the provinces which will result in cut-backs to education.

I have heard many Liberal Members quote the Chief Justice of Canada. I hesitate to quote him because I do not really think he should be brought into politics. However, he made an extraordinary speech. It came from the heart, as it comes the heart of almost every Canadian who thinks about things, that the last place we want a cut-back is in the area of education. We do not want to cut back education because if there is anything the modern world teaches us, it is that education is key to a real economic future, so that Canadians can cease to be hewers of wood and drawers of water. We have one of the best educated populations in the world, and we do not want a cut-back in that area.

Another area at which the Government could look to get money is that of the oil companies. I have sat on the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources for a number of years. From 1980—and it will be phased out at the end of next year—the Government has given the oil companies $7.3 billion in PIP grants. I know the Conservative Government has cut that out, but the oil companies were given $7.3 billion to drill a lot of holes. I ask Hon. Members to think what could have been done with that amount of money in terms of health care and education.

There are 70 foodbanks in Greater Vancouver. Can Your Honour believe that we have foodbanks in western Canadian cities? We do not have enough money to go around and some people cannot afford to buy food. Just the other day the Quebec Government announced that it was cutting back on payments to welfare recipients.

[Translation]

—how much money is it? I think it is $160 a month for those who are not married, who live alone, but now policemen are going after those poor people who may have a little bit more money.

[English]

In Quebec they are chasing after single welfare recipients who are receiving $160 per month. However, it seems strange that federally we hardly police the PIP grants which provided $7.3 billion, with some of the most incredible rip-offs one could imagine.

Some of the priorities we have in Canada are strange to me. We have not learned. In the area of energy, we are returning to the old system. We are dying to develop Hibernia off Newfoundland at a time when the world price of oil is terribly low. We are preparing to make terrific deals—that is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) will be doing over the next few days—with Mobil, a large American company from New York, so that it can develop Hibernia sometime in the future. In that event federal politicians can make good on their political promises in Atlantic Canada and can say: "We have an Atlantic Accord". We are prepared to give away the shop in terms of making deals.

We are back to the old system of tax credits in the offshore, where billions of dollars will not be paid in taxes to the federal Treasury. The oil companies are experts in that system; they were involved in it before. I call the new energy program "Back to the Future". We are going back to the old rip-off system, which is supposedly our future energy policy.

This debate is not about energy nor about the taxation system. However, these items are involved, especially if we ask ourselves where the Government will get the money.

I should like to look at what it means to British Columbia to lose $650 million over five years. The B.C. Government has a number of choices. First, it can increase taxes. Second, it can increase its deficit. Its deficit is already inflated because of borrowings for the northeast coal megaproject which has turned partly sour; because of Expo; and because of highway and other projects. It can increase its deficit, but it has very little room in which to work. Third, it can make further cuts in education and health. Those of us who are from British Columbia cannot figure out where further cuts can be made.

Professors are already leaving UBC and Simon Fraser and going to the United States and eastern Canada as a result of better job offers. Our colleges are already cutting back. Here is a province sitting on the edge of the Asia Pacific market which will be the fastest growing market in the latter half of the twentieth century. That is where the action is and yet we are stagnating, which is crazy. The only way that we can get into the Asia Pacific market is to use our heads. We have to have an educated young population to supply engineering services and forestry services when the forests are developed in Malaysia and Indonesia. Hydro technology will be needed. The geothermal and geophysical technology for oil and gas exploration in China will be needed. In my view, the 21st century will belong to China, and we are on the edge of that great market. The last thing we should be doing is cutting back on education. We should be adding funds instead. That is why there is a lot of flak and opposition to this Bill.

I would hope that the Government, even at this late stage could see the light and say, no, we are not going to stop transfering money like this to the provinces. We will find the money some other way in some fair taxes levied on the oil companies and the big companies that have the money. We can do it. We do not have to have this cut-back. With some renewed economic growth in central Canada, there should be more money flowing into the federal Treasury. It should be unnecessary to cut back grants to the provinces. Look at what is happening in western Canada. Look at the Alberta budget and its deficit from the other day. Look at what is happening with the shake and shingle industry in British Columbia. In a few weeks we could lose our entire forest industry or cripple it with countervailing duties on Canadian lumber, which will cost about $1 billion. Forestry is the biggest industry in British Columbia. Look at what is happening in Saskatchewan with low prices for farm goods causing farmers to go bankrupt. The Government is going to put an incredible squeeze on the provincial Governments. Some deserve it in many ways because they have spent money foolishly. Nevertheless you cannot punish people for foolish provincial Governments.

The Government of British Columbia brought in restraint at the worst possible time, at a time when there was a lack of demand and when the economy was falling. Suddenly the Bennett Government brought in restraint and it crippled the economy. British Columbia has not recovered. This is a double whammy. The Government is going to Bennettize us with the Bill. I thank my friend across the way for letting me make those few remarks from my point of view about the far west of Canada sitting on the Pacific Rim.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have been following the debate. Would my friend opposite explain one aspect that I cannot seem to get my mind around? Members over there seem to think there have been cuts. Surely we should be analysing this matter from the perspective of costs. I can remember that with high inflation the costs of these institutions was going up by 17 per cent. The previous administration cut the grants to 6 per cent and then to 5 per cent. That seemed to me to be a real cut in actual cost increases each year. With inflation now at 4 per cent, while we are cutting a donation from 7 per cent, 8 per cent or 9 per cent to 5 per cent, we are still transferring more from the federal taxpayers' pocket to the provincial taxpayers than the actual increases in the costs of the institutions. It seems to me that there is not a cut-back. These provinces are getting 1 per cent more than their cost increases. Surely that is an increase in actual fact.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, it is an arguable point on the figures. I will check the debate on it. I am informed that we are still going to lose money. The figure I got for British Columbia was $650 million over five years. We need that money. You can say what you like about inflation, and we are glad inflation has gone down, but nevertheless it seems that we will lose $650 million over five years. Any way you have it, I am told we lose that amount, and that will hurt.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, it is only an increase because the rate of increase is based on a delayed factor which has all of the high inflation part of it. Therefore, the actual transfer would be higher than the real cost of inflation because of past inflation. The province is going to get $650 million less than the formula would have generated, but actual costs are only going up by 4 per cent. We are going to give the provinces 5 per cent instead of 7 per cent, 8 per cent or 9 per cent which the formula would generate. This whole debate has been kind of off base, Mr. Speaker. Members have been talking about what might have been, whereas we should be looking at the actual costs that institutions are facing.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am told that there has been agreement to get that money. There is a need for money and new investment. I would think the Government would want to have more money going into western Canada. I would think the Hon. Member from western Canada would want to push for that particularly. I was in Lethbridge not too long ago. I know that even that prosperous community of good people is going to suffer from the downturn in the oil economy. I would think that the Member might want to stand up and push for more money for western Canada rather than justify this Government cut-back.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne). Resuming debate?

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Yes, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I have some regrets about letting my hon. friend from British Columbia take the floor, because I thought that of course the Hon. Member was going to vote with us on this motion and would say: At last, this Government has acted responsibly and lived up to the desire for change expressed in the federal election in September 1984. But it wasn't so bad after all, Mr. Speaker, because the Hon. Member at least admitted that the deficit had to be reduced, and that it was high time, after the last 20 years, that a Government acted responsibly. In fact, I appreciate the frankness with which the Hon. Member from Vancouver expressed his views in the House. I think his performance deserves applause Mr. Speaker, I really do.

Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I am speaking to Bill C-96 which concerns transfer payments to the provinces. Mentioning the fact may be somewhat redundant, but I felt I had to because sitting in the House today, I realized that the Opposition parties, the New Democrats and the Liberals, were trying once again to twist the facts, so much so that I heard the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) talking about $67 million in equalization payments for Quebec and that the Quebec Government would have to increase corporate taxes, and that from a New Democrat, Mr. Speaker! A New Democrat who says that the Quebec Government will have to tax corporations. I said to myself: Now I've heard everything! I would like to explain to the Hon. Member that equalization payments and transfer payments are two totally different things, two economic concepts that have nothing in common except for the fact that they are both paid to the provinces. Equalization, Mr. Speaker, is based on the ability to raise taxes, while transfer payments to the provinces are money the federal Government gives for specific sectors, in this case, health and education.

• (1950)

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) was talking about a sum of $67 million which the Government of Quebec has to get back, but he is not referring to the federal government, he is indeed referring to a provincial government. There again, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor is mistaken. Because we are here in the House of Commons, we are dealing with the Government of Canada, and we have to discuss the national policies put forward.

The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor talks about a sum of $67 million. But we are talking about equalization and transfer payments of $4.091 billion for the fiscal year 1985-1986.

I heard also the Liberal member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) talking about election promises and the extravagant expenses the Progressive Conservative Government is allegedly making since it came to power.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York Centre could not say things like that with a straight face. I am sure he was not aware of what he was saying, and it was showing in his remarks that the session is drawing to a close. For if he had been the least consistent, Mr. Speaker, he would have had the decency to recognize that in their last 20 years the Liberals have got this country into a $200 billion debt, that on the economic level they have created disastrous situations. Just think of the inflation rate which was varying between 12 per cent and 15 per cent during recent years. Just think of the interest rates which had risen above 20 per cent. How many Canadian families, how many Canadian contractors, how many young Canadian students had to struggle with economic difficulties because of 20 per cent interest rates? The bankruptcies we have seen over the last years, Mr. Speaker, the slowing down of the Canadian economy—

The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) was saying a few minutes ago that we were comparing ourselves to the Americans. Mr. Speaker, you know that as far as net income is concerned, I prefer to compare my situation to that of the Americans rather than that of other countries like Zimbabwe. But that is the kind of comparisons the Liberals could make when we took over in September of 1984, because they were getting the Canadian people into debt, they were creating debt burden for the next generations to pay, without any consideration for their own election campaign commitments, Mr. Speaker. Because the Liberals had been showering us with electoral promises. For example, in 1981, they promised pensions for widows and widowers from 60 to 64 years of age but they didn't follow through. It's the same thing with the long term dairy policy, Mr. Speaker, and what about the interest rates they had promised to lower in the case of the Farm Credit Corporation. They didn't do anything, Mr. Speaker.

In light of that, do you really believe that the Canadian people will trust what the Liberal Party and the NDP are telling us today?

Mr. Speaker, I think that they got to be kidding. Yet, they were in power for 20 years and they were so blatantly arrogant that they decided on everything unilaterally.

This is why they cannot understand that today we had at least six meetings with the provinces, with the Ministers of Finance of each province, precisely to discuss the economic situation, to talk about transfer payments, and to tell them: Considering the two very specific parameters which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) simply had to keep in mind—deficit reduction and fair redistribution to the provinces—we had to explain to the ten Canadian provinces that we had to slow down the rate of increase. Mr. Speaker, the Opposition equates slowing down the rate of increase with cutting down, but to the Progressive Conservative Government it means continuing to give more.

On a proportional basis we can see that when the Liberals were in office the transfer payments to the provinces increased by 7 or 8 per cent each year when the inflation rate ranged from 12 to 15 per cent. In 1986 our transfer payments to the provinces go up 5 per cent, which is 2 per cent more that any other increase allowed, and the average rate of inflation is about 4.5 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, in terms of purchasing power, inflation rate and transfer payments, I think that Canadians will realize that the Progressive Conservative Government is more generous than the Liberals ever were.

And their arrogance, Mr. Speaker—to get back to what I was saying about the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)— was such that I can understand why, in an editorial in Le Devoir, Solange Chaput Rolland would talk about the Liberals, seething with anger. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote one sentence which shows just how arrogant the Liberals could be.

> Hurt by the insults received and thrown across the floor of the National Assembly during the referendun debate which your ex-colleague Jean Chrétien proudly claims to have won almost single-handedly, I had referred to the "fraternal rent" between Péquistes and Quebec Liberals. But we Quebec nationalists enamoured of Canada did not forget that, since 1976, the worst foes were not the friends of Mr. Lévesques but those of Mr. Trudeau

Mr. Speaker, this is the opinion that Quebecers and Canadians in general have of the Liberals. They believe that the Liberals did not respect the provinces in recent years. The previous Government never tried to sit down with the provinces to negotiate, to look at economic facts and to discuss the future of our young people in relation with post-secondary education or to speak about health programs.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand how the Liberal Members who were part of the former Government could tell our Quebec Premier, Mr. Bourassa, that he is a hot dog eater. I cannot accept this. It is an insult for Quebec and it is certainly not the little meeting that was held last weekend in Saint-Hyacinthe that can make us forget their 20 disastrous years in Quebec. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that Quebecers will still remember at the next federal election. You can count on us to remind them.

We have to face the facts. I can see the Hon. Member for Outremont who has come to hear what I have to say about the Liberal Party. I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we have to face the facts and that this includes a deficit of $200 billion.

Yet, contrary to what the Liberals and New Democrats are saying, Bill C-96 is first of all a progressive bill which aims at preserving transfer payments to the provinces in the short, medium and long term. Mr. Speaker, this is important because we have to treat all the provinces fairly. However, we must not exert excessive pressure on the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that the Progressive Conservative Government has been able to reduce the deficit in its first two budgets. This was an electoral promise. I do not understand why the Members opposite say that we do not keep our election promises. We said in 1984 that we would reduce the deficit left to us by the Liberals. We said that we would provide a healthy administration of the public Treasury. The Members opposite are shocked by an amount of about $820,000, or let us say $1 million. They are shocked about $1 million and try to make the Canadian public forget that they are responsible for $200 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the Hon. Member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) who has just dealt with Bill C-96, must be laughing at the Canadian people, at the taxpayers and the most needy when they say that this Government is not giving a break to women, that it is harsh on senior citizens and callous toward our young people. Mr. Speaker, when we examine the economic record of the previous Government, we realize that they do not know what they are talking about. If they were still in power, we would be faced this year with a $39 billion deficit. They would be responsible now for a global deficit of between $230 and $240 billion, and something is sure, Mr. Speaker: They would not have addressed the problems. When we came to power in 1984, we said that we would put the economy back on track, give back to Canadians a taste for life and respect each of the ten provinces, including their respective duly elected Governments. And that is what we have done since September 4, 1984, Mr. Speaker. We have had six Finance Minister conferences on the subject of transfer payments. We have held constitutional meetings. We have shown a certain open-mindedness concerning the patriation of the Constitution and Quebec's is joining the other Canadian provinces. We have had discussions with each province when the time came to make our transfer payments, because we wanted to see where we were going. We have discussed free trade with the provinces. Yet, Mr. Speaker, Liberal and NPD Members cannot understand that. If they cannot understand that, it is because they have never bothered to seek the advice of the Canadian provinces, to respect the Canadian people who have elected them.

And today, because they are sitting in the Opposition and getting what they deserve, Mr. Speaker, they claim that Canadians will forget in five minutes or within four years all the economic prejudice they have caused them. No, Mr. Speaker. That is not possible, and we will be there to tell them so two or two and a half years down the road, and you may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that we will be doing a clean and fair job and when Canadians are called upon to judge this Government's economic performance, the four years in Government during which we will have put the economy back on the tracks, sent hundreds of thousands of Canadians back to work, regained our rightful place on the international scene, lead this country recognized as an economically strong nation, a country that is open to the future, because we will have left our Canadian youth with something good for the years to come, because we will have looked after social programs, health programs, because we will have ensured fairness to the provinces, because we will have negotiated with each one of them what is the best for them, rather than what we think is the best for them.

Then, Mr. Speaker, Canadians will be in a position to judge us on our record rather than on promises as the Liberals used to be so good at; Canadians then will judge our sterling performance and, finally, Mr. Speaker, they will say how much they appreciate what this Progressive Conservative Government has done to build a strong Canada, a just Canada, a fair Canada.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, looking at the whole issue, looking at the reason why we must move forward on a legislation such as Bill C-96, it is in order to make the Canadian people understand, and as a matter of fact Canadians do understand quite well. The problem in this House is with the two Opposition parties, they are slow at understanding. They find it difficult to understand, Mr. Speaker, that we are not here to waste time as they used to do when they were in power. We are here, Mr. Speaker, to put Canada back to work, and this is why we must approve a piece of legislation like Bill C-96, this is why I have risen a second time on this legislation to support the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), to support the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to tell the Canadian people that, contrary to what the Liberals and the New Democrates are suggesting, the federal Government is not reducing transfer payments, but is rather providing a sensible increase, an increase it can afford, and this is what differentiates a responsible Government such as this one from an irresponsible Government as the Liberal had.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I heard my colleague mention that Canadians would acknowledge that the Tory Government is fair and has improved financial conditions. I should like to ask him a question. When we look at the last Budget, at the way taxes are distributed, I feel that as far as equity is concerned low-income people are taxed more than the rich. Taxes have increased by 23 per cent for people earning between $15,000 and $20,000 and by 1 per cent for people earning between $100,000 and $200,000. Is that the equity to which my Tory colleague was referring a while ago?

Will Canadians remember that fact? If we look at the Budget, the low wage earners have been taxed and the price of drugs has gone up. Now, if somebody says that senior citizens with low incomes will remember the equity of the Tory Government, I fail to see whether my colleague is reffering to that matter.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) should have consulted with her other colleagues, especially the former Minister of Finance from Quebec. She would have realized that our Government is much fairer than hers ever was on the subject of income tax. Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, that under the Liberals, people in the highest income brackets were not paying income tax? They do now, with our minimum tax system. Is the Hon. Member for Outremont trying to tell us that in the good old days, when the Liberals were in power, it was perfectly normal to give the rich a free ride and to make the poor foot the bill, because that is exactly what they did, Mr. Speaker? And today, she tells us our Budget isn't fair because we are making the rich pay. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Outremont is not being very consistent, and I may remind her that this Budget is doing the most for low-income families. They get the most out of this Budget because we are going to make advance payments, something the Liberals did not do. The child tax credit has been increased. Did the Liberals ever do that? And increased over and above the annual inflation rate, which is a net gain for low-income families, Mr. Speaker! Is the Hon. Member for Outremont trying to tell us that her Government had any consideration for the needy? Mr. Speaker, in 1981, the Liberals promised an allowance for widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, but it took a duly elected Progressive Conservative Government to implement this measure. The Hon. Member for Outremont should listen to what I'm saying, because it's the truth, it's a fact.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider all the measures that have been taken in the social sphere since the Conservatives came to power, and we look at the cost-benefit balance, we see an economic climate that has improved as a result of a strong and durable recovery. Thousands of workers have gone back to their jobs, unlike what the Hon. Member for Outremont was saying when she commented that most of these jobs are part-time jobs. I don't know where she got her information, but according to mine, 83 per cent of the jobs created were permanent jobs. Mr. Speaker, we got rid of programs that had students painting fences all summer long. We are putting them in jobs to match the kind of training they have received and prepare them for a career. The Liberals didn't do that Mr. Speaker. Since the Hon. Member for Outremont seemed unhappy about what is being done for women, if we look at the former Liberal programs, it is hard to find a program aimed at getting women back into the labour market. Mr. Speaker, how do we know the Hon. Member for Outremont is someone who defends the status of women? When the Liberal Government was in power, I don't remember hearing the Hon. Member for Outremont expressing her indignation at having a Government that felt no responsibility towards women. Today, we are introducing programs that are adapted to the situation of women on the labour market. I don't see why the Hon. Member for Outremont is so upset. She should rise in the House and applaud a Government that is responsible and that is serious about its responsibilities, unlike the former Liberal Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): A supplementary question. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mrs. Pépin: I should like to set the record straight for the Hon. Member for Champlain. The Liberal Government was one of the few administrations which ever passed legislation concerning women. If Canada is so far ahead in the field of legislation concerning women, it is due to the then Liberal Government. With respect to programs designed to integrate women into the labour force, I am sorry but they do not date back only to 1984, those programs were established long before that. You may very well say that you never heard me protest loudly when the Liberals were in office, but I was not a Government Member to begin with. Read your papers and your newspaper clippings, you will see that I was then among the first to criticize the Liberal Government when it did not treat women properly. That is why today I feel quite justified to criticize you, for I did criticize the Liberal Government when it was not doing its job

I can also tell you that when you said that the Liberal Government had been a bad administrator, that the social programs were terrible—What was the first thing the Conservative Government wanted to do after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was quoted in the press as having said that the old age pensions were a sacred trust? You wanted to slash them! You did reduce family allowances! And now, as a result of your last Budget, in 1990 a family with two children and earning $15,000 a year will pay 23 per cent more in taxes. Taxes will go up only 13 per cent for a family with an annual income of $35,000, 8 per cent for those earning $50,000 a year, and 1 per cent for those earning $100,000 a year. This is the result of your Budget. Do not try to tell me that we did not do our job with our social programs. The first thing that your Government did after the election was to take an axe to them. I am sorry.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. We now see that someone who, before joining a political party, might be able to make fair and well-founded assessments, after joining a political party such as the Liberal Party, like the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) has done, can forget completely what this person always fought for before.

However, I shall remind her, Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. Pépin: I shall criticize you. I shall still criticize you.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): —if she will just listen to me, Mr. Speaker, I shall remind her—

Mrs. Pépin: I shall criticize the federal Government because you are not doing your job.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): —that the federal Progressive Conservative Government wanted to reform old age pensions to help those who need it the most. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we never thought that someone like Pierre Elliott Trudeau should receive the same pension as the neediest person in a senior citizens' home. However, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals have never understood or accepted this—

Mrs. Pépin: It is not the Liberals, but the senior citizens themselves.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): —and the worst thing is, Mr. Speaker, that they have led the Canadian population to believe that we wanted to punish the neediest even though it was the Liberals who had done so.

Mrs. Pépin: You did not keep your promises.

Mr. Hamelin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for letting me make this brief comment and ask a question to the Hon. Member who has made a truly passionate speech.

However, I would like to come back to the language used by the Hon. Member. I could say that I lost $1 million last week. I lost $1 million and I therefore have a shortfall of $1 million. It is true, because I bought a lottery ticket and did not win. I have therefore lost $1 million.

When the Members opposite say that there have been cutbacks in provincial transfer payments, I would like to tell them that, if the provinces had hoped to receive several million dollars and if they will in fact receive less, this is not a cutback, as my colleague has said, but an increase which, while perhaps not being as substantial as the provinces had hoped, will still be an increase. It is not like a lottery, where I lost and my million dollars is forever gone.

I would like to return to an aspect referred to by my colleague concerning the inflation rate as it relates to those transfer payments to the provinces. I would like him to amplify on that. In the sense that those transfer payments are increased by 5 per cent when the inflation rate now is only 4 per cent, while under the Liberals we had interest rates around 24 per cent and inflation rates around 10 to 12 per cent.

Could he explain that to us and to the people of Canada in a concrete way, so that people may understand the language of the truth, the Conservative language?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) very briefly—

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, you know that if we took the time needed to explain, and anyway it has been explained. I believe our Ministers did that very aptly for the benefit of the Canadian people. But what I would like to remind my colleague for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) of is this: During the last five years of Liberal rule, transfer payments to the provinces added up to $65 billion.

Over the next five Conservative years, transfers will come up to $90 billion. When they talk about cuts, I ask whether they can figure out the difference between 90 and 65. That difference is an extra $25 billion. This is a Conservative reality. This is a reality that will prevail in each province. This is an increae, but a rational increase, a responsible increase granted by a Government that no longer wants to unduly burden the Canadian people with additional indebtedness.

• (2010)

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity tonight to join in when one is nearing the end of a long debate on Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

The Bill itself is very short. Although it is typical bureaucratese, governmentese, legalese, five or six pages long, the concept it attempts to achieve is simple, but really quite important. This Bill seeks to reduce the rate of growth of transfer payments in the aforementioned areas consistent with the Government's broad fiscal objectives.

While the title of the Bill speaks of post-secondary education and health, the objective of the Bill is, in reality, to address something quite different. First of all, I should remind all Members of the House that the commitment to this Government to health and post-secondary education remains as strong as ever. The EPF transfers continue to represent close to half of the provincial government expenditures in these areas, and it is our commitment to the maintenance of such programs as health care and post-secondary education that has brought this Bill before us today.

I want to speak today on behalf of this Bill, present a case for it, and respond to some of the very irresponsible and, I believe, incorrect arguments that have been put forward by some Members in the Opposition. I said that this Bill is really a part of the Government's over-all fiscal plan and, I think, therefore, it is important to outline briefly how the Bill fits into that plan.

Let us consider our number one economic problem—the public debt, the root cause of high unemployment, high interest rates and lack of Government fiscal flexibility. Some Members of the Opposition do not accept this. They suggest that we can continue to run huge deficits, borrow more and more to finance our expenditures, without considering the impact that this has on us, both now and in the future. This simply is not responsible.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Economic Statement of November, 1984, outlined the problem quite clearly. He stated that many Canadians have taken on heavy debt loads in the form of a personal mortgage or a personal loan, but they have done so in the belief that their incomes would rise more rapidly than their debts and the cost of carrying that debt. However, if our debts and interest payments continue year after year to grow faster than our incomes, we know we have a problem. If they continue to grow and reach a point where we have to start borrowing money just to pay the interest on our debts, we know we have a serious problem. This is the situation that the Government finds itself in today after the years of economic mismanagement and lack of responsibility of previous Governments.

Huge Government borrowing crowds out private sector investment and puts upward pressure on interest rates. The higher the rates, the more borrowing the Government will be forced to do in the future. It is a vicious circle, a dangerous treadmill that is crushing the vitality of the economy.

In his speech before the Investment Dealers Association in Quebec following his May 1985 Budget, the Minister of Finance elaborated on the problem when he said that as a nation we must improve the health and performance of our economy if we are to be able to continue to afford the social and economic programs that we have grown to enjoy and expect. The Budget aims first and foremost at improving that economic performance. In future Budgets we can make adjustments to Government programs as the financial position of the economy and the Government permits.

Investment can be described as a decision to forgo some immediate expenditure today in the confidence that the investment will build a stronger and more productive life in the future. There are not many investment decisions that are taken solely as a result of cold calculation. Confidence in the future is, in many cases, the deciding factor. That is why our Government set out to rebuild the confidence that Canadians have in this country, their Government and themselves. Part of the rebuilding process is to demonstrate to ourselves that we can control our national debt. But this means that we must all participate in that effort.

Let us consider what alternatives we have in responding to this problem and why this Bill today must be one of them. The Government's current expenditures, as Members will know, are just over $100 billion per year. As I said, one quarter of this, some $27 billion this year, goes for interest alone on that debt. The only real tool we have in reducing this is to try to reduce interest rates which, in turn, means trying to control expenditures. Of the remaining amount, approximately $69 billion is transfer payments made in accordance with existing legislation, and approximately $37.5 billion is expenditures on which Parliament is asked to vote.

It is these voted expenditures over which the Government has the most direct control. For the second year in a row, the rate of growth in these expenditures has been zero. That is the first time since the end of the Korean war that there has been such a low rate of growth for two years in a row.

Virtually all departments and agencies of Government have had budget reductions. For non-defence departments and agencies, total expenditures have been reduced by $400 million, to $14 billion. That is a 3 per cent reduction. Payments to Crown corporations have been reduced 8 per cent, which is some $366 million. Subsidies have been reduced by $1 billion, which is a 31 per cent reduction.

Let me give some examples of what this means. For instance, 15,000 positions are being eliminated from the Public Service by the end of the decade, including 5,000 in 1986-87. Diplomatic posts have been closed in foreign countries and programs, such as the Canadian Home Insulation Program, the Petroleum Incentives Program, the Petroleum Compensation Program, Katimavik and the Shipbuilding Industry Assistance Program have been eliminated. Subsidies to Via Rail, Canada Mortgage and Housing, CN Marine and CBC have been reduced. Crown corporations, including de Havilland, Northern Transportation and Canada Development Corporation, have been sold while Canagrex and others have been wound up. The salaries for senior public servants and equivalent political staff have been frozen until April, 1987.

The new President of Canada Post has been asked to submit a plan to make the Post Office self-sufficient by the end of 1986-87. The rate of growth of official development assistance spending wil be reduced by $83 million in 1986-87 and $205 million in 1987-88.

In other words, discretionary expenditures, those on which Parliament votes and the Government has direct control, excepting defence and foreign aid, are declining by an average of 4.2 per cent this year. This is a demonstration of the Government's commitment to increase efficiency and expenditure reduction.

However, this is not enough. We cannot make significant savings without examining transfer payments and social programs, which represent nearly one-half of total federal Government spending. Members of the House will recall the debate on Old Age Security benefits, which are currently almost $14 billion per year in total. Demonstrating its responsiveness to public input concerning senior citizens in this country, the Government has chosen to maintain these intact. Family allowances account for another $2.5 billion. Earlier this year, Parliament passed a Bill limiting the indexation of family allowances to inflation in excess of 3 per cent. As well, all Members of the House are aware of changes that have been made in the Unemployment Insurance Program and the fact that it is being currently reviewed by the Forget Commission.

This brings us to federal expenditures that we are discussing today in Bill C-96, which are transfer payments to other levels of Government. This year, those payments will amount to roughly $20 billion or 20 per cent of direct federal Government spending, and an additional $7 billion in tax transfers.

In his May, 1985 Budget speech, the Minister of Finance announced his intention in this area. He said, as reported at page 5020 of Hansard on May 23, 1985:

> To spread the burden of expenditure reduction fairly, the government will also be seeking to limit the rate of growth of transfers to provinces to yield annual savings of $2 billion by the end of the decade. There will be no absolute reduction in federal transfers.
> Even after this adjustment, federal transfers to provincial governments will grow signficantly over the balance of this decade. In 1990-91, they would represent about the same share of total program expenditures as they do today.

Following the Budget, the Minister consulted with provincial colleagues on how best to achieve this goal.

On December 13, 1985, at the First Ministers Conference in Halifax, the option selected was to amend the formula for the calculation of Established Programs Financing increments to a three year moving average of increases in nominal GNP less 2 per cent. This Bill implements that decision. Beginning April 1, 1986, EPF transfers will continue to grow as they do now, that is, according to the GNP and population, but at 2 percentage points less.

I should point out that Established Programs Financing is one of three major federal transfer programs to provinces and municipalities. Total transfers amount to approximately $27 billion, of which $20 billion will be in cash and an additional $7 billion in the form of tax transfers, whereby the federal Government reduces its tax rates so provincial governments may increase theirs by corresponding amounts. Of these transfers, EPF is the largest with $9 billion in cash and $6.3 billion in tax transfers, for a total of $15.3 billion. Equalization in the form of cash grants amounts to an additional $5 billion.

The fundamental goal of the equalization program is to ensure that provincial governments have the capacity to provide their residents with reasonably comparable levels of service at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. Furthermore, under the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal Government provides an additional $3.9 billion in cash and $400 million in tax transfers for a total of $4.3 billion. The Canada Assistance Plan is a cost-sharing program in which the federal Government shares 50 per cent of the cost incurred by provinces and municipalities to provide financial assistance and welfare service programs. There are a number of additional transfers amounting to some $2.3 billion in transfers, representing various other forms of cost-sharing arrangements.

Let me outline briefly the history of Established Programs Financing and what has happened over the past 10 years. The federal Government has been contributing to the financing of provincial hospital insurance programs since 1958. Federal transfers to provincial Governments for post-secondary education were introduced in 1967. The jointly financed medical care insurance program was established in 1968. Until 1977, transfer payments for these programs were made under cost-sharing arrangements. Federal transfers were based on provincial Government expenditures, on medical care hospital insurance and on operating costs of post-secondary education institutions. The federal share was roughly 50 per cent overall, with variations from province to province, depending on the specific sharing form for each program.

In 1977, the financial arrangements for these estalished programs were changed so that the federal share was no longer determined by provincial expenditures, rather it was determined by federal per capita transfers for health and post-secondary education in a base year, escalated by the rate of growth of the Gross National Product per capita and each province's population. Thus, the current EPF arrangements involve a block fund which provinces allocate to their health and post-secondary education programs as they see fit.

The Bill providing for these payments was introduced by the Hon. Donald Macdonald, Minister of Finance at the time. During the negotiations, Mr. Macdonald stated that the federal Government believed it was essential that equalization payments grow at a rate within the ability of taxpayers to finance.

In a speech introducing the Bill in the House, he stated, "Much of the discussion and debate over the past year and a half stemmed from obvious differences in opinion. We at the federal level believe that the national Government must preserve enough fiscal resources to redistribute income to persons and regions, to stabilize the economy and to continue to help finance the services Canadians in all parts of the country need and deserve". I would suggest that those statements by Mr. Macdonald, a Liberal Minister of Finance 10 years ago, are even more true today.

I have some budgetary information comparing the fiscal positions of the provincial Governments with that of the federal Government. For the most recent year available, 1985, the provinces and territories, in total, had gross general revenue of $93.3 billion and gross general expenditure of $95.8 billion, for a net deficit of $2.5 billion. Total combined expenditures of the provinces then were almost exactly equal to those of the federal Government. If, however, we consider the $20 billion that is directly transferred to the provinces, we can see that in fact the provincial government expenditures are substantially larger than those of the federal Government.

We are often led to believe that the provinces are the poor cousins of the federal Government; but while, in fact, their numbers are individually less, their total fiscal impact and expenditures are substantially greater. In view of this, and in view of the tenacity with which the federal Government is not only controlling but also reducing the levels of government expenditure, it would seem only reasonable that all partners in Canadian society be asked to contribute.

Hon. Members of the House must understand that we are not talking about cuts here. As I pointed out, they will continue to grow at a substantial rate. Additionally, the provinces will derive significant revenue increases in future years due to the measures contained in the last two federal Budgets and as tax revenues rise along with a healthy and growing economy.

I know that even members of the Opposition are beginning to recognize the seriousness of the deficit. I note that the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) is in the House. It was only a month or so ago that he, a member of the Liberal Party, spoke of the seriousness of the deficit and the serious financial situation of the federal Government. He suggested that the Liberal Party should consider redefining the principle of universality in order to save money on costly social programs. With the adoption of this new policy position by the Liberal Party, I am sure its members will be eager to support the Bill.

In conclusion, I would like to say that to date, we have had considerable success in reducing the deficit and slowing the rate of increase of the national debt. However, there is much work left to be done. The deficit remains the greatest threat to our economic recovery, to job creation and to investor and consumer confidence. The deficit remains a serious problem and one we must address with every means at our disposal. Bill C-96 is one more measure that the Government is taking to deal with the problem, and it deserves the support of all Hon. Members.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my Conservative colleague whether he agrees with what the Minsiter of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had to say on March 23, 1982, when he was finance critic: "The only sign it shows of cutting spending is shifting the burden of the established programs funding on to the provincial governments. The provinces are now moving into a deficity position, a position which will make it more difficult for them to finance this shift in spending. This is true particularly in Ontario and in the eastern provinces which do not have the substantial energy revenues of most of the western provinces. That is not co-operative federalism. That is predatory federalism, and it will not and cannot work in this country.

This is what the Minister of Finance stated in 1982. He went on:

"Taking the action of unilaterally cutting the financing, which the government is now proposing, and then having some discussions with the provinces, surely puts the cart before the horse. We should be reversing this procedure." Such were the remarks the Minister of Finance was directing at the Liberal Government at the time he was the Official Opposition's

Finance critic. Now, the Conservative Government is doing exactly the opposite of what he was saying in 1982. So I am asking my honourable colleague this: Does he agree with what the Minister of Finance said at the time?

[English]

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to point out a few things to the Hon. Member in response to her question. The first is that during the period since 1982, we have seen federal budget deficits in the neighbourhood of $30 billion, $35 billion, $37 billion a year. We have seen the budget deficit grow to such an extent that, quite frankly, I am not sure that looking back to what the situation was in 1982 will give us much help in deciding what to do today. Notwithstanding that, however, I want to remind the Hon. Member, as I pointed out in my speech, that the Minister of Finance indicated, at least beginning in his first Budget in May of 1985, his intention to consider that area. He went on to discuss with the provinces how best to achieve the goal, and a decision was reached with the provinces that if this must be one of the tools to meet the goal of deficit reduction, then the means that was the most fair to all concerned was the formula that was derived on December 13, 1985, in Halifax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin).

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat my question, because I believe the Hon. Member has failed to answer it. At the time, the Federal Government had made a unilateral decision concerning equalization payments and had imposed it on the provinces; Mr. Wilson, then the Finance critic of the Official Opposition, had claimed that taking the action of unilaterally cutting the financing, as the Government was then proposing, and then having some discussions with the provinces, was putting the carts before the horse. He suggested that the government should have reversed this procedure. My question, therefore, is this: Do you agree with what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said at the time? How could you justify that he was right saying what he was saying at the time when he is now doing the opposite of what he was saying then? To reduce the deficit, he is now cutting back in health care and education programs, while trying to bail out banks, for instance. How do you explain that?

[English]

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should try to explain it, in another way, one more time. The Minister of Finance, in advance of his first Budget in May of 1985, conducted extensive consultation with the provinces; in fact, not just with the provinces but also with representatives of business and labour, all sectors of the economy and all interested groups. He conducted those consultations in putting together what was his first Budget. In that Budget, he included some specific measures over which the federal Government had direct control, and he indicated his desire to make adjustments to some areas where there were influences of the provinces.

Between the two Budgets, the tax measures and the measures to improve the health of the economy in general will result in millions of dollars in net provincial gains to provincial Governments. I might just point out a couple of ways in which that will happen. First, any increase in personal taxes—because the provinces levy their share of tax as a percentage of the federal tax—will automatically increase provincial revenues. In addition, the sales taxes of the federal Government will cause the provincial sales tax to increase because, again, they are a percentage of the final selling price. Therefore, I believe that in examining the Bill, we must consider the total fiscal impact, the total contribution that will be made to the provinces by the federal Government, not just through the Bill, but through all other Bills and all other fiscal measures that the Minister has included in his two Budgets.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) about the EPF funding Bill, Bill C-96, because it certainly is clear that this represents a tremendous cut-back in funding for hospitals. I have a presentation that was made by the Province of Manitoba, and I understand that New Brunswick made similar representations.

Clearly, all provincial Governments are being slammed by this Bill. The presentation to which I have referred points out that the federal Government has money for other things. For instance, it points out that the Government has been able to provide funding of $1 billion for bank bail-outs; $2 billion in capital gains and other tax breaks favouring the wealthy; more than $1.6 billion in corporation income tax tax reductions; and $3.5 billion to increase defence spending by 35 per cent to $12.6 billion by 1990-91.

In this presentation the impacts of Bill C-96 are looked into. It is pointed out in some detail that by 1990-91 the federal share of EPF will have dropped to 36 per cent from the current level of 43 per cent, which represents a reduction of 7 per cent. This is not a contribution to someone off in another land. It is funding for provincial Governments which have relatively smaller tax bases than does the federal Government.

I am interested to know if the Hon. Member feels that a cut-back of 7 per cent in the EPF is justified during that four-year period, especially for provinces such as Alberta which is facing cut-backs in terms of the amount of revenues it is receiving? The Province of Alberta would have had about 80 per cent of the exploration and development in the petroleum industry this year. Yet that exploration and development has been cut back from $11 billion to $6 billion, which represents a $5 billion reduction. Of that $6 billion amount, about half of it has been expended. Some $3 billion was expended in the first three months of the year. That leaves only $3 billion for oil and gas exploration in the last nine months of the year.

Provinces such as Alberta are facing tremendous cut-backs in terms of revenues. I believe it faces a deficit of $2 billion or $2.5 billion. If the yardstick of $1 billion worth of oil and gas exploration generates some 30,000 jobs, then that province is probably looking at the loss of 100,000 jobs. People who are not working do not pay taxes. So provinces such as Alberta will face special hardships during the next couple of years.

I am interested to know if the Hon. Member who has spoken in favour of Bill C-96 feels that it is fair to provinces such as Alberta to suffer a 7 per cent reduction in the EPF from the federal Government during the next three or four years?

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I know I have but a few minutes in which to respond to the Hon. Member's question. First, I take exception with the 7 per cent reduction figure which the Hon. Member has put forward. In fact, there is no reduction at all.

I am glad the Hon. Member has raised the issue of the very serious economic problems we face in the Province of Alberta, because they are serious. People are losing their jobs and their homes. I am glad to know that when we bring forward measures to try to deal with those problems, he will be supportive of our efforts.

The Hon. Member mentioned the question of banks and bank bail-outs. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that it was not the banks that were bailed out—they are long gone. It is the people who were reimbursed, the depositors of those banks who, for the most part, were municipalities, hospital boards, credit unions, people who if they had not been reimbursed would have had to go bankrupt themselves. That would have put more people out of work. Other sources of revenue would have had to be found to replace those revenues. Property taxes and other taxes would have had to be raised.

I know the Hon. Member will recognize that the federal Government took its responsibility seriously at a time when the economic recovery in Alberta was critical. It was felt that a blow of $1 billion to the economy simply could not have been withstood. That points out that in order to maintain any ability on the part of the federal Government to respond to fiscal situations, situations of economic disasters or crop failures, it must maintain an element of fiscal soundness in order to have the ability to respond. If we reach a point at which we no longer have the ability to use our revenue base, either to respond to serious economic problems or to serious social problems such as health care, education, research and development, then that would be a situation we would not want to leave to our followers.

I believe it is important for the Government to take these measures now to prevent that from happening. That is why this Bill has been brought forward. I believe I have made my case, and I do not have to repeat it.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) that if he thinks we are debating tonight some sort of anti-deficit measure, then he has failed to comprehend the nature of Bill C-96. In no way is this Bill an anti-deficit measure. That has been pointed out by spokespersons from the Hon. Member's own Party. What this measure does is take some of the federal deficit and transfer it to the provinces. From my point of view, that is no way to solve the problem. The Hon. Member has made his argument on a rather faulty premise.

My concerns with Bill C-96 are not some ideas which have been hatched over here in the Opposition. An overwhelming amount of evidence very clearly indicates that the passage and implementation of Bill C-96 is bound to have a deleterious effect on the financing, the availability and quality of health care for Canadians. That idea was not hatched on this side of the House. That is the testimony that has been received by Parliament. We on this side of the House would be irresponsible if we did not repeat that again and again. We must convince the Government that to take a Bill such as this, which undermines the health care system in Canada, is a measure that deserves every bit of opposition that can be mustered.

It is the poorest provinces in the country, those with less than the national average fiscal capacity, those provinces which are less capable of compensating for the reduced level of federal support from their own revenues, which will suffer the most. I think certain Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada ought to be particularly concerned with Bill C-96. Much of the testimony on the negative side with respect to Bill C-96 came from that region of the country.

This proposed reduction, or this reduced level of increased financing—it is almost a double entendre—is an agreement to increase financing. That agreement has been broken. It has been broken unilaterally by the federal Government. This reduction comes at a time when demographics clearly show that we are facing an aging population and a concomitant increase in demand for health care services.

Is the Government seriously saying to the country that we cannot afford the costs of new medical technology? Is the Government really saying that we can continue to live with outdated hospital facilities and that they cannot be replaced? Is the Government saying to Canadians that new services made possible by medical research are beyond our means? That is the message I get from Bill C-96 and it is a message that I do not like.

Bill C-96 clearly contradicts what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been saying in other forums and in other parts of the country. For example, on June 17 of this year, the Minister of Health, speaking in Vancouver to the Canadian Public Health Association, said: "I took office with a commitment to health promotion". I suggest that without delay, the Minister of Health issue an erratum saying: "I wanted to work for the promotion of health when I accepted this portfolio". We would have difficulty disputing that. He is a man who is well meaning. His erratum could go on to say: "I wanted to but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) forced Bill C-96 upon me and I am no longer able to promote a better health care system in Canada".

When we pass Bill C-96, we had better realize that we are going to deliver to the health care system of Canada a severe body blow. When the Minister of Health spoke out in Vancouver, he knew full well what the effects of Bill C-96 would be. If he knew that he was undermining the health care system by refusing to transfer significant sums of money to be used in that system, what then did he say when he spoke to a group of people who are concerned about health care?

After Bill C-96 becomes law, we are going to have a poorer system of health care but the Minister of Health said that his number one goal is to strengthen self-care practices among Canadians. He said that the first and most frequent form of health care is the care that people provide for themselves. I suggest that that is the kind of health care we will have in a post-Bill C-96 world. Canadians had better learn self-care practices and had better learn how to become their own physicians. The Minister said in Vancouver that his policy is to strengthen the motivation, the skill and the confidence of people to care for themselves. That is the brave new world of health care after Bill C-96. Canadians have to look after themselves because there will be fewer people in the health care field, facilities will be poorer and technology will be out of date.

The Minister said that Canadians have to take care of themselves but he has another goal. The other goal is self-help or mutual support. That is the answer to the problems which will be created by Bill C-96. He is telling Canadians to get active in the self-help movement. I do not know exactly what this means. I suppose it means that if a Canadian is facing one of life's crises, if he is sick, dying or incapacitated in one way or another, he cannot look to the health care system for help so he will look around to see if there is someone who will hold his hand for a while. If he cannot find anyone like that, I suppose the only other choice is to hold his own hand.

No, Mr. Speaker, I am distressed that Parliament, in the name of fighting the deficit, would attack one of the best health care systems in the world. We can afford to have the best health care system in the world. Any measures taken by Parliament to undermine that health care system must, I think, be vigorously opposed.

For my second point, I would like to say that I am not for a moment suggesting that the Established Programs Financing agreement that now exists is perfect in every respect. When it opens up for renegotiation, I think there are some changes that could be introduced. However, we should not break into the program in the middle of it and unilaterally change it. We should wait until the agreement comes to an end and then make some changes at that time.

There is one area, for example, which I would like to re-examine at the time the agreement comes open. We know that the poorest quality of health care in Canada is delivered to the Indian people of Canada. Every time this is pointed out, the federal Government indicates that there is truth in that but it does not have enough money available to provide quality health care to Indian people who live in remote communities in the far-flung regions of Canada.

One of the problems with EPF is that the provinces receive money through that transfer program on behalf of native people. In other words, native people are included in the demographic calculations. The provinces receive money based on the number of Indian or native people who reside within those provinces and yet they deliver few if any at all health care services to native people.

If the Government were saying to me that since Bill C-96 provides for less money to flow to the provinces, those withheld funds would be used to build a first-class health care system for Indian people, that would mute much of my opposition. That would certainly pull the rug out from under me to a certain extent, would it not, Mr. Speaker? However, I have not heard a single Minister or Member of Parliament from the other side tell me that with the withheld EPF funds, the Government will build a better health care system for native people. That argument has never been used to justify Bill C-96.

For my third point, I would like to say a word about how the legislation that is now at third reading stage with the guillotine on and closure imposed will affect education. Hon. Members will note I did not say post-secondary education, I said education. I said that because we heard testimony with respect to Bill C-96, particularly from the Canadian Teachers' Federation, showing that by increasing the competition for resources at the provincial level, the proposed cut-backs will inevitably have adverse spill-over or domino effects on the funding of elementary and secondary education. While some of us may have thought that Bill C-96 would adversely affect our post-secondary institutions, we now know that it will go beyond that.

It is serious enough that the Bill affects post-secondary education. Our post-secondary educational system is beginning to crumble. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that there is no longer a world-class university in Canada?

Mr. Oberle: When did we ever have one?

Mr. Penner: My hon. friend asked when we ever had one. Does he not believe that the University of Toronto or McGill were at one time world-class universities? Now they are not. Bill C-96 will add to that crumbling effect. Not only will Bill C-96 affect our universities and colleges, it will affect the entire educational system everywhere.

• (2100)

I should like to quote from the brief of the Canadian Teachers' Federation in respect of the direct effects on post-secondary education. They indicated the following to Parliament:

> The universities and other post-secondary institutions of this country are an important part of the educational pyramid of which elementary and secondary education forms the base. Adequately funded post-secondary institutions are absolutely vital to Canada's social, economic and cultural development.

To cut back on the national commitment to the funding of post-secondary education will short change future generations of young people whose education will suffer as a result. On a broader plane, Canada's ability to survive and prosper in more and more competitive world markets will be impaired. At a time when the universities and other post-secondary institutions have already been severely squeezed by provincial budgetary restraints and growth in enrolments, it seems socially regressive and economically short-sighted to cut back on the federal commitment to funding of post-secondary education.

I see Your Honour signalling that my time is up. In conclusion, Bill C-96 is a fatal error of the Government. It is attacking the health care system in which Canadians have taken such great pride. It is attacking the post-secondary educational system which has already been suffering and needs direct assistance and support as it has never needed them before.

We have no way of stopping Bill C-96. It is under the guillotine; it is under closure. I believe the effects of the Bill will be around for a long time, and I believe the effects of this piece of legislation will come back to haunt and to plague members of the Party opposite who supported it and in fact even went so far as to bring in a closure motion to get it passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): Questions or comments. On debate, the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard).

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, the debate today has been an interesting one. It is not a debate which everyone in the House really wanted to see take place—

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): Does the Hon. Member want to raise a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a slight point of order. I think if Your Honour checks your list, you might have missed something.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): I do not think that is a point of order. I do not have a list of the opposition speakers in front of me, so it is very difficult for me to recognize anyone who did not point out to the Chair that he wanted to speak.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I am talking about the list of the numbers used by the Chair, not a list sent by any Party. I invite the Chair to reconsider who it recognizes next. In fact, when you called for speakers on debate, I was standing up.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: I could move a motion calling for the Hon. Member for Regina-West (Mr. Benjamin) to be now heard, if you wish, but I will not do so officially.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): Since the last speaker was a member of the Liberal Party, I think the next speaker may be somebody from the Government side.

Mr. Benjamin: You just had two from over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): I will be in a position to recognize the Hon. Member right after the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard), if that is what you want.

Mr. Foster: No only do they want closure; they want to put up every speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ricard): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Guelph has the floor.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, this has been an interesting debate. As I said earlier, it is not a debate which anyone in the House really wanted to see take place, but sooner or later it had to come. The Government is committed to returning the country to fiscal reality, a fiscal reality which has evaded all Governments of Canada for over 20 years.

Let us look at the Bill before us. Does it cut transfers to the provinces? The answer to that question is a clear no. It slows the rate of growth, and that has been admitted many times on the floor of the House today. It slows it to 5 per cent per year in a period when the Consumer Price Index is increasing at about 4 per cent per year. Is that so terrible?

Is it so terrible to ask the provinces to hold the line as we are trying to hold the line? Is it so difficult or is it so heartless to say that the federal Government of Canada will continue to pay one-half of all insured health care costs? Is it so heartless to say that the federal Government will continue to pay one-half of all operating costs of post-secondary institutions?

Let us look at some of the figures for just a moment and challenge some of the things which have been said by my colleagues to my left, particularly in respect of post-secondary education. It is true now, and it will continue to be true, that the federal Government pays over 50 per cent of all operating costs of colleges and universities in the country. When we consider that students pay 15 per cent, the provinces have been paying 35 per cent. In some instances they have not even been paying that so the federal Government has been paying substantially more than 50 per cent.

We should tell the people the facts. Do they know the split in university and post-secondary spending? I do not think so. From what we heard today, one would think that changing the rate of the EPF would destroy the post-secondary system. What utter nonsense!

Do the people know what happened to funding in universities over the last few years? Do they know that most of the provinces have not put in the money which has been transferred ? Do they know the amount of money which has been transferred every year under EPF and the percentage increases?

Members of the House know that the provinces have not been using that money for post-secondary education. The figures are available. We can ask the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada what have been the federal transfers and what have been the percentages of increases to the universities. My riding is in the heart of southern Ontario.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is rich.

Mr. Winegard: Rich is right. It is rich in spirit, rich in morality, and rich because the people work hard. Let me look at Ontario because that is what interests me first. In 1985-86 federal transfers were $5.636 billion. In 1986-87 federal transfers will be $6 billion. That is an approximate $400 million increase in one year; $364 million to be precise. That is not too bad. I do not think that amount is too low, considering where the CPI is now. There is no doubt at all that it was not what they expected. I am not sure any of us will have our expectations fulfilled for the next several years. That is what is wrong. Alice must come out of the Wonderland sometime, Sir. It is time. What is the reality that all Canadians must face? They have to face an operating budget in Canada of over $100 billion, one-third of which each year we cannot pay.

There was no sign of change in sight when we came here two years ago. The answer to everything was: "Increase your spending and increase the deficit". A philosophy: "If it has to be done, let government do it." There was disdain for private enterprise; no plans to reduce interest rates; no plans to increase the number of jobs except, of course, through government action and government spending. There was no thought for the long-term future of Canada, only thought for short term political gain. There was no thought for the economic health of our country, for the future of our young and for the future of the aged. That is the legacy of the past. Someone had to say "enough" and thank goodness the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with the full backing of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has had the courage to ignore short-term politics, to look ahead to see the horizon and to say Canada needs and wants a fiscal plan, a plan for all Canadians. We do not need to drift forever aimlessly in a sea of Liberal mortgages on our future. Every program must be examined. None are sacrosanct.

Statutory programs will grow at the rate of at the most 3.8 per cent a year for the remainder of this decade. Non-statutory programs will grow at the rate of 2.7 per cent a year, if that, all in a period of 4 per cent inflation. If we look at the EPF, it will increase 5 per cent a year. That is what the hullaballoo is about here today. Surely that indicates a desire to help the provinces.

We have heard from some of our opposition colleagues during this debate, a debate which I remind you, Sir, has had well over 130 speakers. That is hardly muzzling Parliament. They have said that unless one continues to spend at the same rate as in the past, that everything will collapse. They have joked about our attempt to find national consensus, a national purpose again. They have said the opportunity for the young will be lost, that students will stay out of post-secondary institutions and that health care will suffer. I understand these comments. I understand the well meaning but in my opinion it is a misguided mentality that promotes such concepts. I do not agree one bit because I have more faith in Canadians.

I have more faith in our post-secondary educational institutions than some of my colleagues apparently. The institutions will find new and better ways to do things. They are finding ways to do things differently even now. They will rationlize. They are saying to the provinces: "Give us our share of the funds that you are receiving from the federal Government. You have not been doing this for years. Do it now". They are saying to the provinces: "Tell us now what you will give us over the next five years. The federal Government has told you. You now tell us, please." If the provinces would do so, the institutions would know how to respond.

Managers can manage if they know what their income is going to be. They can be innovative, and the post-secondary institutions have proven that time and time again. The health care system can manage. It will find priorities if the system knows what the future is.

There are ways of delivering health care that are different from those we have now. There are many experiments going on in the world. Some of those experiments are proving that good health care can be provided at less cost than we have now. We have said that we can afford, and I agree with my hon. colleague who said that we can afford, the best health care system. I think we can. However, my concern is that that does not mean the existing health care system, nor does it mean the existing post-secondary educational system. You do not obtain the best by extrapolating the past. The old ways required enormous sums of money. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because this country, like many others, has relied on tertiary health care for years. In other words, you do not do anything until it is time to put people in the hospital.

It is the hospitals, the technology and the testing that is costing us so much. It is not the doctors—and I say that to my colleagues on the far left—who cost the system so much money, it is the other end of the health care spectrum. We all know that. We all know too that even the professionals know. They know that you cannot extrapolate the health care costs of this country. There have to be some changes. Those changes will be found. It is the financial pressure which they are going to feel. There is no question about that, but some of that financial pressure can be turned to useful and innovative purposes.

I am not one who believes that you follow slavelessly the past to find the future. I believe you look for something different, ways to challenge the system, ways to make it better. You do not make it better by building more. You make it better by change. I have no hesitation in telling my colleagues in the health care system, and I know some of them well, or my colleagues in the post-secondary institutions that I know they can do it. It will be their contribution in getting this country out of the morass that we are now in. I know they will respond to the challenge as they have always responded because they are Canadians.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in this debate, and I have to confess to the House in case some of my hon. colleagues did not have the privilege of hearing me before, that this is my fourth time. I attempted on the previous three occasions to try, at least with my limited capacity of humour, to humour them into doing the right thing, to try to live up to their own words and their own commitments.

There is a longstanding phrase going back many decades and centuries that says: "A man is as good as his word." Today we would say "A person is as good as their word." Of course, that expression implies that if you give your word, whether you are an individual, a corporation, a political party, or a government, you must be as good as your word. I refer to the words and the word of the Party of the Government in power and the word of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was Leader of the Official Opposition. They gave their word in the media and in their own literature that the Conservative Party would return to the 1977 funding formula for post-secondary education and health care. No one in the country of any political persuasion disagreed with that.

The outfit that started all this was the Liberal Party when it was in power. The Liberals were the ones who wrecked the 1977 formula. I am glad they are having death-bed repentances. I appreciate the remarks of my colleagues to my immediate right. They are nice enough to admit in a roundabout way that they were wrong then. They have repented.

The Conservatives and members of my Party fought tooth and nail in the Chamber to maintain the 1977 funding formula. The Conservative Official Opposition of that day screamed about it and the same Conservative Party is now compounding the felony. That proves what we have said for many years in this place, that there ain't no difference. They both take money from the rich and votes from the poor and then promise to protect them from each other. If you are not as good as your word, whether you are an individual or a government, you are not good. If a government is not prepared to stand by its word, it is not a good government.

The decreases in the increases in the amount of moneys the provinces can expect to receive to serve their citizens properly again makes it apparent that this Government, like the previous Government, knows the price of everything and the value of nothing.

I listened with horror to the pronouncements of the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin). He presented himself well. From my perspective he looks like he is about 21, but he sounded like he is 91. These are the new R.B. Bennetts and Charlie Dunnings of this world out of the 1920s and dirty thirties.

I want to call as a witness one who is not a member or supporter of my Party or of the Official Opposition. He is a member and supporter of long standing of the governing Party. He is an honoured and respected citizen of this nation in many ways. I speak of the Hon. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. He was speaking about funding for health care and secondary education and this drive for privatization, the move away from the responsibility of the nation and the citizenry as a whole. He said:

> With privatization will come drastically increased costs particularly in the hospital field.
> Canada now allocates 8.4 per cent of the GNP to all forms of health care. In the United States where privatization flourishes, it is 10.9 per cent for vastly inferior coverage.

That was not some raving socialist talking, that was Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. In this area the Government cries and pleads about the deficit. We have proposed several options that would result in no increase in the deficit. The nation would more equitably share in the funding required under the 50-50 formula for health care and education.

The Government is bringing in a minimum tax which the Prime Minister and my Leader agreed to during the last election campaign. If he and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would add 1 per cent or even half of 1 per cent to that minimum tax, they will have all the funding they need to maintain and implement the 50-50 formula.

We have proposed another alternative which would not increase the deficit. The Government could charge only 3 per cent interest on deferred corporation taxes which now amount to approximately $35 billion on the books of the nation. It would collect $1 billion in interest, which would more than maintain the 50-50 formula. Once such a tax were imposed, you would be surprised at how fast corporations would pay their deferred corporation taxes. Otherwise none of it will be collected. My colleague, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) proposed three or four other options to maintain the level that the Conservtive Party, the Liberal Party, and my Party all agreed to—a 50-50 sharing.

I look upon my friend, the Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish) as a man of his word. I expect him to insist that the Government to which he belongs lives up to its word. If its word is no good, the Government is no good. You are only as good as your word.

Aside from the decreases in the increases, it is apparent that the Government concerns itself little with the quality of services offered to the public or with the capacity of the provinces to improve and enlarge the hospital, university and medicare programs they presently have. Goodness knows, there is a lot more still to be done. The Government wants more done with less and calls that productivity. When you hinder universities, hospitals and medical care plans in their attempts to increase, improve and enlarge upon the services they can provide, that is not an increase in productivity.

Two people came to my office today about social housing. I asked what that had to do with medicare and secondary education. They said we have a lot of people who need to have some level of social housing so they can be around to take advantage of secondary education opportunities, whether it is universities, federated Indian colleges, or community colleges. They said we do not have enough places to put these people. They wanted to know what the federal government policy was. They met with an official from the Minister's office this afternoon who blamed it on the provinces. When they met with the provinces, the provinces blamed it on the federal Government. It is called the old runaround.

More seriously, one of the contributing factors to the abhorrent spectacle we see in this province right now of doctors on strike is partly attributable to niggardly treatment by the federal Government starting in 1977 and continued by the present Government, and partly due to niggardly treatment by the provinces. I was on the scene in 1962 in Saskatchewan, and there is nothing new about what is going on in Ontario now. They lost then and they are going to lose now. I understand their arguments and I do not agree with them. However, for any Government, provincial or federal, or for any association like the Ontario Medical Association, to resort to methods which put people's lives at stake has to be and is an obscenity in a civilized society.

The Minister of Finance can bring in a Bill tomorrow which will take up one of the options we have offered. We will agree to put it through all stages in one day. It will have no effect on the deficit. It will maintain the 50-50 formula and earmark the taxes specifically for health care and secondary education. They could not be used for anything else. Of course, there is either evidence or suspicion that some provinces have been less than straightforward and honest about how they spend the money they get now. That tells me there is something wrong with the federal Government's auditing process. The Government has no one to blame but itself if some provinces did something else with the money. To let them get away with that is the fault of the federal administration and no one else.

The social costs of decisions made by this Government and by both private and public corporations return upon the provinces and the federal Government in other ways. I have only to illustrate the situation in Moncton. After listening to the management and officers of CN for three hours, I can tell you that a few years down the road the social costs, whether they be welfare or health treatment or secondary education or anything else, are going to fall on the backs of the municipalities in and around Moncton, the Province of New Brunswick, and federal taxpayers. The regime now in place, started by the Liberals and enlarged upon by the Conservatives, is a betrayal of what this Parliament did in the middle 1960s.

At that point we established a program which set an example for the world of how a nation of people working together can treat one another fairly and equitably no matter where they live or what their station in life is. I will not try and humour my friends on the Government side any longer. I am damned sick and tired of this. I put it to them point blank: Be as good as your word. If you are not going to stand by your word as a Party, or the word of your Prime Minister, you are not deserving of any kind of charity or civilized treatment. You have lowered the standards of these programs because of your hysteria about a deficit. What you do not understand is that to keep people healthy and educated is not an expense, it is an investment. A healthy, well-educated and trained population will work, earn money and pay taxes. The Government will get more back in taxes at all levels than the original cost. That has been proven time and time again.

Retaining the 50-50 formula is not an expense or an increase in the deficit, it is an investment in our nation and its people. It is an investment that will pay off repeatedly. Surely to God this Parliament will be bigger than what this Bill says. Surely this Parliament and the Government will say we are men and women of our word. We are a Party of our word. We will live up to our word. If they do that, they will have the support of all sides of this House and of the people of Canada.

It is now time to tell Members opposite to get off their backsides and live up to their word. If they do not like a national compulsory health care plan, why not say so? Why not have the courage of your secret convictions and say so? Why do you say from one side of your mouth that we will return to the 1977 formula and from the other side say the opposite? Surely any self-respecting Progressive Conservative will say to himself: "I am not going to hold still for that." Fellows like Tommy Douglas, John Diefenbaker, Lester Pearson and Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, and scores of other people like them, brought about the 50-50 sharing among all the people of Canada. Surely we cannot let what they did go for nothing.

I hope this Government will reconsider, and if not today, in the last dying days of this session of Parliament. Other Governments have learned from their bitter experience. I want to be kind to my friends opposite. I hope they will change their minds or they are going to go through the same kind of bitter experience, and I plan on being here to see it happen.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of comments one would want to make with regard to the remarks that have been made by my colleague from Regina West. Quite properly the Hon. Member has referred with great sincerity to the phrase integrity, in keeping one's word. We have seen in the First Ministers' Conference which was held in Halifax there was a clear consensus by the First Ministers of the day that there ought not to be reductions in the Established Programs Financing.

The premiers held that position because they believed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They believed the Government would not at any time reduce the moneys for the fiscal year 1986-87. We have an example here of the Government breaking its word. It is equivalent to what the Government has done on on another matter with regard to workers in Moncton, New Brunswick in breaking an undertaking that they had given to the workers with regard to the CN shops; another example of breaking one's word. I find that to be totally unacceptable for any party, any Government, to conduct the affairs of the nation when on one hand it says one thing and on the other it does something else.

My question to my colleague from Regina West, does he agree with me that it is high time for those who sit opposite to us to stand in their places and to represent their constituents in a forthright and honest way and change the legislation that is now before us to the way it ought to have been, the way they have promised it? Is there not an obligation upon the Government of the day to live up to the promises it has made to the people of Canada, and they ought to deliver forthwith in this chamber tonight?

Mr. Benjamin: In a short response to my hon. friend, I agree with the question he just put, and I respond also by saying to him that the very thing that is occurring in Moncton today was started under a Liberal Government when they ordered Canadian National Railways to start showing a profit or else. There would be no more capital investment. It was Conservatives who screamed bloody murder about Moncton. Who is carrying out what the Liberals started? The Conservatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please! It being 9.45 p.m., under an order adopted on Wednesday, June 18, 1986, pursuant to Standing Order 117, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I could hardly hear you. Could you repeat what you have just said?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix is right. It is a common occurrence in the life of a Speaker that members have difficulty hearing him. However, I will stop short of repeating myself, something that is done quite often in this place.

Before putting the question, I shall simply tell Hon. Members that, contrary to the announcement that was made, there will be no proceedings on the adjournment motion. Tonight's vote was not taken into account. So, I want those concerned to know there will be no adjournment debate.

Therefore, the question is on the amendment of Ms. Copps:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-96, An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I declare the amendment defeated.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On my one and only opportunity as leader—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I get more applause from that side than I do from this side. I think, Mr. Speaker, you would find a propensity on behalf of all of us—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: After Crosbie's Bill, that's against the law.

Mr. Benjamin: I think, Sir, if you were to ask the House, you would find that there is a propensity to agree that the vote presently cast will count on the main motion in reverse, and that is for the benefit of all the goof-offs who are not here tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. It being one of the Chair's only opportunities to be in the chair during a vote—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Rising from your seats won't help any of you. I take it there is the unanimous consent of the House to apply the same vote in a reverse fashion on the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, could you just make sure that the Hon. Member for Peace River is included on the second vote?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Therefore, I will put the question to the House. Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We will apply the vote in the reverse manner including the vote of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper).

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SPORTS

FUNDING OF INTERCOLLEGIATE SPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House a matter that would have a devastating impact upon intercollegiate sports in both western Canada and the Atlantic region. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) has decided to reallocate substantially the travel subsidy that is used to support athletic teams in both western Canada and the Atlantic region to move from university to university. The Minister made that decision without any prior consultation at all with the CIAU or the universities involved. They have sent him numerous telegrams asking for a meeting. If they do not have a meeting by June 27 intercollegiate sports in the Atlantic region and western Canada could come to an end.

This morning I call on all the Members of this House to make every effort to have the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport meet with the CIU and come to grips with this very important issue before we find collegiate sports are destroyed in Canada; and that Minister will be held responsible.

REFUGEES

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING NEW REGULATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, one month ago the Minister for Immigration (Mr. McLean) announced a program for reducing the backlog of refugee claimants in Canada.

Unfortunately it seems that he did not follow through with action. According to immigration lawyers in Toronto the regulations that were to be gazetted this week so refugee claimants, their lawyers, and immigration officers could know what they are doing, have still not been gazetted and will not be gazetted until next month or later. There is dreadful confusion. No new staff has even been hired, as promised, so that the existing staff is hopelessly overloaded. No new office has been opened, as promised.

• (1105)

The Refugee Status Advisory Committee, having made space in its calendar, is receiving no fast-track cases.

Clearly, false refugee claimants are coming in literally by the plane load, at nearly 1,000 per month, and the Minister has done nothing to stop this. What is the Minister doing to carry out the program he promised?

AGRICULTURE

RESULTS OF SUBTERRANEAN AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENTS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, subterranean agriculture may well become a growth industry in western Canada. Experiments in worked-out areas of the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan mines appear to be showing positive results.

The advantages of such underground culture include a steady 80 temperature, no snow, hail, tempest or other natural occurrence which could damage crops, and an environment which is free of insects and other pests.

Light, fertilizer, and a growing medium must, of course, be provided. Cucumbers are said to thrive, and good results are being obtained with other vegetables, seedlings, and flowers.

Such innovations which, if successful, could add significantly to Canada's range of agricultural products, are certainly to be applauded.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CANADIAN UKRAINIAN VETERANS' REUNION

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, when the Canadian Ukrainian veterans of the wars held their reunion and meetings last week, it was the first of its kind in Canada. Delegates, men and women of Ukrainian origin from across the country and even the United States and England, arrived in Edmonton to discuss mutual concerns and assistance for those in need. Naturally, old acquaintances were renewed, many for the first time in over 40 years. Also present were two veterans of World War I.

S.O. 21

One of the highlights was the sod-turning ceremony at the Ukrainian Heritage Village, 35 miles east of Edmonton, where a statue of Michael Luchkowich, the first Member of Parliament of Ukrainian racial origin, will be erected. Another highlight was the official opening of the veterans' section in the Ukrainian Museum and Archives documenting the many contributions made by the Ukrainian veterans during the wars.

Ukrainian Canadians served with courage and pride, defending freedom for Canada. We pay tribute to them.

SOUTH AFRICA—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to talk about the situation in South Africa. The Government has indicated in the last few days, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), that its present position is that Canadians should be called on to react in the light of certain revelations about what certain Canadian companies are continuing to do or not do in South Africa.

On behalf of my Party I want to say that we consider that an inadequate response by the Government of Canada. This is a time for the Government to show leadership, not to fall back and call on Canadians generally to take action. I know that Canadians will take action and express their indignation about events in South Africa and the role of Canadian companies in South Africa that continue to have investments and employees there.

Nevertheless, there is a time for leadership in the deteriorating situation in South Africa today—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

AIRPORTS

BELL HELICOPTER CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Over the past fifteen years, Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Argenteuil—Papineau has had to endure every kind of insult from the previous Liberal Government.

First it was Mirabel and barbaric expropriations, now we read newspaper headlines concerning the Bell Helicopter problem which we inherited from our predecessors.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, those who today stand sanctimonious and insist that our Government settle this matter quickly did not hesitate to use Canadian taxpayers' money to launch an advertising and electoral campaign at Mirabel. This message was splashed across billboards—A $514-million investment, 3,000 permanent jobs.

Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, 30,000 Canadians have sent applications to Bell Helicopter in the hope of finding employment. The Liberals deceived the public with its own money.

In concluding I want to reassure Canadians, Quebecers and especially my constituents by telling them that the Minister responsible is discussing with the province to settle this matter in the near future. The outcome will be 600 real, conservative, safe, lasting, rational and promising jobs.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ELIGIBILITY REGULATION CHANGE—EFFECT ON SEASONAL WORKERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, over 10,000 farmworkers in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia, as well as other seasonal workers such as loggers and fishers, have recently been dealt a very serious blow by the Conservative Government. The new rule requiring 16 weeks to establish eligibility for UI on a repeat claim will have a devastating impact on these workers many of whom are sponsored immigrants of East Indian origin and are thus ineligible for welfare. The new rule is based on totally unrealistic unemployment statistics. Farmworkers are already excluded from most basic legal protections.

I wish to join with members of the Canadian Farmworkers Union, and its President Sarwan Boal, in calling upon the Conservative Government to recognize the serious problems facing the unemployed in B.C. and take immediate steps to rescind this harsh and punitive new rule.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the latest economic indicators point to sustained economic growth in Quebec. Since the advent of this Government, 160,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec. The unemployment rate now stands at 10.6 per cent, the first time in five years when it is under 11 per cent.

The value of building permits in the first quarter of this year rose by 54 per cent. Additional investments in the building sector in 1985 topped $833 million. Building starts in May 1986 were 69 per cent higher that in the same month last year.

Farm bankruptcies in Quebec have gone down 50 per cent since 1984.

And 33.2 per cent of small businesses in Quebec had additional capital investment projects in the first six months of 1986.

These positive results flow from our economic renewal policy.

THE ECONOMY

MONTREAL ECONOMIC SUMMIT

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, the 1986 Montreal Economic Summit came to a close yesterday. During this Summit, business participants expressed their views and reached a consensus on many issues.

The representatives of those involved proposed resolutions which were adopted unanimously on matters such as the establishment of business zones, recognition by the Federal Government of Montreal as the Canadian centre of the aerospace industry; the creation of a high technology education centre; and the use of incubators, to name but a few.

Mr. Speaker, if we recall the interventions of the federal Conservative Ministers, we find that they have also made commitments on these same matters. It follows that the Conservative Government is aware of the concerns of the people of Montreal, that it knows the aspirations of the business participants and that it takes action to help them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AUSTRIAN PRESIDENT-ELECT—CALL FOR INVESTIGATION OF WARTIME ACTIVITY ALLEGATIONS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, immediately after the election of Mr. Kurt Waldheim as President of Austria I made a statement in the House calling upon the Canadian Government to direct its United Nations Ambassador to press for a thorough, independent, international investigation of the serious wartime allegations which have been made about Mr. Waldheim.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) expressed support in the House for the thrust of my statement. In view of the report released yesterday in Montreal by civil rights lawyer, Professor Irwin Cotler, calling for an international tribunal to investigate the accusations about Mr. Waldheim, there is further cause to convene such an inquiry. Even Mr. Waldheim and the world-respected Simon Wiesenthal have stated that it would be welcome.

In the interim, in order to ensure that we have all the facts, the Canadian Government should immediately join those other nations of the world which have already sought access to the Waldheim files of the UN War Crimes Commission. To do anything less would be a betrayal of what the victims of World War II died for, and for what this country and its soldiers bravely fought. Justice must be done.

TRADE

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, "yesterday evening, before the Ottawa Carleton Board of Trade, the Liberal Leader remained silent about the position of his party on the development of trade between Canada and the United States." This is what Manon Cornellier said this morning in the newspaper La Presse.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party must really be weakened if it is unable to take a position on negotiations with our major trading partner. We export for $95 billion a year to the United States, which accounts for 80 per cent of all our exports.

Mr. Speaker, when the Liberal Leader can only talk gibberish about the negotiations, it shows incompetence. When his associates go around in circles, it shows gross complacency. When the Liberals put their thirst for power before the development of trade, it is a betrayal. In this area as in all others, the Liberals are disciples of Janus.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN CEDAR SHAKES AND SHINGLES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have the opportunity of asking a question of the Prime Minister. During this week, in general discussion about trade with the United States, the Government appears to have forgotten the particular plight of the shakes and shingles workers in British Columbia. I ask the Prime Minister, did he or his Minister instruct our chief negotiator, Mr. Reisman, to raise the issue, at the beginning of the talks in Washington this week, concerning the 35 per cent tariff which has put 4,000 men and women out of work in British Columbia? And did he raise the issue directly with the Vice-President of the United States, Mr. Bush, when he was in Ottawa?

Oral Questions

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, I had a very direct and vigorous and, I hope, profitable exchange of views with Mr. Bush on this issue. I think he acknowledged his point of view in this regard at the press conference. I indicated to him that there had been an undertaking by the Government of the United States, in Quebec, that there would be no such action, and that this kind of action had an adverse effect upon workers in British Columbia, which we did not accept; and that, for whatever internal, political reasons motivated that, it remained unacceptable to the Government of Canada and we would continue to work in every way with them, through tribunals, working directly with the administration, (a) to bring correction to that situation on behalf of the workers in British Columbia, and (b), to ensure that it never took place again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hope we get some results from that, Mr. Speaker.

NEGOTIATOR'S INSTRUCTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on the issue of what is on the table and what is not on the table, there is growing confusion resulting from comments made on both sides of the border and by the chief negotiators for each country, and that confusion is provoking uncertainty in the business community of this country, as to where investments and if investments are to be made in our industries.

Would the Prime Minister be prepared to make a definitive statement on what his instructions are to Mr. Reisman as to the areas to be negotiated and not negotiated, so that some certainty can be returned to the business community?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think, in fairness, that if there is any confusion or dismay among the business leaders of the country, it was after watching the Leader of the Opposition on television on Monday night.

We have given a mandate to a very accomplished individual, Simon Reisman, who has served with distinction, with my right hon. friend in Finance, and elsewhere, who is deeply wedded to the national interests, the promotion of those objectives that we have set, talked about, in this House. I cannot prevent an American ambassador, an American functionary, from saying "we want to talk about" such and such a thing. It is a free country. It is a free world. They can do that.

Our instructions to our people are clear and were designed to create jobs and greater wealth in Canada, if possible, through a new, bilateral, comprehensive trade arrangement.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just a final weekly example of the confusion.

An Hon. Member: Oh, knock it off.

FINANCIAL SERVICES INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade said yesterday, "As far as we are concerned, we intend to negotiate financial services". He admitted in the same breath that the Americans did not want to negotiate those services. Perhaps I could ask the Prime Minister, or the Minister, to explain how he squares that particular position.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not even the serious enemies of this Government—and we have a few—would suggest that we have lacked the clarity or courage on this issue when compared with the Liberals, who have demonstrated absolutely nothing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You didn't answer the question.

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN POSITION ON IMPOSITION OF ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The situation in South Africa continues to deteriorate daily, and Canadians have now seen the House of Representatives unanimously support the imposition of severe economic sanctions. Canadians are wondering why it is necessary to delay further a leadership role for Canada and the imposition of effective economic sanctions at this time.

• (1120)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret to hear my hon. friend say that there is a denial of a leadership role for Canada. We tried to play the traditional Canadian role played by my predecessors in other circumstances when we were in Nassau.

In this case there are two important considerations. Of course the dismantling of apartheid in South Africa, a grave and growing evil, is the objective of all Hon. Members of the House. How we do it as members of the Commonwealth is also an important strategic consideration. We may be wrong, but it is our judgment that we can best accomplish this quite noble objective by making sure that the Commonwealth stays together and that there is unity of purpose and action. That requires the measured, reasonable course of action that we have been following and on which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has set out.

I will be meeting with Mrs. Thatcher on the 13th followed by a meeting of the seven Heads of Government of Commonwealth countries in London the first week of August. It is our hope that we can contribute substantially toward advancing in real terms serious measures that will bring about an end to this corrupt and degrading system that exists in South Africa.

POSITION OF UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the concern is that that timetable does not reflect the sense of urgency people feel about the South African situation. I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell the House whether he has been in touch with Mrs. Thatcher and whether he has a strategy for bringing Mrs. Thatcher on board. Her public statements reflect a position which would seem to make it impossible to have the kind of unity of which the Prime Minister speaks. Could he share with us his views as to whether or not he can bring Mrs. Thatcher on board, and could he tell us whether or not he has spoken to her?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in Nassau I had the occasion to work quite closely with, among others, Prime Minister Hawkes of Australia, Prime Minister Gandhi of India, and Kenneth Kaunda. They played key roles. Prime Minister Hawkes, for example, was the person who advanced the concept of the Eminent Persons Group.

These people are, like all of us, deeply committed to progress. They are key players in the next step. I have been in close touch with them. I have spoken by telephone to Prime Minister Gandhi at length, with Prime Minister Hawkes, with President Kaunda and with others. As I say, we are working in a measured and, I hope, a productive way toward making a contribution to the next step which must be the visible resolution of an unacceptable situation that defiles human beings. There must be some significant light shed on this matter.

MEDICAL CARE

CANADA HEALTH ACT—ONTARIO DOCTORS' STRIKE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who will recall that in January, 1984, the Canada Health Act was passed unanimously by Parliament. It specifically states that extra billing is against the principles of universal access to health care, and provides for penalties to those provinces that allow extra billing. Will the Prime Minister use the authority of his office to urge the doctors to put down their placards, to end the lockout of the sick, and to get back to providing health care to the people of Ontario?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I feel that as the Minister responsible for health care I answered that question yesterday. The Province of Ontario and the doctors of Ontario are involved in an issue which they must resolve.

The Hon. Member has said that patients are being locked out, but that is not a correct statement. I can only repeat what I said yesterday. I checked yesterday with the office of the Minister of Health in Ontario and was informed that every emergency centre that is reported in the press as being closed has a medical doctor resident, and services are being provided under conditions which are now prevalent in Ontario.

ONTARIO HOSPITAL INSURANCE PLAN—SITUATION OF CONTRIBUTORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister will know that doctors in Ontario are shutting down emergency wards are asking doctors in other provinces not to accept Ontario health insurance cards and are now threatening to accelerate their actions.

• (1125)

What action is the Minister taking to ensure that the principles of the Canada Health Act are being respected and that people are not being locked out from receiving proper health care?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member uses the words "locked out", and again they are not the correct words to use in the circumstances. With regard to portability, I explained my responsibilities relative to portability, and that under the Canada Health Act there are two methods whereby Ontario residents outside Ontario can obtain medical help. I have been assured by Ontario that it will honour direct billings from doctors outside Ontario, and accept the bills which Ontario residents might have been required to pay. The portability conditions under the Canada Health Act are being met by the commitments of Ontario.

FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shushwap): Perhaps the Minister should explain that nobody is being locked out to the woman who lost her child when she was unable to obtain access to the appropriate hospital earlier this week. My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would he confirm that when the legislation banning extra billing is passed later today in the Legislature of Ontario the people of Ontario will be eligible for approximately $100 million, because of the funds which have been denied them as a result of extra billing, to enhance health care in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think all reasonable people who know the very tragic case which the Hon. Member cited, including members at Queen's Park and members of the Ontario Medical Assocation, have some question on whether the delay would have prevented the miscarriage.

I, as the Minister of Health, say to the Government of Ontario and to the doctors of Ontario that I would very seriously hope they would resolve their differences. I know the health care system is better served when men and women see their responsibilities, both public and professional, and sit down at the table, no matter how difficult the circumstances might be, to resolve those differences and get on with their responsibilities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PRIME MINISTER'S TRAVEL EXPENSES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On a daily basis the media are reporting the excessive abuse by the Prime Minister in spending taxpayers' money on hotels, airplanes, videos, limousine rentals, caviar, and champagne, as if he had won the 649 Lottery. Will the Prime Minister now put a stop to the spending orgy of taxpayers' money? He spends it as if it were his own money when it clearly is not. When will he do this?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for instance, as far as the Sommet de la francophonie is concerned, we first had to establish some important links with France, to pave the way for the first Sommet.

Mr. Ouellet: And caviar with everything!

Mr. Mulroney: It was very important for us to project Canada's image internationally, especially within the context of a summit where our francophone dimension would be highlighted. We had a delegation representing all political groups, Francophones outside Quebec—

Mr. Ouellet: They didn't run up those bills!

Mr. Mulroney: —and the Public Service. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, for me as a Quebecer and a representative from Quebec, this was a major event, where the emphasis lay on our relations with France, the Francophonie and the 40 member countries.

As far as I am concerned, I can say that we conducted ourselves with dignity and always bearing in mind the interests of this country.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE COMMITMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of all Canadians who are out of work, all Canadians who are living on unemployment insurance and all those who have had enough of this wasteful spending, I urge the Prime Minister to rise in the House today and give Canadians the assurance that this kind of spending will not be repeated because Canadians have had enough. Is he prepared to commit himself now?

• (1130)

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as my hon. friend refers to personal expenditures, all I can do is tell my hon. friend to ask the media who were with us, or even my own worst enemy. They will give me one thing, I get up early and work all day non stop. My friend mentions spending. Let me say that we have conducted ourselves according to all of the norms. The spending is open to be analyzed and criticized.

With regard to my personal expenditures, I think my belief in that is best justified by action. I am the first Prime Minister of Canada who took a 15 per cent pay cut and who pays for his own food at 24 Sussex Drive.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED BUREAUCRATIC TERRORISM AGAINST DISADVANTAGED IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the Boubou Macoutes.

The Prime Minister is aware that women's, religious, labour and community organizations in Quebec have condemned this operation to check up on welfare recipients at their homes.

Considering the federal funds Quebec receives for social assistance, when is the Prime Minister going to condemn this bureaucratic terrorizing of the neediest in that province?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member that I was not in my seat at the beginning of his question. The situation in Quebec— we have been informed and we have been checking it very closely— is that under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan Quebec is well within the regulations that form the basis of joint agreements between Quebec and Canada. While the situation needs monitoring on a day by day basis, what Quebec is doing is well within the Act.

FUNDING OF COMMON FRONT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Since these humiliating investigations are probably illegal and unconstitutional, is the Prime Minister prepared to pay a contribution to the common front that intends to attack this practice by the Quebec Liberal Government before the courts?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think in the area of where a province administers social benefits we have to recognize that, within reasonable limits, provinces have a responsibility both to the provincial taxpayer and to the federal taxpayer to see that those people who genuinely need help and need social assistance receive it. That is the bottom line for the federal Government.

What I think we have to keep in mind is that these systems are jeopardized by a very small number and percentage of people who try to rip off the system. If that is what Quebec is going after, I think it is right in that respect.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

AUTHORIZED TRAVEL EXPENDITURE REGULATIONS OF OFFICIALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the Prime Minister on the question of this grotesque spending on travel which he indicated is justified on the basis of the hard work he did and the success that he achieved. I want to ask the Prime Minister about the guidelines of the Department of Supply and Services which limit other Canadian officials to a per diem of $55 Canadian in New York—these are current Supply and Services per diems—and $60 Canadian in Paris, for meals and incidentals. The guidelines recommend hotels of under $100. Although the Prime Minister has worked hard and been successful, other Canadian officials work hard and seek to be successful—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Has the Hon. Member a question, please?

Mr. Kaplan: What kind of an example does the grotesque luxurious lifestyles of the rich and famous that have been revealed show for his officials and for the officials of the Government of Canada, Mr. Speaker?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while in New York for the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, I stayed at the Pierre Hotel for two reasons. First, it is Canadian owned. Second, Mr. Trudeau used to stay there all the time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES TO OFFICIALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister telling us that these guidelines set by his Government for Canadian officials no longer apply and that they are also eligible to live the lifestyles of the rich and famous?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the guidelines are there. They apply to whomever pursuant to objective facts set down by the Public Service. I can just tell my hon. friend that, for example, in Paris we were placed by the French Government in a given hotel for security reasons. I stayed in exactly the same hotel, I ate exactly the same food as the Liberal Member, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, who was part of our official delegation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CREDENTIALS PRESENTED BY FORMER AUSTRIAN AMBASSADOR, KURT WALDHEIM

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the report compiled by Professor Irwin Cotler and released yesterday it is becoming increasingly apparent that the Conservative Government in 1958, and Liberal Governments during the decade before that, knew about the war crimes allegations against Kurt Waldheim. Is the Prime Minister prepared to launch an immediate investigation into the question of Kurt Waldheim's credentials, first, as Minister and then as Ambassador to Canada? Why were those credentials accepted without question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is en route to a memorial service in Ireland and is presently securing the information. I will be happy to be in touch with him as quickly as possible and provide what information I can to my hon. friend.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF WARTIME ACTIVITY REGULATIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, given the very serious nature of these allegations, would the Prime Minister consider having Canada encourage the establishment of an international tribunal, of which Canada should be a member, to investigate fully the war crimes charges against Mr. Waldheim?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the commitment of the Government of Canada in this area or the sincerity of our commitment ought to be judged against results. For 40 years there were allegations about war criminals residing in Canada, and very little, if anything, had been done. This Government was the first to appoint a royal commission to get at this issue right here in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEDICAL CARE

ONTARIO HOSPITAL INSURANCE PLAN—DOCTOR' THREAT TO BILL PATIENTS DIRECTLY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the directive to all hospitals and doctors not to accept OHIP health cards but rather to bill the patients directly. Would the Minister use his influence and give the leadership that we expect of him, and tell all Canadian doctors that to use the health care system of Canada as a political arm or a political tool is both unethical and immoral?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already indicated that I do not see the use of an OHIP card or any other card from a resident of another province as being an action whereby a patient, a person who needs medical assistance, should be put at risk. That is the public health care system that we have which has been endorsed by all Parties in this House and endorsed by the provinces of Canada. I have said very clearly—and that is why I had it checked to make sure—that the portability requirements of the Canada Health Act were being observed. They are being observed, from all the knowledge that I have and that I have received.

There is obviously a position that I take as Minister of Health. I expect Canadians to receive the medical care to which they are entitled whether they are inside their province or outside their province.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PERSUADE MR. GROSSMAN TO SUPPORT BILL 94

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, now that the issue extends beyond the Ontario border and involves Canada's national interest, does the Minister not feel, in view of his duties and responsibilities, that he should phone the President of the Canadian Medical Association to ask him to withdraw this directive, and perhaps also Mr. Grossman, the Tory Leader of Ontario, to ask him to get to it and support Bill 94?

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the last statement about my phoning the Leader of the Opposition in Queen's Park is any more valid than whether the Member has phoned the Premier of Ontario and asked him to be reasonable and try to come to some agreement between the doctors and the Ontario Government. That kind of statement is just not helpful. The point that must be made is, as I said to the Member earlier, that I expect the doctors of Canada—

Mr. Ouellet: The Minister of Health is for extra-billing.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Member for Papineau is as ridiculous today as is his reputation in this House and across the country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: You're for extra-billing. That's what you are saying.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Minister knows that such a personal comment is out of order.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): If I am out of order, I will gladly withdraw and leave the Member to search his own conscience.

Some Hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Penner: That's no good. It must be unequivocal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order! The Chair has not found that the Member said anything unparliamentary. Such comments, as the Hon. Member knows, are out of order.

AGRICULTURE

FAMILY FARMS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister recently appointed a new Deputy Minister of Agriculture. Was Mr. Noreau speaking for the Prime Minister and his Government when he recently indicated that the Government's priority is no longer the protection of the family farm, but rather to help farmers get out of production?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to that question and set the record straight. The statements of the new Deputy Minister of Agriculture were taken out of context. The Deputy Minister was explaining another very important initiative taken by the Government. I refer to the Canadian Rural Transition Program.

FARM DEBT REVIEW PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Could the Minister tell us if the need to identify the approximately 20 per cent of farmers that the Government has decided will have to leave farming is the reason that there is a lack of effective deterrence in the Farm Debt Review Program which he put before the House?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that we continue to hear questions of this kind. In the past the previous Government, aided by the New Democratic Party—

Mr. de Jong: But you guys were going to be better.

Mr. Wise: —did absolutely nothing for Canadian agriculture. As a result of mismanagement by that Government interest rates increased from about 10 per cent to 24 per cent. They added an input cost of well over $2 billion. They sat idly on their hands, with the support of the NDP, and did absolutely nothing.

Mr. Althouse: What support of the NDP? You guys supported the Bank Act. We were the only ones who opposed it.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

END TO WORKERS' OCCUPATION OF BUILDING

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Yesterday the Minister indicated that he was taking a course of action which he hoped would resolve the occupation of the mine building owned by the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Can the Minister tell the House whether those efforts have been successful?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform all Members of the House that the sit-in has been discontinued. Arrangements are now being made for representatives of the miners, management, and the board to meet with senior officials of my Department. I would like to thank the Hon. Member, Premier Buchanan of the Province of Nova Scotia, and other Members for the interest they have shown in this very important matter.

POSSIBLE LOSS OF JOBS AT MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Yesterday the Minister accused me of distorting figures when I used the figure of 600 to represent the jobs lost at the Moncton shops. Does the Minister deny that 225 jobs were lost last fall and that a further 437 jobs will be lost on account of the sale? To what total do these figures amount? He may use a pencil.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what that has to do with the recent announcement made by CN. I stand by the statement in the CN press release. Mr. Lawless, the President of CNR, said that when the agreement is reached between CN and Canadian General Electric, all 1,022 shop employees should either retain jobs or be accommodated through existing benefit plans. I stand by that.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): That means the jobs are going.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the answer to my first question is 662.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, when is the Minister going to stand up and act like a responsible Minister and protect the jobs of Atlantic Canadians? Is he saying that as the Minister responsible for regional development and transport he is going to wash his hands of the whole matter and let CN do whatever it wants?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Hon. Member opposite who obviously does not want to have a locomotive manufacturing plant in Moncton—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —we are taking positive steps to ensure that there is a long, stable future for the workers of Moncton—

Mr. Dingwall: Oh, sit down.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and indeed for the Moncton area.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES' RIGHTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. We hope that the development of a locomotive manufacturing plant in Moncton succeeds.

Miss MacDonald: Then you are different from the Liberals.

Mr. Benjamin: However, when questioning CNR officials yesterday they sounded like a fellow who is going to lose his house and is trying to find someone else to take the keys.

Would the Minister prevail upon the management and board of directors of Canadian National, in their negotiations with Canadian General Electric, to ensure that the employees and their unions will retain successor rights under their new employer and that there will be no employees of CGE brought in from the United States?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has adopted a positive attitude toward this because I think it is a positive development for the city of Moncton and its future industrial base.

As the Hon. Member knows, CN has indicated its intentions to enter into negotiations with Canadian General Electric within certain parameters which were approved by the board. All these things will be taken into consideration during the discussions. I am sure that CNR will be interested in the representations of the Hon. Member, and I will ensure that they are received.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, Canadian National said no yesterday to the question I just asked the Minister. I ask him to get them to change their minds.

CONTRACTUAL WORK INQUIRY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National also said that it was going to convert the Point Charles plant into a contractual plant. Would the Minister be good enough to try to get Canadian National to do the same thing for the remainder of the shop operations in Moncton in an attempt to have the best of both worlds, both locomotive manufacturing and contractual shop work with other railroads in North America?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member has been delegated to act as a bargaining agent for the unions or is just assuming that role. I will certainly convey his comments to the management of CN. I am sure they will be interested in them.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRE IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance). In his last budget, the Minister of Finance had proposed to set up an International Banking Centre in the Montreal area. I should like to know wether such is still his intention. If so, when can we expect it?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Government has indeed decided to facilitate the establishment of international banking Centres. As a matter of fact, my colleague the Minister of Finance has made public Messrs. Rasminski and Lawson's report to be used as a working paper. Now, we want to seek the advice of all interested parties, and the consultation process has already started.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Ontario Minister for Skill Development joined the long list of those harshly criticizing the Jobs Strategy Program, not only for the cut of $800 million over three years but also for the bungled administration of the program.

When will the Minister start taking these criticisms seriously and honestly re-examine the Jobs Strategy Program to meet the criticisms leveled at it?

• (1150)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to quote the Ontario Minister of Skills Development. At the time we signed the National Training Act agreement he said: "It is good to see that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has indicated her Government's intention to increase the level of training provided in this province under the Canadian Jobs Strategy." He went on: "We are also pleased with the assurances we have received that Ontario's public training institutions will have a fair and realistic opportunity to compete for training purchases by the private sector under the Canadian Jobs Strategy."

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should read what he said yesterday. He was misled, like many Canadians in the last election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: How can the Minister say this is a good program when in a recent poll only 28 per cent of Canadians approved of it, when only three provinces have signed training agreements with her after one year, and organizations all over the country are criticizing the program? Who approves or supports the program besides the Tory caucus?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I know very well that the Hon. Member does not approve of the program. He would like to go back to the old programs which simply qualified people to go back on unemployment insurance. We have changed that. I realize he does not like that change or the fact we are contributing to the creation of more than 600,000 new jobs. I realize he does not like the fact that unemployment is coming down, and that the unemployment rate has dropped 3 per cent from what it was when he was in office.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

POSSIBLE IMPACT OF GOOSE BAY AIRPORT USAGE PROPOSALS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He has committed himself to protecting the rights of aboriginal people. While the Government proceeds with proposals to have the Goose Bay Airport and military base become a major military training centre for NATO, the interests of the Innu or Montagnais, the aboriginal people in the area, have not yet been taken into account. The Government has known of long-standing Innu complaints about low level flying, its detrimental effects on their environment and economy, indeed their total way of life. Therefore, will the Prime Minister assure the Innu that they will have full participation in impact studies before any decision is made about the future of the base?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of that question on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs. However, I think the Member should be aware that a process involving FEARO has been announced to check some of the points he has made as well as those made by the native people.

CONSULTATIVE PROCESS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister who is responsible for the over-all direction of the Government. I ask him if the consent of the Innu people will be secured before any decision is made concerning that base which will so vitally affect their total way of life?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the FEARO process. As has been indicated, I should say that the people concerned are going to be very closely consulted. That is necessary so that we know the facts and we can make decisions based on facts. They will be very closely involved in the process, and that assurance I can give him on behalf of the Government.

TOURISM

PROGRAM TO PROMOTE CANADA IN UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Tourism).

His Department has launched an advertising campaign directed to the United States to try and sell Canada's tourist potential. Is this investment beginning to yield positive results, and will they be felt in Canada and more particularly in the province of Quebec and, as a priority, in Quebec City which is the only North American city with outstanding fortifications?

[English]

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, last year tourism contributed some $3 billion to the Province of Quebec. In the first quarter of 1986 it is up by some 13 per cent, or an extra $100 million. When it comes to tourism, hospitality and marketing are the cornerstones of what we are doing. Canada is doing a marvellous job this year and Quebec is right at the forefront.

Mr. Mazankowski: So is the Minister.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORT LIMITATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Canadian auto industry is very important to the health of the Canadian economy. In order to ensure that sector continues to grow, is the Minister prepared to extend the existing import limitations on foreign automobile makers, including Korea, until such time as they meet all the provisions of the Auto Pact?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that we are presently having discussions with Korea and Japan with respect to their auto exports to Canada. I hope that within the next several weeks we will be in a position to announce what has transpired.

AUTO PACT PROVISIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer but can he explain to the House the fairness of having two sets of rules, one for Canadian auto manufacturers and one for the offshore manufacturers? Is there not a great disparity there, and will he stand in his place and give us a commitment that the rules will be set for all auto makers as per the provisions of the Auto Pact?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is clearly in the interests of those who are investing in Canada to achieve Auto Pact status because in doing so they open up the U.S. market. We are working with the automobile manufacturers and encouraging them in the expectation that Auto Pact status will be reached. However, that takes time, and I think the Hon. Member recognizes that.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO FRANCE—REQUEST FOR EXPENDITURE GUIDELINES FOR OFFICIALS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to February in Paris and the Prime Minister's $3,400 hotel room.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. Waddell: The Government has guidelines for civil servants, MPs, cabinet Ministers, companies doing business in South Africa, indeed for just about everything. Given that, would it not be reasonable for the Prime Minister to set guidelines on extravagance for his travelling entourage?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there were some, I think, regrettable constructions placed on some accounts submitted. The fact is, for example, that in the case of Mila and myself, we had for our use one bedroom and one bathroom. Everything else assigned to us by the Government of France was used for working purposes involving visiting Heads of Government, public servants, representatives of the French Government, and security considerations. The Mulroneys used one bedroom and one bathroom and that was it. I do not think Canadians want anything less.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOTEL ROOM BILL

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the President—rather, to the Prime Minister. Is he denying that the room cost $3,400, and can he tell us what you get for $3,400? Do you get chocolates on the pillow, for example? Why $3,400 for a hotel room?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for that amount of money you get the NDP Member for Kenora—Rainy River down the hall.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: He was an official member of the delegation, in the same hotel, attending the same—

Some Hon. Members: On a per diem.

Mr. Mulroney: —as we did. We were assigned a suite of rooms by the Government of France. My wife and I occupied the two rooms I told you about. Everything else was used for other purposes, and I do not have the slightest intention of apologizing to you or anyone else because what we did was good effective work for Canada abroad, "we" being all members of the delegation.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston, one question.

DISASTERS

COMMEMORATIVE SERVICE ON ANNIVERSARY OF AIR-INDIA ACCIDENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Air-India tragedy. While we appreciate the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is travelling to Cork Ireland to participate in the memorial service, we are disappointed that the Government has refused to charter a boat to allow the families of the victims to travel from Cork to the actual crash site.

• (1200)

Can the Prime Minister explain this apparent lack of sensitivity? Will he make immediate arrangements to ensure that a boat is available in Cork on Monday to transport the families of the victims to the actual crash site to accommodate their emotional and religious needs?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that my colleague, the Minister of State for External Affairs, who is presently on his way to the memorial ceremony, discussed it with me last night. He advised me that Canada and India had examined that possibility very carefully. We did look into it.

We are completely aware of the sensitivities, the concerns, and feelings of the relatives.

Both countries, after a thorough examination, felt that it was not a practical thing to do. It was not workable under the circumstances, and the two countries together decided not to proceed with that plan, but to go ahead with the memorial service.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Twelve o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): The Prime Minister having left, Mr. Speaker, I will wait, preferring to raise my question of privilege when he is here.

[English]

The first opportunity is now to pose a question of privilege, but I like to practise civility and I would like to do it in the presence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I will be guided by you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is claiming a question of privilege arising out of Question Period. He has the right to do it now, or he has the opportunity to send me a notice about it. If he is now saying that he knows it now his obligation is to raise it now.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will be very brief. I will reserve my right to elaborate at the appropriate time, except to say that as it is customary I was a delegate at the French Summit and everybody knows all the Members of Parliament in attendance there, ten of us, were on a per diem. I will reserve my right to say more in due time.

Mr. Speaker: There is no such right. That is the Member's question of privilege? I am trying to say to the Hon. Member that if he has a question of privilege arising out of Question Period he has to raise it now.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, when I say I will elaborate later that does not mean here. As I was saying, I am not the type to get excited over these issues. However if I heard it properly, the Right Hon. Prime Minister is saying that the Hon. Member from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) ate the same food and stayed at the same place. Well, it is not exactly according to the fact. I do not want to get over excited about it. I was, like any other Member of Parliament, ten of us, on a per diem, and I stand my case there for the moment.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that is not a question of privilege.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

ANNIVERSARY OF CRASH OF AIR-INDIA FLIGHT 182

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remind the House, and all Canadians, of a tragic yet important anniversary in the aviation world.

On Sunday, June 23, 1985, Air-India Flight 182, enroute to England from Toronto and Montreal crashed into the North Atlantic off Ireland killing all 329 persons onboard.

On this anniversary of the Air-India disaster all Members of this House, and indeed all Canadians, feel again the deep sorrow and sadness at such a tragic loss of life.

The observation of the anniversary involves three countries, Canada, India and Ireland. On June 23, 1986 Canada will be participating in the benediction of a special memorial erected on land donated to Canada and India in perpetuity by the Government of Ireland on the seaside of Dunmanus Bay 200 miles west of where Flight 182 plunged into the grey Atlantic a year ago. The memorial bears this simple inscription, "In honour of those who died in the Air India flight".

At this time I want to extend once more our thanks and appreciation to the Government and citizens of Ireland for their tireless efforts in assisting with the search and the compassion and concern which they showed to the relatives and friends of the deceased while at Cork.

The Air-India tragedy, the bombing of Canadian Pacific Air Flight 003 at Narita Airport in Japan, and subsequent international terrorist attacks against civil aviation have generated a need for improved airport and aviation security throughout the world. For our part we have responded to this new reality and have continued to upgrade and improve our security procedures and equipment. Our desire is sincere and our efforts are unceasing to ensure that Canadians do not suffer from international terrorism in the future.

As we once again turn our minds to Cork and the Atlantic where the victims of the Air-India disaster perished we think of the sadness and sense of loss endured by the relatives and the friends of those victims. We pledge to them, to this House, and to all Canadians our Government's continued commitment and dedicated efforts to ensure the safety and security of our air transportation system.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party of Canada, and on behalf of all my Liberal colleagues in the House of Commons, I want to express again to the families of the victims our deep sorrow and sadness for the tragic loss of these 329 lives.

I must comment at this time on the regretful decision by the Government to reject a plea for help from 70 grieving Canadians who want to make an ocean ferry pilgrimage to the crash site of the Air-India Flight 182, and perform last rites for family victims in accordance with their religious beliefs. I think it is regrettable that the Government was not able to find the $60,000 necessary for such a trip. It has just been confirmed by the Government, but they still have the weekend to think it over.

I think the Government should indeed reflect during the weekend, and make this money available. After all, as the organizer of this pilgrimage said, it is not a very large amount very big thing considering the magnitude of the tragedy and the fact that they are Canadians from coast to coast who have this compelling and emotional need.

I appreciate the efforts of the Government to try to improve security at our airports. I will have other occasions to say that I am not too happy with what the Government is doing. I have long felt that security at airports should become the total responsibility of the Government instead of being the responsibility of private companies who are submitting bids and are trying to make money out of the performance of this duty. I think because of worldwide terrorism it would be justifiable now for the Department of Transport to take over this responsibility and pay for it.

In closing, I want to say that this tragic incident, which so terribly affected so many Canadian families, should not be repeated. Our sorrow and our thoughts on Monday will be with these families of the victims. Indeed, I hope that in the few hours that are left, the Government will come back with a favourable decision. It is tourist season and the cost for many of these families to go to Europe is heavy. The Government should make the appropriate accommodations for them in Ireland to respect their religious way of paying respect to their families.

• (1210)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues, I join with the Minister and the Official Opposition in renewing our heartfelt sympathies and regrets. We send our best wishes to the friends and families of those who died in the Air-India disaster one year ago.

I know all of us in the House and all Canadians well remember the day of the crash and how we shared in Canada and with people around the world, particularly in India, the horror and shock of the magnitude of the tragedy. Our memories about this will be long, as they should be. Hopefully we will learn and profit from our memories of those who died.

I want to add our gratitude to the Government and the people of Ireland for their great efforts and their gesture. It is something that should happen more often in the international scene.

The Minister knows that he will be supported by Members on this side of the House with any intiatives he undertakes to minimize the risk of air travel and the risk at airports. We also continue to push, as we have for a number of years, to have Transport Canada and the RCMP entirely responsible for airport security instead of the airlines themselves. However, the debate of how best to achieve those results will continue at another time.

I hope the Minister and Canada will provide even more leadership in the international scene, with international agencies in other countries, to strengthen airport and airline security in many more nations. There are still too many nations where that security is not very good.

Let us remember the incident and the great responsibility that has been thrust on all of us to do more in the hope that this will never happen again. As we do so, let us also remember that we hold the key to minimizing the grief of those who lost loved ones by ever being on guard against those few who would use this tragedy or any similar tragedy to broadly label cultural and religious groups. Many innocent people died in that Air-India flight. Let us also treat fairly in our hearts and minds the innocent who live among us here today. Again, our best wishes for a better future for the friends and families of the victims of the Air Indian disaster.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONTRIBUTIONS TO CULTURAL AND ARTS ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 571—Ms. McDonald:

1. (a) Since September, 1984, has the Department of Communications made contributions to cultural and arts organizations and, if so, to which ones (b) what contributions went towards (i) their regular operations (ii) the holding of conferences and meetings?

2. Is it the policy of the Department to pay for dinner or other entertainment functions where the Minister or his representative speaks and, if so, since September, 1984, what functions did the Department financially support?

Return tabled.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when he might answer my question P-26 for the production of papers dealing with the Environment Canada study carried out under the auspices of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) who, two weeks ago in the House, indicated that he would have no objection to the tabling of that report.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have caused inquiries to be made as to when we might be able to table that document. I am not exactly sure what form it is in at the present time and it may be that it has to be translated into both official languages. I have set this inquiry in motion to see exactly when we can table it.

POINT OF ORDER

LACK OF SIMULTANEOUS TRANSLATION AT COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the House that on June 17 a meeting of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry had to be postponed because there were no interpreters.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair and the House are aware of that matter. I indicated earlier, in response to a similar comment about another committee by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), that part of the problem is that we now have so many committees that there are more committees than the Secretary of State can provide translation for. Translation is provided to the committees and the House, not by the House itself, but by the Secretary of State.

That matter is currently under discussion with the Department in order to try to resolve these matters.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I believe that when we began the legislative committee process there was an understanding among Members of the House that we would attempt to have the legislative committees meet when the House was sitting, while the standing committees and other committees would meet when the House was not sitting. I note that many standing committees are not doing that and I think this is putting some pressure on the Translation and contributing to the problem. I wanted to make certain that we all understood that that may be contributing to the problem.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Before proceeding to Government Orders, because of the ministerial statement, this day's sitting will be extended by nine minutes.

BELL CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-19, An Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Speaker: There are 15 report stage motions set down on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-19, An Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada.

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 5 and 8 in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), and Motions Nos. 3, 4 and 10 in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), were moved and negatived in committee.

After consultation with the Hon. Members concerned, Motions Nos. 1, 5 and 10 will be selected. Accordingly, Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 8 will not be selected and, therefore, will be dropped from the Notice Paper.

● (1220)

Motions Nos. 7 and 11 present to the Chair some procedural difficulties. The effect of Motion No. 7 would be to make Bell Canada responsible for the content, meaning and purpose of messages transmitted, emitted or received through the services or facilities of the company. Since Clause 8 of the Bill stipulates that Bell Canada shall not in any way exercise control over the contents, or influence the meaning or purpose of such messages, such a change is clearly beyond the scope of the clause it purports to amend.

Motion No. 11 seeks to bring Bell Canada Enterprises under the terms of the Bill. This also was not the intention of the House when the principle of the Bill was agreed to at the second reading stage.

For these reasons, it would be my intention to rule Motions Nos. 7 and 11 out of order.

For the benefit of Hon. Members and for the purposes of clarification, let me now indicate how all of the motions listed are to be dealt with.

As Motions Nos. 1, 3A and 5 share the common theme of universal access to telephone service at a reasonable cost, they will be grouped for debate and will be voted on separately. Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are not selected. Motion No. 6 will be debated and voted on separately. Motion No. 7 the Chair believes, is out of order. Motion No. 8 is not selected. Motion No. 8A will be debated and voted on separately. Motion No. 9 will be debated and voted on separately. Motion No. 10 will be debated and voted on separately. The Chair views Motion No. 11 as being out of order. Motions Nos. 12 and 13 will be combined for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 12 obviates the question being put on Motion No. 13. A negative vote on Motion No. 12 will require the question to be put on Motion No. 13.

If there are procedural arguments that Hon. Members wish to make with regard to Motions Nos. 7 and 11, it would be my intention to hear such argument when those motions would be otherwise be called, assuming Hon. Members are not ready to do that now.

For the time being, motions to be called would be grouped, Motions Nos. 1, 3A and 5.

Mr. Vic Althouse (for Mr. Orlikow) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 27 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) Furnish the service at the lowest possible price with universal access by subscribers; and".

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Communications) moves:

Motion No. 3A

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 3 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(c) if the Commission has not otherwise specified, the Company has not received therefor".

Mr. Vic Althouse (for Mr. Orlikow) moves:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 3 to 5 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(c) a financial guarantee of payment by the customer or a third party or such provisions in respect to advance payments that may be established by the CRTC both of which shall not amount to more than one month's advance payment of the subscriber's normal monthly charge."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to support the motion that I have just moved on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Two motions, Nos. 1 and 5, were intended to be grouped for debate. I want to make it fairly clear to the House as to what is intended here.

In the first amendment we are proposing to add in the words that Your Honour has read, the idea being to provide universal access to subscribers. Motion No. 5 would clarify that, and make universal access more clear in that it would not require such a large downpayment to have service in effect. We read the current Bill as providing the possibility for the phone companies, for Bell Canada, to charge as much as an advance of six months in regular service for the provision of the service, and we think this is flying in the face of universal access. It flies in the face of the tendency of law in this country to move toward smaller downpayments for service. When one goes to rent an apartment now the landlord is limited to much less than six months. In most provinces, it is only a one-month advance payment. We think that this kind of universal access should be consistent in our policies and procedure and that providing the possibility of charging for six months' service in advance, without pointing out what will be required or how that will be paid back, or if in fact the customer will get it back, is not the way to write good law, and it is not consistent with the direction in which the laws of this country have been going in the last number of years.

The question of universality, universal access, is the main point of these amendments. There is a widely dispersed population in Canada. We, as most Hon. Members in the House know, tend to concentrate in a number of large cities, but for those of us in the rural parts of the country, access to that other population is extremely important in keeping the country together, in making commerce work, in keeping the political system working, tied together. We find it very difficult to imagine changing the system of universal access, to which we have grown accustomed, to one where the telephone company would have the right to increase charges for owning or using a telephone beyond the level that is currently in place.

The telephone companies have been arguing, as Your Honour is aware, that they make most of their profits on long distance charges and only a limited profit on local calls. They are therefore attempting to make a division in their incomes. That is one of the choices they propose. They have attempted several methods, all of which achieve the same result, that is, higher charges for the use of a telephone, higher charges for local use, to be tied into the telephone system. It is part of a deregulation move that is sweeping the country under this particular administration, and one that we think is fraught with many dangers, many hazards, given the nature of this country of ours, Canada.

Although the people who live in small rural and remote areas and small villages might only amount to 5 per cent to 10 per cent of the nation's population, they are an important part of this country. The original founding fathers recognized the important role that those in rural areas played in settling the country and keeping it from outsiders and intruders. That is still an important role for those in rural areas to be playing in terms of defence and political entities, and to discriminate against them by charging higher fees just for the use of telephones does not make much sense.

There are not many phone calls made from some of these rural telephones, but they are the only means of quick communication available to those people. They are important for the political unity of the country and for those people to be able to tie into the commerce of the country, to order repairs, goods and services.

Because of other policies that have been adopted by the previous Government and ones which seem to be carried on by the present Government, transportation rates to those remote areas are rising. It has become a user-pay situation and each charge has to pay its own way or the goods do not move. Therefore, goods and services are extremely expensive to the remote areas of the country as a result of this policy move away from trying to share transportation costs more or less equitably among all of the users of the country.

We see this as an attempt to do the same thing for communications that has been begun with transportation. We do not like it. We think that this particular amendment would take away that right from Bell Canada and leave the access to telephone sets in homes in the suburbs, in homes in rural areas and in small villages. This is something that is viewed by most of these users as a universal right that should not be priced beyond their ability to pay.

Therefore we think that there should be a clear statement within this particular reorganization of Bell Canada to the effect that the company would be required, to a small extent, to provide some cross subsidization for the very profitable long distance telephone market in order to allow as many customers as possible access to telephone sets.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the proposed amendment to Clause 6(2) which would, as has been indicated, strike out line 3 at page 3 and make a substitution. The purpose of this amendment is to allow the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission to specify a maximum payment other than the advance payment that Bell can currently charge. This amendment will retain the six-month provision for extreme cases, while at the same time preventing Bell from demanding such advance payments arbitrarily.

In substance, this is a continuation of an existing provision in the special Act, with the exception that the Commission would be empowered to substitute its own maximum advance payment requirement in lieu of the historic maximum six-month period. The amendment retains the historical maximum of six months for dealing with extreme cases of non-payment.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the response of the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to the motion to amend Clause 6(2)(c), which in essence is identical to what I had recommended for revision which was ruled out. I refer to my Motion No. 4 which states:

—the request for service does not conform with the General Regulations prescribed for the Company by the Commission.

I assume that it is a technicality with respect to language that the Parliamentary Secretary has used in this instance. It makes absolutely no sense that a monopoly service and a monopoly supplier of that service should be in a position to request a six-month advance payment by any subscriber, except with due cause. There are many people in Canada, and increasingly more so as our taxes increase, who do not have the disposable income necessary to pay a lump sum for a service which should and must be provided.

In committee I asked if it was fair for the average struggling student who is finding it difficult enough to pay for his rent, his heat, his light and his tuition fee to be expected to pay a six-month advance payment. I also asked if it was fair that the sick or elderly who have to move should be expected to pay a six-month advance payment. I wondered, since it was refused in committee, whether the Minister would come back and accept the principle that advance payment was not necessary and that a deposit should not be required unless determined by regulations or directions from the CRTC. Therefore I am pleased that my suggestion has been accepted with respect to the credit practices of the company being set by the Commission. After all, this is a monopoly service and the customers will certainly not run away or move to avoid Bell Canada. I am sure they are pleased to pay their monthly bills. Unfortunately, most people do not have that type of lump sum to put up front. I am pleased to support the amendment of the Minister, Motion No. 3A, which is really my motion. I am glad I have inspired him along the way.

With respect to Motion No. 1, which refers to the furnishing of the service, I suggest that furnishing the service should be an obligation and that it should be at an affordable cost. If the service is being furnished, does a telephone come with that service? Or is there just a wire and somehow or other one must speak to the wind? In conjunction with furnishing a service a usable telephone should be supplied at a minimal cost. It should be easily accessible to the parties concerned. What does one do if one is elderly and cannot go down to the local boutique? In other words, how does one obtain a telephone? Therefore furnishing the service indicates that we want the service furnished at an affordable price and that in this respect the local ratepayer will be considered, not just in light of long distance telephone rates. The intent of this amendment is to give all reasonable consideration to the subscriber at the local level. If that is the intent, then I hope the Minister will give serious consideration to this amendment.

• (1240)

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, in Clause 6 of the Bill it says that Bell Canada has an obligation to provide services to customers that it shall—

(a) furnish the service;

And also:

—furnish telephones of the latest improved design then in use by the Company in the municipality or territory.

Mr. Speaker, in the riding of Gatineau and in the Outaouais region generally, we have a situation that is totally unacceptable. Our telephones are indeed of the latest improved design, but we cannot use them to call numbers in our own municipalities without incurring long distance charges.

I have asked Bell Canada to abolish long distance charges between the communities of Thurso and Gatineau, between Buckingham and Gatineau and even between certain streets in the municipality of Gatineau, where there is a long distance charge for phoning across the street!

The Company was understanding and made an application to the CRTC to change the criteria that stand in the way of getting rid of these long distance charges that divide our families and are a burden on our small business people who, whenever they receive calls from or put calls through to their suppliers, run up incredible bills, and sometimes it costs as much as $100 a month for a family that wants to keep in touch with people across our riding.

The CRTC answered that it would postpone a decision on this request until the fall, because it did not agree with the way Bell Canada was going to frame its request. Bell Canada says that in order to charge my constituents and other ridings and communities in Canada, local instead of long distance rates, it would cost $150 million, and that this $150 million was going to be spread over all subscribers, including those who do not pay long distance charges when they call another number within the same community.

The CRTC felt it was not fair to spread the cost of changing the criteria, just to enable hundreds of people to call each other within the same community without paying long-distance charges.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will give the CRTC a right to monitor a number of matters where it has been somewhat difficult in the past for the Council to obtain information.

I was therefore suggesting to the CRTC, which will now secure that right under the Bill, that rather than asking Bell Canada to completely reorganize its service in order to eliminate the need for long distance calls between communities which already have a common interest but are not adjacent and that being the term that prevents us from doing away with it, that rather than attempting such a complete reorganization, they should tell Bell Canada which, according to recent statistics I have seen, had possibly the largest profits of all major Canadian corporations, to absorb part of the cost of doing away with long distance tolls in the Ottawa Valley communities. Because the situation is absolutely unfair.

On the Ontario side, taxpayers can make calls from Cumberland right up to Ottawa. There are almost no communities with long distance tolls. But on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River, there are long distance tolls for calling people living across the street. There are long distance tolls between Buckingham and Gatineau. Where do you suppose people in Buckingham will be getting their supplies and services? They call Ottawa because there is no long distance toll.

How is it possible to have cohesion in our area?

So, in conclusion, I recommend to the CRTC, rather than postponing the elimination of long distance tolls in the Ottawa region, to require Bell Canada to absorb the cost of that elimination, according to the schedule that was established in January when Bell Canada filed its application with the CRTC.

Moreover, I would also recommend to the CRTC that if, under this Bill, they obtain a right to monitor Bell Canada's operations, wider powers than before, that they use that right to ensure that the Corporation really meets its obligation as provided in the legislation to furnish telephone service requested for any lawful purposes. And also to supply applicants with telephone sets of the latest improved design then in use of the municipality or territory. And let us not find ourselves in a situation where there are municipalities with truncated services and communities that cannot make calls to each other, families that cannot communicate among themselves without having to pay up to $100 a month for long distance calls, and SMBs that are trying to live and grow but cannot do so because of those long distance tolls, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to this amendment introduced by my colleague on this side of the House to emphasize that Bell Canada is a corporation which was established pursuant to special legislation dating all the way back to 1880 and which happens to be a monopoly. It stands to reason therefore that any company which is a monopoly enjoys rather special privileges and benefits.

The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has just put the finger on the huge profits recorded by Bell Canada. In my estimation she is quite right to point out that Bell Canada is among companies whose investments are most profitable, and so it is precisely because of its privileged monopolistic situation. This is why I think it must also face up to certain responsibilities. Therefore, the motion to amend Clause 6 at page 2 of Bill C-19 seems quite relevant to me.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister has argued that this clause is nothing more than a repetition of an already existing provision of the act under which Bell Canada was incorporated. So what? The mere fact that Bell Canada could in the past ask for a six-month advance deposit does not necessarily mean that a similar provision has to be included in this Bill.

In my opinion, the amendment under which Bell Canada would have to furnish the service at the lowest possible price with universal access by subscribers is quite acceptable. I will therefore vote in favour of this amendment because I think that Bell Canada has responsibilities towards Canadians, wherever they happen to be within the company's territory.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was quite right in saying that many people on low incomes or in certain age groups, and she referred more specifically to students who have to move to another town to continue their university training, cannot afford to pay a lump sum representing six months service for having their telephone connected. I think that the clause in the Bill, at the bottom of page 3, that says nothing requires Bell Canada to provide the service if it has not received therefor a tender or payment of the lawful rates semi-annually in advance, is excessive.

I think this provision goes too far and I fail to understand why the Government refused to change this part of the Bell Canada Act.

The Parliamentary Secretary's excuse was that this is how it used to be, but that is no reason why this situation should be allowed to continue. This Bill which is specifically concerned with a major administrative change involving Bell Canada and its parent company, justifies, I feel . . . Now, under the Canada Business Corporations Act, Bell Canada will have far more freedom, in many ways, than it had in the past.

The CRTC was worried about losing part of its authority to monitor Bell Canada with the introduction of this new entity, which is Bell Canada Enterprises Incorporated, which is now the parent corporation.

Now we are seeing this major change in Bell Canada's operations, I think the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister (Mr. Edwards) should have realized that it was perhaps the right time to withdraw this right to charge a fee equivalent to the charge for six months service, or half the annual rate.

I think that in the case of many Canadians, either young students, as the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) pointed out, or older people whose life conditions have changed and who at a certain age must move because the children are married and the family has become smaller, oftentimes older people living alone must change neighbourhood and find accommodation in a place where they must have a telephone installed. In my view, Bell Canada should not expect these older people to pay this basic amount because in most cases they simply cannot afford the expense of having a new telephone installed at home. This is why I support the motion and I hope that, after due consideration, the Government will change its mind and accept this very important amendment.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on Bill C-19. I should like to speak on this matter as it relates to the telephone system and to security deposits. Also it raises the notion of paying per call later down the road, or the notion of a new type of system sneaking its way into Canada.

I notice that the phone debate, if I can call it that, is no a big deal, like the free trade debate. However, when we look at what affects ordinary people on a day by day basis, we realize that it is an important issue.

I remember my first job in Vancouver as a crown attorney. First I was sent to traffic court. After muddling around there and letting a few people off their tickets as a result of sloppy procedures and so on, I was sent to family court. I will never forget my job in family court. It was to cross-examine about six times or eight times each morning, usually men who were in arrears with their maintenance payments. It was my job to find out the income of these men. Inevitably the same patterns emerged repeatedly; what they paid for telephone, rent, to operate a car, which was always very expensive, car payment, and insurance payment. Eventually there was a little money left over for cigarettes, alcohol, entertainment, or whatever. We were always trying to squeeze a little extra money out of these men to pay what they should pay; maintenance payments to their wives, ex-wives, or children. I will never forget that pattern of expenses of ordinary Canadians. At the top of the list was the telephone bill. Many other expenses are discretionary, but everyone pays a telephone bill. That is why I say Bill C-29 is very important.

We are debating a provision in respect of security deposits. Hon. Members can correct me if I misinterpret the provision. However, it is my understanding that there is a government amendment as well as an amendment in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). In any event, subclause 6(2) reads in part as follows:

> Nothing in subsection (1) requires the company to furnish the service or a telephone where—

Subsection (1) indicates that the company must furnish a telephone when someone asks for a telephone; it is a monopoly. Subclause 6(2) continues as follows:

> (c) the company has not received therefor a tender or payment of the lawful rates semi-annually in advance.

As the Bill was originally drafted, it allowed the telephone company not to provide a telephone if it did not collect a six-month advance payment, which was really a security deposit. Of course, the company wants to collect the security deposit and it wants customers to pay their bills. However, it was a rather extraordinary power. We must remember that it is a monopoly. As I understand it, one cannot obtain a telephone anywhere else unless the company or monopoly supplies it.

Perhaps the House will forgive me if I tell another personal story. Again going back to working as a lawyer in Vancouver, I discovered that the B.C. Hydro utility was charging security deposits of up to six months of hydro payments. A number of people approached us at the time and said that they were required to pay security deposits, but that other people were not paying them.

Let us look at who were paying security deposits. They were students, unemployed people, and even artists. I remember one artist who appeared in the local directory as a writer and artist. He is now a famous playwright and artist of children's books. The company thought that he must be poor because he was an artist, so it charged him a security deposit. As well as students and unemployed people it charged people in certain parts of town. It was a helter-skelter, unfair system. It was taken to court, and Mr. Justice McIntyre in the case of Chastain v. B.C. Hydro ruled that security deposits were illegal and that utilities had to treat all their subscribers equally.

Therefore, one could really question whether the company would have the power, as set out in the original draft of the Bill, to present a six-month advance bill to subscribers of its choice. It is a beautiful way of ensuring collections. Other companies cannot do it. In fact, collection people tell us that some 97 per cent to 99 per cent of people pay their bills. This provision gave the company a little extra clout when it was suspicious that someone may have trouble paying his or her bill. On no reasonable ground could it simply tell the subscriber to pay six months in advance.

As I understand it, not everyone was required to pay a deposit security. When I had a telephone installed I was not required to pay six months in advance. The company picks out people and discriminates against poorer people.

The Government has seen fit to amend the Bill. A few moments ago the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) indicated that the Government had somewhat accepted her amendment. It seems to me that in Motion No. 3A the Government has amended the clause to indicate that the company must provide telephones, with some exceptions. One such exception is that, if the commission has not otherwise specified, the company has not received therefor a tender or payment of the lawful rates semi-annually in advance.

Let me translate that legalese. As I understand it, it means that the commission could say that the company cannot charge security deposits. However, if the commission does not say anything, the company can get six months in advance. It is a step forward, but it does not go the whole way. It still allows for the possibility of the commission not saying anything or not adjudicating on the matter, or for the possibility of the commission in fact allowing security deposits. We know what regulatory commissions are; they are sometimes co-opted by regulators.

I prefer Motion No. 5, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, which reads:

> That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 3 to 5 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:
> "(c) a financial guarantee of payment by the customer or a third party or such provisions in respect to advance payments that may be established by the CRTC both of which shall not amount to more than one month's advance payment of the subscriber's normal monthly charge".

I do not even like the notion of one month because it discriminates against consumers. You could argue that there is a trade-off. Bell has to provide the service. It is a monopoly. Bell cannot choose its customers. In certain cases you could let them collect a month in advance.

• (1300)

I would agree to support my own colleague's amendment. I suggest the House support the amendment because then security deposits for telephones will not affect low income Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: There are three questions before the House.

The first question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 1 negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 3A standing in the name of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(5), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 6 and 7 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. Neither the Company nor any affiliate of the company shall directly or"

She said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss Clause 7 which deals with the broadcasting prohibition. As originally constituted, Clause 7 continued a prohibition against Bell from holding any form of broadcasting licence. Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, when this prohibition actually took place. In 1968 Parliament inserted in the Bell Canada Special Act a specific subsection, namely subsection 5(2), which precluded Bell Canada from holding a broadcasting licence as that term is defined in the Broadcasting Act.

Let me remind Hon. Members what a broadcasting licence is. It means a licence to carry on a broadcasting undertaking. A broadcasting undertaking includes a broadcasting transmitting undertaking, that is, television, radio, cable television and pay t.v. It also includes a broadcasting-receiving undertaking, which is cable, as a common carrier and a network operation located in whole or in part within Canada, on a ship, on an aircraft registerd in Canada.

When you look at the definition of a broadcasting undertaking, radio, television, cable et cetera and the network and then you look at broadcasting policy, it talks about undertakings with respect to responsibility for program and program content. There are taxes so that we can now have the kind of Canadian content built into the programming that we want. All of these are included when you look at the very slight number of words recommended for change by the amendment brought by the Government, and subsequently in the reason for my request to strike out lines 6 and 7 on page 3 and substitute:

Neither the Company nor any affiliate of the Company—

Let me explain. First, we are dealing with the reassertion of the right of the CRTC to regulate Bell Canada. Bell Canada at that time was in a sense a holding company. It had a series of corporate empires under its mandate, such as Northern Telecom, Bell Canada Enterprises, Bell Canada International Management Research and Consulting, which sent the team to work in Saudi Arabia, Telesat Canada, Bell-Northern Research, Tele-Direct, Tele-Direct Publications, Bell Communications Systems. Now with the reorganization, Bell Canada becomes just one of a myriad of affiliates to Bell Canada Enterprises. It has very few subsidiaries to which it is responsible.

What has been done with this amendment is to allow the introduction of a potential for Bell Canada to go into competition with the cable industry, the television industry and all the broadcasting industries. The fact that we did not want that in the original concept of the Bell Canada Act was amply demonstrated by our action in 1968. At that time the cable industry saw the threat by Bell to control the local distribution plant. It is just one of the examples of many public policy reasons for inserting that original subsection 5 in the Bell Canada Special Act. These concerns still exist today. Perhaps they are more valid than ever. They are applicable to BCE and its subsidiary companies as they were to Bell Canada.

The Canadian Cable Television Association fears that with this clause as it now stands it could be wiped out by the Bell group. That means concentration of power, Mr. Speaker. It means a diminution of jobs, potential for creativity and the role of small and large business on the part of some of our cable operators. They have expressed their fears to the Minister. I might cite the letter and bring the attention of all Members of this House to what the Canadian Cable and Television Association has had to say.

The CCTA believes that it is very significant that the the CRTC in its April 1983 report to Cabinet on the proposed reorganization of Bell Canada concluded that Bell Canada, and other members of the Bell group, should continue to be prohibited by statute from holding broadcasting licences, including cable television licences. The Commission's rationale for this firm conclusion, which resulted from an exhaustive review of the arguments on both sides of the issue at a lengthy public hearing which preceded the drafting of this report, was a concern over the degree of concentration of control that could potentially arise in the Canadian Broadcasting Industry if subsidiaries of Bell Canada Enterprises were allowed to hold licences. Specifically at page 67 of that report, the Commission found as follows:

At this stage of rapid evolution in the communications industry, the Commission would be concerned with the degree of concentration that could arise in the industry if the Bell group were allowed to enter the broadcasting field. In this regard, it is noteworthy that, in 1982, the size of Bell Canada, as measured by the book value of its telecommunications assets alone, was in excess of $10 billion, compared to assets of approximately $1.2 billion for the entire Canadian private television, radio and cable industries.

The Commission would also be concerned if the Bell group were to enter the cable industry with the conflict of priorities that could arise in the group as between the development of the cable and the development of the telephone distribution systems.

• (1310)

The commission considers that the public interest is best served at this time by the separate and, to some extent, competitive evolution of the cable and telephone distribution as separate entities.

The CCTA is not aware of any compelling new arguments of public policy which were made before the standing committee by representatives of the Bell group of companies which should have resulted in that committee vacating the very specific procompetition recommendations of the CRTC in its report. They are, therefore, very surprised that the Hon. Member had recommended amendment to Clause 7 of the Bill in this way.

I, too, was very surprised when I looked at the results of the amendment of the Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt). As a result, I brought to the attention of the cable industry that any affiliate of Bell, such as a part of Bell Canada Enterprise, could potentially get into the broadcasting field.

The first and most obvious endeavour for any telecommunications company to get into would be cable, given the infrastruture which is already in place. The cable companies may in the future turn to telecommunication companies to provide carrier facilities, especially as the scope of services expands with the advent of new technologies. With the coming of fibreoptics conceivably the rewiring of metropolitan areas will bring about some very significant changes in the kind of services that we are going to have. I think it would bring advantages to both the telecommunication and cable sectors.

The intent behind the revision is to concentrate the power in the hands of a very few people and to dilute the powers of the companies to deal with competition. I do not believe that any company under Bell Canada Enterprises should be allowed to compete in the communications and broadcasting field. Therefore, I urge serious consideration of the amendment which would prevent any part of Bell Canada, Bell Canada Enterprises or its affiliates or subsidiaries, from entering into competition in the telecommunication broadcasting undertaking or broadcasting receiving field.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment very briefly on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), who, as you know, is our consumer critic, and because of an accident, has had to stop temporarily her activities in the House of Commons.

She has asked me to support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who expressed her concern, and I agree, about the excessive concentration that could occur now that Bell Canada Incorporated is apparently being allowed to diversify its activities, which means that in addition to having a monopoly in the telephone sector, it could get involved in cable, television and other related activities in the communications industry.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post (Mr. Côté) recently tabled a Bill that substantially amends the Combines Investigation Act and provides a number of parameters whereby the Government, through a competition tribunal, will be able to judge whether takeovers or mergers involving Canadian companies are in the interest of a competitive market in Canada. Although it is clear that in order to compete on the international market, some Canadian companies must be large and powerful, it does not seem equally clear nor as important for certain companies who are providing services exclusively to Canada consumers to be as large and as powerful.

I think that in the cablevision sector, there are Canadian businesses that are active across the country and provide a satisfactory service to the Canadian public and to Canadian consumers.

I am concerned that a company of the size and strength of Bell Canada Incorporated would be able to use the merger process to get into an import area of communications like television.

I believe that the Parliament of Canada created Bell Canada and gave it a monopoly to ensure that the company would give Canadians one of the best telephone services in the world. And there is no doubt that Bell Canada fulfils that role to perfection, and that over the years, it has been able to provide Canadians with one of the best telephone services the world over. So much so that many other countries have asked Bell Canada to help them, with its technology, to set up similar telephone services. Because of its excellence, Bell Canada has been able to export its technology and know-how to other countries.

However, Mr. Speaker, this monopoly, which is a source of very substantial revenues for this company, should not be allowed in areas other than telephone services. I would be concerned to see a company like Bell Canada, protected by its monopoly, make profits which would be used to acquire unlimited control over related areas in the communications industry. I think this would have the effect of exceeding the general scope of the Act of Parliament that created Bell Canada and gave it its monopoly position.

I therefore support the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and invite my colleagues in the House to do likewise.

[English]

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there are some concerns about this Bill which I wish to express today. They relate mainly to the amendment and the clause concerned. The term "affiliate" is not defined in such a way as to make clear what an affiliate is in the legal sense of the word. There is nothing to say that an affiliate may not be one which, by contractual arrangement, is already doing business with Bell Tel. It is not clear whether the affiliation is by the cross-ownership of stock. It is not clear what constitutes control of an affiliate in any way, shape, or form.

In reality, control is when one owns or votes 50-plus per cent of the shares of the corporation. In other legal documents it is stated that that constitutes control. I suppose that some of the conglomerates and holding companies of the world may consider that they can control a company with 20 per cent ownership of the stock of the company. Within the latitude extended in the definition of that term in this Bill that could constitute control.

Unfortunately, what the word "control" constitutes has not been clearly delineated. For example, Bell Canada owns a block of stock in N.B. Tel which would be deemed by some as exercising control. I do not think that is the case but, nevertheless, it is a possible interpretation. It does not say, for example, that the company must control voting stock to the extent of 50 per cent or more. The definition of "affiliate" is certainly lax and could be interpreted in many ways.

I am also deeply concerned about the fact that this Act enables Bell to intrude itself, by order of the commission, in the operations of companies supported, regulated and in some instances owned by a province. There is very serious concern about whether the commission should be authorized to enter any jurisdiction in which it presently does not operate through control of or affiliation with a service rendered within a provincial framework. The control exercised by the various provinces does not overlap very much with the CRTC. However, there are some points which give the provinces some very serious concern. For example, the method by which cable t.v. licences have been issued under the authority of the CRTC has left some people wondering who knows best about the community in which the service is to be licensed.

I really think it is imperative that this Act be given some further consideration. As well, the various amendments should be given more serious consideration than they have received so far. I hope that the ability of the company to interfere in provincial distribution of telecommunications is not abused, and that the commission itself would not abuse its authority to interject the company into other jurisdictions with respect to telecommunications, cable television or any of the other new technologies devised by science.

These definitions are too lax and I think they should be better explained. The authority of the commission to interject itself into the provincial domain is certainly not approved by many of the provinces and is resented by most of the companies operating under provincial control. It is most unfortunate that this has reached the floor of the House in this form.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion No. 6 negatived.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 8A

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 11

(a) by adding immediately after line 9 at page 4 the following

"(2).1 No person shall directly or indirectly acquire control of the Company without the prior approval of the Commission."

(b) by striking out line 18 at page 4 and substituting the following therefore:

"(1), (2).1 or (3) may be specific or general and".

She said: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear some support from the Government side because there is a very serious and ongoing concern with respect to how Bell Canada Enterprises has managed to manipulate events. By changing its corporate structure it is in a position to avoid any kind of scrutiny by the CRTC. The intent of this Bill is to restore that scrutiny. In that way the subscribers can be assured that the telephone system will remain accessible and affordable, and the people who manage the company will have as their prime concern the interests of telephone subscribers across this land. Given the kind of approach being taken in this Bill, however, I have very serious reservations about whether or not that can come about.

Clause 11 of this Bill as it now stands provides that if Bell Canada Enterprises attempts to sell off more than 20 per cent of the voting shares in Bell Canada, the CRTC then has the right to give or withhold approval of the sale. The intention is really to prevent someone or some corporation acquiring control of Bell Canada without having the CRTC authorize the transaction. I support that intention.

The purpose of my amendment is to ensure that the Bill achieves its professed objective by requiring CRTC approval prior to any takeover of Bell Canada. The Bill the Government is now proposing fails to achieve that objective.

Let me use an example to make the point clear. Let us assume that a brewing company, be it Canadian or American, wanted to buy control of Bell Canada in order to get into the profitable telephone business. There are two ways a brewery could take control. It could approach Bell Canada Enterprises directly and purchase enough shares to acquire control. Since the shares of Bell Canada are not traded on any stock exchange but are held by Bell Canada Enterprises, that is the most direct way to acquire control. Such an attempt would be caught by Clause 11 of this Bill as it now stands and CRTC approval would be required.

The second way they could acquire control of Bell Canada is a much more indirect method, that of attempting to acquire control of Bell Canada Enterprises itself. As ludicrous as it may seem, a corporate takeover attempt involving $1 billion is not unheard of these days. There are those who like to scoff at any suggestion that a huge company like Bell Canada Enterprises could be taken over. Yet there was that article in The Globe and Mail two weeks ago which showed how a group of Canadian stockbrokers were attempting to acquire enough Bell Canada Enterprises shares to control the company. Since those shares are so widely held it may be possible to take control by acquiring only 25 per cent of the outstanding shares. I am not trying to knock the brewing industry. It was used as an example only. I might have saida soft drink company, or any one of any other kinds of corporation, but for our edification let us continue with this brewery company. If it could acquire control of BCE by purchasing enough BCE shares on the stock market the brewery would then be in a position to control Bell Canada itself. Do we really want a brewery to be running a critical utility like Bell Canada? Perhaps yes, perhaps no. We would certainly want the CRTC, the expert in the field, to scrutinize the deal.

If you do not adopt my new amendment to Clause 11(2).1, or if it is not passed, the CRTC will have no right to withhold its approval to the brewery take-over of BCE or to holders of those stocks under McLeod, Young, Weir. Even though the brewery would have acquired the shares, it would in the process have acquired control of Bell Canada. If the Government is really serious about insisting on CRTC approval for anyone who wishes to take control of Bell Canada, then the Government should give full support to my amendment.

My amendment provides that even an indirect attempt to acquire control of Bell Canada would be subject to prior approval. The complaint that we would be interfering in the affairs of that company I do not think is valid, but the interests of the subscribers and of our telephone company would be protected.

There are two areas where I think it is very vital to control not only what happens to Bell Canada shares, but also what happens to Bell Canada Enterprise shares. There too is the potential for take-over and the impact on what is a specially regulated monopoly here in Canada providing an essential service to all Canadians that we want to have accessible and affordable across this land. In no way do we want anyone to jeopardize that kind of service. We are not in the business of deregulating the telephone company. We are not in the business of removing that monopoly. We are in the business of protecting the consumer from any kind of unnecessary interference in their rights as subscribers here in Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the motion of my colleague from Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and take this opportunity to commend the Hon. Member for her outstanding performance during the exhaustive study of this Bill. I think the Hon. Member displayed her deep sense of wisdom and concern throughout all proceedings related to this very important piece of legislation which will have an impact on one of Canada's major corporations, Bell Canada.

Not only did the Hon. Member for Mount Royal take part in the second reading debate on this Bill, but she was also very active in committee where she moved a series of amendments which showed her great interest in this matter as well as her dedication to safeguard the interests of Canada, and more particularly the interests of telephone subscribers and Canadian consumers.

These report stage amendments are quite relevant as well and I hope that when we vote on some of them next week the Government will see fit to accept certain amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal. Indeed the Hon. Member has indicated in her remarks that the situation might become tragic in the future if foreigners were to buy a majority intererest in the Bell Canada parent company and indirectly gain control over this country's telephone system.

In my judgment, this would be most regrettable and go far beyond the intentions of Canadian Parliament which gave Bell Canada a monopoly to be exercised by Canadians and for Canadians.

I think the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has every reason to raise that possibility in the House and to introduce an amendment to shut the door. Her action is quite justified because the Conservative Government has just enacted legislation to dismantle the Foreign Investment Review Agency. As we all know, the Government has thrown Canada's doors wide open to foreign investors. The Government is telling them: Welcome to Canada, come and invest, we will accept you money, no strings attached, no restrictions whatsoever. I suggest this is very risky because foreign investments in this country are no longer scrutinized as they used to be under the legislation enacted by the previous Government to safeguard Canadian interests.

The Conservative Government has rolled out the red carpet for foreign investors or, to put it another way, it does not mind foreigners coming here to take control of companies wholly owned by Canadians. As we know, some of the decisions made in the head offices of multinational corporations are based on rather eccentric considerations. Should most of Bell Canada Enterprises fall into foreign hands, there is no doubt that decisions concerning the quality of Canadian telephone services might very well me made in foreign head offices. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Mount Royal for presenting this amendment which, if it is accepted by the Government, will protect Canadian telephone subscribers against any directive or decision which might be made in a foreign country and have negative repercussions here in Canada.

Bell Canada Act

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moves:

Motion No. 9:

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 11 by striking out line 27 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"of not less than ninety per cent of the total".

She said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this amendment because I think, once again, we are concerned about having some kind of direction with respect to control. When this Bill was first debated there was no control mechanism, there was no indication whatsoever as to whether anybody had the right to purchase shares, to what degree they would be entitled to purchase shares, or whether such a purchase would be subject to what was the old FIRA, now the new Investment Canada process. There were no directives. I spoke to that issue. I have submitted an amendment, and I think it is vitally important that we look at the amendment. I must say the Government adopted 80 per cent instead of 90 per cent of what I had recommended.

What we were trying to achieve with this clause was protection of Bell Telephone Company, and its subscribers in this instance, from foreign ownership. I want it to be clearly understood that my concern is not one which would reflect any negative attitude toward Bell Canada Enterprises. We can be very proud of the fine achievements of that corporation. It is Canada's largest corporation and the first Canadian company to clear an annual profit of $1 billion, which I think is very exciting. It has been innovative, creative and has demonstrated leadership through fine management.

That is why we do not want to dilute what originally brought Bell Canada Enterprises to the point at which it is today.

Bell Canada, its predecessor, was able to provide the kind of necessary financial base, with $765 million to $800 million profit per year. This allowed Bell Canada Enterprises to take leadership when it became a financial corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act and to be effective in its movement.

At the same time, the concern remains that as "Ma Bell" gave birth to Bell Canada Enterprises and nourished it on the milk from the subscribers, the subscribers should not be put in jeopardy. That is what we have been addressing in the revisions to this Bill and that is what the CTRC right to investigation, right to interest and right to control imply.

Bell Canada Enterprises has many interests. It has a multinational subsidiary that is involved in oil exploration, a retail chain of computer shops, it is involved in major pipeline transportation of Alberta natural gas to eastern Canada. It owns many office buildings in major cities and it prints banknotes. It carries on many activities for its 345,000 shareholders.

We are opposed to allowing the sale of 20 per cent of Bell Canada without CRTC approval. Anyone who acquires 20 per cent of Bell Canada, would be in a position to exert tremendous influence on the operations of the telephone company. I suggest that Canadians would not want a foreign company to control up to 20 per cent of Bell Canada without at least a review by the CRTC. If this existed, could our telephone operations be in jeopardy with 20 per cent foreign ownership? Foreign ownership may affect subscribers' rates because 20 per cent ownership of the shares in some companies today is enough to take control of the company.

We must ensure that if a foreign company owns a percentage of Bell Canada it cannot eventually take it over against our best interests.

Canadians presently own 98 per cent. We have recommended 90 per cent control, so that after the sale of 10 per cent of the shares, the CRTC would be allowed to scrutinize the transaction.

We continue to recommend the 90 per cent ownership for a number of reasons. First, other legislation such as the Bank Act applies this 10 per cent figure and does not allow for more than 10 per cent foreign ownership of the banks in Canada. If 10 per cent is the limit for the Canadian chartered banks, should it not be the same for our telecommunications industry?

Second, 10 per cent is a large shareholding and should at least attract CRTC scrutiny. This does not mean that we want the CRTC to block every sale, but it should, as a representative of the public, have the right to scrutinize and protest, then to nullify if the ownership goes beyond 10 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 39 at page 4 the following:

"(2) The CRTC may, of its own motion or on any matter before the Commission, examine the dividends paid, or proposed to be paid, by Bell Canada to Bell Canada Enterprises, as well as any loans, royalties, contracts, management fees, or other inter-corporate transactions and, if the Commission finds that any of these has resulted in, or is likely to result in, rates to customers of Bell Canada which are not reasonable and just, the Commission may set aside such transaction in whole or in part and may make such other order as it deems necessary to compensate or protect customers of Bell Canada."

She said: Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about the impact that Clause 12 will have on the subscribers. Clause 12, a key clause of the Bill, provides for access to information so that the CRTC can make an intelligent judgment on the rates that it will have to charge with respect to the company. This is a key amendment to the Bill because the commission cannot be expected to make an enlightened decision if it does not have the information in the proper form that it requires.

This clause was the subject of a great deal of discussion during the investigative period between 1983 and 1984. The CRTC has said that lack of access to information on the new corporate organization, Bell Canada Enterprises, impairs the ability of the Commission to carry out its mandate and ensure that inter-corporate transactions do not have a negative impact on Bell Canada, which would then have an impact on subscribers' rates and the increases.

While Bell Canada Enterprises and Bell Canada do not particularly support my amendment, I believe it is in the best interests of the subscribers and the consumers, who include Canadians at all levels. Bell Canada's assurances that this would not impair the commission's control over the regulated company's telephone rates are based only on the CRTC's ability to examine transactions between the company and its subsidiaries as well as dealings with corporations outside of the Bell group.

The NAPO group is very concerned about this transaction. The commission's basic power would be eroded if it could not investigate fully and make an informed decision on the basis of organized information.

It is difficult for us to imagine that Bell Canada Enterprises would not co-operate with its subsidiaries or affiliates that do business with Bell Canada. Bell Canada is one of the finest affiliates in Bell Canada Enterprises' list of companies. Therefore, one would expect that we would send Bell Canada's experts to Saudi Arabia and eventually to Japan and China to set up a telephone system. We will want to send it through our Bell Canada, one of the finest of the affiliates found in the Bell Canada Enterprises list of companies.

• (1350)

BCE should be obliged to report to CRTC the nature of the expertise that it was able to send, and be proud of it. What was the charge for BCE to take that expertise from Bell Canada? Was it a fair rate? Will the subscriber be supporting an affiliate of Bell Canada Enterprises or will the subscriber get the benefit of a proper income as paid for by the rate that would be charged for the expertise that has been rented, in a sense, from our Ma Bell, of which we continue to be very proud? So the question here concerns access to information, organized information, and the right to that information by law, not sous-entendu, but clearly defined in the Bill. That is the purpose of the amendment. It is so that there will never be any question and the law shall stand clear. We shall not have to go before the courts and let the courts rule. Let the law of the land be clear, and this is in the interest of all sectors of our society. It will protect Bell Canada Enterprises from being considered unruly or unco-operative in the eyes of the CRTC. It will allow the CRTC access to proper information so it can set reasonable rates for all of us, as subscribers and as users of this service. It will allow us, as subscribers, to be relaxed and to appreciate that our rights under the law have not been eroded because Bell Canada was allowed to reorganize, no longer as a special Act of Parliament, but, rather, under the Business Corporations Act.

So let us protect our interests in the best of all worlds and organize and arrange for the kind of information that is needed in the best interests of all. I would strongly urge the Government to consider the amendment and to accept it, in the interests of all consumers, the subscribers to Ma Bell of Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I would like to express my support for the motion by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), and recall the purpose of this amendment and put it in its true context.

The House will recall that in April 1982, when it received a certificate pursuant to the Canada Business Corporations Act, Bell Canada became subject to the same jurisdiction as any other commercial, federally incorporated corporation.

On June 23, 1982, following this first step by Bell in April 1982, the company announced its reorganization under the parent company, Bell Canada Enterprises Incorporated, 1982-83. In reacting to this decision by Bell Canada, the CRTC, the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, with its mandate to monitor and to a certain extent regulate Bell Canada, immediately examined this change under to the Canada Business Corporations Act, the potential impact of Bell Canada's reorganization on Bell subscribers and, finally, the CRTC's capacity to regulate Bell Canada's telecommunications services from now on.

Following the study and the CRTC's conclusions, the then Minister of Communications, the Hon. Francis Fox, tabled a Bill restoring the regulatory powers the CRTC was afraid it had lost as a result of Bell Canada's reorganization. On December 20, 1984, the present Minister of Communications introduced Bill C-19 now under consideration, which is nearly identical to the bill prepared by the fomer Government and introduced in February 1984 by the Hon. Mr. Fox.

Our colleague for Mount Royal has introduced an amendment to strengthen the power of the CRTC to do its job properly. Both the former Government and this one have recognized that the CRTC has a regulatory mandate over Bell Canada and must continue to fulfill this mandate even though Bell has decided to reorganize and to give its parent company, Bell Canada Enterprises, a much wider field of activity than in the past.

We have no objection if Bell Canada, which has been extraordinarily successful both in Canada and abroad, wants to take up new challenges and to expand as much as it would like internationally, and even domestically in some cases.

However, we believe that, in the interests of Canadian consumers and with a view to ensure that telephone users in Canada are fully protected and do not pay the price of the diversification of the parent company, the CRTC has to see to it that the international relations of the Bell Canada telephone company and the holding company, Bell Canada Enterprises, are not to the disadvantage of Canadian consumers.

This is why this amendment seems so important to us and we therefore recommend that the House agree to it.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Motion No. 10, which would provide an extension of power to the CRTC to examine the dividends paid or proposed to be paid by Bell Canada to the holding company, Bell Canada Enterprises. It could also include an examination of the loans, royalties, contracts, management fees or other inter-corporate transactions that might occur between Bell Canada and Bell Canada Enterprises. I think that this is a very necessary kind of power for the CRTC.

During the hearings into the Bill, it was pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), that there had been interventions by the Consumers Association of Canada, which had argued at one point that consumers were not receiving compensation or recognition for the capital gain that had accrued to the equipment of Bell Canda. The capital gain was being considered as a cost. Therefore, consumers were paying a much higher cost for the services provided by that equipment. Apparently the CRTC had no legislated authority to take that into account, at least the commission did not think it did. I am assuming that this amendment would give the commission that sort of power; that is, to consider whether items such as capital gains should be considered and whether consumers should be required to pay the costs of the book value of that capital gain in the fees which they pay. This could be a substantive amount of money.

• (1400)

The Consumers Association of Canada noted that the value of Bell's investments had quadrupled from an historic cost of some $440 million. In its judgment the Consumers Association of Canada assumed that at least $200 million of that capital gain should somehow accrue to the consumers since in effect they had carried the paying-off of the original $440 million and the shareholders of Bell Canada would accummulate four times that. The Consumers Association argued, and I think quite rightly, that the consumers should have had some small share in that capital gain, the investment of which they had helped pay for through user fees. An amendment such as this would take into account what the final fee payable by consumers ought to be, whether it is in the form of transfers out of Bell Canada into a holding company, by way of direct payment in dividends or royalty payments, or whether it is just more hidden costs. The fairly rapid increase in capital gains during the period of inflation which we went through during the past couple of decades accounted for some of those hidden costs. In our judgment the CRTC should be permitted to take that into account when it is readying itself to set rates.

In conclusion, I wish to point out that we think that this extended power should be available to the CRTC in order that items such as those raised by the Consumers Association of Canada and by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) can be considered and used in reducing the rates consumers have to pay as a result of a slight change in bookkeeping.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCuish): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCuish): The question is on Motion No. 10 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCuish): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCuish): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCuish): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCuish): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Vic Althouse (for Mr. Orlikow) moved:

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 13 by striking out lines 25 to 43 at page 5.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 13 by striking out lines 30 and 31 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"satisfied that such action would constitute the only practical and effective means of achieving".

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion placed on the Order Paper by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), which has the effect of deleting subsection (2) of Clause 13 from the Bill. The reason my colleague has moved this motion goes back to the fact that he is a westerner. All of us from the West have dealt at some length with Canadian Pacific Railway. It has played an important part in our history, just as Bell Canada has played an important part in our history. Some time ago the CPR used a divestiture procedure, which we now see being used by Bell Canada in this Bill, whereby the public service aspects of its charter of business are being set aside into separate companies. Thus when there is difficulty showing a profit, because it is so necessary to the good order and economic climate of the country, it can go to the Government and obtain subsidies to keep it going. We watched that happen with certain aspects of the railway operation, while other aspects of CP Holdings which had been more up to date and more profitable were allowed to go into separate companies which, in effect, were not required to cross subsidize the loss of the railway operation. We think that is what is happening with this reorganization of Bell Canada.

Bell Canada Enterprises, the holding company, will continue to be a very profitable operation. Bell Canada is still a profitable operation, but it is dependent upon the CRTC for those profits and for the amount of revenue that the CRTC grants the monopoly that Bell Canada holds in those areas in which it operates. We think that by taking away this particular clause the consumers of Canada will find themselves in a somewhat better position.

We are also concerned about the workers currently employed by Bell Canada. This particular clause, if left in, will provide for the type of activity that we now see in the United States under the so-called Reagan labour legislation. Under that legislation, if a company thinks it is having difficulty in making adequate profits, it can very simply and quickly apply to the courts to be restructured under another corporate entity, thus invalidating all contracts with unionized workers.

This point was made by the workers when they were discussing this part of Bill C-19. They pointed out something which I think should be read into the record in order that all Members of the House can hear it. They said:

We think that if the CRTC were to proceed with this, it could have a negative effect on the working conditions of our members, their job security, and their right to collective bargaining. We also feel that this provision could be very bad for subscribers in general, in terms of duplication of services, inefficient use of resources, and the repair, upkeep and administration problems that would certainly result in increased costs to consumers—it costs between $30 million and $40 million to set up an independent subsidiary to provide multi-line or data services, and that since the income generated by those activities would no longer have to be integrated into Bell Canada's revenue base, rate increases could result.

• (1410)

The spokespeople for the workers went on to say:

Finally, we believe that section 13(2) is superfluous, because the purpose of the bill, which is deregulation, could be achieved by implementing section 14.5(1) of Bill C-20 and by introducing an adequate cost allocation mechanism.

We would argue that because this activity was taken care of adequately in Bill C-20, there is no necessity for keeping it in this particular Bill, Bill C-19. Therefore, we are moving that it be deleted from the Bill.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, before starting debate on the content of this clause, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that Bill C-19 is an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada. And I hope that, if at any given time, there should be a decision to deregulate or make any other changes, and Bell Canada is being considered, this is not done by an order in council but by an Act of Parliament, here on the floor of the House, and not by an order made behind the scenes.

[English]

Having said that, I am really very concerned since this is the last of the amendments we will be debating. I bring to the attention of the House the fact that Bell Canada, Ma Bell, was established as a telephone company by a special Act of Parliament. I hope the time will never come that it will be deregulated, split into little tiny pieces and become a fond memory through regulation, through an Order in Council or by a government directive. Should any major change ever take place to Ma Bell, it should be done on the floor of the House of Commons with open debate.

Having said that, I would like to speak to this amendment. Clause 13(1) ensures that a telecommunication activity of a Bell Canada affiliate cannot become dominant in its market without attracting regulation. Clause 13(2) provides that the CRTC have a means to prevent Bell from engaging in unfair competition by having the CRTC order the divestiture of the competitive activity.

My following proposed amendment does not change the basic intent of this clause but it does introduce more precision regarding what types of activities may be ordered to be undertaken by the company and under what circumstances the commission may order the power. I think one of the things that is lacking all the way through the Bill is fine precision. It needed a fine tuning and it did not get as much fine tuning as it should have gotten. It was originally presented by Mr. Fox, the former Minister, and he recognized that it was a good Bill but needed fine tuning. Unfortunately, we have diluted the Bill.

The amendment I had proposed is that the commission may use the power as follows:

Where on any matter before the Commission or of its own motion, the Commission determines as a question of fact that an activity of the Company is a competitive activity, the Commission may, where it is satisfied that such action would constitute the only practical and effective means of achieving—

I may have added only a tiny little word, but it makes a very important difference to subscribers.

The divestiture order is a device which the Federal Communications Commission has employed with success in the United States in an effort to limit the market power of the dominant carrier, AT&T, and foster the development of a more competitive environment. Chaos was the result. It would, however, remain open in this instance to Bell Canada to engage in such activities in Canada through a separate subsidiary.

The stifling effect that a dominant carrier such as Bell Canada can have on the growth of competition is a product not merely of its size but also of its monopoly control of basic telephone services. Access to revenues generated by monopoly services creates the distinct danger that these revenues will be used to subsidize competitive activities regardless of any structural separation ordered by the CRTC, to the detriment of competitors which have no monopoly revenue to draw upon and all at the expense of the telephone subscribers. This scenario is a very unfair one. It is unfair to the subscribers, particularly since the subscribers may never have the opportunity to defend themselves.

In response to questions about some of the arguments presented by the Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Bell Canada Enterprises to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, which can be found in the minutes of proceedings and evidence of December 17, 1985, the Chairman maintained that the corporate reorganization which created Bell Canada Enterprises has not changed Bell Canada as a regulated monopoly one iota, to use his words. However, the creation of a parent which has absorbed all equity and controls the capital flow to the subsidiary clearly has an impact. This is obviously the case when the parent maintains that it is and should continue to be unregulated.

With the regulated telephone company and the unregulated parent, there is a potential conflict of interest as to where and when there should be upgrading or concerted interest in Bell Canada Telephone as compared to all the other industries in which it is involved. I am concerned that when the parent company maintains that it is and should continue to be unregulated, profits from the subsidiaries and particularly Northern Telecom and Bell Northern Research, as well as research and development done by Bell Northern Research, no longer go to Bell Canada and therefore go to the subscriber or action holder.

In his presentation, the Chairman argued two major points. First, he argued that the Bill needlessly impedes BCE's competitive activities and, second, that it is not consistent with the current Government's deregulation policy. Referring to the second point, there has been no government policy to the effect that deregulation of a telephone communications monopoly is either necessary or desirable in Canada.

The situation regarding telecommunications is clearly different from that regarding airlines. The airlines have never constituted a natural monopoly. Deregulation of air travel has been beneficial to consumers in the United States. That may be so, but the same cannot be said for the telecommunications industry in the United States. No analogy can be made with deregulation of the other communications industries. Any policy decision to deregulate telcommunications would require extensive consultation and hearings and could not be accomplished through the simple technique of corporate reorganization.

Mr. deGranpré bases a great deal of his objection to Bill C-19 on an alleged impediment to international competition. He feels that Clauses 12 and 13 could threaten potential international investors. He argues that Clause 12 will scare off investors who do not want business information divulged to a regulatory commission. In response to questions put by members of the committee, Mr. deGranpré admitted that any time Bell requested that the CRTC regard information as confidential, it had been so safeguarded. This was confirmed in the evidence of Mr. Bureau, Chairman of the CRTC.

Mr. deGranpré argued that Clauses 13(1) and 13(2) could impede BCE's competitive position. It does not seem to have done so as it has had the most incredible financial results this past year. He argued that investors would be afraid to invest in a company which might subsequently be regulated. He bases this allegation on the suggestion that the CRTC would act to take companies in and out of a regulated regime based upon profitability. The profitability of the companies in question is not the test. The test set forth in Clause 13 is whether or not the company is subject to a degree of competition which, in the view of the commission, is sufficient to ensure just and reasonable rates. A decision based upon the profitability of the company would be a bad faith decision and reviewable. As Mr. Bureau has testified, Clause 13 acts as a check on the cross-subsidization of international and non-regulated investment by the regulated portion of the BCE empire.

It is for these reasons that I have submitted my amendments and hope that the Government will vote in favour of them, in the interests of subscribers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is on Motion No. 12 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 13 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I heard Your Honour mention my name as the seconder of the motion. Since it must be clear that I have a conflict of interest in the particular Bill, I cannot second the motion. It would put me in a potential conflict of interest situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Chair will take a moment to seek some clarification on the matter.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am sure everyone wants to proceed rapidly, so I am sure that if Your Honour were to seek unanimous consent to revert, you would find another seconder. That may help the Chair and the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme)—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I will second the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) will second the motion, and I declare the motion lost.

Motion No. 13 negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): As was stated by the occupant of the chair when he gave rulings on the motions before the House, at this time the Chair is ready to hear Hon. Members present procedural arguments on Motions Nos. 7 and 11, if there are any.

I presume there is no argument. They have been declared out of order and therefore remain so.

[Translation]

At this point, the House would normally proceed with the deferred recorded division on the report stage of the Bill now before the House. However, pursuant to Standing Order 13(3), the recorded division is deferred until Wednesday, June 25, 1986 at 6 p.m.

MARINE ATLANTIC INC. ACQUISITION AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski (Vegreville) that Bill C-88, an Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity, at the third reading stage of this Bill, to state on behalf of the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, that we support Bill C-88 and will vote for this legislation which provides for changing the name of CN Marine, which for all practical purposes is already a Crown Corporation controlled by Canadian National, and making it a separate and distinct Crown Corporation, from now on to be referred to as Marine Atlantic Inc.

The announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to this effect has been favourably received by all concerned, and my colleagues from the Maritimes, who have had a chance to express their views in this respect, have emphasized the the new corporation's potential for developing the tourist industry and the economy of the Atlantic region.

The ferry services provided by Marine Atlantic for the people of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island are very important, in any case, because they provide vital links to all parts of Canada. And we know how important marine transportation can be for the development of these two provinces.

We also know that Nova Scotia is linked to the United States through maritime transport services provided by this company. When company officials appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport last week Liberal Party Members asked the management to make sure that in the future the service is regular, reliable and geared to the economic development of all Maritime provinces.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we support this Bill and that we have no objection to its speedy adoption.

Before resuming my seat, however, I cannot help recalling that, when the company bought a boat, the Conservative Government made strong representations to the company which was awarded the contract—namely the maritime company Versatile Davie Shipyard which operates the Lauzon shipyards—and asked company President Pierre-Paul Saunders to promise that, in exchange for this contract awarded to the Lauzon shipyards, he would rationalize his shipyard operations in the province of Quebec.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know that Versatile Vickers has two shipyards, one in Lauzon, the other in Montreal East. In all decency, how can the president of a company which operates two shipyards in this province be told to rationalize his operations, or else his contract will be cancelled?

I asked this question to the president of Marine Atlantic Inc. when he appeared before the transport committee: Were you party to this underhanded deal? And the President assured me that had not. As far as he was concerned, all he was interested in was to have a ferryboat similar to the Caribou, a second Caribou, which would make it possible for his company to provide a proper service.

I feel the Government has acted unfairly by taking advantage of Marine Atlantic's need for a ferryboat and to use this contract to exert undue pressures on Versatile managers to cause them to choose between their operations in Montreal and in Lauzon.

It is clear that the Conservative Government is not interested in fulfilling the promises which the previous Government had made to the shipyard workers in Montreal East. I find this totally indecent and I could not help mention it when dealing with this bill to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. or rather to make it a Crown corporation totally independent from the parent corporation, the Canadian National Railway Company.

I know that shipyard workers in both Montreal and Sorel are quite concerned about these secret manoeuvres of the Conservative Government to impose the rationalisation of operations in Quebec, which will probably result in the closing of one or two Quebec shipyards.

I denounce such an attitude. I find it shameful and the Conservative Government should never in the future use the contracts granted through Crown corporations to lay off workers, and the term is not an exageration, since this is what it has done in the case of the Quebec shipyard workers. This is what the Conservative Government is trying to do in an underhanded way and this is what I denounce even though I support Bill C-88.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to support my colleague who is, with me, a spokesman for my Party on transportation. His responsibility is marine and the St. Lawrence Seaway. I carefully read his speech at second reading. It was magnificent.

Mr. Forrestall: Thank you very much.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I am talking about the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), not a Member from Halifax.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: It is tough to know where to begin. This is a Bill to which we have no objection in principle because it maintains a publicly owned public utility to provide ferry services in Atlantic Canada. We support that principle and always have.

There are, however, a number of things that bother us about Governments, both Liberal and Tory, that do things they do not really believe in. If they thought for one moment they could have their private enterprise friends buying this out or owning and operating it and making a buck, they would drop it tomorrow. Of course, the principle of what is an essential public service, in fact, a public utility whether roads and highways, sewer and water systems, ferry services, telephone lines, power lines and what-not which are natural monopolies, have to be publicly owned, publicly controlled and answerable to the public. Any other method has always failed. I am reminded of the time when Americans decided to privatize the telephone industry in the United States—we were dealing with the Bill concerning Bell and telephones earlier today—but I was in California and was trying to make a phone call from the airport in Los Angeles to Calgary. There were the usual circular telephone booths but I could not get anybody. I tried all five phones because there were five different phone companies. I could not get anyone to accept my international telephone credit card. So much for competition and so much for the essential public utility. I finally had to phone home to my daughter collect, which reminds me I have not yet paid her for that phone call.

The principle of a transportation facility being available to users no matter where they live in Canada has to be maintained. We must not continue as we have too often in the past and as we are proceeding to do more so now, namely to discriminate against people because of where they happen to live, where they happen to manufacture and produce their goods.

My Party has maintained for many years that ferry services should be treated exactly the same as our highway services, that they be toll free. Can you imagine the furore if you were to put up a road block on Highway 401 between Toronto and Montreal and for 18 or 20 miles which would be the equivalent between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick stopped every vehicle and made them pay a toll?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Nine miles.

Mr. Benjamin: Nine miles, fine. Put up road blocks nine miles apart and charge tolls to go the next nine miles. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what the furore would be? What about the same thing on the Trans-Canada Highway between Regina and Moose Jaw or anywhere else you want to pick? Ferry services on the West Coast, the East Coast or wherever we operate them are an essential public service, are part of our national transportation system and are part of our national highway system and part of our Trans-Canada Highway. To charge extra because you have to travel from New Brunswick to Prince Edward Island or from Nova Scotia to Newfoundland means that you would charge extra to travel from Alberta to Saskatchewan and Saskatchewan to Manitoba. There is no logic, no fairness, and no sense in charging people an extra cost, people who live on islands off our Atlantic Coast, off our West Coast or who live in coastal ports that have no other service. They, like all the rest of us, pay though their income taxes, their gasoline taxes, their licence fees, their sales taxes, federal, provincial and municipal, for the cost of maintaining and operating transportation networks, be they roads, streets, sidewalks, railways, or highways. We believe that a ferry service is no different. We think it is logical for the nation as a whole to share the cost of the provision of those services. If we were to implement cost recovery or user-pay principles with the ferry service in Atlantic Canada, it would only be fair to do the same with many other things in Canada.

• (1440)

The Government has been talking about charging fees for ice-breaking, meteorological services, navigational aids, Coast Guard services and search and rescue. I suppose if there is a guy drowning in the middle of the ocean, before you pick him up out of the water you have to ask him if he can pay the fee, and if he cannot, you leave him there.

The point is that the minute you start imposing user fees, you discriminate against some people. The people who have to use the ferry service in the Atlantic provinces are being taxed at least twice and perhaps more. They pay provincial and federal taxes like everyone else in Canada and then have to pay a second time. If that is not double taxation, I have never seen it. That is not fair or proper. It is a principle of co-operative federalism that the nation as a whole shares in the cost of transportation in order that we are all treated the same and no one is discriminated against because of where they happen to live or produce their goods.

Canadian National Steamships operated with a fair number of vessels before it was made into CN Marine and broke away from Canadian National Railways. It is now being made into Marine Atlantic Inc. It is nice to do this on paper as we are legalizing what the Government started doing several years ago.

I would like to draw your attention to an episode which has been ongoing since 1962. At that time Canadian National Steamships sold one or more ships to the Government of Cuba. In 1962, that Government made its final payment of $400,000. It was sent through the Chase Manhattan National Bank in New York. The parties to the agreement lived up to it completely. The Cubans made their final payment of $400,000 a little ahead of time, but the American Government froze the assets of the Government of Cuba. Since 1962, that $400,000 has increasd to over $1 million with accrued interest.

Canadian National and the Department of External Affairs has been having difficulty for 24 years with this $400,000. The Cubans paid their bill on time and lived up to their obligation. Canadian National met its side of the deal, but the Americans are holding our money. If the Americans were going to make a gesture in the course of the free trade negotiations which would help out Marine Atlantic Inc., they could release those funds with the accrued interest and that would settle a sore point.

With regard to the attempts at cost recovery and reducing the deficit, when the Minister introduced the Bill he said that he expects that in its new character Marine Atlantic Inc. will operate more efficiently and at lower cost to the Government. That means higher fees for the users. In order to be logical you would have to charge fees like this in many other areas. People in the Atlantic provinces have to use the ferry services. They have no other choice.

If it is logical to increase user fees and implement cost recovery there, it would be logical to charge extra for snow removal. I can just visualize two extra guys on the snow removal crew. They would run from door to door on each side of the street charging a fee for snow removal. If someone did not pay, they would lift the blade of the snow-plough for the width of his lot and then continue to remove the snow from the rest of the street.

Cost recovery means higher costs for the people in Atlantic provinces. Those services should be toll free or, at the worst, only a nominal toll should be charged. The costs of implementing cost recovery often result in the exercise being self-defeating. In an essential service such as this, that should never enter the picture. If the subsidy has to be $300 million instead of $50 million, so be it. I have yet to hear a word of complaint from any taxpayer on the Prairies. I wonder if my hon. friend, the Member for Red Dear (Mr. Towers), has ever heard a complaint about the subsidy for ferry services in Atlantic Canada. I think that most Canadians are quite willing to share in the cost of transportation services across Canada. If I, as a resident of Saskatchewan, had the opportunity to take the ferry to Newfoundland only once in 10 years, I would be happy that it was there. When you see a family having to part with $20, $30, or $40 to make a necessary trip between those islands, and it is the only way they have of doing it, surely that is some kind of coercion or blackmail. It is certainly discrimination because of where they happen to live. If you were to shut down the Trans-Canada Highway between Regina and Moose Jaw or Red Deer and Calgary and make people pay $20 to travel the next 20 miles, can you imagine the uproar? Therefore, this is just not logical, proper or fair.

We have no objection to the Government giving a Crown corporation a new name. We support it in principle. We think private enterprise has no damn business in that kind of enterprise. The people of Canada as a whole should share in the cost of operating it. I hope, Sir, that the Government will keep that in mind and stop fretting about reducing the subsidy it has to pay. The concern of the Government has to be that Marine Atlantic provide the best and safest possible service it can. It is a service to all of Canada and it shows the people in one region that they are part of Confederation and that the Government will work towards both increasing the subsidy and reducing the tolls and fees charged for the service. We hope that will happen when this legislation is in place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question is as follows: Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Transport), supported by Mr. Bissonnette, moved that Bill C-88, an Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto, be read the third time and do pass.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

FARM DEBT REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-117, an Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, because of the urgency of this legislation I seek the co-operation of my colleagues in the two opposition Parties. I would be quite happy to forgo my speech at second reading and move directly to Committee of the Whole. We had a number of discussions about certain aspects of this legislation and, earlier this afternoon, with respect to some amendments put forward by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). According to the advice I have from the Table officers, most of those amendments, if not all, are in order. I am not suggesting that we would accept all of them, but there are three amendments which seem to be quite acceptable. I have not had an opportunity as yet to study in detail one of the two amendments put forward by the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), the official spokesperson in this area for the NDP. Perhaps later this afternoon I will have that opportunity.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we are willing to move to Committee of the Whole. We have a number of points we want to make but we can do it then. This matter is of urgent importance to the farmers of Canada, so we will agree.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, because a number of amendments have been proposed for Committee of the Whole, we can forgo second reading speeches. We have some grave reservations about this legislation, which we hope to correct partially through amendments.

The basic thrust of the Bill is less than adequate right now, but we hope to make some improvements through amendments which would permit the farm organizations, the provinces, the lenders, and the users of this legislation to take advantage of a review process to begin sometime during the winter. The Government has chosen to bring this legislation forward in such a short period of time that we hope it will see fit to adopt the amendments I have proposed which would permit a sort of review after the fact. Witnesses could then be heard and could make presentations designed to improve and strengthen the Bill, at a later date. I am assuming we will have approval from the Government and I will therefore go with that understanding into Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Charest in the Chair.

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the co-operation which has been extended to me by both the Hon. Member for Algoma and the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre. I think it would be helpful at this time if I took a few moments to give the House a brief explanation of the details of Bill C-117.

The Farm Debt Review Act comes before this House at a very difficult time in Canada's farm industry. I regret to say that Canadian farmers are faced with some of the toughest times in the last 50 years. Many of our farm families have endured great hardships and personal loss, and many more continue to struggle.

I know that every Member of this House, without exception, would prefer that there be no need to introduce legislation of this kind. All of us, and certainly I personally, would prefer a situation where every producer in this country was operating profitably, and was operating a very strong and viable operation in the country, regardless of province or region.

As I know, and as all Members of the House know, this is just simply not the case. This responsible piece of legislation addresses the reality of the situation. How did our farm community get into these difficulties? There were a number of contributing factors. We know, for instance, that many farmers, particularly young farmers in this country, borrowed to expand their operation during the 1970s. They did so with the expectation that world demand for their products would increase and that, indeed, prices would continue to rise. Those predictions, unfortunately, proved wrong.

Many of the farmers who expanded rapidly during the 1970s now find themselves in trouble. Some producers are also victims of interest rates that skyrocketed in the early 1980s from a level of 10 per cent to a high of some 24 per cent. Of course, since September, 1984, when this Government took office, interest rates have taken a net drop of nearly four percentage points. This represents an annual saving to the farm community of roughly $500 million. Regrettably, high credit costs in earlier years inflicted very deep wounds. Many farmers have not recovered. Low world prices for many agricultural commodities are also taking a toll on farmers. These problems must be resolved in the international forum. Indeed, this Governemnt is pursuing every possible opportunity to represent the interests of Canadian farmers in this regard.

So a number of factors, both past and present, have contributed to a situation in this country where far too many farmers are on the brink of insolvency. The Act before us today is aimed at helping as many of these farmers as possible to remain in business.

This program has been in the works for a number of months. During that time I have taken the opportunity to consult farm groups and the provinces. The process, of course, took a little while. The result is, I believe, a piece of legislation that will serve the farm community well.

Our intention is to provide for the establishment of at least one farm debt review board in each of the provinces. However, the Act is written so that if more boards are required in any province the legislation will allow that to take place.

In provinces where a provincial review process is in place, or may be put into place, our boards may serve as a second option for farmers. Saskatchewan, for example, has a very successful process, and we will begin immediate discussions with that province to ensure that farmers have an opportunity to have their cases reviewed and handled in a most effective manner.

Before foreclosure action against a farmer can be initiated, the Farm Debt Review Act requires that secured creditors give five days' notice to the farm family of their right to appeal to the Farm Debt Review Board.

As I indicated earlier I have reviewed an amendment put forth by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I think the Hon. Member's amendment requests a 15-day provision rather than a five-day provision. The examples he has given to me seem, in my opinion at this point in time, to make sense. I would like to serve notice at this particular time that, barring any unforeseen legalities that I might be informed of after I complete my speech, we are quite prepared to accept that particular amendment.

A farmer who is insolvent can make application to the board. Immediately a 30-day stay of proceedings against all creditors will take effect, thus preventing any foreclosure. The legislation also provides for extensions of the stay for two additional 30-day periods should they prove necessary.

That brings us to another point. I believe the Hon. Member for Algoma has another amendment requesting that additional 30-day periods be allowed. It appears that it is somewhat open ended, but it is my understanding that the Saskatchewan project does provide for a period of time up to, I believe, 120 days. If the Hon. Member would revise one of his amendments requesting an additional 30-day period, and if he is satisfied that that additional 30-day period would mean a total period of time of 120 days then, again, Mr. Chairman, that would appear quite acceptable to me given the same conditions that I attached to the other amendment.

The chairperson of the board will establish a three-member local review panel to be chaired by a board member. We believe the best people to make the review process work are farmers' own peers. That is why the board and the panels will include people from the agri-business sector, farmers and farm management specialists. The board will also hire a field staff person to visit the farm, to make an independent assessment of the operation, to talk with the farm family and the creditors and report back to the panel. This staff person will be a peer, perhaps a retired farmer who is knowledgeable about farming and farm finance management. The panel and any experts hired by the panel will make every effort to facilitate meaningful arrangements between the farmers and their creditors. Any negotiated settlement becomes legally binding.

Not every situation is going to be resolved by this process, however, I am confident that many farmers facing insolvency can be helped. In fact, during the next two years, anywhere from 4,000 to 8,000 farmers who are in financial difficulties could benefit from the review board process.

In addition to those facing foreclosure, farm families who feel they can benefit from a review of their operation can also apply to the board. Under this process, in which no stay of proceedings will be issued, the panels will provide advice and will attempt to arrive at arrangements between farmers and their creditors to prevent deterioration of the farmer's financial position.

Members of this House will know that in September of last year I placed a moratorium on all Farm Credit Corporation foreclosure actions. I want to assure all producers affected by the moratorium that it will remain in effect, not only until these review panels and boards are in place, but also until the rural transition program is up and it is operating. I expect the details of this program to be announced very shortly. The Farm Credit Corporation will have funds to participate in a meaningful way in the farm debt process. This means that the cost of settlements negotiated by the Farm Credit Corporation through the review board process will not be passed on to other FCC borrowers in the form of higher interest rates.

Mr. Chairman, I have spelled out exactly how the farm debt review process will work, and now I am speaking on behalf of the thousands of producers who can benefit from this program; it needs the timely support of all members of this House.

Time is the key now, a process must be put into place as soon as possible. With the co-operation of all Members I am confident that the Farm Debt Review Boards can be in place within a month of the passage of this legislation. The majority of farm groups in provinces I have consulted with tell me that they want this legislation and they want it to have teeth. They do not want us, at this point in time, at least, to extend the authority of mandatory settlements. However, at least for the time being, they do not want us to extend the authority of mandatory settlements.

• (1510)

Their concern, one which I share, is that action to seek options for highly indebted farmers should not jeopardize the future availability of farm credit.

My role is to represent the interests of all farmers. A secure, continuing line of capital and operating credit is essential to virtually every farmer in this country.

The reports I am getting from Saskatchewan, where a voluntary debt review process is in place, is that both farmers and creditors are generally receptive toward that approach. I understand that the success rate in the Saskatchewan experience is between 50 per cent and 60 per cent. In fact, I know of many cases where farmers and their creditors have reached reasonable settlements on their own. This gives me good reason to believe that a voluntary process can and, indeed, will work effectively across the country.

Still, I offer Canadian farmers the assurance that the new federal system will be closely monitored in its early stages. If I find that it is not meeting the need, I will look at it again and, if necessary, changes will be made to ensure that it works to the benefit of all farmers in this country.

However, let us be honest. This legislation, in any way, shape or form, will not solve all the problems in Canadian agriculture. It will not address difficult questions about international pricing, nor will it address difficult questions about international markets. It will not erase the past. It is intended to and will help farmers with the potential to be viable and remain in business.

I see this legislation as a link in a long chain of initiatives. No one link addresses every problem in agriculture, but one by one the problems are being addressed and the chain keeps getting stronger.

The Government has added a link to the chain by introducing many agricultural initiatives. In fact, there have been initiatives every other working day since we assumed office, totalling some 260 initiatives representing a financial transfer from the Government of Canada to the farming community of well over $5 billion.

Many of them have been directed specifically at the farm financial situation. Some have saved farmers money or have put cash directly into their hands. For example, we extended special drought assistance for the last two crop years for western crop and livestock producers; we offered assistance to sugar-beet producers, to Atlantic potato growers and indeed to tobacco farmers in Quebec and Ontario. We introduced an interest rate reduction program to assist approximately 5,600 Farm Credit Corporation borrowers who had been locked into high interest loans, bringing interest rates down from 16.75 per cent to 12.25 per cent.

We introduced amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act that allowed for record spring payments in two consecutive years, with total pay-outs topping the $1 billion mark.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recently announced special agricultural initiatives, including the effective removal of all federal sales and excise taxes on diesel and gasoline fuel for farm use, an increase in the price range for domestic wheat for human consumption of between $6 and $11 per bushel, and a freeze on grain freight rates at current levels for the 1986-87 crop year.

Other links in the chain of initiatives serve longer term goals. For example, we have given farmers more flexible credit options through the shared risk mortgage program, and the community-based loan program. We have worked with the western provinces to improve crop insurance coverage for producers faced by successive years of losses.

We have strengthened the safety net for Canada's red meat producers by amending the Agricultural Stabilization Act and establishing the National Tripartite Stabilizatiion Program. We introduced a five-year, $1.5 billion long-term dairy program that will ensure greater stability for Canada's dairy farmers. Perhaps most important, the Government's economic policies have led to lower interest rates for farmers. The rate on a five-year FCC mortgage is down from 14 per cent when we took office to 10.75 per cent today.

The Government has demonstrated its clear, high priority commitment to Canada's farmers. Agriculture was an important item at the First Ministers Conference. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made agricultural subsidies his personal priority at the Tokyo Economic Summit. My collegue, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), brought together the world's main grain producers to discuss problems in the world grain market.

I have been working with my provincial counterparts toward a national agriculture policy.

The Prime Minister gave his personal commitment that legislation to establish farm debt review boards would be dealt with on a priority basis before the end of June. This legislation is before us today, and again the Government is keeping faith with Canadian farmers across the country.

The farm debt review legislation is a timely, important link in the Government's chain of agriculture initiatives. I strongly urge that every Member of the House support this initiative so that we can have this legislation in place, hopefully by five o'clock today.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, we are pleased to see this legislation before the House today. We had hoped that the legislation would have appeared last fall because on July 10, 1985, the Minister made a commitment that he would introduce legislation to the House. We are disappointed that it did not actually come to the House until the last two weeks of June. If the Minister accepts the amendments proposed by the Opposition, I am sure we can make great progress and perhaps even pass the Bill this afternoon. However, we will have to wait and see.

The Minister made a strong commitment last July 10 that he would introduce amendments to the Bankruptcy Act that would deal with severe cases where a judge would have the responsibility of making a decision.

While this legislation before the House today is much weaker, at least the Minister has finally taken action. It would be difficult to over-emphasize the serious financial difficulties facing agriculture in Canada. During the past two years the financial situation in Canadian agriculture has eroded. I wish that we could say there is a brighter future for agriculture—and I do not believe that farm commodity prices will remain as low as they are now—but current international events lead us to believe that we may face at least another year or two of very low commodity prices.

One need only look at the prospect of the initial prices for grain commodities being 20 per cent less this year to realize how serious the situation will be. It is difficult for anyone to estimate what will be the negative impact of the U.S. Farm Bill and the international commodity trade war.

While we have very useful programs to stabilize prices and maintain farm commodity prices in this country, the situation with respect to international commodities like red meat, grain and cash crops has deteriorated dramatically since the passing of the U.S. Farm Bill. Clearly, this legislation was required last year and is certainly needed now, so we are glad the Minister has brought the legislation before the House.

It is not nearly as strong or effective legislation as that which was considered in this Chamber exactly two years ago, in June of 1984, when Bill C-17 was before the House and its committee. Hopefully, the Minister will respond to the representations and amendments which are being placed before him this afternoon and will strengthen the Bill so that it can be effective.

We want to ask the Minister to contact the chartered banks to ensure that they do not move against the farmers at this time before the farm debt review boards, review panels, are established, because it is clear that it is a concern of many farmers that the chartered banks and other lending institutions will move against them. We certainly hope that the Minister will call in the presidents of the banks and obtain commitments in writing that they will not move against the farmers until these farm debt review boards are established.

I certainly hope that the Minister will not immediately lift the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures as soon as the farm debt review boards are established, because it will take a number of weeks or months until this legislation is functioning. I believe he should maintain that moratorium for several months. As well, he should go to his colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses, who is responsible for the Federal Business Development Bank, to ensure that it stops action against the farmers.

A colleague of mine, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, recently heard of a farmer closed out by the Federal Business Development Corporation.

Mr. Boudria: Yesterday.

Mr. Foster: That kind of action by a federal agency, when this kind of legislation is before the House, is totally unacceptable. I certainly hope that the Minister will call in not only the chartered banks, but, as well, the Federal Business Development Bank, to ensure that they are not moving precipitously against farmers during the period of time that this review procedure is being established.

I am really concerned that, without any real teeth in this system, there will be a total constipation of the system. The Prime Minister, in his statement of April 30, said that there were 8,000 farmers waiting to take advantage of the legislation.

If that is the case, with 10 review boards, or perhaps even less, in this country, it is not expected that they could move that rapidly to deal with the problems facing those 8,000 farming individuals. Certainly, the banks could take the attitude, "Well, we will just sit on our hands. This legislation really has no teeth in it". Even where the banks are being unfair, unjust, or unreasonable, there is no legislation to call to account those lending institutions. I certainly hope the Minister will accept our amendment in that respect.

Clearly, concerning the Grey—Bruce review board set-up, generally the situation was that the banks simply sat on their hands until the review was complete. The FCC refused to write down. I hope that the Minister has indicated today that the FCC will reschedule or set aside debt when the review board so recommends.

Many farmers are involved, including young operators who bought their farms in 1977 or 1978. Where the asset value of the farm has dropped and there will be severe losses, but where there is goodwill and a competent operator, an arrangement could be negotiated where such a farmer could be given enough leeway to operate so that it will be he who ends up running the farm, not the neighbour down the road or someone else. We know that farm values have dropped by 25 per cent to 50 per cent. Clearly, if there is a drop in the world price of grain on July 1 by 20 per cent, we will see another drop in farm values in grain-producing areas of at least 10 per cent, I would estimate, because that kind of loss in grain prices cannot be sustained without occasioning a similar loss in farm values of at least half that amount.

We want to see the legislation put in place. We want to see a number of amendments passed by the House. We think that the legislation should be here to help farmers. That is why we disagree with Clause 17, which allows the banks to petition the farmer into the farm debt review. I really cannot, for the life of me, see why Clause 17 needs to be in the Bill. To me, it will only be used to intimidate farmers to force them into a review. They cannot be petitioned into bankruptcy, but under the Bill they can be petitioned into a debt review.

The Minister tells me that it will concern any debt over $4,000. Surely we do not want to bring in that kind of legislation which would allow the chartered banks to intimidate farmers. This is a very intimidating procedure, I believe. I want to see the stay of proceedings; and there should be an allowance beyond 90 days to allow crops to be harvested, if that is necessary, or to take care of the cattle, or just to facilitate the renegotiation. The Minister is concerned that it is indefinite. Well, it is not indefinite. Each time that that is extended beyond 30 days, to 60 days or to 90 days, the farm debt review board, the board for the province or the region, must take positive action.

I believe those farm debt review boards will be responsible groups of people. I do not think that, willy-nilly, they will grant indefinite extensions. However, where there is a just reason for doing it, I believe there should be provisions in the law to do it. I hope that the Minister will consider it and allow it to go beyond the 120 days, which he has indicated he is willing to do at this time.

Concerning the five-day notice, the Minister has already indicated he is willing to accept extending that to 15 days. It occurs to me that if a farmer in Kenora—Rainy River with a debt over $4,000 receives notice from the bank or the farm machinery agency that there will be seizure, there is a form one must complete in order to apply. Where does one get the form? Does one get it from Toronto, is there an office in Thunder Bay, or where is it?

One must line up all one's creditors on that prescribed form, one must let them know, and then one must file the form with the farm debt review board. Therefore it is important that that extension be increased to 15 business days; in actuality, 21 days. I consider that to be an important improvement to the legislation. Even though it is a voluntary system, I think it important that we have an appeal procedure. I believe that, in general, the debt review panel will be effective. However, its members may err, they may not function well, the chairman may not be as competent as he or she should be. There should be an appeals procedure whereby the farmer, if he is not satisfied with the decision of the debt review panel, is able to appeal to the board for the establishment of a new panel.

Where there is a grave injustice being done to the farmer and the debt review panel is not able to effect an arrangement, the debt review board should be able to refer the application to a court of competent jurisdiction to ensure that the farmer is treated fairly and that a serious injustice will not be done.

This does not mean that every case would be referred automatically to the county court or to another court of competent jurisdiction. It simply means that the debt review panels will become aware of situations which are before them. They will not be able to affect proper arrangements. They will be able to refer the matter to the debt review board. Where there is a grave injustice being done to a farmer, the case and recommendations of the review panel can properly be referred to a court for adjudication and decision.

These are just a few of the matters which I think need to be considered as we examine this Bill. I believe that there needs to be an ongoing review of this legislation. There have not been the proper hearings before the Agriculture Committee with respect to it. I recommend that we put in place a review committee made up of officials from the Department of Agriculture, from the Farm Credit Corporation and from the industry itself. When I say the industry, I mean the farmers and farm organizations in the country could nominate the people they want to sit on this committee. The review committee would make a report to the Minister twice yearly, which report would stand referred to the Agriculture Committee. I think it is essential that we have that type of review.

The Minister has already put forward an amendment to the effect that the annual report of the review boards would be turned over to the Agriculture Committee. This means that the annual report for the fiscal year 1986-87 would become available on March 1. It is tabled within three months and referred to the committee by late June. This means that the committee will not get a chance to look at it until September or October, if the normal cycle of parliamentary activity occurs. I strongly recommend that there be a review committee, especially during the early days of this legislation. It is new legislation. I think it would be of great advantage to the Minister to have a review committee.

Because thousands of farmers will be facing foreclosure in the next year or so, it is important to provide a strong and formal review process in order to maintain as many of them on their farms as we possibly can. In this way fairness and equity will prevail. From studies which have been done by the Farm Credit Corporation, we know that half of the farmers in serious financial difficulty—close to 20,000 farmers—are our youngest, most productive and most technologically-advanced farmers. They also produce about one-half of the food that is produced in Canada. Of course, no legislation can help every individual, but if the legislation before us is enacted and strengthened as we are recommending it be strengthened this afternoon, I think it can help a great many of them. We are now going through a turmoil with respect to grain prices in terms of constant dollars which are at the same value as they were in the 1930s.

We have to take unusual and drastic steps to cope with the situation. It is not only through this legislation but through financial assistance provided by the Government and through other ways that we will be able to see farmers survive in the next two or three years in which we know there will be so much difficulty.

I wish to close with those remarks. Later on during the course of the committee hearings I will be making a number of recommendations regarding amendments to the legislation.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, before we get into a detailed discussion of the Bill, this is an appropriate time to reflect on how we got this far. It is appropriate to consider now what the Bill attempts to do and what improvements we hope to be able to make to it during the period of time that the Bill is before the Committee of the Whole House.

I wish to point out that the farm prices crisis that we are now in is just becoming known to us in terms of the effects of the Farm Bill and the price war that has gone on with the European Economic Community. I say that because I want to make it quite clear that a very dramatic change in the economic circumstances of Canada's farmers has yet to hit. The farm debt which faces farmers was caused by actions taken some five or six years ago when extremely high rates of interest were being charged. This situation caught many of Canada's food producers in situations with debts they could no longer afford to carry.

In the end they faced rates of interest up to 22 per cent and 24 per cent. For this they can thank the changes in the Bank Act which were passed in this House in 1980 and 1981. Thanks can also be given to a companion piece of legislation which went with that Act; that is, the striking down of the old usury laws which made it illegal for interest rates to rise above 12 per cent. The House passed both those laws, thus permitting the banks to write contracts that did not state what the rate of interest would be. In fact, the rate could be changed weekly. It was this House that precipitated such action. It was the Party which now sits opposite, the Progressive Conservative Party, that supported the then Liberal Government in bringing about these changes. There were one or two Conservative back-benchers who stood with the NDP in attempting to stop this silliness.

Essentially, the two Parties conspired against the people of Canada, particulary farmers and small business people, to bring about the results which we now have. After having talked about it for over two years, the Government has decided it will bring in some debt legislation. It will salve its conscience by allowing some people to squeeze out of the debt burden that they have had placed on them by going through a process. On my inspection, on almost all counts, this process will have a result in which the majority of farmers that are sucked into the meat-grinder will come out in little pieces and be carted off by the transition program which is soon to be put into place. There will then be an attempt to put them back together as some other form of sausage, allowing them to show up in the workplace somewhere else.

The Minister of Agriculture promised to have enacted debt review legislation with teeth in it prior to Christmas. He made a speech to the NFU convention. In reinforcing the Government's intention, the Minister of Finance in his Budget Speech in February said that we would have debt review legislation introduced. After that speech he spent a bit of time talking about it in front of television cameras. Since nothing happened, the Prime Minister decided to make a farm speech at the end of April. He also talked about farm debt review legislation being brought in before the end of June. I guess that is now what is before us. It was introduced too late for the various farm organizations, farmers, indeed, for even the lenders such as banks, credit unions and so on, to appear before the standing committee to make representations. We are stuck with a particular piece of legislation, inadequate as it may be, that may help a small proportion of those farmers who are facing pressure from lenders.

Farm organizations and opposition Members are in the catch-22 position of having to permit this inadequate legislation to pass through the House to save a few farmers or to hold it up and wait for something that is adequate while watching over the summer recess the banks and lending institutions wreak havoc on farmers who are having difficulty repaying loans. Because of that, we propose to let the legislation go through relatively quickly in all stages in the House rather than in a Standing Committee. We are doing this with the understanding that we will get consideration of several amendments which will permit the House to review the legislation and call witnesses that we have not been allowed to call during the winter so that we may see how the legislation is working and so that we may hear what improvements should be made to the legislation. There are improvements that will have to be made.

There have been experiments with debt reveiw legislation in Canada. The Minister started out by assisting the Grey—Bruce experiment which was conducted on a voluntary basis. A review board made up of farmers, some of whom had financial experience, looked at some 80 to 90 cases. My information is that about three or four cases were finally processed and came to a final conclusion. This process was totally voluntary. The farmer and lender had to find some conclusion to their difficulties with the debt process voluntarily, using the debt review panel as a mediator. I think that experiment proved quite conclusively that voluntary boards are relatively ineffective.

In Prince Edward Island, a process like that is beginning to be used. The debt review panel in Prince Edward Island has very little more power than that of the Bruce—Grey experiment.

In Saskatchewan, a program has been in effect for more than a year but in that province, there are a few things other than the panel to assist in the process. First, a moratorium on all foreclosures involving land has been declared, something which is within the constitutional power of the province. As well, there is a longstanding court process dating back to the days of Tommy Douglas which provides that the lender must refer a foreclosure case to a Court of Queen's Bench in order to proceed. The bank, trust company or credit union must go to Court of Queen's Bench in order to initiate the process. In most other jurisdictions, it is my understanding that creditors may simply call up the borrower to tell him that his loans are about to be foreclosed on and he has very little time under the Bank Act of Canada to find alternate financing or funds to pay off the loan.

The Province of Manitoba is putting a debt review process into place which would not only protect land but would also require a process to be gone through before seizures of machinery and livestock could take place. That is what is going on in Canada. At the same time as the provinces are putting forward some efforts toward mediating the problems the Bank Act created for farmers and small business people in 1980-81, the Government is also responding. It is a rather weak response and one that would have been much better if it had been used to strengthen the bankruptcy laws.

The Bank Act was upgraded and permitted the banks more and more power every 10 years on decennial upgrading while the Bankruptcy Act itself is stuck somewhere in the 1920s. The very powerful Bank Act gives the lenders extreme power to act to recover funds compared to the power they had back in 1920, while the only thing the creditor has to protect him is that very old and tottery Bankruptcy Act of the 1920s. Try as we might, we have not been able to put an Act before the House which will upgrade the Bankruptcy Act with which Canadians must deal. As a consequence, we are stuck with this last-minute makeshift legislation that will attempt to provide some protection to farmers.

Let us look at this legislation quite uncritically and objectively and see what protection it does offer. On the surface, it does not offer very much. It offers to set up some review boards or panels to which a farmer may say: "Look, I'm having difficulty with my lending institution, I'm having trouble with my payments or think I'm going to have trouble with my payments, what arrangements do you think you can make between me and my bank or my creditors?" If the panel decides to take the farmer's case, it immediately freezes all actions by creditors for five days and there is another 30 days in which panel members may look at the possibilities. If they think they can make some progress, they may extend that for an additional 30 days and yet again for one more 30-day period to a maximum of 90 days.

In all provinces except those which have moratoriums or where the FCC moratorium remains in effect, there is really no pressure on the lender other than to wait 30, 60 or 90 days. The creditor will get his money because he has the power of the Bank Act of Canada behind him. From the creditor's point of view, it is strictly a waiting game. The farmer is simply provided with 30, 60 or 90 days of grace before the final verdict comes down. There is really no incentive provided under this arrangement for the creditors to play ball.

There is no mention in this Bill of having the panels study the factors that lead up to farmers having financial difficulties. The panels, through this Act, are not instructed to find out how farmers get into difficulty, whether through bad management or because of the activities of the House of Commons which passed the Bank Act and made interest rates of up to 22 per cent and 24 per cent possible. There is no mention of whether or not there should be some responsibility taken for that action. That is not something at which the review panels will be directed to look by this proposed legislation.

The Bill makes no presumption about whether a farmer should or should not be able to continue to operate his farm unit. We think that the basic assumption of this Act should have been that a particular lending institution thought that a farm was viable if it lent money to the farmer and therefore, by golly, this should continue to be a viable farm if the farmer does the things that he and the financial institution agree should be done in order to repay the loans. If those criteria have been met, I say that farmers should be permitted to continue, but they are not told that in this Bill.

We are left with an over-all program of the Government which has been made fairly clear in previous answers to questions and statements by the Minister in the House. He intends to lift the moratorium on FCC foreclosures as soon as this piece of legislation is ready. He also intends to bring in a transition program in a companion piece of legislation. If this program is as effective as the one in Saskatchewan, farmers will be recycled and will become useful members of society in areas other than farming. However, I think the legislation will be far less effective than that of Saskatchewan. There is no moratorium to go along with this legislation, so there is no weight hanging over the heads of lenders. I think the expected outcome would be more like 75 per cent having taken advantage of the transition program and something like 20 per cent to 25 per cent having survived. I am very disappointed that the Minister took so long to produce so little.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Chairman, I want to be brief because I know it is important for this piece of legislation to be passed as quickly as possible.

I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on the initiative he has shown by introducing a piece of legislation which is so important to the farm community. The opposition Parties suggest that not enough is being done fast enough, but two significant events have taken place which must be taken into account.

First, farm credit rates in Canada were reduced for farmers who were Farm Credit Corporation borrowers so that they could begin to have viable repayment schedules. Of course, the reduction to 12.75 per cent was a major relief for many farmers who were faced with high interest payments.

Second, there was a moratorium on farm foreclosures which has played a large part in beginning to give farmers confidence that the Government is really interested in ensuring that the family farm unit survives. At this point I should like to compare the numbers of bankruptcies which have occurred in the last three years. Let us take the first five months of 1984, 1985, and 1986. In that five-month period in 1984, before our Government took office, there were 274 farm bankruptcies. That dropped in the same five-month period of our first year to 233 and then to 203 in the same five-month period this year. A general improvement in the economy, brought about by this Government, has resulted in a reduction in farm bankruptcies as well as in other bankruptcies across the economy, whether they be farms, small businesses, or whatever. Again I congratulate the Minister for moving quickly on these initiatives.

I should like to ask the Minister whether, with the passing of this piece of legislation, he could indicate that these panels will be operative in the summer months so that farm families, who are awaiting the results of this legislation, will benefit in the near future.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to participate in this debate. I note that the Minister is asking for our co-operation. He does not want the debate to be too lengthy. I do not intend to use an exaggerated amount of time, so that we will be able to consider the other clauses very soon. However, I should like to make a few points. In effect, this consideration of Clause 2 is a substitution for second reading stage of the Bill. We all agreed to dispense with that stage in favour of a lengthier debate on this particular clause.

In his opening remarks, the Minister commented upon the fact that economic conditions for farmers had improved since the Conservative Government took office. I just cannot let that statement go by unchallenged. Not long ago I had the occasion to visit Washington and to take part in a very elaborate study of the U.S. Farm Bill. I draw to the attention of the Minister a study by Chase Econometrics which was conducted for the Bank of Montreal. It refers to the effects of the U.S. Farm Bill, which is more appropriately called the Food Security Act, 1985. At this point I must say that the Minister's comments about economic conditions having improved were not totally accurate. What looms on the horizon for Canadian farmers as a result of the U.S. Farm Bill is indeed very difficult days, months, and years ahead.

I know the Minister will want to speak with his colleague, the Minister for International Trade, and ask him why the lobbying, if any was done in Washington prior to the passage of the U.S. Farm Bill, was not more effective. I know the Minister of Agriculture will want to pose such questions to the Minister for International Trade.

I should like to refer to a press release of the Bank of Montreal after the study of the U.S. Farm Bill had been released. It indicated that the price of feed grains would lower by approximately 20 per cent per year and that there would be long-term effects upon the export of Canadian products. As well it indicated that the price of U.S. grain would decline, lowering grain prices in Canada and elsewhere. Further, it indicated that with large supplies and declining prices, grain importers would continue to buy hand to mouth, and that lower grain prices would be a mixed blessing for livestock producers. The reason for this is the provision in the U.S. Farm Bill respecting whole herd buy out. This means that a large number of cows in the United States are presently being slaughtered and added to the beef market, which will have the effect of depressing our beef prices.

The Minister knows all these things, and I hope he will want to correct the record. He should not indicate that in fact everything is rosy since he has assumed office. I am sure he will want to indicate to the Minister for International Trade that he should have done better lobbying in Washington before the passage of the Bill respecting the Food Security Act, 1985. As I said previously, its effects will be quite devastating for Canadian farmers.

I would be remiss in my remarks if I did not congratulate the Hon. Member for Algoma on his fine work. He presented a number of amendments which we will be reviewing shortly. He presented a Bill which twisted the Minister's arm and caused him to bring in his own Bill. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Algoma for having held the Minister of Agriculture accountable for a promise which is contained in the document entitled "338 Tory Promises". I am referring to the promise which was made on July 26, 1984 in Sherbrooke. I am sure you will remember that promise, Mr. Speaker, which can be found on page 3 of the press release of the then Leader of the Opposition. It indicated that farm finance review boards would be established to act as a financial referee and negotiator between farmers and lenders.

As I said, I am glad the Hon. Member for Algoma presented a Bill which in turn acted as a catalyst and ensured that the Minister of Agriculture presented his own Bill.

• (1600)

I have a couple of questions I would like to pose to the Minister of Agriculture. I hope he is able to answer them. I am concerned about the role of the Federal Business Development Bank in farm loans. We know that there have been interest rate reductions on existing loans at the Farm Credit Corporation. I have many farmers in my riding who are financed by the Federal Business Development Bank. To see two farmers side by side, both having borrowed the same amount of money, both financed by agencies of the Government of Canada, one being the Farm Credit Corporation and one being the Federal Business Development Bank, and to see one where interest rates went down by 6 per cent or 7 per cent while the other continued to be financed at 20 per cent and 21 per cent is abnormal.

Does the Minister intend to do anything, together with his colleagues, for farmers financed by the Federal Business Development Bank? More particularly, just how will this legislation apply to the FBDB? Will it apply in the same way as it does to other banks? It is very important for the Minister to answer that question and thereby send a clear signal not only to farmers but to the Federal Business Development Bank, an agency of the Government of Canada, to act in a way consistent with the policies of the Government.

I give the Minister of Agriculture credit for his announcement concerning the Farm Credit Corporation. I am sure he was trying to send a message at that time that that was the policy of agencies of the Government lending to farmers, but another parallel agency, the FDDB did not listen to the Minister's message at all.

I have a farmer in my riding—and I intend to discuss the name of the farmer with the Minister privately—who was considerably behind in his Federal Business Development Bank repayments. The farmer yesterday, a day ago as we are speaking now, June 19, heard from the FBDB that it had sold his farm and that the date of possession will be July 1. Will this process apply to that individual case? The FDBD sold his farm at a time when the farmer was trying to negotiate getting money elsewhere and at the time when I had personal discussions with another person who was also trying to find money for the farmer. The FBDB did not listen to the message about lowering its interest rates.

It is also interesting, Mr. Chairman, that the FBDB did not listen to the moratorium message of the Minister of Agriculture who placed that moratorium on the FCC, an agency of the Government on farm foreclosures. Why does that process not hold true for FBDB, another agency of the Government of Canada? That is inconsistent. The farm was sold yesterday in my riding by the Federal Business Development Bank, not having lowered its interest rate and having sold the farm at a time when there was a moratorium in place. In my view that is totally unacceptable.

I am not, for instance, saying that the farmer was not in financial difficulty. I cannot make that kind of statement at this point. That is not the principle. In both previous announcements the Minister made, he asked that interest rates be lowered, which would have inevitably eased the burden on that farmer as it did on a number of others. When the Minister announced the moratorium pending the preparation of this legislation, and I will give him credit again, I am sure he said: "This is terrible. There are a number of farmers on whom an agency of the Government of Canada is going to foreclose. Let us put on a moratorium, draw up a Bill so we deal with the matter." At the same time the Minister was doing that other agencies of the Government were not. I recognize there is a difficulty and I will concede that. If the Federal Business Development Bank lends to a corner store and a farmer, it has two loans to two people, with a moratorium on one type of loan and not on the other. That is a difficulty and I recognize that. I would like to continue very briefly. I feel this is very important. If I could just have the attention of the Minister momentarily and then get a response.

Mrs. Mailly: If it is interesting maybe he will listen.

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps the Member across the way thinks that agricultural issues are not important. Perhaps she thinks we should not be discussing cases of farmers going bankrupt. I will not apologize in this House for raising problems of farmers from my riding, Mr. Chairman. She should be ashamed of herself for making those kinds of idiotic remarks in this House.

What can the Minister do for those cases financed that way? It may not be a situation right across the country. I do not know how the Federal Business Development Bank has acted throughout the country. Is it in certain regions or does it have loans from coast to coast? I am uncertain about that.

In my own constituency, a large number of farmers were financed in that particular manner. I am curious to see just how the Minister intends to deal with those. If he cannot give a definite commitment now, could he at least undertake to speak to his colleagues who are responsible for the Federal Business Development Bank to ensure that they follow the agricultural policy that he personally has set out?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell very closely. I can appreciate the disappointment and the frustration he experiences. All of us as Members have experienced this, particularly those of us who represent rural ridings.

I believe the Hon. Member has recognized that I do not have the legislative authority to direct the actions of the Federal Business Development Bank. There might have been some questions asked as to whether or not I had the authority to impose a moratorium. I was satisfied that as Minister I had responsibility for the actions of the Farm Credit Corporation and I was satisfied that I could apply the moratorium. The September moratorium was not the first one I applied, it was the second.

The Federal Business Development Bank was established some time ago primarily for business enterprises other than non-agricultural businesses. It was the lender of last resort. I think you will find the clients of the Federal Business Development Bank in the farm community—

Mr. Boudria: You may have misunderstood me.

Mr. Wise: —probably came about over the period of time in which the Farm Credit Corporation did not have adequate funds in its portfolio to participate and to meet the demands of the applications that were coming forth.

Mr. Boudria: Exactly.

Mr. Wise: I have no problem discussing the case with my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Business, who I believe is the reporting Minister for the Federal Business Development Bank.

The Hon. Member makes the point that yesterday a creditor foreclosed on one of his farmers.

Mr. Boudria: The Government foreclosed.

Mr. Wise: It is a creditor. That is one case of which he is aware of, yesterday. The difficulty is that situation has been happening all over the country, hour by hour by hour. Thus the need for legislation of this kind. Once this legislation is passed, a creditor can of course issue a foreclosure notice. I have indicated that I am accepting the Hon. Member's amendment.

• (1610)

The regulation setting out the notice clearly defines the farmer's option to appeal his case to a review board. That will be part and parcel of the foreclosure notice. Therefore, as I understand the legislation, it would not be possible for this to happen, thus the need to put it in place.

We considered the constitutional authority with respect to moratoria. There is some question as to whether the federal Government has the constitutional authority to apply it across the country. That is somewhat vague. However, it is clear that the provinces have the authority to apply the moratorium. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre made note of that in his remarks with reference to the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to clarify one point. I was not speaking of an industrial bank of the Government. Perhaps the Minister used the words interchangeably. I am not sure if there are other kinds of government banks. However, I was speaking of the Federal Business Development Bank in this particular case. I understand that there is a similar agency by a different name. I wanted to clarify that it was that particular agency.

I think the Minister was right when he said that most of the loans made in my riding were made at a time when there was a scarcity of funds in the Farm Credit Corporation. Some farmers who were in difficulty went to the Federal Business Development Bank instead of private institutions because the Federal Business Development Bank was not quite as strict as some of the private lending institutions, particularly the chartered banks.

The disadvantage has been that both the chartered banks and the Farm Credit Corporation have lowered their interest rates in practically all cases under the FCC, in a large number of cases with the private banks but, as I understand it, in almost no cases as it applies to the Federal Business Development Bank. That discrepancy between these two agencies of the Government is quite wide. I wanted the Minister to be further appraised of that point.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, there is no confusion. We are talking about the same agency.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, we are debating Clause 2 of Bill C-117 at report stage. I must say that I think Bill C-117 is misnamed. It says that it is "an Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors". I think it should be "an Act for the banks to facilitate their financial arrangements between farmers and themselves". When one looks closely at Bill C-117, one notices that the main beneficiaries of this legislation are the banks of Canada. I want to take a moment or two to explain why I say that.

We all remember very clearly when in 1984 the present Minister of Agriculture and his Leader, the present Prime Minister, campaigned very strongly, promising the farmers and ranchers of Canada that they would be introducing debt review boards with teeth. They said there would be none of this wimpy stuff with debt review boards only to discuss the problem. They were tough guys on the side of farmers and ranchers and they were going to put teeth in legislation. I know that my friend the Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin felt very strongly that the country needed this. I guess that is why we are a little disappointed today.

I have an article written by John Miner in The Leader Post of Regina. John Miner is, of course, a reputable farm finance writer. The article reads:

> Federal Agriculture Minister John Wise said last year that the government will introduce Farmers' Creditors Arrangement legislation which would allow debt writedowns after a third party reviews disputes between farmers and lenders.

That is a nice tough statement. It is time for that. The article goes on to indicate that a spokesman for the Minister's office said that the Minister remains on the record in support of legislation with teeth. The article says that the Minister has met with Royal Bank officials and his position has not changed.

It seems that the position has now changed. After perhaps having a number of meetings with Royal Bank officials, the Minister's mind has changed. He now says that we cannot proceed with this legislation because the banks do not like it. With all due respect to my friends in the Royal Bank who have discussed the matter with Members of Parliament at some length, they said that they were concerned about the Minister of Agriculture bringing in legislation with teeth and wanted to lobby against it. They have obviously been successful. It is obvious that they got through and we now have this rather limp-wristed legislation, Bill C-117.

I must give the Government credit for being consistent. There have been many opportunities for it to come down strongly in favour of the family farm during times of debt crisis if it really was on the side of the farmer and rancher. I need not elaborate on the nature of the debt crisis. That is clearly documented in Agriculture Canada statistics, labour statistics and others. We all understand the farm debt situation.

If the Government was serious about supporting the family farm during these difficult times, it had the opportunity to do so when we reviewed the Bank Act. When there was an opportunity to introduce measures through the Bank Act, there was no support from the Conservatives and Liberals. I think the Bank Act was actually written by the banks. I think bankers send in drafters to draft legislation for their advantage. When it came time to vote on that Act, only one group of Parliamentarians stood in their place and said that it was not in the best interests of the farmers and bankers of the country, that was the New Democratic Party. The Conservatives voted with the Government in favour of the banks.

Mr. Hovdebo: You forgot Gordon Taylor.

Mr. Riis: That is right. There were a couple of individuals who had the courage of their conviction. They said that someone had to stand up for farmers alongside the New Democrats. I must say there were two or three people who did that.

That was the first missed opportunity, Mr. Chairman. There was then the opportunity to introduce bankruptcy legislation which would certainly have helped the farming community. The Liberals promised that for years and years, perhaps even decades. Nothing ever happened. The will was not there. It was a smokescreen. The Government then changed and the Conservatives said that they would bring in bankruptcy legislation. We have waited nearly two years and it is not yet before us. If the will was there, they could introduce it and pass it today. However, it is not here.

We have now missed another opportunity. I applaud the Minister with two fingers for bringing in something before we recess for the summer which will bring farmers together with bankers and others to see if they can negotiate their way out of a financial crisis. I suppose this is marginally better than nothing. We give credit where credit is due.

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 farmers and ranchers waiting for this legislation. That reflects the reality of the debt crisis in the country. Let us hope that this legislation will at least be a move in the right direction. I think the banks should take this as a notice that if they fool around with this legislation and do not co-operate with the will of Parliament as reflected in this legislation, they had better be prepared for some stronger legislation with some teeth. I see the Minister nodding and I know he is committed to that. In a sense we are serving notice to the banks of Canada that this is their opportunity to prove that they have the best interests of the agricultural community at heart.

I hope the Minister will go on record saying that if the banks do not co-operate, a review process will be put in place to make it clear to the people of Canada and the Parliamentarians who represent them that something else must be done.

We are very disappointed with Bill C-117, but nevertheless hope there will be an opportunity to improve it. Certainly a review process is necessary, and I hope the Minister will sit down with the banks and tell them just how strongly we feel. Unless they come through on this legislation, they can expect something in the form of a farm credit arrangements Act to be introduced shortly.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, I have a considerable number of things I would like to put on the record, but I am concerned about the procedure here. We have less than an hour to go today and obviously we cannot pass the Bill because we do not have the amendments which have been suggested and which the Minister has agreed to. I wonder if we could have established some kind of procedure to allow us to go through this very quickly and find out which amendments will be accepted and then give the Minister and his staff time to draft them in an acceptable form. Rather than take the time to make a number of statements at this point I would rather proceed with it, if that has the agreement of the House.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: May I point out to Hon. Members that the amendments presented to the Table appear to be in order technically. Certain Members have brought up points concerning amendments to Clause 2. Therefore, I presume they will not get into extensive arguments when the specific clause to which the amendment is addressed comes up. The only way of dealing with the matter as far as the Table is concerned is to go through clause-by-clause and deal with each amendment as it comes up, taking into account the fact that as far as the Table is concerned the amendments presented are technically in order.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 3—Binding on Her Majesty

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the Minister can respond to this right now, but Clause 3 says that this Act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province. I am just wondering why it binds on a province as well. It is a technical point that the briefing officer did not clarify for me and I wonder if the Minister is familiar with that clause?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I believe that what is meant there is that once an arrangement is made, it is accepted by the review panel. The review panel has the authority to make that arrangement legal and binding. It is really nothing more and nothing less than a contract. So far as contractual law is concerned, that is clearly a provincial jurisdiction and that is what is meant in this particular clause.

Mr. Foster: That is fine, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On Clause 5—Remuneration

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, Clause 5 provides that the Governor in Council may provide remuneration for board members. Could the Minister indicate what the board members will be paid, the per diem?

Mr. Wise: No, Mr. Chairman, I cannot indicate at this point what the rate of remuneration will be. Obviously we will use federal guidelines which reflect an acceptable remuneration now being paid to people performing similar functions.

Mr. Althouse: I wonder if the Minister has thought through the type of remuneration he is talking about here. Will these board members all be paid on a per diem basis or will some be paid monthly or annual salaries?

Mr. Wise: As I understand it, there will be a chairman and more than likely that will be a full-time, salaried position. However, I am not ruling out the possibility, if we agree that a certain individual is a suitable person to serve in that capacity, that it would be done on the basis of a contract. I would think members of the board would be on a per diem basis, but again it might well be on a contract.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the Minister for that response. Can he go further? Clause 9 deals with the Public Service Employment Act which would set the guidelines for employees of the board. Does the Minister have any comparable guidelines that he would be using to set the remuneration for these board members? What types of boards would he use as a guide? Would it be, say, the National Energy Board, the FCC or what? Can we have some sort of idea of the remuneration he is talking about?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, my first reaction, not having had an opportunity to consult the appropriate officials but using some common sense, is that the advisory board of the Farm Credit Corporation might well serve as a guide for the level of remuneration on a per diem rate.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 11—List of Persons

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, can the Minister indicate the number of boards he envisages across the country? Would there be one for each province? Can he give us some idea of the general framework of the organization involved?

• (1630)

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, it is a little difficult when you are breaking new ground. This ground has not been been broken in the last 50 years. The Act allows for at least one farm debt review board to be established in each and every province. If the province wishes to establish additional review boards because of need, we, in consultation with the province, determine if it is in the best interests to provide additional service to the farmers within that province. In some provinces there is a higher concentration of farmers. Certain provinces have, because of the nature of its production, a greater number of more urgent and pressing financial problems, or cases. Therefore, if we deem it necessary, then the Act would allow for the establishment of two or more boards within a province.

I would think if this were done in consultation with the province, we would likely assign specific areas or regions. In the Hon. Member's case it might well be advisable to establish a separate board for northern Ontario. We might establish one for eastern Ontario and southwestern Ontario. I do not think that will be necessary. However, it will allow that to go forward.

On the other hand, in consultation with some of my provincial counterparts from Atlantic Canada, there was at one point some discussion with them and they felt perhaps one board might serve Atlantic Canada. On second thought, the last time my counterpart from Nova Scotia was in Ottawa, he told me that, after having an opportunity to think about it, he would want a separate board for his own province.

Mr. Althouse: I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture could explain a little about the selection process. We know the qualifications are quite broad and general. It says, "must have a knowledge and experience in agriculture or in financial matters". The Act is fairly clear that the board once named, and the Minister names the board, the board then names the various panels. I am wondering where that board is expected to find the names of those panel members. Will they simply select them from candidates that they know or will there be an advertising process go forward so that people who are not known to the board members, as such, might be subject to an interview and have an opportunity to serve, if they so choose?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, on that particular issue I have indicated that the debate around this piece of legislation is not new. It has been a debate that has been an issue in the public forum for quite some time. It has occupied a great deal of discussion at federal-provincial meetings going back to last fall, going back to January, going back perhaps about four weeks ago. I indicated to my provincial counterparts that I would be asking them for the submission of some suggestions.

If we are looking at a chairman plus a 10 man review panel, a total of 11, I would expect that the provinces would want to submit some names. I thought it would be reasonable to take at least three of those names from the provincial lists. In addition, we have been discussing this process with the farming organizations and commodity groups acros the country.

I extend an invitation to my colleagues on all sides of the House in all parties to feel free to make suggestions, look around their own constituencies, make some choices as to who would be appropriate to serve on the review boards, and in addition to that bear in mind that we will be requiring quite a number of names to be available to serve on the panels from time to time. So it is an invitation that I extend here and now to all Members of the House.

Clauses 12 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 17—Idem

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I would like to urge that the Minister and the House defeat Clause 17 and paragraph 2 of Clause 18. We cannot put in an amendment because we are just voting against the Bill, but this clause allows a bank which has a debt, and the Minister tells me the debt must be over $4,000, to approach the review board, fill out an application and move that the farmer be petitioned or requested to appear before a review panel, that the review panel be established and his debts be reviewed with a view to facilitating an agreement.

This may seem a casual thing. It may appear to some to be a desirable thing, but I would argue that this is a very intimidating section. Farmers, as everybody in this House knows, cannot be petitioned into bankruptcy, but under this section they would be able to be petitioned into a review procedure having only missed the payment of one debt. It just seems that this allows a situation for a bank or other creditor to intimidate a farmer.

Farmers are generally pretty conscious of their debts. The last thing they want to do, when they have missed perhaps just one payment, is to have the bank contacting the debt review board for their province, filling out an application and having the debt review board contacting the farmer to ask if he wants to have his debts reviewed. What is the farmer going to say? He is going to agree to having his debts reviewed by the review board or the bank might lower the boom.

I would ask the Minister that Clause 17 and paragraph 2 of 18, which is a supplementary to it, or consequential upon it and the two words in paragraph (3) "or 17", be withdrawn by the Minister. I think it is a very bad clause and will not service, in my opinion, the farmers of this country facing serious financial difficulty.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To save time, I will comment immediately on Clauses 17 and 18.

Farm Debt Review Act

Mr. Speaker, I think the last thing farmers need is to have one more process that will be even more intimidating than what they have at present. I fail to see what Canadian farmers have to gain with Clause 17 of this Bill. If the Minister was right in saying earlier that the purpose of the Bill was to protect farmers, I wish he would tell the House how Clause 17 is supposed to increase protection for Canadian farmers. How can the situation of a Canadian farmer be improved by a clause in this Bill which provides that a farmer may now be requested to appear before a debt review panel if, for instance, he has missed a payment or two? I can only wonder why this clause has been included in the Bill.

• (1640)

[English]

Perhaps the Minister could take a minute and tell us why it was put there. It seems illogical that it would even be there, if the whole purpose of this Bill is to improve the conditions for the farmer. This seems to improve a situation for the banks. At least that is the impression it gives.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask for the co-operation of my colleagues opposite. Could we stand this particular clause and proceed? I am waiting for some information.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 17 stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Althouse: If Clause 17 is going to be redrafted or changed, and I assume that is the reason why the Minister asked to have it stood, I am wondering if we could also stand Clause 18 (2)? If the clause is going to be withdrawn, which is the request of my hon. friend from Algoma, Clauses 19 and 20 should be reviewed as well.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there consent that we also stand Clauses 18, 19 and 20?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 21—Application

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, Clause 21 states that: "Any insolvent farmer may apply, in the prescribed form containing the prescribed information . . . ". Does the very fact of the application also begin a petition for bankruptcy? Will the courts or the lender be able to view this as the first step toward a petition for bankruptcy, which is quite important in certain provinces that have some protection otherwise?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question and one that was brought to my attention. I inquired about this and, in fact, expected a question in the House. The answer is no.

On Clause 23—Notice

Mr. Foster moved:

"manner at least 15 business days before the".

He said: Essentially, the purpose of the amendment is to change the notice from five days to 15 days. I understand that the Minister has agreed to that amendment.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated in my opening remarks in the Committee of the Whole, we would be happy to accept that amendment.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 24—Stay of Proceedings

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, we have a small technical amendment that should be entered at this time. I therefore move:

That Clause 24 of Bill C-117 be amended by striking out line 43 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"24. Subject to sections 27, 30 and 33, and not with—".

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Althouse moved:

That Bill C-117, an Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors, be amended in Clause 24 by adding immediately after line 10 at page 7 the following:

"(2) On receipt of a Manitoba farmer, by the Manitoba Mediation Board, established pursuant to the Family Farm Protection Act of Manitoba, of an application for leave or an application for exemption order as contemplated by that Act, no creditor of that farmer acting pursuant to any security authorized, granted or taken, in accordance with this or any other act of Parliament, shall commence or continue any action or proceeding to realize upon or otherwise enforce such security without first obtaining leave of a court under Part III or Part IV of the Family Farm Protection Act of Manitoba."

He said: I have a very brief explanation, Mr. Chairman. An Act is being proposed in Manitoba which this amendment would complement. Part III of the Family Farm Protection Act of Manitoba deals with land as a security. The Province of Manitoba has clear jurisdiction over that. It only has partial jurisdiction over machinery, livestock and that sort of thing, which is what Part IV deals with. This is an attempt to transfer some of the residual federal powers to the province so that it will be able to act with certainty.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I have looked at the amendment very carefully. I did not receive it until earlier today, although it might have been in the office yesterday.

The information I have from my legal advisers is that it would not be possible for us to accept this particular amendment. Their judgment is that it would be unconstitutional from our point of view.

On Clause 30—Stay of proceedings extended

Mr. Foster moved:

That Bill C-117 be amended in paragraph (2) of Clause 30 by striking out line 1 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"Board may extend that period for a maximum of two further periods of 30 days each"

He said: Essentially, the amendment would just allow the stay of proceedings to be extended from 90 days to 120 days.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated in my opening remarks, this would be an acceptable amendment to us.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 31—Arrangement to be put in writing

Mr. Foster moved:

That Bill C-117 be amended in Clause 31 by striking out lines 9 to 12 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"31(1) Where a farmer enters into an arrangement with any creditor pursuant to subsection 29(2), the review panel shall see to its signing by the parties thereto.

(2) Where a farmer is dissatisfied with an arrangement or with the conduct of the review panel, or where his creditors refuse without reasonable cause to enter into an arrangement with him, the farmer may appeal to the board for the appointment of a new review panel."

He said: My amendment to Clause 31 adds subclause 31(2). This concerns a simple review of the procedure when the review panel has not functioned properly, in the opinion of the farmer, when it has not seemed to be sympathetic to his position or has in fact erred in the making of an arrangement. It would allow a simple appeal procedure by which the farmer could appeal to the review board for the province or region so that he would not be locked into one review panel that may not have functioned properly or may have erred concerning the handling of the information available.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member might take some satisfaction in the fact that we have been concerned about that aspect ourselves. We have satisfied ourselves that we need not amend the Bill. The criteria, the rules governing the actions of the appeal boards, will allow for such a review to take place.

Mr. Foster: Will that be done under the regulations that the Minister will draw to the Bill? How can that be done? Under another clause of the Bill, it states an arrangement can be made, but there is no recommendation in the present Bill, as I read it, for an appeal. The review board may be biased or its methods of handling the case may not be adequate. Under what section of the Act or the regulations will there be provision for a simple appeals procedure?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, at the moment I do not have any more specific information that I can provide the Hon. Member, except to say that we had a discussion about that subject ourselves. He will reconfirm that we actually discussed the matter earlier this afternoon, and that provided me with another opportunity to confirm, with our officials, whether or not the amendment was required. I was satisfied that the amendment, indeed, was not required, with the help of my friend, my colleague from Bruce—Grey, an Hon. Member, a medical doctor and a bit of a messenger today—and I appreciate that very much—suggesting that the matter was dealt with in Clause 10(2).

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: All those against will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Foster) negatived.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 32 agreed to.

On Clause 33—Termination of stay of proceedings

Mr. Foster moved:

That Bill C-117 be amended by inserting, immediately after Clause 33, at page 9, the following:

"33.1 Where in the opinion of a review panel, a satisfactory arrangement cannot be reached without injustice or undue delay, it shall report its finding to the Board and the Board may refer the matter to a court of competent jurisdiction to formulate the arrangement that it deems equitable under the circumstances."

He said: Under this provision, when a review panel feels that there is great injustice about to be done or that could be done to the farmer, or undue delay, the panel could make arrangements so that the review board could review the case and refer it directly to a court of competent jurisdiction.

• (1700)

This would not follow in every case. However, where the review panel is convinced that there is about to be an injustice effected on a farmer as a result of the hearings or the meetings which have taken place, it could refer the case with its recommendations and suggestions to a court of competent jurisdiction. It is a safety-valve on the whole procedure. I urge the Committee of the Whole to support this amendment. It will have very a beneficial effect on the operation of the review panel and the Bill which is before the House today.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, speaking on behalf of the Government, it is not possible for us to accept the Hon. Member's amendment at this time. We all realize where the crux of this issue lies in terms of the type of legislation which is now before us. Our reading of the situation is that we must be careful. We must stop full stop at this point in time in terms of extending powers in this legislation to the review panel or a court to alter unilaterally any settlement.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, the Minister says that he is not prepared to accept the amendment at this time. If we were to stand the clause now, would that enable him to tell us something positive in a matter of two or three days when we deal with the rest of the clauses which have been stood?

Mr. Wise: No, Mr. Chairman. However, if there is unanimous consent to revert to the clauses which have been stood, I have been informed that Clause 17 should be deleted and that Clause 18(2) should be deleted. All subsequent clauses should be renumbered in consequence thereof and any reference to Clauses 17 and 18(2) should be deleted as well. I have been advised that we can accept the request for deletion of those clauses, but we cannot accept the amendment which is before us.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As a point of clarification, I presume the Minister will provide copies of those amendments to the Table in writing at a point in time when the committee will decide to deal with Clauses 17, 18 and, subsequently, 19 and 20. We are presently dealing with the amendment to Clause 33.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I agree with my colleague from Algoma concerning his amendment to Clause 33. What he proposes seems perfectly reasonable. I am at a loss as to why the Government is against it. It would simply afford a person a means to obtain natural justice; that is, through the courts. Will the Minister explain to us the reasoning behind his decision? To deny passage of this amendment seems to me that the Government does not want to allow a person this natural process of justice.

I am a little curious as to why the Minister is not in favour of the amendment. It is certainly not a matter of policy; nor is it a major offensive clause. It simply states that someone could appeal to the courts. We all know that the courts are not in place to satisfy members of the Opposition. They are objective bodies, as all Members well know. Will the Minister further explain his position to all Members of the House, please?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, there should be no confusion in the mind of the Hon. Member with respect to the Government's refusal at this point in time not to accept the amendment. Debate with respect to the Bill has taken place across the country over the last year and one-half. A reading of the situation shows that the majority of commodity organizations and the majority of farmers deem it not appropriate at the moment to go beyond what we have introduced in this Bill. Conditions can change. There will be an opportunity at some time in the future, on two or three occasions, to review the legislation in order to see if it is working, how effectively it is working and what changes might be required to be made to it. That would be the time to consider such an amendment.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I too rise on the amendment. I hope the Minister will take some time to reflect on this matter. Of course, I am sure that he already has. However, his arguments for disallowing it are not very persuasive, to say the least. I would ask him to address the amendment more carefully. It simply provides an option for the review panel, when it is convinced that all else has failed and that an injustice is about to be done, and when it cannot come to any conclusion in terms of the powers it has, that it will report to the board. Presumably the board will be made up of distinguished and level-headed people who will review the matter. If they are also of the opinion that it is a question which will result in an injustice or an undue delay, after sober second thought they can refer it to a court of competent jurisdiction.

This seems to be a standard expectation in a democratic society. It sounds like the sort of natural justice that we would expect to see happen. I fail to see why it would create a problem. I hope that the Minister will rethink his position in this respect. If he wishes to have some time in order to do that, I am prepared, as I am sure other Members of the House are prepared, to stand this clause and proceed to others in order that he can reflect.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, this is a key amendment. Without it, it will be possible for any creditor to fold his arms and sit back for 90 days or 120 days and then say: "I have sat out the operation". Even if the panel and the farmer have provided the creditor with a proposal which is really acceptable and worth-while, he can sit it out. It is not as if this has not been done before. I have before me copies of other credit Bills concerning the protection of farm property, farm security and farm land security. I understand that the Bill in Manitoba—and this is hearsay—and the one which is being attempted to be established in Prince Edward Island have this requirement. It seems a logical step to allow the matter to go before a court of competent jurisdiction.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being 5.09 p.m.—

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Because of the urgent and pressing need for this piece of legislation, we on this side of the House seek the unanimous consent of the House not to see the clock. We ask this in an attempt to move through this piece of legislation at all stages, as we set out to achieve earlier today.

• (1710)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being 5.09 p.m. it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED—STORAGE OF NUCLEAR WASTES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in August of 1984, the then Leader of the Opposition, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), made a promise to the residents of Wesleyville, Ontario, that a Tory Government "will work most actively toward the safe, acceptable and permanent storage arrangement" for low-level nuclear wastes. He also said, "All such waste should be removed from major population areas and kept well away from any major water resource such as Lake Ontario". In June of 1986 the Government is not honouring the commitment of the Prime Minister. Eldorado has chosen one site within two miles of Lake Ontario and is looking for a second nearby.

While the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) refuses to meet with the Citizens for Responsible Nuclear Waste Disposal to discuss the issue, it seems to me that it is incumbent on the Prime Minister to live up to his commitment that he made in August of 1984 when he said that while this would involve greater expense, the federal Government, as owner of Eldorado Nuclear Limited—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

MARINE TRANSPORT

STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA—RADIOACTIVE WASTE SHIPMENTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government must oppose American plans to ship highly radioactive wastes from Taiwan to the United States for reprocessing. These shipments will go through the Strait of Juan de Fuca, a very busy shipping channel, separating Vancouver Island from the State of Washington. An accident resulting in fire for one of these shipments would be catastrophic for large areas of British Columbia and the United States. So far, the federal and provincial Governments have not voiced concern.

As the result of a court challenge, the plan is now on hold until August. Canada must use this time to register its opposition to these shipments, and our world must recognize that the danger posed by nuclear waste is one more reason the entire nuclear industry is both uneconomic and unacceptable.

FIRES

FORESTS—SITUATION IN QUEBEC

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the extremely serious situation in the Province of Quebec and the Abitibi region where forest fires like those which occurred recently in New Brunswick and Newfoundland have caused extensive damage.

So far, Mr. Speaker, some 412,000 acres of Quebec prime forest land have been destroyed by flames. The fire is now under control, but the most deplorable incident was the five persons who died fighting the flames.

Once again I should like to emphasize that it is very difficult to appreciate the seriousness of such a situation. I would be remiss if I did not mention the concerted efforts deployed by northwestern conservationists, firefighters, aircraft and helicopter pilots, police officers and volunteers who fought the flames.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PLIGHT OF WORKERS FACING LOSS OF JOBS IN MONCTON

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have previously stood in this House to present a Member's statement and, as well, I have presented petitions on 21 occasions in an effort to save the CN Main Shops in Moncton. It appears those efforts have not been totally successful. Today we face the loss of 437 CN jobs in my community.

This is a severe blow to the workers, to the economy of Moncton, and to the Province of New Brunswick. It is incumbent upon the Government to take steps immediately to provide programs and assistance to the CN workers in Moncton in order to minimize the impact of the CN decision to down-size the Moncton shops and to attract full-time employment which will ensure the future economic growth of the area.

I believe that Moncton and the Province of New Brunswick have been short-changed. Our Government must immediately reaffirm its commitment to the people of my constituency and my province. I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Cabinet to consider Moncton a priority, and to work with me and the members of my community to ensure that the CN workers affected will secure comparable employment in the area.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CO-OPERATIVES

BRITISH COLUMBIA TEACHERS' INVESTMENT AND HOUSING CO-OPERATIVE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, last November the provincially incorporated British Columbia Teachers' Investment and Housing Co-operative went into voluntary receivership. All assets were frozen and the life savings of thousands of active and retired teachers in western Canada were placed in limbo, as the co-op was uniquely structured and deposits were not insured. A restructuring plan has now been approved, according to which members may receive up to 74 per cent of their original deposits. For many this shortfall means a dramatic difference in retirement plans.

Co-op members are asking why Revenue Canada is ignoring the facts and demanding taxes on deposits to which members do not have access. Co-op members are also asking why they can no longer declare capital losses when more affluent Canadians are exempted from taxes on capital gains. Therefore I call upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to bring some fairness into the Income Tax Act. Surely its provisions were never meant to have the effect of depriving retired teachers of their life savings.

ABORTION

PERCEPTION OF LIFE IN ECONOMIC TERMS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, many of us in this House are against abortion, but we believe in the education of the public on the various means of preventing conception. Proper education solves many problems, especially when that education gives complete understanding of birth control methods and a thorough understanding of the value of human life.

One of the problems for those fighting abortion and the destruction of innocent life is that, while there is proof that life begins in the initial or very early stages of pregnancy, people are willing to destroy that life to make the social and economic status of the mother more important than the right to life of those who cannot speak for themselves.

To place a utilitarian value on human life and to see each person only in terms of his economic worth can, and will, lead to the destruction of human life and to the murder of those already born who, through mental or physical incapacity, are not able to contribute to society what may be demanded of them by extremists. These and other attempts to negate life, to state that it has no value in itself, must never be tolerated.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—REAPPEARANCE OF TARRY SUBSTANCE BLOBS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, last December the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) promised, with the greatest urgency, to identify the source of the Sarnia blob, which he said was "disfiguring the St. Clair River and causing concern about the quality of the drinking water of thousands of Canadians".

His team of high-powered scientists reported on the situation at the end of January, but failed to identify its source. Meanwhile, new blobs are appearing on the river bottom. It is now the end of June. Divers continue to vacuum up growing amounts of the tarry substance. This month they picked up twice as much material as last month.

Dow does not know where the blob is coming from. Ministry officials do not know where the blob is coming from. Six months have passed and we still do not have the answers. What is going on? What happened to the promised urgency? Why has the Minister not lived up to his commitment to get to the root of this serious environmental problem? If it is more difficult than he thought it was, why does he not level with this House and tell us just what a serious environmental problem we have on our hands there?

HEALTH

FUNDING OF CANADIAN FRIENDS OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, 11 months ago a young man described as a chronic paranoid schizophrenic was ordered by a Scarborough judge to seek hospitalization. When the man went to the hospital he was refused admission on what was later described as a technicality. Some two weeks after the incident he bludgeoned his mother to death with a hammer. I bring this to the attention of the House to drive home how little even our own medical people know about schizophrenia and how important research can be in preventing such gross mishaps.

• (1410)

In Canada we are fortunate to have an organization that addresses this problem, the Canadian Friends of Schizophrenia. This organization, with over 60 chapters across Canada, is devoted to assisting families and promoting general public awareness of this little known and misunderstood disease.

In my view, Friends of Schizophrenia is a classic example of the type of organization that deserves more government funding, and I encourage the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to consider this seriously so that last year's ugly incident remains just that.

VERSATILE DAVIE—SIGNING OF NEW COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): On June 22, 1986, Mr. Speaker, close to 700 Versatile Davie workers—95 per cent of those in attendance—accepted company management offers which paved the way for the signature of a new collective agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Versatile Davie workers, the union executives, and the company negotiators. The agreement means that the Lauzon shipyards workers will be busy until 1992.

Mr. Speaker, this is an outstanding example of co-operation by the company, the workers, the union and the Government of Canada. EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WASHINGTON EMBASSY'S PUBLICATION CANADA TODAY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Embassy in Washington publishes on a regular basis a booklet known as Canada Today. It usually talks about the resources of our country. Let me read from this month's version:

The Reagans, the Mulroneys and Mr. Peyton all seemed to be having a wonderful time—

They sat at small tables adorned with pink tulips, ate Angel Hair Pasta with Seafood and Romano Cheese Sauce, Supreme of Chicken Vol-au-Vent and Pistachio Marquise, and drank Sonoma-Cutrer Chardonnay, Leardini Pino Noir and Schramsberg Crémant Demi-Sec. Later on, pianist Rosalyn Tureck played Capriccio "On the Departure of a Beloved Brother" in B Major and two other pieces by Bach . . .

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF CABOT'S LANDING IN CANADA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on June 24, 1497, Europeans officially discovered Canada. The leader of the expedition that took possession for England of the entire eastern coast of Canada was Giovanni Caboto, known to us as John Cabot. The entire recorded history of Canada begins from this date.

When we look today at the great contributions the Italian community has made toward Canada's development, it comes as no surprise that the first European to set foot on our land was indeed an Italian. This event adds a perspective of continuity to Canada's multicultural mosaic and points out that Canada's heritage belongs to us all.

We have all benefited from the hard work that Canadians of Italian origin have invested in this land. They have come here like their ancestor, Giovanni Caboto; unlike him, they have stayed to make Canada more prosperous and more versatile. I call on all Canadians to remember and celebrate this important day in Canada's history.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TESTING OF POISONS AND NERVE GAS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, today I am releasing a catalogue of current Canadian Government chemical and biological warfare contracts. These contracts amount to over $5 million and have gone to major universities, private research laboratories and, yes, even the Ontario Ministry of Health.

The federal Conservative Government is studying the effects of poisons and nerve gas on rabbits, mice, and humans. Both Liberals and Conservatives argue that these initiatives are solely defensive in nature. This is nonsense. Biological and chemical weapons cannot be used unless troops can be protected against their effects. When it comes to this particular type of warfare, there is no distinction between offence and defence.

Furthermore, under a quadripartite agreement which the Conservative Government has refused to release to me,

Canada is obliged to share its research with Britain, Australia, and the United States. The Conservatives have successfully encouraged the U.S. to resume offensive chemical weapons production after a 17-year ban. I call upon the Government to halt work immediately in the field of chemical and biological warfare and to strike an initiative within NATO to halt development of these weapons while a global treaty is sought.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the House is aware of a special moment the House wishes to observe at this time.

THE LATE LT. COL. DAVID CURRIE, V.C.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, with the death of Lieutenant-Colonel David Vivian Currie, Canada loses one of her authentic heroes. Parliament mourns the loss of a faithful servant of the House where he served valiantly as Sergeant-at-Arms for 17 years.

His sympathy and consideration were experienced over the years by scores of Members of Parliament, both old and new. He had a special place in his heart for new Members, and he went out of his way to initiate them discreetly in the mysterious and sometimes obscure rituals of the House of Commons.

He was an outstanding soldier in the very best sense of the word. Dedication, loyalty, and integrity were his watchwords. Following the war, Colonel Currie moved to Baie Comeau in the pulp and paper business where he remained until 1953, before returning to Montreal. He maintained his interest in military affairs to the end of his life, and was Chairman of the Victoria Cross and George Cross Association headquartered in London, England.

In May, Colonel Currie had an audience with Her Majesty and the Queen Mother at Buckingham Palace. He was accompanied by his wife, Isabel, and 15-year old grandson.

He was of that authentic band of heroes which included Billy Bishop, Barker, and Collishaw in World War I, and Cecil Merritt, Paul Triquet, John Foote, Smokey Smith, Fred Tilston, and John Mahony in World War II. Hon. Members will have noticed that those Canadian names were all holders of the highest award for gallantry—the Victoria Cross. These were in addition to countless others, many of them unhonoured and unsung. His courage and gallantry were of the rare kind which places country above self.

Our hearts go out to his widow and family.

[Translation]

As a person and in his career, Colonel Currie showed all the qualities of a Canadian dedicated to his country. In wartime and in peace, he understood the vital importance of individual freedom.

To the Parliament of Canada, he added his integrity and dignity as the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House. As a man and as a soldier, he won the respect of his colleagues and fellow citizens. He lived in Baie Comeau for several years after the war and later on in Montreal.

On behalf of the Government and all our colleagues in the House, I wish to extend our sincere condolences to his family.

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to echo what the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) has said so well about the passing of Lieutenant-Colonel D. V. Currie, holder of the Victoria Cross. Indeed, Canada has lost an authentic hero.

Those of us who remember him here remember that he was not only a real hero; he looked like a hero. The House of Commons has lost a legendary figure. For 17 or 18 years, Colonel Currie was familiar to the public as the gentleman who carried the Mace and participated on behalf of the House, under the Speaker's guidance, in ceremonial functions of Parliament.

Of course he was much better known to us as Members and to employees of the House as the officer in charge of security, accommodation, furniture, catering—all those details which make this place work.

I suppose those were simpler times, because it always seemed to me that whenever I put a question to him in his capacity as Sergeant-at-Arms, he already had the answer. He never had to look into any file or any book; all those details were at his fingertips. As a stalwart defender of the public purse, his answer to most of the questions we put to him was no.

• (1420)

Under the most vicious enemy fire in war, the Colonel's courage won him the highest military award of what was once the Empire and then the Commonwealth. In peacetime that courage, steadfastness, and aplomb never failed him under the most emphatic demands that this House and Your Honour's predecessors put upon him.

[Translation]

In his dealings with others, Colonel Currie always treated everyone with the utmost respect, from maintenance worker to Prime Minister. He was as available to the average person as he was to the great and the mighty of this country. He was an eminently reasonable and profoundly human man, who under a severe demeanour hid a delightful sense of humour.

[English]

He was a devoted servant of this Parliament, putting in long hours, never failing to maintain, in his person and in the office he filled, the dignity and probity of the institution.

Canada has indeed lost a great hero. Parliament has lost a loyal servant. Our sympathies go to Mrs. Currie, to his children and to his grandchildren.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in offering the condolences of all members of my Party to the family of Lieutenant-Colonel Currie.

As has already been said, Colonel Currie was among that small band of human beings who demonstrated in the course of their lives truly exceptional courage in fighting not for themselves but for those around them. During the Second World War he led a particular band of Canadians in the course of an action which resulted in the saving of several thousands of Canadian lives in terms of its final consequence. His courage was of that kind of magnitude.

Following that very distinguished service to our country, Lieutenant-Colonel Currie became, as many Members of Parliament will know, a distinguished Sergeant-at-Arms here in the House, a position he always held with great capability and with great distinction. For many of us in the House during the period he was here, we have lost a friend and an acquaintance. Canada has lost a truly distinguished citizen.

Mr. Speaker: As the House would expect, I have already communicated to the family the sympathies of the House. I suspect, given the nature of the importance of this gentleman and his office, well known to all of us, the House would like to show its respect to Lieutenant-Colonel Currie and his family in the usual way.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute].

Mr. Speaker: Question Period will be extended by 10 minutes.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S COMMITMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am referring to a publication produced by our embassy in Washington of which there are 105,000 copies. It says "Available free upon request in the U.S. only". There are 16 pages, and 17 photographs in this particular issue on our Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: Who cares?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is two days in the life of our Prime Minister.

• (1425)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows the rules about displays. I must, therefore, ask him to put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The relevance of my—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. gentleman can see exactly what is being caused by the raising of this. Could the right hon. gentleman please ask his question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am quoting from an official document of our Government in Washington available to Americans only. It refers to acid rain. In the words of the Prime Minister the document says:

> We've obtained a full endorsement by the President of the report of our two personal envoys . . . This represents a real commitment—

Is the Prime Minister aware that on Friday John Herrington, the Secretary of Energy of the United States, was testifying against a Congressional Bill to control acid rain and said:

> "Based on present information, there is no indication of a near term urgency."

Is that the type of commitment the Prime Minister obtained from the President and the President's Secretary of Energy?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there was a document put out by the Embassy in Washington with only 17 pictures of me, I am going to have to talk to somebody and fire them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: I wouldn't be surprised at all.

Mr. Mulroney: This is not enough.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Be a Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Obviously the Public Affairs Department of the Embassy is doing its job extremely well.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Trying to keep its job.

Mr. Mulroney: I would like to give a little more guidance if I could, but I will listen to my right hon. friend complain.

With regard to the question he raised about acid rain, we have a commitment from the President of the United States speaking on behalf of his administration which, in our judgment, is satisfactory. We believe the administration is working toward those objectives. We will have an opportunity to judge for ourselves, as we all ought to, at an appropriate time.

ACID RAIN—ALLEGED POSITION OF U.S. SECRETARY OF ENERGY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Secretary of Energy has stated that acid rain is not a near term emergency. Those were his very words. In case the Prime Minister did not know, the Secretary was referring to a Bill sponsored by 163 Members of the U.S. Congress and now before Congress. Could the Prime Minister explain why the follow-up to the Washington Summit is so deplorable that the U.S. Secretary of Energy is now denying that acid rain is a serious problem?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States said personally that the acid rain issue was a major priority for him and his administration. Agreeements were concluded in this respect. Funds have been earmarked. It is up to the Americans to see to it that their commitments with respect to acid rain are fully met. As far as we are concerned, this Government is the first national Government to conclude such agreements. We have concluded agreements with the provinces, and for the first time, as far as I know, Mr. Speaker, for the first time in history, there has been tangible progress in the very important and vital area of acid rain. There will be a clean-up in Canada.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I refer again to the sparse text of this official document which is 75 per cent photographs. The document says that the House of Representatives is considering a control Bill that has, for the first time, broad support. That is the very Bill being opposed by the Secretary of Energy of the United States. Can the Prime Minister explain why the White House, through the Secretary of Energy, is now opposing the Bill which the document indicates has wide support from the White House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have a complete and formal undertaking from the Government of the United States of America, executed by the President of the United States, in favour of the position which was set forward in March.

Mr. Tobin: Is that the same one we had on cedar shakes?

Mr. Mulroney: It is an important position. It recognizes the transboundary nature of the problem for the first time. It commits substantial funds to working in harmony with Canada in the progress that we have made in eliminating once and for all, albeit not overnight, the debilitating problem of acid rain which has caused so much damage, not only to our environment but to our economy. This Government took the matter seriously. We have persuaded the U.S. administration of the seriousness of the problem, and together we are going to solve it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WASHINGTON EMBASSY'S PUBLICATION CANADA TODAY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns government waste and abuse of power by the Prime Minister and his Government. The latest issue of the magazine Canada Today includes such fine words as "the feeding schedules of participants in international meetings are as rigid as those of babies of up-to-date mothers in 1935." Can the Prime Minister tell us why Canadian taxpayers should be paying for 17 photos of him in a 16-page magazine? Why is he wasting hundreds of thousands of taxpayers' dollars to publish this kind of nonsense? Does he feel that taxpayers in these difficult economic times should be paying for this kind of extravagance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only unanswered question there is what is the feeding schedule of the Hon. Member? That is an important question. I have not seen this document. We have a hundred—

Mr. Gauthier: How is your smell today?

Mr. Mulroney: Smell? My smell is pretty good. I can smell a rat and I'm looking right at one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, my feeding schedule is probably a lot cheaper for the taxpayers than the Prime Minister's.

Mr. McDermid: Show us your Householder.

Mr. Boudria: I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member should put his question, please.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, how can a Government call on the nation to restrain itself and be more realistic in its collective demands upon the economy when its own record is an unbroken string of fiscal excesses?

Mr. Marchi: Where he stood.

Mr. Boudria: Where I Stand, it says.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the book Where I Stand was a best seller in 1983. It probably will be a best seller forever; it is a great book and I urge you to go out and get it. Send copies to everyone, particularly the Liberal Party, because discretionary public expenditures in Canada, when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance, rose dramatically. They rose 12.9 per cent for a decade under the Liberals, but we have held them to 0.2 per cent, almost zero growth for two years running, and this is dramatically good news.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF DOMTEX PLANT AT SAINT-JEAN AND VALLEYFIELD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised to protect jobs in the textile and clothing industry. Domtex is going to close another plant next Monday in Saint-Jean and Valleyfield. What does the Prime Minister intend to do for the 800 workers affected by this decision?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that we are very concerned about and very aware of the problems in Canada's clothing and textile industry. Some of their representatives were here on the Hill today and I was pleased to be able to meet with them to hear firsthand about their problems. I assured them that when we announce our new clothing and textile policy in the very near future, they will indeed see that we care about them and are going to stand by the Sherbrooke statement.

IMPACT OF TRADE DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister said that because I have a question for the Prime Minister who made the Sherbrooke statement. The Progressive Conservative Party promised: "We promise fair trade but not free trade." Since the Prime Minister promised that in Sherbrooke in the middle of the election, could he tell us why the Government has not lived up to that promise, including the enforcement of quotas? Is it because he has abandoned fair trade to get involved in highly dangerous, for these workers, free trade discussions with the U.S?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not at all. We sought a formula which we think will enable us to explore, as a mature and reasonable nation, the possible benefits which can accrue to Canada from enhancing in a more liberalized way our commerce with the United States. We think it can secure access to markets, create jobs, enhance our competitiveness, and give us a better kick at the 21st century.

It is a serious question my friend raises, and we have acknowledged that in this process, if it is successful, some industries will be less able than others to deal with enhanced competition. As a result, there would be a 10 or 15-year phase-in period. There would be special aid for workers, retraining possibilities, aid for regions, and so on. That is if the entire project is successful. However, as I indicated to my hon. friend and the country, we shall only conclude such an agreement if it is in the interests and to the benefit of Canada and Canadian workers.

IMPORT QUOTAS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister promised fair trade but not free trade. As well, point two of his program refers to the enforcement of international agreements, including quotas, to protect jobs. Therefore, will he tell us why his Government has not enforced existing quotas since he became Prime Minister two years ago, and will he give us his assurance before the House adjourns this week that a new system of quotas will be put in place which will enable him to live up to the promise he made to workers in our textile sector?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to answer that question because I would like to inform the Hon. Member that indeed we have lived up to our commitments. In the last 18 months we negotiated 25 bilateral agreements with 13 different countries. That is twice the number achieved by the former Government in the previous three years. We are protecting our industry. Last year low cost imports to Canada were down to 2 per cent, a dramatic drop from 26 per cent in 1983 and 16 per cent in 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR AID FOR EARLY RETIREES TO DEFEND POSITION BEFORE TRIBUNALS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

A few weeks ago, we found out that the Prime Minister spent over $800,000 on three trips, and that furthermore, the Government had paid $34,000 so the Prime Minister could appear on television. Today we learn that 105,000 copies of a brochure were distributed in the United States, just to introduce him to Americans.

At the same time, this Government is cutting unemployment insurance benefits for early retirees—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Malépart: —Considering this shameless extravagance, is the Prime Minister willing to give early retirees the $20,000 they need to defend their case before the courts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously, this question contains a great many falsehoods. I will not answer the question, but meanwhile, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that as far as spending is concerned, and this is very important, in every Government there are discretionary and non-discretionary expenditures. When the Leader of the Liberal Party was Minister of Finance, the federal Government's spending increased quite spectacularly. While the Liberals were in power, spending increased by 12.9 per cent every year, for ten years. Since we came to power, and for the first time since the Korean War, discretionary spending has been maintained at zero. Now that is good management!

DEMAND THAT PRIME MINISTER ACT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my question so the Prime Minister will understand. What the early retirees want to know is: Are you willing to save $20,000 on your next trip to give them the money they need to defend their rights before the courts? After all, you cut off their unemployment insurance benefits. Yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a stupid question that misrepresents the facts. The fact is that as far as early retirees and the unemployed are concerned, what the Government has done is bring down interest rates dramatically and create nearly 600,000 new jobs since we came to power, more than in all Western European countries combined over the same period of time. That is how the economy has progressed across the country.

COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do with job losses in the textile and clothing industry.

Can the Prime Minister explain why no action has been taken even after a year since the Textile and Clothing Board recommended over-all quotas to protect jobs in this basic Quebec and Canadian industry? When will the Government do something, and how many months will go by before somebody decides to defend the interests of these workers?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if one carefully reads the reports of the Textile board one will note that there were two reports. There was an interim report, which did recommend some form of global quotas. When one reads the final report of the Textile Board it acknowledges that that would not be a long-term solution for this industry, and that is what we want. We do not want stop-gap measures here, we want to see the survival of this industry in Canada. That is what we are pledged to do, and our policy will certainly direct itself to that end.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to which perhaps the Prime Minister would respond. The Textile and Clothing Board in its final report warned that 40,000 to 60,000 jobs were at stake and would be lost if—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that preambles are not supposed to be put before a supplementary question. Question, please, right away.

Mr. Cassidy: Will the Prime Minister ensure that the policy on textiles is introduced this week so it can be discussed in Parliament, rather than trying to slip it by during the summer months when workers' jobs are on the line?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I just want the Hon. Member to be aware that we have nothing to be ashamed of with respect to the policy that we are going to be announcing with regard to our clothing and textile industry. We are going to be addressing the problem and solving it, not like the inaction of the previous Government.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED—DISPOSAL OF RADIOACTIVE WASTES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, if I may have his attention. The Prime Minister on August 21, 1984, as Leader of the Opposition, made a statement in a letter addressed to citizens of Port Hope in Ontario that low-level radioactive waste should be removed from major population areas and kept well away from any major water resource, such as Lake Ontario.

Why is it that two years later his Government is accepting Eldorado Nuclear's selection of two potential dump sites within two miles of Lake Ontario near Port Hope, despite the protest of local citizens?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that question can, of course, be directed to a number of Ministers, but principally the Minister of the Environment. I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that the federal Government is investigating this situation and will take those precautionary measures that are incumbent upon it and relative to the situation that the Member has described.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, are we in the Opposition to understand that a promise made by the Prime Minister became the responsibility of another Minister under whose jurisdiction this matter is not included?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. The Prime Minister has not at all reneged on the promise he made, no. There is such a thing, in case the Member has forgotten, as collective responsibility in a Cabinet. There are specific responsibilities that come to various Departments and to various Ministers. That being the case, the Prime Minister's promises that he has made are obviously delegated to members of the Cabinet to fulfil those specific requirements, and that is being done.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON EMPLOYEES—PENSION AND JOB RIGHTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Minister of Transport if he would set out a policy guaranteeing successor rights, including seniority and pension, for employees of the Moncton shops who may be transferred to Canadian General Electric or some other company. He showed little or no interest in these important issues and said it was a part of collective bargaining.

Now we have a problem with CN Route. We have learned that the collective agreement between CN and their employees will not apply to the new owner, Fingold Brothers, whoever the hell they are.

Will the Minister now agree that he has to exercise some leadership and provide a policy direction to Canadian National in the case of Moncton shops and CN Route that will guarantee pension seniority and other successor rights to the employees no matter whom they are working for?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the collective agreement to which the Hon. Member has referred has been the topic of negotiations which have been going on for over a year now. The pension issue was an outstanding issue while CN Route was still a part of the Crown Corporation, and it is still an issue that is being discussed.

My understanding is that the CN negotiators are going to be meeting with the perspective new owners tomorrow, and that there will be a meeting arranged with the representatives of the CBRT for June 30, at which time these issues can be resolved. I think the most important way to resolve this is through the negotiating process.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL GUARANTEE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the problem is the new purchaser says he will not live up to that.

I would like to ask the Minister if he will guarantee, by a policy directive, that agreements in place, such as pension, seniority, or other provisions, at the time of the sale will continue with the new employer as a condition of sale?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one of the undertakings that has been made by both the CN and the prospective new owner is that there would be fair and equitable treatment of all the employees and those who may be retiring. I thought I was answering the Hon. Member from Regina West's question. If the Hon. Member wants a supplementary I will be prepared to answer that too.

I think the most important thing to remember here is the fact that these negotiations will be submitted back to Cabinet for approval before a final decision is made.

CO-OPERATIVES

BRITISH COLUMBIA TEACHERS' INVESTMENT AND HOUSING CO-OPERATIVE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, and it concerns the restructuring of the B.C. Teachers' Investment and Housing Co-Op, which she approved last Friday. This was an arrangement under which thousands of retired teachers stand to lose amounts that make the difference between comfortable retirement and a difficult one.

Will the Minister confirm that before the capital gains tax exemption was introduced those teachers could have deducted a proportion of their losses, but now that capital losses can only be declared to offset capital gains the tax system gives those retired teachers no relief?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have worked quite hard early on in this process with the Teachers' Co-Op. I had great concern for them because they do not come under our legislation, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. I was quite pleased that they were able to come to an agreement whereby, hopefully, they will get 75 cents on the dollar through this arrangement with Discovery Trust and Canwest. I am looking into that matter now and I believe that understanding is correct. I reserve the right to change that because we are looking at it at the moment.

PAYMENT OF TAX ON FROZEN ASSETS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue, to whom I wrote six weeks ago. Is it the Minister's position that members of this co-op should be required to pay tax on the interest earned on 100 per cent of their deposits when these assets were frozen without warning seven months ago, members have not had access to them, and the restructuring proposal only guarantees them 51 per cent of their assets?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my colleague that some of this income which they have not received, while it may be considered as deemed income at this time, can be adjusted and compensated for in the next taxation year. At the present time I think that is the only way we can handle it.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EDMONTON PACKING PLANT DISPUTE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it has to do with the Gainers strike in Edmonton. In light of his close relationship with Peter Pocklington, the owner of the plant, and in light of his experience as a labour lawyer for Iron Ore Co. of Canada, I want to ask the Prime Minister, and I wish he would not try to brush it off to somebody else—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

● (1450)

Mr. Rodriguez: Does the Prime Minister believe it is appropriate that his Government should be forcing the meat inspectors to cross the picket line and, if they do not do so, they should be disciplined? Does he think that appropriate?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Let him answer.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Blaikie: He is a big boy.

Mr. Mulroney: You would rather have the Deputy Prime Minister? Go ahead.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I was going to take the question for the Minister of Agriculture who is now in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to the House for the delay. I was working out what I hope to be the final details of the Farm Debt Review legislation with my two counterparts across the way. I did not have the benefit of hearing the Hon. Member's entire question. However, we have been monitoring the very difficult situation there on an hourly basis. The last opportunity I had to check with the progress was yesterday. The fact that there is a labour safety officer on the scene—

Mr. Benjamin: He was talking about meat inspectors.

Mr. Wise: —and we are consulting regularly—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Minister will have an opportunity to continue that on the supplementary.

ROLE OF MEAT INSPECTORS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Will he stop kowtowing to his Tory friend, Peter Pocklington, and declare the Gainers plant off limits to inspectors?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that question is so inaccurate and off base that it does not even deserve a reasonable answer.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT COLLECTED ALL NECESSARY EVIDENCE CONCERNING ALLEGED TERRORISTS IN AIR-INDIA ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. A senior RCMP officer stated recently that for several months he has known the names of the alleged terrorists who planted a bomb aboard Air- India Flight 182 over a year ago.

Can the Minister tell the House whether he has sufficient evidence and, if so, whether he will take court action?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the investigation by the RCMP is continuing, with assistance from CSIS. Because it is under way at the present time, no further comment would be appropriate.

ENERGY

WORLD OIL PRICES—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister's Parliamentary Secretary has stated that the political reality is that the energy sector will have to wait for assistance from the Government. Even then, the energy industry should not expect too much help. The Minister's promise was to create jobs in the energy sector, not reduce them. What will the Government do to help the industry at this time of declining world oil prices?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government has already taken some positive steps in that regard, by recently doubling the small producers' credit. Let me add that my honourable critic has already indicated what he would do. He indicated on the way into the House that he would consider a stabilization plan, except that his Party has not figured out how to pay for it. At the same time he believes that consumers are paying too much at the pump. That is not a policy, that is a statement of desperation politics.

Mr. MacLellan: That Government is pathetic.

JOB LOSSES IN ALBERTA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, 200 jobs are being lost every day in Alberta. How many jobs must be lost before the Government does something?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, nobody is more aware of the effect of dropping oil prices on the producing provinces than I. Nobody knows better than I and the Government that you cannot resolve the problems of downturns in oil prices by throwing money at them through government programs. That was attempted under the National Energy Program and it did not work. We are meeting with the provinces to deal with constructive issues and constructive solutions to this problem.

WESTERN ACCORD—REQUEST FOR RENEGOTIATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is quite clear that the Minister's much ballyhooed Western Accord is really now a failure. Even Premier Getty of Alberta wants a new oil deal with Ottawa.

Is the Minister prepared to deal with the results of times and events and renegotiate the Western Accord with western producing provinces, as Premier Getty wants?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Western Accord led to record drilling, a 20 per cent increase in capital spending, and increased employment. The tragedy was that the industry was unable to recoup the money it lost under the Liberal program before the oil prices dropped. I will be meeting with the new Energy Minister of Alberta in Vancouver at the end of the week to continue our ongoing discussions in this area.

SENATE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION ON PRICE STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to renegotiate the Western Accord as Premier Getty wants, or is she prepared to consider the Senate committee's recommendation that a price stabilization program be put in place to protect the small Canadian producers who are being killed with this failure of the Western Accord? Is she prepared to renegotiate with Premier Getty? Is she prepared to help the small Canadian producers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as you know, those are two questions in the supplementary. However, let me first advise the Hon. Member that I have not been asked by Premier Getty or any other Premier to renegotiate the Western Accord. There are provisions for that in the Accord.

In terms of the small producers, we have already removed the PGRT for all but the biggest companies which are continuing to pay it on a phase-down basis. We have already given relief to the small producers. We cannot protect them from a 50 per cent drop in world oil prices.

PUBLIC WORKS

METHOD OF AWARDING CONTRACTS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Questions have been raised in the House concerning the award of small contracts by the Department of Public Works. The Minister replied that a report would be tabled concerning allegations to the effect that these contracts have been awarded without tender calls. Can the Minister tell us when the report will be tabled and whether he now has more information on this matter?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to confirm to the House that indeed I made a commitment concerning the obviously false allegations of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that 90 per cent of contracts under $30,000 were awarded without tenders. Mr. Speaker, you know very well that Treasury Board requirements do not specify tenders in the case of contracts under $30,000. Despite this leeway given to us by Treasury Board, I am pleased to shed light on this report which I will be tabling later today and according to which 78 per cent of all contracts under $30,000 have been awarded on the basis of tender calls. I do hope the media will take this opportunity to dispel any uncertainty created by these false allegations.

RAILWAYS

THE NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Minister announced a decision on behalf of the federal Government that will ensure that Newfoundland will continue to have a dilapitated railway system and a second-class highway system. Despite earlier assurances to resolve the matter one way or the other, why has the Minister taken a decision regarding this Newfoundland railway which leaves both the railway system and the highway system, and more important, the employees of the railway system, in a continued state of limbo?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know yesterday's announcement came as a disappointment to the Hon. Member who wanted the railway abandoned. We chose not to go that route. Instead, we chose to provide up to $26 million for improving the railway infrastructure, providing equipment, and continuing the containerization program. I believe the Hon. Member would agree, as does the President of Terra, that these steps will go a long way to improving the service and making it more efficient and reliable.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is reasonably intelligent. He knows that $20 million over five years is substantially less than previous expenditures. Is the Minister not really saying to the people of Newfoundland, with that paltry sum of money which is a substantial reduction from previous expenditures, that the Government of Canada has no long-term commitment to the Newfoundland Railway or, for that matter, to Newfoundland's highway system? How long will the railway last, with that expenditure of money? Give us a time.

• (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, with respect to the highway system in the Province of Newfoundland, there is in existence a $180 million joint federal-provincial highways agreement, under which the federal Government picks up $112 million.

Mr. Crosbie: Signed by me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: In this particular case, the Hon. Member—

Mr. Benjamin: How many Xs?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member was a member of a Government that chose not to put any money into the Newfoundland railway system. We are putting $26 million into upgrading that system.

Mr. Benjamin: The trouble is Newfoundland lost with both of them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Liberal or Tory, Newfoundland loses.

NATIVE PEOPLE

NATIVE BUSINESS SUMMIT—MINISTER'S SPEECH

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, who, at the Native Business Summit on the weekend, urged native people to be greedy by stating, "There is one underlying motive in business shared by all. It is greed. There is nothing wrong with it. We support it wherever it happens". My question is simply this: Was the Minister of State for Finance simply reflecting her personal opinions or was she really stating the party line?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have given up hope that The Toronto Star will ever develop a sense of humour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: If the Hon. Member reads either the transcript or the rest of the article, he will see that I was speaking of the importance of native participation in our business structure. It was a good speech. It was a little ponderous. I thought it needed a little levity, and anyone who heard the speech understood the context of the remark.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, some people may think that this is funny, but when there is a Minister of the Crown urging native leaders to be greedy by suggesting—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: —Oh, I'll quote—by suggesting that there is one underlying motive in business, and it is greed, and she says that there is nothing wrong with it, and then she goes on to say—

Mr. Crosbie: Your greedy howls are heard every day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that this is a supplementary question, please, not a preamble.

Mr. Riis: My question, Mr. Speaker, is this—

Mr. Crosbie: You're the epitome of greed, yourself.

Mr. Riis: Be quiet, John. Why would the Minister of State for Finance urge native business leaders to be greedy? Why would she do that?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already explained the remark. I think that the conversation I had with native leaders yesterday was very positive, that I had both during the speech and after the speech, and I think this is a silly question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH CHINESE REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board has recently returned from a trip to China with representatives of agricultural organizations from eastern and western Canada. Could the Minister tell the House what results we can expect to see from his discussions with Chinese officials, in terms of increased Canadian sales of wheat and feed grains to China?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that China has been a long and valued customer of Candian grain and oilseed products, so I was very pleased to be able to accept an invitation from China's Minister of Commerce, Mr. Liu Yi, to visit China with a delegation of agri-business people. We went there, not only trying to sell to them, but also emphasizing the fact that we understand two-way trade. I might say that the visit to China by the Prime Minister was also very useful in terms of Canada's ability to maintain and expand grain exports to China. There is no question but that as a result of our visit and that of the Prime Minister, China will be looking to Canada for its grain supplies in the future.

CRIMINAL CODE

DEFINITION OF PORNOGRAPHY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

Since introduction of the pornography Bill, there have been protests from various interest groups, churches and religious organizations. The definition of pornography is very vague and the normal sexual act is viewed in exactly the same way as bestiality and sexual violence.

Can the Minister of Justice tell us whether the Government intents to amend the definition of pornography?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in 20 years this country has a Government not afraid to deal with the question of pornography. We have not appointed some commission or committee on to which we may slough off our responsibility. I can assure the House that I have received hundreds of letters indicating support for our legislation, in the last couple of weeks. The Hon. Member can be impressed by those who write for the media. We all know their tendencies, in any event.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You're going to regret that, fellow.

Mr. Crosbie: I am prepared to listen to the ordinary people of Canada who do not want this kind of visual material made available to children and others across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It's not going to wash.

CLASSIFICATION OF BREAST-FEEDING OF BABIES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): I do not think that we are dealing with the same category of people.

I would like the Minister of Justice to explain to us why breast-feeding is classified as pornography and as degrading and why it is punishable by five years in prison if depicted in a movie or in a show.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there will obviously be a parliamentary committee which will consider this legislation. The reason we have parliamentary committees is to consider whether or not any changes in the legislation are needed. The actual subjects of the question of the hon. lady, as to whether they are pornographic or not, we all know that in and of themselves they are not pornographic. However, when we are dealing with other areas, such as oral or anal copulation and the like, then most of us happen to think that these are pornographic if they are delivered for no other purpose than to try to titillate the people who buy such material.

SHIPBUILDING

SITUATION OF INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In view of the very critical situation in the British Columbia shipbuilding industry, will the Minister inform the House when the decision will be made to build the Polar 8 ice-breaker? And will it be built in B.C. shipyards?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, that issue is currently under active consideration, and I would expect a decision to be made quite soon.

REQUEST THAT ICE-BREAKER BE BUILT IN B.C. SHIPYARDS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, since the revised proposals to build the ice-breaker in B.C. have considerable advantages and shipyards in eastern Canada already have received federal contracts, does the Minister agree that B.C. shipyards should build the Polar 8 ice-breaker?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all of these matters will be taken into consideration; and obviously I will take the representations of the Hon. Member into account as well.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE AT EDMONTON PACKING PLANT—ROLE OF VETERINARIANS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister knows that he is forcing veterinarians in the Gainers strike in Edmonton to take on the duties of regular inspectors because of the threat of violence, and he is threatening these professionals with disciplinary action in refusing to answer their phone calls. I wonder if the Minister will withdraw that threat of disciplinary action against the professional veterinarians in that Gainers strike.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a member of the veterinary profession. He should recognize that, indeed, we do have some legal obligations under the Meat Inspection Act, particularly upon the observation and the assessment, the decision, of a labour or safety officer. If he deems the workplace to be safe, the picket line to be safe, then we have a legal obligation to have inspectors in the plant. We are simply fulfilling our legal obligations as indicated to us by the Department of Justice.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister would take the time to call his friend, Peter Pocklington, and ask him to bring his industrial relations into the 20th Century.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather a silly question. I am sure that if we checked the record we would find that there has been no change in the legal obligation that directs our meat inspectors at the moment, from the same legal obligations under which they found themselves during the previous Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is now 3.10 p.m.

CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE—RAVENSCRAG DISTRICT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of the Ravenscrag district in southwestern Saskatchewan protesting the closure of their post office. Having recently lost a school and a grain elevator, this closure represents the final nail in the coffin to the community. The people of Ravenscrag request that Canada Post reconsider this hasty decision.

NON-TRADITIONAL JOBS—ABOLITION OF PREFERENTIAL TILT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of several dozen women in Toronto who are attending a training course right now for women in non-traditional jobs. The purpose of their petition is to protest the fact that the federal Government has cut back on the 30 per cent preferential tilt for women entering non-traditional jobs in this country.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY—ACTIVITIES ON WESTBANK INDIAN RESERVE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of people of Westbank and Kelowna, British Columbia, I would like to table six petitions. They call upon the Government to appoint a commission of inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act into the well-documented dubious activities which have taken place on the Westbank Indian Reserve with the compliance of the B.C. Region of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I might add that there would be many, many more signatures on these peitions but many people were afraid to sign.

REQUEST FOR COMMEMORATIVE STAMP—CANADIAN FIRE-FIGHTERS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition today on behalf of the fire departments of Welland, Thorold and St. Catharines. The petition has been certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 106.

It calls for the creation of a commemorative stamp as a tribute to the brave and invaluable service provided by Canadian fire-fighters, a tribute which over 21 other countries have already awarded their fire-fighters.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY—ACTIVITIES ON WESTBANK INDIAN RESERVE

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I too present a petition signed by 153 persons in the area of Okanagan—Similkameen which calls upon the Government to seek a full and impartial inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act to investigate fully all matters involving the Westbank Indian Band, most particularly its Chief and Council, and officials of the B.C. Regional Office of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-291, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal work-place and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce for first reading a Bill to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and in transportation at the federal level and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising.

The Bill would make it a responsibility of employers under federal jurisdiction to provide a smoke-free working environment. The Bill is different from other legislation before the House in that it would introduce an objective criterion for the establishment of what is a smoke-free environment. It would provide protection to the public in places under federal jurisdiction and in transportation.

The second part of the Bill deals with the inclusion of cigarettes and cigarette products in the Hazardous Products Act so that there could be a complete ban on cigarette advertising and promotion of all kinds.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 10 in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is acceptable to the Government and the documents will be tabled immediately.

GARLON HERBICIDE RESEARCH TRIALS

Motion No. 10—Mr. Fulton:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, reports, documents and other correspondence within the federal Government and its agencies with respect to Garlon herbicide research trials in the Skeena River watershed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notices of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 6, in the name of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano); No. 9 in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena; No. 18 in the name of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell

(Mr. Boudria); and No. 26 in the name of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). If Your Honour would do that I have replies to deal with on all four.

FINDINGS OF STUDY TEAM ON SERVICES AND SUBSIDIES TO BUSINESS

Motion No. 6—Mr. Gagliano:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House the initial findings of the mixed study team on Services and Subsidies to Business to the Ministerial Task Force.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Study Team Report on Services and Subsidies to Business, along with all other study team reports, was laid before the House on March 11, 1986. I would therefore ask the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW

Motion No. 26—Mr. Caccia:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House copies of all follow-up studies to the Task Force on Program Review.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) indicated in the House on June 6, 1986, that the follow-up study on the environment will be tabled in the House on the same basis as the original reports as soon as translation and printing are completed. I would therefore ask the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I will not withdraw my motion in view of the fact that weeks have gone by since that statement was made and the report is causing anxiety and uncertainty. The report should be tabled now.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 73, the question is transferred for debate.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you call Motion No. P-9 now.

DATA RESPECTING GARLON HERBICIDE RESEARCH TRIALS

Motion No. 9—Mr. Fulton:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, notes, minutes of meetings, reports, documents and other communications between the government, the Forest Pest Management Institute and Dow Chemical with respect to Garlon herbicide research trials in the Skeena River watershed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Departments of the Environment, Fisheries and Oceans and the Ministry of State (Forestry) have informed us that the documents requested cannot be released pursuant to Section 20(1)(b) of the Access to Information Act. I therefore ask the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have not had a chance to look at the precise nature of those documents listed in Motion No. 9 but I cannot imagine that they all fall under that Section of the Freedom of Information Act. I would ask that this motion as well be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 73, the matter is transferred for debate.

What is the wish of the Parliamentary Secretary with regard to Motion No. P-18?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do have an answer which would result in my requesting the Hon. Member to withdraw his motion, but in view of the fact that he is not here I do not wish to proceed along those lines.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has two options. It can stand the motion and wait a while, in which case we could return to it, or else it could simply order it transferred for debate.

Mr. Caccia: Stand.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a member of the Hon. Member's Party has indicated that he feels it is a appropriate that it stand and I would agree with that contention.

Mr. Speaker: We will consider the matter stood until an appropriate time later when the Hon. Member returns.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are thirteen report stage motions on today's Order Paper in amendment to Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament.

Motions Nos. 1 and 2 appear to go beyond the scope of the Bill and, pursuant to Citation 773(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, I would propose to rule these motions out of order.

Motion No. 3 will be the object of a separate debate and a separate vote.

Motions Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 were all moved and negatived in Committee and will not be selected for debate and will therefore be dropped from the Notice Paper.

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act

[English]

Motion No. 10 attempts to give rights to a group of employees specifically excluded in Clause 4(2) and is contrary to the principle of the Bill adopted at second reading stage. I would refer the Hon. Member to Citation 773(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Motion No. 11 will be debated and voted on separately.

[Translation]

Motion No. 12 gives the Chair some procedural difficulty in that it contravenes the basic principle of the Bill as adopted at the second reading stage and I would refer the Hon. Member to Citation 764(1).

Motion No. 13 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

To recap, the Chair has procedural difficulty with Motions Nos. 1, 2, 10 and 12. Motions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, having all been moved in committee, are not selected.

If Hon. Members wish to make procedural representations to the Chair, I am disposed to hear them now. If more time is required, I would be prepared to hear arguments at the conclusion of the debate on the motions that are now in order, if that is the choice, and we could begin with Motion No. 3.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would wish to hear procedural argument on Motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is trying to indicate that it is now ready to hear procedural arguments on the ruling or to hear them at the end and begin with Motion No. 3, whichever is the wish of the House. If Hon. Members wish to make procedural arguments now, that is fine.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would rather proceed seriatim if you do not mind, and then we could deal with the others as they come before us.

[Translation]

The matter of the admissibility of Motions Nos. 1 and 2, in the name of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), is a rather complicated one.

The Chair will recall that the whole issue of whether employees of the House of Commons were subject to the Public Service Staff Relations Act or came under the authority of the Canada Labour Relations Board was challenged in the courts. The Federal Court handed down a ruling that was disappointing for the employees, who nevertheless persevered and took their case to the Supreme Court. On Monday, June 23, the day before yesterday, the Supreme Court received a request to appeal in connection with the matter now before the House.

Since the Supreme Court has not ruled whether the appeal is admissible, and since the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East says specifically that we should, and I will read the motion:

That Bill C-45, be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 1 the following:

"(c) any Supreme Court of Canada decision on certification which shall take supremacy over this Act."

Since the Supreme Court's decision might be affirmative, that is, favourable to the employees, I think we could argue that the motion is admissible in that it anticipates the possibility that the courts might rule that House of Commons employees are subject to the Canada Labour Code.

That is my only argument, and that is all I wanted to say.

As for Motion No. 2, also in the name of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), this amendment proposes to include the legislation now in effect for federal public servants, that is, the Public Service Employment Act and, of course, the Public Service Staff Relations Act. This is mainly an attempt to include in the Bill the various appeal procedures for appointments and everything that implies.

Here again, there is a good point that can be made, and I did so on second reading, Mr. Speaker, namely that the Public Service Employment Act should apply to House of Commons employees, so that people will know there is a staffing system that is fair and equitable for everyone.

Now I fail to understand why the Chair has grouped 1 and 2, when one motion appeals to the Supreme Court and the other asks for inclusion of an existing Act, an Act of Parliament, an Act concerning staff relations and an Act concerning employment. I do not see why the Chair—perhaps it would care to explain why—I fail to see how one can make a connection between 1 and 2. My point is that No. 2 in particular should be seen as distinct from No. 1, since it has no connection at all with the Supreme Court's decision. In any case, I think the Public Service Employment Act should be included as an amendment to Bill C-45.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make procedural arguments at any great length. I would like to, but time is short as we are near the end of the session. We face a problem choosing between the need to consider an inadequate law and the prospect of no law at all. Under the circumstances I do not propose to challenge or to take issue with Your Honour's ruling, although I might do so at another time.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for his procedural non-intervention.

The Hon. Member is asking the Chair why Motions Nos. 1 and 2 are grouped in the ruling. They are only grouped from the point of view of the Chair that they are both out of order. That is the only way in which they connect in the ruling.

In the case of Motion No. 1, as the Hon. Member clearly indicates and knows, it introduces a concept beyond the concepts adopted at second reading, as does Motion No. 1, which introduces or attempts to introduce into the Bill matters which go beyond what was originally adopted by the House in principle at second reading.

Clearly, the Hon. Member is making an argument as to the advisability of changing the law, not as to the procedural admissibility of the two motions. I think he will know that the Chair has no option but to find that the amendments cannot be accepted when there is procedural inadmissibility. On that basis we will call Motion No. 3.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

That Bill C-45, be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 11 to 42 at page 6 and lines 1 to 5 at page 7.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to ensure that this law, which provides collective bargaining and certain other rights to employees of the House of Commons, the Library of Parliament, and the Senate, will also apply to the staff of Members. We are talking about some 1,000 or more employees, since each Member generally has about three employees. The parts which would be diluted according to the amendment are the parts in subclause 4(2) which exclude application of the vast bulk of the Bill to anyone who works for a Member, a Minister of the Crown, a member of the Senate, a Leader, a Whip, or research services connected to any particular caucus.

Throughout debate in committee on Bill C-45, and prior thereto, I did not hear any particularly good reason put forward as to why the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada should in fact exclude totally or almost totally from any kind of employee rights people who work for Members and people who work in the other capacities defined in subclause 4(2). Nor have I heard an explanation of why it is that Members' staff are treated as particularly crucial and yet, for instance, large portions of Ministers' staff are already unionized because they are departmental staff seconded to Ministers' offices. They are doing many of the same jobs which are done by the staff in my office or in the offices of other Hon. Members. Despite the fact that those staff even have the right to strike under certain circumstances, Ministers seem to get by with unionism in their midst in terms of their particular staff.

During the course of the discussion we heard representations based upon the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It was pointed out that very few workers in the entire country were totally excluded from collective bargaining rights. Farm workers and domestic workers in Ontario, or certain categories like those, perhaps hearken back to the days of the domestic servitude. However, in general, working people in every jurisdiction have the acknowledged right to form themselves into unions, to bargain collectively, or to seek to bargain collectively with their employers.

As we have seen in the case of the Gainers strike in Alberta, those rights can be truncated. They can be inadequate, and workers who seek to exercise those rights can be cruelly victimized or very cruelly treated. Nonetheless, in general our Parliaments across Canada have granted those rights.

Employees in positions with the Legislature of Ontario were pointed out as an example. One assumes that those positions are just as crucial as the positions of employees of Members of the House of Commons and the other designated positions excluded in subclause 4(2). Those Ontario employees have the right to form a union and have formed a union. In the case of the employees of the Ontario NDP caucus in the Ontario Legislature, they have in fact had and exercised collective bargaining rights on an amicable basis for some 18 years or 20 years and now have a mature bargaining relationship. Somehow the NDP caucus has been able to continue to move on from one year to the next and has been able to do its job. Occasionally there have been some angry bargaining sessions and some dispute, as there will be between any group of employees and employers. At the same time, difficult situations have very often been resolved in a more equitable and fairer way because of the existence of the union.

For example, after the 1981 provincial election in Ontario, the NDP suffered a set-back and had to cut staff in its bargaining unit. The NDP was able to reach a much more amicable solution to a very difficult situation because it could deal with the staff on a collective basis rather than staff who happened to work for a defeated Member and found themselves out on the street, while other people with perhaps far less seniority and far less experience were able to keep their jobs.

Since Your Honour has ruled other motions out of order, I think I can comment generally without straying from the purpose of the motion before us now. When we looked at the question of the status of Members' staff, it was clear that that status was somewhat different from the status of some other employees in the House of Commons. The reason was that Members of Parliament—and I will speak to them, as the largest group—direct, supervise, hire, can fire, and certainly discipline any employees in their offices. The House of Commons pays the cheques, does the administrative work and that kind of thing, but that is all. Therefore, the situation is rather different from that of a supervisor, a foreman or forewoman in a plant or office. They direct, hire, and fire people working for them in a particular section of the plant or in a typing pool or something of that nature. The difference is that in a plant or an office the supervisor, foreman, or forewoman is an employee himself or herself. Members are not employees; they owe their employment to election by their electorate in their individual ridings. They may be accountable within their caucus or under certain rules to you, Mr. Speaker, but basically Members of Parliament are not employees of the House of Commons and are not exercising delegated authority. Even when we admit that, however, it does not stop the fact that as far as the employees are concerned, they tend to be linked not only to the Member but to the caucus to which the Member belongs.

To a greater or lesser extent the employees of different caucuses work as a unit. For example, training is provided in the three caucuses to employees if there is some caucus priority or campaign on; let us say, the task force on taxation which the current Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) led effectively when his Party was in opposition two years or three years ago. When some priority like that comes into force, Members' staff are pressed into service, working toward some common goals.

It is also the case that the job is stressful and high pressured. People tend to burn out. The present situation is an extremely difficult one for employees if they are given no rights at all. This situation will prevail if the presently proposed form of Bill C-45 goes forward and no change is made. There is still time to make that change.

The only protection provided—and it is an unusual one—is under the unjust dismissal provisions of Part III or Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. That is the only protection being given to Members' staff and to other designated staff in subclause 4(2), the clause which we are discussing right now. Therefore, those employees are supposedly guaranteed a 40-hour week with no more than eight hours of overtime. They are also guaranteed a certain number of holidays and that they will at least be paid the federal minimum wage. They are not paid adequately in most cases for the work they do. Nonetheless, their pay tends to exceed by a significant margin the federal minimum wage, so it is not an issue.

In terms of working hours, there may be certain cases where a Member's employee might decide to seek the protection of the Canada Labour Relations Board, through the Ministry of Labour's inspectors or however, because the individual is being asked to work 50, 55 or 60 hours a week, not just for one or two emergency weeks but on a continuous basis. I think we better be realistic about what that recourse really means for a Member's employee.

Suppose the employee feels that he or she is not being adequately paid for over-time or not being paid at all for overtime, yet is expected to work eight or ten hours extra a week on a continual basis? Suppose that person complains, what happens then? Does someone from the federal Department of Labour or the Canada Labour Relations Board come in to find the Member saying: "You have no right to come in to find out what is happening because this is Parliament and my privileges are being interfered with". That could well occur.

Second, what happens to the employee if an inspector comes in, reads the riot act to the Member, gets the Member to agree that he or she has been working the Member too hard and in future will only work that employee for 40 or 48 hours a week? What happens then, Mr. Speaker? In the first place the Member is free to do it all over again. Second, the Member is also free to take action which will make it extremely difficult for the employee to want to continue. For example, the Member could discipline the employee; suspend the employee without pay or could demote the employee and give that employee the most menial job of the three or four jobs in the Member's office. The Member could possibly demote the employee in terms of pay as well. While case law would indicate that that amounts to constructive dismissal, and is something that could be debated or disputed in the courts, nonetheless the employee is in a situation where if that employee really wants to fight he or she has to keep on complaining until the Member decides to fire the individual. If an employee is fired, then he or she has the right to go to the Canada Labour Relations Board under the jurisdiction of the unjust dismissal clauses. I am not sure how effective those clauses have been, but it is certainly very flimsy protection for Members staff.

I suggested during the course of the committee hearings that if the Government was not prepared to give collective bargaining rights to employees, at the very least the Government should allow grievances to go to arbitration in the event of discipline, demotion or dismissal. That seems to me to be the very least protection we should give employees who do a vital job on behalf of Members and on behalf of others in other defined areas. I regret very much there was no give at all as far as government Members were concerned on that particular front and that we could take no action there.

I plead with Members opposite in this instance to agree to this amendment which will have the effect, as far as collective bargaining rights are concerned, of bringing into the Bill staff of Members and other staff in the designated areas who are now excluded. The Government pretends it is giving collective bargaining rights to all House of Commons employees but, in fact, the Government is excluding something like one-third of them because of this section, unless it is removed.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to speak on this item. My colleague has outlined many of the difficulties that can be experienced by employees in the House of Commons. We are all aware of a litany of problems over the years that have come up because those employees have not had the protection of bargaining rights and the protection of a collective agreement.

I would urge the House to consider strongly and seriously the resolutions put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion to be debated will be Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I should like to move the motion in her name.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to move the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (for Ms. Copps) moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-45, be amended in Clause 69 by striking out lines 36 to 46 at page 38 and lines 1 to 27 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"69. Where expenses are incurred in the adjudication of any dispute, provisions similar to those in the Public Service Staff Relations Act apply."

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the amendment which proposes that adjudication expenses be equitably distributed. The way the Bill is now drafted, if there is a dispute with respect to an appointment, a position or a demotion, in other words if an individual learns all of a sudden that he no longer holds his position because he has been demoted, if for one reason or another the individual is the object of an appointment other than the one he holds, Bill C-45 provides that the adjudication expenses are to be shared by the parties involved, namely the employer and the employee.

The amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, as I said, seeks to restore a certain degree of fairness. It is mainly based on the Public Service Employment Act, which now applies to some 275,000 public servants and under which unfair or improper appointments may be appealed.

Whenever the Public Service Commission is called upon to appoint an appeal panel, of course the Commission pays the costs; it pays for the services provided in connection with that appeal. Being different, the Labour Code allows employees, through their labour unions, to negotiate matters that are non-negotiable in the public sector; there is a difference there, and I would like to deal with that, Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes at my disposal.

[English]

We are dealing here with a system that borrows from two pieces of legislation. Under the Canada Labour Code we know that the employees through their unions can negotiate classification standards and procedures. They can also negotiate appointments and promotions, all that affects one's standing in his or her job.

Under the Public Service Employment Act that is not the way it operates. Under the Public Service Employment Act, as I said before, which prevails for approximately 275,000 public servants, the process is different. There is no negotiating of the classification standards between the union and the employer, although the Government promised to bring that in some day. We have not seen any of that yet. You cannot negotiate classification standards and you cannot negotiate nominations or appointments. You cannot make a deal with the employer as to process with regard to such important things as where you stand in the organization, what kind of work you will be doing and what remuneration you will get. It stands as a system by itself distinct from the Canada Labour Code.

• (1550)

Clause 69 of Bill C-45 is the same as Section 97 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, except for one paragraph which I would like to draw to the attention of the House. Paragraph (4), which was an amendment brought in through committee, says:

Where a grievance respecting a matter referred to in paragraph 63(1)(d), (e) or (f) is referred to adjudication, the adjudicator's remuneration and expenses shall be borne equally by the parties.

Let us take an example of subsection (f) where an employee finds himself retrograded, that is—

[Translation]

He is being demoted in his own job. The employee could be told by his or her employer, supervisor or office manager; "I am sorry, but you no longer hold the position of a security corporal. You are now holding the position of a junior officer or a simple security guard". The supervisor does not have to provide any reason or any explanation—that is that.

The employee feels hurt and shocked and wants to fight his or her employer's decision, and the only way to do so under Bill C-45 is to ask that the grievance be submitted to arbitration. The arbitrator's expenses and salary will all be payed for by both the employee and the employer. And only when the arbitrator has been appointed is the employee entitled to know the reasons for his or her demotion, and this, Mr. Speaker, I find unfair.

I want it to be on record that this clause of Bill C-45 seems unfair to me. It is not a clause that we are ready to support. We firmly believe that if our employees are to have a positive, modern, and progressive system, it must be recognized that they have a right to be heard, that they are entitled to a certain degree of job security, that they are also entitled to know beforehand why they are demoted or appointed to a less favourable position.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good amendment and I support the arguments made by my hon. friend, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). The concept of this amendment was discussed in committee. The amendment was not put forward in these particular terms, but I hope it is acceptable to and accepted by the Government.

On a number of occasions opposition Members in the committee, which was a constructive committee, sought to make improvements to the Bill and to be helpful. However, this is not now a Bill which we feel comfortable supporting because of the problems which I will talk about at third reading stage. I think that this idea which came from our side of the House should have been seriously considered by the Government. I hope this amendment will be accepted.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain briefly the Government's position on this. The Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and others in the House who served on the committee will know that as a result of representations by employees the Government did move on amendments to allow for the adjudication of classification issues. The Government provided for an adjudicator to be selected from outside the Public Service Staff Relations Board. For that reason, it is necessary for the costs to be picked up by both parties. The Public Service Staff Relations Board does not presently deal with the adjudication of classification matters. It does not have any experts on staff who could do the job. Therefore, we must go outside the Board, as stipulated in the Bill, and the cost will have to be picked up by the employer and employee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 11. Mr. Gauthier (for Ms. Copps), seconded by Mr. Frith, moves:

That Bill C-45, be amended in Clause 69 by striking out lines 36 to 46 at page 38 and lines 1 to 27 at page 39.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division stands deferred.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre) moved:

That Bill C-45, be amended in Clause 73 by striking out lines 29 and 30 at page 41.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the section of the Bill put forward by the Government which we thought was the most effective to raise the issue of the denial of the right to strike to people working on Parliament Hill. Clause 73 is a short clause which quite specifically prohibits the right to strike.

During committee stage of the Bill I sought to put forward a number of amendments which essentially would have paralleled the situation that prevails in the Public Service of Canada. It is not a perfect arrangement but it is the provision by which the people in the Public Service have the right to either seek conciliation on the right to strike or, in the event of negotiation breakdown, have their dispute sent to an arbitrator.

There are also provisions within the Public Service which allow for the designation of certain employees as being so essential that they do not enjoy the right to strike. While I regret that those are defined in far too broad a manner, the protection to allow Parliament to continue its work is in that pattern of amendments. For the purposes of this debate, and since the Government has made its position very clear, we have simply asked that Clause 73 of the Bill be deleted. Clause 73 states:

No employee shall participate in a strike.

I presume that means a strike here on Parliament Hill. I suppose they can strike on their part-time job if they must have a part-time job in order to make ends meet.

If the House accepts this amendment, as I hope it will, I hope it will also very quickly agree to put in the other necessary pieces of legislation which can be borrowed from the Public Service Staff Relations Act in order to ensure that members of the staff of the House of Commons and Parliament in general will have the same collective bargaining rights as those which exist right now for people working elsewhere in the Public Service of Canada. Obviously, the first step is a step of principle, whether we agree on this issue.

We are asked why employees on Parliament Hill should have the right to strike. The answer is, "Why not?". This is a free society. It has always been accepted that in a free society employees should have the right to withdraw their labour in order to arrive at a better version of equality between employers and employees. A strike is a highly orchestrated form of job action. Except in Alberta, employees who strike have their old employment guaranteed for a certain period of time. They do not lose touch completely with their job as they would in an organized workplace if they decided to collectively get together and hand in their resignations. A strike is a way of putting pressure on the employer and dramatizing a situation which has become so crucial that the employees have no other way of getting reasonable consideration of the problem troubling them.

● (1600)

I think Members know that the problem on Parliament Hill is not essentially one of wages or the number of hours per year people are asked to work. It is a matter of job rules, staff classification, and alleged nepotism in appointments to certain positions. If collective bargaining for a couple of years does not start to sort these problems out, then what will happen where employees are told they cannot bargain over classification and staffing because it has been excluded in the Bill? The answer is: I do not know.

Members know that in other jurisdictions, where employees are so incensed at their treatment by employers, the sole effect of a law which says strikes are illegal is that illegal strikes take place. I do not anticipate that that will be the situation here, at least in the near future. Nonetheless, it has been known to occur elsewhere. The Gainers strike in Alberta is perhaps a case in point. If the employees strike for more than 24 hours they effectively lose their jobs. The employer has the right to hire scab workers and is not required to take the employees back and kick the scab workers out when the strike is settled. In the circumstances that is almost a recipe for what is happening out there where the employees feel they have no other recourse.

On Parliament Hill one has to ask whether the people who fix the furniture are essential to the day-to-day operations of Parliament. That is true also of the people who prepare the coffee on the fourth floor of the Wellington Building where almost no Members are located. If there were only two buses running instead of six, would that impede in a material way the work of Parliament for a brief period of time? The record of committee hearings are already several weeks in arrears. If they were to be delayed for a further week or so I would regret it, but if we are not getting them in 24 hours right now and we are still doing our job, then is a strike which delayed them a little longer going to materially affect our ability to do our jobs?

In other words, even on Parliament Hill it should be possible for working people to have the same kind of collective bargaining rights which exist elsewhere. The same kind of disciplines as well. Arbitration is not a particularly good response. Among other things, any arbitrator who comes to resolve a problem here is going to have great difficulty understanding the very unusual environment. It is a very unusual workplace. The people who know best are those who work here all the time, the employees and management.

If a strike is the ultimate recourse, then it very much concentrates the mind when people get down to the nitty-gritty of negotiations. We have seen too many examples in the Public Service of Canada where the employer simply drags his feet, and will not bargain in a meaningful way and in good faith. The attitude is that if they tough it out then it will go to the arbitrator and they will get what they want. They may or may not get what they want, but certainly as far as employees are concerned it is extremely frustrating because they have to leave these issues, on which they are looking for a constructive compromise, in the hands of an arbitrator. On the other side, the employer runs the risk of decisions such as that in Toronto some years ago involving the Metropolitan Toronto Police where it was decided they always had to have two constables in a patrol car. That was something which surely should have been settled by negotiation and not by arbitration.

My time is running short so I hope a few other Members of my caucus will contribute to this debate as well. I do not see why we have to put a glass cage around the Houses of Parliament. We should be an example of progressive, not regressive legislation. Unfortunately, Bill C-45 is the latter. I am quite prepared to admit that it is better than having no Bill at all, but it could have shown quite concretely what the Government meant when it said it wanted to have progressive labour relations across Canada. Clearly that is not the intention of the Government. By denying the right to strike and the other restrictions in this Bill, the Government has created a situation where the employees are getting some bargaining rights but will basically be 20, 30 or 40 years behind where they should be.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the Hon. Member because this is one of the issues where the Government did not move. As I said earlier, there was considerable movement at committee stage with respect to independent arbitration. I think I speak for all Members when I say we feel we improved the Bill that way. However, there is no question in our minds that the unfettered ability of Parliament to function is too important to put at risk through the possibility of a strike. Whether it be a strike by any one particular section of the employees on the Hill, the problem remains the same. The Parliament of Canada cannot be put at risk. We do not feel it would be correct for us to put in place a law which may put at risk a Member trying to serve his constituents on the one hand, fulfil his or her oath of office, and at the same time have to decide whether or not to cross a picket line. For that reason there was no movement whatsoever on this particular issue. I would also point out that the Hon. Member made no stipulations with respect to essential services. For that reason as well we are not prepared to support this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to make a few comments because the position of our spokesperson, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, and of our Party generally has been that indeed the last words of the Parliamentary Secretary are the key to the argument, namely that no service has been designated as being essential. Perhaps this is where we would have liked the Government to accept amendments to clear up the situation.

In our view it is neither essential nor necessary to eliminate or take away the right to strike of employees who are not essential to the operations of Parliament. In this respect we also acknowledge the existence of the major academic question of parliamentary privilege: where does it begin and where does it end? We also know full well that this is not an easy question—it is a very complex question—and that many people who are much more intelligent and much more conversant with the matter than we are have been giving serious consideration to it for a number of years.

I remember a citation from Beauchesne's which I looked up and which in my opinion very neatly defines the position of many Members on the right-to-strike provision, and I would like to read it, Mr. Speaker, because I think this puts it very clearly—it is a quote from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms—and it reads as follows:

> The control and management of the officers of the Houses are as completely within the privilege of the Houses as any regulation of its own proceedings within its own walls. These officers are under the guidance of certain rules and orders of the House which are among the regulation of its proceedings and as essentially matters of privilege as the appointment of committees, the conduct of public business and the procedure of the Houses, generally, including the acts of the Speaker himself in the Chair. Neither the Government nor any other authority has the power to deal with the staff of the House of Commons unless specially authorized to do so by statute or resolution of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I think Beauchesne comes fairly close to a definition of parliamentary privilege, that employees of the House of Commons are with us in these Parliament buildings and that it is difficult to take a group and say: these people are not essential and those are. This has always been a very difficult matter. We cannot agree entirely with the Government's decision to drop the right to strike from this Bill and decide against giving certain individuals the right to withdraw their services. Considering the wisdom of the people who sat on this committee, I would have thought, and I said so at second reading, that it would be possible to find a definition of what constitutes an essential service: one whose withdrawal jeopardizes either the safety or the well-being of the organization. And that is how it is defined in the Public Service Staff Relations Act. It is also pretty clearly defined in the legislation covering public servants in general, the employees of the Public Service of Canada, which says that a person in a given position is essential and thus excluded from the collective bargaining process and therefore does not have the right to strike, and that others do have the right to strike.

So I would have thought we could have been flexible about this, and I think the employees themselves would also have liked a distinction made between what is essential and what is not. My point is, Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat reluctant to have to admit that with all the assistance we got, we were unable to convince the Government that it was possible to make a distinction between essential and non-essential. We lost on that score, and I must admit that I find this amendment a step backward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the vote of the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) was recorded. He voted and left the House immediately after.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa is right. The Hon. Member's name will be striken off the record.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if you were to check, I believe there might be disposition to allow the vote just taken, whatever it was, to be applied—

Mr. Gauthier: What do you mean? It was on my amendment.

Mr. Deans: It was a good amendment; it is just that I did not know what the vote was. In any event, I think Your Honour might find disposition to apply the vote just taken to Motion No. 13.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to apply the vote just taken to Motion No. 13?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore the next question is on Motion No. 13, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (for President of the Privy Council) moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties and if Your Honour were to seek unanimous consent to proceed immediately to third reading I think it would be agreed to by all Parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to proceed to third reading of the Bill at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. de Cotret (for President of the Privy Council) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in this third reading debate of Bill C-45 there are a couple of matters I should like to put on record. We think this is an important occasion, one for which parliamentary employees have waited with utmost patience. Perhaps I will exhibit a little patience and let the House clear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we have order, please, so that we can listen to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I ask those Members who wish to continue conversations to do so outside the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as I was about to say, this is the first time in history that parliamentary employees will be able to enjoy the benefits of contemporary and progressive labour relations legislation which we have tailored to the special circumstances of Parliament. We have given them the ability to enter into collective bargaining. They will also be protected, for the first time ever, under Part III and Part IV of the Canada Labour Code.

I should also like to say that this was my first experience with the legislative committee system. I must say that it is a very satisfactory method by which the House can consider legislation. Our committee operated in the exact way which the McGrath committee planned. There was no partisanship on that committee. There was no time wasted. There was a concern exhibited by all Members for the employees on the Hill. Also there was a concerted effort by all Members to improve the Bill and to respond to employee concerns.

The members of the committee listened, as did the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). We achieved considerable progress and responded on the part of the Government with a package of concrete amendments. It is fair to say that the progress made was due to the representations by committee members as a result of some very helpful testimony from organizations such as NABET, PSAC, the security service, and parliamentary employee groups. In fact, the committee heard from individual employees on the Hill.

There was one message which came through loud and clear, and that was a crucial need on the Hill for the provision of a route of redress on staffing matters and on the question of employee classification. The Government brought forward amendments to address those problems. Matters such as the termination of employment of the employee, the demotion of the employee, and the employer's evaluation of an employee's skill, fitness and ability where an employee has been denied an appointment, will now become adjudicable.

These amendments allow for the representatives of both parties, that is the employer and the employee, to select the adjudicator in the case of staffing and classification grievances. In instances where the two parties are unable to agree on the selection of the adjudicator, the amendment would provide for the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board to select an independent third party adjudicator to resolve the grievance.

The amendments also provide for independent third party adjudication of classification matters, subject to a provision that there would be a one-year grace period provided in which the administration of the House of Commons, the Library of Parliament, and the Senate will be expected to establish classification standards and procedures and to deal with classification grievances. If the circumstances surrounding the original grievance are still in existence one year after the Bill comes into force, then the employee will have access to adjudication.

Another matter raised in committee was the question of the recognition of cards already signed by employees which must be resubmitted to the Public Service Staff Relations Board. After considering the very reasonable suggestions put forward by the employees, the Government brought forward an amendment which allows the Public Service Staff Relations Board to recognize the union membership cards which were signed by various employee groups on the Hill. This will save the employees a great deal of time in that they will not be forced to obtain new evidence. This will also allow them to embark upon the collective bargaining process that much sooner.

• (1710)

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you were to examine the Committee's deliberations and the points put forward by various witnesses, six concerns were raised. Two, namely, third party adjudication on staffing and classification issues and the question of recognizing the union membership cards, were addressed by the Government in committee. Three others, the question of making classification issues and staffing issues negotiable; technological changes and the allowing of union grievances to be presented were considered by the Government. There was a commitment given that if these were to form any part of the forthcoming amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act these amendments would be brought forward simultaneously to the Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act.

The last item, the right to strike, was rejected by the Government as it was considered inappropriate to our parliamentary concept.

It is the Government's belief that these amendments go a long way toward giving parliamentary employees a right of redress for staffing and classification issues. It has taken a long time, but parliamentary employees will finally begin to have a say in the determination of their working conditions. We feel this Bill is an important and an historic starting point in this process. I urge the Members to give speedy passage to this Bill at third reading so that our employees on the Hill can begin to enjoy the modern labour management relationship on Parliament Hill which they so richly deserve.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): As I rise on third reading, Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate to emphasize that the debate on Bill C-45 has been both constructive and non-partisan. I suggest it is to the credit of all Hon. Members of the House to stress that it was a substantive debate, and at no time did I hear partisan remarks about this Bill, and I am pleased about that.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-45 is Parliament's response to the need of its employees to form unions to defend their rights as workers. This is not a new issue by any means. I have been in the House for 14 years and practically every year, or every second or third year, the question of a Bill came up. Since the adoption of the Charter in 1982—as Hon. Members are aware, it acknowledges the right of Canadians to form associations—this question has become more urgent and the employees of the House of Commons saw fit to take action.

When we consider the Government's decision to introduce Bill C-45, a piece of legislation that is both complex and important, "An Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament", I think the subject of this legislation and the way it was dealt with is first of all, to the credit of the employees themselves, who, as we know, promoted the concept of organizing and obtained the support of their colleagues at work. Mr. Speaker, today it is recognized that the cards signed by the employees before the Bill was tabled had the effect of advancing and promoting the concept of union organizing on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Speaker, it is also a fact that these cards and this initiative were the result of work done by people at all levels, people who were concerned about employee-employer relations and about instances of unfairness to employees which were sometimes impossible to remedy.

We were unable to include the right to strike in the Bill, Mr. Speaker, and as I said earlier when we were considering the amendments, I would have preferred to see employees designated or identified according to whether they were essential or non-essential to parliamentary operations. I quoted Beauchesne because, whether we like it or not, parliamentary privilege prevails, and I am convinced that all employees are part of the parliamentary unit and as such, we are all dependent on and bound to one another by the concept of parliamentary privilege. The majority won. Perhaps one day, we might be able to do something else.

The major provisions of the Bill, as the Parliamentary Secretary said a while ago, deal mostly with the right of appeal to a third party about matters as serious as dismissal, demotion, refusal of a promotion or misapplication of norms of classification. We must clearly understand, Mr. Speaker, that, in Bill C-45, the Government is not agreeing to the negotiation of norms of classification, because there will be no negotiation about what people will do, only about application of the norms to determine whether the work done by the employee corresponds with the classification level, which will naturally have been determined by the employer.

There is a difference and I hope that it is clear. The norms of classification will not be negotiable; what will be negotiable will be their application. Staffing will be negotiable, but I imagine that the job description will be determined by the employer and it is how the position will be filled that will be negotiable, which I believe to be a good thing. In any case, it was because of these two problems, staffing and classification, that the employees worked persistently for many years to obtain the right to unionize so that there would be some fairness in the system, so that their rights as employees would be guaranteed, and so that, if they deem it appropriate, they would be able to obtain redress in case of an injustice or an unfair treatment.

Mr. Speaker, amendments to certain terms in the French text were put forward in committee, as well as a number of minor technical amendments which I shall not be dealing with.

But I would like to return to the matter I consider important, important enough to warrant an amendment—arbitration to resolve grievances.

It is quite clear to me that all that was sought was a requirement for the employer to pay for the expenses incurred with respect to appeals or grievances that might be lodged by employees. The Government has deemed fit not to support that amendment, and it will be saying in Bill C-45 that the expenses relating to grievances shall be borne by both employer and employee. The people in charge, that is the third parties, incur expenses of course, and this will be borne by both the employer and the employee. In other terms, where there is a conflict or grievance concerning a staffing decision, promotion or demotion, dismissal or lay-off, such matters will henceforth be referred to a third party, but the employee shall bear half of the expenses, his share of the expenses incurred by the arbitrator, the conciliator or the person who will be in charge of resolving the grievance.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House believe that such a practice is not what we are accustomed to. At the federal level we operate differently with our 250,000-odd federal civil servants. What we have there is an appeal procedure that is identical to the grievance procedure put forward in C-45, except that under the appeal procedure, which is administered by the Public Service Commission of Canada, expenses are entirely paid for by the general public, the public Treasury through the Commission. This means that employees can appeal without having to spend money.

This is why we introduced the amendment. It was turned down, which admittedly is a defeat, but the idea was good. It was worthwhile in my view.

• (1720)

[English]

I do not want to speak too long on this Bill but I would like to state clearly that I believe Bill C-45 provides the House of Commons, the Senate, and the Library of Parliament with a framework of representation which is, I hope, in the interests of all employees. Issues of concern included provision in the Bill for grievance procedure, job classification, staffing, appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers and lay-offs which could not be subject to an arbitral award. The exclusion of political staff and the denial to employees of the right to strike has been addressed by everyone in the House, and the conclusions are quite evident.

During committee hearings a number of amendments were proposed by the Government which have, at least in part, met the concerns of employees. The stronger grievance procedure which I just described will come into force after one year. This can be dealt with positively and will be a step in the right direction. With the introduction and acceptance of some amendments the legislation is better. It improves the process with regard to justice and equity. Bill C-45 does not allow for the transfer of certification orders without a vote of the members of the union. NABET believes that this will add to the delay for the union.

I would like to put some of the concerns of the Public Service Alliance on the record. PSAC believes that the grievance procedure is an improvement but does not go far enough. It will act as a basis for future negotiations but does not meet with PSAC approval. PSAC would like the union to be able to take policy issues to grievance. This is not allowed under the amended legislation. PSAC is concerned about the one year the employer has been granted to reorganize classifications. Until the one year is up, the unions cannot grieve anything regarding classification.

In conclusion, I would like to say that my colleague, the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), has participated in debate on this issue, was in committee, and did her utmost to improve this Bill. Speaking in her name and the name of my colleagues I would like to join with all other parliamentarians in hoping that Bill C-45, an Act respecting unionization on the Hill, will meet the hopes and expectations of our employees. Anything can be improved, as I am sure this Bill can be.

I believe we are today taking a historic step in the right direction. I know that the employees are anxious to operate effectively under this legislation. I know there will be some wrinkles to be ironed out. We have taken a non-partisan approach on this Bill. Canadians have a commitment to giving employees' organizations the right to get the best deal possible with the employer. I join all of my colleagues in telling the employees that we are happy and proud that they pushed us into doing this. We are very happy and proud that they have succeeded in getting something which they have wanted to obtain for a long time. We wish them the best.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are all pleased that the process on Bill C-45 is coming to an end because it has been long and time consuming. I am not sure what position the Liberal Party is taking on third reading of the Bill, but although we have acted this afternoon to expedite the Bill in order to ensure that it will receive approval by the Senate before the end of this week, we will oppose the Bill at third reading because my Party feels that, although it is a step forward to have some form of labour relations legislation for employees on Parliament Hill 120 years or so after Confederation, it is bad to have a Bill as flawed as this one. We regret that some fundamental changes have not been made in the Bill in order to recognize that Members' staffs should have the same bargaining rights as employees in the private sector and elsewhere in the Government of Canada.

When this process began we were told that the aim was to give employees on Parliament Hill the same bargaining rights which they would enjoy if they worked for the Public Service of Canada. There is a bit of a con game being played because what is provided in Bill C-45 is considerably less than that. One reason is that the Public Service of Canada has a long history of labour relations behind it now. There is a very intricate and elaborate network of consultation on many subjects which cannot be bargained under the Public Service Staff Relations Act. There is the Public Service Commission, nominally responsible to Parliament, which is in place to ensure that the merit principle is respected. There is a well-established process under which employees who feel they have been badly treated in staffing actions can appeal to the PSC. There is a similar process by which classification decisions can be subject to a review outside of an employee's particular department, although still granted by management. What that means is that the negotiated portion of what goes on in the Public Service of Canada is part of a complex of labour relations mechanisms and institutions, and simply to take a stripped down version of the negotiation part and say that the employees on the Hill are getting it all is to seriously mislead those who look to see what is happening.

• (1730)

The Government erred fundamentally in not understanding that, because of the independence of Parliament from the Government of Canada, it was not possible to put the House of Commons under the Public Service Staff Relations Act or something close to it. It was not possible to give the PSC direct oversight on actions taken by the administration of the House of Commons on behalf of MPs and senators. Therefore, it seems more creativity was needed in coming up with an acceptable Bill to give our employees what they do not have. Of course, I do not comment on the fact that the Government has quite specifically refused to grant the right to strike even though it has been available to people in the Public Service for 20 years.

I would remind the House that in 1966 the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons, which was then studying Bill C-170, which ultimately became the Public Service Staff Relations Act, stated that consideration should be given to introduction of legislation to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Library of Parliament Act to extend to the employees the advantages and rights similar to those of public servants under Bill C-170. It is now 18 years later and we are just about to conclude debate on Bill C-45, yet we still have not gone as far as what was proposed by that committee then. I think it was understood at that time that there would be early action, but unfortunately it has been deferred. One has to blame the Liberal Government because it could have done this but did not. For all its faults one has to recognize, and I do, that the Conservatives have gone forward with a Bill which gives a form of bargaining, not to all but to many employees on Parliament Hill. Even if it has defects, it will at least ensure that employees will be able to talk over issues, be consulted and make representations to the administration, something they have not been able to do before.

That said, I would point out that while certain changes were made during the committee process, a process which was relatively positive, nonetheless, when it came to looking at solutions to problems, the Government cracked the whip and undue restrictions were put on a number of amendments which we were able to make to the Bill, even though those that were made were welcome. One unchanged area was the scope of arbitration. As people who have studied these matters are aware, that effectively governs the scope of bargaining. If you do not have the right to strike and only have recourse to arbitration to resolve disputes, then those matters which go to arbitration are the only ones on which you can have meaningful negotiations. The other matters will not be capable of adequate negotiation because the employer will say that there is no requirement on him to discuss them. They can simply be allowed to sit on the table without response and the union will not be abled to get any satisfaction through arbitration because the arbitrator will note be able to touch it. For example, Clause 55(2) says:

> No arbitral award shall deal with the standards, procedures or processes governing the appointment, appraisal, promotion, demotion, transfer, lay-off or release of employees, or with any term or condition of employment of employees that was not a subject of negotiation between the parties during the period before arbitration was requested in respect thereof.

Clause 55(3) says:

> An arbitral award shall deal only with terms and conditions of employment of employees in the bargaining unit in respect of which the request for arbitration was made.

In other words, very little can be bargained. As well, Clause 5 limits that even further. That clause is a management's rights clause which is much stronger than you find in the private sector. Clause 5(3) says:

> Nothing in this Part shall be construed so as to affect the right or authority of an employer to determine the organization of the employer and to assign duties and classify positions of employment.

In other words, there is no way employees can directly get at many of the problems which provoked them into all the effort which has preceded the introduction of this Bill.

This Bill is technically not an expansion of rights, it is a diminution of rights. For a period of six months the Canada Labour Relations Board had certified some 1,000 employees on Parliament Hill. Those employees therefore enjoyed the full collective bargaining rights available under the Canada Labour Relations Code which is as ample a code as exists in Canada. That has now been taken away. On the pretext that the Government's rules for its employees shall be followed, the Government has gone forward with a set of rules which take away the certifications granted by the Board. That fails to recognize the efforts the unions put into getting that certification. The Government then applies a number of other restrictions.

It should be clear that there were other reasons for which the workers formed unions than that of wages and benefits. They were concerned because their dignity as workers was being threatened. They were concerned because they felt there were a lot of injustices in things such as classification and staffing. They were concerned that there was no meaningful grievance process on Parliament Hill. Grievances could be lodged but the final stage was with management and there was no outside arbitration. When that is the case, of course, a grievance process can never work particularly effectively. They were concerned about arbitrary management action. They were concerned about what they felt was evidence of nepotism in various places. They were concerned about documented instances of sexual harassment. They were concerned about the fact that there were substantially different salaries being paid to workers who were doing essentially the same job. They were concerned that health and safety was not being respected for employees on Parliament Hill. They were concerned that, almost alone among employees under federal jurisdiction, or what they thought was federal jurisdiction, they did not have the fundamental right to form a union, freely associate, bargain collectively, and enforce collective bargaining by recourse to a strike.

What has come down the pipe? Bill C-45. It does not grant the right to strike. It restricts collective bargaining. It totally excludes Members' staff, apart from the question of their being able to seek adjudication on unjust dismissal. If they do so, they will have no union representative at their side in order to help them fight that particular case. They will either have to get grace and favour assistance from the union, which is doing it because it believes that the Members' staff should be represented, or they will have to hire a lawyer at great expense in order to fight that particular case.

• (1740)

I am sure you know that the staff of the Members of the House of Commons are not that well paid, and for many of them that will be a further hardship and sacrifice if they have to use legal counsel in order to take a case before an outside arbitrator in the event of unjust dismissal. If they complain in public, they will be liable to dismissal.

I was disappointed that the Liberals, when we came to the vote just a few minutes ago on my amendment, which would have extended collective bargaining rights to Members' staff, were no more progressive on this issue than the Progressive Conservatives. They agreed with the Government's stand that next to no rights should be given to Members' staff.

What progress was there during the course of the committee hearings? Well, three things occurred. We broadened the title of the Bill to include the Library of Parliament. I think that was my contribution as the Librarian of Parliament is a constituent and I was simply acting on behalf of an elector in my riding.

The Government brought forward amendments, which were accepted, to extend grievance rights to allow grievances to go to arbitration respecting discipline, demotion and dismissal, and respecting the questions of classification and staffing. The Parliamentary Secretary in committee indicated publicly—and I have just checked this with him and confirmed it—that although the Government has not been prepared to agree to the negotiation of issues of staffing or classification for parliamentary staff, the Government is prepared to use its good offices, through the Board of Internal Economy, to ensure that the administration of the House of Commons will consult with the staff through the unions which have been formed on issues of classification and staffing. I will be watching, as one Member who, among other things, has many of the affected employees in my riding, to ensure that that particular commitment is respected.

During the hearings, there was real concern, which I think was felt by Members on all sides, including my friend for Nepean—Carleton, the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) and the Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), Conservative Members who took part in the hearings, and I think we all felt real misgivings about the quality of the labour relations administration at the House of Commons. It was symbolized by the fact that the House was extremely reluctant to agree to any participation on paid time by the presidents of the three unions, who got certification so they could see what was going on and as well help Members in the work. At the same time, the House saw nothing at all wrong with having as many as 15 or 20 management staff from the House of Commons sit in on many of our hearings. That kind of inequity spoke to us about an attitude within the House of Commons which helps to account for the fact that the workers have unionized. They have been very unhappy about what has been going on, and the House of Commons does not yet appear to have learned very much.

I have already commented on whether or not the rights that have been granted are the same as those that Public Service workers have. I would comment on the fact that the concession with respect to certification is a very minor one. These three unions were already recognized. It would have been perfectly easy for the Bill to have extended the CLRB recognition to those three unions, the Alliance, NABET and the security staff, without the people having to go and get certification again.

In passing I want to say a very sincere thank you for the very constructive and helpful participation from the Alliance, from the Parliament Hill local of the Alliance, and also to Mr. Jacques Audette and Allan Piché, who were particularly helpful to me, and to all of the other people from the other unions who took part, gave us information and were extremely helpful. I am afraid that their help was not repaid in this particular area because the concession on certification is a very minor one. For reasons of certainty I have been advising the unions that it may make sense for them to get new cards, because they can get automatic certification, we were told, if they get 51 per cent of their bargaining unit with new cards.

I regret the fact that, given the peculiar circumstances in the House of Commons, the Government was not prepared to grant policy grievances to the unions on Parliament Hill. This is a different place from the Public Service. In the Public Service there is a network of consultation mechanisms, which I mentioned before, which has taken 40 years to build up. We have not got the time to do all of that catching up. Allowing what are called policy grievances or union grievances to be taken collectively would have anticipated problems and helped to sort things out much more quickly, and I think would have been an appropriate way of dealing with some of the special conditions that are here, particularly since most workers across the country have it.

I welcome—even if I am dismayed at the delay—the assurance from the Parliamentary Secretary that the issues of technological change and negotiation of staffing will be incorporated in this Bill if they become part of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I believe they should have been included now, but it is better to have them later than not to have them at all. I have already stated my disagreement with the Government in terms of its antediluvian view on the question of the right to strike.

I have two final comments to make on this particular Bill, which, as I said before, we are opposing. We are opposing it on principle because it still is inadequate labour legislation. What has been done during the course of the hearings—and everyone did contribute positively to them—is to turn a Bill, which was totally unacceptable to the workers involved, into a Bill which they perforce feel they have no choice but to accept. It is the only game in town. Nonetheless, the amendments put forward by the Government that allow grievances through arbitration by individuals on matters of classification and staffing and that kind of thing are the barest minimum to make the Bill barely tolerable to the unions. While we do not have to go along with that, I understand the desire to get the Bill through.

I feel very strongly personally about the total exclusion of Members' staff from this Bill. I think that is wrong and I think we are going to discover it is wrong when sometime in the next year or two we get some staff members from different Members' offices—hopefully not the New Democratic Party—who feel compelled to go to the public and make a public issue of some complaint or some problem because they have no redress and no recourse, having been left out of Bill C-45.

I feel particularly strongly over the fundamental denial of collective bargaining rights because of the denial of the right to strike. I feel that the limitations on bargaining are such that it makes this a very bad Bill. I would say in conclusion that good labour relations are very important. I hope that the Speaker, the acting Administrator of the House of Commons, and the Board of Internal Economy members who are not listening will see these comments in Hansard.

The House of Commons is back in the dark ages in terms of its labour relations. It must take Bill C-45, inadequate as it may be, seriously. It must seek harmony in labour relations, accepting fully that workers who have chosen to form trade unions are exercising a right available to all Canadians, and not a begrudging kind of attitude that has gone on until now when the House is trying to take those rights away.

If that were to be the spirit in which Bill C-45 is administered by the House of Commons, then it has some prospects of working. If the current attitude persists, it has no opportunity to work at all. I hope it will work for the sake of the employees affected. I am sorry the Bill could not have been a better one.

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise this afternoon on behalf of my constituents in Nepean—Carleton, many of whom are employees in the parliamentary precinct, to offer comment about Bill C-45. The legislation before us this afternoon is long overdue. The House and the Government are to be congratulated for the introduction and hopefully the passage of this Bill. I have been most impressed, since my arrival in the parliamentary precincts some 22 months ago, by the quality of employees who work here. I have been impressed by their dedication, their goodwill, their skills, their talents and, most important, their enthusiasm and willingness to help people like myself and my colleagues. I thank them for those many wonderful contributions.

• (1750)

The original introduction of this Bill many months ago was a positive step forward. I thought it was useful legislation at the time since it was designed to give employees who work on the Hill essentially the same rights as public servants, with certain caveats. One of those caveats was that there was no right to strike. Another was that it did not apply to members of political staff.

In contrast, various features of the Canada Labour Code, particularly Part III and Part IV, were to apply to all employees, including those in Members' offices.

The Bill proceeded to committee after a thorough debate at second reading. It was not only a privilege but a very positive experience for me to sit on that legislative committee. I must congratulate my colleagues from all sides of the House on their participation, their goodwill, their contributions and the manner in which the committee was conducted.

The legislative committee received many excellent briefs, all of which were realistic and sincere in their attempt to improve the legislation with which the committee was dealing. I congratulate those individuals who appeared before the legislative committee as well as those who represented organizations or associations, for their positive contributions and helpfulness in assisting members of the committee to improve this legislation. A number of concerns arose while hearing evidence in that legislative committee. I was disturbed to learn that the adjudication or grievance process that exists on the Hill was not working well. I was concerned about internal nepotism, although I am pleased to report that I heard no evidence about political nepotism.

There was much evidence to suggest that the personnel management within the human resources division is not what it could or should be. We heard about many types of harassment, including sexual harassment, which caused us great concern.

We heard many concerns from a wide variety of sources about job classification and job description. Following the presentation of those briefs, the committee had a thoughtful and progressive discussion about how to improve the legislation. As a result, a number of amendments were introduced; some by the Government, some by my opposition colleagues, and some by individual members. There were two amendments of particular importance to me. The first concerned the merit principle that is now adopted and inherrent in this proposed legislation. I believe this was an important consideration from the early stages of the legislative process and one which was lacking in the original Bill. I compliment the Government House Leader for introducing such a provision in Clause 63(1)(e) of the legislation. I would like to read it so that it will be on the record. The clause reads:

> where the employee has been denied an appointment, the employer's evaluation of the skill, fitness and ability of the employee with respect to the employee's qualification for the appointment—

It goes on to note that this relates to grievance and eventual adjudication if necessary. This merit principle is a very important addition to the legislation.

The second principle that I find important is the third party adjudication. During the legislative hearing process we heard about many cases where the existing grievance and adjudication process in the internal adjudication system has not worked. It is vitally important to establish a procedure whereby our employees can go through a third party grievance and adjudication process for an independent review of matters of concern to them. I am delighted that this is included in the legislation.

It is important for us to understand that the Government House Leader has given his strong assurances that as bargaining rights and privileges are extended to members of the public service in the future, they will also be extended to employees here on the Hill. That is a very important principle for us all to understand because it sets the tone for what will happen to our employees in the future.

This is good and progressive legislation, and gives our employees an array of rights and privileges which they so richly deserve. I hope all Members will support this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

• (1800)

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on this Bill and recall that this is a historic piece of legislation.

In fact, Parliament is at last responding to the wishes of its employees to organize for the purpose of defending their rights.

I remember, in the last months of the last Parliament, that a parliamentary committee consisting of representatives of all three political groups, had been trying to reach agreement on a Bill that would get unanimous consent before the last election, a Bill that would have given our employees on the Hill the right to organize a union and defend their interests in a more direct and orderly fashion from then on.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms recognizes the right of any group of workers to organize in order to defend themselves against any abuse of authority by the employer, and since we in Parliament adopt legislation to set certain standards for Canadian companies in their relations with their employees, the fact that Parliament had yet to give its employees the right to organize was becoming an altogether embarrassing and anachronistic situation.

I think the Government's Bill is a step in the right direction. Of course, it does not go as far as I personally would have liked, but I must admit the Government has made some progress. I understand that I am to continue my speech after Private Members' Business, at seven o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Papineau.

BELL CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada, as reported with amendments from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on the report stage motions on Bill C-19, an Act respecting the reorganization of Bell Canada.

Call in the Members.

• (1810)

[English]

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-19. The first question is on Motion No. 3A. Mr. Masse moved:

Motion No. 3A

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 3 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(c) if the Commission has not otherwise specified, the Company has not received therefor".

The House divided on the motion No. 3A, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you would inquire of the House, there might well be a disposition to have the remaining votes dealt with by applying this vote in reverse to the following motions: Nos. 5, 8A, 9, 10 and 12.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House consent to that suggestion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, the next vote is on Motion No. 5 standing in the name of Mr. Orlikow. Mr. Orlikow moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-19, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 3 to 5 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(c) a financial guarantee of payment by the customer or a third party or such provisions in respect to advance payments that may be established by the CRTC both of which shall not amount to more than one month's advance payment of the subscriber's normal monthly charge."

The House divided on Motion No. 5, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications), seconded by Mr. Nielsen, moved that Bill C-19 as amended be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? With leave of the House, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: At the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I would like to ask whether the House would agree, in view of the importance of the Bill which we shall be considering in a few moments and which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle)—It is now 6:28 p.m.. In its generosity, maybe the House—

[English]

—maybe the House in its generosity will accept going on until 7.26 so that the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), who has been waiting quite a long time to debate this very important Bill, may be given permission to do so. It is simply a question of being generous to the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It being 6.28 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business.

AIRPORTS

MEASURE TO CHANGE THE NAME OF OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer) moved that Bill C-208, an Act respecting the international airport at Ottawa, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-208 whose purpose is to change the name of Ottawa Airport to National Capital Airport, for we can say that the airport serves the region of the capital of Canada which is located in the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government might clear up an anomaly which now exists in the air transport sector in the National Capital Region. As I said a moment ago, this anomaly is that the airport is located in the National Capital Region and this is why the purpose if this Bill is to change the name to National Capital International Airport.

If we go back in history, Mr. Speaker, and I do not want to prolong the debate on this question, we have to remember that symbols should be displayed so that Canada's capital may become the National Capital Region of Canada, not located only in Ottawa which, for all practical purposes, is an Ontario city. Local residents must identify with the national capital of Canada, and this kind of symbol is the only way to make it into a real capital for all Canadians. It has to be the soul of the Canadian nation. Canadians must develop this kind of nationalist spirit which is so sorely lacking. For all practical purposes we are a new country, hardly a few hundred years old.

For merely 20 years or so, we have had a flag which is a national symbol and a source of pride for many Canadians, but I suggest we should do something to enhance this pride by making our national capital the true heart and soul of the Canadian nation.

Mr. Speaker, we would be well-advised to remember that in Book V of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism entitled "The Federal Capital", on page 88, the commissioners wrote, and I quote:

—we recommend that the question of convenient access to transportation and communication services for the various parts of the capital area be given greater consideration in the future by the federal government and provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Only in this way can certain disparities between the two sectors be overcome—

—the two sectors of the national capital region which, for all practical purposes, as was indicated by the Premiers in Toronto in 1969, is the national capital of Canada——and real freedom of choice of residence made meaningful in the capital area.

We should emphasize the benefits both from a symbolic and practical point of view of changing the designation from Ottawa International Airport to National Capital Airport.

Mr. Speaker, I need not add anything. I am aware that the Ottawa Airport do not service only Ottawa residents, but also the residents of the whole national capital region, both on the Ontario and Quebec sides. For this reason, I ask, hopefully with the support of the House, that the name Ottawa International Airport be changed into National Capital Airport.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in the debate on Bill C-208 which is sponsored by my colleague from the riding of Hull—Aylmer and whose purpose is to change the name Ottawa International Airport to Ottawa-Hull International Airport.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill cannot be considered as being very important since it involves a minor name change for the airport which serves us all in the national capital. But still it is a name change which is rather symbolic, and we ought to know that symbols are really important, and perhaps they have more significance when they have to do with the very nature of our country. This is why I support the Bill of my colleague from Hull—Aylmer.

• (1830)

[English]

We recently had an example of what can happen when the symbolism goes wrong in terms of the relationship between the two major municipalities in the national capital. Regardless of the growing size of Gatineau or of the importance of the cities of Nepean and Gloucester in terms of population, it is still the case that the two major municipalities in the National Capital Region are the cities of Ottawa and Hull.

One very refreshing and encouraging development of the last six years while Marion Dewar was Mayor of Ottawa was the rapprochement between the City of Ottawa and the City of Hull. There were meetings between municipal councillors Mayor Dewar was on very good personal terms with Michel Légère, who has now been the Mayor of Hull for three years or four years. They communicated on upcoming issues and sought to come up with a common position.

One fine symbolic example of the friendshp which exists between the City of Ottawa and its sister city on the other side of the river was that on Canada Day the Mayor of Ottawa led a group of citizens and councillors across the Interprovincial Bridge where they met in the middle with the Mayor of Hull and a group of his councillors and citizens.

Just a few weeks ago the Canada's Capital Visitors and Convention Bureau voted that in future the tourist publicity for Ottawa-Hull, which has used the proposed name for the airport in the Bill of my hon. colleague, should in fact only use the name of Ottawa. It said that in marketing terms this might make some sense. The move was supported by the new Mayor of Ottawa, Mr. James Durrell.

I am afraid that single gesture did terrible damage in terms of harming the constructive and mature relationship which has developed between Ottawa and Hull and between Ottawa area municipalities and those of the Outaouais. It is clear that personal relationships between the two mayors have been deteriorating, I suspect largely because of actions by the Mayor of Ottawa. Shortly thereafter the Mayor of Ottawa announced that rather than take the citizens of this community across the river to meet with their counterparts in Hull on Canada Day, he would have brunch with senior citizens at Lansdowne Park. No one objects to him having brunch with senior citizens; it is a good thing to do. However, there is no reason that he could not have brunch with them at ten o'clock and then meet with the Mayor of Hull and the citizens of Hull at twelve o'clock or something like that. Once again it looked like and it was a slap in the face, not only to the Mayor of Hull but to all citizens on the Quebec side.

We have a community in the National Capital Region which is heavily bilingual. If we look at the proportions of the population in the National Capital Region on both sides of the Ottawa River, we are just about a microcosm of the country. Some 25 per cent are French-speaking in the National Capital Region. Obviously it is a higher proportion in Hull than it is in Ottawa. Nonetheless, this city more than any other city in Canada, with perhaps the exception of Moncton, is a city in which one grows accustomed to the fact that one hears French and English side by side, wholly accepted and used commonly by people on the buses, people in the stores, people in offices and everywhere else.

In marketing terms it might be difficult for people to think of Ottawa-Hull rather than only Ottawa. Yet, the reason for doing it is that this is an awkward country and we should somehow make it survive. We are French and we are English. We are stretched right across 4,000 miles. We should have a name which reflects in tourist literature the bicultural identity which we have here.

The Mayor of Ottawa said that Hull does not reflect the ethnic composition of the people who live on that side. Well, Ottawa does not do so either. If it did, we would all be native peoples; we would be from Canada's first peoples, not from second or third generations by way of immigration in the last 200 years or 300 years.

In supporting this particular Bill, I think it is a symbolic way of indicating the nature of the national capital. If one wanted to find a name upon which people could agree, we could use as an example the name of the airport at Toronto. It might be a good idea too. However, if we are to call it by the name of the city or cities served, I suggest that the House of Commons should in fact take the lead, particularly after the slights by a politician at another level of government who does not seem to understand the symbolic importance of ensuring that our duality—our dual cultures and our dual languages—is reflected in all things we do in the nation's capital. Of course, this is not just in Ottawa nor just in the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton. The nation's capital includes as large an area on the Hull side as it does in Ottawa, and certainly Hull is very much an integral part of the national capital. Thanks to developments of the last few years, it has a substantial proportion of the public servants who work in the national capital.

I hope Hon. Members will join with the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) and myself in supporting the measure and ensuring that it is adopted today.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to speak in the debate on Bill C-208. As the only member on the Government side whose riding and boundaries are entirely within the City of Ottawa, I feel obliged to do so, just as I did when the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) introduced his perennial Bill to rename the national capital as Ottawa-Hull. The Bills are similar in purpose, Mr. Speaker. I realize we are on shortened hours because of the nature of today's business, so I will try to keep my remarks as brief as possible in order to give my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) an opportunity to speak as well.

• (1840)

I think the interaction between people in the City of Ottawa, people in the City of Hull, people in the adjoining municipalities of Quebec and in other municipalities on the Ontario side of the river is an integral and vital part of our life here in the nation's capital. But the interactions which form our characters, as individuals, as groups, as cities has no limit. If we are to follow the logic behind this Bill, which is to rename the airport the Ottawa-Hull International Airport, we recognize only the additional importance of the City of Hull.

Mr. Benjamin: What do you mean, "only"?

Mr. Daubney: Were we to accept the Hon. Member's Bill today and rename the airport the Ottawa-Hull International Airport, what about the day after? Where do we stop? It might be and logically should be the Ottawa-Hull-Nepean-Gloucester-Vanier-Aylmer-Gatineau Airport.

Ottawa International Airport

An Hon. Member: And what about Cumberland?

Mr. Daubney: And Cumberland. I shudder to think what the luggage tags would look like.

Mr. Benjamin: Come up with a better argument.

Mr. Daubney: I want to touch briefly as someone interested in the history of aviation and this region on the rather colourful history of the airport in Ottawa. The site of the airport is linked with the history of early aviation in Canada which I believe is much overlooked. I am delighted our Government is recognizing that with the construction of a brand new Museum of Aviation History, which I visited recently, and which is located in the riding of my colleague from Ottawa—Carleton. It will be a first-class showcase for Canadian aviation.

The site of the present airport was first established in the 1920s when a number of aircraft were operated from what was then known as the Hunt Club Field. These operations were random and were conducted solely for pleasure. It was not until Colonel Charles Lindbergh's visit to Ottawa in 1927 that the majority of the people of Ottawa became aware of the location of the landing field. In commemoration of his visit, the site was named Lindbergh Field. My father told me when he was a young boy that he was at the airport that day along with my grandfather, who worked in the City of Ottawa at that time. As you may know, Mr. Speaker, there was a terrible crash, and one of the visiting American aviators was killed in a tragic accident that day.

Regular flying activity at the site began with the incorporation of the Ottawa Flying Club on January 14, 1928. The landing field was leased from Uplands Realty and the club began operations with two Moth airplanes, one of which I understand is presently in the collection of the National Aviation Museum. There were no runways and operations were carried out from the natural sod and sand dune surface of the field.

In 1935 the airport, then known as Uplands Field, was operated by the Ottawa Flying Club with refueling by Imperial Oil. Facilities included a clubhouse, an office and three small hangars. In 1935, an official of what was then the civil aviation branch, part of National Defence, expressed some concern about the condition of the airport. In 1937 that branch, which had then been incorporated by the new Department of Transport, reported the field was still rough but that it would be easy to improve it, that two 5,000 foot landing strips could be constructed if necessary. The Department built three runways of approximately 900 metres in length and two of 1,000 metres in length by approximately 60 metres in width. The airport was formally opened on August 20, 1938.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am enjoying the history of the airport in Ottawa going back to 1937. The Bill in front of us has to do with the name of the airport and nothing else, not whether people flew in Tiger Moths or mothballs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is a point of debate.

Mr. Benjamin: No, it isn't. It has to do with the name of the airport.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that Hon. Members would try to allow other Members to speak during Private Members' hour. We have only 15 minutes. If I take up any more time, there will be less than that.

Mr. Benjamin: He is faking it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney).

Mr. Benjamin: What do you think of the name of the airport? Call it Tiger Moth Airport.

Mr. Daubney: In December, 1939 the airport was designated to be used for military purposes and a service flying training school was established by the RCAF. This was the first such school in Canada. When airport lighting was installed in 1940, a permanent airport licence was issued.

Mr. Benjamin: Were they gas lights or candles?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Daubney: In addition to training pilots for military service, Ottawa Airport was used extensively at the beginning of the war for testing aircraft manufactured by Ottawa Car and Aircraft Ltd., located in my riding of Ottawa West. That factory produced a lot of war armaments.

In 1944, the Department of Transport had made numerous improvements and extensions to the land area. In July 1954 the airport was designated as an international alternate for North Atlantic operations.

In 1959 the new terminal was scheduled to open. An unfortunate collision of a U.S. airforce jet, however, postponed it. The official opening by the then Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker, did not take place.

It was not until August, 1964 that the designation of the airport was changed to its present name, the Ottawa International Airport, the subject matter of this Bill. That was done on August 24, 1964 by the then Minister of Transport, who I believe was the Hon. Lionel Chevrier, a government headed by the Hon. Lester Pearson.

It is an interesting history and I wish I had more time to enlighten the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) about it. If we are going to consider a name change, because Ottawa-Hull leaves out so many important municipalities in this area, why do we not consider renaming it something easier to say, easier to remember and perhaps more significant in our parliamentary history. We already have a precedent for this in the naming of the Toronto Airport after one of the two great Canadian political figures of the 1950s and 1960s, namely, Pearson International Airport. I think the job is just half done because there were two great Canadians who engaged in national debate and in the direction of our country during that time. Just as it was appropriate that Mr. Pearson should be remembered in this fashion, so too should we name the airport that served Canada's capital after a great Canadian who served and cherished our parliamentary institutions, another great Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: He already has a bridge, a dam and a highway named after him.

Mr. Daubney: Rather than begin the hyphenation of our airport's name, we should do something useful and remember a man who meant so much to Canada, to Parliament and to millions of individual Canadians. I invite the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer to join with me in an effort to rename the Ottawa International Airport the John Diefenbaker International Airport.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have 12 minutes left. I hope the Hon. Member will judge himself accordingly. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has the floor for debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say. First, the airlines themselves already recognize Ottawa-Hull in their schedules. The Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) wishes to change the official name to Ottawa-Hull. That is all.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Wrong.

Mr. Benjamin: Who said wrong?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): I did.

Mr. Benjamin: You are wrong and you have a right to be.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I may just clarify for the record the initial Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) last year indicated that he wanted to rename the airport Ottawa-Hull. That is not correct, at this point in the debate. He wishes to rename—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate and it is not a point of order.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): The House is wrong, Sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has the floor.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is some confusion in the House. I am pretty sure an error has been made by the Table.

• (1850)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Agreed.

Mr. Isabelle: Last year, when I thoroughly discussed this Bill, I asked permission of the House to make a very simple change. I wanted to change the name of the Ottawa International Airport to the Ottawa-Hull International Airport. However, with unanimous consent of the House, I would change that to be the National Capital Airport. That is the object of today's discussion. The purpose of the Bill is simply to change it to the National Capital Airport, which is a much more logical approach. However, I believe the House made a mistake in reprinting. I have a photocopy of what I wanted and what I approved, and what was printed is not completely the same.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If that has happened it is unfortunate, but the Hon. Member will probably have another opportunity to submit the same Bill later.

Mr. Forrestall: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: I thought I had the floor.

Mr. Forrestall: I am not sure how my hon. friend from Regina had the floor, but the point being made by the distinguished gentleman from Hull is quite correct. The Bill was not presented in its proper form. Because the debate remains the same, we did not at any time file an objection, preferring to hear the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) had the floor in debate.

Mr. Benjamin: I thought so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I call them as I see them. I think each Party should have the opportunity to speak during Private Members' hour. I am sorry we only have a few more minutes left in this debate and the way we are carrying on we are not even going to have that. If the Hon. Member for Regina West is finished, I would like to call on the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner). Since the airport is in his riding, I think it is only fair that we listen to him.

Mr. Benjamin: Is he on a point of order?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I thought the Hon. Member was finished.

Mr. Benjamin: I thought I had the floor and I was interrupted on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West would like to debate?

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I regret the fact that we have to take time from the debate for this. However, I believe it is only right that everyone concerned have the right to stand in debate on a Private Members' Bill. We are talking about the Ottawa-Hull Airport and we all have the right to talk about it, regardless of what part of the country we are from. Coming from Quebec, Sir, I will never tell you that I will not defend the Province of Quebec—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. That is not a point of order, it is debate. I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has the floor in debate and I know he will allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) to say a few words before we close off the debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, all the Hon. Member wants to do is change the name of the airport. We now have it before us as the National Capital Airport, or words to that effect. The airlines already recognize it as Ottawa-Hull. The Hon. Member has agreed to amend his Bill. It is already in front of us. What the hell are we wasting time for? I will sit down and shut up and so should everybody else and let's pass it.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am almost embarrassed at this point in this so-called Private Members' hour to talk briefly about this proposal. I think we have it straight now that we are talking about changing what is currently known as the Ottawa International Airport to the National Capital Airport. There is not much time left and I had prepared a number of comments on this issue.

Mr. Benjamin: Mail them.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): My colleague from Regina West has talked about it being so simple. It is not that simple. I wish I could unfold this map—

Mr. Gauthier: No displays, just unfold your thoughts.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Ottawa—Vanier, just keep cool. I have a map here of the National Capital Region which has been magnificently put together by the National Capital Commission.

Mr. Gauthier: A friend of yours?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Sometimes.

[Translation]

It depends—

[English]

Let me underline that in this National Capital Region we have 26 municipalities, two regions and two provinces. Never has any piece of real estate been managed by so many. I would love to unfold this map and show it because Ottawa International Airport is situated for the most part in the great City of Gloucester. Gloucester has about 90,000 residents, all of whom live in my great riding of Ottawa—Carleton. I would love to see the airport called the Ottawa-Gloucester International Airport. That is where it is located. It is in my riding.

Mr. Benjamin: That is not the issue.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Of course it is the issue. Mr. Speaker, Shakespeare said a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. I tried to get a simple little project at the Ottawa Airport going. They wanted to call it Delta Park. I said no, let's call it Gloucester-Delta Park because it's in Gloucester. This involves the tremendous work going on at the airport right now. What did we settle on? Gloucester Industrial Park Ottawa International Airport. That is what the Department of Transport wants to call it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock when I stopped to let the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) discuss his Private Member's Bill, I was saying that Bill C-45 was a historic piece of legislation and that by introducing this Bill, the Government had taken a step in the right direction, although I thought it had not fully met the expectations of the employees of the House of Commons.

In fact, for many months, our House of Commons employees have been demanding not only the right of association but also all the rights of employees covered by the Canada Labour Code. That is why they went before the Canada Labour Relations Board to apply for certification.

The entire process before the courts, and especially before the Federal Court, to try and prevent parliamentary employees from obtaining their union certification and the right to be covered by the Canada Labour Code instead of the Public Service Employment Act was most regrettable, in my opinion. I say this because the courts are not the best way to settle labour disputes. I think that negotiations and the process of free discussion between parties are the best way to achieve mutual respect between employees and the employer and to set up the ideal labour relations system.

I am sorry the present Conservative Government did not see fit to desist from its proceedings before the courts and that it even appealed a decision that initially seemed to favour parliamentary employees, in order to have the decision quashed before the Federal Appeal Court, so that it could introduce the kind of collective bargaining the Progressive Conservative Party wanted to force on parliamentary employees.

Some of the amendments proposed by my hon. colleagues from Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) should have been accepted by the Government. I think it is really too bad the Progressive Conservative Party did not deal more generously with our parliamentary employees, because this group of men and women who work for the Parliament of Canada have always shown great respect for the institution in the past and have always shown a special concern for a job well done, and I would even say a great respect for authority.

I therefore fail to understand why the amendment giving them the right to strike like any other employee in Canada who obtains the right to strike through a collective bargaining agreement, why that amendment could not have been accepted for our employees.

I know the Government is hiding behind the absolute concept of Parliament, the argument that Parliament, whatever happens, must continue to operate, and that a strike, either by employees attached to the political Cabinet or by support staff of the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament, could obstruct the normal course of our proceedings. I find this argument rather farfetched, because both at Westminster and in the U.S. Congress, a certain number of employees who are not judged to be essential to the operations of the U.S. Congress or the Mother of Parliaments do have the right to strike.

My colleague from Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) had introduced an amendment which should have been adopted, for the Government would have had to designate a certain number of employees as being people whose work is considered to be essential and who therefore would not have the right to strike. As to the others, however, be they elevator operators, messengers, parliamentary cafeteria employees or even our staff in the library, I do not think that these people, who might on some occasions but not necessarily all the time exercise their right to strike, would in fact have paralysed the Parliament of Canada.

I would suggest that the Conservative Government has taken an overly paternalistic and defensive approach to this issue. I think it should have had more faith in the sound judgment of Parliament Hill employees. Giving them the right to strike would not have been tantamount to a crime of lese-majesty. I do not think that giving them the right to strike would have led to a total paralysis of the Canadian Parliament, quite the contrary. Most of these employees have been here for years, they have given us outstanding service for a long time, we know most of them by their first name, and I think they would have shown judgment and discretion in the use of this useful and ultimate mechanism which is the right to strike of any Canadian worker.

Needless to say, the Official Opposition greatly deplores the Government's decision to turn down the amendment which we had moved precisely to make Bill C-45 a little more acceptable to Parliament Hill employees.

I must say that our Party had moved another amendment which has also been turned down by the Government, something for which I am very sorry. I refer to motion No. 11 which had been moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and which would have made it possible, where expenses are incurred in the adjudication of any dispute, to apply provisions similar to those in the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

If this amendment had been adopted, the expenses incurred in the adjudication of any dispute would have been paid by the employer, as is the case now for employees governed by the Public Service Staff Relations Act. When an employee of the Department of Labour, the Secretary of State or the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is involved in a dispute, the union representative will take up the case of the employee who, in its opinion, has been unfairly laid off, and when this case is submitted for adjudication, the expenses are fully paid by the employer who has laid off this Government employee.

Since the Government is willing to accept this provision in the case of a federal civil servant, why does it want to implement a special scheme for Parliament Hill employees?

Because the Government has rejected our amendment, the employee himself or his union will have to pay all the costs incurred in the adjudication of a dispute.

I was listening to the Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) as he stood up for a few seconds to reply to my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on this amendment. He said that it would be necessary to choose outside adjudicators who are not normally acting as adjudicators under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and who therefore would have to be paid, and that it would only be fair for these adjudicators to be paid by the Government and the employee. As though the Government did not pay the salary of the adjudicator who is called upon to adjudicate in a dispute between a Department and one of its employees.

In my view, the Parliamentary Secretary's argument is very moot indeed, and I am concerned that the amendment was not accepted, all the more so because we are still in the dark as to the number of emloyees who will be excluded from the collective agreement process, that is the number of management staff who cannot join an employee organization and are excluded from the collective bargaining process. This means there may be a significant number, several hundred employees who will not get union protection and probably will not have their grievances upheld by the union because they will not be unionized and who, if ever they are unfairly dismissed or unfairly treated by their House of Commons employer, will have to pay their own share of the expenses if they refer their grievances to arbitration.

A hypothetical case could involve a member of the Table staff because, unless I am greatly mistaken, these people will not be joining the union. We are one of them to be unfairly dismissed, he or she would have to assume his or her defence and pay for his or her share of the cost of compensating the arbitrator who will have to determine who is right, the employer or the employee. This is a status without any counterpart in any other government employee group, and I find that absolutely unfair. I feel the Government erred when it turned our amendment down. I believe the Government should pick up the tab, as it does with all Government employees—there should be one standard for disputes sent to arbitration, all expenses should be paid by the Government, as is now the case with the public servants.

Finally, I would like to suggest in the few remaining minutes that this legislation that will be passed by Parliament is a historic one. For the first time, employees on Parliament Hill will have their employee organization. Many of them have worked very actively and very strenuously to have that organization finally recognized on Parliament Hill. I do hope no resentment will be felt either on the part of the Government or on the part of the House of Commons management against those who led that union movement.

I think that Jacques Audette was one of the very first to defend the rights of employees on Parliament Hill, along with Andrée St-Jean, René Saumure, Debbie Brown, Francine Gauthier, Jeannine Perras and many others that I forget, and I am sorry if I cannot name all of those who have been the true champions of unionization to defend and protect the interests of the men and women who work on Parliament Hill.

In closing, I would like to salute and congragulate them for what they have accomplished because, while this Bill might not be perfect, it is nevertheless a first step forward. It will always be possible to improve this piece of legislation in the future.

Finally, I would like to say that these people should not be the victims of persecution. I can assure them that we, of the Official Opposition, will be vigilant and that we will keep an eye on things to ensure that this process of unionizing workers on Parliament Hill will take place in as orderly a manner and with as much co-operation and mutual understanding as possible.

I hope that, with time, the Government will come to understand that this first timid gesture can be followed by something more generous, more liberal and more acceptable for all the employees of the Canadian Parliament.

I shall close by saying that this represents half a success for us. We Liberals would have preferred a stronger Bill. The Government did not want to go any further. That is its position and we have to accept it because of its overwhelming majority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

• (1910)

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this Bill which we will be passing tonight by agreement of all Parties in the House. As other Members have mentioned, this perhaps could be considered an historic moment as far as the House of Commons and Senate are concerned because the House of Commons will be passing a Bill for which the employees on the Hill have been asking. As the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) pointed out, while the Bill is not perfect and does not go as far as the employees would like, at least everyone agrees that it is a step in the right direction.

I want to point out to the House during my remarks that the Government of Canada is not being consistent with its legislation and the representations made by the Government as far as the effects of this Bill on the employees are concerned. One need only to recall the Bill on Employment Equity that went through this chamber to see the exceptions that were granted under Clause 3 or Clause 4 of that Bill which excluded the House of Commons and Senate from the provisions of that Employment Equity legislation. On the one hand, the Government agrees with this step in the right direction while, on the other hand, the Government takes a major initiative in legislation as far as employees and employers are concerned in this country but excludes from the Bill the very employees we are concerned with in this legislation.

It is not really a matter that the Government of Canada has really thought out. As I mentioned, it is not a perfect Bill. People in the Public Service Alliance of Canada speak of the Canada Labour Code, which is not perfect, either. Yes, it would be a good thing to have as many employees as possible under the jurisdiction of the federal Government, whether in direct employment or through another federal agency, like the House of Commons or through a private employer on federal property. Yes, it is fine to say that they would be covered under the Canada Labour Code, but then, as many Hon. Members of the House know, that, in itself, is a very confusing matter.

• (1920)

The Government of Canada, in considering this new measure, should really rethink its entire policy of the past two years concerning all employees, whether employed directly by a federal Government Department or agency or by private employers. There is a tremendous amount of confusion as to the classification of work and the wages to be paid. We need only look at the Bill before this Chamber to see that it raises the very interesting question in the employees' minds as to where one would be classified in the workforce; in other words, concerning the description of the employment. Then the question arises as to the wages that would be paid to these particular employees.

We have seen the policy of the Government of Canada evolve over the past two years, relating to payments to employees of the federal Government or to those employed by an agency under its control, whether or not they are employees that are contracted to a federal Government Department. There has been an awful lot of confusion. We have seen the Charter of Rights brought in. The equality provision came into effect last year, 1985. We have seen the equality of employment legislation introduced into the House and passed through this Chamber; yet one sees an attitude on the part of the Government that it is somehow still legal and possible for the Government of Canada to pay differing wages to people in exactly the same job classifications.

One need only look at the City of Ottawa compared to an area just outside of the city. Look at the federal Treasury Board today and what has been approved, mostly with regard to designated employees. One sees wage differences. One might be a messenger, a carpenter or a tradesman with the federal Government. One is doing exactly the same job; one has the same classification. Here lies the problem in this particular Bill as to how the classifications will be determined. Employees could have the same classification but be paid different wages by the same employer.

Employees' unions, branches of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, look at a new measure like this coming into this Chamber, and these kinds of questions come to mind: How will the employees be classified? On what basis will they be treated for wage increases or for work performance and work duties? We know they are excluded from the only Bill that passed in this Chamber relating to equity in employment. We know that. However, we do not know anything else. We do not know if they will be treated and classified in the same manner as a person in similar employment in the private sector or in another branch or Department of the federal Government. We do not know if the Treasury Board guidelines would apply in the classification stage for those particular employees.

While the Bill is in its final stages, I would strongly recommend to the Government of Canada, as would, I am sure, all of the unions interested in this Bill, that the Government take a very serious look at the implications with regard to classification of the federal Government, the Treasury Board, or an agency of the federal Government, of people employed directly or indirectly by the federal Government, relating to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to the section that came into effect on equality of employment.

The Human Rights Commission sets forth what we all agree, that there should be no discrimination involving people who perform work of equal value, not even in wages. The legislation should at least state that someone placed in a certain classification should receive wages equal to those received by someone in the same classification but in another branch of the federal Government. Unfortunately, then the problem is compounded because the federal Treasury Board and the Government of Canada state it is perfectly legitimate to pay differing wages although the classification is exactly the same. Therefore, it does not only affect those who are employed directly by the federal Government, but also those employed indirectly through the federal Government, through its agency or Department. That appears in the Estimates under which the federal Budget is allocated. There is contained the amount of money set aside for that particular Department or agency. In other words, it goes even further than classifications of federal employees, as we understand them. It has even reached, in recent months, into the area of what actually governs the wages, classifications and labour laws of people who work on what is known as federal property.

There is a very serious problem in this country today. We look at the Canada Labour Code that the unions and employees were discussing with regard to this legislation. There is a very serious problem that is arising; that is, concerning the definition of what law applies to a particular worker who is on federal property and comes within federal jurisdiction. In other words, if one considers federal property close by, for instance, Montreal airport or Mirabel airport, federal property, then—

Mr. Bouchard: St. John's.

Mr. Baker: Well, yes, the Hon. Minister is very interested in Mirabel, very interested in Dorval, so his ears perked up. I think he knows, in the back of his mind, what I am about to say relating to classifications by the federal Government and how determination is made under the Canada Labour Code. I am simply referring to the matter of a 67 per cent wage decrease for certain workers on federal property. Both Hon. Members opposite know the subject very well.

• (1930)

Let us say that this is a group of employees who work on federal property and who perform jobs on behalf of a private individual, for example, an airline. The Minister knows about what I am talking. These employees who come under federal labour jurisdiction are suddenly told that their wages will drop by 67 per cent. That is what happened.

Mr. Tobin: Impossible.

Mr. Baker: That is what happened.

Mr. Foster: A Tory Government!

Mr. Baker: Yes. That is what happened to all the refuellers of aircraft. The problem is who will protect these people.

First, there is the fact that they are working on federal property. Second, the provincial Governments will say that these workers cannot be classified and paid according to provincial laws because they work on federal property. They will say: "If you have a problem, go to the Canada Labour Code. Go to the federal Department of Labour. Go to the Minister who is so interested in Mirabel and Dorval".

Mr. Bouchard: And St. John's.

Mr. Baker: The Minister says: "and St. John's". They have gone to this particular Minister, which raises an interesting question as it relates to this Bill. How can we classify and protect workers and the wages they receive if they are not direct employees of the federal Government? That is to say how can we protect them if they are employed by an agency of the federal Government as opposed to being employed by the federal Government? Therein lies the problem. The Government will have to address it, and address it very quickly.

As I said earlier, there is the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which does not allow a distinction to be made on the basis of where one lives. The present situation today is that if one is a Newfoundlander and works for the federal Government on a federal boat and when one crosses the 102 longitude, one's wages increase by $300 a month. That is the present policy of Treasury Board. As I also mentioned before, if one lives in Ottawa and is a carpenter, a messenger or a federal employee under General Trades and Labour, then one receives a different salary from someone working in Toronto doing exactly the same job. The fact of the matter is that for the first time the legislation which is before the House would give employees the right to say: "All right, we are represented by a bargaining unit". I think the federal Government has a duty to examine just where it is going and just what the impact of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is or should be.

The Human Rights Commission and the Bill which passed the House recently on employment equity should also be considered in this context. I am afraid that is something that is not being done by the Government. However, members of the Official Opposition will hound the Government until these wrongs are corrected. We will hound the Government until the present legislation is brought up to par, in other words, until the employees of the House of Commons and the Senate receive what they so rightfully deserve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is always a great pleasure to sit and listen to the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker). In addition to being one of the most articulate Members of this House and one of the most entertaining speakers in this House, he is also one of the most knowledgeable whenever he addresses the House on any particular Bill.

I think that Members of Parliament would sit in anger in their seats after being informed, as we just were by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate, that there are people who are working indirectly under contract for the federal Government who have experienced a 67 per cent reduction in their salaries. As the Hon. Member indicated, that type of action is being allowed to take place under the nose of the Government and on federal property. As it relates to this Bill, it does not provide for employees to grieve in a substantial way under the normal collective bargaining process classification.

This is a 67 per cent reduction in an individual's salary—a 67 per cent chop, a chunk, a piece taken out of his ability to provide for himself and his family. It represents 67 per cent of his shelter and his food, 67 per cent of his ability to clothe and school his children and 67 per cent of his recreation moneys. In relation to this type of brutal and Draconian measure occuring under the nose of the federal Government on federal property and the type of problem we now see in Alberta with the Gainers strike, does the Hon. Member believe that the private sector is looking to the federal Government in the final analysis for leadership when it sees this type of activity occuring with the silent consent of the federal Government on federal property? In the final analysis, does the private sector seek to emulate that type of practice which causes ugly and trying situations such as the one we see as a result of the Gainers strike in Alberta?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, without referring to any particular strike that is happening, let me answer the Hon. Member's question in a general way as it relates to the responsibilities of the federal Government. With regard to the 67 per cent wage decrease, I was referring to a whole group of people who work on federal property in this country. This is a situation which started at Dorval and Mirabel, as the Minister knows. However, the decision to pay 67 per cent less—to reduce salaries from $15 per hour to $8 per hour—was made because of a contract with Air Canada. Not only was it with Air Canada, it was with all our major airlines—those great corporate citizens of Canada. These are the people who put out flyers which state that they are great Canadian citizens. They carry the Canadian flag.

All the airlines which operate in Canada used the device of employing an agency in order to get a job done on federal property at those kind of prices. However, they made one mistake. The companies they asked to tender on the contracts were all companies in the United States. I tell that to the Minister as a fact. Yet when the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) was in the House he said that it was a matter of contracts open to public tender. What he did not say, and probably what he did not know, was that those invited to tender were all American companies. Here we have people who were indirectly employed through a Crown corporation working on federal property who are at the whim of the invitation to tender of four American companies out of New York. When the company about which I am speaking which employs these people on federal property turned around and said: "We will have to reduce your wages by 67 per cent," there was nothing the federal Government could do about it, as far as the Minister of Labour mentioned in this House.

Mr. Tobin: Or would do.

Mr. Baker: Or would do. However, the Minister who is in the House is now attentively listening to my remarks. I wish to assure the Minister that my interest in this particular subject is because of the fear I have that what happened at Dorval and Mirabel will spread to Gander, Stephenville and St. John's, Newfoundland. That is what I was concerned about. I would not like to see employees working on federal property and coming under federal law in terms of wages and hours of work have their wages reduced by 67 per cent. Because the company in Dorval and Mirabel is owned by the same people who have the same contracts in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and right across this country, I was afraid that it might catch on. The company would say: "Well, you know, we asked for invitations to bid without telling anyone but those in the United States of America and then we reduced everyone's salary by 67 per cent". An employee comes to me and says: "Well, look, the labour laws of Newfoundland or Quebec do not apply to us because we are on federal property". There are federal laws governing the way these employees are treated, not directly by the federal Government but indirectly by an agency of the federal Government. They are governed by federal law because they are on federal property.

• (1940)

It appears that this is a spreading phenomenon. It has got down to the work sheet. Let us take a look at the bottom line, everyone. Crown corporations and the Government of Canada treat their employees by looking at the bottom line and erasing deficits. They lay people off or reduce their wages arbitrarily. They take away their benefits and they do whatever they can to keep the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) happy until he brings down his next Budget so he will tell the business world and the so-called good corporate citizens like the ones I just mentioned a few moments ago that he will keep them happy and content.

Mr. Riis: But at what price?

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman asks at what price. We can see that price being paid today from Newfoundland to British Columbia. We can see the unfairness of the Treasury Board in every single contract it negotiates or refuses to negotiate or when it designates employees and tells them to take it or leave it. It tells employees that they do not have the right to strike or to walk out. It tells the ship workers in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia that they are going to receive $400 a month less than those who work west of 102 degrees longitude. The federal Government can get away with that, and that is what is really disturbing.

In its responsibilities to Canadians for federal property and indirect federal employees, the Government is being absolutely outrageous. Yesterday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) said that he could not help the deficit of the Newfoundland Railway, that Newfoundland should solve its own deficit problem but keep on with the railway. In other words, there will be lay-offs, reductions in benefits and more costs to the consumers. That is the attitude of the Government.

We are saying that the Bill before the House is a good Bill, a great Bill. It takes at least one step, but it does not go all the way. When the Government is in the process of classifying these people and allocating their wages, which is the first job it will have to do, it should, for goodness' sake, look at what it is doing to other federal employees or, more correctly, to employees who are indirectly employed by the federal Government, either on federal property or by Crown corporations. This is the sector for which the Canada Labour Code is supposed to function in an honourable way.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member. All Hon. Members are suffering from a collective mania. We are suffering because of a misunderstanding. The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) rose in his place and told Hon. Members that Air Canada, which flies airplanes displaying Canadian flags, has tendered to American companies but not to Canadian companies to do refuelling for Air Canada. We also misunderstood and obviously misheard the Hon. Member when he said that the contract went to an American company which is servicing in Canada a Crown corporation and paying Canadian workers 67 per cent less.

Would the Hon. Member tell us that we are all having a bad dream? Would he pinch us and wake us up?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely incorrect. He did not misunderstand me at all. He heard me absolutely correctly, and I defy anyone to tell me that I am wrong because I have gone into this matter. Not only that but I have gone to the registry of companies to find out just who is involved both in the United States and in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I was not intending to rise in my place to take part in debate on Bill C-45. However, the spindles in my brain were well greased as I listened to the eloquent plea of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) on behalf of federal civil servants directly affected by Bill C-45 and civil servants elsewhere in Canada who suffer from the kind of federal discrimination which has become institutionalized since the election of this Government some 18 months ago.

A moment ago, I rose to ask the Hon. Member if he could assure me of the accuracy of the report he made to Parliament indicating that an extremely visible and perhaps the most visible Crown corporation actually offered a tender opportunity to four American companies to do the refuelling of Air Canada jets and did not offer that opportunity to Canadian companies. He said it did this in order to reduce the costs of refuelling services because it knows American companies pay vastly lower salaries than Canadian companies. When the Hon. Member said that and when he reconfirmed that the Crown corporation that carries the flag of Canada would engage in such an activity, the spindles in my brain became lubricated and I decided I had to rise to my feet.

That kind of preying on Canadian workers, that kind of manipulation of Canadian labour law, that kind of exploitation of federal property and federal labour jurisdiction which could otherwise not occur if a worker were to be classified under provincial labour laws has to come to an end. The whistle has to be blown on that kind of abuse of our citizens.

When Members of Parliament from all three Parties make comments about what is happening in Alberta with the Gainers strike, when Hon. Members shake their heads and wonder if that kind of confrontation is really necessary, when Hon. Members collectively recognize that the seeds of that confrontation arose out of a basic perception that workers are nothing more than company assets, and when Hon. Members regret that kind of development, they ought to remind themselves that the example followed by the Peter Pocklingtons of the world is not found in the shadows of their minds but in pieces of legislation like Bill C-45.

Bill C-45 denies the employees of Parliament Hill normal collective bargaining rights and federal labour law classification codes. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate has pointed out, this is the kind of legislation that allows an employee on a federal ship in Newfoundland to be paid $400 per month or up to $6,000 per year less than someone in British Columbia with exactly the same classification working on exactly the same kind of ship and doing exactly the same kind of job. That is possible under federal legislation and it has happened.

Hon. Members opposite who are looking at me and saying to themselves that this simply cannot be true will have either received a visit from the union representing these employees in the last few weeks or will receive one. The action taken by a union recently on Parliament Hill was unique and almost unprecedented. Representatives of that union, including those who come from the privileged area of British Columbia and those who come from the underprivileged area of Atlantic Canada, the area of disparity in respect of wages, came to Parliament Hill. For example, a representative from British Columbia told Members of Parliament that he was here to fight for his colleagues in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland. He said that he was paid $400 more for the same job as his colleagues in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland. He thought that was wrong. That case is being made today to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and to the President of the Teasury Board (Mr. de Cotret). Thus far institutionalized discrimination has not been addressed.

Why am I concerned about Bill C-45? I agree with the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate that it is a step in the right direction. It begins to take Hill employees down the road toward the ability to represent themselves and to negotiate on their own behalf. It is not collective bargaining, and it does not go far enough. I am not only talking about the right to strike which is the final weapon in any collective negotiation, a weapon which most other Canadians have. The Bill was improved because it was amended to provide for a grievance procedure. As I said, it does not go far enough; it does not include the right to strike for non-essential employees, those people who are not deemed essential for the operation of these premises.

The Bill would prevent the PSAC from taking policy issues to grievance. The Government has been granted a one-year period to reorganize classifications. During that period, PSAC cannot file any grievances whatsoever. The Bill should set an example for the private sector, for the country in general. It purports to allow employees of the Hill to organize and to represent themselves. It is shameful, not because it is a total failure, but because it should be setting an example for the people of Canada. It is Hon. Members, who have been elected to fill these seats, who should be setting an example of the kind of society we can create and build. When we as Members of Parliament, who hold positions of responsibility, cannot organize ourselves to set up an arrangement with our own employees which allows them the dignity of collective bargaining and the normal rights afforded to other federal employees, we are like all those people who say: "Yes, but not in my back yard".

As we forsake the employees of Parliament Hill, as we deny employees of Parliament Hill normal collective bargaining rights which accrue to any other worker in the country, so too do we forsake and deny our right to speak with a conscience and with effect about the kind of labour abuse we see going on today in respect of the Gainers strike in Alberta. This kind of legislation gives comfort to the Peter Pocklingtons. This kind of legislation draws a map for the Peter Pocklingtons. This kind of legislation flowing from this Chamber wipes out whatever moral authority parliamentarians have to make a positive contribution in a world too often filled with labour strife.

I urge the Government to consider withdrawing the Bill—not to have it defeated forever—for two reasons. The first reason is that Hill employees have launched an appeal of the court decision which refused to acknowledge their right to be recognized under the Canada Labour Code. The court stood by the federal Government, but the employees have now served notice of an appeal of that judgment in the Supreme Court of Canada. Passage of this legislation will automatically annul the appeal action which has been launched; the court will not hear the case. In a preliminary decision the court set aside and reserved judgment on hearing that appeal. If this legislation is approved in the House, we will have denied Hill employees the most basic right of any Canadian citizen—the right to take his or her case to the highest court in the land. Surely that is no example for the Government of Canada to set. Even if the Government is convinced it is right, in the final analysis due process must be followed, and due process is not followed when an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada is ignored by Parliament in passing legislation in advance of the court's decision on the appeal which has been launched.

The second reason the piece of legislation should be set aside, even though it is a step in the right direction, is the implications, the Government of Canada will see when it has examined the situation. For example, what about the implications of Air Canada going to an American contractor rather than a Canadian contractor because it knows that Americans pay 67 per cent less and therefore it can get its service cheaper? What are the implications of that kind of activity increasing? What are the implications of the situation like the Gainers strike in Alberta? It is not a dispute between Peter Pocklington and a group of employees in that particular plant. It has become a symbol. If it is not resolved in a civilized and responsible manner, where both sides compromise, as should always occur in any negotiation, that strike will mark the beginning of terrible labour strife in Canada.

In that environment the federal Government should make a statement which sets a responsible example and shows the importance it places upon the value of its employees. Let the federal Government make a statement which recognizes that its employees are more than just widgets in the inventory of the federal Government's resources. Let it show that they are more than just part of the equipment around here. Let it make a statement which recognizes that its employees are Canadian men and women who deserve the dignity of a collective bargaining process similar to that being offered to employees elsewhere in the country.

I pray Hon. Members opposite will heed these words of brilliant wisdom which I have uttered on behalf of employees who have quietly and unashamedly asked that they be treated no better or no worse than any other citizen of Canada.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member a question. It concerns people who come under the Public Service Alliance of Canada and have contracts with the federal Government. If they are covered by a union, one would expect that employees of the federal Government, either directly or indirectly, would have some rights. However, in the case of Cyril Pynn in Grand Falls who had a federal contract and came under PSAC, he was laid off with two weeks' notice. I realize the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) represents Corner Brook. The name I just mentioned was that of a gentleman in my riding who had an agreement with the Government under the Public Service Alliance of Canada. It is what the Government calls a term employee contract. Such contracts are always renewed after six months under the PSAC. I just tossed out that name. I should like to ask the Hon. Member if he has received any such telephone calls. I have not alerted him to the fact that I would ask this question, but I would bet my bottom dollar that he knows what I am talking about. Has he received any such notification from a constituent working for the federal Government in Corner Brook, coming under the Public Service Alliance of Canada, and being heaved out the door with two weeks' notice because of a slippery little clause in the contract? I should like to ask him whether he has any such people in his riding. If so, will he inform the House under what branch of the federal Government was this PSAC employee employed?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it appears the Member when he was speaking earlier said that this mentality of the federal Government of treating people like widgets is spreading at an alarming rate. Not only has the Member heard from Cyril Pinn in the community of Grand Falls but I have heard from several individuals in the community of Cornerbrook who have been treated in a similar fashion. I have heard from one individual who had been employed in a term position with the federal Government for the better part of two decades who was summarily dismissed by the Government of Canada from his job as a cleaner, cleaning federal buildings, because the Government decided that, under the same escape clause, it could get under contract an employee for slave wages to do the same job as did this gentleman, who had a family and a household to support. The Government summarily dismissed him and tendered the cleaning job out to contractors who hire people at a salary of about 40 per cent less. They were kind enough to tell the gentleman as he was on the way out of the door that he could always apply for the job at 40 per cent less wages.

The other case I have heard about is that of someone who was summarily dismissed, effective on July 1, the day we celebrate Canada Day, the day we take pause from our work and labours to contemplate the riches, the generosity and the values of this country, that day that has been set aside as appreciation day for all that this country has offered us. On that day, Mr. Speaker, an employee of Employment and Immigration, the job creation branch in my riding—think about it and imagine the irony—told an employee that effective the day on which he would normally celebrate, normally ponder, normally give thanks for all this country has given him, he is summarily, on a few weeks' notice, picked up and, as we say in Newfoundland, by the scruff of his neck and the slack of his pants flung out the door—a unionized employee. The Member asks whether the problem is spreading. The answer is yes.

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act

I must admit that I brought to the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) this particular case, not because I was concerned that the employee was being picked up by the scruff of his neck and slack of his pants and flung out the door effective July 1, Canada Day, not because I was concerned with him as an individual—and I am concerned with him as an individual—but because this particular employee was responsible for administering 70 federal job creation projects. He is one of only three or four in the Corner Brook office who manage an area 500 miles long with about 70,000 people and 300 projects. When he goes, effective July 1, by the scruff of his neck and the slack of his pants out the door there will be only three people left, which means that each of them will be responsible for administering 90 programs over an area 500 miles long. I was protesting his dismissal not only and not even because it was a terrible treatment to a human being but because in the process of doing it the federal Government was destroying its own job-creation program.

I brought the matter to the attention of the Minister, not on behalf of the employee but on behalf of the proper and rational expenditure of federal job creation programs and because by getting rid of this employee in Newfoundland the federal Government was making it impossible for the employment development branch to do its work. I still have not heard from the Minister, but I am patiently and hopefully, let me say, waiting.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I want to say, because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is in the House—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is aware of this, but I believe he is—that yesterday the Minister said that she was going to re-examine what was happening. In fact, she extended the time of the employees for two weeks. In this case I have to take my hat off to the Minister of Employment and Immigration for intervening—

Mr. Tobin: For two weeks.

Mr. Baker: —for that two week period. I have to do that. The Minister is going to deny that she intervened. She is going to deny and say: "No, I let my Department do what it had to do". I have the official record. I even know when the phone call was made. The Minister personally intervened.

However, I want to ask the hon. gentleman a simple question. What would he like this Minister to do now, now that she has extended the employment time of these people for two weeks? Would he like the Minister to have additional information? Perhaps people work harder in Newfoundland than in a lot of other areas of Canada, the United States and around the world.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, that was both an informative and extremely thought-provoking question. I will attempt to answer it in the short time the Speaker will allot me.

First, I also take off my hat to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It points out that Members of Parliament who do their jobs sincerely, honestly, with a good heart, a good mind and a good soul can make a difference. The Minister listened to Members over here. Our hat is off for two weeks, Mr. Speaker. In two weeks if you see me with my hat back on, that is fair warning to the Minister.

What would I like the Minister to do? I have told the Minister privately that administering 70 projects over 20,000 or 30,000 square miles of territory is not like administering projects in downtown Toronto. The Minister knows that. She knows the difference. I would like to see those people reinstated but, more important, I would like to see them made permanent employees of the federal Government. This overuse of term employees is wrong. We have had employees in Newfoundland who have been term employees for 10 years. That is an abuse of the individual and it is time the overextended, overused term employee concept is picked up by the scruff of the neck, the slack of the pants and flung out the window.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some patience, not a lot I must admit, to speeches in the last little while. I must confess to some confusion.

I took the opportunity to talk with those who are employed on Parliament Hill and who will be affected by this legislation. I spoke at some length over a number of months to a variety of individuals who represent what I would consider to be a good cross-section of the employment opportunities and the employment that would generally be affected by this legislation. They told me two things, and I think I owe it to the House to relay what I consider to be an important message.

They said that they felt the legislation as it was proposed was unsatisfactory. They said that it did not adequately reflect either the scope necessary to deal with the problems that they themselves believe they faced on an ongoing basis, and neither did it represent a sufficiently broad cross-section of the total occupational population of Parliament Hill. I will come back to that in a moment because the second thing they told me is of some importance when juxtaposed against the most recent two or three speeches. These people told me that the legislation goes much further than the Liberals ever went, but the one thing that disappointed them was that, after years and years and years of a Liberal Government, they had been unable to get that Government and that Party to move toward the recognition of the need for collective bargaining as a right for public servants who worked on Parliament Hill. I find it passing strange, in fact somewhat aggravating, that after years of forming the Government members of the now Official Opposition have the unmitigated gall to rise in this House of Commons and attempt to appear to defend the rights of the people who work for Parliament.

• (2010)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I can well understand the political requirements. I can well appreciate the need to suck up long after the date for atonement has passed. I can well appreciate the desire on the part of the Official Opposition to make it appear that somehow or other, by virtue of some massive transformation, they now represent the best interests of the people who work for the Parliament of Canada. However, I find it unbelievable. I suspect that the overwhelming majority of people who asked the Liberal Government over the years for the right to organize, who for years sought from the Liberal Government a nod or even a wink which would have indicated some desire of some kind to allow them the right to bargain collectively, feel the same way.

It is not often that I find myself at odds with my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). However, I must confess that this evening he has taken me beyond the pale. He has driven me to my feet, which as you can understand, Mr. Speaker, is no easy task. It is rare that I rise in the House of Commons. However, on this rare occasion I want to say that I find his arguments to be absolute and utter nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Not the content, let me say, concerning the way his constituents are treated. I say to him that his constituents have been badly treated by Government for as long as they have been his constituents.

Mr. Tobin: Even before?

Mr. Deans: Even before. When we represented them it was bad even, let me tell you. However, for him to attempt to leave the impression here tonight that somehow or other, by virtue of the result of the September, 1984 election those constituents now within the Public Service, who were there before, are worse off than they were under the Liberal Government is total nonsense if one considers it in the collective bargaining context. I know he is a fair and honourable soul and will want to correct the record.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I know he will because I can see in his eyes that sense of shame he feels having made these extravagant statements which, no doubt, under normal circumstances he would never have made. He was driven to it. By what I am not sure but he was driven to it nevertheless.

What is contained in this legislation is unsatisfactory. On that count my friend from Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe is absolutely correct, as was his colleague.

Mr. Lewis: You are starting to lose me now.

Mr. Deans: The legislation is not nearly adequate. He is absolutely correct when he says that many of the problems confronted by people who work in the Public Service, particularly on Parliament Hill, and who up until this point in time, notwithstanding many years of Liberal Government, have not been given the opportunity to bargain collectively, are not dealt with within this legislation. It does not afford those people the opportunity to correct the ills perpetrated on them over many, many years by a regime, Liberal though it may have been, with minor interruptions by the Conservative Party, which did not recognize their rights or the obligation of Government to its employees. I can understand that. He is right in that regard. He is also right in saying that it may well be that the vast majority of those covered by this legislation could, under normal circumstances, be given that the right to withdraw their services, given from time to time that may be deemed necessary.

Maybe we should have spent more time or should now spend more time trying to determine if there are classifications of employees that fall within the general definition of essential services. We could do that. We should. I have said so before and I say it again. However, frankly, I find that when the now Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, represented by 39 or 40 people at the moment, barely more, I must admit, than us, when they sit there and pontificate on how, if they were only the Government, things would be different, I cannot believe it. My colleague from Beaches looks at me and, in his normal earnest Scottish way, says "Not true". You know something? He is right. If I were to ask my other colleagues, or my friend from the Conservative Party who is sitting here giving us advice on pensions, they and he would tell us, I am sure, that had he the opportunity he would alter the legislation to conform with what we believe is necessary. I can see it in his eyes.

What I am trying to get at is that enough is enough. We have the legislation before us. It is all we are going to get. We think it to be inadequate. We consider that it could be altered somewhat marginally to reflect the realities. I do not understand why both the Liberal and Conservative Members want to deny their staffs the right to belong to a bargaining unit. If the Liberal Party is so determined that more rights should be extended to those who work on Parliament Hill, I do not understand why they do not voluntarily extend that right, as we have, to their staff. Give them the right to bargain collectively now rather than say they cannot do so because it is not in the Bill.

We in this Party recognized many years ago the right of individuals to come together in a collective bargaining unit, whether by law or by choice. We recognized that you could sign a collective agreement with your employees and that collective agreement would afford them certain protections and benefits. We did it. We did not wait for the law to change. We did not sit back and say that the law does not permit it so we cannot do it. We did it voluntarily. I challenge the Liberal caucus to sign up their staffs in a collective agreement structure. Let them sign a voluntary collective agreement such as we have for years accepted as the right of our employees in the NDP. Put your money where your mouth is. Well, maybe you do not have that much but do the best you can.

Mr. Blaikie: Money, that is.

Mr. Deans: Try to show by example, not by rhetoric. Idle rhetoric is available here on a daily basis from every side of the House.

Mr. Tobin: We can hear it now.

Mr. Deans: Put your money where your mouth is. Demonstrate by example that the Liberal caucus believes in the collective bargaining process. Invite representatives of the group who represents our employees to come in and sign up your employees, organize them into a unit and bargain on their behalf. Provide them with benefits, and let us together prove to the Government, albeit with difficulty, I do not deny, that collective bargaining can work for employees of Members of Parliament. Demonstrate by example that it can be done, notwithstanding the classification or category that an employee falls into.

There is the challenge. I say to my friend from Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, if his colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie or his colleague from Gander—Twillingate do not want to join with him, that is a different matter altogether. I suppose they will have to answer to their own constituents for that. Here we have the three of them, a wonderful group no doubt. Let me ask them a question: are you individually prepared to allow your staff to join in a collective bargaining arrangement? Will you allow them to join with our staff and become part of a union and bargain collectively with you? Are you prepared to do that? Are you prepared to stand up and say tonight that your staff is free to join a collective bargaining arrangement with an agent on your behalf? If so, I will make sure that the union representative is in your office in the morning.

● (2020)

Beyond that I want them to explain to me why it was that over all these years, this good labour-type group, so-called, the Liberal Party, did not bring forward any legislation like this, or even, let me say, legislation that would have allowed members of that caucus and all of the employees on Parliament Hill to have a collective bargaining agreement. I would like to hear the answers to those questions. I have taken enough time other than to say I very much appreciate the opportunity, as you know, and since I rise infrequently I thought it a good idea that I should put on the record my frustration with some of the members of the caucus from the Liberal Party who have just spoken.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who has just spoken that I have enjoyed his comments tremendously, not because they were necessarily accurate or particularly informative, but they were entertaining in the normal course of events as they are whenever the Member gets to his feet.

Let us examine what he said. What the Member said in addressing his remarks to the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, who so humbly stands upon his feet in this House, is that the legislation is not adequate. He said the Member is absolutely correct when he points out the inadequacies in the legislation. He said the Member is absolutely correct in pointing out some of the problems from which his constituents are suffering. That is what the Member said.

That is the substance of his remarks. All the rest of his remarks were remarks that were borne out of frustration that I, as the Member from Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe, stood behind the Member for Gander—Twillingate, who is a Liberal Member, and when I saw that no other Member would stand to defend the interests of Hill employees, because no NDP Member was going to stand, because no Conservative Member was going to stand, I stood.

In examining what the Member said I find that it was not that he disagreed with my analysis of the Bill, in fact he said it was absolutely correct. What he was saying was that he was unhappy that two Liberals in a row rose to speak, because no other Member stood, and that was more than he could bear. Two Liberals stood to defend the basic and fundamental collective bargaining rights of any employee and, more particularly, those employees who serve Members of Parliament.

What the Member was really venting was not disagreement with my analysis but,rather some discomfort that the Liberal Party has had to fill here tonight the role of defender of those employees who could find no other voice in Parliament because no other Member but myself would stand behind the Member for Gander—Twillingate to contribute to this debate.

Having said that, let me say to the Member that my employees are free in my office, because I do not regard them as my employees. I regard them as employees who serve the people of Canada, primarily my constituency, but all the people of Canada are free to associate with whom they want. That is understood in the office that I work in.

The second thing I want to say to the Member is that as a Member of Parliament who takes seriously this reform that is supposed to imbue this place, let us find our conscience and our tongue to speak our minds. I have never failed to stand and to speak my mind notwithstanding history, the present or the future. If the Member finds that offensive, then offend I shall on many occasions.

Mr. Deans: It will be interesting to see my colleagues speak of history as it affects the future, I am not sure how he does that. My upset was not with the fact that he said things that might make sense, he always says things that make sense, I never denied it. What I find strange is that after half a century of Liberal Government the Liberal Members rise and expect us to believe that somehow or other they do not like the legislation because it does not go far enough, when after all the opportunities they have had over years and years of government they never once brought forward a piece of legislation themselves. Never once. The Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe was here for the four years when the Liberals were in office from 1980 to 1984. I do not remember him once rising to defend the rights of Parliament Hill employees to organize as a union, to bargain collectively. I do not remember it. I ask him if he can find it in the record, to put it back on the record now. When, between 1980 and 1984, did he ever rise in his place and demand of the Government that it afford to the employees of Parliament Hill the right to collective bargaining? I say frankly to my other colleague who is desperately bobbing up and down hoping to get the floor, that I do not remember his doing it either.

It is not whether individually the Liberal Members might say that if the Hill were organized their staff could join. What I want to know is this: is the Liberal caucus committed to collective bargaining for its employees? Is the Liberal caucus prepared to say to its employees without hesitation, without equivocation, that the Liberal Members would be very pleased if the staff were to join with other people on Parliament Hill and form a union to bargain collectively with us? Let me help you out, lest you cannot find the words, I know what they are, the word is no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I always thought that questions and comments were for Members to ask of the person who was speaking, and not for the person who is speaking to be asking the questions. Maybe I am wrong. I am pretty sure that this is the way it was structured. Nevertheless, we will let it go.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would only say to the Member that my employees are free to do as they wish. When he asks me whether I would let them know that it would please me greatly if they would all do a certain thing, I want to ask him, where does he find that model of democracy that says to employees, that I would be pleased if you would do a certain thing, therefore, I would be displeased if you do not do what I want you to do? That is the politburo, commissar type of relationship that one has with one's employees. I do not ever threaten my employees. I do not tell them I am pleased or displeased about decisions they take about their personal life. There are intelligent employees in my office, freely able to express themselves and to think for themselves.

Mr. Deans: I am certainly pleased to hear that. I can, therefore, assume that the answer to my question is no. On the one hand the Member is not prepared to indicate that he would be not displeased if his staff were to join a union, that he would be happy to deal with them. More important, since obviously a one-on-one thing is not going to be terribly satisfactory, is he prepared to tell me that the Liberal caucus meeting one Wednesday morning made a decision that it would find it acceptable if the workers decided to become part of a union?

• (2030)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can put it into context. This Bill will pass soon and no one need worry about that.

When the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) asks a question about unionized employees, he is putting it to the wrong people when he asks the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) or myself, the Member for Gander—Twillingate. Let me explain why. The employees in my colleague's office and my office would break every union agreement every day because they do not work eight hours a day, they work 12 and 14 hours, of their own volition. They do that because we deal with welfare cases, unemployment insurance cases and Canada Pension cases. The phone bills will prove that the member from the New Democratic Party is speaking to the wrong people when he asks: "Will you allow your employees—", of course we will allow our employees. Perhaps I should not say this, but I think we have the best employees on Parliament Hill.

The other point concerns criticizing a government Member. Today, a Progessive Conservative Member does his job in his caucus. That is why some people who occasionally watch the House of Commons unfairly judge a Conservative Member today when they ask that Member why he did not speak when a very topical subject came before the House. The chances are that nine times out of ten that Member was speaking in his caucus, or speaking behind the scenes to his Minister.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is living in the past. It is like back to the future, he believes that the Government is behaving the same as the Liberals behaved—those free-wheeling spenders who created all those Crown corporations, threw money at problems, would not lay anyone off, and created employment. That is the difference. The Government is obsessed with the deficit. When the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe and myself see lay-offs, we talk about them because we are concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a short rebuttal. I hope that people are watching this performance this evening so they can see how Parliament really lives and how it really works.

Mr. Deans: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not often make gratuitous comments about the Chair. However, let me make two comments in answer to my colleague. I do not know why he is now sucking up to the Conservatives. Second, is he suggesting that because people work on welfare cases and unemployment insurance cases and work 12 hours a day, that they somehow ought not to belong to a union?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I am simply suggesting that I am sure there is not one Member of Parliament who would refuse any such request from their employees. I am suggesting to the Hon. Member that one is not a very good union employee if one agrees to work an extra four hours a day for nothing.

Mr. Deans: Well, pay them overtime like I do.

Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act

Mr. Baker: They would soon be booted out of that union. But they do this because they want to. They are under no obligation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have now terminated. Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, after listening to what was said by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I have to conclude that this House has nothing to learn from the Hon. Member and certainly not from the New Democratic Party.

The Hon. Member's speech reminded me of the time when I was a Member of the Quebec National Assembly, when the Opposition Members, at the time it was the Parti Québécois, the great defenders of the unions, would rise and condemn the Government. But as soon as the Parti Québécois came to power, they were the people who kept passing repressive legislation and breaking collective agreements. Mr. Speaker, I find that the New Democratic Party has much in common with those Parti Québécois Members. When they are in the Opposition, they make a lot of speeches, but as soon as they come to power, they do the exact opposite.

I remember the people in the New Democratic Party when they had the balance of power. And I never heard a Member of the New Democratic Party demand that the then Liberal Government, as a condition for staying in power, allow employees of the House of Commons to organize. As usual, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) just gave us one of his marvelous performances that go over so well on the TV screen, while the Hon. Member disappears as soon as he has finished his show.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather get back to Bill C-45. I think all Members of this House should rejoice today because it is a step forward towards union organizing. Not so long ago, Members of all political parties could say and hide behind these words: the Queen does not negotiate with her subjects. All these people used a lot of high-sounding phrases and dragged the Queen into their eloquent speeches to stop employees on Parliament Hill from getting the right to organize and defend their rights and have a collective agreement.

Mr. Speaker, these employees, including messengers and the people who make the transcripts and operate the television cameras and drive our mini-buses, these people, when they work outside normal working hours, have no arrangement for time and a half or double time. They are literally at the mercy of our parliamentarians, and let's face it, we are not easy to get along with. It isn't easy to work for Members because they are busy working for the well-being of their fellow citizens. I am convinced that most Members of Parliament are anxious to respond as efficiently and as quickly as possible to the requests they receive from their constituents, be they about unemployment insurance problems, employment problems, problems related to old age security pensions, every time Members want to respond quickly so they want answers from the library staff, from messengers, from ministerial office personnel, Members want quick and efficient responses to be able to serve their constituents intelligently.

Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that because they want to give good service to all Canadians Hon. Members always expect a little more from Parliament Hill employees. Mr. Speaker, it is important and I think it would have been better had most Members agreed to give those people the right to strike after negotiating a collective agreement.

Mr. Speaker, police officers do not have the right to go on strike. There are many places where people do not have the right to strike, but they do go on illegal strikes. Provocation is as bad and as serious as allowing somebody to exercise a right in self-defence, but it makes it possible for both parties to show maturity and negotiate in good faith. Mr. Speaker, we could have allowed that, in adjudication cases, the expenses incurred by the union be paid by the employer. We have to keep in mind that these people are newly unionized, roughly 2,000 of them. There again I think it would have been better for the Government to accept these amendments concerning employee collective bargaining and unionization.

Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain earlier, and I must say that I have no lesson to learn from him. As I have already mentioned, at the age of 12, I organized a strike of choir boys, and I must say that, contrary to the kind of union work carried out by the New Democratic Party, I had not asked for one cent in union dues since we were getting five cents, and we immediately got 30 cents.

Mr. Speaker, I can show you evidence that I still pay my union dues. I am affiliated with the Quebec Federation of Labour. I am still a member of my union and I have no lesson to receive from any NDP Member. I may not be a trade unionist, but I am a union member. A permanent trade unionist is paid from union dues while a union member relies on his union leader and his boss. He is caught between the two and he is always the one to pay. I think that we have different views of what makes a trade unionist.

I shall now come back to Bill C-45.

As I have already mentioned, it is a step forward in the process to democratize and unionize our system. The example given by Parliament employees will perhaps appease the fears of businessmen who think that unionization is dangerous and harmful. If they have a good employer, the employess will not try to unionize, they will not try to revolt, and if there is negotiation and agreement between the two parties, there will necessarily be harmony, a good plan of work and improved conditions for working men and women.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government never goes as far as it could in what it offers, whether in social programs, as we saw in the case of pension reform, or in collective agreements, as in the case of this Bill, or in the case of security measures at the airports. There had to be a disaster, a strike of security employees in Dorval and Mirabel, and a reporter who clearly showed that the safety of the public was in jeopardy because of an unclear situation respecting wages, collective agreements, the way the employees were treated and fairness of the system. As we know, at the Dorval and Mirabel airports, certain security officers in charge of supervising the parking lots were getting $6.45, while those in charge of passenger safety being were paid much less. Mr. Speaker, I must say that last Friday, there was a meeting in the basement of the Saint-Pierre-Apôtre Church of the members of the Quebec Labour Federation, and I imagine that the Hon. Member for Argenteuil was invited to attend because of the victory won by that union. Mr. Speaker, this shows once again that unions are not always negative. These organized steelworkers paid only minimum wages have demonstrated that the lives of the passengers leaving Mirabel and Dorval were endangered because of the absence of equal treatment and justice for all. If organized labour and unions have negative sides, they can have positive sides too, Mr. Speaker. Like the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), I feel that Parliament Hill employees should have been given the right to strike. As mentioned by the Hon. Member for Papineau, everybody knows most of these employees: they are here to serve the Canadian public. For instance, there are the messengers who respond quickly and efficiently to the requests made by Hon. Members; there are the many minibus drivers; there are the people responsible for recording the official proceedings of the House for Debates; there are the television employees; all of them are serious people who are never absent, who never refuse to work and never do their jobs improperly. Granting these people the right to strike, a right which other civil servants enjoy, would have shown that we recognize their sense of responsibility.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, these people, in spite of their irregular hours, are paid straight time. Are there many employees across the country who, because of a change of schedule, are forced to work beyond a certain number of hours, will accept to be paid straight time? I do not think there are very many. I suggest we should have recognized the services these people have provided for so many years by granting them the right to strike or, at least, by ensuring that any legal expenses incurred in the adjudication of a dispute were paid by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I think the time has come for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), a person who at the time she was sitting on opposition benches had demonstrated a rather strong moral conscience, to exert pressures on her Cabinet colleagues, especially those with rightist tendencies—we know some of them—to accept at least the amendment as moved, so that the legal expenses incurred in the adjudication of a dispute can be paid for by the employer.

• (2040)

Mr. Speaker, there are not millions of dollars involved. We have heard about expenses in the order of $800 000 for three trips made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). But that was for just one or two persons. We know about $35,000 spent on selling his image in the United States. We saw today a magazine with a circulation of over 100,000 in which there were 17 pictures of him—and this morning he suggested that was still not enough—but as yet we do not know how much that has cost!

Mr. Speaker, there is not that much money involved where these employees are concerned. Employees of the House of Commons do not ask for that much. They only ask that the Government accept to cover their legal expenses, when they need to have lawyers to defend their cases in the arbitration process. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this is simple, logical and sensible.

As suggested by my colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), certainly no one here feels this is an irresponsible request made by the employees. As suggested by my colleague for Saint-Denis, I say this is not unreasonable. If as individuals they find that request to be most reasonable, most responsible, why then do they, as the Conservative Party, turn it down as unacceptable?

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has promised changes. Members of Parliament would have more power, they would have more freedom! We realize this is not the case, nothing has changed! There is increasing doubt as to who is leading that party. All we know is the Government is a huge voting machine. Conservative Members are a bunch of men and women who are playing musical chairs. But when the time comes to defend substantial issues, issues in which they believe, and certainly those people do defend that in their caucus, but it would seem there is an extraneous force that is not part of the Government but that makes those decisions, and those decisions fly in the face of what I believe is the philosophy of some of the Members. I am convinced that as private Members they would accept that. They all told me; Yes, really this is acceptable, it is reasonable, those are not outlandish costs, this is what is being done within the Public Service Commission.

Why discriminate against employees of the House of Commons? They are not any worse than employees of the Public Service Commission, Mr. Speaker. But not to know who among them made that decision, that is not good enough.

Mr. Speaker, on that issue you have the Opposition Members, whether in the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party, and certainly some Conservative Members—not the true Tories, because for them we know that only the law of the jungle prevails, the survival of the fittest. But I am convinced that a minority of Conservative Members, along with New Democratic Party Members and Liberal Members, did all they could to give the best to our employees in the House of Commons.

In conclusion, I would like to commend my colleague for Hamilton East (M. Copps) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for having fought vigourously and doggedly over this Bill. I know the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is here not just to defend the interests of employees on Parliament Hill, not all of them, but a good many are constituents of his, and it is for a good reason that during the last election, people trusted the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, Mr. Speaker. They knew from experience that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, whether in Government or in Opposition, is someone on whom they can rely to defend them.

Unfortunately—Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has almost expired—unfortunately in 1988 we will not be in a position to say the same thing about a very large majority of Conservative Members, because people will not know whether or not they defended their interests as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier did.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope in conclusion that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) will show her concern for human values and urge her cabinet colleagues not only to allow employees of the House of Commons to enjoy the right to strike but to pay for their litigation expenses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments?

• (2050)

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak in this debate. We are in the last week of the session before the summer recess. I understand that there have been discussions among House Leaders and some agreements, at least informal ones, have been arrived at in order that a certain number of Bills which are still before the House can be dealt with before we adjourn on Friday. We have been told that to accomplish that end we should show some restraint in debate.

Since we made our position clear with respect to this Bill during the debate at second reading stage, and since members of our Party who sat on the committee which dealt with this Bill clause by clause explained our views and proposed amendments which were debated at report stage, I did not think it was necessary to speak. However, I have to say that there is one thing which has been made very clear to me again tonight; that is the tremendous difference between members of the Liberal Party when they form the Government and members of the Liberal Party when they sit in opposition.

Mr. Gauthier: You'll never know because you'll never be a Liberal.

Mr. Orlikow: I know exactly what I am saying. A few years after I first came to this place I remember a Liberal Member of Parliament from Ottawa who had about a dozen or 15 chairs sitting outside his office at all times. Since I was curious about this I asked one day what the chairs were doing there. It was explained to me that if any person wanted a job on Parliament Hill, they had to approach this Liberal Member of Parliament. He saw that they either got a job or did not get a job. He had the power and the influence.

Between four and five years ago when a few employees on Parliament Hill decided that enough was enough, that conditions were such that they needed to belong to a union, my assistant, Alain Piché, spoke to me. He told me that he had been approached by these people. He asked me if I would mind if, in the evenings, he helped those people who wished to belong to a union. I told him that of course I would not mind. I believe that every Canadian who wants to belong to a union should have the right to belong to one.

I wish to say to Liberal Members of Parliament that those people who first took the lead with respect to organizing workers on Parliament Hill, the people who work in the cafeterias, the restaurants, the messengers, the people in the post office, security staff and bus-drivers, did it very quietly. They did it almost surreptitiously because they knew that they would not receive much sympathy. In fact, there was no sympathy on the part of Liberal cabinet Ministers. They knew that there was real opposition on the part of senior administrators in this place to their desire to belong to unions. I was quite happy to allow my assistant do that work for them.

After about two years he came to me and asked if he could have a leave of absence without pay in order to work full-time at this job. I remind Hon. Members that during these years that this was happening there was a Liberal Government in place. Where were the Liberal Members of Parliament then? Where were those who made these great speeches tonight about this Bill which we are to pass not being good enough? Where were they then? They were conspicuous by their absence. There was not the slightest indication given, certainly not publicly, that any Liberal Member, and certainly no Liberal cabinet Minister, really believed that the people who work on Parliament Hill should have the right to belong to a union, any union.

Mr. Caccia: How do you know? Why do you make such a silly statement?

Mr. Orlikow: On the basis of the record.

Mr. Caccia: That is absolute nonsense. There is no record that you can quote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Caccia: You are pulling it out of thin air. That is irresponsible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There will be an opportunity for questions and comments after the Hon. Member terminates his speech. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has the floor.

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has the same right as I have to speak. If he wants to disagree with me, or if he wants to give evidence to say that what I am saying is not correct, then he can do that.

What I am saying is that until 1984 there were Liberal Governments for almost all of the time that I have been in this place, except for the short period of time when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was Prime Minister. The Liberal Government could have indicated at any time to people who work on the Hill that if they wanted to join a union then they could do so and that legislation would be enacted giving them the right which other workers have to bargain collectively, if they could sign up the members. There was never any indication that members of Liberal Governments approved of that measure.

I say to the Hon. Member that there were plenty of indications. He does not have to take my word for it. He can talk to the people who now lead the union which has applied for certification and which will receive recognition once this Bill is passed. The fact is that there was never any indication that the Liberals supported such a move. In fact, there was every indication that the Liberals looked on that type of idea and opposed it.

We have very clearly indicated that there are substantial portions of this Bill which are not satisfactory. This Bill does not give employees the rights which they would have if they worked in the private sector. Nor does it give them all the rights which they would have if they fell under the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We have indicated our opposition to those failures. We brought forward a number of amendments which would have given them the rights which other workers enjoy. Those amendments were turned down by the Government.

We are dissatisfied; and we have said that again and again. We know that in the future there will be changes. We hope, and we know, that there will be changes for the better to the legislation. The employees on the Hill need this legislation. They need the right to bargain collectively today more than ever because, added to all the difficulties which they have had up until now, including the absolute ability of the administration to change the rules, working conditions and job classifications, there is the determination of this Government to cut back on the Public Service.

We know that there have been discussions about privatizing the cafeteria and the Parliamentary Restaurant. We know that a substantial number of permanent employees who operate the consoles at committee meetings which record the proceedings have been let go or have been retired and are being replaced by part-time contract employees. We know that the numbers of people involved in language training for Members of Parliament and others are being reduced. More than ever the employees need the right to bargain collectively. We have been saying that for years. We know that this Bill lacks a great deal but it will pass. With all its imperfections, it is the most to which the Government would agree. We regret that and oppose the refusal of the Government to pass the kind of legislation to which we believe employees are entitled, the same kind of legislation that other employees in both the private and public sector enjoy.

• (2100)

We know that this Bill will pass tonight. I would simply say that I find it to be strange, to say the least, to hear long and laudatory speeches made by Liberal Members urging that this Bill not only pass but that it be improved upon. They are calling for all those things which they failed to do or would not do when they were in Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to speak on Bill C-45. As I have indicated to all Hon. Members, I had the privilege at one time of being an employee of the House of Commons. The working conditions that have been described by various Hon. Members are, by and large, accurate. I know this because I was there and had the personal opportunity to see just what kind of benefits were afforded, just what kind of benefits were denied and most of all, just what kind of benefits were available at one time but were later denied to employees. It is that particular area about which I wish to speak.

I should not let the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) go by. He asked where Liberal Members of Parliament were during the last Government and why they did not bring these issues to the forefront of the House of Commons at that time. I know where I was at that time. I was one of those employees myself so that takes care of this particular Member of Parliament.

The Hon. Member asked what the Liberals did for the collective rights of public servants. I would like to remind him that the collective bargaining rights public servants now enjoy were, in very large part, passed by Liberal administrations. I am sure he knows that and it was merely an oversight on his part that he did not mention it before.

I recognize that the Bill before us today is not as complete as I would like it to be. However, a draft of the present Bill or a similar Bill was prepared by the previous Government before the unfortunate event of September 4, 1984, an event which will soon be rectified. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North asked what evidence existed that the Liberal Party wanted to enhance the collective bargaining rights of public servants. I have given him some examples of such evidence.

I should also remind all Hon. Members who were here before of how we got into the situation that exists at the House of Commons in which employees increasingly need a mechanism to air grievances and correct the unfair treatment to which they have been subjected. In order to discuss that issue, we should recall that the staff of the House of Commons has increased in rather great measure over recent years. This is not something that existed 30 years ago or even 20 years ago. This is something that grew out of the expansion of Parliament.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, as you have been here for a number of years although you are still a very young man, and as I recall because I was a staff member, during your first years here, all the services Members enjoy today did not exist. Members did not have large offices with research and support staff. The place did not work that way. There were no word processors or other sophisticated equipment.

I recall when a Member of Parliament had in his or her office—mostly his because there were very few women Members at the time—only one secretary in one small room. That had only occurred shortly before I came to Parliament Hill as an employee. I am told that before that, there were two Members and two secretaries to one room and before that, I understand that there were two Members and only one secretary and that the one secretary worked for the two Members simultaneously.

All of this is to say that the size of the staff on the Hill has increased. In the 1970s, because there had been this massive increase in staff, there was a restructuring of the administration here on the Hill. This restructuring was supposed to make the place better. Of course, if one were to ask the opinion of most people who work here, one would find that their opinion is slightly different. The word "better" is not the one that most employees would use to describe working conditions and how this place has operated since the restructuring of the administration of the House of Commons.

Perhaps some restructuring was necessary. There is no such thing as an administration that does not need to be improved upon just like there is no such thing as collective bargaining rights that do not need to be enhanced. Everything should be better than it is and it is our role as Members of Parliament to make sure that general conditions for everyone improve.

At the time we sought to improve the administrative structure of the House of Commons, it is my view that there should have been a parallel movement to improve the methods by which the staff could collectively air grievances with the new bureaucracy created at the top level here at the House of Commons.

[Translation]

And the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was saying earlier that under the Liberal administration, perhaps 10, 15, 20 years ago, jobless people were seen to turn to their Members of Parliament to try and get a job on Parliament Hill.

I am considering this, Mr. Speaker, and I still wonder what can be wrong with that. Is there anything wrong about contacting one's Member of Parliament and trying to find a job here, either on Parliament Hill or elsewhere?

It is a fact that on Parliament Hill in those days before the new management was set up, there was indeed very little structure. How was the staff hired? I remember, Mr. Speaker, that it was not unusual in some services, especially two of them, for the managers to seek the advice of Members about suitable people to fill some positions. Then there was no process. And the local Members from all political parties, I think were doing what they could to find jobs for their constituents. It may not have been the best procedure, but it was the only structure in place and Members were trying to find jobs for their constituents.

However, today, Mr. Speaker, we have the management structures to which I referred earlier. But I feel that a serious mistake was made when no process was provided to allow the employees to state their grievances to the new parliamentary management.

In short, I wanted to say that it would have been essential beginning in the mid-seventies, about 1975-76, to consider implementing some legislation allowing the staff of the House to become unionized. The previous Government made such an attempt. However, Mr. Speaker, we are sitting in this House during this Parliament and not in the previous one.

• (2110)

[English]

We are not here only to reminisce about things which some of us think some of us should have done some time ago. Our task as Members of Parliament is to attempt to improve the rights and privileges of all Canadians, to try to make a better life for all. The ideal place to show an example for the entire country is right here in this place. It is here that we should demonstrate to all Canadians that we are able to improve their collective lot. We should demonstrate that by showing good faith. In any case, the people of Canada should be able to measure how well we do by the way in which we treat employees on Parliament Hill.

If we in the House are unable to improve the working conditions of 3,000 or so employees who work within the precincts of Parliament Hill, what qualifies us to pretend that we are able to improve the collective life of everyone else in Canada? Surely this place should be a model for all employers. Surely employers should be able to look at this place to see an example of where employees are treated in a just, fair, and equitable way. That is not the case today. However, it is my hope that this legislation, as incomplete as it is, will at least be a start toward improving the rights of employees of the House of Commons.

Mr. Forrestall: Why did you oppose me when I did it 15 years ago?

Mr. Boudria: I hear the very interesting remarks of the Hon. Member across the way. I remember well his remarks some 15 years ago, from my working station in the House of Commons. I forget just what I was doing in 1971, but I think I was a pack boy in the stationery store in the West Block. I used every influence I had as a pack boy to change the legislation and to get improvements! That duty should rest on Members of the House, not on people who were not here at any given time in the past. Our duty is to improve those rights here, now, and today.

I call upon all Members of Parliament to do their best, not just in passing this Bill because it is not complete enough, but in starting to think about more complete legislation to give full and better bargaining rights to the employees of the House of Commons.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member told us that before the 1984 election the Liberal Government had ready legislation dealing with this question. I remind him that the Liberals were in government from 1963 to 1984, with the exception of nine months. They were in Government for 20 years. What the Hon. Member is saying is that in the twentieth year they finally got around to drafting legislation. That proves precisely the point which I made, that is, the Liberals take these kinds of questions very seriously only when they are in the Opposition.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to those remarks. The Hon. Member who just posed the question should know that he was talking about 1962 and 1963. I ask him what were the collective bargaining rights of all public servants at that time. Who initiated the process of collective rights for public servants across Canada? It was the Liberal Government. I am glad the Hon. Member raised that subject. It gave me an occasion to correct the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) rising on debate or to ask a question?

Mr. Prud'homme: On debate, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I ask Hon. Members opposite to be cool. I know there is a gentleman's agreement to pass the Bill quickly. If my colleagues opposite are quiet, I will co-operate, but if they want to debate, of course we will not finish tonight. I just wanted to put some comments on record.

Mr. Forrestall: Oh! oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: A third interruption, and I will speak for all the time allotted. I just wanted to be on record as saying that I regret—

Mr. Forrestall: You have no intention of doing anything other than that.

An Hon. Member: Listen to what he has to say.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am used to my very good colleague from Nova Scotia.

I regret that we could not vote on Motion No. 11 which reads in part as follows:

> 69. Where expenses are incurred in the adjudication of any dispute, provisions similar to those in the Public Service Staff Relations Act apply.

[Translation]

I simply want to say that, given the spirit of co-operation, despite the fact that I like and understand all House of Commons employees who all have a personal history, I must remember that before I became a Member I was a student and I filled most parliamentary jobs, not here in Parliament but elsewhere in the private sector. So I am aware of the kind of respect we owe our employees be they in kitchens or in offices. I had an amendment ready, I will not move it but I simply want to say that I had drafted this amendment: That Bill C-45 be not now read for the third time but that it be referred to a Legislative Committee for reconsideration of Clause 69.

This would mean we would pay the expenses incurred in adjudication cases rather than force the employees to pay them. The more Members say so, the more numerous opportunities we will have to get back to this question. If ever the occasion were to arise we might say: Listen, the spirit which prevailed the evening of June 25 when we agreed to pass this Bill, the spirit was that there would be no abuse. I certainly would not want the House of Commons to behave like a private sector company, use strong tactics, turn down certain requests and say: If you are not happy, try arbitration. Then we know full well that the House of Commons which represents all Canadians has unlimited resources, unlimited resources to fight, so it would be very unfair to pit our House of Commons employees against Parliament which obviously has unlimited financial resources and might tell them: Well, we will call in an arbitrator, we will pay our expenses, but pay your own.

I simply want to be sure that such abuses will not occur, and as I said at the beginning, the best way would have been to pass this amendment earlier this evening, but it was defeated. We could move a motion asking that this Bill be not now read and be referred back to the Legislative Committee for review of this clause. However, this seems impossible. The result of the vote would be the same as a few hours ago. I prefer co-operation, and as a Member who likes to co-operate, since the Government wants to pass this Bill as quickly as possible, I and my colleagues have decided that it is useless to fight as the results will be the same. I will therefore not move this amendment to refer the Bill to the Legislative Committee to consider what we believe to be an important amendment.

I shall therefore conclude by saying that we still hope that what the Government is offering will represent a beginning for Parliament employees, but as I have already mentioned, I would have preferred, that several of the amendments moved by my colleague be accepted in a spirit of co-operation. I consider it my duty to speak as Chairman of the Committee on Members's Services. Who provides these services to Members? The employees of the House of Commons. I felt that I should at least say that I regret that we could not—

• (2120)

[English]

As they say in English, we would not have gone all the way. I regret it, but I see there is no use insisting, so I will not insist.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-111, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Miss MacDonald (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this Bill has within it three quite distinct parts. The third part I will not deal with very much at all. It extends a commitment which we feel should not have been extended as far as it has been with respect to pornography under the Customs Act.

The first two parts of the Bill are interesting. The first part deals with the intent to establish a relationship between Canada and the Caribbean countries called CARIBCAN. It is an attempt to work out a trading relationship which will permit the Caribbean countries to enter their goods into Canada with a few exceptions at tariff free rates.

We have examined this Bill in committee and continue to have some concerns about the shortcomings that exist. These are two major gaps. First, there is a signficant set of products left out of the trade relationship to be established. Any Members of Parliament who know the Caribbean economies at all will recognize that the specific goods which are exempted—textiles, garments, footwear and leather products—are very much the products prevalent in many of the manufacturing economies of the Caribbean Islands. To leave them out is to block off the potential for manufacturing growth in some of those Caribbean islands.

Second, there is a 60 per cent value added criterion which is set up in this Bill, that is to say, you have to produce 60 per cent of the value added of any item which is to benefit under this Bill within the Caribbean economy itself. For a developing country that is usually quite difficult. In this case it compares very poorly and very unfairly with the 35 per cent value added provision which exists under the U.S. arrangement with the Caribbean countries called the Caribbean Basin Initiative. We could have been a good deal more generous with respect to these arrangements.

Our discussions with Jamaican representatives, just to take that country as an example, suggests to us that they continue to feel quite unhappy with the restrictions placed in the context of this Bill. We had hoped to have some witnesses before the legislative committee to reflect some of the unhappiness, but there was a push on the part of the Conservative majority in the legislative committee to get this Bill through as quickly as possible. For that reason we did not find it possible to invite witnesses to speak to these areas.

I want to turn from that part of the Bill, which is interesting but as I have suggested hardly earth-shaking, to the second part of the Bill which I think might be called by the Conservative Members of the House the "mouse that roared" section of the Bill while we might consider it as "the mouse that cut off its own foot" section of the Bill. What the second section of the Bill, deals with is the bizarre attempt on the part of the Government to reliate against the United States for its shake and shingle tariff by raising a tariff on our computer and business machines produced here in Canada.

I think it is remarkable that we should first attempt to put into place a system of retaliation which does absolutely nothing for the shake and shingle producers in British Columbia either directly or indirectly. It is even more remarkable that this effort at retaliation should be so misguided, so distorted, so wrong-headed in the area in which retaliation is taken. We did manage to have the representatives of two of the important computer manufacturing and business manufacturing sectors come before our committee. They presented, I must say, a sorry tale of exactly how the Government had behaved in this misguided mixed up effort at trade retaliation.

I have to quote, for the benefit of some Members in the House who have not had the chance yet to work their way through the legislative committee minutes, some of the very harsh comments made by business representatives who we managed to get invited to come before the committee. I note first the comments of Mr. Gordon Gow of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association. He is also President of Gandalf Systems Group. He said quite bluntly that he did not see how Bill C-111 does us any good. He went on to say that it is entirely a "lose, lose, lose" situation; the Government loses, the consumer loses and the industry loses.

• (2130)

In the Budget of last February the Government first attempted to reduce all tariffs affecting this industry after telling the industry to make adjustments to work its way through this difficult period of having to live without tariffs. The industry welcomed that because it gave it a chance to compete in the U.S. and Japan. What was exciting about this approach to freer trade was that it was sectoral, it had been discussed with the industry and they felt good about it, and, unlike the thrust by the Government to set up a free trade deal with the U.S., it did not lock us exclusively to the U.S.

In short, it was a quite admirable effort at sectoral free trade which gave Canadians a chance to penetrate both the U.S. and Japanese markets and at the same time import duty-free from both those countries the computer parts and semiconductors we need to build business machines to sell competitively throughout the world. From our point of view, it was exactly the kind of free trade arrangement that we should be attempting to establish. Yet it was wiped out by this misguided attempt to retaliate against the U.S. by raising tariffs on products produced by these very industries which had just gone through the process of adjusting to a new low tariff world.

In the face of that, representatives of small and medium-sized firms were absolutely scathing. Mr. Gow went on to say:

> The other important part I would like to bring to your attention is the paperwork that is going to be caused by this Bill—

Here we have a Government which, when it came into power, said it would attempt to cut down paperwork for Canadian businesses. In this Bill, as amended, it is increasing that paperwork. A Government which says it is committed to freer trade is increasing tariffs and trade restrictions, not just against the U.S. but against Japan. In some cases, as Mr. Gow put it, this Bill could go as far as to be a back-breaker for these small companies. Yet that is the Bill which this Conservative Government pushed through committee without accepting amendments. Mr. Gow also said:

> So we feel we have been betrayed—in that back in February this same government took all of these tariffs off to make us more competitive for all the reasons that we wanted to be in a position where we could be in the export market.

That was done without any consultation whatsoever with the Association or any company in the computer or semiconductor sector.

We were also fortunate to have the testimony of Mr. Allan Aiken of the Canadian Semiconductor Design Association. He gave us estimates which indicated that the cut-back in profitability as a result of these so-called retaliatory tariffs could end up putting some of these important semiconductor producers out of business.

Mr. George Best, President of the Canadian Business Equipment Manufacturers Association said that the tripartite agreement between Canada, the U.S. and Japan to eliminate duties on parts and semiconductors was an important step toward full duty elimination. CBEMA members strongly support that agreement. Therefore, they were even more dismayed at the reimposition of Canadian tariffs on computer parts and semiconductors. This Government claimed to be trying to do something to show how tough it was with the U.S. Government, yet all it did was damage our own industry. This damage was documented by these key spokesmen from business centres which represent every aspect of the industry.

CBEMA represents the producers of business machines. The Canadian Advanced Technology Association represents the producers of computers and computer parts in this country. These were the very people who wanted this tripartite sector based freer trade arrangement with Japan and the United States, and which still find it completely impossible to understand the logic of what is taking place in trying to put this measure into effect now, calling it retaliation, and yet the only people who are hurt are Canadian consumers, the Canadian Government and Canadian producers.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, as I asked members of the Legislative committee how it could possibly make sense to do what this Bill is doing. I ask how it could conceivably be of any benefit to this country to hurt these small firms as this Bill is hurting them. I ask how it could possibly be in any sense consistent with what this Government is trying to do in other areas, to take this example of freer trade in a sector where the industry wants it, where workers want it, where consumers want it, and to turn that free trade arrangement into something which, instead of giving us a freer trade arrangement, does devastating damage to our industry.

How can this possibly make sense? How can a Government continue to put a Bill like this forward when the victims of the Bill are going to be small firms and Canadian consumers across this country? It is going to be small computer-based companies in the high tech sector, which are precisely the firms we should be giving encouragement to at this stage in 1986.

I cannot see any sense to it at all. I have yet to see any Conservative at the legislative committee at second reading or at this stage of debate who has been able to demonstrate any sense that lies in this particular section of the Bill. There is absolutely no logic to it. It makes no sense, and a Government which was either being consistent or being logical would go back to the Bill as it originally stood instead of going with it as amended at this particular stage.

I finish once more with a plea to the House on this occasion, at least, to recognize the nonsense which is being undertaken in the name of logic. It cannot possibly make sense to anybody on the government side to put this Bill through as it is attempting to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak at the third reading stage of Bill C-111, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments. I realize the Government is in a hurry to adopt a number of Bills this evening, but I would still like to touch on one of the aspects I did not have a chance to mention at second reading.

Early this year, Canada signed an agreement with Japan and the United States under which all three countries would be able to exchange computer parts without paying duty. On May 26, 1986, the House accepted first reading of Bill C-111, which included this measure that would allow parts from the United States, Japan or Canada to enter these countries duty-free.

And now, Mr. Speaker, on June 6, the Government decided to impose duty on those very same parts of data processing equipment and office equipment which at the beginning of the year had been the subject of an agreement with the United States and Japan.

On second reading, we said we agreed with the principle of the Bill, but we had some doubts as to the manner in which the Government would administer the legislation. Today, we can truly say that the Government said one thing when it signed an agreement at the beginning of 1986 and when it introduced a Bill on May 26, 1986, enacting this agreement, and another thing altogether on June 6.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read to you what was said by the President of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association:

> I just do not see what good Bill C-111 will do. It creates a situation where everybody—the Government, the Canadian consumer, the industry—will lose. The Government will lose because it will not achieve the objectives of its Bill; the industry will lose because it will be prevented from being competitive, and the Canadian consumer will lose because it will have to pay more.
> The other factor I should like to bring to your attention—

—continued Mr. Gordon W. Gow, the President of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association—> —is the administrative burden which will result from this bill in terms of the very high cost for small businesses. this could even bring some of them to the brink of bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, it is only recently that the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) was worrying that only 20 per cent of new small businesses prospered after five years of operation, while 80 per cent of them failed.

Because of the action taken by this Government on June 6, this Bill will cause many small businesses to go bankrupt.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we support this bill in principle, but realizing all the events which have occurred since this Bill was introduced for first reading on May 26, we must accept it, that is to say, adopt it on division, because we have today the proof that the Government will not keep the promises it made when it introduced this bill.

[English]

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, before I make my comments perhaps it would be advisable to entertain a suggestion on a point of order.

• (2150)

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I am not mistaken, we made an agreement between the three Parties in the House to put forward Bill C-116, dealing with the Canada Pension Plan. That is my understanding of the agreement.

I would ask my colleague if he might end his remarks on Bill C-111 shortly, perhaps in two or three minutes, which is what your colleague from Montreal agreed to. If that could be done, we could introduce Bill C-116.

I do not know what the mix-up was and I am sure it is not the fault of my colleague. However, I would ask him to do so.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I may be able to add to what my colleague said. I have with me a draft House Order which is the result of negotiations among the House Leaders and the critics who are interested in Bill C-116.

You may find a disposition to agree that immediately after the remarks of the Hon. Member who is speaking, the order of business would be Bill C-116; and that debate at report stage and third reading will take no longer than 30 minutes, 10 minutes maximum debate for each of the three Parties; and at the end of the 10 minute limit among the Parties, participation in the debate by that Party is to be terminated by the Chair; and that 30 minutes after the debate commences all votes necessary to dispose of report stage and third reading would be put.

This would have the effect of allowing our colleague to complete his remarks and allowing for Bill C-116 to be passed in all stages this evening.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we are always trying to accommodate the business, but I would like to know just how long the Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) intends to speak. We are now sitting extended hours. At the time that I entered into the agreement, I anticipated that an extension would take us until 10:10 p.m., which was a 10 minute extension.

If the Member wishes to spend a lot of time and make many comments, then, quite frankly we will be here tomorrow and we are perfectly willing to deal with this legislation tomorrow. However, if the Hon. Member is finished, as he may well be, then we would be willing to sit the extra five minutes to accommodate this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is now in some small difficulty. The proposal which the House has heard is that the conclusion of this speech would presumably lead to a vote prior to moving to Bill C-116.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, we would then move to Bill C-116, 30 minutes to be allocated, 10 minutes per Party. The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), on the same point of order.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the various discussions that have taken place between members of my Party and the other Parties on this particular point. All I know is that I have a deep interest in the subject matter of Bill C-111 which deals with the re-imposition of a tax on computer parts, which is very detrimental to the computer industry in Canada.

Unfortunately, there are many other decisions of the Government that have adversely affected the computer industry in Canada and are preoccupying a lot of the time of Members of the House. I would like to address those points in the course of my remarks.

I do not set the agenda. If there was any disposition to deal with Bill C-116, I do not see why the Government cannot call Bill C-116 and we will take up the debate on Bill C-111 tomorrow or whenever it chooses to bring it back again.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, far be it for me to attempt to interfere with any Member's right to speak at whatever length he or she wishes within the rules. If it is the wish of the Member who has just spoken to continue to debate the Bill that is before us, notwithstanding the fact that we attempted to work out some kind of understanding to accommodate not only the Government but his own colleague, then, quite frankly, obviously the proposed House Order will not stand.

I want to make it clear that we are prepared to deal expeditiously tomorrow with the Canada Pension Bill that affords considerable benefit to a large number of people.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I believe if you would ask the House, there would be an agreement to let Bill C-111 stand and have 30 minutes of debate to get Bill C-116 out of the way. We have agreed that there would be one speaker from each Party and the Canada Pension Plan legislation could pass this evening. I would ask that all Members of the House respect that suggestion.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am asked to seek consent of the House that debate on Bill C-111 be adjourned now.

Mr. Deans: No.

An Hon. Member: Why, Ian?

Mr. Deans: I will tell you why, if you want to know.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) refuses consent.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that consent. We have devoted a great deal of time this evening to debate. Through no fault of our own, members of his Party took inordinately long periods of time to speak about matters not related to the legislation that was here before us. They used the time; not us. I can only assume that they are not willing to attempt to live up to an informal understanding worked out on the floor of the House. I cannot be party to that.

We will pass both Bill C-111 and Bill C-116 before the House rises. We will do it in the normal time.

Mr. Prud'homme: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The whole premise has been that the Chair has been asked to seek consent. There being no consent—

Mr. Prud'homme: You may find consent.

Mr. Speaker: It is very clear to the Chair that there is no consent.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, if there is no consent, I want to make a point of order. I take exception to the remarks of the NDP House Leader because I was in the House tonight. While the Hon. Member was out of the House, one of his colleagues from Winnipeg took 20 minutes to speak on a Bill and he was not supposed to speak on the Bill. If you want to be fair, be fair to everyone.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the appropriate course of action at this point is to resume debate. The Hon. Member for Laurier.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: As I was saying a while ago, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to deal with these duties which the Government has imposed on computer parts and some microprocessors. It is clear, from everything that has been said by Canadian industry representatives, that Canada is punishing itself.

[English]

The reaction of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association, as expressed by its President, Mr. Woodbridge, in front of a committee of this House, was clear and unequivocal. No one in the industry was consulted by the Government prior to the imposition of this tariff which was supposed to have been a retaliatory measure by the Government to strike back at the Americans following their imposition of a tariff on shakes and shingles.

However, when striking back at another country, it would be helpful to aim the gun first. If the Government would follow that simple rule—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 10 p.m.

ELECTION LAW REFORM

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour to lay upon the Table copies of a document entitled "White Paper on Election Law Reform" in both official languages.

After the other documents have been tabled I would like to rise on a point of order with respect to the disposition of this report.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table in both official languages the response of the Government to 18 petitions as follows: 331-558, 331-561, 331-576 to 331-579 inclusive, 331-585, 331-595 to 331-602 inclusive, 331-613, 331-617 and 331-641.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

REFERENCE OF WHITE PAPER ON ELECTION LAW REFORM TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been consultations among the Parties and I think Your Honour would find a disposition to accept the following order by unanimous consent and to pass it without debate. It is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, the document entitled "White Paper on Election Law Reform", laid upon the Table earlier this day, be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure; and

That the same Committee shall make its final report thereon not later than Wednesday, October 8, 1986.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a point of order. We have no difficulties with this matter as long as a commitment is given that the hearings will start in September and not before.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have informally discussed the agenda with the critics of each of the Parties. It has been agreed that the summer be used for the receiving of submissions and petitions with respect to the White Paper, but that the formal hearings of the committee and its deliberations not take place until September.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS—FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the final report of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations in both official languages.

This report is the culmination of one year's work carried on by both Houses of Parliament. The committee presented an interim report on August 23 with regard to the invitation for Canada to participate in the SDI and on the question of bilateral trade relations with the United States. Most of what the committee had to say on these specific questions was said at that time.

Today we present our final report on the broad spectrum of Canada's international relations. You will find here, Mr. Speaker, 120 recommendations and conclusions related to amplifying Canada's influence internationally, safe-guarding peace and security, expanding trade, aiding international development, promoting human rights, improving relations on a broad front with the United States and other countries, and developing a northern dimension for Canada's foreign policy. We commend it to the attention of the House.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that since members of the New Democratic Party who sat on the committee were not able to append a statement to the report which has just been tabled we will be issuing one later today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—FOURTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fourteenth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2) the committee requests that the Government provide a comprehensive response.

The committee is of the opinion that the Department of Finance was negligent in its management of the SRTC program. The program never performed as intended and emerged as a costly tax loop-hole. At last count the Crown faces uncollectable taxes in excess of $900 million.

The consultation process was neither well planned nor comprehensive and resulted in an unanticipated demand for SRTCs. The quick flip procedure and inadequate definition of and control over qualifying research activity encouraged abuse, reduced the funds available for genuine research and created bad debts to the Crown.

The committee believes that certain important danger signals were in evidence very early and that the Department of Finance failed to establish from the outset an evaluation framework to be aware of and to respond to problems as they developed.

It is the view of the committee that Parliament must be informed of changes in the interpretation of tax expenditure legislation and the estimated costs of every major tax expenditure program.

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table in both official languages the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The report is an addendum to the committee's report of November 6 last dealing with financial institutions generally. The committee confirms the terms of that report, but adds amendments to recommendations in the report to deal with the situation in which non-financial companies gain control of financial companies. It is the committee's view that this type of activity is wrong, that it seriously impairs the security of depositors and that it is an unfair abuse of the financial system. The committee believes that ownership beyond 30 per cent by a non-financial company of a financial company should be barred.

SCIENCE, RESEARCH AND TECHNOLOGY—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Science, Research and Technology I have the privilege of presenting the committee's first report in both official languages.

In accordance with the committee's mandate under Standing Order 96, the committee has heard evidence from industries concerned in relation to the process used by Revenue Canada to define scientific research and development for tax purposes. Your committee has considered the effects of the guidelines on industry and on research and technology policy in Canada. As a result, your committee therefore recommends that Revenue Canada release the draft guidelines for scientific research and experimental development to allow industry to have a 60-day consultation period before the guidelines are finally determined.

STRIKING COMMITTEE—FORTY-FIRST REPORT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Forty-first Report of the Striking Committee.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order with you today. I have sought the advice of the Chair and the Table on this point and I would like to make sure I understand what is at hand.

This morning, we heard some reports being tabled and a request was made of the Government to respond to the reports under Standing Order 99(2). Within 120 days of tabling a report, the Government should give a comprehensive response to it.

What happens to those requests if prorogation of the House were to happen in September, for example? Is it an Order of the House and is it therefore within the rights of committee members to expect the Government to follow through with a response within 120 days as agreed or, on the other hand, does the prorogation of the House interrupt Standing Order 99(2) so that the requests would cease with the prorogation of the House?

I wonder if you would address that question, Mr. Speaker, because of its importance to many of us. There are a half a dozen reports now requiring a comprehensive response and I would like to know what the ruling would be.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. The only answer I can give him at the moment is that I must reserve. I simply do not know the answer to that question. I would be happy to reserve on it and return to the House with an answer.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by several dozen constituents of Thessalon, Ontario, expressing their concern over the operation of the Morgentaler clinic in Toronto.

USE OF PENSION INCOME IN CALCULATION OF UI BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the work done by Mr. Flynn from Kamloops I am presenting a number of petitions from people who are concerned about the Government's decision to include various types of income when calculating UI benefits including pension income, particularly for people in the RCMP and the armed forces. The petitioners are simply asking the Government to reconsider this punitive situation in which they have been asked to pay into insurance programs knowing that they cannot collect if they are in the armed forces and other groups.

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF TELEVISION TOWER IN SWEABURG—REQUEST FOR HEARINGS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition from about 100 residents of the community of Sweaburg in the constituency of Oxford who are objecting to and opposing the construction of an 800-foot television tower in their community without hearing the views of the people of that community. They humbly pray and ask Parliament to halt the construction of this tower until those proper hearings in the community can be carried out.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present some 34 additional petitions in the effort of many constituents of Ottawa—Vanier, residents of the National Capital Region and visitors to our city to have the grounds of the Governor General's residence open to the public. I know that there has been some improvement in the situation today. The door is ajar a bit, but in the name of the petitioners I would like to ask the Government to review the decision and to consult with the group of citizens representing thousands of constituents and citizens of Canada who want to enjoy the grounds of the Governor General at the same time as maintaining the security of the Governor General.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-292, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (life imprisonment).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am presenting to the House what I believe is a unique option to amending the Criminal Code of Canada with respect to the very emotionally charged issue of capital punishment for various degrees of murder, and in particular first-degree murder or second-degree murder where the murderer had previously been convicted of culpable homicide.

This Bill proposes to amend the Criminal Code by eliminating parole of any kind for those convicted of the above-mentioned crimes. That is, life imprisonment will mean for the rest of his or her natural life without parole.

What is new in this Bill is that an option will be given to a convicted murderer to take his or her own life within 90 days of a final appeal process by a self-administered, orally ingested lethal substance.

The Bill also increases the minimum punishment for high treason or second-degree murder from 10 years to 25 years.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MEDICAL DEVICES

Question No. 554—Mr. Young:

1. (a) In (i) 1980 (ii) 1981 (iii) 1982 (iv) 1983 (v) 1984 (vi) 1985, how many accidents involving the use of medical devices were reported to the Bureau of Medical Devices (b) how many were reported by the product manufacturer or supplier and by hospitals or physicians and other medical practitioners (c) how many reported accidents resulted in (i) physical injury (ii) death?

2. Did the Bureau investigate each reported accident and, if not how many were investigated?

3. Did the Bureau initiate criminal prosecutions as a result of the investigations and, if so, how many?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 (a) For the six years requested, the numbers of reported device related incidents are:

Number of reports received:

(c) (i) and (ii) The classification system for reported accidents includes those that actually resulted in death or physical injury and those that have the potential to do so. The system addresses actual and potential accidents equally but does not differentiate between the two.

2. Every reported accident is investigated but the depth and completeness of each investigation depends upon the severity of the hazard and the assigned priority.

3. Criminal prosecution constitutes only one of a range of possible remedial and corrective measures available to the Bureau. Over the six-year period in question the Bureau has implemented all of the following measures, except criminal prosecution:

Order for Return

Remedial Measures	Addressed to
A. Advisory measures, including:	Manufacturers
1. Medical Devices Alerts	To transfer technological know-how developed by the Bureau, to suggest new methodologies, to advise on compliance with the Act and regulations, etc.
2. HPB Information Letters
3. Safety Guidelines
4. Standards	Users
5. Individual letters	To make users aware of hazards, to correct misunderstandings, to provide education and training to prevent misuse and human error.
6. Scientific publications
B. Directives or recommendations for device improvements or manufacturing changes.	Manufacturers, when the Bureau considers the hazard or ineffectiveness to arise from design errors or improper manufacturing.
C. Directives or recommendations for labelling improvements.	Manufacturers, where the directions for use or other labelling are considered inadequate.
D. Regulatory and compliance measures including: 1. stop sale by manufacturer 2. recall or corrective action 3. seizure of stock 4. refused entry to Canada 5. criminal prosecution	Manufacturers, when a serious and present hazard is discovered, or co-operation is not forthcoming, or the device is fraudulent, etc.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-111, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, last evening I began my comments on Bill C-111 by saying that the Government reacted to the American tariff on shakes and shingles by imposing a tariff on books and on computer parts such as semiconductors and chips. The Government picked up the gun but forgot to aim. As a result, we shot ourselves in the foot; the Government shot Canadians in the foot.

I should like to refer to the thrust of the comments of industry representatives who spoke at the time the retaliatory tariff was announced. They appeared before the legislative committee, and in essence the thrust of their comments was: "Protect us from ourselves". A few more shots like this in the foot, and the whole country will be limping much more seriously than it is at present.

I think it is important to make some thorough comments at third reading stage of the Bill. Very little attention was paid to it as it went through the various stages in the House. At second reading, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) devoted two whole sentences to the tariff. He offered no justification or explanation. No one spoke in favour of the tariff in committee, not a single person. Of course it was an expedited committee hearing. I have had an opportunity to look at yesterday's edition of Hansard, and not one Member spoke in favour of this tariff. In fact, not even one member of the Conservative Party intervened in the debate.

The average Canadian assumes that Parliament is here to serve Canadians. The average Canadian assumes that when the Government introduces a measure in the House and when Parliament acts, it is designed to help Canadians and the Canadian economy. The average Canadian assumes that it is designed to provide jobs or some tangible benefit for Canadians. However, it should be clearly understood by all Members of the House and by all Canadians that the tariff on books and on computer parts such as computer chips will hurt Canadians. It will hurt Canadian consumers, Canadian workers, Canadian companies, and the Canadian Government. It does not achieve any recognizable objective.

The Government is imposing a tariff on computer chips and other parts as part of a so-called retaliation to the American tariff on cedar shakes and shingles. One might think that this will help manufacturers or companies. One might think that if a tariff is imposed on imported computer parts and chips, it will allow domestic manufacturers to be more competitive and it will increase the sales of Canadian firms. That is not true, because we do not manufacture any substantial quantity here in Canada.

Mr. Gordon Gow of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association appeared before the legislative committee on Bill C-111. He indicated that up to 80 per cent of the manufacturing parts and components used by the Canadian industry come into Canada from foreign sources. All the Bill does is increase costs to Canadian manufacturers. In reply to a question by a member of the committee who asked whether the Bill would diminish the competitiveness of Canadian manufacturers outside Canada, Mr. Gow replied: "Absolutely". He was asked again whether he believed that the tariff would stimulate the development of an industry here in Canada which would build these products, and he answered as follows:

> No, I think if anything it will stimulate the extraction of some of these businesses to other locations to do the manufacturing.

It will lead to an exodus of manufacturing from Canada. Manufacturing which could be done here will be done in other countries because costs to Canadian manufacturers are being increased. This tariff will raise costs to Canadian manufacturers who have no choice but to pass them on to consumers. It will also affect the competitiveness of Canadian companies. If they are required to raise their prices in order to pay the tariff, their prices will be less competitive vis-à-vis their competitors. It will hurt sales. It will hurt jobs. We even heard some indication that it might lead to the loss of some companies, to the closing of some companies.

It bears repeating what Mr. Gow said before the committee. He said:

> I do not see how this Bill C-111 does us any good. It is entirely a lose, lose, lose situation.
>
> What I mean is that the government loses, the Canadian consumer loses, and the industry loses. The government loses on the basis that I do not believe it meets the objectives of the bill, the industry loses because it keeps us from being competitive, and the Canadian consumers lose because they now have increased costs.

● (1130)

It is quite remarkable that when this so-called retaliation was announced by the Government I got a call from a reporter for The Washington Post. It is not often that a Member of the Canadian Parliament gets a call from a member of The Washington Post. This journalist, who is based in Toronto, asked me what the explanation was for this Bill. He could not believe it, nor could he understand it. I tried as best as I could to explain the Government's rationale. I could hear the guy laughing at the other end of the line. Indeed, I could hear the laughter all the way from Washington when this Government declared a counter attack that hurts Canadians more than it hurts Americans.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear: Canadians ought to know that this response, these reprisals are going to cost them a lot of money. About $80 million will be paid by the Canadian consumer as a result of this tariff on books and computer parts and chips. This was made very clear by all representatives from the industry who appeared before the legislative committee that examined this Bill, and it was indeed said by those same representatives when the Government's decision was announced. They said that this decision would do Canadians a more harm than the Americans. Why? Because these goods, these computer parts and chips, are not manufactured in Canada. Canadian companies are obliged to order their supplies from the United States. They have no choice, Since we have no major Canadian industry that would be able to fill these orders. These companies will be obliged to increase their costs and to transfer those costs to the consumer, and this, as I said earlier, is going to affect the competitive position of Canadian companies.

[English]

I suppose one has to ask why are we doing this. Why are we imposing a tariff on Canadian computer chips and parts, a measure which will cost Canadians and will cost Canadian jobs. The only answer I could come up with is that we are paying for the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) education, albeit an imperfect one at that. His reaction when the President of the United States imposed the tariff on cedar shakes and shingles was exceedingly strong if you remember, Mr. Speaker. It reminded me a bit of a lover's spat. I think it demonstrates what we have been saying all along, that the Government and the Prime Minister have entered into these negotiations under false pretenses. They have entered into the negotiations assuming that by cosying up to the President, by being friends with the President and by supporting the President's initiatives in foreign policy and in many other areas we would somehow get an advantage which would translate into a trade negotiation, a deal that would be to Canada's advantage.

Lately, however, we have seen the Prime Minister say that he is prepared to walk away from a bad deal. But he contradicts himself. He says that he is putting his job on the line, that the next election will be fought on trade. When the Prime Minister puts so much importance into one single issue, when he says that his future rests on it, that the future of his Government rests on it and that he is prepared to fight the next election on it, I challenge anyone in this House to tell me whether that language supports the PM's other statement that he is prepared to walk away from a bad deal. I say the two statements are totally contradictory, that the Prime Minister, because he is staking his whole credibility on this trade negotiation, will be willing to do anything and to give up anything in order to arrive at a deal to salvage his credibility.

It is from contradictions of this nature, from an incoherent negotiating strategy, that we arrived at this decision which, as I have tried to explain, will hurt Canadians and will not help our negotiating position one iota. If this will help Canadians and our negotiating position, why did not even one Member of the Conservative Party either at second reading, in committee or at third reading stand up to defend this Bill? That does not make any sense, Mr. Speaker.

This measure confirms also what we have tried to say, time and time again on our side of the House, that trade is not enough, that it is no substitute for the appropriate policies in the area of education, training and research. I invite you, Sir, to have look at today's editorial cartoon in The Citizen here in Ottawa. The editorialist captures the problem far better than anyone else. The cartoon is headed:

"Canada Prepares For the Launch into Free Trade—"

The cartoon shows a Canadian under a crane with a whole series of weights being placed on his head burdening him down. The first weight entitled: "Reduced education spending". The second weight is entitled "Reduced scientific research", and the third weight which is being lowered onto the head of this unsuspecting member of the Canadian public is entitled "U.S. Book Tariff". We could add many other weights, including the weight about which I have been talking, the additional tariff on computer chips and parts. Of course this unsuspecting Canadian, a person who is supposed to represent all Canadians, is reading a piece of paper upside down which says "So long dummy". That is the way we are launching and preparing ourselves for free trade, by burdening Canadians with a series of weights that will only prevent us from competing in this global market.

• (1140)

In conclusion, if there is any lesson for Canadians to learn through the imposition of this tariff it is that it is not enough to defend ourselves against the U.S. Government, that we must defend ourselves against our own Government.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speake, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-111. This is a very important Bill, as you well know. It has the potential to do great and wonderful things, but I am afraid it fails to do them. One of our problems in this House is that we seem to name our Bills incorrectly. The title of Bill C-111 is "An Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff". That does not tell us very much. I think a more appropriate title would be "An Act that Gives the Impression that Canada is Helping the Caribbean Countries and an Act to Close Down Many Medium and Small Canadian Businesses doing Work in the Computer Chips and Computer Parts Industries". That would be a more descriptive title for the Bill and would outline what this Bill does.

Bill C-111 is broken down into three parts. I will leave to another debate the latter part which extends the time limit for dealing with pornography. I would like to spend some time discussing the first two parts of this Bill.

The first part is presumably designed to help trade between Canada and the Caribbean countries. When the Prime Minister was in the Caribbean he made glowing speeches about how Canada would work closely with its Caribbean brothers and sisters to assist them in developing their economies and provide trade opportunities which hitherto did not exist between those countries and Canada. There were all sorts of toasts and glowing comments made and editorials written. It was going to be wonderful. We then saw the introduction of Bill C-111 which gives the impression that Canada is opening up its trade door with the Caribbean countries when in fact it really does not do that. This Bill leaves out some very critical products.

You have travelled extensively, Mr. Speaker, and probably know the Caribbean as well as anyone. Industries in the Caribbean often include textile factories, garment factories, footwear factories and leather products. Not surprisingly, these are all exempt. This Bill says that we are not interested in trade in these particular areas. The products which have been exempted are those which are most extensively produced. By exempting those we are saying that we are not particularly interested.

However, that is not the onerous part of this Bill. Bill C-111 has a value added clause. The Government likes the value added concept and plans to introduce it across Canada in the next few months. It may be renamed "the business transfer tax", but the Government likes the idea of value added. Presumably that is why the Government suggested we would have free trade in items from the Caribbean if there is a 60 per cent value added to the product in the Caribbean country. That is extremely problematic because, of the products manufactured in the Caribbean countries, a great deal often come from offshore and it is very difficult to produce up to a 60 per cent value added.

The European countries have what they call very punitive value added measures which apply to the Caribbean countries. They normally apply approximately 50 per cent. The United States has applied a 35 per cent value added criterion. While presumably trying to assist the people in these countries, Canada has added 60 per cent which will prohibit a great number of commodities from being imported into Canada.

It is very clear that this Bill was hastily, and perhaps even thoughtlessly, designed. My friend, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) suggested in the legislative committee that we ask some representatives from the Caribbean countries how they feel about this part of Bill C-111. Members of the government Party said there was no time for that. We, therefore, made a few phone calls. We spoke to people in the embassies. The Jamaican people indicated that this would not help them much at all. They were not certain it would provide any assistance. They were quite disappointed because they, along with a number of other countries in the Caribbean, had made special requests, particularly with regard to allowing the exportation of various alcohols to Canada. There has been no action taken on this. When one thinks of the Caribbean one often thinks of the rum which is made there from local materials.

Another item of major import importance is cigars. However, we have increased excise taxes on cigars to negate any advantage that a tariff relief would give to these particular commodities. The representatives of the Caribbean countries are voicing disappointment that this is the result of the great initiative of the federal Government of Canada.

Small and medium-sized Canadian businesses in the computer chip and computer parts industries were just getting nicely off the ground. We were beginning to trade very effectively as a result of an agreement signed earlier this year with Japan and the United States which allowed the free interchange of computer chips and parts. That was welcomed by the industry. It was proclaimed as a major step forward which would provide a whole range of new market opportunities for our fledgling Canadian businesses in these areas. However, Bill C-111 is now going to turn this intiative around by increasing duties on computer chips and parts. Why would we totally reverse ourselves in a matter of weeks? The reason is that the Government has decided it will get the United States, that it will show the United States how tough we are by closing down a number of our businesses. That is not the approach many of us expected from the Government.

The Government was caught up by the tariff on shakes and shingles levied by the United States. From the record it is very clear that while the pressures were mounting in the United States to launch a petition against the shakes and shingles industry our Government did nothing. Day after day in the House of Commons a number of people raised the matter and asked the Government what it was doing. The Members opposite simply said that they had faith that President Reagan would not do this nasty thing to our shakes and shingles industry. I remember the Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) in particular saying that. It was incredulous that he would have faith that the President of the United States would look out for our shakes and shingles industry. Apparently the Government did, because when the tariff was imposed the Prime Minister was caught totally off guard. He wrote a little letter of outrage, after the fact.

The Government wondered how it could retaliate against the Americans. It decided to break the agreement with the United States which allowed for duty-free importation between our countries of computer chips and parts. The effect of this is very clear.

The committee heard witnesses on this issue. One was Mr. Gordon Gow of the Canadian Advanced Technology Association who is also the President of Gandalf Systems Group. He said quite bluntly that he did not see how Bill C-111 does us any good. He went on to say that it is entirely a lose, lose, lose situation. The Government loses, the consumer loses, and the industry loses. This comes from the top spokesperson in this area.

We heard from Mr. Allan Aiken of the Canadian Semiconductor Design Association. He gave estimates in the committee which indicated that the cut-back in profitability as a result of these so-called retaliatory tariffs could end up putting some of these important semiconductor products right out of business. Mr. George Best, President of the Canadian Business Equipment Manufacturers Association, said that the previous tripartite agreement with the United States was a very good agreement which his members supported, but that they were dismayed at the reimposition of Canadian tariffs on computer parts and semiconductors. The witnesses from the industries said that this was a total lose situation.

• (1150)

When witnesses come before the committee and say those things, when everyone from the private sector who has spoken out on this Bill has said it is a disaster, when members of the Opposition stand in their places here and in committee and try to point out what the Bill is going to do to Canadian business, we listen very carefully to hear someone from the Government benches rise and explain how this is good for Canada. If it is going to hurt Canadian companies, lay off Canadian workers and knock us out of international markets, why are we doing it?

I plead with my friends opposite, with members of the Cabinet who are here today, to stop this nonsense. We have to rethink this Bill. Unless I hear a single person opposite rise and say this is a good idea, I just cannot imagine that later today we are going to vote on this Bill because it is in the best interests of Canada. I thought it was our job to pass legislation to assist Canadians, provide job opportunities and assist business. Yet this Bill does exactly the opposite. Not only does it damage Canadian business, it does very little to develop our trading relationships with Caribbean countries. It is for those reasons that we as New Democrats will certainly be voting against the Bill. I again plead with my friends in the Conservative Party to just take a few minutes and explain how this is going to do Canada, Canadians and Canadian industry any good.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN AND THE FEDERAL COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: There are three motions set down for debate at report stage of Bill C-116. Motions numbered 1 and 3 will be grouped for debate but voted on separately. Motion No. 2 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-116, be amended in Clause 23

(a) by striking out lines 12 to 15 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"a judgment of nullity of a marriage on the Minister's being informed of the decree or judgment, as the case may be, and receiving the prescribed information".

(b) by striking out lines 5 and 6 at page 29 and substituting the following therefor:

"earnings under section 53.2 or 53.3,

(b) that provision of the spousal agreement is expressly permitted under the provincial law that governs the spousal agreement, and

(c) that provision of the spousal agree-".

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-116, be amended in Clause 33 by striking out lines 23 and 24 at page 45 and substituting the following therefor:

"under this section,

(b) that provision of the spousal agreement is expressly permitted under the provincial law that governs the spousal agreement, and

(c) that provision of the spousal agree-".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The purpose of the two amendments is to bring in mandatory credit-splitting along the lines agreed to in the federal-provincial agreement. We had extensive discussions with various interest groups, including the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. If I might just read a very short excerpt from their letter to me dated June 18, 1986, as follows:

—this is to confirm that the National Action Committee on the Status of Women supports your motions—to amend the credit-splitting and assignment clauses of Bill C-116.

We are satisfied that these amendments make Bill C-116 much fairer to women by making credit-splitting on divorce mandatory unless a province expressly legislates otherwise, and by restricting the conditions under which people can renounce their right to a share of their spouses' Canada Pension Plan credits upon retirement.

I think that letter is self-explanatory. I hope the motions will be supported.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Table for a copy of Bill C-116. It was brought to me and then went for photocopying. Apparently the House is running short of these Bills. It is an important Bill and I just want to know that everyone knows what we were talking about; the Bill is hard to get.

Mr. Speaker: Maybe we should charge for it.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the principle of making the splitting of credits mandatory is one that we support. We are glad that the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) has introduced this measure and we support it.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to confirm that following representations by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and extensive discussions between myself, the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), the amendments put forward today reflect what the Hon. Member for Sudbury had in fact moved in other motions. I had intended to do so myself as well, but because of the language contained in the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough's amendments we did not see any need. His amendments do exactly what we all intended to do.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 3 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3 agreed to.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-116, be amended in Clause 24 by striking out line 7 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"payable for a month".

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Members know, there is a disability provision in the present Canada Pension Plan. In the drafting of the changes there was a question, although we thought the point was covered, as to whether those people currently receiving disability pensions would be beneficiaries of the higher amount which the amendments incorporate. As the wording in Motion No. 2 clearly spells out, those now receiving disability will get the greater amount should the Bill be passed.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much time because the points I wanted to make on behalf of my Party were made on second reading debate and in committee. However, I do want to say one or two things which are of primary concern to myself and my Party.

We would like to have some assurances from the Minister that the increase in benefits to persons considered disabled are not going to be syphoned off by insurance companies because of the bridging benefit which exists in many private plans on disability benefits. This has happened very often in the past and I think it would be extremely unfortunate if that were to continue. There is little sense in us increasing benefits for persons who are disabled simply to see an insurance company take that money. It would not be of any benefit to the disabled person.

The other concern I have is about the review committee that is being set up under this Bill. I am a bit fearful that this new review committee will adopt a very clinical attitude toward a person who is disabled rather than taking a look at the disability itself and the individual's personal circumstance.

There are some other areas in the Bill which I think could have gone further, but the Minister has assured us in committee that the discussions that took place previously between the federal and provincial Governments are to continue, and that we will probably see further amendments to the Canada Pension Plan within the next year or so. On that basis I would welcome the opportunity to have some further input into those discussions prior to these negotiations beginning to ensure that the concerns we have will receive proper attention in these discussions.

On that basis our Party, speaking for myself and on behalf of the Party, support the amendments in so far as they go in this particular Bill. We do recognize that there will be a significant improvement in benefits, particularly for disabled Canadians, and any improvements in these benefits are welcomed by us.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to delay the Bill, but I would like to register a very serious reservation with respect to the potential impact of this Bill on the well being of women. I do not think that the lot of widowed women in our society is improved to the degree that we had hoped. I am pleased the Minister is going to review this issue very carefully, along with the five-year review, the committee, the disability pension and the way it relates to old age security moneys, et cetera. There are many issues in there with which I hope you are able to come to a better accord with the provinces to enable our older people in our society, over time, to live more conveniently and with less poverty at their door.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of Mr. Epp (Provencher). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2 agreed to.

Mr. Epp (Provencher) moved that the Bill as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Epp (Provencher) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with special pride that I speak once more on Bill C-116 on third reading. As Members know Bill C-116 amends both the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act.

I want to thank at the outset the Chairman of the Standing Committee, the Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) who chaired this committee, the committee members, and as well my critics from the Liberal and the NDP Party who have been most helpful in their suggestions and co-operative in their work in attempting to get this legislation passed before the House rises for summer in order that the plans can be put together in a practical way so benefits for January 1, 1987, might take place.

When I presented this legislation to the House of Commons two weeks ago I stated that it represented the culmination of several years of co-operation and consultation among Canadians on the subject of pension reform. Since the Bill's introduction I have listened with interest to concerns regarding the legislation, points which have been expressed in the House and in the committee. I have already taken the opportunity to respond directly and explicitly to members of the Opposition Parties on their valid and pertinent questions.

I know that it is uncommon for Ministers to rise in the House and to mention staff members in terms of the work that they have done on the Bill. I intend to break with that tradition this afternoon and mention one Mr. Michael Hatfield for the work he has done on behalf of this Bill. Mr. Hatfield is on my staff, and I think it is not inappropriate to mention his name because at the time the parliamentary task force on pension review was looking at this issue, during the previous administration, Mr. Hatfield was asked to come on as a member of that task force, that is as an adviser to the task force. Much of the work that was done at that time is finding fruition in this Bill, and I commend him today.

Originally I had intended to discuss these issues today at some length. However, because of time constraints and in light of the agreement which Opposition Members have given support to which will facilitate the Bill's prompt passage I will speak very briefly today.

I refer, for example, to the provisions for the division of the Canada Pension Plan credits on marriage breakdown. There has been criticism that this provision is not automatic and not mandatory. I would like to emphasize that effective January 1, 1987 this provision will be mandatory in all cases of divorce, except in those cases where both spouses have previously and specifically waived claims on each other's pension rights, and where this agreement is expressly permitted under provincial law, as has just been agreed by this House in approving the motion of the Hon. Member for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). I thank him as well for the work he has done.

As well, it should be noted that the House has also approved a technical amendment to Bill C-116 referring to the disability sections.

I believe it would be useful today for me to repeat the four concerns which dominated the federal-provincial discussions which led to the Canada Pension Plan amendments now embodied in Bill C-116.

The first of these was to maintain the long-term health of the pension plan's fund. The second was to ensure the affordability of premiums paid by working Canadians and their employers. The third was to adapt the benefits to the changing needs of Canadians, and the fourth was to maintain parallelism with the Quebec Pension Plan.

It was mentioned today by the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) that there should be further changes made relative to the position of women and their pension plans and spouses allowances. I am well aware of them. I believe the changes the Government brought in earlier on widows, amendments to the Old Age Security Act has helped. I believe this Bill further helps. I think all of us realize that as society is developing and evolving further changes will have to be made. I have committed myself, as Minister of National Health and Welfare, to further discussions in those areas. I make that commitment to the House again today.

A comprehensive information package concerning Bill C-116 has been distributed to all Members of Parliament and to Senators. I would like, therefore, to summarize the main dispositions of the Bill and what the legislation will provide for: first, the development of a 25-year schedule of Canada Pension Plan contribution rates to be reviewed at least every five years; second, a gradual increase in contribution rates from the present 3.6 per cent rate to 7.6 per cent by the year 2011; third, the maintenance of the Canada Pension Plan Fund at a level equal to approximately two years of benefits in the long term; and fourth, actuarily adjusted pensions as early as age 60 or as late as age 70.

• (1210)

In addition, the legislation will provide for increased disability benefits and an easing of the eligibility criteria for them. More work is needed on the question of disability. This is one area of the Canada Pension Plan which has a discretionary aspect, relative to medical advice. We must be sensitive to some of the points made in terms of discerning who is eligible for the disability pension.

As well, the legislation provides new rules governing credit splitting on marriage breakdown, as well as for pension sharing on retirement for married and common law couples; the continuation of survivor benefits on remarriage; improved children's benefits, also relating to survivor benefits; changes to the rules governing maximum rates for combined pensions; and a number of significant minor amendments.

That is an impressive package that the House is passing today in Bill C-116.

In closing, I want to assure my colleagues that the reform of Canada's pension system has not come to an end. The Government places great emphasis on further changes and amendments throughout the pension spectrum. The passage of Bill C-116 does not mean that we are putting pension reform on the so-called parliamentary back burner. Rather, it stays on the front burner where Canadians generally and Members of the House will want to see the full heat retained. The Government has made significant progress in terms of that pension reform.

As well, I am confident that the results of further co-operative efforts will be a system of income security for Canadians that will respond better to their needs in the years ahead. People have asked me with respect to the Quebec Pension Plan, and particularly the Canada Pension Plan, if they will have a pension when they retire. I am sure all Members have been asked that question. With the changes that are being brought in today with the passage of Bill C-116, the pension fund is secure. There will be a pension for those who have paid into it up to today, plus these improved benefits once the Bill is passed through the House and the other place before we rise for the summer.

This package is the result of much co-operation. It is a positive step forward for the Government of Canada and it will benefit all Canadians. I commend this Bill to the House and thank the House for the co-operation I have seen in the passage of this Bill.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in participating in this debate, I first want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) who is on other duties today. I want to echo the sentiments of the Minister when he expressed appreciation for the Member's co-operation and input.

The House will recall that the Member for Sudbury initiated a review on behalf of the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Monique Bégin, in 1983. That thorough review which began in 1983 finds its final development and conclusion in this debate today in the House of Commons and the Senate. Therefore, we are indebted to the Member for Sudbury for having put on the map a number of improvements that were needed for the benefit of Canadians who enjoy the protection of the Canada Pension Plan.

On June 11, the Member for Sudbury identified a number of areas about which he felt strongly. He suggested improvements that the Government could make in these areas, which include disability, eligibility criteria for disability and the flat benefit portion of the CPP disability pension.

Bill C-116 proposes an increase in the flat rate from $91 to $233 for people who will receive the disability pension as of January next year. That is a welcome development because, although people wanted a greater move in that direction—since $233 a month as a flat rate is still very modest— it is an expression of a will to further improve the disability pension for Canadians who qualify for it.

We are still unhappy about the definition of disability, which is extremely restrictive. The statement, "indefinite duration or severe and prolonged", causes applicants to appeal and prolong the process on occasion. No doubt it is sometimes a worthwhile exercise because it results in the acceptance of an application at higher levels of appeal.

The history of contributions is still very strict. If I understand Bill C-116 correctly, the contributions still must be made during at least five calendar years out of the last ten in the contributory period or for at least two of the last three calendar years, or for at least the last two calendar years if the contributory period has only been two years long. A number of people who withdraw from the labour force because of a temporary disability discover that their disability is not temporary. When it comes time for their medical adviser or themselves to decide to apply for a disability pension they discover that it is too late, because they do not have the required number of years contribution under the law. This comes as a shock to workers, particularly those in the industrial centres of the country, as well as in rural areas. This measure should be improved to provide a better way of dealing with these problems. I am sure many Members have come across similar situations with their constituents. There must be a solution to the problem so that some people with very legitimate cases are not disqualified because of a lack of knowledge of the law, language handicaps, or other reasons. They only discover when it is too late that they do not have the number of years required.

I am pleased that the Minister is in the House today. I know that he is making note of what I am saying and will try to find a solution to this aspect of the disability benefits that requires attention. I am sure this problem is testing the admistrative skill of those in charge of the Canada Pension Plan.

On the question of children's benefits, as the Member for Sudbury has said in the past, we see this as a desirable development also emanating from his study.

With respect to the basic levels of survivor benefits, we would like the 25 per cent gradually increased over the years in order to generate a higher pension. We realize that this cannot be done in a vacuum and that it will require an increase in the rate of contribution. I know that this is a very divisive and difficult topic. Nevertheless, as we acquire experience and as this fund builds up, hopefully we will find ways of making contributions that will also permit basic retirement benefit levels which, more and more, will reduce the poverty level that some people do have to face when they come under the regime of the Canada Pension Plan. I think that, philosophically, perhaps, we can find a common ground on this matter.

• (1220)

I would really like to bring this area of contribution rate changes to the attention of the Minister. He knows that there will be a .2 per cent increase of pensionable earnings each year until 1991; however, there will be a drop of 2.15 per cent. I wonder why we should be facing a slippage in that area, from 1992 to 2001, instead of maintaining this same rate or even gradually, fractionally, increasing it in order to give strength to the fund and permit certain improvements that Canadians expect from their Canada Pension Plan.

Moving on to the subject of pension for older single women, as the Hon. Member Sudbury has pointed out on a number of occasions in committee and at second reading, we do support the Cofirentes formula or approach, because we see there a potential for strengthening the regime to protect older single women. We would therefore urge the Minister to explore that in a manner that will result in amendments in the next Bill that hopefully will see the light of day in the next session. We do favour the model that has emerged under the name of Cofirentes, and we do see there an approach that has potential.

Where we have a disappointment, as I am sure many Canadians do, and this is where the critical and concluding part of my intervention begins, it is that there is no provision in the Bill for homemakers. I can assure Your Honour and the Minister that there are many women who are engaged in highly productive and useful work at home who are desperately waiting for the day when an announcement on this measure will be made. We realize how cumbersome the process is, but it did start by way of an analysis of the potential for homemakers three years ago.

We really must register on the floor of the House the legitimate aspiration on the part of many, many women across the country who have never taken up conventional employment, by way of a job with an employer, with contributory payments being made, eventually resulting in CPP payment, but who, as the Minister knows as well as I do, have worked for years in a variety of ways at home within the family. These women when they reach age 60 or more find no tangible recognition given to them by society for having made a contribution, because this contribution somehow did not take the form of deductions. Here there is a social injustice which I do not think has any party connotation. It is a burden that we all share, one we must face and one for which we must find an answer.

Some four months ago, on a radio program concerning homemakers' pensions, I just touched on it—not very much in depth, I must admit. I was astounded at the volume of mail in response in subsequent weeks. It really touched what we could term in political words as being a raw nerve. Therefore, from a political point of view, in the best meaning of the word "political", we have here an issue that we must address, no matter what the cost.

A number of suggestions have come forward from NAC, from labour, from a number of organizations, from party platforms. I think the party platforms of all three Parties in the House are saturated with suggestions on homemakers' pensions, as well, so the time is overripe for taking action. I hope the Minister will use his term in office to engrave his name in stone, virtually, by being the one to bring in the homemakers' pension. He will go down to eternity because of that.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): "Eternity."—hopefully it's up and not the other way.

Mr. Caccia: Go up; sorry. The Hon. Minister is quite right. There is nothing that really touches the sentiments of a family, particularly concerning women, but also men, than to suddenly see a member of the family who has worked all her life not being covered because of reasons that are unexplainable. We are now in the year 1986. The issue is overripe, as I said. The input has been made by a number of organizations as well as political parties. An answer must be found.

Finally, on the question of flexible retirement, I can only report to Your Honour and to the Minister that people from where I come are simply furious about this measure. They feel that it is not fair to have a reduction of pension by any amount when entering their sixties, particularly those who are engaged in heavy duty work. A portion of the population is engaged in such work. You name it, construction, mining, fishing, farming or forestry. These are people who, upon reaching the age of their sixties, are physically worn out and look forward to an early retirement. It is from them that this cry of anguish comes, saying, "Look, why should we be penalized by 30 per cent?"

I submit to Your Honour and to the Minister that the route to go is to introduce the possibility of retiring at the age of 60 at the same rate. There will be those who will not want to retire at that age because they are productive and do not see themselves as being ready for that; but there are others who will. To impose, so to say, a penalty or a reduction of 30 per cent is not acceptable. That sentiment, with which I fully concur, comes mainly from people who are not engaged in white-collar activities, but rather from those engaged in heavy duty work, from a certain number who feel that they have just physically had it. They want to quit. They say, "Why should we be penalized by 30 per cent?"

I would like to encourage the Minister to look at this question of early retirement at the same pension rate, in conjunction with long-term policies of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). This matter has to be seen in a broader context, namely, one that relates to incentives, if one wishes, to retire from the labour force, perhaps in order to make room for those who are in the younger age levels. This should therefore be seen as a social measure which, however, has employment potential and, therefore, an over-all governmental significance, perhaps going well beyond the scope of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Maybe then the argument of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) could be a stronger and heavier one, seen within the parameters of pension as well as employment. I am sure that the Minister has already thought about it. Presentations have been made to him about the merits of retiring at the age of 60. However, I do reject, as firmly and calmly as I can, the notion that retirement at age 60 should be coupled with a reduction in pension. The level should remain the same. It should be open to those who want to take advntage of it. The numbers will not be that great, since increasingly people find it desirable to maintain a productive life over the years, in fact well beyond what we have come to expect in the past. However, there are certain occupations and certain individual situations in which this option is a desirable one.

Since democracy is a way of offering options and diversities, I submit that this is one way of doing it, but doing it without penalizing the recipients of the Canada Pension Plan by one cent. If the losses over 10 years, let us say between the ages of 60 and 70, are multiplied, then it would be a substantial sum, assuming that a person's life-span terminates at the age of 70. That is not the route to go.

I am sure that the Minister, who has a sense of fairness, will understand this message which really comes from the street level. People stop us on the street and say: "We have heard about this measure, the Bill that is going through, but to me personally it is not the type of measure I can accept. If I choose to retire at age 60 I do not want to be penalized by 30 per cent, or even by one cent for that matter".

Perhaps I have belaboured the issue at too great a length, but I had to convey the sentiments together with the logic of this criticism. I am grateful for the fact that the Minister has patiently listened. I look forward to the next Bill he might introduce, possibly some time next year, which will include some of the measures that are missing from the present one. I am sure that he, along with all Hon. Members, want to see these measures incorporated in a new Bill, since we believe that the Canada Pension Plan is an ongoing process. It cannot level off or become stagnant. It is an important instrument for social progress and economic stability. As I mentioned previously, it is an important instrument which has to be looked upon within the broader scope of our employment policies.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak at the third reading stage of a very important Bill. It does not happen very often that we can amend a Bill here in the House of Commons, and that is the case with the Bill before the House today which is an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act.

Mr. Speaker, some parts of this Bill contain very positive changes with respect to disability benefits, division of earnings in case of divorce and survivors' pensions.

On the other hand, there are other amendments the Government would have us believe will be of tremendous benefit to Canadians . . . First of all, I think we should look at the Bill itself, whose purpose is to increase the premiums paid by all Canadian employees and employers into our pension plans.

This premium increase, Mr. Speaker, will increase the revenues of the CPP Fund and, through loans, those of the provinces, including Ontario, and even Quebec, because although Quebec has its own pension plan, it also borrows from the Canada Pension Plan.

But, Mr. Speaker, the most important point to keep in mind is that not only will working men and women have less income to meet their needs because they will have to pay higher retirement plan premiums but in return they will not draw increased benefits once they have retired. They advocate an increase, but if ever those people become disabled or something else happens . . . Mr. Speaker, the Government claims it is seeking to establish less stringent pension standards and has drawn inspiration from the Quebec provincial plan.

Mr. Speaker, I want to give figures and illustrate the consequences which ordinary Canadians will face if they decide or are forced to retire at age 60 under the Quebec Pension Plan. Quite simply, a resident of Ontario, Alberta, New Brunswick or Saskatchewan will be in the same predicament as someone living in Quebec.

Right now the maximum Quebec Pension Plan benefit paid to a person aged 65 is $486.11. Should somebody in Quebec opt for retirement at age 60 he or she gets $340.28 in QPP benefits, which amounts to a penalty of $145.83 a month, or an annual loss of $1,749.96.

In my opinion, Mr Speaker, it is too much to expect a person to contribute more with a view to retiring early at age 60 and at the same time penalize the same person to the tune of $1,749.964 a year.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec welfare benefits amount to $456 a month, yet Quebec Pension Plan benefits are only $340.28—way below the poverty level, in fact below the misery level.

We know that quite a number of people between the ages of 60 and 65 live under the poverty level, yet the Bill under consideration will only push even more people under the poverty level, as if we wanted to make sure that there will always be poor people becoming even poorer.

The alternative is a joke. Some people may decide to retire only when they get to be 70—they know the penalty for retiring before 65 is 6 per cent a year, whereas the incentive to continue working until 70 is an annual bonus of 6 per cent—so they are told: If you retire at 70 and wait until then to draw your Quebec Pension Plan benefits—and now the Canada Pension Plan benefits—you will be entitled to 130 per cent.

Well now, says the prospective retiree, 130 per cent is quite interesting, I will think about it.

I have the figures. As I said, the maximum paid to a Quebecer aged 65 is $486.11. The reaction is predictible: Well, I will follow the Government's recommendation, go on working or stay home but wait before applying for QPP or CPP benefits because they told me I would get 6 per cent more. I am told I will draw $515.28 at age 66. Mr. Speaker, he figures he will get $29.19 a month or $350 more a year if he waits until age 66. But what they are not told—and I suspect no Member will urge a constituent to wait until age 66 or 70 to draw his or her pension benefits—is that a person has to agree to do without a monthly income of $486 for one year beginning at age 65. To get $350 more a year, he or she has to accept a $5,833 loss, and this money stays in the Government coffers.

Mr. Speaker, what do you put in a Bill which is nothing more than window-dressing? It provides no benefit unless someone with a lot of money says: I shall not take my pension benefits immediately because my taxation level will be very high. However, Mr. Speaker, you do not legislate for the most wealthy.

Let me give you an example of someone in Quebec who waits one year and, instead of retiring at 65, decides to do so only at 66. He loses $5,800 to earn $340 the next year. However, the Government is saying: The system will be more flexible between the ages of 60 and 70. Under 65, you lose 6 per cent a year, which means 30 per cent in five years. You lose $1,749 each year throughout your life because your pension will always be indexed all your life on the basis of the low amount which you received the first time.

The publicity tells a different story, even though the Prime Minister will certainly pat himself on the back at the end of the session in spite of the recent scandals because he succeeded in passing two good Bills for pensioners. Look at what will happen according to the Conservative Government. Even though you retire, you can decide to receive your benefits under the Quebec or the Canada Pension Plan at the age of 70. This means that, at 70, instead of having $486.11, you will get $631.94. or $145 more each month. However, during those five years, you will have to do without $29,000 in income that you will have left in the pension fund to be entitled to receive $1,749 more each year.

Mr. Speaker, it makes no sense to include in a Bill something that no one here would recommend. Let us suppose that someone who is 65 years old goes to the Office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and asks for some advice: "Should I retire now since I have my private pension plan and you have passed some new legislation? I do not need that much money right now as I can make both ends meet. Would it be better to invest as you have said and leave my Canada Pension Plan benefits in the pension fund and wait until I am 70 to receive 30 per cent more? It sounds interesting. Is it like at the bank?" Would the Minister honestly and sincerely be able to tell this person: "Yes, the legislation tells you to leave your money where it is and you will then receive 30 per cent more." It is not true. The Minister cannot tell me that he would say to someone: "Do without $29,000 in income and leave this money in the fund so that we can give you $1,700 more later." It is impossible. It is illogical, Mr. Speaker. It was unacceptable in Quebec where the PQ passed similar legislation. Very few people take this option. It is window-dressing. It is only camouflage, Mr. Speaker. This is the problem with this Government. It is the same for the way the pension entitlement is shared when a couple separates.

A while ago, the Minister introduced the Spouses' Allowance Bill to help widows and widowers and be discriminated against single, separated and divorced people. Now, as he wants to makeup for it, he gives more money to someone who is separated than to someone who is not separated or to widows and widowers.

Mr. Speaker, all this has been done thoughtlessly and illogically. All the Members of the Opposition, the NDP, the Liberal Official Opposition and even some Conservative Members will admit that they have been pressed to pass this Bill. It is true that it will result in some improvement. But, Mr. Speaker, is there one Conservative Member—

Mr. Ricard: What improvement!

Mr. Malépart: Is there one Conservative Member, yes, of course, there is the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) can he tell me, when a man of 65 drops in his constituency office and says: Tell me, you are the expert, you voted for a legislation, you said it was very good, it is right here in this press release. Would I be better off if I waited till next year to draw my Pension Plan benefits? If that question was put to me, my answer would be: Grab it immediately, otherwise the Government will get away with $5,000 and you will get $340. Unless one is a swindler, a Government swindler who would say to his constituents:

Mr. Speaker, as an individual each one of us will be ready to advise people to do differently than what is being offered. Why then should we act as hypocrits and put that in the legislation? Why did the Minister accept that such a thing be included? Why did he not say that people between 60 and 65, as my colleague suggested earlier, why did he not leave them with the same amount? Why deprive anyone of $340.28 a month, Mr. Speaker? Can anyone live on what is left? Look at what will happen! Government coffers will get fatter because those are hidden tax increases. The Minister will reply: No, that is a contribution to the Pension Plan. But people get nothing in return. Millions and billions of dollars will go into the fund, and that money is lent to provincial Governments, people do not pay back, do they go on increasing contributions? This is like merry-go-round.

On top of that, people who depend on social welfare in Quebec get $456 a month, and this is paid 50/50 by the Federal and Provincial Governments. So these people are forced to draw Pension Plan benefits because they have contributed. Let us say the maximum amount, $340. So those $340 are deducted from $456, and that person remains poor.

Officials are running around the place, the federal Government clears out everywhere. Mr. Speaker, people have no need for that kind of thing. What the poor need is people who look down at things and attempt to improve them. I know the Minister, the Government, whatever their political stripe cannot afford to hand out everything. But when something is being done, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we should go sensibly about it, and improve things step by step, because everything cannot be done in one shot. Why should we try to discriminate against people in need, as the Minister did with the spouses allowance? People who were excluded were mainly women, whether single, separated or divorced. So now he comes with another bill which will penalize age 60 and 65. We hear about unemployment, we are told we should consider early retirement as my colleague suggested, and this is something that would be needed, becuase everyone in the workplace who would like to retire at age 60 should be able to do so and make room for younger people. Some people are looking forward to that, Mr. Speaker. Some people took early retirement before January 5, and they were entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. There again they were cut off, Mr. Speaker, another thing the Minister reductant to talk about. And now he is going to save on welfare benefits. Because of the $340 they will be getting from the Quebec Pension Plan, he takes away from them the unemployment insurance benefits. The guy was entitled to those benefits, because he lost his job or his plant shut down. It is always those same workers who pay all their lives, becuase this is a contribution increase, Mr. Speaker. His take-home pay will be smaller, because next year he will be paying $24 more and, on top of that, he will be paying his employer's extra contribution becuase that increase in costs, his SMB employer will not be able to absorbs it. His employer will increase the price of his goods, and the consumer-worker automatically will be paying on both contributions. And in return, Mr. Speaker, he is again penalized.

I know that other colleagues will rise on this Bill and will deal with other aspects. My colleague from Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) dealt with the matter in committee, and while there are amendments concerning women put forward by the women's association, my colleagues from Mount Royal worked hard in that area to get the Government to realize its proposals were unacceptable. Let us look at a table, and my colleague from Montreal can deal with that—

Mrs. Finestone: Exactly.

Mr. Malépart: A married woman who becomes a widow will receive $240 per month, the same amount as before the legislation was amended. However, if that same woman was separated, she would get $320 per month. Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong with that Government. With respect to the spouses allowance, the separated woman is told: "You should have stuck with your man. We had nothing to do about it so you are penalized." The other woman is told: "You have stayed with your man but now you are a widow, it is too bad but you will lose some money." Mr. Speaker, there is no logic as far as separation are concerned and the way they figure that out. If the Minister is no good at arithmetic, there are some qualified officials, Mr. Speaker, and if he cannot find them himself, there are people in our party who could suggest fair and adequate measures for everyone taking into account the valid claims of those people.

Mr. Speaker, this aspect of the Bill is surely negative. The flexibility of the pension plan . . . I think that my time has expired but I have clearly shown that all Canadians who know that they have the opportunity—as offered by the Government to receive increased pension benefits when postponed between age 65 and 70—should not take advantage of that offer because it is a trap. The only one that gets rich and makes a good bargain is the fund while the pensioners are the losers.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Minister say that this was not a true pension reform but only a mini reform and I hope that when the time comes to make the true reform, he will correct all those inequities if he is still there.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, he must have misunderstood, because this cannot even rate as a mini-reform.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to associate myself with the remarks the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has just made. Like most everybody, I believe that we agree on the reforms which are made to the disability pension. We are glad the Minister has decided to start by increasing the disability pensions for people who just cannot work any longer.

[English]

I am happy to associate myself with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Legitimate concerns have been expressed on all sides of the House in respect of true pension reform as it relates to those people who have retired. I should like to spend just a few moments, however, suggesting that I am very happy with the increases in disability pensions. However, I see a couple of problems, one of which the Minister may want to clarify.

As a person who does a lot of work in the area of disability in my riding, I see one current flaw in the Canada Pension Plan as it relates to the eligibility period. I am sure the Minister will know, as did his predecessor, that under the current law, and as restated in this particular Bill, there is an eligibility period in which to receive Canada Pension Plan disability benefits. One is required to have worked five years of the last 10 years or, as a result of the new changes, two years of the last three years. A problem often occurs, and I hope the Minister will address it, if not specifically in the Bill, then perhaps with a change in regulations or by way of a clarification. Oftentimes in my own riding I find that people are disabled as a result of a work injury. They are on workers' compensation for a number of years, but they hope they might be able to get back into the workforce. In some cases, they do not know they might be eligible for Canada Pension Plan disability, and the prescribed five-year period has elapsed. They find themselves in a situation where they are not working. They have retired from the workforce as a result of disability, and it is a bona fide disability which renders them incapable of working. However, because of language reasons or other reasons, they did not apply before the first five-year period and so became ineligible. I have written to the Minister and even to the previous Liberal Minister on a number of occasions about bona fide disabled people who should have qualified but did not know about the program. In some cases, they applied and were deemed to be not entitled. However, as a result of an appeal process, they might have been entitled.

I understand the concern of the Minister about not moving with an over-all open door policy involving someone who is not working and wants to apply 20 years later. However, if one can prove for the purposes of the Canada Pension Plan that there has been an ongoing and sustained injury or illness beyond the five-year period which has been a major contributor to the person's inability to work, one should be able to apply for the Canada Pension benefit beyond the five-year period. Some persons in my riding have simply been caught by the language trap. They have come into my office in the sixth year. They did not know that they were entitled to it, or perhaps in the beginning they put in an application but did not follow through on it. Often they find themselves living on WCB compensation benefits or welfare, even though they had worked for 15 years or 20 years, because they did not meet the five-year requirement.

There is a flaw in the current legislation. While I understand that the Minister is expanding that particular definition a little for the purposes of disability, I think there should be a clause which suggests that if a person is disabled and has suffered a continuing disability before the five-year period lapses, he or she should be eligible. That is one recommendation I would make to the Minister.

I should like to refer to the other areas which have been outlined. We are looking for a more significant package of pension reform as it relates to involving everyone in the Canada Pension Plan including homemakers. We want to see coverage which will benefit every Canadian who is contributing in a meaningful way, as is every Canadian, particularly people who are working in the home. They should be evaluated and should be eligible to apply for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. We are looking for more major reforms in that area.

In the interest of passing the aspects of this Bill which will increase the benefits to disabled workers, we are certainly prepared to support it in the short term, although we hope the Minister will come forward with more specific legislation, also as it relates to the issue of early retirement. I am happy the Government is introducing this concept. It is part and parcel of changes which have come about as a result of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, I am concerned about losses which are incurred between the ages of 60 and 65 years which may in fact put flexible retirement beyond the reach of most ordinary people. From my experience in my own community, people who seek, want, and need early retirement are oftentimes those who have worked in factories, often in low-paying jobs, and have suffered the most physical wear and tear. Better earning professionals, whether they be Members of Parliament or judges, can remain in their jobs almost forever. However, often it is the assembly line worker, the textile worker, or the shoe factory worker who needs an early retirement because the physical wear and tear of the job is such that the worker cannot carry on beyond the ages of 55 or 60 years.

I am happy to see a move in that area, but I should like to see an amendment at some point which would provide for an earlier retirement period to permit persons to take advantage of the same level of benefits as they would at the age of 60 years. I am concerned about some of the CPP provisions. I know we want to move this piece of legislation ahead for the benefit of those people who will be applying in the near future, but I am very concerned about the limited application of the five-year period which disqualifies any bona fide people who should be receiving benefits.

I guess we will see the results of the inquiry, but I should like to refer to my experience over the last number of years in dealing with federal and provincial Governments in respect of compensation issues. The Canada Pension Plan has been reasonably flexible in its interpretation of who is eligible. It has taken into consideration factors beyond what we call in the business "the meat chart factor", which is often considered in certain provincial disability plans. For example, a worker who does not speak the language, has a very low level of education or perhaps no education at all, and cannot read or write may be given the benefit of the doubt in a Canada Pension Plan application. That flexibility has served well the recipients and other Canadians. While I am prepared to see what is the verdict in terms of the review, I understand that specialists will be reviewing the application in order to bring some kind of uniformity into the Canada Pension Plan system. I would hate to see the CPP system go the route which has plagued provincial government compensation plans for years. They look at only the physiological aspect of the effect of any disease or illness. They do not look at the totality. That has been a hallmark which has served the Canada Pension Plan well. I would not want to see us move in the direction of provincial plans which I would prefer to see take a broader approach. For example, if I were to lose my tongue it would probably cost me a lot more dearly than it might somebody else.

• (1300)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: However, if I were to lose a leg, I could in most instances carry on and do my job. If another worker were in a situation where he used his arms, lived by his brawn and did not have the language and the other skills to move into a secondary or a further occupation, he or she should be granted the benefit of the Canada Pension Plan in a more flexible fashion than somebody who has the ability to get out and get another job or somebody who can be employed in a sedentary job that comes only with education and further communication skills.

I would hope that flexibility, which I think has been good in the Canada Pension Plan, remains. I do not want to see us get into a situation where we simply look at the physiology or the etiology of the symptom, the presenting symptom as you would say, and force a lot of people into the situation which they sometimes face with compensation. They end up on welfare because they have been denied benefits that should rightfully be theirs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no further questions or comments, we shall resume debate. The Hon. Member for the Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on third reading will be extremely brief for the very reason I gave earlier at report stage. The case I have made at second reading and in committee on behalf of my Party is on the record. I do not see any need to take up the time of the House to restate it.

Let me refer to the cost of the increase in benefits, whether sufficient enough or not, and the 6 per cent reduction for each year of early retirement as a cost. When I asked the Minister in committee why 6 per cent and not 2 per cent or 3 per cent or 4 per cent, the response that I received was that according to the Government's actuaries it was a proper formula to be used with respect to the funding of the Canada Pension Plan. Also at second reading debate and in committee I pointed out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that under the provisions of the existing Act, I believe it is Section 116, when the Government proposes any Bill to the House of Commons to amend the Canada Pension Plan Act, the Government is also obliged to provide the House with actuarial information on what the impact of those amendments will be on the Canada Pension Plan. I have not seen the actuarial statements, even though I have requested them on several occasions. It places Members in the Opposition and on all sides of the House in some difficulty. We are faced with the Government negotiating amendments to the Canada Pension Plan with its provincial counterparts and then coming back to the House of Commons with a negotiated settlement and saying: "Here you are. Rubber stamp it. Unfortunately, if you make any amendments to the Plan it will require us to go back to the negotiating table with the provinces." If that were to happen, given the implementation time required to place those amendments into effect which, as I understand it, is a minimum of six months, and if we were to insist on proposing amendments and the Government accepted them, there would be a delay in the implementation of the improvements that we all want to see.

Here we are stuck in the situation where not only do we not have too much to say as to whether the amendments being brought forward by the Government are satisfactory from our point of view, but we will not be given the actual information required under the existing Act.

Let me simply state the case again. I have said to the Minister previously in committee, at second reading and privately that the process used is not satisfactory. I do not think it lends itself to the democratic process we are used to in Canada. The next time that we go into these kinds of negotiations, there has to be some process where Members on all sides of the House, particularly those in opposition Parties, are allowed to do their job in this place. We should be able to offer constructive criticism and to bring forward suggestions about legislation. We need to have a much more open exchange of information so that we can act in the best interests not only of our constituents but in the best interests of the people across the country whom we are trying to serve.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to support the Bill.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will not be very long. I apologize to the House for being absent at the very beginning of the debate. I recognize that at this late stage in the debate the little that I can say will not make any difference to the Bill. That, however, will not prevent me from outlining two major points to the House.

First, we feel that the Bill does not go as far as we would have wanted it to go. We have two major areas of concern: one, disability and, two, that there is a reduction in dollars when one takes early retirement.

Last but not least, I welcome the remarks made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) when he indicated that this is not the end of the reform but just part of the process and there will be forthcoming improvements to the Canada Pension Plan. In terms of social legislation, one approaches this step by step. The fact that we have reservations does not take away from the fact that we will support the Bill, however.

Having said that, I agree that the time is late and that there are other pieces of legislation before the House. I want personally to thank a number of people who have been actively involved in the area of pension reform over the last several years, including not only on my own staff, Nora Valantin, but in addition, Michael Hatfield who has done a tremendous amount of work at the committee level. They deserve a great deal of credit for getting the legislation to this stage, and I thank them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-90, an Act respecting Pensions Plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are 19 report stage motions on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-90, an Act respecting Pension Plans organized and administered for persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Motion Nos. 1 and 9 will be grouped for debate. As Motion No. 9 would make use of the Consumer Price Index as a measure for the adjustment of the values existing in the Pension Index, the definition of the Consumer Price Index contained in Motion No. 1 is consequental on Motion No. 9 being carried. Therefore, a vote on Motion No. 9 will apply to Motion No. 1.

Motion No. 2 will be debated separately and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 3 and 4 relate to part-time employees and will, therefore, be combined for debate. A vote on Motion No. 3 will apply to Motion No. 4.

• (1310)

Motions Nos. 5 and 6 will be debated separately and voted on separately. Motion No. 7, in the opinion of the Chair, is consequential on Motion No. 12. As Motion No. 13 deals with the same clause of the Bill, all three motions will be combined for debate and voted on as follows: A vote on Motion No. 12 will apply to Motion No. 7. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 12 obviates the question being put on Motion No. 13. A negative vote on Motion No. 12 requires the question to be put on Motion No. 13.

Motions Nos. 8, 10, and 11 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motion No. 14, also in the name of the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), has given the Chair some procedural difficulty in that it would affect the formula by which the pension benefit is determined and, as such, might increase the amount of contribution made by Crown agencies. As this is difficult to determine, the Hon. Member will be given the benefit of the doubt. Motion No. 14 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 will be debted separately and voted on separately. The House will begin debate on the first grouping, namely Motions Nos. 1 and 9.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In your ruling about the grouping of amendments you suggested grouping Motions Nos. 1 and 9. I believe there would be consent to group Motion No. 14 with them because Motions Nos. 1 and 14 form a package with regard to what the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) is suggesting. Although you have suggested that Motion No. 14 be debated separately, I think there may be consent by the Hon. Member who moved the motion to include Motion No. 14 with Motions Nos. 1 and 9.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for that?

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, I have no qualms about that suggestion made by the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan).

Mr. Young: It makes eminent sense to me also, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore, we will group Motions Nos. 1, 9, and 14.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 22 at page 1 the following:

""Consumer Price Index" means the Consumer Price Index for Canada, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act;".

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 21 by striking out line 13 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"ance with section 19 and a Pension Index adjustment calculated in accordance with subsections (1.1) to (1.3).

(1.1) The Pension Index for any calendar year shall be calculated, in the prescribed manner, as the average for the twelve month period ending October 31 in the preceding year of the Consumer Price Index for each month in that twelve month period.

(1.2) For any year for which the calculation required by subsection (1.1) yields a Pension Index that is less than the Pension Index for the preceding year, the Pension Index shall be taken to be the Pension Index for the preceding year.

(1.3) Where at any time the Consumer Price Index is adjusted to reflect a new time basis or a new content basis with a resulting percentage adjustment being made in the figures for that Index, a corresponding percentage adjustment shall be made in all values existing in the Pension Index."

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury) moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-90, be amended by adding immediately after line 5 at page 35 the following:

"26.1 (1) Where a pension benefit or a deferred pension benefit was payable after December 31, 1986, the whole or the portion of the benefit, as the case may be (in this section referred to as the "relevant amount of the benefit"), shall be adjusted in each calendar year, as of a prescribed day and in such manner as is prescribed, in accordance with subsection (2).

(2) The adjustment shall be such that the amount of the pension benefit or deferred pension benefit for the purposes of the plan on and after the prescribed day is an amount that is not less than the amount of the benefit for the purposes of the plan immediately before that day plus the lesser of,

(a) 60 per cent of the product obtained by multiplying:

(i) the relevant amount of the benefit by

(ii) the ratio that the Pension Index for the year bears to the Pension Index for the year immediately preceding that year; and

(b) 8 per cent of the relevant amount of the benefit.

Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985

(3) Any amount that is added to a pension benefit or a deferred pension benefit in any calendar year pursuant to adjustments in that year is deemed for any subsequent calendar year to be attributable to membership in the pension plan after December 32, 1986.

(4) Where, in relation to any calendar year, a pension benefit becomes payable or the entitlement to a deferred pension benefit arises less than a full year before the prescribed day as of which the benefit is required to be adjusted in that calendar year, the maximum amount that is required to be added to the benefit by way of such adjustment in that calendar year is the maximum amount that would otherwise be required to be so added multiplied by the number of days that the benefit was payable before the prescribed day and divided by the number of days in the calendar year.

(5) The Pension Index for any calendar year shall be calculated, in the prescribed manner, as the average for the twelve month period ending October 31 in the preceding year of the Consumer Price Index for each month in that twelve month period.

(6) For any year for which the calculation required by subsection (5) yields a Pension Index that is less than the Pension Index for the preceding year, the Pension Index shall be taken to be the Pension Index for the preceding year.

(7) Where at any time the Consumer Price Index is adjusted to reflect a new time basis or a new content basis with a resulting percentage adjustment being made in the figures for that Index, a corresponding percentage adjustment shall be made in all values existing in the Pension Index."

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, in the interpretation section of the Act there is no definition of the Consumer Price Index which is referred to in the Act. The purpose of this amendment is to define the Consumer Price Index.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, that is quite correct. The decision by the Chair to group Motions Nos. 1, 9, and 14 brings to the fore the need for inflation protection, which is one of the major reasons I put these amendments forward. I would like to speak to all three motions which illustrate my disagreement with the way in which the Government has proceeded with amendments to the federal Pension Benefits Standards Act. The matter goes beyond that Act.

Bill C-90 is a combination of over 12 years of debate on the need for an overhaul of private pension plan legislation. Bill C-90 will affect only those workers who fall within federal jurisdiction. However, it also goes a long way toward standardization of private pension plan legislation in the country. As a result, there have been extensive negotiaions with provincial Governments toward standardizing private pension plan legislation. Among other things, it will overhaul and improve the portability and vesting which takes place in private pension plans.

I am upset that with the exception of Manitoba no provincial Government nor the federal Government has taken the lead to mandate inflation protection in private pension plans. That is a major error in the legislation before us. As Chairman of the all-Party Committee on Pension Reform I travelled in every province and both Territories. Extensive public hearings were held on this matter. With the exception of the business community, every group which appeared before the pension task force asked that inflation protection be a mandatory requirement of private pension plans.

In the last two or three years we have become complacent in that there has been a significant reduction in the inflation rate in the country. Prior to 1983, at the height of the period of time in which pension reform was being studied by the all-Party task force, inflation was in the 12 to 14 per cent range. As a result, many people who retired in 1980 on what they thought would be adequate pensions found that after three to four years of double-digit inflation their purchasing power was cut in half. As a result, they asked that, in addition to making private pension plans more portable with earlier vesting, we should institute a minimum degree of inflation protection.

The previous Government accepted the bulk of recommendations of the task force with regard to private pension reform as well as public pension reform. The then Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, accepted the principle that if private pension plans were to be of any use to workers they should have a degree of mandatory inflation protection. That is why we have put a formula in Motion No. 14 which includes a capping to a maximum of 8 per cent as well as a mandatory inflation protection for the workers of the country.

I believe that the majority of the workers in the country will be very upset with the way in which the federal Government has failed to lead the nation with regard to pension reform. I do not believe it is good enough to say that the package before us is the only one which is possible with consensus. When the rule of consensus is applied to democracy, you end up with mediocrity. In every instance we have witnessed a Volkswagen approach to pension reform.

I am not suggesting for a moment that the Bill before us is a step backward. It is a step forward. I believe that when Bill C-90 becomes legislation the workers in the country will be far better protected than they were previously. Under the existing legislation, before a worker's pension credits and the employer's contributions were locked into a vehicle the worker had to have worked for that company for 10 years or be at least 45 years of age. That work pattern does not match the emerging work patterns of today's generation of Canadians. That is why the recommendation to go to a two-year vesting period is so critical. These kinds of improvements are important for the protection of workers' rights. However, the one major area where I have serious doubts is where the Government has failed to mandate inflation protection so that workers when they retire can look forward to an adequate retirement income based on known inflation protection. It seems to me that if the business community is going to live up to its obligations, the law should require them to mandate inflation protection for their workers. Those workers have worked hard for the businesses and deserve an adequate retirement income. Yes, there is a price to be paid. The business community said it could not afford that price. I say to them that if they are not prepared to pay the additional cost then they should stand back and allow the Government to simply double the public pension plan system so the workers are adequately protected in that way.The onus is on business and also on the federal Government to give leadership in this area.

I will have other opportunities to speak to other amendments to this Bill later on, but those were the major points I wanted to make with respect to the grouped of Motions Nos. 1, 9 and 14.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I might say that I personally have some sympathy with the direction of the amendments. Indeed, the Government accepts the long-term desirability of having inflation protection entrenched. However, we need to consider carefully how we do it.

During the pension debate in 1981, and indeed over the last 10 years, there was general recognition that pensions have to be protected over the long term for the viability of the private pension system. Unfortunately, in 1982-83 we ran into a severe economic downturn. The recovery across the country has been very uneven. I am sure all Members are aware that only Ontario has had a vigorous recovery so far. In our consultations with the provinces we were then unable to achieve consensus to entrench inflation protection at this time because of the added cost it would impose on industries in areas which were having real trouble even surviving in some cases. Therefore, we took the twin route of requiring, in the federal sector, reporting on what companies were doing about inflation protection, in order to identify the source of funds and apply moral suasion to people to go ahead. As well, we provided incentive in the Act by saying that employers can reduce the cost of the fifty-fifty cost sharing if they opted for inflation protection.

I regard that particular incentive as an important step forward. I hope Ontario will also adopt the same incentive. Between the federal Government and the Province of Ontario we regulate some 60 per cent of the workers in this country and we can provide a powerful vehicle to see that, through a voluntary mechanism, these results are achieved in the end.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the motion moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). The importance of a pension scheme— there is also the importance of an indexing formula to ensure that the benefits people will get will increase at the same rate as the cost of living index.

Mr. Speaker, I have in mind several people who are now listening to us and who retired five, eight, or even three years ago. At that time, these people could get the Government's basic pension—either the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, depending on where they lived—which was indexed, together with a private pension plan which, unfortunately, was not. At the time, the sum total of his incomes was such that a pensioner, after having contributed for 30, 40 or even 50 years of his working life to get not a golden pension, but at least one which would have made it possible for him to live decently, discovered, three, four or five years after having invested that money in his private pension plan, together with the amounts paid by his employer, that he had given up the increases in contributions which the employer pays into the employee's pension plan, taking into account a reduction or lack of increase of his net benefits or income.

Mr. Speaker, these people realize today that they need the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Why do they need it? Because the Guaranteed Income Supplement is one of the programs implemented under the Old Age Security Pension Act for all Canadians who, when the Quebec Pension Plan and the Canada Pension Plan were introduced, had not been part of the labour force or had been unable to contribute. But it is for people who live below the poverty line. And these people, after five, three or eight years find themselves in such a situation that they must collect the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and they must abandon all the fine projets they had made, thinking that they would have enough money, having saved to live on a decent pension. They realize now that they do not have enough money because the private pension schemes to which they had contributed were not indexed.

Together with my colleague the Hon. Member for Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, I feel that this is one of the major shortcomings of Bill C-90, and that these people, come election time, will remember this Tory Government's decision. I have the relevant figures here . . . in a little while, at third reading stage, we will deal a little more with the fact that the National Council on Welfare is benefiting from poverty, which shows that a high proportion of senior citizens, most of them women, live below the poverty line.

Mr. Speaker, the two bills we are dealing with today do not remedy— And especially the lack of an indexing formula for private pensions schemes will not prevent people from living in poverty in the future. I am sure that most Canadian workers, men and women alike, will remember their Tory representatives for a long time.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say a few words. In the years I have been in Parliament there has been no change in legislation more important, and which brought more benefits to the people of Canada, than the decision made in the minority Parliament of 1970 to 1972, over the opposition of the Conservatives, to index the Canada Pension Plan and Old Age Security benefits. Until that time pensioners had to wait for years until, at some point shortly before an election, one Party or the other promised an increase. They fell behind year after year in the real value of their pensions because of the increased cost of living. As a result of the decision made in that minority Parliament, the benefits which are paid to the pensioners, both through the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security pension, in 1986 are worth in real money just about what they were worth 13 or 14 years ago.

• (1330)

That would not have happened had we not indexed those pensions plans. Unfortunately, private pension plans do not do that. As other Members have pointed out, people who retired ten or more years ago thinking that between the private pension plan benefits, their Old Age Security benefits, and their Canada Pension benefits, they could live pretty comfortably, found that as the cost of living went up, and particularly in those years when the cost of living was going up by 10 and 12 per cent a year, they were not able to live as they had expected.

I had hoped that when we made these major revisions of the laws governing private pension plans we would see the absolute necessity to index those plans and to require the employers to go along with indexing of plans.

I am not too surprised that the Conservative Party was not prepared to bring in that kind of provision. I do not hold out the hope, held by the Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), that the Government will learn from experience and will suddenly become more generous than it was in the past and that it will do the right thing. The Government has not done the right thing until now. It has looked on the private pension plans as something which it controls and on which it makes all the decisions. I want to support these amendments and I want to say that I regret, and that is putting it mildly, the refusal of the Conservative Party to go along with that very necessary step.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of Mr. Young. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on Motions Nos. 1 and 14 standing in the name of Mr. Frith. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded divisions on the proposed motions stand deferred.

Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 18 both deal with the subject of withdrawals of surpluses from pension plans. I believe there might be a predisposition of the House to debate the two motions together.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, both of those motions are put forward in my name, and that is agreeable with me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out lines 40 to 45 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"er's own moneys, and an employer shall

(d) be deemed to hold the amounts referred to in paragraphs (a) to (c) in trust for members of the pension plan, former employees, and any other persons entitled to pension benefits or refunds under the plan, and

(e) be prohibited from withdrawal, "skimming" or removal of any pension fund surpluses in any manner or for any purpose whatever".

Motion No. 18

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 29 by striking out lines 47 and 48 at page 38 and lines 1 to 9 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the employer".

He said: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not intend to spend too much time on this motion because the intent of the amendment is so obvious to me and any right-thinking Canadian.

What this motion does is to prevent an employer or the administrator of a pension plan from stepping in and grabbing excess earnings from that plan for their own purposes.

The most blatant case that has come to everyone's attention in recent times is that of Conrad Black and what he did in Dominion Stores to their pension fund and the surpluses. He just walked in there and lifted $62 million out of that pension plan and used it for purposes no one knows about except Conrad Black.

I want to point out to you that at the federal level alone in 1980 some $93,806 were taken from plans under federal jurisdiction. The following year that jumped to $1,365,700, and between then and 1985 there has been an increase each year, until finally in 1985, $30,023,343 was lifted out of pension plans under federal jurisdiction. Much of the same kind of thing has been happening to pension plans under provincial jurisdiction.

It comes down to a point, I think, where a real principle is involved here. If you listen to the administrators of pension plans and employers, they make the argument that pension funds belong to them. Therefore, if any surplus is created, it is their right to step in there and use the surpluses for their purposes, and the same when a pension plan is being wound down.

I reject that argument totally. Pension funds belong to employees, not simply to employers. If, indeed, there is a surplus in a pension fund due to wise investment practices, then that surplus should not be used simply for an employer's own purposes, it should be used for providing increased benefits to pension plans such as inflation protection and survivors' benefits. It could be used for all kinds of purposes to make retirement a little easier for Canadians who have worked hard, in many cases for the same employer all their lives.

The purpose of this amendment would be to say, in effect that the employers who have managed to do this successfully over the past years are not going to be able to do it any more. If a plan has earned excess interest, that money should be used to improve the benefits that are payable to retired employees.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go over the points made by my colleague from Beaches (Mr. Young), but I think it is important to note that one of the provisions in this Bill is going to allow for the first time pensioners the right to stay and sit on management boards of pension funds.

I know that as Members of Parliament we have all been beseiged by requests from individuals who have worked for CN and for other companies who, once they have retired, have lost all rights to have their pensions protected. This is not a criticism of the unions, but it certainly is a criticism of the companies in my view. Once a worker has retired they no longer care about the health and welfare of that worker who for so many years gave of himself to ensure the viability and productivity of the company.

The issue of surpluses is very technical and complex. I want to note that under this legislation, for the first time pensioners will be allowed to sit on the management board and have their rights heard by unions and management alike. For far too long, surpluses in this country have been used to improve unit benefits for those workers in the workforce but have done absolutely nothing for those workers who are on pension. That was fundamentally wrong then, and it is wrong now.

I believe this Bill should tighten even further the ability of companies to use surpluses. Pensioners should have a right to say how those surpluses should be used. Those surpluses have been built up during years in which pensioners have been in the workforce, and those surpluses should be divided so that the benefits do not only go to the workers of the day but that they go to the pensioners of tomorrow.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to add to the remarks made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). In most private pension plans, the employee contributes perhaps 5 per cent, 6 per cent or 7 per cent of his earnings. The employer rarely matches that contribution but agrees to contribute what is required to give the employee the pension he has earned when he retires. I agree with my colleague when he says that that money belongs to the employees. While it may be legal, it is essentially theft when the employer takes the surplus.

Therefore, I believe every Member should support this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I also want to support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member. As he mentioned it, Mr. Speaker, a pension plan surplus does not belong to the business concerned only and the example of Conrad Black clearly illustrates the shortcomings in the management of private pension funds. However, the principle involved can also apply to the management of the Canada Pension Plan. I think that there is still plenty of progress to be made and this is why a while ago I was pleased to hear the Minister say that he will go on with the pension reform because both bills under consideration are just a mini-reform.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury) moved:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 34 and 35 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"18.(1) Except as set out in section 25, a pension plan shall provide".

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-90 be amended in Clause 25 by striking out lines 5 to 44 at page 30, lines 1 to 50 at page 31 and lines 1 to 35 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"25.(1) In this section, "marriage breakdown" means divorce or separation "separation" means the separation of two persons who are spouses of each other.

(2) Notwithstanding section 18 and subject to this section, pension benefits or pension benefit credits shall be divided between the member and the member's spouse in accordance with subsections (3) to (8).

(3) Where a pension benefit is payable to a member under the plan at the time the marriage breakdown occurs,

(a) a pension benefit, the present value of which is equal to one-half of the present value of so much of the pension benefit payable to the member as is attributable to membership in the plan during the period that the marriage existed before the marriage breakdown, shall be payable to the spouse as of the date of the marriage breakdown; and

(b) the pension benefit payable to the member shall be reduced accordingly.

(4) Where the member is entitled to a deferred pension benefit under the plan at the time the marriage breakdown occurs,

(a) the spouse shall be entitled to a deferred pension benefit, the present value of which is equal to one-half of the present value of so much of the deferred pension benefit to which the member is entitled as is attributable to membership in the plan during the period referred to in paragraph 3(a); and

(b) any pension benefit that becomes payable to the member under the plan at any time after the marriage breakdown occurs shall be reduced accordingly.

(5) Where the deferred pension benefit referred to in subsection (4) becomes payable to the member, the spouse's deferred pension benefit shall become payable as a pension benefit in accordance with the terms and conditions of the plan on the later of,

(a) the day on which the pension benefit becomes payable to the member; and

(b) the day on which the spouse attains the age at which an employee becomes eligible for an immediate pension benefit under the plan; provided that the spouse is alive on the later of these two days.

(6) Where a member who is entitled to deferred pension benefit referred to in subsection (4) dies before the benefit becomes payable, the spouse's deferred pension benefit shall become payable as a pension benefit in accordance with the terms and conditions of the plan on the later of,

(a) the day on which the member would have become eligible for an immediate pension benefit under the plan; and

(b) the day on which the spouse attains the age described in paragraph 5(b), provided that the spouse is alive on the later of these two days.

(7) Where neither subsection (3) or (4) applies but the member would have been entitled to an immediate pension benefit or a deferred pension benefit if the member's service under the plan had been terminated at the time the marriage breakdown occurred, for the purpose only of making the division pursuant to this section,

(a) the member shall be deemed to have become entitled to a deferred pension benefit at the time the marriage breakdown occurred by reason of termination of his service under plan;

(b) the spouse shall be entitled to a deferred pension benefit, the present value of which is equal to one-half of the present value of so much of the deferred pension benefit to which the member is deemed to have become entitled as is attributable to membership in the plan during the period referred to in paragraph 3(a); and

(c) any pension benefit that becomes payable to the member under the plan at any time after the marriage breakdown occurs shall be reduced accordingly.

(8) The pension benefit referred to in paragraph 7(b) shall become payable to the spouse as a pension benefit payable in accordance with the terms and conditions of the plan,

(a) on the later of the two days described in paragraphs 5(a) and (b), where a benefit under the plan becomes payable to the member; or

(b) on the later of the two days described in paragraphs 6(a) and (b), where the member dies before he or she becomes entitled to an immediate pension benefit, provided that in each case the spouse is alive on the later of the two days.

(9) The provisions of section 18 and subsection 25 (3) to (8) are subject to the terms of any order of acourt or an agreement between the member and the member's spouse."

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 25 by striking out lines 33 and 34 at page 30 and substituting the following therefor:

"divorce, annulment, separation or the dissolution of a common-law relationship, be divided equally between spouses to reflect the pension credits earned during the period of the marriage or relationship unless the courts or the parties themselves determine otherwise."

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to Motion No. 12 because it involves an important principle.

In the May 1985 Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised that pension benefits would be split equally between spouses upon marriage breakdown, unless the courts or the parties themselves determine otherwise. This has not been the case with Bill C-90. Instead, the Bill cedes jurisdiction to provincial matrimonial law.

As pointed out by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, Bill C-90 makes credit splitting subject to the applicable provincial property law. This means that credit splitting will be uneven across the country. Ex-spouses will be entitled to some share in their spouses' pension credits in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

● (1350)

In New Brunswick, they will have uncertain rights, and in Quebec and Prince Edward Island, they have no rights to the credit splitting at all.

That is why Motion No. 12 is there, to establish the principle that in private pension areas that fall within federal jurisdiction, there should be a mandatory splitting so that the spouses can have equal access to the pension credits.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, Motions Nos. 12 and 13 speak to the same matter. Very simply, we have just passed a Bill amending the Canada Pension Plan, which would provide for that kind of mandatory splitting. To be consistent, why the Government did not include that amendment in Bill C-90 escapes logic. In my remaining time, I would simply like to agree with the arguments that have been presented by the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), based on strong arguments that the legislative committee heard from the National Action Committee on Women, and say that it would be the right thing to do.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, as the two Hon. Members have previously pointed out, earlier today, we entrenched credit splitting in the CPP Bill. This was negotiated with the provinces in late 1985. The basic package in the PBSA was put together in early 1985, and we did not have agreement at that time with respect to credit splitting, but we have given a verbal undertaking—and I will confirm it on the floor of the House now—that we will put this on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference with respect to pensions to see whether we can reach a similar agreement in this Act as that which we have reached regarding the CPP so that we can entrench the matters that Hon. Members desire. However, right now it would be unconstitutional for us to take unilateral action.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A vote on Motion No. 12 will apply to Motions No. 7 and No. 13. Therefore, the question is on Motion No. 12. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion is Motion No. 8 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 19 by striking out line 32 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"reflects reasonably current interest rates levied with respect to ninety day treasury bills".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 8, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion is Motion No. 10.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 21 in the French version by striking out line 14 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"minées sont augmentées du montant de la prestation de pension pouvant provenir de l'excédent éven—".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Mr. Frith: Nay, just for the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 10 (Mrs. McDougall) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next motion is Motion No. 11.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 6 to 44 at page 29 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) A member or former member of a pension plan who is entitled to a deferred pension benefit pursuant to subsection 17(1) (or, in the case of a member, would be so entitled if the member ceased membership in the plan) and dies before commencement of payment of that pension benefit but after becoming eligible for retirement in accordance with subsection 16(2) shall be deemed

(a) to have retired for purposes of the survivor benefit; and

(b) to have been entitled to the joint and survivor pension benefit payable pursuant to section 22, without regard to subsection (5) thereof, in respect of that deferred pension benefit.

(4) In the case of a defined benefit plan, where

(a) in the circumstances described in subsection (1), (2) or (3), a surviving spouse is entitled to a payment under a group life insurance plan on the death of the member or former member of the pension plan,

(b) the group life insurance plan is one that is approved by the Superintendent for the purposes of this subsection, and

(c) the group life insurance premiums are paid in whole or in part by the employer, the pension plan may provide for the reduction of the benefit payable under subsection (1), (2) or (3) by an amount equal to that part of the group life insurance payment that can be considered to have been paid by employer premiums, calculated in a manner satisfactory to the Superintendent, but

(d) the actuarial present value of that reduction may not exceed the amount of the payment to which the surviving spouse is entitled under the group life insurance plan; and

(e) in the case of a contributory pension plan, the reduction may not reduce the benefit payable to the surviving spouse to an amount less than the aggregate of the member's required contributions together with interest in accordance with section 19."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 11. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 11 agreed to.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 27 by striking out lines 17 to 24 at page 35 and substituting the following therefor:

"a pension plan shall use annuity factors that do not differentiate as to sex."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 15. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

IMMIGRATION

APPOINTMENTS TO IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) has stated repeatedly, especially since his recent refugee policy, the importance of appointing well qualified individuals to the Immigration Appeal Board. Immigrant organizations have also stressed that appointees need the prerequisites of competence and experience in order to make sound decisions. In refugee matters, particularly, error can lead to certain death. Earlier this month, however, the Minister made seven new appointments to the Immigration Appeal Board, six of whom had direct links to the Conservative Party.

Being a volunteer, an organizer, or fund-raiser for a past provincial or federal candidate with the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, does not, in itself, constitute legitimate qualifications. If the Minister is serious about his stated intentions and is genuinely concerned, he will revoke such blatant partisan appointments. They do nothing but offend the integrity of the entire immigration process.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

PROPOSED RENAMING OF PARKS CANADA

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what is in a name? For Canadians and visitors, we identify our national parks and historic sites with a name, Parks Canada. One would think that this title, short, historic—and, yes, even patriotic—would appeal to the Government. Apparently not. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is renaming Parks Canada "Department of Environment—Parks"—an uninspired, long, dull name.

• (1400)

The cost of renaming? Probably into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, from changing the letterhead on stationery, to repainting signs and vehicles, to altering literature. At a time when the Minister is complaining of insufficient funds to do worth-while things, where will the money come from? Will more scientists be laid off to pay for McMillan's silly idea? Will environmental programs be further weakened? Only the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that such a comment, direct and by name, is out of order.

Mr. Caccia: I regret that, Mr. Speaker.

Only the Minister knows. What is clear is that the pride of Parks Canada employees has been hurt. A fine tradition has been dealt a mortal blow, a respected identity has been eliminated surreptitiously.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT TO PROTECTION OF ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it seems that there may be some doubt about the Government's commitment to preserving Canada's fragile environment. I promise any and all sceptics that the Mulroney Government is solidly in favour of assuring all Canadians that there is clean air to breathe and clean water to drink. It is ludicrous to suggest environmental matters will be put on the back burner. The Government has introduced stringent measures for the control of acid rain at industrial and vehicular sources.

No other federal Canadian Government has dared to tread where this Progressive Conservative assembly has soared. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has pledged his allegiance to the environment. The excellent Minister he appointed to the environmental portfolio is the manifestation of this Government's positive action. For the first time in history this country has the ear of the political machine in the United States regarding transboundary pollution. The Canadian environment has never been in safer hands.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

RESULTS OF DE HAVILLAND PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, just six months ago the Opposition vilified the Government over the divestiture of de Havilland—a money-losing Crown corporation. The Liberals, who poured over $800 million of taxpayers' hard-earned money into de Havilland, criticized the sale to Boeing as being a bad business deal for Canada.

What are they saying now? With Boeing's strength and marketing know-how, 49 Dash-8s have been sold for over $400 million; $25 million has been invested in plant modernization; product line has been expanded to include components for the 747; and 250 new jobs will be added.

Clearly what had been a millstone around the neck of the Canadian taxpayer has been transformed into a productive job-creating enterprise—proof positive that government, which has the power to tax and to regulate, does not have to own or acquire businesses which can be better run by the private sector.

Let us work on Canadair next!

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, today the International Trade Commission took one more step against the softwood lumber producers in this country. Once more the legitimacy of the Conservative thrust for free trade with the United States is being undermined.

What is so frightening is that we know we are damned if we do and damned if we don't. I have here in my hand the so-called "second letter" from President Reagan to Senator Packwood on this issue in which he says clearly: "I want you to know that I am committed to finding a rapid and effective solution to the Canadian softwood lumber problem which restores for the American lumber industry a fair opportunity to compete".

If they do not get their way through this ITC countervail thrust, then they will find another way to get us. Poor British Columbia and poor Canada. We are paying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, since we will soon be leaving this Chamber for the summer recess, I would like to take this opportunity to urge my Liberal colleagues from the Montreal area to reflect on what has been achieved by this Government since September 1984, so they can inform their constituents objectively on what has been done in Montreal in the last 20 months. In the Montreal area, 46,000 new jobs have been created since September 1984. The number of unemployed workers has dropped by more than 9,000. The value of building permits issued rose from $295 million in the first quarter of 1985 to $500 million on the same date in 1986. Hundreds of businesses have started projects that are important for the entire Montreal area. Retail sales have increased by more than 18 per cent.

I hope that during the summer, our Liberal colleagues will find it within themselves to admit their lack of objectivity and frankness vis-à-vis the many achievements of this Government in the Montreal area.

S.O. 21

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, since tomorrow will be the end of this session and the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) is giving me a chance to take stock of what the Government has done since January, I think the following summarizes it neatly: goof, goof, goof, scandal, scandal, scandal! It started in January with the resignation of the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) in connection with the Gulf affair and Montreal East. Subsequently, a series of scandals took over, starting with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, Mr. Stevens, and followed by the resignation of the Hon. Member for L'Assomption and the charges laid against the Hon. Member for Gamelin (Mr. Gravel), and on top of all this, the extravagant spending of taxpayers' money by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Speaker, we also had the absolutely scandalous cuts in unemployment insurance for early retirees, where the Prime Minister goofed again, the cuts in New Horizons programs for senior citizens and the lack of any genuine legislation the Government could have introduced for the benefit of those early retirees.

Mr. Speaker, we can say that after "Goofy Joe", we now have "Brian the Goofer".

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LOSS OF JOBS IN NORTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak of the turmoil being created in northern New Brunswick by the policies being carried out by CN management. In the regional centre of Campbellton we have witnessed the alarming decline of CN jobs for 10 years now, from 1,200 to 350. The cuts continue. At the same time revenues generated in our region certainly turn a substantial net profit for CN.

I question the motives of CN management and its apparent burning desire to destroy completely a once great and still profitable business in northern New Brunswick. It seems that some company officials are more interested in empire building than they are in finding alternatives to laying off workers. I call on the Government to put an end to CN mismanagement and the resulting lay-offs and flow of jobs out of the area.

CN, just who in the hell are you in business for anyway?

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CENTENNIAL OF CFB LONDON, WOLSELEY BARRACKS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, June 28, communities all over Canada will be celebrating Armed Forces Day. Over the years this national event has allowed Canadians from all walks of life to see firsthand how the men and women of our Armed Forces serve the vital interests of Canada.

I am fortunate to have in my riding one of the many bases that are distributed all over Canada. I am talking of CFB London, Wolseley Barracks, which will be celebrating its one hundredth anniversary tomorrow. CFB London is the home of the First Battalion of the Royal Canadian Regiment which has distinguished itself as one of the finest infantry units in Canada. The 600 men and women at CFB London serve all of southwestern Ontario by providing services to militia units, cadet corps, and other military establishments.

I am sure that I speak for all Members of this House when I express my appreciation for our Armed Forces. While we may not mention it every day, we appreciate that they are working for peace in places such as Cyprus and the Middle East; that they are protecting our coastline and maintaining our sovereignty in the North; and that they are honouring our commitment to our allies in NATO and NORAD.

To all members of our Armed Forces I say a heartfelt and warm thank you.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ROLE OF RCMP AT ALBERTA PLYWOOD PLANT STRIKE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, there have been strange things going on in Alberta for some time. However, the means by which the federal and provincial Conservatives have chosen to bust unions has taken on a grim new reality.

On Monday, at a Slave Lake plywood plant, 30 RCMP officers arrived to confront a strike force of 100. The strikers were in full compliance with an existing court order. However, the RCMP waded into the strikers, assaulted and arrested seven of them, including Harold Hawley, the IWA organizer. The RCMP singled him out, leaped on his back and choked him unconscious to the ground. The RCMP labour liaison, Constable Cliff Munroe, turned off his video camera while Harold Hawley was choked to the ground and thrown into a van.

Who ordered the RCMP out to bust the legal pickets at Slave Lake? Who ordered the mugging and detention without bail of Harold Hawley? What is the connection between the owner, Mrs. Margaret Campbell, and the Conservative Party? How far does the Conservative Party intend to go in removing rights from Canadian workers? The assault on, and detention of, Harold Hawley without bail answer that question.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) had best investigate and arrest those responsible for attacking these Canadian citizens.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INDEXED PENSIONS—LEGISLATION INTRODUCTION ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has kept another promise. Yesterday the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced that legislation will be announced this fall concerning superannuate pensions. Past commitments will be fully honoured and no changes will be made in benefits earned to the effective date of change.

• (1410)

Those who paid for indexed pensions in the Public Service, RCMP and Armed Forces will have them fully indexed through a grandfathering process. For present employees, pensions arising from service to their credit prior to the effective date of change will also have guaranteed indexing. Automatic indexation will disappear.

The Government will appoint a new 14-person pension management board to permit joint employee-employer operation of the Public Service plan that will now be managed on a sound financial basis. Conservative Members from across the country fought hard to keep this promise. This announcement is not only good politics but good business.

WOMEN

FUNDING OF WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to the emergency meeting between the Secretary of State and women's groups funded under the program concerning the promotion of women.

The purpose of this meeting is to convey to the Minister the concerns of women's organizations over funding because a number of problems have cropped up in recent months.

Among the groups which have experienced difficulties I might mention the Quebec Federation of Women, the Cahiers de la femme, the Pictou Women Centre, the Port Alberni Women Resources Centre.

I know that Conservative Members have intervened to stop payments. I also know that cases approved by Secretary of State project agents have been piling up on the Minister's desk for a month. Political interventions have never been so numerous in the field of grants to women's groups.

Mr. Speaker, time has come for the Conservative Government to examine its conscience with respect to the funding of women's groups, and these women are here to lend it a hand.

THE ADMINISTRATION

FORTHCOMING CABINET MEETING IN SASKATOON

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the summer break is starting on a high note for western Canadians. The residents of Saskatoon are delighted that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and senior cabinet Ministers will be in Saskatoon for a meeting of the Priorities and Planning Committee from July 2 to 4.

During the election campaign of 1984, the Prime Minister pledged to bring western Canada back into the federal Government after 20 years of neglect. He appointed 12 cabinet Ministers from western Canada, and held the first First Ministers' Conference of the new Government in Regina. The P and P meeting in Saskatoon is another strong signal that western Canadians count for and can count on this Government.

My constituents are looking forward to meeting the Prime Minister and cabinet Ministers in Saskatoon next week. They know that the views and concerns they express will be heard. We saw the damage done to our country because of the Liberals' regional biases. On behalf of Saskatoon East, I thank the Prime Minister for putting a stop to regional prejudice and making western Canada count as well.

PETRO-CANADA

RECOMMENDATIONS OF RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) the report of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and its recommendations concerning Petro-Canada. The commission has made it very clear that Petro-Canada should be used as an instrument of public policy, contrary to what the present Government believes.

The Government says it believes in promoting competition. The RTPC has stated that the Government has a unique opportunity to do just that in the petroleum sector through Petro-Canada. The commission recommended that Petro-Canada not discriminate against independent marketers, stop its practice of refusing to sell off gas stations to competitors, and end rack pricing. It also called upon the Government to establish a parliamentary committee to review Petro-Canada every five years.

I think the recommendations are worthy of support. This is what my Party has been saying all along. Canadians paid for Petro-Canada and we deserve to have it act on our behalf. Right now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is using Petro-Canada to shield her friends in the big oil companies—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CLAIM FILED BY CANADIAN HONG KONG PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, last week an event occurred that deserves the attention of the Canadian Parliament and all Canadians. A claim was filed before the Commission on Human Rights at the United Nations against the Government of Japan, on behalf of the Canadian Hong Kong Prisoners of War. Those are the Canadians who were held in Hong Kong for several years during the Second World War and were mistreated, used for slave labour operations, and generally suffered great harm. They have gone unnoticed in the four decades since the end of the war.

We in Parliament have shown great sympathy to the Japanese mistreated by the Canadian Government, and support their claims. Let all Canadians, including those of Japanese origin, support the Hong Kong Prisoners of War. They deserve remedy for the harm they suffered, and the UN has the ability to carry out that remedy.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES—U.S. TRADE COMMISSION DECISION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Foster: Where's the Tory front bench?

Mr. Crosbie: Where's the Liberal front bench?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In the absence of the Prime Minister, and as the Minister of Justice has just pointed out, in the absence of the entire front bench except for him, I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. In voting this morning on the Canadian softwood lumber export issue in the United States, members of the United States International Trade Commission were obviously aware of President Reagan's promise to American Senators as indicated in the President's letter to Senator Packwood that he was committed to finding a rapid and effective solution to the Canada softwood lumber problem.

Harassment against our exports which currently enjoy free trade continues on the American side. Has the Prime Minister instructed our chief trade negotiator, Simon Reisman, to place the issue of softwood lumber exports to the United States at the top of the agenda so that this continued harassment by the American quasi-judicial and political process does not continue during these negotiations?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this morning's decision was not unexpected. The onus of proof that is required for a preliminary determination of injury is very low. Indeed, since 1980 a preliminary finding of injury has been made in 90 per cent of all cases that have come before the board. I would also like to remind the right hon. gentleman that in 1983 when we won a case, there was also a preliminary finding of injury.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary for the Minister. He seemed to be very pessimistic in his answer to the House. Canadians are now paying through the nose for the few votes the President had to swing in the U.S. Senate so that his Government could take part in free trade discussions with Canada. My question is as follows: Will the Minister, in the next phase of this political or quasi-judicial inquiry, appear in person to conduct Canada's counter-attack before the U.S. Department of Commerce?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I gave the wrong impression. I am not at all pessimistic. Indeed, to the contrary, I am very optimistic. I think Canada has a very good case here. The federal Government, the provinces, the industry, and labour united unanimously at our meeting in Vancouver to fight this case. We are going to fight it and we are going to win it. I am optimistic that that will be the outcome.

UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister explain the implicit sympathy of the U.S. administration reflected by the President's letter to Senators from Oregon, Montana, and Idaho, saying that they were going to solve the Canadian lumber problem, with the Prime Minister's recent statement that he and the President had arrived at an arrangement whereby further protectionist measures would not be anticipated on either side of the border?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would again like to point out to my right hon. friend that indeed this is not an action by the administration; this is an action by the American lumber industry pursuant to its laws which are presently in force. I would also like to point out that the Right Hon. Member and his Party should get on side and unite in our thrust to have an agreement between our two countries to prevent this very kind of thing from happening in the future.

TERMS OF QUEBEC ACCORD

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade. At the Quebec City summit, the President of the United States and the Prime Minister signed an agreement stating that they committed themselves to halt protectionism in cross-border traffic in goods and services. Why is it that since that agreement has been signed there has been American trade action on fish, softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, and now even cut flowers? When will we ask the American President to live up to his part of the bargain, or will we start asking for a renegotiation of the Quebec City agreement so that we can get a fair deal?

• (1420)

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Hon. Member that in almost every case these are not actions by the administration but indeed are actions which have been taken by American companies or American citizens, as is permitted under their law, and as our cattlemen are doing under our law in respect of EC beef, and as Ontario corn producers are doing in respect of corn coming in from the United States. Mr. Reisman has in fact had discussions with his counterpart about this to date, and I am hopeful that actions in the future, where possible, will be contained.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, what kind of dark hole has the Minister been hiding in? The President of the United States undertook the action on shakes and shingles. He wrote a letter to Senator Packwood saying that he would find a solution. Where has the Minister been? Why are we not giving full authority to our negotiator to insist that the question of American trade harassment be the No. 1 priority in the negotiations, and that we will not go on with the negotiations until that problem is resolved?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is inconsistent. On the one hand he wants us to negotiate with the negotiator to try to stop the harassment. However, on the other hand he is not prepared to support our Party and the Government in the talks which will end the harassment in the future.

Mr. Axworthy: When?

Mr. Kelleher: I think he should try to make up his mind on where he stands on the issue.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns a related subject. Yesterday the Government announced that it intended to yield to American pressure by bringing in legislation as early as tomorrow which could result in a $200 million increase in the prices which Canadians pay for drugs. Simultaneously the ITC in the United States today made a decision which could cost us thousands of jobs in the softwood industry. My question is a straightforward one. Why does the Government continue to sacrifice Canadian interests at the very time when Americans continue to take a whack at us?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Leader of the NDP that the projections he makes or the conclusions he has already drawn should await the legislation before he makes any final conclusions.

Mr. Broadbent: Canadians in publishing, shakes and shingles, textiles, and shoes have all seen the kind of action the Government produces. It has been nothing but bad news for Canadians.

CANADIAN PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, again I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister, because presumably he has responsibility for the Government today, if someone has. In his letter to Senator Packwood, President Reagan said that all "other pending trade irritants must be resolved" before an agreement is presented to the U.S. Senate for ratification. Is the Government not taking this terrible action on drugs in Canada because the Vice-President of the United States came here two weeks ago and requested the Government of Canada to change our law in their interest, not ours?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the premises or with the question itself. We are taking action on pharmaceuticals and drugs because this Party, unlike other Parties, respects the right of private property.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: We respect the right to intellectual property. We respect that all parties have rights. I think the Hon. Member will just have to wait until the action we will be proposing is introduced to see whether or not it is indeed fair and just at that time.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister might respect the rights of drug companies to make as much money as they want. We respect the rights of pensioners and other Canadians to have low drug prices. That is the difference.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the Deputy Prime Minister who is in charge and ask him the following question. In the give and take involved in all negotiations between Canada and the United States on this matter, why is it that Canadians are doing all the giving and the Americans all the taking? If the Deputy Prime Minister agrees with that, why does he not announce the Government's intention to withdraw this drug Bill which will cost Canadians $200 million more?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Deputy Prime Minister does not agree with that, Sir.

EXTERNAL TRADE

FREE TRADE—MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT TO PROTECT QUEBEC FARMERS AND FAMILY FARMS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade and concerns the predictable impact of free trade on farmers and workers in the clothing industry. Yesterday, Professor Yvon Proulx of Laval University published a study in which he predicted the complete destabilization of our agricultural economy, if a free trade agreement were signed with the United States. Could the Minister inform the House what measures the Government intends to take to protect Quebec farmers and especially the family farm?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I advise the Hon. Member that indeed we are aware of the report. There is such a study, but we have not as yet seen it. We have not had a chance therefore to examine it, but certainly we will and will be able to comment on it more specifically at that time. However, I can assure him that in any agreement and in any discussion with the United States, we will not sign any agreement which is not good for all Canada, all parts of Canada, and that includes agriculture as well.

FREE TRADE—MEASURES TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT TO PROTECT CLOTHING AND TEXTILE WORKERS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my preamble, there were not only farmers but also workers in the clothing industry demonstrating yesterday in Montreal. Could the Minister inform the House, and he may have had time to examine some studies in this area, what measures the Government intends to take to protect workers in the clothing industry who are saying they stand to lose their jobs if a free trade agreement is signed with the United States?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to point out that I was aware textile workers were here yesterday, because I went out and asked them to come in to meet with me, and I discussed their problems with them. We will be announcing a new policy which will assist the industry. We will not suffer the loss of 15,000 workers as occurred from 1981 to 1985 as a result of legislation and policies adopted by that Member's Government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—U.S. AID TO CONTRAS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the $100 million the U.S. Congress just voted will mostly go to military aid to the Contras, who, as we all know, are seeking to overthrow the Government of Nicaragua, will the Government, knowing that this is a violation of Article II of the UN charter, publicly denounce it?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the vote taken in the United States yesterday does not change one iota in Canada's policy. As we have said before, Canada's policy differs from that of the United States. We are radically opposed to anyone interfering in any country whatsoever, and this applies to helping the Contras as well as to helping the guerilleros in El Salvador.

[English]

TERMS OF UNITED NATIONS CHARTER

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Minister's reaffirmation of that position, but I asked a further question. Is she fully aware that this contravenes Article II of the UN Charter, and will she publicly state that we will not accept such a contravention of a body to which we belong and wish to uphold?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, as the Government of this country, we feel that the present problems in Central America are economic and social problems. We think that the solution lies in dealing with these economic and social problems and not in giving military aid.

CHALLENGE '86

ALLEGED FUNDING OF P.C. CANADA FUND

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. We were told this morning that the P.C. Canada Fund, which is the fund-raising arm of the Conservative Party, has been granted funding under the Challenge '86 Employment Program—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: —to hire between 25 and 30 students to do fund raising for the Conservative Party during the summer. Will the Minister confirm this project, and if so, how does she justify this gross misuse of public funds?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm that project. I will look into it immediately. If that project has been approved, I will see that it is cancelled.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister please examine Challenge '86 Project No. 4839 under the name of the P.C. Canada Fund, which is hiring students at the Sparks Street Student Employment office? Will the Minister do that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I told the Hon. Member, in case he didn't hear it the first time, that I will do so.

JOB RE-ENTRY PROGRAM—WORK OF STUDENTS AT GAINERS PLANT IN EDMONTON

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Employment. I, too, have just been informed of a problem in her Department where two students from the Minister's Job Re-entry Program in Edmonton are now performing security duties at Peter Pocklington's Gainers Plant in Edmonton.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nystrom: This is part of an $84,000 federal government program under Job Re-entry at the Security Officer Career College in that city. Will the Minister now direct her officials to instruct the college for the duration of the strike that at least no student be placed at Gainers for "on the job" training?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this project about which the Hon. Member has asked is a project that is training security personnel.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: The hon. gentleman wants to laugh at that. There are 20 unemployed people in this project, four of whom have been placed in the Gainers plant. I want to assure the Hon. Member that this training has been ongoing since last December. These people will graduate shortly and they will then be going into permanent employment.

Mr. Deans: There are other places to get training.

Miss MacDonald: I am glad to see that they have had the opportunity to achieve the training—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Order, please. I take it the Hon. Member's Party does not want to allow the Member to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Deans: What did the Speaker say?

Mr. Crosbie: Listen and stop yelling.

Mr. Speaker: Order. A supplementary question, please.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ORDER REMOVAL OF TRAINERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree that in effect these people are scabs? Can the Minister explain to the House why she is using federal Government money to support the eighteenth century labour practices of Peter Pocklington in Edmonton? Will she issue a directive and take those people out of the plant now?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the Hon. Member is that I expect unemployed people to have the opportunity to get training—

Mr. Nystrom: Scabs.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member can call them scabs. I call them unemployed people who have welcomed the opportunity—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. Members of the New Democratic Party surely would allow the Minister to answer a question posed by their own Member. Order, please. The Minister may complete her answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. If Members ask questions, surely it is courteous to allow the answer to be heard. Order, please.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can call unemployed people scabs if he wants to. I do not call them scabs.

Mr. Benjamin: They are desperate.

Miss MacDonald: These people are among a group who are getting job experience and training in an institution.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: He wants to throw them out of that course. I do not think that unemployed people should be treated in that way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISASTERS

AIR-INDIA CRASH—COURSE OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and it concerns the Air-India crash of over a year ago. Will the Solicitor General confirm that within days of the crash Canadian authorities were aware it was the work of terrorists, were pursuing suspects, and that today the suspects are no longer in Canada?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): No, Mr. Speaker. What I can indicate is that a police investigation is under way at the present time and it would not be appropriate to comment further.

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, can the Solicitor General explain why it has taken so long to lay charges? Can he also indicate why Canada is not having a judicial inquiry of its own into the Air India tragedy to examine the role of the Security Intelligence Service, the RCMP, and External Affairs Department?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I apologize because I missed the last half of the question. I believe the first half of the question related first to the issue of why it has taken so long to lay criminal charges. The answer is that if it is necessary, if criminal charges are to be laid, that there be evidence satisfactory to a court. The police investigation is under way at the present time.

With regard to whether or not there should be a judicial or some other form of inquiry, similar to what there is in India, the Hon. Member might want to put that question to another Minister, such as the Deputy Prime Minister, who would have responsibility. As Solicitor General my responsibility is for the RCMP and for CSIS, and their work is under way.

HEALTH

AIDS—SPREAD OF DISEASE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Reports coming out of the International Congress on AIDS estimate an alarming escalation in the spread of AIDS, with no cure for the disease being predicted over the next several years. Will the Minister tell the House whether he agrees with the view of the Congress that prevention is now more important than ever?

Will the Minister also advise the House whether he is now willing to provide additional funding for community groups which have proven to be the most effective way of providing information, counselling, and support services for AIDS victims?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, not only do we in Canada and from Health and Welfare concur with a lot of the information coming from the Paris meeting, but there are members from my Department attending and actively participating in that conference. As to the first point in terms of the general global overview, I would say there is general concurrence from our perspective with what is being said.

Second, I want to tell the Hon. Member that when the first three year plan ended with the fiscal year March, 1986, a new five year plan was adopted by this Government and there was substantially greater funding, including money for community works. In fact $39 million has been designated for the next five years.

FUNDING OF TORONTO COMMITTEE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. He knows that the amount of money provided so far is clearly insufficient.

Would the Minister advise the House whether or not he agrees with officials in his Department who told the AIDS committee of Toronto that the AIDS committee could not receive additional moneys because, if it did, it would prove to be an embarrassment. The organization will do brochures with clear sexual information, and the public would not understand why the Government was giving additional money to this type of an organization.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not agree with that in any way shape or form. I do not know who the official is or, if it is an official from my Department, to whom he might have been speaking. The situation is quite the contrary. The view of the Department and the Centre for Diseases Control is that our work is well funded nationally and we are co-operating very fully internationally. All of us are seeking a cure. All of us indicate, and the Paris Conference says this very clearly, that the best protection for people in the high risk groups is for them to protect themselves.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

AUTO PACT—PARTICIPATION OF KOREAN AND JAPANESE COMPANIES

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Minister of Transport. Most people in Kitchener are delighted with the new Toyota plant to be built in Cambridge. Although it will create hundreds of jobs, for every job created three presently held jobs in parts and assembly plants throughout Ontario and Quebec could be lost if Toyota, Hyundai, and Honda bring in all or most of their parts from the Far East.

When will these Korean and Japanese companies be required to live within, and abide by, the spirit of the Auto Parts Trade Agreement within the Auto Pact?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's support for investment in the automobile industry in Canada, particularly investment from the Pacific Rim countries. Almost $1 billion has been invested in this country, which has created jobs for assembly line and parts workers.

Ms. Copps: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Our objective is to have as many of these jobs as possible. I can assure the Hon. Member that these companies have undertaken to meet Canada Auto Pact status. It is in their interest to do so because in doing so they can expand and broaden the base of their market.

BROADCASTING

TASK FORCE STUDY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians eagerly await the release of the Caplan-Sauvageau task force report on the Canadian broadcasting industry. Even the Nielsen task force deferred its study on the broadcasting field to Caplan-Sauvageau.

My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Minister created this task force to develop public policy for the broadcasting industry. The report has already cost Canadian taxpayers over $2.5 million. Therefore, why is the Minister proceeding with legislation in the broadcasting field before the report of the task force is tabled, studied, or even taken into account?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the report will be released as soon as it has been translated and printed. The Bill was tabled even before the appointment of the Caplan-Sauvageau task force.

[English]

REQUEST THAT BILL C-19 BE WITHDRAWN

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Through you, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister not to waste $2.5 million of the taxpayers' hard-earned money. I ask him to demonstrate his commitment to his Government's consultative process by stopping the Bell Canada Bill here and now, which Bill will destroy our cable and television industry. That Bill should be withdrawn and referred back to committee. The findings of the Caplan-Sauvageau study on the cable and television industry should be studied.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Caplan-Sauvageau report deals with broadcasting issues in Canada, whereas Bill C-19 has to to with the matter of telephone communications concerning Bell Canada.

AIRPORTS

LABOUR DISPUTE AT MIRABEL AND DORVAL

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I notified him of it by phone a little while ago.

Is it the Minister's intention to allow the issuing of security passes to personnel brought in from subsidiary companies in Calgary and Gander—which would be of interest to the Minister of Justice—in order to allow for strike-breaking during a strike situation in the month of July at Mirabel and Dorval?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for notifying me by telephone. I understand that my colleague, the Minister of Labour, has appointed a federal conciliator to investigate this issue. As the Hon. Member knows, during that period of time a strike could not take place.

Mr. Benjamin: Not till July 15.

Mr. Mazankowski: It would be premature to respond to the hypothetical situation which the Member has created.

AIRCRAFT REFUELING TENDER PROCESS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, those people are now in place from Calgary and Gander. They are in Montreal ready to strike-break in violation of Quebec law. While the Minister is snubbing Quebec, the law of that province, and Quebec workers, will he call for an investigation of Ogden Allied and all its subsidiaries, including the one in Gander, under the Combines Investigation Act? Will he investigate the tendering process for refueling and avoid any risk of an explosive situation—which I mean literally—during the month of July?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how these people could be in place when there is no strike or lock-out in existence.

Mr. Benjamin: They're in Montreal in hotel rooms.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. The House will adjourn tomorrow for the summer recess and the Government has yet to address honourably the matter of Japanese-Canadian redress. The Prime Minister stubbornly continues to refuse to involve himself despite the pledges he made during the election campaign and as Opposition Leader.

Given the Minister's failure to facilitate and encourage a genuine and adequate process, will he assure the House that he will use the summer months to conduct full and meaningful negotiations with the National Association of Japanese Canadians so that when we return in the fall we will have the foundation for a fair and meaningful agreement on this very sensitive issue?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should make up his mind about what he wants. The last time he asked questions he suggested that we were moving too fast on this issue.

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question.

Mr. Jelinek: Now he is suggesting that we are not moving fast enough. In fact the matter is before Cabinet at the present time and being actively considered. The Prime Minister is directly involved. As I have said on a number of occasions in this House, the commitment which the Prime Minister and the Government have made will be kept.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister refuses to fulfil the promise to negotiate. Will he at least promise this House and the community that a response from the Government will not take the form of a unilateral cabinet decision in the middle of summer when the House is not sitting and when the Japanese-Canadian community is most vulnerable from an organizational point of view? Will he at least give that undertaking?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should also know that there has been the widest range of discussions with the Japanese-Canadian community and others. This Member represents a Party which was opposed to any discussions with the Japanese-Canadian community on any redress issue. It boggles the mind to see this Hon. Member constantly getting up in a hypocritical way trying to grandstand on the backs of the Japanese Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member was characterizing a process, but he was coming awfully close to characterizing a Member. He knows that.

Ms. Copps: He said the Member.

Mr. Axworthy: Apologize.

Mr. Speaker: I listened very carefully.

REFUGEES

PROGRAM TO CLEAR BACKLOG OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. After months of delay why did the Minister one month ago put forward his program for clearing the backlog of 21,000 refugee claimants without having regulations prepared to guide claimants, their lawyers, and most important, the immigration officers, and without yet having hired the new staff which he promised five weeks ago to handle this great new load of applications and examinations? Why has he allowed this mess to accumulate?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that there is no mess at all. The hiring of staff is now under way. The office space has been rented and will shortly be opened. The training of those who will undertake this fast track is now under way so that that process can begin as early as September.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, we were promised it would begin in the middle of July. Now we are told September. We do not know when it will happen.

ENTRY OF FALSE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Clearly false refugee claimants are entering Canada by the plane load at a rate of nearly one thousand per month. Why has the Minister done nothing to stop this grave disruption of the program he is trying to institute?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that this is a matter of urgent concern for myself and the Government. We appreciate the support of Members on all sides of the House. We are seeking the support of the Portuguese community. We have had dialogue with that Government both here and in Lisbon. We are seeking a solution short of any visa measure. I will be reporting later on that matter.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE AT GAINERS PLANT IN EDMONTON—ROLE OF SAFETY OFFICERS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I am deeply concerned about the potential volatility of the picket line at the Gainers plant in Edmonton. Would the Minister please clarify the role of Labour Canada's safety officers in investigating claims of dangerous work by federally employed meat inspectors and veterinarians?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his interest. Legal officers of the Crown have reviewed the Canada Labour Code and have strong reservations as to the applicability of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code in issues such as violence on picket lines. The safety officer's decision, which had been made earlier, is now under appeal to the PSSRB. We will continue to react to calls pending resolution of this legal issue.

AGRICULTURE

GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE—COST OF PESTICIDES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that thousands of farmers in Saskatchewan and Alberta are facing a very serious grasshopper plague, for the third and fourth year in many cases. In view of this desperate situation, is the Minister prepared to make a commitment today to assist these producers by providing 50 per cent of the cost of pesticides needed to handle this infestation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware and very much concerned about this problem. We continue to monitor the situation in conjunction with our provincial counterparts. I think we should express our appreciation for the interest which the two western provinces have had in this situation in that they have come forward with programs to provide financial assistance to western producers. However, at this point we have not made a decision to participate in a cost-sharing arrangement with respect to the grasshopper control project.

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Minister refuses to assist these hard-pressed farmers. He knows this will mean additional payments under the Crop Insurance Program this fall. At the same time farmers will face the loss of their crops. Will he reconsider, hop to it, and make a decision?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are not rejecting this outright. We have not made any final decision. If the Hon. Member will check, he will find this Government has been very generous with payments to western Canadian farmers. Grasshopper damage is of course eligible for compensation under the Crop Insurance Program. In addition, we have reached an agreement with our provincial counterparts in western Canada to provide additional coverage for disaster cases.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

FUNDING OF SPACE DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I can remember the Minister of State for Science and Technology being surprised at the announcement that IRAP funds were to be transferred to the space program. Yet he subsequently defended that action on the basis that the NRC had been consulted. If that is true, can the Minister explain why the vice-president in charge of the program says that he was not consulted? Why is there an emergency meeting today involving members of the board who say that the NRC has been treated as if it did not exist and in violation of the NRC Act?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is my information that the Acting President of the NRC has engaged in a conference telephone call with some council members in an effort to dispel some of the misunderstanding and confusion to which the Hon. Member and some others contributed so generously.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we would like to see somewhat less imprecision about the facts from the Minister. Does he not think that when resignations are threatened, when there is a demand for an emergency meeting in response to concerns expressed by small business about being deprived of needed research funds, that it is about time the Minister took action to restore the funds to IRAP—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, no funds have been taken from IRAP. If the Hon. Member is interested in the facts I would be prepared, as I have said to some of his colleagues on an earlier occasion, to convey the facts to him in writing, as I did with the NRC. That would surely clear up his mind as it did those whom I consulted.

FISHERIES

RESTIGOUCHE RIVER SALMON FISHERY

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. About 1,400 people make a direct living from recreational fishing for salmon on the Restigouche River. These people are very worried that if net fishing on that river by the natives continues, they will not have any work in the near future. What has the Minister done and what does he intend to do to prevent this happening?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from my hon. colleague as it reflects his concern for the conservation and preservation of Atlantic salmon stocks in the Restigouche River. On hearing of alleged violations of fishing regulations on the part of the Cross Point Micmac Band, I conducted inquiries of my colleague, the Minister in Quebec responsible for the agreement with the Cross Point Micmacs, and also my colleague, the Minister in New Brunswick who is responsible for this fishery. I have been assured there have been no violations of the food fish entitlement, and we will work to ensure that in future years this is no longer a problem to my hon. colleague.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STRIKE AT GAINERS PLANT IN EDMONTON—SITUATION OF MEAT INSPECTORS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Before he passes the Gainers buck to the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Labour, I want to tell him that I was at the plant yesterday and I also met with the meat inspectors. I passed along a copy of a letter, which he will have received, in which all the meat inspectors who stayed off the job have petitioned him—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: —because they are afraid for their safety and the safety of their families.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Copps: Can the Minister tell me why not only has his Department ignored their demands to be guaranteed safe passage or allowed to stay off the job without facing disciplinary action, but why their pay cheques today have been suspended?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any additional information I can supply today that I did not supply yesterday. As we know, the safety officer is on the site. He has to make a determination as to whether or not entry is safe. He has made that determination and that is within his jurisdiction. Under the terms and conditions of the Meat Inspection Act, Agriculture Canada has a legal and moral obligation to place inspectors in the plant during the time it is processing meat. It has a moral obligation, consistent with the Act, to ensure the health and safety of the Canadian public with respect to food products.

SAFETY OF INSPECTORS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Justice. After the Labour Ministry said the site was safe, an inspector—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Copps: —had his eyes injured by flying glass. Given that, can the Minister tell this House that he is prepared to state in writing that he will guarantee the safety of those inspectors who, along with their families, are being threatened because they are caught in the middle of a dispute and that Government is protecting Peter Pocklington—

Mr. Speaker: This is long.

Ms. Copps: —and not its own employees?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the question deserves an answer or not.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Try anyway.

Mr. Crosbie: However, I will make an effort, on the request of the second Official Opposition Party, and check into the situation. I have no knowledge or report except for the question which the Hon. Member has just asked.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED FRAUDS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Revenue. Can he explain to the House the role the RCMP has in investigating fraud under the SRTC program? His Deputy Minister told The Globe and Mail that, referring to the files, "We are unable to simply turn it over to the RCMP". Yet that same Deputy Minister stated in committee on June 6 that "We are in touch with the RCMP. There are investigations going on." What is the role of the RCMP?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that the sanctity of the self-assessment system under the Canadian Income Tax Act provides in certain specific instances for the RCMP to co-operate and interact with Revenue Canada. If he wants a more specific answer I suggest, with respect, that he put it down for the Adjournment Debate and we can discuss it more fully. It is not in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer that information be turned over on a completely unrestricted basis to the RCMP.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: A very brief supplementary.

ROLE OF RCMP

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain to the House why, a year ago, the Deputy Minister told the Public Accounts Committee that files had been turned over to the RCMP and that the RCMP were involved?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not know precisely what it was the Deputy Minister said, but as I indicated to my honourable friend there are definite instances where co-operation is not only desirable, but traditional, between the RCMP and National Revenue. This is quite evident to anyone who follows the system. The RCMP are often utilized as peace officers when investigations are going on. When the RCMP conduct investigations they can subpoena evidence from National Revenue, but as my colleague knows, it has not been traditional up to this point to supply information on a wholesale basis to the RCMP from National Revenue.

POINT OF ORDER

PROPOSAL TO REVERT TO MOTIONS—MR. BROADBENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Following discussions with other Parties in the House I would ask you to seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions in order in turn to obtain unanimous consent to move a motion without notice, the motion being as follows:

All parties in the House of Commons having strongly opposed military intervention by the Soviet Union in Afghanistan in 1979 and, all parties having similarly opposed outside intervention in Nicaragua in favour of a peaceful solution to that region's problems express their disapproval of the decision taken by the United States House of Representatives yesterday to provide funding for military action aimed at the overthrow of the internationally recognized Government of Nicaragua, action which would be in clear violation of article 2 of the United Nations Charter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Seeking unanimous consent.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party presented this motion to me at quarter to three, which is about 15 minutes ago. I indicated at that time that it was not possible for me at this time to give unanimous consent required for him to put that motion.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, I suspect, wants to say something with regard to the motion. The request of the Chair is to seek whether there is unanimous consent to revert to motions. There not being unanimous consent I cannot accept the request.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the parties, and I think that if you were to seek unanimous consent you would find that there is a disposition to give unanimous consent to the following draft order. That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the House reaches Orders of the Day this day it shall immediately proceed to the consideration of Bill C-112 and dispose of all remaining stages of that Bill by 3.45 o'clock p.m., and immediately thereafter the House shall proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans, organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses. And, provided that the provisions of Standing Order 13 shall be deemed in force for the purpose of this order, and that the House shall thereupon proceed to consideration of the said Bill at the third reading stage.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent necessary for its introduction available?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being such consent shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Carried and so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ENERGY ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-112, an Act to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the emergency amendments to the Energy Administration Act regarding natural gas pricing.

On October 31, 1985, the federal Government and the oil and gas producing provinces of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan signed the agreement on natural gas markets and prices. The objective is to make an orderly transition to a competitive market for natural gas by November 1, 1986.

Since 1975, the wholesale price for natural gas sold in interprovincial trade has been set by Governments under federal-provincial energy agreements. The federal and provincial Governments are now working hard to amend legislation required to meet the objectives of market sensitive pricing by November 1. Alberta, for example, has prepared extensive amendments to its legislation to ensure that the objective of the agreement is met in the province.

Provincial Governments have also taken steps necessary to facilitate direct sales between producers and consumers, and have undertaken competitive marketing programs during the transition year. In both Ontario and Quebec the provincial regulatory boards have taken major steps to ensure that large consumers can have open access to distribution systems.

The emergency Bill to amend the Energy Administration Act is needed to fulfil the Government of Canada's commitments under the national gas agreement. The Bill will permit the Governor in Council to continue to approve negotiated domestic natural gas prices during this transition period. It will also remove any ambiguity surrounding natural gas pricing arrangements that have already been negotiated. Without these amendments the agreement on natural gas markets and prices, signed on October 31, 1985, could be in jeopardy. With these amendments the policy of negotiated prices for domestic gas prices could be halted. Without negotiated prices western natural gas producers could not effectively compete in the market-place and could lose sales to competing fuels, including imported oil. Loss of sales, particularly in the key industrial market segment, would create economic hardships for the west. Large eastern Canadian gas consumers would be denied access to attractively priced domestic natural gas supplies. To date large petrochemical, manufacturing, mining and forest product companies have negotiated natural gas cost savings in excess of $100 million.

My Minister's Department has received full support for these amendments from other Government Departments and agencies, including the National Energy Board. The industry, along with the producing and consuming provinces, want the ambiguities removed and the regulated process streamlined. These amendments will meet their concerns. This Bill does not introduce any new policy initiatives, but its passage is important to all Canadians.

Since last October Canada's natural gas marketers have been busy negotiating contracts that benefit both the producers and the consumers. When you stop to think of it, who ever heard of a natural gas marketer in Canada before last year. There may have been a few, but there are certainly more people working in the natural gas business today than ever before. You ask why? Governments are getting out of the gas pricing business during the transition year. Producers can now go out and sell their product. The prices for natural gas in Canada are now established in the market-place where they should be. Natural gas is now able to compete with other fuels for market share. By November 1 of this year all natural gas services will be negotiated in the market.

These changes could not have been introduced at a better time. Imagine the position our natural gas industry would be in if it continued to be tied to Government regulated prices at a time when oil prices have fallen. How could natural gas compete in a market where the dual fuel capacity of industrial consumers provides the flexibility to switch to a competing fuel source including imported oil. How could gas consumers benefit from a lower energy cost? Natural gas must be competitive and the federal-provincial agreement signed last year allows this to happen.

This agreement received my full support when it was signed last October. The changes to the Energy Administration Act before the House today, which allows a wide variety of negotiated arrangements, streamlining the regulatory process during this transition year, also have my complete support. I respectfully request the approval of the House for this emergency Bill.

• (1510)

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the Parliamentary Secretary in his request for approval on all sides of the House for this emergency Bill. While I certainly agree with that request, I want to say a few words in order to underline the importance of deleting the ambiguities that presently exist in the natural gas marketing network.

Natural gas marketing and distribution is not an easy subject to understand at the best of times. However, in this transition year from October 31, 1985 to November 1, 1986 there are many ambiguities and many questions, not only in the minds of industry but consumers as well. Hopefully, these mysteries will be eased by this legislation, Bill C-112.

On October 31 the Minister promised a new era for consumers and producers which would be brought about by market sensitive pricing. She said that the pricing would, in effect, provide gradual deregulation during the transition period when the Alberta border and Toronto wholesale prices would be frozen at existing levels. Although this is happening, the problem is that it is not working out the way we had hoped.

I believe the National Energy Board has acted very responsibly and made some very good decisions in the best interests of the country. They have unravelled a good deal of the mystery in this transition period and in the natural gas deregulation and marketing problems. The National Energy Board has stated that with respect to TransCanada PipeLines, private contracts between buyers and sellers will have priority. That is important because there are many bulk purchasers of natural gas in central Canada who will benefit from these private contracts and individual contracts between the buyer and seller. TransCanada PipeLines is no longer in the position of having to be the seller, but in this case can be simply the carrier. That is a step in the right direction.

However, the problem still exists for the small consumer such as the homeowner and the small businessman. They cannot get this preferential treatment through the TransCanada PipeLines. They are unable to organize a special agreement between buyer and seller and receive this preferential status with TransCanada PipeLines. While there will be large reductions in the price of natural gas for the large consumer, I am very much concerned that there will not be much in the way of price decreases for the small consumer, if there are any at all. I hope the Government will take this into consideration because it is not long until November 1.

The other feature deals with what I would call the adjacent border price, whereby natural gas can be sold into the United States, but not at a price lower than that available to Canadians in the area where the natural gas crosses the Canada-U.S. border.

Currently, through the regulated system, the National Energy Board can tell us the exact prices in particular areas because it is documented, largely through the TransCanada PipeLines system. However, what will happen when there are private contracts between sellers and purchasers, particularly large purchasers? This information will not be available to the National Energy Board and I am afraid that the NEB will not have the information upon which to base this adjacent border price. There will be some slippage and consumers in Canada will not be assured that they are getting the benefit of the low prices that Americans will receive. This may not be intentional on the part of the Government, but it can happen and we should correct that situation.

In committee, the National Energy Board and the Chairman in particular said that the Board will need new terms of reference prior to November 1, 1986 in order to be able to deal with this new method of selling and marketing natural gas in this country, and in order to ensure that Canadian consumers in central Canada will receive as low a price as American buyers. I hope that the Government will address this question.

Now that Bill C-112 will eliminate these ambiguities, further policies can be brought into effect so that people in this country, particularly consumers in central Canada, will know where they stand and will have the benefit of the lower prices they should be receiving.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as my Party's energy critic, I want to make a few remarks on this Bill. I support its speedy passage. I accept the Parliamentary Secretary's assertion that this Bill would help an orderly transition toward deregulation of the natural gas market by November 1.

This is a very complicated area. One wonders whether one is reading English when trying to understand this material. However, when one recalls that certain principles are involved, the complications of the natural gas market disappear and what is involved becomes rather clear.

When the Government decided to deregulate the price and marketing of natural gas, it had to deal with many contacts already in existence, including some famous take or pay contracts held by TransCanada PipeLines. The Government had to deal with distribution and the interests of producers, consumers and transporters. It seemed that the Government handed this question to the National Energy Board, for it to attempt to unravel the Gordian knot. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) said, the Board did a good job in trying to deal with that issue. I agree with that statement because it is a difficult issue. While I do not believe anyone is completely happy with the decision, that would have been impossible to achieve.

This is a difficult issue because the interests of producers, shippers and distributors are involved. It is worth a lot of money because Canada exports some $4 billion a year in natural gas to the United States. That is about 5 per cent of the American market, which means a lot of money for western Canadian producers.

In my remarks I want to outline some of the issues and principles that should be recognized. The first issue is U.S. exports. Natural gas is a non-renewable resource that is clean burning and can be used in many different ways. The problem is that we will deplete our natural gas resource in Alberta, British Columbia and parts of Saskatchewan and will have to go to the frontiers to look for gas there. Your Honour knows what will happen. The cost will dramatically increase for the consumer. Here in Ontario, where we are right now, where many people heat their homes and cook by natural gas, in an expanding market, we must ensure that we do not export all our cheap, non-renewable natural gas at fire-sale prices because there is an opportunity in the American market and we want to grab that. Producers will always say to regulatory boards like the National Energy Board and the Government,"We want to export more if we can because we need the cash flow and then we will reinvest and we will find more gas", and so on. That is true in some ways, but in other ways, when it is a depleting resource, gas will be found in more and more difficult places. It will cost more to transport and will mean higher prices for consumers.

• (1520)

I am proud that the NDP has taken the same position federally, here in Ontario, in the House of Commons, as it took in Alberta. I will refer to a policy statement by the Leader of the Official Opposition in Your Honour's province of Alberta, by the Hon. Ray Martin, who is a New Democrat. He said:

> It should first of all be stressed that New Democrats have never seen the"Brick Warehouse firesale" approach of wholesale exports at the cheapest price possible as any sort of sensible solution to the problems of our natural gas industry. Far better, we have argued, to look at the big picture through a greater emphasis on use of this non-renewable resource here in western Canada, as well as through changes in our pricing and distribution systems which benefit the many small Canadian producers operating here. In this regard, we have advocated gas pro-rationing, gas banking, encouragement of M-Gas and other plants for production of gasoline from natural gas, natural gas substitution for provincial government vehicle fuel and other measures to enhance markets locally.

I have often thought over the years, if I can digress for a minute, that perhaps the little green buses on which we come to the House that burn the oil, should perhaps have been converted to natural gas, as has been done in many companies in Vancouver and with municipal vehicles. In other words, here is the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Alberta saying in Alberta, "Let us not sell out all our gas right now at fire-sale prices". That is not to say we should not export gas. We must export some gas because we must keep the small producers going and we do have a surplus, but we must be very careful that we do not sell it at fire-sale prices. That is not the situation right at the moment, because there is a gas bubble in the United States. Spot prices in the United States have gone down as low as about $2 a thousand cubic feet, recently. However, we must be careful not to export for a quick buck.

The second principle to be kept in mind is that we must try to receive the best possible prices for the consumers. Access must be given to small producers. Let me explain the consumers' part, first. The Government must continue to follow the principle that we should not be selling Canadian gas to American consumers at prices lower than we sell to Canadians. I know there are problems involving transportation charges, distances, that can be adjusted at the borders and areas adjacent to the United States. Basically, we should keep to that principle and I hope the Government will not abandon it. If it does, it can look to us over here to raise it as a political issue. We must give the small producers access to the pipelines and to the markets. That is what members of the NDP in Alberta were saying when they spoke of pro-rationing and so on. The TransCanada PipeLines had a monopoly, one pipeline going from the West to the East, carrying the gas. Contracts were being made for buying gas, and it was being transported and sold. Gas could be purchased quite cheaply from small producers who were desperate for the money, because TransCanada PipeLines had the only access to the pipeline.

As I have advocated in the House over the last few years, we in the NDP feel that the monopoly of TransCanada PipeLines should be broken up or, alternatively, be taken over as a public enterprise. I notice that the National Energy Board did this to some extent in its decision giving producers access to the pipeline. That was a really important step because there cannot be a deregulated, competitive market without there being a deregulated, competitive system.

That is the mistake the Government made in deregulating crude oil. The Government said it would deregulate crude oil under the Western Accord and that it would help consumers and producers. Because there are four or five companies that control most of the transporting, refining and marketing, we ended up having the worst of all possible worlds; that is, consumers paying more than world price. Just look at what Americans pay for gasoline compared to Canadians. Small producers in Alberta are going under because they are selling their oil at the lowest possible price, lower than world price. We do not want to see that with natural gas. We want to see a system where there will be some control over exports and there will be fair prices to consumers. We are worried, with the new deal to which the National Energy Board agreed, that the residential consumer will still not benefit as much as we think possible. Prices should be lower for consumers because the price of oil has come down and the price of natural gas should follow.

I want to say one word about Quebec. Concerning deregulation, we think there would have been a much more positive impact upon Quebec industry and residential consumers had it not been for the Conservative decision last November to cut back funding for new laterals, gas laterals, so that natural gas could be brought into all these Quebec communities. We will be pushing for the federal Government to take further action to develop Quebec and Atlantic markets for gas, both for national energy security reasons and also to provide a market for domestic producers.

[Translation]

I would much rather have a deal between Alberta producers and Quebec consumers, which is better than a sale or contract between Alberta producers and the Americans. This would also be in the interest of Canadian energy security. We in the New Democratic Party of Canada are in favour of expanded market in the Province of Quebec, and we deplore the fact that the Conservative Government did not promote the extension of the gas pipeline further than Quebec.

[English]

Perhaps I can end by telling the Government that we will watch this deregulation in November and we hope it will be much better than what the Government has done in trying to deregulate the price of crude oil under the Western Accord, which we consider right now not to be a success, because we think that the ordinary Canadian consumer has not benefited as much as he or she should, nor has the ordinary small producer in Canada. We hope that a different result can be achieved for natural gas. That is why we are pleased to help this Government today by passing this Bill as an interim measure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

• (1530)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-112, an Act to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Clauses 1 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Hon. Bill McKnight (for Miss Carney) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Bill McKnight (for Miss Carney) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I know that we have but a few moments to speak on third reading of this Bill. I would like to make one point; I cannot really resist making it. I would like to have it on the record.

About 10 years ago there was a royal commission in Canada, the Berger Commission on the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is when you made your first mistake. There's the conflict.

Mr. Waddell: It was to look into—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Tell us about it.

Mr. McDermid: Did they pay you anything?

Mr. Waddell: I am getting a hard time, Mr. Speaker, from Members opposite since I used to work for the commission. I remind Hon. Members opposite that the Attorney General of Ontario and the present Minister of Energy of Yukon also worked for the commission.

Mr. McDermid: That says a lot.

Mr. Waddell: There were even some Conservatives who sat on the commission.

What I have to say is that the commission was looking into the advisability of building a large-diameter pipeline to carry natural gas from the Mackenzie Delta, from Prudhoe Bay in Alaska, down through Canada to the lower 48 states. The commission received a great deal of criticism from the industry and people around at the time for recommending a 10-year delay, for various reasons, in building the pipeline.

I wish to say for the record that I have now found what the spot price of natural gas is, something to which I referred in my speech on second reading. It is now something in the order of $2.30 per 1,000 cubic feet in the United States. The pipeline would have carried gas at about $8 to $10 per 1,000 cubic feet. One can imagine how many broke companies we would have had in Canada had the pipeline gone ahead.

Not only did the report of the Berger Commission enhance and stimulate the environmental movement in Canada, and not only was it receptive to the growing native movement and the assertion of small business people to get a piece of the action in industrial developments and megaprojects, but it also helped the big oil and gas companies which would have gone broke had they built the pipeline. It will be built some day because we will run out of natural gas eventually in southern Canada. Let us hope that by the time it is built it will be built by consensus and to the benefit of the people who live in the North, as well as to the consumers who live in southern Canada and the businesses who will build it.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks on second reading I did not thank my colleagues in the Opposition for their co-operation in terms of this Bill. I wish to take this opportunity to thank both my colleagues with whom I have spent the last few weeks in going through a couple of very detailed Bills. The co-operation over the last month has been very good. I believe we accomplished a great deal. I wish the record to show how much I appreciate the co-operation of the Hon. Members in terms of Bill C-112.

I also might make mention that rumour has it—and it is strictly rumour—that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), may not be involved in the energy end of things much longer. For that reason I want to say that we will miss him if in fact he is removed as the energy critic for his Party. However, we wish him good luck—not a lot but some—in whatever endeavour to which he is assigned.

The amendments before us are important to the gas industry. We appreciate Members of the House giving us the time to get them through today.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on the report stage motions on Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Call in the Members.

● (1600)

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The first question is on Motion No. 2. Mr. Young moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out lines 40 to 45 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"er's own moneys, and an employer shall

(d) be deemed to hold the amounts referred to in paragraphs (a) to (c) in trust for members of the pension plan, former employees, and any other persons entitled to pension benefits or refunds under the plan, and

(e) be prohibited from withdrawal, "skimming" or removal of any pension fund surpluses in any manner or for any purpose whatever."

The House divided on the Motion No. 2, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It may be possible that, given that a couple or three Government Members joined us after the vote—although they may want to speak for themselves—if you sought unanimous consent and received it we could allow the vote taken to be applied to the remaining votes with perhaps three or four additions and so save the time of the House.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we would agree with that proposition, but I would like to mention that some of my colleagues who were not able to be here in time for the first vote would like to be included. The Hon. Members are: The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the House that the study committee chaired by one of our colleagues, the so-called McGrath Committee, had recommended electronic voting facilities for the House. This is one of the last times when, to save the time of the House, I give consent to the New Democratic Party House Leader to apply the same vote as the one just held. I hope that in his wisdom the Government House Leader will see to it that we are provided with a much more modern and much faster voting system than the one we have now.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the generosity of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). I am not the only one who makes such suggestions. I distinctly recall his own House Leader having made a suggestion not at all unlike this yesterday.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I would want my vote for the subsequent votes to be considered with those of my Party.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). Had I been here on the earlier vote I would have voted with the Government. May I be included as voting in the appropriate manner?

With respect to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), that suggestion was brought to this House some 25 years ago by a member of the other place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and then the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

An Hon. Member: We could have voted by now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

• (1610)

Mr. Prud'homme: I would like to point out to you, Your Honour, that although my colleague, the Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) has named some of the Members who would like to be added, I know that a couple of others would like to be added as well. I would like to ensure that everyone who arrived late will be included, and there are some here.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to be added to the distinguished list which our acting House Leader has put forward.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I want to ensure, Sir, that the name of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is added to the list.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I had high hopes for you. As we come close to the end of the session, I do not know what will happen over the summer. However, I am in favour of the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). If we had electronic voting I would not have been caught in the elevator and prevented from physically attending here. We could all vote in our offices, if we carried it to the extreme.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Instead of taking all this time we could almost have had a second vote and that vote could have counted.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, as indicated by my colleague, the Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan), we had an important meeting of the Nova Scotia group which delayed our arrival. I would like to be counted with the government Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next vote is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of Mr. Young. Mr. Young moved:

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 19 by striking out line 32 at page 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"reflects reasonably current interest rates levied with respect to ninety day treasury bills".

The House divided on Motion No. 8, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

The next vote is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of Mr. Young. A vote on this motion also applies to Motion No. 1. Mr. Young moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-90, be amended in Clause 21 by striking out line 13 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"ance with section 19 and a Pension Index adjustment calculated in accordance with subsections (1.1) to (1.3).

(1.1) The Pension Index for any calendar year shall be calculated, in the prescribed manner, as the average for the twelve month period ending October 31 in the preceding year of the Consumer Price Index for each month in that twelve month period.

(1.2) For any year for which the calculation required by subsection (1.1) yields a Pension Index that is less than the Pension Index for the preceding year, the Pension Index shall be taken to be the Pension Index for the preceding year.

(1.3) Where at any time the Consumer Price Index is adjusted to reflect a new time basis or a new content basis with a resulting percentage adjustment being made in the figures for that Index, a corresponding percentage adjustment shall be made in all values existing in the Pension Index."

The House divided on Motion No. 9 which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

The next vote is on Motion No. 12 standing in the name of Mr. Frith. A vote on this motion also applies to Motion No. 7. Mr. Frith moved:

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-90 be amended in Clause 25 by striking out lines 5 to 44 at page 30, lines 1 to 50 at page 31 and lines 1 to 35 at page 32 and substituting the following therefor:

"25.(1) In this section, "marriage breakdown" means divorce or separation "separation" means the separation of two persons who are spouses of each other.

(2) Notwithstanding section 18 and subject to this section, pension benefits or pension benefit credits shall be divided between the member and the member's spouse in accordance with subsections (3) to (8).

(3) Where a pension benefit is payable to a member under the plan at the time the marriage breakdown occurs,

(a) a pension benefit, the present value of which is equal to one-half of the present value of so much of the pension benefit payable to the member as is attributable to membership in the plan during the period that the marriage existed before the marriage breakdown, shall be payable to the spouse as of the date of the marriage breakdown; and

(b) the pension benefit payable to the member shall be reduced accordingly.

(4) Where the member is entitled to a deferred pension benefit under the plan at the time the marriage breakdown occurs,

(a) the spouse shall be entitled to a deferred pension benefit, the present value of which is equal to one-half of the present value of so much of the deferred pension benefit to which the member is entitled as is attributable to membership in the plan during the period referred to in paragraph 3(a); and

(b) any pension benefit that becomes payable to the member under the plan at any time after the marriage breakdown occurs shall be reduced accordingly.

(5) Where the deferred pension benefit referred to in subsection (4) becomes payable to the member, the spouse's deferred pension benefit shall become payable as a pension benefit in accordance with the terms and conditions of the plan on the later of,

(a) the day on which the pension benefit becomes payable to the member; and

(b) the day on which the spouse attains the age at which an employee becomes eligible for an immediate pension benefit under the plan; provided that the spouse is alive on the later of these two days.

Pension Benefits Standards Act, 1985

(6) Where a member who is entitled to deferred pension benefit referred to in subsection (4) dies before the benefit becomes payable, the spouse's deferred pension benefit shall become payable as a pension benefit in accordance with the terms and conditions of the plan on the later of,

(a) the day on which the member would have become eligible for an immediate pension benefit under the plan; and

(b) the day on which the spouse attains the age described in paragraph 5(b), provided that the spouse is alive on the later of these two days.

(7) Where neither subsection (3) or (4) applies but the member would have been entitled to an immediate pension benefit or a deferred pension benefit if the member's service under the plan had been terminated at the time the marriage breakdown occurred, for the purpose only of making the division pursuant to this section,

(a) the member shall be deemed to have become entitled to a deferred pension benefit at the time the marriage breakdown occurred by reason of termination of his service under plan;

(b) the spouse shall be entitled to a deferred pension benefit, the present value of which is equal to one-half of the present value of so much of the deferred pension benefit to which the member is deemed to have become entitled as is attributable to membership in the plan during the period referred to in paragraph 3(a); and

(c) any pension benefit that becomes payable to the member under the plan at any time after the marriage breakdown occurs shall be reduced accordingly.

(8) The pension benefit referred to in paragraph 7(b) shall become payable to the spouse as a pension benefit payable in accordance with the terms and conditions of the plan,

(a) on the later of the two days described in paragraphs 5(a) and (b), where a benefit under the plan becomes payable to the member; or

(b) on the later of the two days described in paragraphs 6(a) and (b), where the member dies before he or she becomes entitled to an immediate pension benefit, provided that in each case the spouse is alive on the later of the two days.

(9) The provisions of section 18 and subsection 25 (3) to (8) are subject to the terms of any order of acourt or an agreement between the member and the member's spouse."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

The next vote is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of Mr. Frith. Mr. Frith moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-90, be amended by adding immediately after line 5 at page 35 the following:

"26.1 (1) Where a pension benefit or a deferred pension benefit was payable after December 31, 1986, the whole or the portion of the benefit, as the case may be (in this section referred to as the "relevant amount of the benefit"), shall be adjusted in each calendar year, as of a prescribed day and in such manner as is prescribed, in accordance with subsection (2).

(2) The adjustment shall be such that the amount of the pension benefit or deferred pension benefit for the purposes of the plan on and after the prescribed day is an amount that is not less than the amount of the benefit for the purposes of the plan immediately before that day plus the lesser of,

(a) 60 per cent of the product obtained by multiplying:

(i) the relevant amount of the benefit by

(ii) the ratio that the Pension Index for the year bears to the Pension Index for the year immediately preceding that year; and

(b) 8 per cent of the relevant amount of the benefit.

(3) Any amount that is added to a pension benefit or a deferred pension benefit in any calendar year pursuant to adjustments in that year is deemed for any subsequent calendar year to be attributable to membership in the pension plan after December 32, 1986.

(4) Where, in relation to any calendar year, a pension benefit becomes payable or the entitlement to a deferred pension benefit arises less than a full year before the prescribed day as of which the benefit is required to be adjusted in that calendar year, the maximum amount that is required to be added to the benefit by way of such adjustment in that calendar year is the maximum amount that would otherwise be required to be so added multiplied by the number of days that the benefit was payable before the prescribed day and divided by the number of days in the calendar year.

(5) The Pension Index for any calendar year shall be calculated, in the prescribed manner, as the average for the twelve month period ending October 31 in the preceding year of the Consumer Price Index for each month in that twelve month period.

(6) For any year for which the calculation required by subsection (5) yields a Pension Index that is less than the Pension Index for the preceding year, the Pension Index shall be taken to be the Pension Index for the preceding year.

(7) Where at any time the Consumer Price Index is adjusted to reflect a new time basis or a new content basis with a resulting percentage adjustment being made in the figures for that Index, a corresponding percentage adjustment shall be made in all values existing in the Pension Index."

The House divided on Motion No. 14, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? Pursuant to order made earlier this day, now.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate to you that the official Opposition will support this Bill at third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

FARM DEBT REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, June 20, 1986, consideration in Committee of Bill C-117, an Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors—Mr. Wise—Mr. Paproski in the Chair; and on the amendment (Mr. Foster) (p. 14801).

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I ask Members to please take their seats. The House is again in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-117, an Act to facilitate financial arrangements betwen farmers and their creditors. When the Committee rose on Friday last Clause 33 of the Bill with an amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) was under consideration. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) had the floor. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Algoma.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I proposed was to Clause 33. It reads as follows:

> Where in the opinion of a review panel, a satisfactory arrangement cannot be reached without injustice or undue delay, it shall report its finding to the Board and the Board may refer the matter to a court of competent jurisdiction to formulate the arrangement that it deems equitable under the circumstances.

● (1620)

I proposed that amendment because under this Bill is that the review board really has no effective means of effecting a negotiated arrangement between farmer and creditor. Even where a bank or other lending institution has changed the arrangement or done something markedly unjust to the producer, the review panel has no power to take action. The amendment is not proposed to provide an automatic court review. It simply provides that where there is an injustice or undue delay, the panel can recommend that to the board and the board may refer it to a court of competent jurisdiction.

The concern expressed by agricultural producers across this country is that under the Bill the way it is now drafted a creditor can petition the farmer into a review. Mind you, he has to have the permission of the farmer. However, can you imagine the situation where a chartered bank has called on the review board to undertake a review of the farmer's debts and the farmer refused? He really cannot refuse. In the review itself he is sworn to secrecy, as are the panelists and the creditors. Pressure is brought to bear. The banks or other creditors can sit on their hands for up to 120 days if they can persuade the board to extend the time. Then the whole exercise is over. There is no review by Parliament or anyone else of how the system is working.

If we do not take this action we are saying to the farmers concerned, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has estimated there are 8,000 of them and there may be more, that even where the bank is doing something improper or unjust, the panel will have no power to recommend court or other action. In fact, it is worse than that. They cannot even talk about it outside of the hearing.

This procedure is essential to the proper functioning of the review panel. I have talked with the chairman of the Grey-Bruce pilot project. He spent about five or six months on this, along with a half a dozen farmers and other people knowledgeable and concerned about the crisis. In his opinion there was no way this process would work unless there was a means by which a matter could be referred to a court of competent jurisdiction. In fact, if this amendment is not adopted by the Minister I believe the whole system will stall. We will have thousands of applications to review boards, the farmer will make representations to the creditor in order to reach an arrangement, and it will simply be a case of the review board jaw-boning or arm-twisting. I do not know about you, Mr. Chairman, but I have not had much luck jaw-boning or arm-twisting any bankers I know. I do not think farmers facing this situation will have much more luck either.

The other thing that is developing is that other provinces have enacted legislation. For example, in Saskatchewan a farmer goes before a debt review board and the option is there to refer the matter to a court if no agreement can be reached. Clearly the Premier of that province, who views the situation so seriously that he took on the responsibility of being Minister of Agriculture, made it clear in a press statement a week or so ago that if this legislation is not made stronger he will not use it. He will maintain the existing legislation. The same thing is happening in Manitoba. They have introduced legislation which will give them the option of a court review.

It is for those reasons I think this amendment is absolutely essential, not only to make these boards effective but also to have a uniform policy under the constitutional authority of the federal Government in regard to bankruptcy. If you look at this legislation in the first paragraph, it deals with the interpretation of an insolvent farmer. The three items referred to are taken directly from the bankruptcy laws of this country. It is under those provisions that this legislation is brought in, although the word "bankruptcy" is not used in the Bill itself.

It is also important that we do not build up a patchwork of legislation. Provincial Governments other than Manitoba and Saskatchewan are going to be under great pressure to do the same thing as those two provinces if we do not make this provision available.

Over the weekend and during the days since this Bill was last before the House I received encouragement and support from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture, the president of the National Farmers' Union, the Women's Group for Farm Survival in eastern Ontario, individual farmers, and people who served on the Grey-Bruce pilot project. There has been a great deal of support. I have a letter from Reverend Howard Brox, the General Secretary of the United Church of Canada, dated June 24, 1986 in which says with regard to Farm Debt Review Boards:

> The Division of Mission in Canada requests the legislation either be amended to include an effective enforcing role for the review boards or be referred back to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for strengthening.
> The concern of the church is for farm families caught in the midst of this farm crisis and we do not believe that the legislation, as it presently stands, will aid them. In fact, those same farm families may be hurt even more if the legislation is not changed so as to strengthen the power of the farm review boards to enforce their recommendations.

• (1630)

I have stronger evidence that this provision is essential. I have in my hand an article from the London Free Press of last July 11 in which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) himself says that it is essential that this legislation be brought in, that it must be done under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, and he indicated his support for reference to a court.

This amendment which I am proposing is not nearly as strong as that because we are not operating under the Bankruptcy Act itself. Under this Bill this is a stand-alone board, but the amendment does propose that where there is, in the opinion of the review panel, injustice or undue delay about to occur, the matter, with the support of the review board for the province or region, can be referred to a court of competent jurisdiction to formulate the arrangement that it deems equitable under the circumstances.

I know that some groups, like the cattlemen, have argued that having this provision will be harmful to farm credit. I simply refer them and other groups like that to the fact that Saskatchewan has had in place a moratorium for almost a year and a half now. They have had the same provision, really a stronger provision than this, in their legislation where when review panels cannot reach an agreement they can refer it to a court of competent jurisdiction. The credit levels there are no tougher or easier than they are in other regions of the country. Clearly the Manitoba legislation will do the same thing.

I would certainly hope that the Minister will look at this amendment, as he promised to do last Friday, with a view to giving it his support.

There is no doubt that the Minister can, under Section 10, establish regulations or rules outlining the circumstances under which references could be made to a court, or if during the first six months or longer period he feels there should be no references to the court of the operation while the whole system shakes down, that would be the Minister's prerogative.

I think that this amendment is essential so that we have one uniform system across the country without a patchwork of provincial laws applying in various ways and giving unequal justice across the country. I think it is essential that the review panels can proceed to negotiate agreements, and when they come across injustice or improper behaviour by a lending institution and the lending institution is not willing to make it right, and are adamant in that regard, then they can recommend to the review board to refer the matter to a court for their consideration.

I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister would accept this recommendation so that the whole system will be that much more effective, and that we see justice done to the thousands of farmers who are facing serious financial difficulty, or insolvency.

We know that there is going to be perhaps the most dramatic, the most serious restructuring of farm debt in the next two years that we have seen since the 1930s. We know there are thousands of farmers who six or seven years ago had land that was worth $3,000 an acre. It is now worth a thousand dollars an acre. We know that that is common in southwestern Ontario. We know in places like the Peace River where land was worth $800 an acre five or six years ago it is worth $275. We know that certain unscrupulous individuals are waiting until it is down from $275 to $100 an acre to snap it up.

I think it is important that as this massive restructuring of the farm debt takes place we not only do justice to the banks and the lending institutions, but that we do justice to the farmers, especially the young farmers who bought farms in the late 1970s and the farm value per acre drop dramatically and have seen their equity wiped out. They should be given a fair chance to end up operating those farms, that they are not dealt off to the banks or to other lending institutions whose interests are not necessarily in the community itself, but are responding to demands from headquarters in Toronto or some other capital city in our country.

I would hope that the Minister and the members of his caucus would consider this amendment. I put it in good faith believing that there is strong support for it in the country, and believing that it will be a good safety valve for cases where injustice is being done to a farmer. The review panels really want to see action taken to redress those injustices.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He has given a very good speech. He is dealing with a very important subject. I think that those of us who have had any connection with the financial difficulties in the agricultural industry and have communicated with individuals and farm organizations across the country in the last year or year and a half will know that this particular issue has not just been debated in the House of Commons in the last 20 minutes, but rather has been first and foremost in the public forum, particularly in agricultural organizations for the last year or year and a half.

What we are considering here is whether or not to decide—and I know that the Hon. Member has some conditions attached—to extend the power and the authority in legislation to a court or to a review panel to unilaterally write down debt.

I did say and have said many times, perhaps beginning last June and July—maybe even in September—that I thought that perhaps where every effort was made on a voluntary basis by a review panel and that a decision could not be reached then those cases should indeed be referred to a court.

After making that statement I got the message loud and clear from across the country, from all sectors, all regions, indeed from within the membership of the various organizations which actually took a public position asking for such powers, that we should be aware of that. We should not ignore the fact that the provinces will not accept that at this time.

The Hon. Member talks about the need for a uniform program to apply across the country. We are required to do that in order to be consistent with the Constitution and the Charter of Rights. Therefore, if we moved in that direction we would not achieve that, because I believe, with one or two exceptions, that all of the other provinces would reject it. We would not be doing a service there at all.

I do not want to rule out that change in the future because the Hon. Member will know, as will the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre, that we have had some discussion following our last exchange in Committee of the Whole. They know I have accepted some of their amendments, and I believe there are one or two others that I will accept. As well, I will be moving a Government amendment that was really put forward by the Hon. Member for Humbolt—Lake Centre. It refers to the type of review we do.

I firmly believe that there is no question that this is an important issue. However, the proper and appropriate place for careful consideration of this particular issue of extending the power of the court or review panel should be made at the time we review the progress or lack thereof of the review panel and the legislation. That will take place in the appropriate forum, either a legislative committee or standing committee of the House. Given the new powers and authority of the committees, witnesses can appear from across Canada and those committee can deal directly and specifically with that issue. There is no question that it will be the issue. It has been debated in the past and will continue to be debated, even when the legislation is in place and the review boards are operating. We can have a track record and something to review. I am certain that this would be the more appropriate time to review this particular amendment which the Hon. Member is suggesting.

I think we have lost sight of something here. We have lost sight of the fact that we assume that the success rate flowing to farmers will be higher through a court process. I do not believe that. There is certainly more goodwill within the banking community than there was 20 months ago, but how much there is, I am not sure. I expect that it has greatly improved, but we will know that until these review panels have an opportunity to work. I firmly believe that our success rate will be higher under the voluntary process than through cases being decided by the courts.

I cannot accept this amendment and the Hon. Member knows that from the discussions we have had. However, I do not want to leave the impression that we are throwing it out forever. We do not know what we might have to do in this and other areas to continue our support for the agricultural industry in this country.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few words with respect to this amendment that was proposed by my very distinguished colleague, the Member for Algoma.

As the Minister knows, my colleague is not suggesting that the farmer would be asking the courts to take over. He is suggesting that the board be given that prerogative if and when there is an injustice being committed in the eyes of the board. This board is not appointed by opposition Members of the House, or even by the aggrieved farmer or the banker in question. The board is appointed pursuant to this Bill, which is by Order-in-Council, if I read the Bill properly. This means that the Minister will probably personally choose the people who will sit on that board. I trust that they will be people with good and appropriate judgment and will exercise that judgment in an effective manner.

Therefore, I am at a loss to understand why the Minister does not want to give this alternative, which is not necessarily an option in every case, to a board which he appoints by Order-in-Council. While there are parliamentary reviews of Order-in-Council appointments, it is the Minister who will appoint this board. This board is already given the authority to adjudicate in these matters. Yet the Minister refuses to give the board the privilege, when appropriate and necessary, not to judge it again but to ask the courts to do so, if it feels it is in the best interests of the case. I believe this is basically a friendly amendment which does not really challenge what the Minister is attempting to do. I believe we are striving for the same goals, but I am in some difficulty understanding why the Minister does not want to give this board the power, when deemed appropriate, to refer this kind of matter to a court. It is the job of the court to adjudicate in such matters.

The Minister said in his reply to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma, that perhaps there are occasions when courts will not be as effective in dealing with these kinds of matters as the board itself. Surely, when a board believes that the outcome of a case can be enhanced by sending it to the courts, one would think that the same board consisting of competent people would not send a case to court if it felt it was not in the best interests of the case.

I do not understand why the Minister does not want to give his own board the power to refer a particular situation to a court of law. Perhaps he could explain because, with all due respect to the Minister, he has not adequately explained why he does not want to give his own board the power to refer a particular case to a court when it feels it is absolutely necessary or appropriate under the circumstances.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a couple of points on the same issue. Many of the provinces hope that when this Bill is passed and the debt review panel is in place they will not have to implement or develop other legislation that would give the kind of protection to the farmers they hope this Act will provide. It ran out in 1985 and was extended for one year. It runs out again at the end of this year, but the Government has the authority to extend it. Had this particular clause been in place, this referral to courts, I think it might have been able to let it die. It will not be able to do so under the circumstances of this particular Act. I wonder what the Government of Ontario will have to do if, after the Act is passed, it finds that it does not have the kind of teeth that were promised and were to be, it was hoped, part of the Act.

• (1650)

On March 6, 1986, the Minister, in answer to a question by me, promised that the Government would be bringing forth debt review legislation as quickly as possible. When I suggested that it would not have any teeth, he said, "There will be teeth in it. Just wait and see". Now the teeth are what he is pulling out or refusing to put in at this time.

Mr. Chairman, we are not speaking of write-downs in this particular situation. That is not the issue. The Minister, should he let this clause go through to become part of the Act, would still have the authority of writing the regulations to define exactly what the court would review. If he is worried about the problem of write downs, which the banks and some of the financial institutions have indicated, then that could be part of the regulations. However, when there are injustices and when the voluntary agreements are not forthcoming, and the panel has recognized that the voluntary agreement which it intended or tried to impose or put in place is not forthcoming, then it should have the authority to refer that matter to a court of proper jurisdiction and, consequently, give it the opportunity to be settled by a third party or fourth party, as in this case. A second stage will then be available. That is exactly the position that has been taken by a couple of organizations. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture very specifically suggests that the court should be in the process.

In reviewing the proposals for changes in the Bankruptcy Act, we have a series of four options suggested for farmers and fishermen. Two of those options indicate need and the suggestion that a court be placed in the structure for a last level of decision-making, for an overview by someone who has not been involved. It suggests that both the borrower and the lender have the authority or the alternative to refer it to the court. In what is being suggested in this amendment, the people who would refer it to the court would be the panel, the group that has been adjudicating it all along. Out of the four options suggested in the changes to the Bankruptcy Act, two include court procedures, and the one recommended by the committee is definitely a court procedure, as well. Therefore, I do not think that we are suggesting that the Minister put in place something that will get a negative reaction from the financial community, but, rather, something which would allow him to know satisfactorily that there is always a place of appeal for the panel if the creditor, or the farmer, sits back and refuses to co-operate. In most cases, I would imagine it would be the creditor, because the farmer would be there because of difficulty.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I hope that we do not spend all of our time dealing with this particular clause, because I know that we can make rapid progress on those remaining, and we must revert back to two or three earlier clauses, on which we have already agreed. I do not know what more I can say on this issue except to say that the message is loud and clear. It is a very important section, a very important issue. It is very sensitive out there. We know what the provincial reaction will be. We know what the majority of individual farmers feel about this and, probably, most of the commodity organizations. Indeed, this amendment has triggered a number of representations to our office. We held a debriefing meeting for the farm leaders yesterday, here in Ottawa. They met the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, myself and others in Vancouver, and most of them took the time to come to me yesterday. Most of them were from western Canada. They said, in fact, that we should proceed on the basis of the way in which we are proceeding here. They are very cautious at this time in extending additional powers. It is true that we could amend it. However, our difficulty here is that, as I am told, we cannot set the terms of reference for the courts under regulation. There is some question as to just how, in what detail, one could even establish the actions of the court in legislation. If one looks at the amendment here, a court of competent jurisdiction is to formulate the arrangement that it deems equitable under the circumstance.

I say to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert that the legislation, in my opinion, particularly with the review process that we are attaching to it, will be as effective as the Saskatchewan legislation. The only input the court would have in Saskatchewan would be that it would have the power not to formulate arrangements but, rather, to delay, as I understand it.

I ask for co-operation again to see if we cannot set this clause aside and move forward, make progress. We can get this behind us and we can be provided with an opportunity to work, in the next four to six weeks, to get it in place and allow it to operate. We can come back and review the progress at the earliest time that we have something to review. Therefore, I ask Hon. Members' co-operation in moving along with other clauses.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I want to be very brief and make only one or two quick remarks. Like the Minister, I would like the Bill to go through as quickly as possible. The Minister said something to the effect that we were very limited in what we could do, either by regulation or even, in some cases, by legislation, in so far as directions that we could give to the court are concerned. However, I want to remind Members that what we are asking in this clause is not that at all. We do not want to prescribe how the court will adjudicate the case. We only want to prescribe to the board the authority to refer it to the court. I am sure that the court can deal with this afterwards in whatever way it desires. I just wish to establish the difference for the Minister.

• (1700)

I would also like to offer the Minister a possible further amendment which may satisfy this point. I will put it forward informally for the time being and send a copy of it out in writing to the Minister sometime later. I suggest that after the word "delay" in the third sentence, the following words should be added: "after satisfying the conditions set out in the regulations". It could then set out under what circumstances the board would be able to refer the matter to the court. In other words, the board would have to be satisfied that there has been an injustice or an undue delay, as well as meeting whatever other requirements the Minister puts into regulation. In this way the Minister can make the regulations very tight if he so chooses, giving a small amount of latitude to the board to refer matters to the court. If the board requests that the Minister give it further latitude, because of situations in which it sees that it would require authority, the Minister could then loosen up some of the regulations giving additional power to the board instead of having to come back to the House and ask for a further amendment in order to do just that.

The amendment could be in the form which I have just advocated. Perhaps the Minister's officials could word it in such a way as to ensure that it would do what it is intended to do. In other words, we are trying to give more latitude to the Minister to make it as strict as he likes in order to fulfil that condition, but only so that the board can have that power when required.

I have consulted my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma with respect to this particular amendment. He is of the view, as am I, that it would further enhance the Bill. It is a watered-down version of his clause, but we believe it is a compromise with which the Minister could live. After all, he is the one who will have the final authority in terms of making the regulation. He can make it as severe or as loose as he feels is appropriate in order to allow the board to make a reference to the court under whatever conditions are prescribed in the regulations.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have anything more to add in response to the Hon. Member's advice than what I have already put forward. I have the clear sense that the issue is so sensitive that it is impossible for us to move on it at this time. I will tell the Hon. Member that if he wants to give me some latitude and do something for the farmers who will be taking advantage of this legislation, then let us move it along.

I wish to leave with the Hon. Member the message that I am not ruling this matter out forever. I think it is very important. It is also very sensitive and complex. The appropriate time for its consideration would be at the time of the review process. However, I must reject it now for all types of reasons. We will undertake to consider that aspect because, indeed, it will be the main focal point when we do the review.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I have two or three brief questions which I wish to ask of the Minister, who has worked with members of both opposition Parties assiduously and effectively to take care of most of the problem areas that we have with the Bill, with the exception of the area dealing with the courts. We heard his arguments in private yesterday, and previously, when we were attempting to redraft clauses of the Bill. I have three short questions which, if answered, would clearly set out the Minister's position.

My understanding is that at this time the Minister does not have the authority of Cabinet to permit this type of a motion. Will the Minister admit that in fact the proposal is consistent with the bankruptcy procedure being proposed by the review committee which studied this area of the law? Is it not in fact the procedure which it recommends we follow, namely, that as a last resort there be a reference to the court?

The Minister seemed to convey in one of his previous responses this afternoon that there is some concern with respect to the way the court authority will be perceived by the provinces. I am not sure I quite understand that position. Will the Minister clarify it? It seems to me that the courts in this country have always been perceived, and I think correctly, as agencies of justice which generally act on behalf of property. Since that is the generally recognized assessment of what the courts do in this country, is the Minister concerned that the courts might rule on the side of the farmer more often than on the side of the banks? Is that the problem?

My third question has to do with provincial jurisdiction. We all know that the provinces still have constitutional authority with respect to property rights and land. My Party has always defended that position. We think that is where property rights ought to remain. Given that the courts are seen as the protectors of property and generally come down on its side, I really cannot understand why the provinces would be opposed to having the board refer certain cases to a court on certain limited occasions. The provinces have jurisdiction over the land, and the courts generally favour the landed. What is the problem in terms of the provinces with respect to this rather minor, although important, amendment which would give the farmer one last attempt to have his case looked at and adjudicated by a court?

In our system of jurisprudence and in our system of Government the court is deemed to be the place where one can go when one feels that an injustice has been done. That is all this motion is concerned with. It is quite clear that it is concerned only with cases where an injustice appears to have been done and the board would then have the authority to refer.

Will the Minister very clearly spell out what the problem is since this recommendation is consistent with the bankruptcy procedure being proposed by the committee which is studying the issue? It is a recommendation that is preferred by the committee. Why is the Minister afraid of letting the matter go to the courts, in light of the fact that the courts generally favour property? What is the problem in terms of the provinces since they are responsible for property? They would simply come out as the winners in terms of this particular amendment.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, in response to the Hon. Member's questions I think there is the real possibility that if we accept this amendment then we will violate the record of decision. Because of the sensitivity involved in this respect every party and every group involved in this lengthy process from start to finish was only interested in clarification of one thing. That one thing was: Is there any legislative authority carried in this legislation which will in any way extend power to the courts or a review panel? When the question was answered negatively everyone was on our side. We went through all the steps in considering this proposal. They were quite complicated since they involve a couple of other Government Departments, and we had very close consultations with our provincial counterparts.

I would now like to move to the matter of the provinces. As Hon. Members know, flowing from the First Ministers' Conference the Prime Minister and the provincial Premiers assigned the Ministers of Agriculture the task of establishing working task forces on four or five subjects. Those task forces have been in motion and have been working hard and diligently on those special areas since January. I met with my provincial counterparts and have talked with them on a daily basis. We met specifically on two occasions, the first time in January and the next in March. As the Hon. Member can appreciate, the time we spent on farm finance occupied probably as much time as the time we spent on all of the other subjects put together.

• (1710)

At the January meeting, I wanted to make it very, very clear. I wanted to explain to my counterparts exactly where we were coming from on this piece of legislation. I wanted no mistake made and wanted to know exactly where they were going to stand. I told them that we would not move to the next item on the agenda until I knew exactly where they were coming from.

Representatives from eight of the provinces told me with no uncertainty that they would accept the route we were going. There was no way that they would have any part of a piece of legislation which extended the power of a write-down to a court or a review panel. The two provincial representatives who said they would accept that with some conditions were from the Province of Manitoba and the Province of Newfoundland. That is the score on that question.

Regarding the advisory recommendations, as Hon. Members will know, Ministers have advisory groups, boards or commissions for a great many purposes and they perform a very useful service. The advisory group to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on the Bankruptcy Act did a very useful job. A very competent individual looked at the question from an agricultural point of view and the group brought forward a recommendation.

Hon. Members will know that as a Government, we have an obligation and responsibility to study those recommendations. If we think certain recommendations are good, we accept them. Sometimes we think that others might be good as well but perhaps the timing is wrong. To answer the question, we have not accepted all of the recommendations.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the Minister of Agriculture talk about the reactions of the various provinces. The day he introduced this legislation a few weeks ago, the Saskatchewan Minister of Agriculture, when asked what he thought of the legislation, indicated that he would be examining it and if he did not find it comprehensive enough, he would stick with his own legislation. Clearly his own legislation is much more comprehensive. Under Saskatchewan law, if a deadlock occurs a review board prepares a recommendation which is sent to the court and must be given more weight than in any other province.

I would ask the Minister to recall that when he met with the Minister of Agriculture for Prince Edward Island, he pointed out to him that the banks have incredible powers and are able to put incredible pressures on farmers. For instance, many people who have worked on review boards have suggested to me that the banks often tell farmers, when their notes are due, that if they want their notes extended, the only way that can be done is by putting them on a floating rate.

There are all kinds of injustices which have become apparent to members of these review panels. Not only will they be powerless to recommend to the review board of the province that the matter be sent to a court but they will be powerless to speak of what is going on outside the panel. There is a double whammy there. A great many farmers are concerned about that.

We know that there is going to be a drastic and almost cataclysmic restructuring of farm debt for at least 8,000 or maybe 10,000 farmers or more in the next few years. Yet there is a danger that a farmer can go into the review process but get no satisfaction because the board has no power and cannot do anything when the process is over because that would contravene a clause of this Bill about communicating anything that was said or done within the review panel. It is rather like a star chamber. The farmer goes to the panel, makes his pitch and the banks sit on their hands for 60, 90 or 120 days. Then everyone is sworn to secrecy. Then the Minister's $50-million program for farm adjustment comes in, the farmer is hustled off his farm and the bank gets the farm. The farmer is out of farming probably for the rest of his life.

When the Minister said that he had across-the-board support from all provinces, he may have thought that that is what he had. It certainly does not appear to be the case from what the Minister of Agriculture for Saskatchewan has said and it certainly does not jibe with what the Minister of Agriculture for Prince Edward Island told me.

I would suggest to the Minister that he only turn to the Hon. Member for Bruce—Grey who is assisting him this afternoon to ask about what was found out in the Bruce—Grey pilot project. Those people found out that the banks made no decisions and waited out the time. After the review process was over, the banks foreclosed and did not make a very serious attempt to reach an agreement.

This amendment in the way it is drafted is not dealing with a court order or restructuring of debt. All it deals with is cases of injustice or undue delay. I would like to see a banker come before this committee this afternoon to say that he wants to be able to be unjust to a farmer who has fallen on hard times and does not want the board to have the right to refer that to a court of justice for the formulation of an arrangement that it deems equitable under the circumstances. It seems to me that there are very few bankers who are hard hearted enough to put that proposition before the committee this afternoon.

The Minister indicated that he agreed to the amendment to Clause 38 or Clause 39 provided that the entire question is referred to a committee of the House. I assume it would be the Agriculture Committee or a subcommittee of that committee. If that committee is to be struck and established next January, it might review the situation and find that this kind of amendment or something equivalent to it might be appropriate. Would the Minister give an undertaking to the House that he will seek support for such an amendment and bring it before the House, assuming that the committee that will review this Act makes such a recommendation? The Minister has already spoken several times about the idea of the review that is being proposed. I wonder if he would be willing to do that, because clearly farm organizations have been asking for this kind of legislation for some time.

Four or five years ago, I believe, the Minister served on a committee of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, and legislation much stronger than this was before the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of the House in June 1984. Legislation much stronger but similar in nature to this legislation was put before that committee two years ago. It is little wonder, since the Minister promised this legislation last July 10, that everyone was amazed that he did not get around to bringing the legislation before the House until mid-June.

• (1720)

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union, the wheat pools, and so on support the amendment which I have put forward. Could the Minister indicate whether he would be prepared to bring in an appropriate amendment, if it is recommended by the standing committee when it reviews the legislation next January or at the beginning of next year?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I want to set the record straight. I indicated that I met with my provincial counterparts in January and March. I said that two provinces would accept mandatory write-downs. Since that time there has been a change in the Government of P.E.I.

Mr. Foster: A change for the better.

Mr. Wise: In fact, I think it has some good sense as far as its approach to review legislation is concerned. It recently set up a review panel with no legal power.

Mr. Althouse: Absolutely no power at all.

Mr. Wise: That is correct. The new Government of P.E.I. is just as aware of the situation. It demonstrates understanding, appreciation, and the caution which must be exercised at this time when dealing with the issue.

The Hon. Member asked me to give a commitment now. It would be irresponsible for me to do so, not having the track record of the review boards and not having the advice of the standing committee. Who knows? More than likely the Hon. Member will be a member of the committee. I am sure he would want the committee to have the opportunity to hear witnesses. I would be anxious to receive his recommendations at that time, which I think is the only appropriate time.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Chairman, the Minister keeps suggesting that he will have the track record of the review boards before us. Unfortunately, the recommendations which might force us to make a change in the Act will have gone down the drain as far as farmers are concerned. They will not have had an extra chance.

We suggest that the Minister should include this clause now so that farmers would be given some protection rather than wait for more examples of disaster. I realize that how disasters happen might result in changes. However, farmers will not be given a second chance. In effect, the Government is condemning the first group of people who appear before these panels to being examples of how the legislation should be changed. I think we should include something to safeguard against that.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, in his comments a couple of minutes ago, the Minister suggested that the people with whom he discussed the matter wanted to be sure that review boards had absolutely no powers with regard to restructuring debt. If there are to be absolutely no powers with regard to restructuring debt, how does the Minister expect the whole system to function? Clearly that was the problem with the Grey—Bruce pilot project. It dealt with some 25 or 26 applications out of a total of approximately 90. Another problem was that the bankers sat on their hands. The FCC would not restructure their debt. The whole system stalled. Members of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and other representatives worked very hard, but there was no power of persuasion. In this piece of legislation there are no powers of persuasion. I believe that in Saskatchewan they have the power to refer the matter to a court and to recommend loan guarantees; they have some tools with which to work.

I would be interested in knowing just how the Minister expects the system to work since he said that he does not want any powers for the review panels. Obviously we are dealing with thousands of farmers. The value of their properties has dropped by as much as a third or two-thirds. There will be a drastic restructuring of debt. How does the Minister see the boards having the power to carry out this restructuring of debt when they do not have any more power than that of the Grey—Bruce pilot project and less power than that of the Saskatchewan review panels?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I do not know why anyone would want to be so pessimistic or so negative. We have talked about the process for a long time. The provinces want to move in this direction. Farm organizations want to move in this direction. The majority of farmers want to move in this direction. We know that write-downs are going on all across the country. The problem is that it is happening in St. Thomas but not in Aylmer, which is some 12 miles away. There are many inequities. It is happening in one region and not in the other; it is happening in one province and not in the other. It is a very inequitable situation. We want to put some fairness and equity into the system across the country so that regardless of where farmers live, farm, or operate, and regardless of what banks they do business with, at least there are review panels and review boards to assist on their behalf.

I have confidence in the people who will be appointed to these boards. I am encouraged by the reaction of the banking community. We cannot shut them out. We cannot throw stones at them. We need them; we need the banks. To be safe, 75 per cent of farmers are not in a financial situation to use this. The Hon. Member should not think that they are not watching us right now. Their continued success relies very heavily on access to credit from conventional lending institutions.

The other people who are watching us very closely are those farmers who are reaching retirement. It is normal for a farmer to sell his farm and take back a mortgage. That is all he has; it is his pension plan. If we extend the power of a court to write down, those farmers will sell the property but they will do so without taking back mortgages and risking their pension plans.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, the Minister knows how the system works. Anyone who appears before or serves on a panel will be sworn to secrecy. That is in the Act. What happens when panel members become aware of an injustice, for example, where a bank has deliberately switched a farmer from a flat interest rate to a floating one and charged it for three years or four years? Everyone is sworn to secrecy, so how can such an injustice be redressed? The board is sworn to secrecy, as are farmers. How does the Minister see an injustice being handled? How does the farmer get assistance or redress if the review panel cannot refer the matter to the review board and to a proper court of justice?

• (1730)

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, the best way I can answer the Hon. Member's first question is for him to give me an example. My understanding is that this would not happen, you just cannot do it. Second, the farmer is not sworn to secrecy, creditors are not sworn to secrecy. It is only the panel members who are.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that Clause 36(1) states:

> Except as authorized by subsection (2), no person shall knowingly communicate or knowingly allow to be communited to any person any information obtained from a farmer or from any creditor of a farmer under this Act or knowingly allow any person to inspect or have access to any such information.

It is my information that members of the panel are sworn to secrecy. They cannot blow the whistle, so to speak, on a lending institution which has taken part in an improper or an unjust Act against the farmer.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment (Mr. Foster) negatived: Yeas, 6; nays, 27.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 33 agreed to.

On Clause 34—General

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, we have amendments to put forward that flow from our discussion earlier. With respect to Clause 34—and I believe Hon. Members have copies and I understand the Table has copies as well—I move:

> That Clause 34 of Bill C-117 be amended:

Farm Debt Review Act

(a) by striking out lines 26 to 28 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"34.(1) notwithstanding any other provision of this Act where a farmer makes an application to a Board under Section 21 but does not enter into"

(b) by striking out line 35 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"made unless, before making the new application, the farmer obtains the written consent of the Board"

(c) by striking out lines 36 to 38 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"(2) notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, where a farmer makes an application to a Board under Section 21 and enters into an"

(d) by striking out line 44 on page 9 and lines 1 to 3 on page 10 and substituting the following:

"after the termination of the arrangement unless, before making the new application, the farmer obtains the written consent of the Board"

We have Clause 34(1) and (2), and then subclause (3) would come out, Mr. Chairman. We are amending both so that the farmer will have the right to apply for a second review panel anytime and he shall be given the second review as long as the board gives written consent. With no consent, the farmer must wait for a two year period, from the date of the application where no arrangement was reached or from the termination of the arrangement if an arrangement was reached. Previously the way it read was that the farmer had to wait for two years no matter whether or not an arrangement was reached.

We have also amended both subclauses (1) and (2) of Clause 34 to eliminate any references to applications made under Clause 16, which has to do with farmers in financial difficulty. As a result, any farmer who has applied under Clause 16 can automatically re-apply under Clause 16 or under Clause 21 at any time. As a result, we have eliminated the need for subclause (3) of Clause 34.

The Deputy Chairman: I would appreciate it if the Hon. Minister would give me a copy of the amendments please. I do not seem to have them here at the table.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, this is a good amendment. It is simpler than the one which perhaps I had given to the Chair earlier last week. It is very important that the opportunity of the farmer returning for the assistance of the review panel not be foreclosed as the present amendment provides. It seems to me that under the first provision the farmer would have to have an improved financial situation. In subclause (2) if his financial situation were much worse due to some other event, he would be able to approach the review panel for assistance in formulating a new arrangement.

Could the Minister indicate whether it is the Department's plan to provide other rules under Clause 10 as to what the circumstances under which the farmer would be able to apply, or is it just a case of a simple appeal to the board for the opportunity to have a new panel struck and to have the situation reviewed? Would there be circumstances provided under the rule-making powers which the Minister has, and under what circumstances would the board be able to apply for further assistance from a review panel?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I would think there would be a pretty wide scope if the financial condition changed rapidly one way or the other. You may have some natural disaster that may occur which could necessitate the re-application. I think it is pretty broad. We would be dealing with that under the terms of reference of the role and mandate of the responsibility of the review board. It would not be written, I understand, in a regulation. I would think it would be written in such a way as to respond in a common sense, logical way which would deem that the farmer was eligible for the application.

Amendment (Mr. Wise) agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 35 to 38 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 39—Coming into Force

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, we are proposing an amendment to Clause 39. There are a couple of other clauses to be added, but before proceeding we must move this amendment on Clause 39. It was really advanced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre. As a result of the amendment the entire Act will be proclaimed at once rather than different sections at different times. I therefore move:

That Clause 39 of Bill C-117 be amended by striking out lines 33 and 34 on page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"39. This Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed".

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to confirm what the Minister said. The three Parties agreed to this because in the original Bill the Act could be proclaimed in pieces. Since the accord reached between the three Parties was dependent upon all of the sections being proclaimed at once, this seemed to be the way to handle the matter. We are in agreement with the amendment.

Mr. Foster: We in this quarter agree as well. It is essential that the entire Act be proclaimed at once. Any amendments which have been made could easily be over-ruled if the whole Act was not proclaimed at once.

Amendment (Mr. Wise) agreed to.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I still have a little difficulty understanding why we have to do this in the way in which we have to do it. We are creating a new Clause 39 and a new Clause 40 which will result in the old Section 39 becoming Section 41. This section allows for the annual review of the activities of the Board three months after the termination of each calendar year. The review will result in a report being tabled before the committee reponsible for agriculture. Consultations have been held. I therefore move:

That Bill C-117 be amended

(a) by adding, immediately after line 32 on page 10, the following clause:

"39.(1) The Minister shall, within three months after the termination of each calendar year or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first 15 days next thereafter that either House of Parliament is sitting, lay before Parliament an annual report on the activities of the Boards established pursuant to section 4.

(2) The report laid before Parliament pursuant to subsection (1) stands permanently referred to such committee of Parliament as is established to review matters related to agriculture."

(b) by renumbering the subsequent clause accordingly.

Amendment (Mr. Wise) agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 40—

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, with this amendment we are adding a new Clause 40 at the request of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre. This causes us no difficulty at all. It allows for the effectiveness of the Act to be reviewed by the parliamentary committee responsible for agriculture and to recommend to Parliament any changes to the Act it deems necessary at the end of December, 1986. I therefore move:

That Bill C-117 be amended by adding, immediately after line 32 on page 10, the following clause:

"40. Such committee of the House of Commons as may be designated or established by the House for that purpose shall, at the end of the calendar year in which this Act comes into force, undertake a review of the overall effectiveness of this Act and shall, within such time as the House may authorize, submit a report to Parliament thereon including a statement of any changes the committee would recommend."

(b) by renumbering the subsequent clause accordingly.

Mr. Althouse: Does what used to be Clause 39 become Clause 41, which will be the last clause of the Bill? Am I correct in understanding that?

The Deputy Chairman: The answer to that is yes.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I think this clause is essential. As I said in debate earlier this afternoon, many farm oranizations feel that they have not had adequate input into this legislation because they did not have an opportunity to make presentations to the standing committee. This amendment will provide for the Act to be put before the House at the end of this calendar year and will allow for recommendations to come forward at that time from the national agricultural organizations. It is essential that it be included in the Act in order to get a complete view of the situation at that time, especially in light of the seriousness of the situation. I want to indicate my support for this amendment.

● (1750)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member for Algoma correctly pointed out that it was necessary to have a review process since the impending suspension of the sitting has made it impossible to hear from the banks, farm organizations and others who might be affected by the legislation. As well, there is very little authority in this Bill as written to encourage a settlement between the Parties. We thought it was absolutely vital to have a review process like that in the Act so that all Parties would be on their best behaviour, knowing that their attitude and actions would be reviewed within a few months. On the basis of that review, perhaps stronger legislation might be proposed. We think this might provide some moral authority to remind both the lender and others involved in the process that their actions will be reviewed and the results or lack thereof will be considered and new legislation may be proposed as a result.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can get a commitment from the Minister that the Act will come into force in 1986 and that it would be his intention to have the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. The clause does not make it clear. It says "any committee so designated". As I read this, it would take a House order to refer it to the committee. It also says that it comes into force in the calendar year in which the Act comes into force. I assume that it is going to be 1986, but I want a commitment from the Minister that that is when it will happen.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, the short answer is yes, 1986. I do not know whether I can say it would be the Standing Committee on Agriculture or not, but obviously that seems to be the appropriate standing committee.

Mr. Althouse: I have to confess to having been party to the vagueness of the wording. We had preferred to name the Standing Committee on Agriculture, but with the changes to the Standing Orders and the committees we were not certain that there would still be such a committee as of the end of the year. To be careful, we simply made it vague. We assumed that if there is such a committee it will be referred to that committee and we hope the Minister and the House Leaders would take that into account if in fact we still have standing committees in January of 1987.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, you will recall that on Friday we stood four clauses, those being Clauses 17, 18, 19 and 20. I think we are now in a position, are we not, to go back and deal with them? We are removing Clause 17, which would allow creditors to apply for a panel where the farmer had failed to pay a debt. As a result of that, we have removed Clause 18(2) which obligated the board to seek the consent of the farmer concerned before a panel would be set up. As a result, Clause 18(3) becomes Clause 18(2) and the new Clause 18(2) eliminates any reference to Clause 17. Clause 19 and Clause 20 would then remain.

Mr. Foster: I proposed this last Friday when we were in Committee of the Whole. I think a Bill like this, which is designed to assist farmers in their worst financial crisis in 50 years, could involve a very intimidating situation if the farmer were to receive suddenly a note from his friendly farm debt review board that his chartered bank had just moved to have him reviewed. At the same time he would have to give his consent under the existing clauses in the Bill. Yet what choice does he have? With this clause removed, had we succeeded in getting an amendment so that where an injustice was done to a farmer the matter could be referred to a court, we could have been pretty sure that this whole procedure would not become one to silence farmers and quietly hustle them off their land. I am not sure that we have achieved that by not accepting the amendment this afternoon, but I think that removing this clause at least removes the possibility of the farmer being hustled into a debt review situation by his friendly banker. I appreciate the Minister's action in removing this clause. It will make the Bill stronger and the farmer concerned will be able to go through the process without being forced into it by a bank.

The Deputy Chairman: Before we carry on I would like to ask: Shall Clause 40 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

On Clauses: 17—Application and 18—Appointment of review panels

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words at this time to point out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) the complications which his Bill entails concerning the administration of the Quebec Farm Credit Bureau. Contrary to what happens in the other provinces, the Quebec FCB is by far the biggest lender when compared with the federal Farm Credit Corporation. When we examine the financial statistics for 1984-85 and 1985-86 with respect to the number of cases of long-term, mid-term and short-term loans, Quebec's Farm Credit Bureau—

The Deputy Chairman: I regret—

[English]

It being six o'clock, it is my duty to rise and report progress.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, I think the Hon. Member has only a couple of points to make. I am sure that if the Minister were to seek unanimous consent to continue for another five minutes or so we could perhaps finish consideration of the clauses.

The Deputy Chairman: I must seek consent of the House.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there consent of the House not to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

FARM DEBT REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-117, an Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors—Mr. Paproski in the chair.

On Clause 17—Idem

On Clause 18—Appointment of review panels

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Chairman, I was pointing out that the way the Bill is drafted it might create major problems concerning the administration of public funds in Quebec.

I pointed out that in 1984-85 the Farm Credit Bureau had dealt with close to 9,500 applications for long- and mid-term loans, whereas the federal Farm Credit Corporation made fewer than 100 loans. A few more loans were made at the federal level in 1985-86, but most such loans came from the Quebec Farm Credit Bureau.

Given the way the review panels are established under the legislation, to a certain extent an organization created by the federal Government will administer public funds allocated by another Parliament. In other words a farm loan made—indeed since the legislation covers . . . Clause 3 states that:

This Act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province.

This means that people sitting on the review panel—I am sure the Minister will appoint qualified people—will have to make decisions concerning funds allocated by another Parliament where various organizations must report to the Quebec National Assembly.

I wanted to go on record and point out the difficulties involved with respect to the administration and the way public funds are administered, and the responsibilities given to each level of government. The situation in Quebec is particular in the sense that the Farm Credit Bureau has a role to play, much like the federal Farm Credit Corporation.

I think the Minister should have provided that when review panels are set up for loans made by an agency of a provincial government or a provincial legislative assembly, that on these review panels provided in the clauses we are now adopting or debating, with amendments, we have representatives duly appointed by the people and the administrative bodies that are responsible for administering these funds.

When the provisions of this legislation are put in effect, we can expect a considerable rise in the cost of Government administration, especially for the Office du crédit agricole, because in some cases they will have to postpone carrying out their mandate for as many as 90 or 120 days, and this will result in a considerable loss of interest and high administration costs.

I would like to ask the Minister whether he has considered these problems and whether he would be able to inform the House—I realize he really wants this Bill to be passed. I also realize that it is important for Canadians across the country and that we must find a solution to this problem. However, could the Minister perhaps inform the House and give it the assurance that the study that will be carried out, pursuant to the clause we adopted earlier, which will be an argument in favour of revising certain clauses of the Bill—that we will have a chance to put the membership of these panels on a broader basis and that the Quebec Legislative Assembly will be responsible for appointing at least some of the members of the review boards, since these are public funds approved by another parliament?

And second, could the Minister give the House the assurance that, together with his Quebec counterpart and Quebec officials, he will look into the possibility of signing a federal-provincial agreement to deal with this problem? It is a problem which I think is very important, since in Quebec, most farm loans, whether long, medium or short term, are not granted by the federal authorities but by a provincial agency which is called the Office du crédit agricole. I wonder whether the Minister could answer these questions?

• (1800)

[English]

Mr. Wise: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the Hon. Member's comments and observations regarding being very, very cautious about putting into law something here in the House of Commons that would unilaterally decree on the duly elected provincial legislature of any province. I suggest that the Hon. Member talk with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma.

Mr. Garneau: I did talk to him.

Mr. Wise: When I was responding to question after question after question about what the provincial reaction would be, the province said no. It is fine, go along with what you suggest to us, but do not extend the power of a court or a review board to unilaterally write down debt. That is why.

Mr. Garneau: That is not what I am asking.

Mr. Wise: Just a minute. Quebec is not paying the cost of the review panels. Ontario is not carrying the cost of that, the federal Government is. We are carrying that.

I do not know if the Member was here throughout the day or last Friday, but if we have a ten-man panel, I have invited our provincial colleagues to submit three names to us. That is a reasonable number to expect from a provincial Government. In addition, I said last Friday that there was an open invitation to all Members of this House to supply us with a list of names of those who would serve on review panels and also on review boards.

If the province does not want to participate as a creditor in a write down, like any other creditor, then there is no legal obligation to do so. I want to tell you that they are very, very sensitive about that.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: The Minister failed to grasp what I meant. What I am trying to say is that the funds involved where the Office du crédit agricole is concerned are not private funds. These are funds that were approved by a Parliament that happens to be the Parliament of Quebec, but it could just as well have been the Parliament of Ontario, if there is one in Ontario, but I know that is how things are done in Quebec. These funds are managed, and the Office du crédit agricole must report to the National Assembly, just as here we have parliamentary committees that meet and are supposed to report back to the House. In this particular case, a body that approves funds at the provincial level would be subject to control by a federal system, without there being any participation involved. As far as I know, there has been no federal-provincial agreement on the subject, at least for . . . I don't know about the other provinces, but I am referring to Quebec.

I was not referring to the cost of the system itself but to the cost that would be incurred by the Office du crédit agricole in complying with this request. And suppose we take, I don't know . . . How many are there? Maybe 10 per cent, 5 per cent or 8 per cent of these loans. If a 100 or 125 cases are submitted for review, obviously some very high costs will be incurred, not only by the financial institutions, in the case of private institutions that's one thing, but in the case of public institutions, there are certain regulations, and these costs, I don't know how to assess them, but if we say 5 per cent or 10 per cent, this is going to mean an enormous amount in terms of lost interest. And also in terms of additional staff requirements.

I am rather surprised that without prior federal-provincial agreement this Bill should be introduced not only to impose additional costs to the Quebec Farm Credit Bureau and to the National Assembly, but also to create a problem with respect to responsibility for expenditures by a legislative assembly which approved them and the federal Parliament which adopts legislation and tells a group which it has created: You have the mandate. This is not legally binding, of course, but it still amounts to strong pressure.

I have a question for the Minister, for I realize that we cannot expect at this stage—the Bill is to be adopted in the next few minutes—to have the file re-opened with a view to securing a federal-provincial agreement. But I did suggest and ask him to hold discussions with his colleague or with Quebec Crédit agricole authorities so see what kind of problems will be created by the administration of this Act and perhaps make the appropriate changes in the future.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson)—Finance—Transfer of family farms—Tax inquiry; The Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault)—National Revenue—Control of charitable organizations; The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand)—Challenge'86—Funding of social service projects. (b) Request that priority be given to socially useful employment.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there might be unanimous consent that we proceed immediately to third reading on Bill C-128. This would proceed quickly and we would deal with the balance of the stages of the Bill before the House in order that it can pass at all stages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just for clarification, the Hon. Member is referring to Bill C-128?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood my colleague opposite to suggest that we deal with all stages of Bill C-128 before proceeding to Private Members' Hour. That is acceptable to us. I want to indicate to those who have Private Members' business that we will be very brief, a matter of minutes, in dealing with Bill C-128.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that my speech will last less than one minute.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, could I just have an indication from the New Democratic Party about how long their spokesperson will take?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that our spokesperson will be relatively brief, probably seconds.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to proceed through all stages of Bill C-128?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

JUDGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-128, An Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in relation to judicial matters, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the Chair.

On Clause 1

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I will use Clause 1 to make a brief statement, indicating that this is really a housekeeping Bill. We are providing for the unification of courts in a number of provinces, following the example of provinces like Quebec, which have long since taken this progressive step.

I only want to indicate that I hope that now that my own Province of Ontario has a progressive Government, we will shortly see the Province of Ontario apply for a similar unification of its courts.

The other matters referred to in the legislation speak for themselves and I can say on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition that we support the Bill.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

PRESENTATION OF SEVENTH REPORT OF JOINT STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I spoke to members of all Parties on the subject of reverting, by unanimous consent, to the tabling of committee reports, to permit me, as co-chairman of the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, to present our seventh report in both official languages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE BUDGET

ADVISABILITY OF REDUCING NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to require the government to present an annual budget in which total annual outlays do not exceed total annual receipts and such total receipts will exclude those derived from borrowing and total outlays will exclude those for interest costs on the national debt and for repayment of the debt principal.

● (1820)

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is really quite an honour to speak tonight on this Private Member's Motion of mine, M-86. It was first placed on the Order Paper on December 20, 1985. In the few minutes allotted to me, I want to speak briefly of the background and gravity of this problem, of Canada's record in terms of deficits, the ever increasing national debt of this country, of our Government's achievements so far to turn the situation around and what some other countries are doing, for instance, the United States of America, and then summarize my thoughts and views on the subject. I think we must all attach extreme gravity to the situation. Indeed, we must come to realistic grips with this ever-widening gap of spending compared to what we have been taking in.

I have had numerous discussions with my constituents in Don Valley East and, almost to a person, they are supportive of this type of resolution. Let me just make a few points, because the problem is not unique to Canada. I think it is accurate to say that all levels of government have overspent. Taxpayers are simply fed up and frustrated with the track record, if I could put it that way, of a number of politicians around this world in terms of the lack of prudent thinking and lack of restraint in the spending of their precious tax dollars.

For longer than most voters and most western democracies can remember, one of life's certainties has been the reckless spending by so many governments. Government spending has been increasing for too long as a percentage of Gross National Product. In 1960, for instance, only two countries belonging to the OECD had spending in excess of one-third of their Gross National Product. However, 25 years later, in 1985, 23 out of 24 countries in that organization were spending in excess of one-third of their GNP. In fact, the average was 45 per cent, and it varied from 31 per cent in Switzerland to 64 per cent in Sweden.

Let us examine Canada's record in that respect, and I will return to the last year in which we could boast of a surplus, the year 1969-70, when a surplus of $331 million was recorded. Let me just highlight the fact that the total national debt at that time was slightly under $18 billion. In 1971-72, we went through the $1 billion annual deficit figure, hitting $1.5 billion. In 1975-76, we went through the $5 billion figure, hitting $5.7 billion. In 1977-78, we soared through the $10 billion annual deficit level, and by that time our national debt had climbed to $48.3 billion. In 1982-83, we hit $27.6 billion. In 1983-84, we went through the $30 billion level at $32.4 billion. In 1984-85, a projection was some $38.2 billion, which would have been the case if, indeed, the Government had not changed hands and the Conservative Government had not taken some extreme action which I will recapitulate in a few moments.

It is interesting to point out that if one follows that track record of excessive spending well beyond our means for over a decade, one finds there is a correlation between that and the drop of our Canadian dollar. When that overspending started a decade or so ago, our dollar was something like $1.05 versus the U.S. dollar, and it has slid, year by year, to a level now of some 72 cents. The interest cost now totals some $24 billion or $25 billion a year to service the massive national debt of some $220 billion or $230 billion. That interest cost now, on an annual basis, amounts to $1,024 for every man, woman and child in this country of Canada.

Our spending, as a percentage of GNP, was some 16.6 per cent in 1974-75, at the start of our real problem, and it soared to 45 per cent in 1984-85. Had we let the status quo remain intact, and had this spending pattern continued, we project it would have reached an alarming level of 63 per cent of GNP by 1990-91; but, indeed, the Government has taken several major initiatives to try to turn the situation around.

In November of 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made a very comprehensive economic statement of what was to happen over the next few years, and some savings of $4 billion were identified at that time. The Budget in May of 1985 was another landmark in the direction of fiscal restraint, and it was followed by the Budget of February 26, 1986, when again, the annual deficit was forecast to decrease below the $30 billion level. Discretionary spending was decreased to under 3 per cent. Then, of course, another major initiative came to the reporting stage just a few months ago. I refer to the Nielsen task force. I believe some 989 projects of the Government were reviewed in great detail by a number of private sector people and others. Many people, including myself, are expecting great savings of taxpayers' dollars when the individual committees consider the various options and recommendations within the group.

Let me summarize. By now, most people have heard of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Bill in the United States. It was signed into law by President Reagan on December 12, 1985. It is calling for a balanced Budget by 1991. There are some exceptions, but it is basically now taking it out of the politicians' hands because of the pattern that we have seen, because of the lack of discipline that has been enjoyed, and it is putting it in the hands of a mechanism which triggers cuts to be made in defence and other areas if these predescribed levels of spending are not met.

I do believe what our Government has achieved since September, 1984, is of real significance, but it is a mammoth task. Concerning almost every issue we touch, one witnesses kicking and screaming and objections from the other side of the House. This has been the case whether involving transfer payments that we were proposing to increase from $65 billion to $90 billion over the next few years, or involving other areas, because society is so organized these days in terms of constituency groups. Therefore, it is difficult indeed to cut back. I happen to think, as much as I regret saying it, that we need that type of mechanism in this country, literally taking a fair amount of the decision out of the politicians' hands and putting it into legislation. If we just think back into our own lives, and through reading history, we realize that one of the paramount virtues voters expected of their parliamentarians was prudent, careful, conscious, deliberate action in terms of the spending of those precious tax dollars.

I do not think we can be proud in this country, thanks largely to the record that was set up by the previous Government, of what has happened. It is now too large to turn around in a discretionary way. I would urge my colleagues on both sides of the House to vote "yes" when this particular motion comes to that vote. I am honoured that this particular motion is the first Private Members' Motion under parliamentary reform to be chosen for voting. In other words, it will receive up to five hours of debate. It is certainly worthy of that type of earnest debate so that Canadians can become more aware of the real gravity of the situation and why, indeed, it needs legislative action to turn it around and to brighten that outlook and future for Canadians so that we will have some manoeuvrability involving much-needed social programs, whether in health care or education.

We owe it not only to our children but to our grandchildren to turn this around in a meaningful way. I predict that if we can do this, it will be one of the most difficult but rewarding tasks we undertake, not only of the last 25 years but of the last century. It is of that gravity.

I hope to be speaking to this Bill again. However, if it does come to a votable situation shortly, I hope that all Members will join with me in voting in favour of having it referred to a committee where it will receive extensive deliberation. Several weeks ago I visited Senator Gramm in his office in Washington. He is an economist who worked on the details of his Bill, in conjunction with his other colleagues, for over four years. I know that in a few hours we will not be able to put together in this House, or in committee, anything of that nature, because it is a very complex situation. However, we should not let the complexity of it stand in the way of solving this most serious problem.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to rise tonight to add my views to the debate on this interesting issue. I have a great deal of respect and admiration for my hon. friend who has introduced this motion. However, I suspect this is where we depart on some philosophical differences.

It is appropriate to remind Hon. Members that there was really only one Government in Canada that for many years balanced its books. It was a Government which felt that running a fiscally-responsible Government was appropriate. While it inherited a mess left by past Liberal Governments, it said: "We think it is useful that after we care for the needs of the people in our province and provide the necessary support and stimulus to the sectors of the economy that we attempt to balance our books". That Government did that year after year and, in a sense, decade after decade. I refer to the Government of Tommy Douglas of the Province of Saskatchewan, a CCF and New Democratic Government. I say that it was the only Government in Canada that for years and years was debt-free. I wish to place that on the record so that we can understand the partisan importance of this particular motion.

I also wish to remind my hon. friend that the biggest proponent of this particular initiative is President Reagan. We do not necessarily want to accept what the President says. However, more important, we do not want to see what he does. If we were to add up all of the deficits in the United States over the last 200 years, including the deficit which came out of the Civil War, the First World War, the Second World War, the Korean War, and back to the Depression, we would see that the deficit of President Reagan in his eight years of administration will mount up to twice the accumulated United States deficit over the last 200 years. So when this individual says that he is concerned about the deficit and plans to take action against it, his actions betray exactly the opposite behaviour.

The motion of my colleague reflects a view of Government in which people see Government as something based on the same principles as the Chrysler Corporation. Their point of view is that Government ought to be run as a corporation is run, with success or failure being determined on the basis of quarterly balance sheets. In other words this motion says that if a Government can balance its books, then it is a good Government. In my estimation, that really misses the point.

Government is not a private profit-maximizing institution. In fact, it has the responsibility to maintain general economic and socially favourable conditions in a country. In many cases a Government has the duty to intervene in the economy if such an initiative will encourage economic growth and prosperity.

This is a very hard lesson for Canada and other countries to learn. It was born out of the experiences of the Great Depression. At that time the traditional laissez-faire economics which prevailed suggested that when there was an economic downturn, government spending should be cut back. At that time it was thought that the duty of Government was to reduce its spending to match the reduced revenues which come in during difficult economic times. We saw that as the Depression persisted, unemployment rose and economic and social conditions worsened.

It was in 1936 that John Maynard Keynes wrote his General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money. In it he proposed that left to itself, the market economy would settle into permanent recession or depression. He proposed that the State pick up the slack and run a deficit where necessary to inject the needed purchasing power into the economy. President Roosevelt of the United States listened carefully to what Keynes had to say. In a sense Roosevelt followed many of Keynes' theories in terms of his initiatives and the economy of the United States started to turn around. The country of Sweden listened to Mr. Keynes and applied many of his theories prior to those written in 1936. As a result the depression in Sweden was relatively minimal. The conditions in that country were not as oppressive as they were in most other western industrialized nations.

The biggest Keynesian experiment was World War II when the Government had to borrow massively to finance the war effort. Consequently, the economy boomed and unemployment fell dramatically. The question I would put to my hon. friend is this. Would he have advocated in such circumstances that the Government not borrow to invest in the productive capacity to win the war in this case?

The post World War II era shows us that successive Governments have used short-term deficit spending to combat periodic bouts of unemployment and depressed economic conditions. However, in 1975 the government began experiencing consistent budget deficits. Why was this? I suggest that since 1975 the economy grew more slowly. As a result, more payments were required in the form of unemployment insurance and welfare. Of course, fewer revenues came into the federal government coffers as a result of taxes paid that would reflect a strong economy when exactly the reverse was happening. There were difficult economic times which resulted in fewer taxes.

As a result, at this time the federal Government introduced a wide-ranging set of tax expenditures. I call them tax loopholes for generalized descriptive purposes. In 1983 Mr. Lalonde said in his Budget: "The increased federal deficit over the second half of the 1970s was not due to runaway expenditure growth. It was due in large part to a succession of tax cuts introduced in response to weak economic activity". On a number of occasions the Economic Council of Canada has confirmed this eroding tax base and, consequently, fewer and fewer dollars come in as a result.

In my closing comments I wish to say that we are not suggesting that deficits are good. We are not suggesting that the present state of affairs in this country is not something about which to be very concerned. We have to be careful that we do not move ahead blindly, not recognizing the responsibility that we have as parliamentarians. The Government must accept the responsibility that when times are tough an investment might be required. After all, any good businessman knows that to make money one has to invest money.

In order to have a strong economy, we may have to invest a certain number of dollars in the development of transportation systems, ports, in assisting small business and farmers to get into new ventures and so on. In other words, there is a time for the Government to invest in a way that would result in economic prosperity and growth. Consequently, additional revenues through personal, sales, excise and corporate tax could be raised as a result to pay for that growth.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Let the private sector do it.

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend says that we should let the private sector do it. In many cases I would quite frankly say, yes, let the private sector do it. However, the private sector often calls on us to build new ports, to assist in shipbuilding, to assist farmers and to assist small business. I can go on and on. That is what we do all the time in this House. We do what we can in our own way to assist the various sectors of the economy to enable them to get out, to grow and to expand.

Mr. Orlikow: How much did it cost to build a railway to the coal mines?

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend mentions the building of the railway to the coal mines in western Canada. That is a good example of public expenditures used to provide an environment in which certain elements of the private sector could get on and do their jobs.

• (1840)

In summary, I have three quick points to make. We often hear that the deficit has resulted in inflation. We have seen inflation decrease and decrease over the last number of years. It has gone to the lowest it has been in many years, yet the deficit remains at these excessively high levels. There does not seem to be that correlation that we have been told exists.

We are also told that deficits result in high interest rates as there is a crowding out in the money markets. Governor Bouey himself said many times at Finance Committee meetings that in his opinion, the deficit of Canada was not crowding out money on the money market to force up interest rates. We know who sets interest rates in Canada. We match the rates in the United States as a result of Bank of Canada policy.

Last, it is suggested that deficits often result in a real interest burden. I would like to suggest that in the last few years, real interest rates have in fact been a problem. As a matter of fact, real interest rates traditionally run at about 2 per cent but in the last number of years, as Hon. Members know, they have been running at 5 per cent and 6 per cent.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): That's too high.

Mr. Riis: Indeed it is too high. I would remind my colleagues that if they wish to look at an example of a political jurisdiction that has met the needs of its constituents at the same time as it balanced its budgets for decades, they should look at the Province of Saskatchewan under the leadership of T. C. Douglas who was a Member of the then CCF and now New Democratic Party. If we are looking for models, may I suggest that Hon. Members look at the economic history of that part of Canada. They will see what a real Government concerned with real fiscal responsibility is able to accomplish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion standing in the name of Mr. Attewell. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PAROLE ACT AND PENITENTIARY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or order. I understand the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) intends to speak to this piece of legislation but she has a very important and pressing engagement this evening. I would be pleased to set aside my opportunity, allowing the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood to make her submissions. I will then continue with my remarks if I have the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. In that the Hon. Member spoke for three hours the other night, I would think possibly he would agree to the passage of this Bill this evening if we agree to the Hon. Member having the floor. I think we require the permission of the Hon. Member to have third reading this evening.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I understand correctly, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) is agreeable to giving the floor to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) realizing that to be recognized again he will need the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the Member wishes unanimous consent now to have the floor after the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has spoken?

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, that violates the rules of the House of Commons. I have always considered myself to be a fair person. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) spoke for three hours the other night. Therefore, I think it is only fair that he can have the floor after the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has spoken provided the Bill has third reading this evening.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that argument stands. Members here are free to speak and this is the place to speak. Whether the Member spoke for three hours or did not speak is irrelevant to this discussion. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood has an important engagement. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) out of generosity proposes to step aside allowing the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood to make her speech. He will then resume his remarks. I cannot see any difficulty with that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think after consideration of the matter that the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) makes sense. I think you would find a disposition for the Hon. Member to give precedence to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to speak first. At such time as she has completed making her contribution to the Bill we would be prepared to return to the Hon. Member for York South—

Weston. I think if you seek unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, you will find it is there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) to yield the floor to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) following which the Hon. Member for York South—Weston will be recognized?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Hon. Members opposite and the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) for giving me an opportunity to speak on this important subject of gating. I want to begin in a more general way by looking at how we Canadians have the problem with which we are faced. We have to look at the question of gating within the context of security we seek for society.

People often forget that in Canada we are extremely fortunate because we do not have a high crime rate and we do not have a high rate of violent crime. We do, however, have a very high rate of punishment. We send a large number of people to prison compared to other countries, far more than western European countries and we send them to prison for very long periods of time. Part of this, I suspect, is the influence of television. Canadians think we have far more of a crime problem than we actually do and think we have far more violent crime than we actually do. People see so much in fictitious situations on television which is largely American television. It is perhaps an exaggeration for American society but it is even more of an exaggeration for our society. We have this context of fear with which people approach the subject.

We have people saying we need these new tough measures. They are not new tough measures. They are very old measures, measures of repression that we have got away from and instituted a rule of law which is better. Yet people think we need these extremely severe measures to deal with our crime problem, exaggerating the nature of that crime problem and the extent of violence in our own society. A number of extremely important organizations and experts on the subject have intervened and have given us the benefit of their advice. I would like to begin with the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies.

The Elizabeth Fry Society is well known for its work in the field of dealing with prisoners and for making recommendations to Government as to the design of a safe system for society and a humane system, one that achieves a reasonable balance. I happen to be a member of the Canadian Elizabeth Fry Society. I cannot say I am an active member but I support its work whole-heartedly. I want to quote from the brief it prepared to intervene on Bill C-67. It is strongly opposed to these measures:

"The measures proposed in Bill C-67 to protect society, however, are far too sweeping, offend principles of fundamental justice, and provide no assurance that violence will be reduced. The measures do not address the roots of the problem of violence but rather, at best, are likely to more than delay future violence by a few prisoners, while unreasonably unjustly extending the loss of liberty of many.

That is a fundamental criticism of this Bill. It will result in some people remaining in prison for a longer period of time. However, not indefinitely. Let us not be under any illusion that this will lock up dangerous people, that the key will be turned and they will never get out again. Most prisoners are eventually released into society. This means people will be released after many years, not necessarily in any more fit state to be returned to society and not necessarily prisoners who might cause further violence.

There are no assurances this Bill will make any one Canadian any safer than we are without this legislation.

Let me turn to another criticism voiced by the Elizabeth Fry Societies:

Bill C-67 would give new powers to the Parole Board to place a detention order on certain prisoners until warrant expiry, or until the order is lifted. These powers will effectively change the role of the Parole Board to a detaining body, which we normally leave to courts which ensure due process, from that of a releasing body.

That is one of the fundamental objections which the NDP has to this Bill. It is giving powers to the Parole Board that ought properly to be exercised by a court of law with all of the protections for the accused in a court of law, a procedure that we have developed over the years. The next criticism reads:

The fact that the Parole Board would be able to use this detaining power in relation to anticipated rather than actual behaviour, based on criteria contained in Regulations which are themselves broad and which can be amended without parliamentary scrutiny, make the provision particularly offensive to existing traditions of due process within the Canadian criminal justice system. It is likely that the new provision will also be found to contravene Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

That is a very serious objection that has been raised, the possibility that the courts of our country, up to the Supreme Court of Canada, would find this legislation to be contrary to the Charter of Rights. There is a substantial reason for them so doing. The Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies is supportive in principle of the proposal that all prisoners be reviewed for conditional release by the date of day parole eligibility, as a way of accelerating the release of prisoners who do not pose a threat to society. I heartily endorse that recommendation as well. We are sending too many people to prison, people who are not risks to Canadian society. We keep them there at enormous expense. We do not provide more security for Canadians, but it costs taxpayers a great deal of money. The association's recommendation is a very eminently sensible one.

• (1910)

Also the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies has a number of objections to the proposed detention order. They relate to the arbitrary, illogical, and broad list of schedule offences to be used to identify prisoners who will automatically be considered for a detention order. The list is broad, and that is reason for the objection. Also they relate to the power to extend loss of liberty on the basis of a belief about future behaviour, predictions about which are not much better than guesswork, rather than a court adjudicated criminal conviction.

This is one of the most serious objections to the legislation. This would mean people would spend time in prison, not on the basis of what they have done, which we agree is grounds for detaining people, but on the basis of a guess in terms of what they might do in the future. This is fundamentally contrary to our criminal justice system which has evolved over the years. That system includes a protection against this kind of abuse of power. This is a backward step. It is returning to abuses which we like to think we got away from.

Another objection relates to the absence of due process in the manner in which the review and decision will be made, such as lack of prior full disclosure of information to the prisoners, and inclusion of substantive matters in regulation rather than in law. Clearly there will not be full disclosure to prisoners. Of course there is a possibility that they will be detained on matters which are not subject to parliamentary scrutiny and can be changed without Parliament having anything to say about it. In fact they are very broad and very vague. This is entirely contrary to our notions of justice. People should be in prison only if they have violated a specific offence. Another specific objection relates to the erosion of the earned remission program and the principles upon which it is based.

What has happened is that we have very long sentences in Canada. In fact, they are becoming longer. One of the reasons sentences are so long is the provision for earned remission called "good time off". Judges know that there is a possibility or a very likely probability that a prisoner will get this time off or a good proportion of it. Of course it is a carrot to the prisoner to be well behaved in prison because of the fear of loss of this good time. It is clearly an incentive to good behaviour. Judges know that prisoners will likely be getting out a substantial period before the end of the sentence ordered. As a result they make the sentence longer, expecting that a normal prisoner will have earned at least a substantial amount of that time off, if not all of it. Therefore, penalties are adjusted accordingly.

We have had this process, and we have seen sentences becoming longer. Here we have a provision which will keep people in prison for the period judges expected they would otherwise be out and gave them a longer sentence than would have been considered appropriate under the circumstances of the case.

Also the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies opposed the "one-chance" mandatory supervision provision whereby revoked prisoners who were originally convicted of a schedule offence, or one of the listed offences, would not be released again until the expiry of their warrant, thus losing existing and future remission. This means that these people will not have an incentive to good behaviour in that period. It also means making an extremely important decision at one point in time when the person might change subsequently. I think it suggests something very nasty about human nature. It suggests that we cannot have hope that people will change or reform. Surely our society is based upon an understanding that people change and grow. That possibility should be allowed for. Instead what we have is the "one-chance" provision. If that chance is missed, no matter how much a person changes nor what experiences the person may have, he or she has missed it. It seems as if that is extremely arbitrary and reflects a very nasty understanding of human nature.

According to the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies, this appears to be a further sweeping, arbitrary, unfair measure, particularly given that it would be applied against prisoners revoked whether for the commission of a criminal offence or for a technical reason. We must understand that persons could lose their time under mandatory supervision, not because they committed a crime but because they violated some rule. This is blatantly unjust and cannot be supported, given the wide range of behaviour which could be involved. It could be a fairly trivial matter which caused the breach. It need not have been a serious matter.

Mandatory supervision has become a scapegoat for the crime problem in Canada. By focusing on an ever-restrictive mandatory supervision program, we continue to avoid the key questions which must be addressed if violent or dangerous crime is to be effectively combated. Human and financial resources must be directed toward relieving those conditions which create or contribute to the development of violent or dangerous people. That is the only way in which we will achieve any kind of security in society. It is not by longer and longer sentences for people who will eventually be released when their sentences come up. Very few people actually die of old age in prison; most people are eventually released. The way in which to achieve security is to attack violent and dangerous behaviour. For example, we have the need for stronger measures to deal with pornography and the need to get at the root of conditions which encourage violent behaviour.

These are the constructive things we can do. We are not helpless in the face of violent crime. There are many things which Parliament can do. There are many things which we as a society can do. However, they must be constructive things which get to the heart of the problem. We should not simply fool around with it to give an impression to the public that we care about security and that we are trying to do something in that regard, when in fact we are not, when in fact we will just build more prisons and lock up more people for longer periods of time. That will not solve the problem.

As well, the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies called for the abolition of mandatory supervision in the past because it believed that it undermined the purpose of earned remission and because supervision could only be effective if it was voluntary. It does not support this type of piecemeal, arbitrary demolition. The association wants a better system, not the backward step which the Bill before us proposes.

Over all we would hope that Parliament would not proceed with this legislative package because it cannot be expected to provide a genuine increase in the long-term safety of Canadian society and will only exacerbate the misconceptions and problems which it purports to address. That is what is so very fundamentally wrong with the piece of legislation before us.

I have quoted fairly extensively from the excellent brief of the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies. I should like to add that the John Howard Society also made quite important and quite useful submissions on the same matter. The board of the John Howard Society of Kingston felt that it was important to offer its support to the accelerated release of low-risk inmates. It certainly felt that Canada incarcerated far too many people and for far too long. It also indicated that removing people from the community did little to improve their ability to function in the community. It supported efforts to provide real alternatives to incarceration.

This is what the people who know the most about the subject are telling us. They are telling us not to move in that direction. They are telling us to empty prisons of low-risk people and non-violent offenders. Also they are telling us to attack the real roots of the problem. Many experts have made the statement that these measures will not protect society. Underlying these measures is the presumption that we can predict who is likely to be dangerous. However, social science research and the experiences of the National Parole Board to date indicate that the ability to predict dangerousness is non-existent. I am afraid that is all too true. Hundreds and hundreds of studies have shown that psychiatrists cannot predict, judges cannot predict, and Parole Boards cannot predict. I might add that a person's conduct in an institution is not an indication of what he will do after release. We have people who violate the rules and lose their good time, but that is not an indication they are bad risks afterwards. Conditions inside a prison and outside are very different. We set up the system using criteria from inside a prison to prevent people who are not necessarily the worst risks at all from getting out. We do not know who the worst risks are. I think it is fraudulent for Parliament to pass a Bill purporting to say that we will keep the high risk persons in prison, have experts decide whether or not they should be released, and as a result provide security. Experts cannot make those predictions. Psychologists have been trying for more than 100 years to make these kind of predictions and have not been able to do it successfully.

It is also important to ask ourselves whether keeping a "dangerous person" in prison until his warrant expiry date will even begin to deal with the problem of crime and violence. In the time between mandatory supervision and the warrant expiry date will that person become any less dangerous, whatever that means? What we can say for certain is that we will keep people in jail for longer periods of time, and that will contribute to the overcrowding problem and create further hostile feelings among the prisoners about the system. Clearly that is not what we want. We have overcrowded prisons already. The staff who have to deal with them already have enough problems on their hands. This is just another problem because it removes one of the incentives to good behaviour. Neither will it provide us with any security afterwards. The John Howard Society suggests it will likely increase violence in prisons. It suggests that we look at the history of mandatory supervision and remission. Prior to 1971 there was no mandatory supervision. Prisoners were released as a result of remission with no form of supervision. Remission has been a part of the system for nearly 100 years. It has been a method of giving an incentive to people to behave in prison. It has served that function. Here we risk losing that.

The Canadian Council on Social Development has made interventions. Its proposals are constructive. It cares about the security of Canadians. It comes up with a list of recommendations for action, projects in the family, the community and the school. It wants to see implementation of family violence intervention programs, improved child care services, respitory care programs for single parents when they are not available, special programs to counteract the negative effects of family violence, positive parenting programs, community programs. All kinds of methods are at our disposal which will reduce the root causes of violence. They will work positively towards creating a more secure society.

In conclusion I simply want to say that this legislation is a fraud. It cannot do what it purports to do. It is falsely based and we have to go back to square one. We have to go back to positive measures to deal with violence and we should not be offering this illusion that more prisons and keeping people in them longer will provide anyone with any greater measure of security.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to continue my submissions on Bill C-67. I would first like to thank the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for her submissions. I listened very carefully to what she had to say and I must admit that I concur almost completely.

I would like to comment briefly on the history of this Bill and how the Government is dealing with it. Here we are at 7.25 p.m. on the day before the House adjourns for the summer. We have been sitting around on this legislation for over a year. I spoke on it last Wednesday evening. One would have thought, given the pronouncements of the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) over the last year, that he would bring this Bill back for debate the following day. When he spoke on Wednesday evening he indicated it was an important piece of legislation and that it was absolutely essential that it be passed as quickly as possible. Why then did he not bring it back on Thursday morning? The Government decided instead to go to other legislation, notwithstanding the pronouncements regarding the importance of this legislation.

The Bill deals with the concept of mandatory supervision. The guts of the Bill concern giving authority to the National Parole Board to decide whether or not an inmate should remain incarcerated until his or her warrant expiry. I indicated last Wednesday that the Official Opposition is generally supportive of the thrust of the legislation. In fact, the previous Liberal Government introduced a Bill similar in nature. However, we do have a number of concerns, the major one being who should have the discretion to decide whether or not a detention order should be issued concerning a particular inmate. Under the present legislation, an inmate, after serving two-thirds of his or her sentence, is entitled to be released if he or she has been of good behaviour. Inmates can also be released on day parole after serving one-sixth of their sentence. The inmate would be released in the morning and return to the institution at night. The National Parole Board must conclude that the inmate is not a threat to society and that he or she is deserving of release on a daily basis.

An inmate is also entitled to apply for full parole after serving one-third of his or her sentence, and the same considerations apply when the National Parole Board is deciding whether or not to release an inmate after he has served one-third of his or her sentence.

There are those who are incarcerated in penitentiaries who are not released on day parole and who are not released on full parole, at least at the earliest eligibility date. There are those who are refused parole at first instance, but at some subsequent time re-apply for parole and are granted parole. There are those, however, who are not granted parole at all. These are inmates who, the National Parole Board decides, are a threat to society, or who have not conducted themselves in an appropriate fashion while incarcerated. They are forced, under the present legislation, to serve two-thirds of their sentence. After serving two-thirds of their sentence the inmate is released on condition. There are conditions attached to mandatory supervision, such as that the inmate might be required to remain in a particular community, or might not be permitted to associate with certain individuals or groups of individuals. The inmate might be required to report to the police or some other correctional authority on a weekly or daily basis.

It is important to note that under mandatory supervision once an inmate is released after serving two-thirds of the sentence there is a period of supervision. There is a period within which the authorities can exercise some form of control over the inmate. It is important that there be a period of time within which the necessary authorities can try to assist the inmate in rehabilitating himself or herself to assist the inmate in trying, once again, to lead a law-abiding life.

You can understand how important it is that there be a period of supervision, especially when an inmate has served a lengthy period of time. Let us take for example an inmate who has served 12 years in a penitentiary, who has been refused day parole, who has been refused full parole, and who is released on mandatory supervision. For 12 years this particular individual has been behind bars, has not had the opportunity to carry on a life that is law abiding, does not have the opportunity to do day-to-day things that we often take for granted. These might include such things as going to the corner grocery store and purchasing some goods or groceries and making change, for example. If you serve 12 years in a federal penitentiary, it is a different world out there when you go out and try to assimilate back into society.

Mandatory supervision is a way of trying to assist individuals, of keeping an eye on inmates who are released by way of conditions. This particular concept of mandatory supervision was introduced in 1970. Now we have had 16 years of experience with regard to mandatory supervision, and while the whole concept is well intentioned and was considered to be a tremendous step in the right direction in terms of correctional philosophy and practices, we have found over the last 16 years that there are, indeed, problems associated with regard to mandatory supervision.

Many of the problems are perceived. Society generally is concerned about the release of inmates, and there have been a number of celebrated cases which have received considerable publicity, causing the public to call into question the area of mandatory supervision. Not only did the public question mandatory supervision, but they also started to question parole, not necessarily understanding the distinction between the release of inmates on mandatory supervision and the release of inmates on parole.

So, in effect, any of the shortcomings associated with mandatory supervision in a certain respect tainted the otherwise more successful parole system that exists in Canada.

We have had a number of cases over the last number of years that have caused considerable concern in the community. The Clifford Olson case, if I am correct, was one such case where the individual was released on mandatory supervision. There was a case about a year and a half ago where an individual, after serving a lengthy period of time in a federal penitentiary, was released on mandatory supervision and while out in society on mandatory supervision that particular individual committed a number of other murders. There was a great deal of concern in the community, so it was felt that the concept of mandatory supervision, as we know it, had to be amended in order to give the authorities—and I use that term loosely—more discretion to decide whether or not an inmate should be released.

Last Wednesday I referred to a discussion paper entitled "Mandatory Supervision", which was a report of the committee on mandatory supervision dated March 9, 1981. The Solicitor General of the time decided that it was important for his Department to study the whole concept of mandatory supervision.

It is a rather extensive report, and I commend it to Hon. Members opposite who have an interest in this whole area. I notice there are a number of Members opposite who are keenly interested in this particular debate. I know that at committee a great number of Members expressed an interest in this particular area. It begins with an introduction and a summary of mandatory supervision. It goes into the terms of reference which initiated this particular study. It speaks generally of the study itself. It reaches certain conclusions to which I would like to refer a little later on. The report was published under the authority of the Hon. Bob Kaplan, former Solicitor General of Canada. The authors also looked into the history and objectives of mandatory supervision. They looked at the origins of mandatory supervision, the implementation of mandatory supervision, and the history of the legislative changes over the last 30 or 40 years or so. They made an in depth examination of the objectives of the MS program. They also compiled a number of statistics, which are very essential in considering this whole area. I would like to refer to those statistics, if I might, at this point in time.

They compared the difference between mandatory supervision and parole over a five-year period, in January of 1975 to December, 1979. At page 18 of this particular report they indicate the number of parole and mandatory supervision releases in 1973, 1974 and 1975.

• (1940)

The House will recall that last Wednesday the Solicitor General introduced third reading of Bill C-67. He indicated at the time that this particular legislation with regard to detention orders would only apply to a handful of inmates in federal penitentiaries. I believe the figure he used was approximately 100.

In order to keep the discussion in context, I think it is important to understand that we are only dealing here with approximately 100 individuals on an annual basis.

In 1973, there were 1,780 inmates who were released on mandatory supervision. In 1974, that number went up to 2,382, and in 1975, to 2,431. It is important to compare the number of releases on mandatory supervision with the number of releases on parole, and we are speaking of full parole. As I indicated, in 1973, there were 1,780 inmates released on mandatory supervision, compared with 1,191 who were released on parole. The comparative figures for 1974 are 2,382 released on mandatory supervision, and 1,359 released on parole. In 1975, 2,431 inmates were released on mandatory supervision, compared with 1,264 who were released on parole.

This tells us a number of things but, unfortunately, we do not have up to date statistics with regard to this particular matter. First, in that three year period, the number of inmates released on mandatory supervision increased on an annual basis from 1,780 to 2,382 to 2,431. On the other hand, the number of those released on full parole went up from 1,191 to 1,359, and back down to 1,264. Obviously, fewer inmates are released on full parole than are released on mandatory supervision.

Let us return to the figures for 1973. There were 1,780 released, of when 234 inmates had their mandatory supervision revoked without committing a new offence. In other words, they somehow breached a condition of mandatory supervision and for that reason 234 of the 1,780 were brought back into penitentiary because of a revocation without committing a new offence. That amounts to 13.1 per cent who were brought back.

Of the 1,780 inmates released, 445 of those inmates, or 25 per cent, had their mandatory supervision revoked with a new offence. This means that while free on mandatory supervision, they committed a new offence contrary to the Criminal Code of Canada and were reincarcerated.

Of the 1,780 who were released in 1973, exactly 1,100 inmates, or 61.8 per cent, completed their mandatory supervision successfully. In 1973, a full 61.8 per cent completed the supervision period successfully and up until the time of the warrant expiry.

Let us examine the figures for 1974. There were 251 inmates who had their mandatory supervision revoked for breaching conditions that were attached to mandatory supervision. That represents 10.5 per cent. Six hundred and sixteen, or 25.9 per cent had their mandatory supervision revoked because of the commission of a new offence. There were 1,506 of the 2,382 who successfully completed their supervision.

In 1975, of the 2,431 inmates who were released on mandatory supervision, 329, or 13.5 per cent, had their mandatory supervision revoked without committing a new offence. Six hundred and twenty-three, or 25.6 per cent, had their mandatory supervision revoked for committing a new offence. One thousand four hundred and seventy-seven inmates, or 60.8 per cent, successfully completed their period of supervision.

It is interesting to note from these very limited statistics that over the course of this three year period, the figure with respect to those who successfully completed their period of mandatory supervision remained somewhat constant—from 61.8 per cent, to 63.2 per cent, to 60.8 per cent. I suggest that if we had more complete statistics, that particular experience would have continued since 1975, over the course of the last 11 years. There will always be about 60 per cent to 65 per cent of inmates who are released on mandatory supervision who successfully complete their period of supervision.

Mr. Prud'homme: That will save us a lot of money.

Mr. Nunziata: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), points out that that must save a lot of money. He is quite correct and perhaps I can divert from this subject for a moment to speak about the costs involved in incarcerating individuals in federal penitentiaries.

As all Hon. Members are aware, it costs in excess of $40,000 to incarcerate a federal inmate on an annual basis. That figure is increasing every year for each individual who is in a federal penitentiary.

The House will know that there are approximately 11,000 inmates in federal penitentiaries across Canada. That does not include those individuals who are incarcerated in provincial institutions for which, of course, the costs for incarceration are similar.

As I pointed out the other day, those individuals who commit criminal offences and are sentenced to a period of incarceration in excess of two years are sentenced to serve their time in federal penitentiaries, while those individuals who are given a sentence of less than two years serve their time in provincial institutions. Regardless of where an inmate serves his or her period of incarceration, there is a tremendous cost to society. Not only does it cost $40,000 to incarcerate an individual in a federal penitentiary, I am advised that it also costs in excess of $100,000 to build one new prison cell. Furthermore, that does not include costs of support services associated with running federal penitentiaries.

• (1950)

As Your Honour knows, a number of months ago the Nielsen task force made a number of recommendations regarding various federal Government programs. The task force examined close to 1,000 different federal programs. One area studied in particular was that of prisons and reformatories. The task force recommended and concluded that there should be a moratorium on all future construction of prisons in Canada and that there should in fact be a concerted effort on behalf of the federal Government to try to reduce the prison population. I would like to make some further submissions on that matter later.

The bottom line, to answer my friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, is that it is extremely costly to keep inmates incarcerated and to run federal and provincial institutions in Canada so, where possible, it is important to try to reduce the prison population, not only to reduce costs to the taxpayers of Canada, but to assist in trying to rehabilitate certain people who are sentenced to federal prisons.

It is quite clear, given the over-abundance of evidence, that Canada has a higher rate of incarceration than most western democracies; but, as I pointed out when I was last speaking to this legislation, Canada also has one of the safest societies anywhere in the world. I suppose there will be those who argue that if the cost of a safe society is a higher rate of incarceration, then it is a cost that we should bear as taxpayers and as a society. However, I would submit that just because we incarcerate more individuals in Canada does not necessarily mean that the crime rate will drop.

I would like to return for a moment to the discussion paper and the statistics with regard to the release of individuals on mandatory supervision. It is important to compare the statistics of those released on mandatory supervision and those released on full parole. I was indicating that while approximately 60 per cent to 65 per cent of inmates released on mandatory supervision successfully complete their periods of supervision, we should compare that percentage with those on parole. You might ask, Mr. Speaker, and it would be a good question, "What is the percentage of individuals who are released on full parole who successfully complete their period of parole?"

I notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has been listening very attentively to my submissions. I believe he was also here the other night to listen to my submissions. I am sure he would be interested to know that in 1973, 68.5 per cent of those inmates released on full parole successfully completed their period of parole. In other words, while out on parole, their parole was not revoked, either for committing a new offence or for breaching a condition of release. In the same period, 61.8 per cent or 62 per cent of those on mandatory supervision successfully completed their period of supervision. So, the difference is not that great, mandatory supervision versus parole.

Let me make my case a little stronger and let me delve a little deeper into these statistics which are extremely enlightening, I found. Once again, I commend them to Hon. Members opposite. In 1974, of the 1,359 inmates released on full parole, the parole of 9.2 per cent was revoked for a breach of condition. The parole of 16.5 per cent was revoked after committing a new offence, and 69.6 per cent successfully completed their period of parole.

For 1975, the statistics are similar in nature. The parole of 11.1 per cent was revoked without a new offence having been committed. The parole of 14.3 per cent was revoked after a new offence having been committed, and 65.6 per cent successfully completed their period of parole.

What do these statistics tell? They tell a number of things. First, with respect to the number of people who successfully complete mandatory supervision, the figure is constant. With regard to those who successfully complete parole, once again, the figures are somewhat constant. However, what is important is that the figures for full parole are not that different from the figures for mandatory supervision. So, then, why do people argue, for example, that parole is far more successful than mandatory supervision if there is a similar percentage of those who are released on parole or mandatory supervision and successfully complete their period?

Some astute Hon. Members opposite might point out, if they took the time to study these statistics, that those who are released on mandatory supervision, of course, are not under supervision for as long a period of time as those who are released on parole. It only makes sense that they are not, because those who are released on mandatory supervision serve, at the very most, one-third of their sentence in the community, because they have been refused parole up until the two-thirds mark of their sentence. As well, there are many who are released on parole who serve a full two-thirds out in the community, having served only one-third of their sentence in the institution. Therefore, it could be argued that it is more difficult to successfully complete parole than it is to successfully complete mandatory supervision. However, before so arguing, it would be important to study some other important statistics that I believe tell the tale. If Hon. Members opposite want to turn to page 19 of the discussion paper, and perhaps I can just hold on a moment until all Hon. Members opposite turn to page 19—

Mr. Prud'homme: I'm sure the Minister will.

Mr. Nunziata: I think it is important that they refer to page 19 as I am referring to the statistics. I notice that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is referring to page 19 of The Toronto Star.

Mr. Crosbie: The Halifax Herald.

Mr. Nunziata: I am asking him to turn to page 19 of the discussion paper regarding mandatory supervision. Obviously, page 19 of The Toronto Star is more interesting to the Minister than this particular legislation; and, as he is the Minister of Justice, if I can divert for a moment, he should take a very keen interest in this legislation rather than reading The Toronto Star.?

• (2000)

We all know that The Toronto Star is an extremely important publication of the Conservative Party. We appreciate the journalistic abilities of those who write for that paper. Notwithstanding the fine quality of that particular newspaper, which has the largest circulation of any newspaper in Canada, tonight is the night to focus on Bill C-67. If the Minister of Justice does not have a copy of the discussion paper from which I am reading, then perhaps a page could pick up a copy and deliver it to the Minister. If the Minister of Justice would like me to suspend my remarks until he is in receipt of a copy of the discussion paper, then I would be pleased to comply.

An Hon. Member: Go ahead, sit down.

Mr. Nunziata: Obviously, the Minister of Justice is not interested. However, I notice that all the Liberal Members in the House—

Mr. Forrestall: All three of them!

Mr. Nunziata: —are referring to it. I commend it to my colleagues for a thorough discussion with regard to this particular legislation. I note that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who is sitting by my side, is taking notes with regard to this legislation. She is doing that because she would like to explain to her constituents who had the good sense to elect her the ramifications of Bill C-67 when she returns to her constituency this summer. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Hon. Member for her support.

I would now like to return to the discussion paper. I refer Hon. Members to page 9, in particular the table numbered five. It is a table which sets out offences committed by federal inmates while on mandatory supervision and on parole. It refers to those released from January, 1975, to December, 1979, and readmitted with a new conviction as of June, 1980. To compile this information, the researchers looked at all the individuals who were released on mandatory supervision and those who were released on parole between Janaury, 1975 and December, 1979. They put together a chart to illustrate the reasons for these particular inmates being readmitted. It is important to note that we are dealing only with those readmitted after having committed a new offence.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal asks me if I am talking about recidivism. That is precisely to what this chart refers. It refers to those who are recidivists, those who have committed a crime after having served a period of incarceration in an institution. These are very important statistics. The table sets out offence types. With respect to crimes against the person, nine individuals after having been released on parole committed murder. This is compared to 31 who committed murder after having been released on mandatory supervision. Looking at these statistics, one could almost conclude that parole is far more successful than mandatory supervision. The Parole Board can say: "We were right and we are right. We can predict violent behaviour because only nine of those individuals released on parole committed murder while 31 released on mandatory supervision committed murder".

We cannot simply rely on the straight numbers. In this case it is important to look at the percentage of the total. As I indicated earlier, we know that fewer individuals are released on parole than are released on mandatory supervision. The nine murders represent 1.3 per cent of the total of inmates released on parole while the 31 murders represent 1.2 per cent of the inmates released on mandatory supervision.

Mr. Forrestall: I wish you would make the point you are trying to make.

Mrs. Finestone: Why don't you listen!

Mr. Forrestall: I am listening and I have read it.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) asks what is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. Forrestall: You are trying to waste time, that is what you are doing.

Mr. Nunziata: I would ask the Hon. Member to be patient. I would ask him to give me an opportunity to develop my argument.

Mr. Forrestall: I am sitting here patiently waiting for it.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member should continue to sit. He should continue to be patient. He will be rewarded for his patience. As my mother often tells me: "You will be rewarded if you are patient. Your time will come. Patience, my son".

Let us now turn to the subject of manslaughter. Of those released on mandatory supervision, some 21 committed manslaughter, or .8 per cent. Of those released on parole some nine committed murder, or 1.3 per cent. Between the two numbers there is a difference of .5 per cent. If we combine the figures for murder and manslaughter, we will find that 18 individuals who were released on parole committed a form of homicide, either murder or manslaughter. Some 52 homicides were committed by individuals released on mandatory supervision.

I would just like to go down the list with regard to the other offences against the person and try to compare those statistics with regard to those released on parole and those released on mandatory supervision. There were no convictions for attempted murder for those released on parole. However, there were 11 convictions for those released on mandatory supervision, or .4 per cent. There were 10 convictions for rape for those released on parole and 25 for those released on mandatory supervision. There were four sexual assaults in the first category versus 23 in the second. There were 17 other forms of assault in the first category versus 153 in the other. There were six kidnappings versus 15. There were 127 robberies committed by those on parole and 394 committed by those on mandatory supervision.

With regard to convictions for robbery, of those released on parole that figure represents 18 per cent of the total whereas only 15 per cent of the total inmates released on mandatory supervision committed robbery. In fact, more individuals released on parole were convicted of robbery than individuals released on mandatory supervision.

• (2010)

The statistics are similar with regard to crimes against property. There were 192 convictions of break and enter of those out on parole versus 737 of those out on mandatory supervision. Even though the figure is higher, it only represents 28 per cent versus 27 per cent.

The bottom line of this particular chart is that there is not that much difference on a percentage basis between crimes committed by those released on mandatory supervision and crimes committed by those released on parole. However, the absolute numbers are important.

Among those released on mandatory supervision, there were 52 homicides. The question we must then ask is if Bill C-67 was in effect between 1975 and December 1979, could we have saved any of those 52 lives? I suspect that we could have. If the authorities had the discretion to keep incarcerated inmates that were believed to continue to pose a threat to society, those inmates who committed the 52 homicides might not have had the opportunity to do so. Perhaps they would have remained incarcerated. Sooner or later, however, those inmates who committed those crimes would have to be released even if this legislation were in effect. That particular fact seems to have escaped the Solicitor General.

When the Solicitor General made his submissions on this Bill, he seemed to suggest that the Bill would somehow ensure the protection of society from those inmates who would be released and would commit more crimes. At no point in time did the Solicitor General express a concern or opinion with respect to what would happen to those individuals after they were released. There was not even a recognition of the fact that sooner or later, these inmates would have to be released into society.

If we are to keep inmates incarcerated to warrant expiry, until they have served their complete sentences, do we not think that these particular inmates will be that much angrier with society and that much more vindictive? What guarantees do we have that society will be safer just because these inmates were kept incarcerated for a longer period of time? The unfortunate reality is that we cannot provide that guarantee. However, I suppose the guarantee we as parliamentarians can provide is that at least for a further period of time, be it two years, five years or six years, a particular inmate will be kept incarcerated and will not have the opportunity to commit a new crime.

It seems to me that in many respects, we are simply prolonging the inevitable. Sooner or later, these inmates will be released into society. It seems to me that we as a society should concentrate our collective efforts on trying to rehabilitate those incarcerated in institutions to try to ensure that they do not become recidivists, commit another crime and be readmitted to institutions.

How do we rehabilitate these people? I feel that more effort could be spent on that. For hundreds of years, penologists have studied the treatment of offenders and the prevention of crime but they have not been able to eradicate crime from society. I would submit, though, that tremendous steps have been taken in the correctional area over the last 25 or 50 years and indeed, because of the efforts of society, the rate of recidivism has in fact been reduced.

As I indicated at second reading stage, in committee and on a number of occasions already, this legislation is a step in the right direction as far as the Opposition is concerned. I know that the New Democratic Party as represented by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) opposes this legislation in a very definite way. In fact, I believe members of the New Democratic Party intend to vote against this legislation.

I would like to indicate why we believe this legislation is a step in the right direction. We recognize that there is a problem. We have seen the statistics and we have seen what happens when inmates are released on mandatory supervision. Our inevitable conclusion is that there is a problem and that problem must be addressed. The former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), recognized the problem a number of years ago and introduced legislation designed to deal with it.

It is clear that we simply cannot release into society inmates who pose a clear threat to society. We as Parliamentarians have an obligation to ensure that legislation is in place to somehow keep incarcerated those who pose a clear threat to society. I would submit, though, that those individuals are few in number and represent a small percentage of the total number of inmates in federal institutions.

• (2020)

The legislation gives the National Parole Board the power to order detention until warrant expiry of any inmate who meets the criteria set out in the legislation itself. As I indicated at some length on June 18, we in the Liberal Party believe very strongly that that power or discretion ought to be properly exercised by a court of law. We do not believe that the National Parole Board, given its collective wisdom, experience, and expertise in this particular area, should be in a position to deprive an individual of his or her liberty. We do not believe that the National Parole Board should do it because it is not a court of law. Only a court should deprive an individual of his or her liberty. We also believe that procedural safeguards exist when a court of law is making that determination. We can be assured that the process will in fact be followed if a court of law makes the decision.

We all know that the National Parole Board, during the course of the Conservative mandate, seems to have been rendered the happy hunting ground for Tory hacks, flacks, and Party supporters. The sister-in-law of the Secretary of State for Exernal Affairs (Mr. Clark) was appointed to the National Parole Board. Other prominent Conservatives have also been appointed to that board. I am not calling into question, at least not at this point in time, the abilities of the individuals who have been appointed to the National Parole Board. However, the fact remains that as far as the public is concerned, there might be a perception that it is pure and blatant patronage when individuals are appointed to the board.

Bill C-67 increases the number of people who can sit on the board. The point I am making is that although these people gain a considerable amount of expertise while sitting on the board, they should not be put in a position where they have to decide whether or not an inmate should be kept incarcerated.

As I indicated a few moments ago, the Bill will allow the National Parole Board to issue detention orders. It is true that the legislation provides that that particular order is reviewable after a year's time. Once again, an inmate can apply to be released after a year. Notwithstanding that the inmate is allowed a review after a year, we still firmly believe that it is a decision which ought to be made by the courts.

We have another concern with regard to the nature of the discretion. Criteria are established by the legislation and indeed are set out in it. The National Parole Board does not have a blanket, carte blanche discretion to decide which inmates should not be released on mandatory supervision. Certain criteria are enunciated in the legislation, and the National Parole Board, the deciding body, must refer to those criteria.

An inmate could be identified as posing a high risk to public safety if he or she meets the criteria set out in the Parole Act. The first criterion in the legislation refers to whether the current offence for which the offender was convicted resulted in serious personal harm such as loss of life or major physical or psychological damage. At first instance the National Parole Board must look at those inmates who are presently incarcerated and are about to be released on mandatory supervision. It will be specifically looking at those who were convicted of offences which resulted in serious personal harm such as loss of life or major physical or psychological damage. There is a Schedule attached to Bill C-67 which outlines the offences.

For example, if an inmate is serving time for committing manslaughter, the National Parole Board will decide whether or not a detention order should issue. Manslaughter is one of the offences listed in the Schedule attached to the Bill. I should like to point out very briefly the offences to which the National Parole Board must refer in order to determine which inmates should be kept incarcerated. It will look at all inmates convicted of causing injury with intent, a breach of Section 83 of the Criminal Code, the use of a firearm during the commission of an offence, pointing a firearm, a prison breach, manslaughter, attempted murder, assault causing bodily harm, overcoming resistence, assault, assault with a weapon, causing bodily harm, aggravated assault, unlawfully causing bodily harm, assaulting a police officer, sexual assault, sexual assault with a weapon, threats to a third party, aggravated sexual assault, kidnapping, robbery, arson—setting fire to another substance—setting fire by negligence, and conspiracy to commit murder.

If an inmate is serving a period of incarceration for having committed one of these crimes, then he or she satisfies the first criterion laid out in the legislation. Once those particular inmates are identified, the National Parole Board must decide whether reasonable grounds exist to conclude that the person is likely to commit, prior to the expiry of his or her sentence, a violent crime which will result in harm.

As I pointed out the last time we discussed this Bill, one cannot predict with any degree of certainty whether an individual is likely to commit a violent crime which will result in harm. That simply cannot be done. At committee the experts told us that it was near impossible to predict violent behaviour with any degree of certainty. That is not to suggest that we should not at least try. In order to ensure that society is protected, it is important for authorities, to the best of their ability, to predict or decide whether a person is likely to commit a violent crime that will result in harm. If an inmate is serving a person of incarceration for having committed a crime enumerated in the Schedule, and the National Parole Board decides that reasonable grounds exist to conclude that the person is likely to commit a crime, then a detention order will issue. This means that the inmate will not automatically be released on mandatory supervision.

There is a further provision in the Bill which caused us some concern. Of course we indicated our concerns at committee. With regard to the discretion given to the Commissioner of Corrections in the sense that even if an inmate does not meet the first criteria, that is the inmate has not been incarcerated for a crime that is enumerated in the Schedule, the Commissioner of Corrections, as long as he has reasonable grounds to believe an inmate is likely to commit, prior to the expirty of sentence, a violent crime that will result in violent harm, he may refer the case to the Chairman of the National Parole Board for a detention hearing. This legislation is giving a lot of power to the Commissioner of Corrections. If someone is serving a period of incarceration for, let us say, a crime against property, break and enter, and there are reasonable grounds to believe—whatever that means, that is a pretty loose standard—as long as the Commissioner believes or has reasonable grounds to believe that an inmate might be violent if released, he may refer the case to the Chairman of the National Parole Board for a detention hearing.

We do not believe that the Commissioner of Corrections should have that discretion. We believe the criteria with regard to the type of crime an inmate has committed should be restricted to those inmates who are serving time for having committed crimes against the person. As you know, inmates who do not meet the criteria as I have indicated that are outlined in Clause 2 of the Bill, but are not judged to pose a high risk and are released on mandatory supervision, will not be entitled to a remission again if that first release is revoked by the Parole Board.

I spoke at some length on this issue last day. It is referred to as "one shot mandatory supervision". This provision in the Bill will effectively allow inmates only one chance for release. In other words, if the inmate is released and breaches a condition of mandatory supervision, then that inmate will not be able to earn remission after the inmate is reincarcerated.

I know the hour is late and Hon. Members are anxious to do whatever they plan to do after they leave the hallowed halls of Parliament. I have spoken at some length on Bill C-67, and so I now intend to conclude my remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: I notice Hon. Members opposite are applauding. I know they are not applauding because I am about to conclude my remarks, they are applauding because of the content of my submissions. I know over the course of the last four hours that I have been able to convince Hon. Members opposite and, in particular, the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the legislation is imperfect. I know he has been on the phone to the Solicitor General, trying to persuade the Solicitor General to bring in a few amendments that will accommodate the concerns of Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition, the concerns of the Elizabeth Fry and the John Howard Societies. One of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) said that Members opposite are truly appreciative of my submissions. I would like to thank him.

Seriously speaking, Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to obstruct this legislation. We have not in any way obstructed the passage of it. We were anxious when this Bill was introduced in June, 1985 to deal with it. We expedited second reading debate. The legislation was referred to committee. The Official Opposition was very responsible and constructive at committee, suggesting some very worth-while points. We listened attentively to all the individuals and groups who appeared before the committee and we expedited passage through committee.

This Bill was reported out of committee over five months ago. The Government and the Solicitor General have sat on this legislation since that time. Then they have unmitigated audacity to tell the House of Commons, with a few precious hours remaining in this session of Parliament before the summer break that the legislation is important, urgent and ought to be passed immediately.

I would like to say through you to the Solicitor General and the Government opposite, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition resents very much the way the Government is operating. The Government has had ample opportunity to bring this Bill forward over the last five months but has refused to do so. It then turned around and has attempted to blame the Opposition for delaying the legislation.

Be that as it may, the legislation is a step in the right direction. We intend to support it. Of course, we cannot give any guarantees as to what the Senate might do with this Bill. The Senate has expressed its opinion on a number of occasions by way of several reports that have been passed on to the House. The Senate will deal with the Bill when it is referred there.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak to this Bill. I know you have given me ample opportunity to speak to the very serious concerns of Bill C-67. I have tried during the course of my submissions to point out the flaws in the Bill. There are several. Groups and organizations have also pointed out the problems.

I note that my time is almost up because I have been given the signal by my Whip that it is time to conclude. I have tried to satisfy concerns on all sides of the House but it has not always been easy. I have appreciated the opportunity to speak and I look forward to speaking to Bill C-68, which I understand the Government will be introducing immediately following third reading of this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

PAROLE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (for the Solicitor General) moved that Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay the passage of this Bill. In fact, we want to pass it very quickly this evening. I would, however, like to give this explanation.

Bill C-68 addresses concerns of a more technical nature than Bill C-67. It, nonetheless, contains important changes to the conditional release statutes which are long overdue. The last significant amendments to the Parole Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act were made in 1977. Oversights were made at that time and concerns have arisen since which require amendments to clarify, consolidate and correct the statutes. The amendments in this Bill are intended to clarify the calculation and administration of sentences as well as to facilitate the operation of the National Parole Board, the Correctional Service of Canada and provincial correctional departments. I trust that the House will see fit to pass this Bill very quickly.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill C-68. As the Parliamentary Secretary has pointed out, Bill C-68 is complementary to Bill C-67. It is technical in nature. It is an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code. On behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal and Official Opposition I would like to indicate that the Liberal Party intends to fully support the Government with regard to Bill C-68. It is a companion Bill to Bill C-67 and we do not have any serious objections to it. Our legal experts have examined this Bill in minute detail. We believe that the Bill should be passed by Parliament as quickly as possible. Therefore, I do not intend to make any further submissions with regard to Bill C-68.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize that my hon. colleague has arrived so I can sit down. At times it is like a hockey game. The coach tells the player to get on to the ice and drag the puck because we are leading. For the last hour my coach has been telling me to drag the puck. Blame it on J.R. Therefore, you will understand that I may not have been as coherent as I otherwise would have been. Given the opportunity, I can be very succinct in my remarks.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank my Whip who is, without question, the best Whip in the House. He is a friend and colleague and we all appreciate his efforts over the last 20 months. I would like to take this opportunity as well to wish each and every Member in the House a happy and safe summer holiday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. We have agreed that since we have now received third reading of Bills C-67 and C-68 we will proceed immediately to the Adjournment Debate. I think that you will find unanimous consent for that motion.

Mr. Gauthier: After meaningful deliberations on all sides of the House, we agree with that.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm that is my understanding of the agreement that was reached.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—TRANSFER OF FAMILY FARMS—TAX INQUIRY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period on May 27 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) if he would consider amending the provisions of the Income Tax Act to make available the tax free intergenerational roll-over of farm land to those Canadians who have farmed almost all their lives but who, through illness or advancing age, are not now actively farming. I wish to utilize this opportunity to expand on the question because the legislation is complex and because there appears to be confusion between the definition of land qualifying for the lifetime $500,000 capital gains exemption and the definition of lands qualifying for the intergenerational roll-over.

The problem in each instance relates to the capital gains tax which was instituted in 1972 and has since been viewed with less than enthusiasm by the farm community. Farm land was valued as at valuation day, December 31, 1971, and carried this value as an adjusted cost base for calculation of future gains. It also happened that farm land values escalated very rapidly through the 1970s and, although values are now dropping owing to discouraging world commodity prices, there remains today the potential for considerable capital gain to arise in the event of some dispositions.

The outrage of the farm community to capital gain was sufficiently strong that modifications were made to the Act on several occasions. In 1973 provision was made for a tax free roll-over between parent and child so that in the traditional family farm situation the parent could elect to transfer title to his land to a child at the parents adjusted cost base without tax provided the land was, at the time of the transaction, being used by either parent or any child in the business of farming.

The requirement that the particular land be used in the business of farming at the time of the transaction has caused considerable problems. This requirement led to the widespread usage of custom work contracts. Through the custom work contracts the traditional lease situation was converted into a contractual arrangement on paper so that the elderly or retired owner of land was still able to satisfy Revenue Canada that he or she was using the land in the business of farming. This was done by demonstrating through the custom work contract that the owner still made certain management decisions relating to the land, held a current delivery permit book, received the proceeds of the crop, wrote cheques for various custom work operations and generally assumed some degree of risk.

Meanwhile, however, those unfortunate people who were unaware of the subtleties of the law and simply leased their land to neighbours, either for crop share or cash, and then in good faith proceeded to transfer their titles to their children, found themselves subject to capital gains tax. Land owners in similar circumstances who died were deemed to have disposed of their land at fair market value at the date of death and their estates were, in turn, subject to capital gains.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the enactment of the immediate $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption for farmers was welcomed by all concerned with agriculture. The capital gains exemption is available to those who are either actively farming the particular land at the date of the deal or who have farmed that land for any five years. This is obviously quite a wide definition which accommodates those Canadians who may have farmed most of their lives but who are retired or inactive at the time of the disposition or who, on death, became subject to the deemed disposition provisions.

The problem today is that so much publicity and attention has been given to the lifetime capital gains exemption that many Canadians believe the intergenerational roll-over between parent and child is likewise to be available on the same conditions. That is, where land is being farmed by transferor at the date of the deal or for any five years during which the land was owned by him. In fact that is not so. The tax free roll-over is available only where either parent or a child is actively farming the land. If neither is involved, the roll-over does not apply even though the transferor may have farmed the particular land most or all of his life.

With respect, I believe the definition of land eligible for the intergenerational roll-over should be expanded so as to be the same as the definition of land qualifying for the lifetime capital gains exemption. This could be done by applying the definition of "qualifying farm property" prescribed under Section 110.6(1) of the Income Tax Act to Section 70 and Section 73 which govern the transfer of farm property by parent to child either inter vivos or on death. In other words, add the five-year usage clause to the roll-over criteria.

Some say this is not an important or pressing matter because the lifetime capital gains exemption is still available to those who might unwittingly find themselves ineligible for the intergenerational roll-over. Therefore, it is only those Canadians with in excess of $500,000 capital gains who would be affected. Unfortunately, the tentacles of the alternative minimum tax enter into the picture. While it is true that in almost all situations any tax paid under those provisions would be recovered as a credit against future tax payable, nonetheless there has to be payment up front and future recovery over a period of years. Furthermore, I am advised that the AMT payable by a deceased's estate on a deemed disposition can only offset tax paid during the previous three years.

Clearly there are some additional complications for those who have not had proper advice. However, the fact remains that there is no logical reason for the distinction, and the difference in the definitions of land qualifying. Those in the know can still structure their affairs through phoney custom work contracts and artificial contrivances. Why put them to the trouble? Why not put all farmers on the same footing? Why should it matter one iota whether the land is custom farmed or rented for crop sharing or cash? Why not simplify the Act by standardizing the definition, thereby removing an irritating impediment to effective farm state planning and management?

I see my time is almost up. I thank you for this opportunity to elaborate on this problem. I again urge the Minister to consider amending the provisions of the Income Tax Act to make available the tax free roll-over to those Canadians who have farmed for a considerable part of their lives, but who, through illness or advancing age, find that they are not now actively farming and therefore not eligible.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) who asked whether the rules concerning the intergenerational roll-over of farm land could be applied to something which has already been used by the taxpayer in the operation of the farm but which, for one reason or another, was not used immediately before the roll-over.

As the Hon. Member pointed out, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that the lifetime $500,000 capital gains tax exemption would be immediately available to farmers, a special provision was made concerning farm lands which were not in use at that time, provided they had been used during at least five years in the past.

However the inter-generational roll-over of farm land differs from the capital gains tax exemption in several respects. First, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption is available to all Canadians, whereas the special provision for farmers does nothing more than speed up the process.

Therefore the distinction between active and inactive farm land does not matter much because the roll-over is restricted to two successive generations and applies only to farmers.

The purposes of these two measures are also quite different. The capital gains tax exemption is meant as a reward for individuals who have made successful investments and an incentive to make more investments.

On the other hand, the roll-over provisions apply not only to capital gains but also to depreciation and gains from eligible real estate, the idea being to encourage active farm land roll-over from one generation to the next. This objective is achieved by deferring taxes which would otherwise be payable with respect to the roll-over and which might reduce the assets and compromise the profitability of the operation. In this way, cashflow problems in connection with tax payable on inter-generational roll-over of farmland are avoided.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) agrees to a certain extent with the specific example given by the Hon. Member, referring to taxpayers who have stopped operating their farm due to illness or advancing age. It is difficult to make a distinction between these and other cases where the owner of the land was not farming.

In view of these considerations and especially the fact that up to one-half million dollars in capital gain per person would be tax-extempt in any case, I don't think it would be desirable, for the time being, to broaden the application of provisions governing the inter-generational roll-over of eligible farm property.

Nervertheless, as the Hon. Member is well aware, this Government is very much interested in ensuring that the Canadian family farm remains viable, as demonstrated by the many measures we took previously in this area.

Mr. Speaker, it was with this principle in mind that the Minister of Finance said on May 27 of this year that he would take another look at the proposal. I would therefore urge the Hon. Member to continue his positive contribution towards the development of a satisfactory system for the inter-generational roll-over of farm property.

NATIONAL REVENUE—CONTROL OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on June 17 I put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Valcourt). I asked what Revenue Canada is doing to ensure that public confidence is maintained in the charity sector in view of the creation by the Canadian Council of Better Business Bureaus of philanthropic advisory services. The BBB apparently saw the need for such a watch-dog service to protect consumers by providing information on which charities meet their standards. The Bureau commented that Revenue Canada does an inadequate job of policing Canada's 50,000 plus registered charities. Both the Consumers' Association of Canada and the umbrella National Voluntary Organization, on the other hand, are aware of the role played by Revenue Canada, and that public awareness of this audit and monitoring role may be misunderstood as Revenue Canada can only advise that audits are carried out and all complaints are treated seriously and followed up. Confidentiality provisions preclude dissemination of information concerning an audit action on a particular charity.

The charities are critical of the means by which the BBB plans to attack perceived abuse by a very small number of registered charities and those entities that hold themselves out as registered. It is evident that the public should be fully informed of the extent of the audit and monitoring role played by Revenue Canada in this area. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to discuss this with the Minister to ensure that Revenue Canada not only perform this vital function, but also that the public is informed as to the nature and extent of this function.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I also want to mention that volunteer organizations would like to receive more tangible recognition that would act as an incentive to further develop and renew their work in the community. In fact, the organizations are complaining today about "burn-out" among their members.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked for a special committee to be set up to make an in-depth study of the role of volunteers in Canada and to report to the Minister of Finance and the Department of the Secretary of State with recommendations on the best way for this Government to encourage more Canadian men and women to get more involved.

Mr. Speaker, our population is aging, and it will not be long before we need more room to house the elderly. The State will no longer be able to provide. We will need, as a society, the involvement of volunteers in our communities. Mr. Speaker, I think we should look at what other countries do for their volunteers.

In the United States, for instance, since we are in the middle of free trade talks, Mr. Bruce Davies, a tax adviser for the U. S. Congress Ways and Means Committee, told me that the United States now has a tax incentive for volunteer work, which means that all personal expenses in connection with a volunteer program or job may be deducted as a direct contribution from one's income tax. For instance, they can deduct 12 cents a mile for trips made to provide volunteer services and they can also deduct the cost of uniforms purchased by a service organization. Just think, Mr. Speaker, how little things like that could help out Canadian voluteers continue their work in their community.

Mr. Speaker, there is also an organization in the United States that is called Action, and President Reagan hopes that it will be an incentive to companies and individuals to provide a public service on a volunteer basis instead of letting the Government do it.

Before I finish, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I was just at a meeting with some women who told us about their problems in connection with the financing of women's groups. These are all volunteers who every day try to help women that are less fortunate that they are. Mr. Speaker, in my riding a centre for women in need was recently set up, and I must say that without volunteer help, these women would never be able to receive a service that is extremely important, especially in remote areas like mine. I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that this Government will find a way to encourage more volunteeers to get involved and help their less-fortunate fellow citizens. I hope that the concerns raised by the Quebec Trade Practices Commission will receive a logical response, and I am very happy to have been able to take part in the adjournment debate this evening. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may take this opportunity to urge you to look around this summer in your riding at what is happening to volunteer work and when you come back in September perhaps you and I could support a request to the Minister for tax incentives for our organizations.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain the role of Revenue Canada Taxation concerning the registration and control of charitable organizations.

• (2100)

[English]

In applying for registration, an applicant has to provide information that is sufficiently clear and detailed for departmental officials to determine whether the organization is, in fact, charitable at law, and whether the Income Tax Act's operational requirements for registered charities will be satisfied.

Great care is taken in reviewing applications. Where they feel it is necessary, officials of the Department will request further information and, where appropriate, encourage representatives of the applicant organization to meet with them.

[Translation]

Registration acceptance or refusal must not be considered as a judgment on the value of the activities and goals of the organization or of the motives of the individuals involved. The legislation only allows the department to make sure that the benefits offered to charitable organizations registered under the Income Tax Act are available only to those organizations which intend to operate in accordance with the rules established under tax legislation and common law.

[English]

After an organization has registered, it is required by law to file each year an information return containing a confidential accounting of its entire operations during the last year. A percentage of these information returns are reviewed and, where appropriate, further inquiries are made. This is the same as the review process that applies to regular tax returns.

Every charitable organization must provide annually a public information return containing financial information. Copies of these returns are made available to the public on request. This procedure does not preclude interested parties from also obtaining information directly from the charity itself or from provincial regulatory bodies.

Every year the Department carries out a number of audits and investigations on the basis of information on its files or supplied by the public. The departmental reviews that are made of certain charities include examination of some of the following matters; amount of receipted donations spent on charitable activities to ensure that the dispersement quota as required by income tax legislation is being met; adherence to filing and public disclosure requirements; a review of charitable activities to ensure that the legal definition of charity is still being met; a review of political activities to ensure that they are incidental and ancillary to the organization's charitable activities, and a review of receipting policies and procedures.

• (2105)

A number of refinements in administration have been put in place in the last year, after consultation with the voluntary sector. These include new and clearer explanations of how to register a charity, as well as new and simpler annual reporting requirements.

The Department is satisfied that the overwhelming majority of charitable organizations carry out their admirable work fully within the law. However, all complaints are treated seriously and, if warranted, are acted upon.

If a charitable organization is found to be overstepping the boundaries of charities, or is in breach of the technical rules contained in the Income Tax Act, the Department makes every effort to encourage it to correct the situation.

The ultimate step of revoking an organization's registration is, we have found, seldom necessary. In fact, only 18 charities have had their registered status revoked for cause in the past 12 years, whereas some 1,200 organizations are deregistered annually for administrative and other reasons.

CHALLENGE '86—FUNDING OF SOCIAL SERVICE PROJECTS. (B) REQUEST THAT PRIORITY BE GIVEN TO SOCIALLY USEFUL EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on May 26 I put a question to the Minister for summer employment. While I believe her official title is Minister for Youth, since she has no other responsibility but summer employment, I suggest it is more accurate to call her the Minister for summer employment.

In any event, on May 26 I put the question to her with respect to the funding of Challenge '86, the summer employment program of the Government. On that day, a coalition of community groups from across the country met with her and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), to protest the fact that funding for a large number of community groups in this country for summer employment projects had been cut or had been eliminated altogether.

For example, in Montreal, the Association for Retarded Children, which has been funded in past years for approximately 30 people to take care of retarded children at summer camp, had been cut back to five or six. As a result, a large number of retarded children will not be going to camp.

There were other community groups that had also been cut. These include groups helping senior citizens, community groups helping disadvantaged youth, as well as community groups working on environmental projects. An important project in my riding was one which helped young people with drug problems. That was cut back altogether, with no funding at all.

There are two reasons why so many of these groups were left without funding or were seriously cut back. One is the cut in total funding for the summer employment program by $19 million over last year. In 1985, Challenge 85 had a budget of $205 million. For 1986, the budget is $188 million.

If that is not bad enough, in addition to this cut in funds, the Government also introduced a quota system. I call it a quota system because that is what it really is. It is a quota system which allocated a greater percentage of that money to the private business sector. The Government used these public funds to assist private business with their summer employment programs. Of course, this left the community groups, who have no other source of funding except governments and charitable organizations, short of money.

I asked the Minister to reconsider these quotas and cuts and restore the program to the way it was so that these worth-while groups could get funding. She made no reply, except to suggest in her answer that I was totally opposed to students getting jobs in the summer. That is ridiculous. Of course, I am for students getting jobs. I want them to have meaningful employment and, at the same time, I want that employment to provide useful social work in the community.

Despite her suggestions to the contrary, I would admit that there are some good jobs being funded under the present program. Of course, when the Government spends $188 million some good jobs will obviously be funded. That is not the point of my criticism or the criticism of the groups which came to see the Minister that day. The point is that the Government cut back and put in place a priority which gave more money to the private sector which, I maintain, it did not need.

In the past, the criteria for summer employment projects was to provide some socially useful services. That is no longer the criteria. Therefore, we now have summer employment projects where people are cutting grass on golf courses, piling boxes on shelves, serving ice cream and other such things. These are worth-while, but public funds should not be given in order that they be accomplished. People will sell ice-cream in the summertime, anyway; people will cut their grass in the summertime, anyway, and they will pay people to do it.

If we consider the pattern of funding of this program over the last few years, we will see that in 1984, under the Summer Employment Program, $126.4 million went to the community sector. In 1985, the amount to the community sector went down to $116.8 million. This year, under the SEED program, which is part of Challenge '86, it has gone down to $82.55 million. Furthermore, if we consider the pattern as to how the average grant works out, we will see that in 1985 the average grant for community organizations was $15,600 and in 1986 it is down to $8,800. The average number of work weeks funded under the Challenge 85 program for community groups was 66.5 weeks, and in 1986 it is down to 36.2 weeks.

These criticisms that I bring to the House, contrary to what the Minister says, are not my own criticisms. She tries to pretend that these are the criticisms of people in the Opposition and that we are criticizing simply to be negative. I have seen editorial after editorial and have received letters from group after group making these criticisms, and I make them on their behalf.

My allotted time has just about finished. I will sit down. I had expected that the Minister, who is only a junior Minister, would have been here to answer my criticism; but, no, we will probably receive an answer from some Parliamentary Secretary who is not even familiar with the dossier but who will read a set piece prepared by some bureaucrat in the Department of Employment and then sit down without even understanding what he is reading to me. Our only hope in these debates is that we can reach beyond this Parliament and touch the people outside, sensitizing them so they know what is really going on in this country with respect to summer employment and other job-creation programs.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Champagne), I would like to give the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) a more specific answer to the question he raised last May 26. The quality of elements in the new job planning, Challenge '86, is designed to create jobs which will give students practical work experience and training which will ease their transition from school to the labour market. In that respect, the private sector plays a leading role since in any event it will hire graduating students seeking permanent jobs.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with this dossier. I am aware of the good work that Challenge '86 has done in my own riding. It does not make sense to rely only upon the non-private sector to assist in providing the employment, training and experience young people need. The private sector is the engine of our impressive economic recovery, and the Government wants to encourage economic renewal by training our young people to enter this dynamic new labour market rather than allowing them to be left behind.

The summer programs of the previous Government relied upon the non-private sector to meet the employment needs of young people; but Challenge '86 puts the employment needs of young people first. However, the Government is not discriminating against the non-private sector through the Challenge '86 program. Under Challenge '86, students will work for organizations concerned with alcohol abuse, battered women and the mentally retarded, and will also support community recreational activities and child-care services. In fact, some 64.9 per cent of the funds are still being provided to the non-private sector, as compared with 35.1 per cent for the private sector. However, many of the jobs provided by the non-private sector not only promote community services but also offer training and work experience that will benefit students when they eventually seek permanent employment. That fact is a key to the success of our summer programming. All applications are assessed equally, whether they are from the private or non-private sectors, and are judged on the basis of the quality of the training and work experience that they provide and how they enhance the career prospects of students.

• (2115)

Challenge '86 calls upon the private and non-private sectors to propose jobs which will help students make the school-to-work transition, jobs that will provide real employment experiences and training in areas that are related to what they are taking in school and therefore benefit their future entry into the exciting labour market of the 1980s.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 9.18 p.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—TOXIC BLOBS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, last week it was reported that many months after a major effort to remove the toxic blob of dangerous pollutants from the bottom of the St. Clair River, more blobs of the same chemicals are now turning up and Dow Chemical, the apparent source, cannot figure out why. The federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has been giving the impression that the matter has been solved. Last January he issued a report of a special federal-provincial working group which made some 24 recommendations on how to prevent the recurrence of the blob and similar problems involving the St. Clair River.

The Minister must tell us immediately why these toxic blobs have been recurring in the past three months, why he has allowed this to happen, what he is doing to stop it, what has been done and what will be done to implement fully all the recommendations of the special working group. The recurrence of the blob strongly suggests that with the spotlight of media attention away from him, the Minister is asleep on this matter. The people of the Windsor area want answers from the Minister. Even more, they want and expect action now.

TARIFFS

TARIFF ON IMPORTED ENGLISH-LANGUAGE BOOKS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the imposition of a 10 per cent tariff on English-language books has proven to be sorry mistake, hurting Canadian publishers and authors as well as ordinary Canadians who like to read. It also risks retaliation on the part of Americans who may end the exemption allowing Canadian printers and binders to work on American contracts and not lose authors' copyrights. This small but growing Canadian printing industry should not be put at such risk.

It is hard to imagine a more misguided tariff. It is one which does damage to Canadians and Americans and does nothing to help the shake and shingle producers.

The book tariff will raise an estimated $36 million, yet the Government's new money for book publishing amounts to a more modest $4 million. This tells us all too sadly how serious the Government is in its support of Canadian book publishing. I call on the Government to withdraw the 10 per cent tariff on books.

EDUCATION

ESTABLISHMENT OF CEGEP IN VAL-D'OR, P.Q.

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, under the chairmanship of Mr. Jacques Nadon, members of Val-d'Or's Corporation de développement de l'enseignement supérieur have taken the initiative to establish a CEGEP in Val-d'Or.

At a Quebec City meeting with provincial Higher Education Minister Claude Ryan and Abitibi East Minister Raymond Savoie, corporation members drew the Ministers' attention to the fact that, compared with other regions in the Province of Quebec, the Abitibi region has always been deprived of adequate educational institutions.

Mr. Speaker, the corporation stressed the urgency of improving access to community college studies for anglophones, native people and adults. The corporation rallied the support of Mr. Ryan who will travel to Val-d'Or in late August 1986 to meet with the various interest groups.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of Abitibi and I fully appreciate the work done by Mr. Savoie and the corporation.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PROPOSED TOURIST BUREAU FOR THE DISABLED

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House my support for a very worth-while and commendable proposal put forward by a constituent of mine for the establishment of a tourist bureau for the disabled. This proposed tourist bureau for the disabled would keep on file up to date, accurate information on transportation needs for disabled tourists travelling within and outside Canada.

S.O. 21

I am fully aware that various Departments of the Government, namely, Tourism, Transport, the Secretary of State, and Employment and Immigration, have all had the opportunity to evaluate this proposal and make constructive suggestions. All Ministers of these respective Departments are to be commended for their genuine interest and understanding in meeting the increasing needs faced by the disabled.

I sincerely hope, however, that some form of financial assistance will be found for this commendable and innovative proposal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MINING OF NICARAGUAN WATERS BY UNITED STATES—CONDEMNATION BY WORLD COURT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the World Court condemned the United States for mining Nicaraguan territorial waters contrary to international law. The United States Government has said that it will ignore this judgment. What a sad day for leadership in the western world!

Here we have another example of the greatest power in the NATO Alliance systematically undermining international institutions which are the only alternative to military power in resolving international disputes. This comes one day after the United States House of Representatives voted $100 million for military aid to the Contra terrorists fighting to overthrow the legitimate Nicaraguan Government.

The United States has also sabotaged the Contadora peace process in Central America. It seems that the U.S. has forsaken the negotiated peaceful settlement of conflicts for a policy of military solutions. It appears that the policy of the present U.S. Government is "might is right", which is the law of the jungle—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Sixty seconds.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN OTTAWA AREA

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, local consumers in Nepean—Carleton are being treated unfairly in respect of the cost of gasoline. The average price for gasoline in the Ottawa area during June was 44.8 cents per litre, while prices in other metro areas in Ontario were from 4 cents to 6 cents per litre less. There is a strong implication that these price differences are a result of oil companies recognizing a stable market and regulating prices.

Canadians are aware that our country is operating in a deregulated market where the price of gasoline is not set by government but by market forces. However, a 4 cent to 6 cent per litre differential is too great a difference and cannot be accounted by transportation costs.

I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) to investigate this example of potential price maintenance and to raise this concern immediately with Petro-Canada, which is now one of two major market trend-setters in the Ottawa area.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF REGULATION ON PENSIONS OF FORMER WHITE FARM EQUIPMENT WORKERS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking this morning on behalf of some 600 outraged former White Farm Equipment workers in Brantford, Ontario.

Their pension program was just settled this past week. Most of them will be receiving a paltry $1,500 lump sum, to be invested over the next 25 years or 30 years in the hope that by the time they turn 65 years of age they will be receiving about $130 per month.

The problem is that those who are on unemployment insurance—and I understand there are about 300 of them—will have their UI benefits cut off, thus reducing the pension pay-out by at least half.

In view of the fact that almost all the 600 workers were laid off nine months before the new iniquitous UI regulation was brought in last January, I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to rescind that regulation and allow these White Farm workers to receive at least the paltry $1,500 or $2,000 for which they worked for some 15 or 20 years.

THIRD WORLD RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I have just finished reading a new book entitled With Our Own Hands. It is a story about research and Third World development. On the whole it is a success story. It is of interest to Canadians for two reasons. First, it is about IDRC. Second, it concerns, directly or indirectly, several Canadian research institutions including the famous university in Guelph.

I have asked the President of IDRC for enough copies to give to all Members of the House.

SPORTS

CANCELLATION OF TRAVEL SUBSIDY FOR UNIVERSITY ATHLETES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to protest the elimination by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) of the travel subsidy for students to travel from Atlantic and Pacific Canada to attend Canadian university athletic competitions. From an original $500,000 allotted by Liberal Governments, to $378,000, to zero by the Conservative Government for university athletic travel subsidies, is another example of the Government's disdain for regional equality.

The purpose of the federal travel equalization grant to the Canadian Inter-University Athletic Union was to allow students from universities in British Columbia, Alberta, and other parts of western Canada right through to Memorial University in Newfoundland, to attend and participate in competitions across Canada. I must ask, Mr. Speaker, if some of the taxpayers' money that is spent on the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) foreign travel could not be spent just as effectively on travel for students from British Columbia and Newfoundland to attend their university competitions.

The Minister has given me an undertaking to meet again with the university representatives. I will be following the results.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO PAGES AND STAFF

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate today to pay tribute to all the men and women who have made our jobs as Members of Parliament immeasurably easier over the last year. To the messengers, mail people, cafeteria and restaurant staff, committee and House Clerks and all the other House of Commons staff, on behalf of my colleagues on both sides of the House I offer my sincere thanks and appreciation.

I would also like to thank a very special group of young Canadians whose cheerfulness and dedication have been a fine example to us all. The 40 House of Commons Pages have worked very hard for all Members this year while at the same time attending university full-time. This year's Pages were chosen from hundreds of qualified applicants. They represent all the potential Canada's youth have to offer.

I know that the memories and friendships formed this year will remain strong as the Pages continue their individual endeavours, and I want to wish them all the very best as they pursue their careers in their chosen fields.

Whatever they do, wherever they go, I know my colleagues join me in wishing them every success. I would not be surprised if some of them returned to sit in the House of Commons as Members of Parliament. God bless them!

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

RESTARTING OF FORMER GULF PLANT IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, Montreal East residents heard another good news: the Lavalin engineering firm announced that it would restart the former Montreal East Gulf plant through its Phénolmont affiliate. This investment by a Quebec private sector concern will create over 200 jobs when production begins in January 1987. This is further indication that prospects for the Montreal East petrochemical industry are brightening. As Hon. Members may recall, last year our Government gave financial support to Pétromont to help the company maintain its operations.

Notwithstanding what many Opposition Members may have stated last winter, Montreal East will remain a major petrochemical centre. Although Opposition Members took a negative approach with respect to employment in Montreal East, our Government has always been convinced that a positive position was justified in this instance.

Once again the Government has fulfilled its political engagements for the Montreal region. That is a good Government, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MISMANAGEMENT IN MANITOBA REGION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's special investigation into the Manitoba region of the Department of Indian Affairs substantiated charges made by the Manitoba chiefs. Departmental officials had incorrectly coded disbursements of funds, had been involved in misleading reporting, had underfunded programs that had been transferred to Indian band control, and had cut existing programs. Further, departmental officials at a high level had made incorrect statements to the Public Accounts Committee of the House. In spite of these very serious charges, the Minister has not yet sat down with Manitoba chiefs to discuss what must be done to correct this situation.

The chiefs put their reputation on the line when they made the charges. Today the Government's credibility with Indian people is on the line. The Minister must sit down with the Indian chiefs to work out a proper response to these charges of departmental abuse.

DISASTERS

STATUS OF CRIMINAL INQUIRY INTO AIR-INDIA CRASH

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My question is directed to the Solicitor General and concerns a rather delicate matter. I am referring to the Air-India crash in which 329 people, most of them Canadians, lost their lives.

The Solicitor General is aware that the victims' families are still very much affected by this disaster and are waiting for answers.

Could the Minister report to the House on the status of the criminal investigation being conducted by Canada and inform the House when he expects it to be completed?

• (1115)

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can indicate that the criminal investigation is still under way. We are not in a position to lay charges at this time, but the investigation is continuing.

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION INVESTIGATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question on this subject to the Prime Minister. There have been public inquiries into this crash in both Ireland and India, yet the majority of passengers on the plane were Canadian. This week both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Canadian Security Intelligence Review Committee indicated that the plane was bombed by terrorists. Does the Prime Minister not feel that it is in the public interest to have a Canadian Royal Commission thoroughly investigate this crash?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an unprecedented degree of resources has been committed to this police investigation. The police and the Government are determined to prosecute those responsible for this act of horror.

SECURITY INTELLIGENCE REVIEW COMMITTEE REPORT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in its report the Security Intelligence Review Committee says:

> We were concerned with the intelligence produced in this matter and the quality of airport security in general.

This is a matter of intense public importance. Would the Prime Minister not agree that we need a wider and public inquiry of this crash?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has looked into this. There are ongoing police investigations and, as well, investigations by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service under way.

Yesterday the Member for York South—Weston indicated that the individuals suspected of being responsible for the Air India crash had been able to flee the country and escape prosecution. That is not the case.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What is the case?

Mr. Kaplan: Do you know who they are?

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it has been over a year since the tragedy occurred. There has been an inquiry in Cork, Ireland, and another in India. We still do not have the benefit of those two reports, specifically the report conducted by Judge Kirpal in India. Many disturbing questions remain unanswered. The Security Intelligence Review Committee has now called into question the role of the Security Intelligence Service.

I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the questions that have been raised in this matter, and in view of the fact that many of the passengers were Canadian, will he undertake now to initiate a judicial inquiry in order to answer the disturbing questions which remain unanswered?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in the Hon. Member's question he indicated quite correctly that the Security Intelligence Review Committee is presently reviewing whether the work done by CSIS was adequate. Let us allow it to do that job.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the Government of Canada is reluctant to initiate a judicial inquiry. In view of the circumstances surrounding the tragedy, it seems obvious that there ought to be a Canadian inquiry. I would like to direct the question again to the Prime Minister. In view of the sensitivities involved in this particular tragedy will he assume his role and order a judicial inquiry into this matter to answer all the questions which remain unanswered?

• (1120)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be fully aware of the fact that there is an ongoing police investigation here. The RCMP, CSIS, and others are actively looking into all aspects of the Air-India tragedy. As well, they are investigating the bombing of Narita Airport in Tokyo. It would be completely counter-productive if we were to set up some sort of parallel inquiry in competition with the police investigation currently under way. What individual Members of Parliament should be doing is not giving misinformation on the floor of the House of Commons, as the Hon. Member did yesterday, and not urging competing judicial inquiries. Rather, we should be allowing the police and CSIS to do their job.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

INQUIRY CONCERNING INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Within an hour the Government will introduce a Bill which will increase drug prices for Canadians from coast to coast. Will the Prime Minister now acknowledge to the House that the reason the Government is doing this on the last sitting day before the recess is because it is part of President Reagan's agenda spelled out in his May letter to Senator Packwood?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday I allowed questions about a Bill which is not yet introduced. The Hon. Member is now saying that he wishes to ask questions about a Bill which is about to be introduced. That gets us right into the area of Orders of the Day. I ask him to phrase his question to the Government on policy matters without reference to a Bill in that sense, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I believe I am clearly in order but I accept your ruling. Does the Government intend to introduce a Bill as a follow-up to President Reagan's stipulation to a U.S. Senator that it was an unfulfilled agenda item to clear up this kind of irritant? Specifically, was it as a result of a request made by the Vice-President of the U.S. to the Prime Minister when he was here two weeks ago? Is that why we are going to have a Bill which will increase the price of drugs to Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Vice-President of the United States never raised any such matter with me.

Mr. Broadbent: It is interesting that he did raise it with me after he talked to the Prime Minister, and said it was one of the items on his agenda.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the President has indicated that before there is a trade agreement there has to be a clearing up of all these irritants, among which the Americans have always included the drug industry. Why is Canada making sacrifices in the fishing, logging, and publishing sectors, and now in drugs, and the Americans get the benefits?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's statement is of course as inaccurate as his prediction that the last Budget would cost 150,000 jobs. The last Budget created hundreds of thousands of jobs. He was wrong then and he is wrong again.

Legislation introduced in the House is designed to increase access to international markets, including American markets. We deal with specific matters from time to time, as does any Government. We deal with those items in a way consistent with the national interest. If my hon. friend disagrees with any piece of legislation, as he does from time to time, he will express his views in the House of Commons at an appropriate time and vote against it.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON CONSUMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister think by introducing this legislation on the last day before the summer recess that Canadians will ignore the fact they are going to pay millions, and I will just leave it at millions, of dollars in higher drug prices? Are they going to forget that during the summer any more than pensioners forgot what the Government tried to do to them on the eve of last summer's recess?

• (1125)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my honourable friend should get out of the prediction business. He is a good Member of Parliament, but he does not do very well when he looks to the future. He is wrong nine times out of ten and he is wrong again today.

You can be sure that legislation that is brought in now or any other time, which can be criticized by my honourable friend, and perhaps improved pursuant to constructive suggestions, is designed to be helpful to job creation, to regional growth, and to new jobs created here in Canada, which we need. Notwithstanding a job-creation record where more jobs were created in Canada than all of western Europe combined, we must do more.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DURATION OF DRUG PATENTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Twenty-four hours after the U.S. Trade Commission hammered the Canadian softwood industry, what sense does it make for the Government to put forward legislation today to increase the patent life for the multinational American drug companies? How are we enhancing our Canadian trade bargaining position by this kind of a—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, order, please. The Chair is in a difficulty because the same problem is now raised here where questions are being asked about legislation that is not yet before the House. Either it is anticipation or it is hypothetical. Order, please.

I think the Member can ask a question on policy matters without reference to the specific Bill.

Mr. Frith: Mr. Speaker, twenty-four hours after the U.S. Trade Commission has hammered the Canadian softwood industry, does the Prime Minister consider it wise that his Government would table legislation in this House that is going to increase patent life for the American multinational drug companies, and how is that move going to improve our bargaining position by this type of giveaway?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last lesson that anyone needs on anything in terms of skill is from the Liberal Party, and from this particular Member. We saw, when the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance, spending rose 23 per cent a year, the debt grew by 50 per cent, and debt service grew by 85 per cent. It was a result of those skills that he brought to bear that the country almost went belly up. That is the problem with the little Liberal attitude. Ours is progressive. We believe in international trade, competitiveness, increased productivity, and 600,000 new jobs already in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, we will not take any lessons from a Prime Minister who gave away FIRA, and the National Energy Program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Frith: How can the Prime Minister defend this legislation when his own report on intellectual property rights states that stronger intellectual property protection will not necessarily result in changes in trade patterns between Canada and the U.S., but will accomplish the goal of stronger international protection benefiting the American nationals financially?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the McMillan Binch newsletter it said that the National Energy Program is a legislative nightmare laced with ministerial and bureaucratic discretion. Then it said we cannot afford the outflows associated with more FIRA-induced Canadianization. The Leader of the Opposition was applauding our position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The idea today is to get as many Members recognized as possible.

STATUS OF WOMEN

FUNDING OF WOMEN'S PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have an important question to direct to the Secretary of State. Yesterday representatives of many women's groups reminded the Minister of Canada's commitment to UN conventions to eliminate discrimination against women, to the Nairobi forward looking strategies, to improve the status of women, and also to equality under our own Canadian Charter. In view of these commitments that Canada has made, will the Minister reconsider the new 5 per cent cut to Secretary of State women's programs which is, in fact, a 16 per cent cut from 1983 commitments?

• (1130)

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that in 1983, funding for the program to promote the status of women was around $5 million, and that this year, the Government will be allocating $12,453,000 to defend the status of women in Canada.

[English]

VOLUNTARY WORK DONE BY WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered the concerns that were expressed yesterday. Does he not realize how little women's groups get now, how much voluntary labour they put into their efforts, as well as the uncertainty involved? Will he end their uncertainty and restore full funding for women's programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, last night I met 60 representatives from various Canadian organizations with whom we had a very good exchange of view. Although they obviously thought more money could be spent, they acknowledged that it was quite reasonable of the Government, considering all the financial restrictions it must cope with, to allocate nearly $13 million to defend the rights of women. And we intend to continue to do so, but I repeat, always in terms of the resources available to us.

DEREGULATION

AIR SAFETY—HIRING OF ADDITIONAL INSPECTORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will the Minister finally admit that deregulation diminishes air safety, as experience has shown in the United States? And why did the Minister fail to obtain an authorization from Treasury Board to hire an additional 250 or 300 inspectors to do a good job?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, just the other day I announced further funding for the upgrading of airport security in this nation. That provides for additional person years as well as enhanced equipment, enhanced research and development, and a whole series of initiatives which will improve airport security. I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes that both safety and security have improved immensely since we have taken over as the Government.

Mr. Ouellet: The Minister's answer so far has been very timid.

AIR SAFETY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, there have been no additional inspectors and I think the Minister's attitude has to change. Does he realize that Canadians are not prepared to sacrifice air safety just for a few dollars in savings? Is he prepared not to implement Bill C-126 which he introduced yesterday before his Department has hired the additional inspectors needed to do the job?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, neither are we prepared to sacrifice safety, nor shall we.

CHALLENGE '86

JOB RE-ENTRY PROGRAM—TRAINING OF SECURITY GUARDS AT GAINERS PLANT IN EDMONTON

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister knows that her Department has historically claimed that it refuses to become involved in labour disputes. For example, this refusal means that strikers do not get unemployment insurance.

Does the practice of non-interference by her Department still exist, since the Minister is now giving taxpayers' money for on-the-job training of security guards at her old friend Peter Pocklington's Gainer plant in Edmonton?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is a training project for unemployed women in a non-traditional field. These women had been in the project long before the strike began. They are not scabs, as the Member called them yesterday. They are there to get training. We are interested in the training.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It is morally wrong and you know it.

Miss MacDonald: I will continue to monitor this program to see that the training continues to be adequate.

LOCATION OF TRAINING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister not aware that there are dozens of establishments in Edmonton that use security guards and that this kind of on-the-job training could take place at one of those establishments instead of with her ideological twin, Peter Pocklington?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite know who my twins are, I have not looked this morning to see who else looks like me. At least I do not look like the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I notice that the Hon. Member did not raise this question when this training was taking place some weeks ago. I assure him that I am interested in the quality of the training. If there is anything about that environment that deteriorates or is not conducive to training, I will see that changes are made.

TRANSPORT

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT FACTOR

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He will know that last August, in St. John's, Newfoundland, Canada's Premiers unanimously passed a resolution saying that commercial viability of transportation links must be balanced with regional economic development objectives in order that the potential of each region can be realized. The Minister of Transport ignored the specific request of the Canadian Premiers that this principle be included in the legislation that he tabled yesterday. They wanted something beyond a mere recognition that transportation is important to regional development, and that transportation policy should recognize the need to combat regional disparity. It is not there. Why?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member took time to read the Bill he would see that in the preamble, Clause 3, it is clearly stated that transportation is recognized as a tool for economic development. That has never been stated in previous transportation legislation. It is part and parcel of the agreement that was signed by all the provinces and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion approximately a year ago. It forms a very integral and vital part of the Government's approach to regional economic expansion.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister would not want to mislead the House inadvertently by suggesting that the Premiers endorsed this tepid statement of fact. Will the Minister insert a clause in that Bill that will ensure that the regional disparity programs of other federal Departments and provincial Governments will not be destroyed because of the deregulation approach that is being taken, which simply has a market-place philosophy rather than a philosophy that recognizes the need to combat regional disparity?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this transportation Bill is the best news for regional economic expansion this country has ever seen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: That is not true and you know it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Before the Hon. Member inadvertently misleads the House, perhaps he should have attended the technical briefing which we sponsored for the opposition Parties yesterday, which they refused to attend. Maybe they would understand the Bill a little better if they had attended that meeting.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MAIL DELIVERY IN NEW SUBDIVISIONS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. The Parliamentary Secretary has said that Canadians waiting for home delivery in new subdivisions can forget it. Instead of developing policy at the Post Office by slips of the tongue, will the Minister ask Canadians whether they support his plans to treat some Canadians as second-class citizens, or whether they want him to re-examine whether rapid debt reduction at the Post Office is realistic?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question many times. We are looking at many alternatives in the Post Office. We will introduce a corporate plan soon and we will give all the details then.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC CONSULTATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister agree with the Prime Minister when he said in 1984:

> The Progressive Conservative Party feels that Canada Post's current program of rapid debt reduction is unrealistic, and is the underlying cause of problems with regard to—declining postal service—

Will the Minister personally ask Canadians whether they want to be treated fairly or want to have rapid debt reduction at the Post Office? If he does that, does he not think that the message will get through to his cabinet colleagues?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I can say yes to both questions.

Mr. Keeper: Then do something.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RESPONSIBILITY FOR NEW BRUNSWICK FOREST FIRE

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question this morning is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence and involves a promise made by the Minister to residents of Upper Gagetown, in New Brunswick, who suffered material, financial, and emotional loss because of the disastrous fires that occurred earlier this spring. In view of the Hon. Minister's statement that quick and generous compensation from the Government would take place, could he tell the House if there has been any progress whatsoever, in this respect, to report to the residents prior to the summer recess?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a board of inquiry has indeed established that the Department of National Defence was responsible for starting the fire on the range at Camp Gagetown. I have sought and received Treasury Board approval for some of the funds to compensate those affected, and I am told that the cheque-writing will start next week.

RAILWAYS

CN SHOPS IN MONCTON—LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Last week, CN made it clear that 437 workers would have to take early retirement or be transferred, this in addition to the 225 employees who lost their jobs last fall, which gives us a total of 662. Will the Minister acknowledge that his Government has a responsibility and a duty to restore to the Moncton area the several hundred jobs that have now been lost, or is he simply going to wash his hands of the whole affair, as he is doing now?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has a duty to ensure that the negotiations between Canadian General Electric and CNR proceed in an orderly fashion. I think the successful completion of that transaction would be good for Moncton, good for the Atlantic region. I would hope that the Hon. Member, rather than being so negative about this approach, would look at the brighter side and to the future in terms of a new manufacturing industry with tremendous spin-off benefits which will provide a long-term, stable future for the workers and for the community of Moncton.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF SENIOR MINISTER TO REPRESENT NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the news about General Electric is good news, but it is just not enough. My supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

[English]

Will the Prime Minister appoint a senior Minister for New Brunswick so that the province can regain the clout it once had in Cabinet and counter the forces that seek to drain the lifeblood out of Atlantic Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to the reference to "clout", I would just point out a fact released by Stats Can, that more jobs were created in 20 months in Atlantic Canada than were created in total between the 1980 and 1984 elections. There was no clout previously. There was a bunch of phoney people trying to spread borrowed dollars around, and people in Atlantic Canada know that is false and misleading.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF POSSIBLE CANADAIR SALE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Could the Minister confirm to the House that recommendations made by the Canada Development Investment Corporation argued against selling Canadair to the private sector because the offers made were inadequate? And could he give the House the assurance that the Government will not insist on privatizing Canadair against the recommendations of the CDIC which is acting as the Government's agent?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to answer this question and give my hon. colleague the assurance that the privatization process is unfolding as it should. We received the recommendation from the Minister responsible, following a recommendation by the board of directors of the CDIC. The recommendation was submitted to the privatization committee, which in turn will prepare a recommendation for submission to Cabinet.

[English]

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP ISSUE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is totally uninformative. Could he tell the House if there is a recommendation or if there are acceptable offers? Will he assure that Canadair stays in Canadian hands, since there is a bid from Bombardier, and will he also assure the House that the House will have a chance to consider the deal before it is finalized, rather than presenting us with a fait accompli over the summer?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to tell my hon. colleague that there are acceptable bidders. The recommendation was a positive one. It will be studied further, presented to Cabinet, and then due process will take course.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

SCREENING OF POTENTIAL SECURITY RISKS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Customs. At the major U.S.-Canadian border crossings, U.S. custom officials have computer terminals to assist them in screening potential security risks. In light of recent cases and given the need for increased security at all of our points of entry, does the Minister have any plans to implement some high-tech system to assist our custom officials, who are the initial contact in identifying people who are potential security risks and are trying to enter Canada?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, our Department, in consultation with the Department of Immigration and the RCMP, is currently evaluating a number of such systems. We have recently completed a pilot project at Pearson International Airport. We are evaluating that at the present time.

At present our officers are issued special advisories; and also they have access to the on-line automatic procedures that are available to the Department of Immigration. So, these types of facilities are available and we will be improving them.

BANKS AND BANKING

ESTEY COMMISSION COSTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. According to the Government's own figures, the administrative costs of the Estey Commission, $1,172,000 up to the end of March, pale in comparison to the Government's expenditures on legal and financial advice, including $1,588,000 to prepare the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance for testimony, one day each, before the commission. Will the Minister tell the House when he expects to receive the Commission's report?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should comment to the Hon. Member that there is much work that was done by the lawyers for the Government in support of the work done by the Estey Commission in getting the material ready for the Estey Commission, to help the commission do its job. As far as the specific question is concerned, I have not been advised by the commission when it is expecting to report. We do hope that it will be soon, because there is legislation that we want to get on with, as the Hon. Member is well aware.

LEGAL COSTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister and the Minister of State have repeatedly said that the decision to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank was based on the best information available, why was it necessary to spend $1.6 million on coaching for the two Ministers to defend this decision before Mr. Justice Estey?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I responded to that question. There is much work that goes on in support of the activities of the members of the commission to provide them with the various pieces of information that they need from the Department in order to help them do their job. That is the basis for the work that has been done.

I caution the Hon. Member again concerning the way she has expressed the so-called bail-out. It was support of the depositors in the banks, not the banks themselves, that was the result of the expenditure by the Government of Canada.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—JOINT COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, the special joint committee, in its report, has identified an absence of any significant progress in the termination of apartheid in South Africa and recommends full economic sanctions. Does the Prime Minister not agree that this provides powerful support for imposing the full economic sanctions he promised over six months ago? Does he not think it is about time the Government acted to impose those sanctions, now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Government's action was also joined to the serious view that the best kind of action would be to try to induce a common front among all Commonwealth countries—

An Hon. Member: Still waiting for Maggie?

Mr. Mulroney: —including the United Kingdom, obviously. We received that degree of unanimous support in Nassau. It has been helpful and effective. We would look forward to the same kind of support in August. There have been meetings in Europe, yesterday and today. We have had direct communication with Prime Minister Gandhi, Prime Minister Hawke, President Kaunda and others with regard to building that kind of common front. Nationally, I met yesterday with the leadership of the CLC, Mrs. Carr and others, who have been so helpful on the issue in Canada and abroad. We are trying to put together that kind of coalition that will maintain Commonwealth unity but will also provide effective action against the evil of apartheid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1150)

REQUEST THAT CANADA IMPOSE ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall all of those conditions being placed upon the absolute promise of the Prime Minister to impose full economic sanctions if there was no progress in dismantling apartheid. What the report, which represents the views of Canadian people, asks of the Prime Minister is this. Will the Prime Minister and this Government impose immediate sanctions as a model of the minimum level of sanctions that should be applied by the Commonwealth? Will Canada not exert leadership, the kind of leadership that the report states the Government should present to the rest of the world?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend. I do not think that there is any doubt about where anyone in the House stands on this very fundamental issue. There is a great deal of unanimity in the country; but we have important meetings in train. I will be meeting with Prime Minister Thatcher here on July 13. We will then be meeting with the Commonwealth Heads of Government in London during the first week of August. The question, I suppose, is this. Does acting unilaterally now not preclude the effectiveness of Canada's participation in building a common approach? My hon. friend is signalling no. He will find many Commonwealth leaders, including leaders of black Africa, who disagree with him.

EMPLOYMENT

UTILIZATION OF CHALLENGE '86 PROGRAM FUNDING

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) levelled serious accusations concerning the utilization of Challenge '86 program funding, the kind of remarks which denigrate a program whose achievement has been to provide young Canadians with worthwhile work experience during summers.

[English]

Will the Minister responsible answer yes or no with respect to whether the allegation made in this House yesterday by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East is based on true facts?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the reference of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East to a Challenge '86 project yesterday is false. It is not a Challenge '86 project.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): What program is it?

Miss MacDonald: It has no federal funding involved. It was simply a case of a private employer going to a Canada Employment Centre for students and hiring young people for the summer from his own funds. As happens so often, the Hon. Member from N.D.G. has made false accusations. He should stand in his place and apologize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CONTRACT AWARDING POLICY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Public Works, once again concerning the departmental contract awarding policy.

A few days after the report on the contract awarding policy was tabled in the House, Canadians have learned today through the daily newspaper Le Devoir that, in 1984-85, 570 contracts valued at $6.9 million were awarded in Quebec without the benefit of public tenders.

Can the Minister tell the House whether the fact that over half of these contracts were awarded to people who contributed to the election fund of the Conservative Party of Canada is sheer coincidence?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works is absent from the House on government business. I am sure that he would be very pleased to answer the Hon. Member's question when he returns to this place.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a take-notice answer. We do not give supplementaries on take-notice answers. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down, sit down.

Mr. Boudria: Mind your own business.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker—

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT PROVISIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Yesterday Mr. Reisman continued the Government's campaign of misrepresentation on the Auto Pact and the safeguards it contains. Will the Minister publicly confirm that the Auto Pact safeguards do apply on a company-by-company basis and that this has given the Government the leverage to get individual companies to initiate new investments and new jobs here in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not precisely sure of what Mr. Reisman has said. I would want to check in detail the comments he has made before responding to the Hon. Member's question.

NEGOTIATOR'S MANDATE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister confirm that despite Mr. Reisman's personal opinions his mandate as negotiator is to fight to maintain those safeguards which everybody on each side of the industry is convinced gets jobs and investments here in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course we are seeking to create more jobs and to attract more investment into Canada. In fact there have been a couple of billion dollars go right into the riding of the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Because of the safeguards?

Mr. Mulroney: No, because of the new climate that has been created. I cannot comment on all of Mr. Reisman's observations. I did not see them all. I did see one in which he said that the Hon. Member from Windsor did not know what he was talking about, and I do not disagree with that.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Yesterday the Opposition was accused by the Minister of creating confusion regarding the National Research Council's Industrial Research Assistance Program. Unfortunately, the Minister does not realize that it is his failure to communicate, consult, and provide this House with full information that has created the confusion.

Will the Minister level with this House and admit that there were no consultations and that, if there is confusion, it is because of his failure to state his policies clearly and to advise the House of the full import of his decisions?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the House will have heard me tell the Hon. Member on several occasions now that he will have access to everything that has been communicated to the National Research Council with respect to this program. It may take the Hon. Member a little longer to comprehend what has happened, but there is certainly no longer any confusion in the NRC, or any place else.

PROGRAM FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister cancel the cut in the Industrial Research Assistance Program which will deprive some 2,000 small and medium-sized businesses of vital research support? Will he enter into real consultations with the Council, as members of the Council have asked, and as he is obliged to do under the law?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, again I repeat that there have been no cuts to the program to which the Hon. Member makes reference. As has been the practice in the past, parts of the program—and it is 5 per cent of the program this year—will be used for space-related activities. That is a decision which the Government has made in its wisdom. It was communicated in a timely fashion to the people who are managing the program for us.

Mr. Speaker: One question. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

DISPOSAL OF NUCLEAR WASTES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister will likely be aware that the Minister of State for the Environment for the United Kingdom visited the underground research laboratory in Lac du Bonnet a couple of weeks ago. Can the Minister assure the House that the visit of the British Minister in charge of Britain's nuclear program has nothing to do with things that the Minsiter has mentioned before about the commercial possibilities of Canada becoming a radioactive garbage dump for the world? Will she tell us why that Minister was visiting that site? Will she reassure us about the Government's intentions with respect to Lac du Bonnet?

• (1200)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment further on the answers I have already given in the House. We have no intention of allowing—

Mr. Blaikie: Why was the Minister there?

Miss Carney: We have no intention of allowing the riding of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to become a radioactive garbage dump, as was suggested, and I cannot tell the Hon. Member why the Minister from Britain was visiting. Permission is not required for visiting Ministers to go to Manitoba.

POINTS OF ORDER

ALLEGED MISATTRIBUTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) purported to recite something about the Foreign Investment Review Act from a document that he tried to attribute to me. I would like to say to him and the House that those were not my words.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that it was from a McMillan Binch newsletter—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That is exactly what the record will reflect. At that time I believe my right hon. friend was a partner with a willing pen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

ALLEGED MISSTATEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said, in reference to a statement that I made yesterday during Question Period that the PC Fund was funded by the Challenge '86 Program, that she checked and found that it was completely false. I must tell her that before I raised the question yesterday I called her Department to find out if the information that was given to me was correct. I asked for a list of the Challenge '86 funded programs in Ottawa. Her Department refused to give me this information. If the Minister would make public a list of all the programs in Canada that are funded under that program, we would never find ourselves with this kind of problem. If she were more open and would make known—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members know that this is what happens when a point of order is raised that is not a point of order. The Hon. Minister seeks to reply but it is not a point of order. I think she has already had her comment.

Miss MacDonald: Well, it may not be, but on the same point of order that was raised by the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair cannot hear because of the noise coming from the government side.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST THAT A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE BE PRINTED IN THE DEBATES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Senate sent a message to the House of Commons concerning Bill C-62, along with another message which was not read in the House because there was no Royal Assent and, for reasons which I fail to understand, this does not appear either in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings.

As it must be done, I would like the Chair to make public both the message and the observations of the Senate concerning Bill C-62. I think this should be included in Hansard because I think it is important that the House be aware of them and know that the Senate have made an important comment on a Bill which has not yet been given Royal Assent, but which will necessarily go through this process later today, I think.

I urge the Chair to give every consideration to my request because I think it is serious. A very important message has been conveyed to us and I suggest that the Chair ought to read the entire message before we go on to something else.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order simply to put in a caveat with respect to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) about messages between the two Houses. I do not want to get involved in a protracted procedural argument at this point in time but, as Your Honour is aware, I think it is the tradition, custom and convention of the two Houses of Parliament that they do not reflect upon the decisions of the other place.

With respect to messages that are received in the normal way dealing with amendments or other procedural or substantive matters relating to Bills, of course there is an established practice that has developed.

I would simply suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that when you are looking at this particular matter, it would set a very dangerous precedent indeed if we were to start sending little love letters between the Houses dealing with our views of the truth as we see it in each place.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order because I was the principal critic of the Bill when it was before the House. In this situation, the Senate has not amended the Bill, has not defeated the Bill but has respected conventions and has passed the Bill recognizing the role of the House of Commons as the elected body in Canada. However, it has in a way put forward its views in this message. It has attempted to convey to the House its dissatisfaction with the Bill.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to have the message printed in Hansard. To my way of thinking, that would be a way of providing better accommodation between the two Houses considering that there is a majority held by one Party in one House and there is a majority held by another Party in the other House. That would be a reasonable accommodation considering that this is the elected House and the other is not. I think that would be a very reasonable approach to the problem.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would simply ask you to check to see if messages of this kind from the other place have been read to the House before. If I am correct—and I may not be correct—you may find such a precedent, and if you do, I think it is a precedent which must be followed. The matter of the relationship between the two Houses and the suggestion of the government House Leader of the other place reflecting on this place are not at issue. It is simply a question of whether this has been done before. If it has, it should be done again.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that we have to spend so much time on a matter such as this. I would like to suggest that the whole thing could be resolved if the Government would take our advice and abolish the Senate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I notice that the full text of the message has been made public. It is contained in the edition of Votes and Proceedings of Thursday, June 26. This being the case, it seems to be a reasonable way of dealing with the matter. There is no necessity for it to be recorded in Hansard because it is in Votes and Proceedings.

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their interventions. The matter has been absolutely dealt with in the traditional House way.

To answer the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), such messages are often printed in our Votes and Proceedings when they are received from the Senate. The ones which are verbally read to the House are usually notices of an indication that Royal Assent will occur later that day, in order to inform the House that that is what will happen. Many times in the past these messages have been received from the Senate and printed in Votes and Proceedings. This is the way we have handled it before.

If Hon. Members are asking me to review whether there is a point of order with regard to whether it should be printed there—in fact it has become the practice—I would be happy to review that practice, but I see no point of order.

Is the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) rising on a separate point of order?

TRIBUTE

RETIREMENT OF JEAN DRAPEAU

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House will not object if I take just a short moment to render homage to Jean Drapeau, a long-service Mayor of Montreal who just announced his retirement. His fabulous personality will be long remembered and missed for many years to come.

POINT OF ORDER

EFFECT OF PROROGATION ON REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I have one more matter with which I must deal. Unfortunately it is a little longer than normal. Yesterday the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) asked me to deal with a matter, and I think it is important to deal with it before we break for the summer recess.

The Hon. Member raised a point of order as to the effect of prorogation on requests made for Government responses to committee reports. Implicit in the Hon. Member's query is the understanding that normally the effect of prorogation is to abolish all pending proceedings. However, an exception is made in some respects. Standing Order 121 provides:

A progrogation of the House shall not have the effect of nullifying and Order or Address of the House for returns or papers, but all papers and returns ordered at one session of the House, if not complied with during the session, shall be brought down during the following session, without renewal of the Order.

Standing Order 99(2) which pertains to responses to committee reports reads as follows:

Within 120 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the Government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

It would be well perhaps to engage as briefly as I can at this point in some textual analysis of the terms "order for return" and "Standing Order". As noted in Citation 412 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, at page 150, an order of the House is a decision of the House directing that something be done. Abraham and Hawtrey in "A Parliamentary Dictionary", Third Edition, at page 186, define a return as "a paper or document presented to either House in pursuance either of its order or an address". By combining these two definitions we may deduce that an "order for return" is a short form of stating that there is a decision of the House directing that a paper or document be presented to it.

A Standing Order is, as its very name implies, an order of the House which is to have a continuing effect. In my view by its adoption of Standing Order 99(2) on February 24, 1986 the House therefore made a decision directing that within 120 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the Government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto. In other words, the House thereby made a continuing order for the return of requested responses and, by virtue of Standing Order 121, further ordered that such returns should survive prorogation.

It seems to the Chair that the same reasoning developed earlier in these remarks can be applied in respect of responses to petitions as required by Standing Order 106(8) which provides:

The Ministry shall, within 45 days, respond to every petition referred to it.

The practice has developed of tabling these responses in the House. It would therefore appear that that practice has accorded to responses to petitions the status of returns ordered by the House, which are capable of surviving prorogation.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I accept your decision, and I think I agree with it also. However, I just want to make one important point. If the report in question had not been adopted by the House, would it still be an order of the House? If the report is pending, in other words no concurrence motion has been made, does Your Honour's ruling still apply?

Mr. Speaker: The answer to that question is that if Standing Order 99(2) applies today, it applies tomorrow.

WESTBANK INDIAN BAND

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I could have one of your stronger pages, I would table some documents. In accordance with Standing Order 67(1), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the documents related to the Westbank Indian Band.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary will understand that I hope he does not have any further tablings today.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT OF CANADIAN SECTION OF CANADA-U.S. INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the final report of the official parliamentary delegation of the Canadian section of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group, which attended the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group in Tucson, Arizona from February 28 to March 3, 1986.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURES—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure and, if the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in the report later this day.

ENVIRONMENT AND FORESTRY—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

This report on forest resources and industries in eastern Canada is the result of a study undertaken by the former Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and concluded by the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry. The report contains 27 recommendations, including a recommendation that the Government consider the creation of a department of forestry.

Knowledge, vigilance, concerted action, and integration have become keywords for all of those involved in the forest industry. The present time is crucial for our forest resources and their many uses. Canadians must draw upon their reserves of ingenuity and flexibility to guarantee that this great resource will last forever.

Through this report the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry hopes to encourage timely exchanges of ideas and to have thus contributed to the discovery of appropriate solutions.

CANADA PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACT—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-92, an Act to regulate interests in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act, as amended.

MULTICULTURALISM—THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the third report of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

In relation to its mandate under Standing Order 96(3)(d) relating to multiculturalism, your committee is pleased to present a report summarizing activities in its first year of existence.

The committee met 22 times, and 14 of these sittings were open to the public. Appendix I contains a list of dates of committee meetings, together with the names of those who appeared as witnesses.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT—SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development to which, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response.

The North has expressed a desire to get on with solving its problems, creating employment, and building for the future. The committee sincerely hopes that its 21 recommendations will be helpful, and I thank all those who helped present the report.

PETITIONS

REQUEST FOR DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN WINNIPEG

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by some 50 of my constituents who say that in their opinion that all Canadians pay taxes and, therefore, pay for the services of Canada Post and that no Canadian should have to receive second or third-class postal service. They humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to direct Canada Post to change its policy of installing group and community mail boxes in new neighborhoods and to reinstate daily door-to-door delivery to all homes in Winnipeg.

AIR CANADA—EMPLOYEES RIGHT OF FREE SPEECH

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and the honour to present an 85 page petition signed by some 1,000 Canadians who humbly show that in their opinion flight attendant Toni Corrado was unfairly treated by Air Canada, and the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to issue a strong policy directive to Air Canada and to all other Crown corporations and federal Departments to guarantee the right of free speech to all employees, to ensure discipline procedures that uphold Canada's standard of justice, including protection of rights under Canada's Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the guarantee of an impartial hearing when those rights may have been breached and the right of an accused to face his or her accusor.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes of the House to present further petitions dealing with the grounds of the Governor General, specifically the unfortunate closing of the grounds to the general public. I think I have now tabled approximately 150 petitions. These are the last that I have with me today. The petitioners are asking the Government and Parliament to open up the decision for further consultation with a group of citizens representive of the large and growing opposition in order that a modus vivendi be created that will satisfy both the Government and the public. Indeed, if the security of the Governor General is in question, let us provide her with all the security she needs. Let us open the lands and the park to Canadians who want to see it.

OPPOSITION TO ABORTION LAWS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition signed by a handful of my constituents in my electoral district who are opposed to the present abortion laws and who belong to one of the Pro-Life groups.

REQUEST FOR CONTINUED INDIVIDUAL MAIL DELIVERY TO RURAL AREAS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition signed by many hundreds of people who live on rural routes in and around Thunder Bay. The names were collected through the good offices of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). These petitioners direct Canada Post to halt its discriminatory cut-backs in service to rural residents and call on Canada Post to maintain individual mailbox delivery on its rural routes.

USE OF PENSION INCOME IN CALCULATION OF UI BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and privilege to present petitions signed by many residents of the Hamilton area and many residents of the British Columbia area of Comox. These petitioners are protesting the change in the Unemployment Insurance Act which has seen pension income being used as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes. They call upon Parliament to request the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to withdraw that iniquitous change in the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Petitions

OPPOSITION TO LIBERALIZATION OF AVAILABILITY AND DISTRIBUTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition duly certified by many residents of Willowdale who are voicing their opposition against any liberalization of availability and distribution in Canada of any pornographic material which exploits human dignity.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-293, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (primacy of bilingualism).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am back with another Bill aimed at confirming the primacy of bilingualism, as expressed in Section 2 of the Official Languages Act, over the other statutes, orders and regulations of Parliament and the Government of Canada.

My purpose is to ensure the primacy of the Official Languages Act and thus avoid embarrassing situations of the kind we had with the Gens de l'air, for instance.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CURRENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-294, an Act to amend the Currency Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, as you know, for 23 years it has always been my view that we should do everything in our power to educate our young people across Canada, and that is why today, I have the honour of tabling this Bill which is aimed at honouring the memory of our former Prime Ministers.

[English]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have honoured Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Robert Borden and William Lyon Mackenzie King. The object of this Bill is to honour John Diefenbaker. Since a decision is about to be taken, but has not as yet, I hope the authorities responsible will consider this as an honour to be given to Mr. Diefenbaker, to be followed by a bill later on to honour Mr. Louis St. Laurent, Mr. Pearson and others so that Canadians, young Canadians in particular, will know the history of Canada better.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that the rules require a brief summary of the Bill at this point.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

THE ADMINISTRATION

BOARD OF INTERNAL ECONOMY—EMPLOYER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties and, as you will recall yourself, Sir, there have been discussions by the Board of Internal Economy membership, and I think you will find a disposition to accept the following motion at this time and to pass it unanimously without debate. I move:

That the Board of Internal Economy shall be deemed to be the employer in respect of employees of the House of Commons, as defined in and for the purposes of "An Act respecting employment and employee and employer relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. It requires unanimous consent for its introduction. Is there such consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

CONCURRENCE IN TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved:

That the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts presented to the House on Wednesday, April 30, 1986, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt that motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I moved concurrence in this report because of the "no" you heard from over there. I think this report is important. I think it should be adopted by the House. I think it reflects highly on the good work that our committees have been doing and should, in my view, be accepted by this House as an important contribution to the parliamentary process and to getting things done in the bureaucracy which will help us better understand and better explain to our constituents what is happening.

There are four major concerns in the report of this committee. The concerns deal with the layoffs of public servants and the reverse order of merit which the commission claims is in effect. It also states that 98 per cent of staffing responsibilities have been delegated to Departments but that the commission is responsible for the monitoring. However, their efforts are less than adequate, especially as they relate to affirmative action programs. We all know that this House thinks affirmative action programs are important. Therefore, it is most valuable to us that a committee recommends that this system of affirmative action be strengthened.

I do not intend to speak very long on this matter. The staffing system in the public service, by the committee's own admission, is cumbersome and slow. If I understand the report correctly, the average time to fill a vacancy ranges from 136 to 160 days. Evidence to that effect was presented to the committee. In some cases it was possible to reduce the time for filling vacancies to 44 days. If it is possible in certain circumstances to reduce the time for the filling of vacancies to 44 days, I see no reason why the average should be in excess of 136 days and sometimes up to 160 days.

I will take a few minutes to tell the House about the recommendations of this report because I think they are important and imperative to the good working of the Public Service of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Committee's first recommendation is as follows, and I will read it to you:

Your Committee recommends that the Commission develop an action plan for the simplification and condensation of rules and regulations on staffing and report its progress in doing so in writing to your Committe by September 30, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, it is almost the end of June, the House is adjourning today, and since the report has yet to be adopted, we have a situation where the Commission would not be obliged to make its report, and that is one of the reasons why I insist the report be adopted by the House today.

Mr. Speaker, another recommendation reads as follows:

Your Committee recommends that the Commission:

(a) provide your Committee with a written report by September 30, 1986 on its progress in improving its monitoring of departmental staffing procedures;

Mr. Speaker, we know that 98 per cent of staffing authority has been delegated to the departments. We want the Commission to report on its progress in order to make the Commission more accountable to Parliament for staffing, because there is a system providing that public servants can appeal, and we would like to be sure that there is a system that would satisfactorily monitor the fairness of these procedures.

The second recommendation in (b) reads as follows:

(b) include in the aforementioned report evidence of consultations with the Auditor General to ensure full compliance with his recommendation that the Commission monitor adherence to its policies and procedures, as set forward in the Personnel Management Manual;

Mr. Speaker, I don't think we have any problem understanding that—and (c) develop effective procedures to monitor and assess departments' progress in implementing affirmative action programs and report progress in this regard in writing by—

—once again, Mr. Speaker—

—September 30, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, as the employer, the Government and this Parliament must be concerned about the implementation of affirmative action programs and must have a report from the Commission on effective procedures to monitor and assess progress.

12. Your Committee recommends that the Commission:

(a) develop an action plan for the whole public service to significantly reduce the average amount of time required to staff a position, while taking care to maintain employees' legal rights; and

(b) report progress in this regard in writing to your Committee by September 30, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps the most important recommendation, and I believe it is indeed important that by September 30, 1986, the Commission should provide for a better and more effective staffing system that would make appointments on a more equitable basis and would not involve endless bureaucratic delay before a vacancy is filled.

Fourth:

15. Your Committee recommends that:

(a) the Commission immediately issue guidelines to departments and agencies governing the implementation of reverse order of merit;

Mr. Speaker, the reverse order of merit is used by the Commission in the case of lay-offs, when it declares a person surplus to its needs. We would like to know the Commission's guidelines for applying the reverse order of merit.

(b) the Government table quarterly reports on lay-offs within the public service;

Mr. Speaker, I don't think this needs a great deal of explanation. We know the Government has announced it would cut 15,000 jobs in the Public Service in the next five years, and we are asking the Government simply to table quarterly reports on lay-offs, so that we as parliamentarians will know how a policy that we feel is a very difficult and even traumatic for some people is being implemented.

(c) the Commission report back to your Committee with respect to recommendation (a) above by September 30, 1986; and

(d) the Gouvernment respond to recommendation (b) above in accordance with Standing Order 99(2).

That, Mr. Speaker, is something we can discuss. You ruled today that it was relevant, and that the Government will obviously have to reply, because the order of the House stands, and even if Parliament is prorogued, the order has been made. Fifth:

18. Your Committee recommends that the Commission:

(a) clarify its staffing audit mandate and report its progress in so doing to your Committee in writing by September 30, 1986;

Once again: September 30, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, the Commission has a mandate under the Public Service Employment Act, and the Public Service Commission is an agent of Parliament. Therefore, Parliament must know exactly what kind of auditing mandate the Commission has under our system. What kind of methodology, Mr. Speaker, does the Commission use to carry out its mandate for staffing audit?

(b) report in writing to your Committee on its progress in implementing the Auditor General's recommendations in the area of auditing by September 30, 1986 and again by September 30, 1987; and

Mr. Speaker, these are two important dates, and we are asking the Government to report, in writing, by the end of September and, subsequently, in September 1987. Finally:

(c) include in the aforementioned reports evidence of consultations with the Auditor General to ensure full compliance with his recommendation that the Commission complete directives on staffing audit methods, scope and documentation, ensure adherence to these directives, review all audit files, introduce quality control measures and ensure adequate training for auditors.

Everyone agrees that the report from the Public Accounts Committee is a good report, an excellent report, and that it is high time the Public Service Commission, an agent of Parliament as I said before, told the House what it does and provided the House with a clear picture of how it exercises its mandate.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this debate, but I would like the House to proceed with a vote on this report, to take a positive attitude to this report and to support and adopt the report in question.

• (1240)

[English]

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts now and at the time the tenth report number 10 was prepared and tabled in this House, I would like to join with my friend from Ottawa—Vanier and support his motion for adoption of this report. It sets out a number of recommendations which my friend has outlined to the House. Those recommendations came, first of all, out of a report by the Auditor General and, secondly, out of hearings specifically held by the committee which relate to the material in the Auditor General's report.

The chairman of the Public Service Commission was called before the committee as a witness and presented evidence in response to questions relating to the role of the PSC in hiring and staffing in the Public Service. As a new Member in this House I learned a great deal about the procedure for Public Service staffing. I was interested to learn, for example, that the PSC, under the authority of the Public Service Employment Act, has responsibility for staffing in the Public Service but in fact delegates 98 per cent of that responsibility to the departments. While there is the appearance that the PSC is the major force in the whole procedure, the actual responsibility for administering the staffing procedure lies not with the PSC but with the government departments involved. That created some real problems and led to the recommendations in this report.

The first recommendation deals with simplification and condensation of the rules and regulations governing staffing procedures. My understanding of the evidence was that there are several volumes of rules and regulations which every department manager has to follow. However, the evidence indicated that it was in fact impossible for any manager to have a firm grasp or understanding, or even to have read anything but a small fraction of the rules and regulations. As a result, it was and is quite clear to the committee that in no way, shape or form can these rules and regulations, which if piled end to end would probably be two or three feet high, possibly be carried out in any legitimate fashion by the various managers. Therefore that is an important recommendation which we should see implemented by the PSC.

The recommendation that I would like to target in on most specifically has to do with affirmative action. The recommendation is that the PSC develop effective procedures to monitor and assess a department's progress in implementing affirmative action programs and report that progress in writing by November 30, 1986. This Parliament has spent a good deal of time discussing the issue of employment equity. We had an employment equity Bill before us. It was substantially debated on second reading. There was a good deal of discussion in committee. It then came back to the House and there was a tremendous amount of discussion at report stage and on third reading. From what I understand there has since been a lot of discussion in the Senate on the Bill as well.

There was a feeling, if I grasped it correctly, in many parts of society that the Bill on employment equity did not go far enough in addressing some of the problems of affirmative action, if we can call it that. You will remember there were four target groups outlined in that Bill: women, the disabled, native people and visible minorities. The gist of the Bill was to make sure that in all dealings governed by federal law the principles of employment equity with respect to those four target groups should be put in place, made effective and maintained. The Bill itself did not deal with the federal Civil Service. Neither did it deal with businesses which contract with the federal Government. However, the Government at that time indicated as far as contractual relationships with other businesses were concerned, it was going to put in place by regulation the same sort of rules. At the same time it indicated that rules and regulations had already been put in place with respect to the federal Civil Service. However, it became quite clear in the discussions relating to the employment equity legislation that that was not the reality.

The previous Government had some affirmative action programs put into place specifically dealing with women, the disabled and native people. However, there had been no such provision for visible minorities. When the chairman of the PSC, at the request of the committee, tabled material relating to the way in which Government was performing with respect to these four target groups, it became quite clear that there had not been much progress made at all. There had been some with respect to women but virtually none with respect to the disabled, native people, and certainly not for visible minorities.

When we looked at the material tabled, particularly with respect to senior management positions in the Public Service, we found no one from the disabled or visible minority groups in those positions. Therefore it seems to me we must start to address this problem with some urgency to make sure that the Public Service truly reflects the make-up of this country's population.

There are problems in doing this, especially regarding visible minorities. For one thing, there is a problem with the identification of visible minorities. As you know, according to our human rights legislation the question of race and colour cannot be asked on employment applications. That immediately puts the federal Civil Service at a disadvantage when it comes to trying to implement some form of affirmative action program for visible minorities.

Since September 4, 1984, when the present Government took office, there has been a specific effort made to implement affirmative action for visible minorities, and to overcome the technical problems of identifying visible minorities in the Public Service. This has been done on a voluntary basis asking all Members of the Public Service to agree or disagree with their consent to have this identification. It is starting to take some shape. There is starting to be a data base and there is starting to be some basis for actually ensuring that the program of emloyment equity at senior levels of government with respect to visible minorities can now start to become effective.

• (1250)

There is a specific women's secretariat within the Government to monitor whether women are going into place under the affirmative action program that was established some years ago. It seems to me that this is the same sort of thing that we should be doing with visible minorities and these other target groups. It is only in that way that we are going to ensure that this sort of a program is carried out and that we do have a Public Service that truly reflects the realities of life in this country and the realities of the make-up of the Canadian population.

It is with all of that in mind that I feel that the motion by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is certainly one that should be adopted by this House. There has been a feeling in the past that, as I understand it, because of the fact that the Public Service Commission is not a department of Government and supposedly is independent of Government, if there is a recommendation by a parliamentary committee with respect to it, it will not be acted upon by the Public Service Commission because it does not feel that the force of Parliament stands behind it.

If this motion by the Hon. Member is adopted then Parliament will have, for the first time, I understand it, agreed and approved recommendations of a parliamentary committee with respect to the Public Service Commission. It will therefore have the force of Parliament behind it, the force of the people of Canada behind it, and the Public Service Commission will not have the option to ignore it, but must move forward and adopt it.

It is with that in mind that I would like to support very strongly the motion made by the Hon. Member, and I trust that the House will agree to adopt the tenth report of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I only want to take a few minutes to reiterate and agree with the comments made by my colleague for Ottawa-Vanier when he brought to our attention today the very good recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee.

I would be remiss in my remarks if I did not start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for the excellent work that she does in chairing the Public Accounts Committee. I know that every Member of this House would agree with me in that regard.

As a member from the national capital area I am very concerned with some of the problems that we see right now whereby it takes between 136 to 160 days to fill vacant positions in the Government. There are two reasons why, of course, that I am very concerned with this.

[Translation]

First of all, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that when a position remains vacant for 150 or 160 days, which is almost six months, the former incumbent's co-workers have to do that person's job in addition to their own work. The present system therefore puts an additional burden on the other employees, and it is unfair to make them do the work of other people just because our bureaucracy has become so slow-moving.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention and to the attention of the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), who is listening very attentively down there, that today, many of my cnstituents in the National Capital Region are unemployed. And as you know, Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in the Naional Capital Region is rising, although it seems to be going down almost everywhere else in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious situation for my constituents. The eastern part of my riding, as you know, and as the Hon. Members opposite know, around Hawkesbury, has an unemployment rate of about of about 14 or 15 per cent. That is pretty serious.

But as you know, in this particular region the percentage of people working for the Government in Ottawa is relatively low. Many of my constituents who are public servants in the Ottawa-Hull area tend to live in Orleans, Cumberland and the general area, as you know of course, and these people had been in relatively good shape in recent years during the recession and after, since there was not as much unemployment in the federal Government as there was in the private sector. However, Mr. Speaker, today the situation has been reversed, which means that many of my constituents are now unemployed or are losing their jobs while other Canadians, especially in the Province of Ontario, are seeing an improvement in their economic situation.

My point is, Mr. Speaker, that when positions remain vacant for six months, it means that one of my constituents remains unemployed for that long, and I think it is important to bring this to the attention of the House, to repeat the points raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who informed the House so eloquently on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to say a few words about the lay-off or surplus list, which includes employees who are about to lose their jobs, and some of them have already left as a result of the measures introduced by the Minister of Finance, who is sitting there in his seat, and the President of the Treasury Board, the executioners of the Public Service—it is important that we bring to the attention of these two Ministers that a large number of Canadians, about 2,000 or 3,000 people, are now on this lay-off list, some of whom have already lost their jobs or are about to do so very shortly. Now if this waiting list were compressed or shortened, as it were, many of these people could be re-hired by the federal Public Service and be employed instead of staying home on unemployment insurance or welfare or any of the other programs that are open to the unemployed.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that it is very important for the House to adopt today—and I ask Hon. Members from all parties, including the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), my good friend over there, to support this Bill, even the Minister of Finance, because it is still time for him to reform, to make up for the way his restrictions and budgetary cutbacks have affected federal public servants.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear from an Hon. Member, the Member on my right, I may say on my far right, in the Conservative Parly, that the Minister of Finance had no choice. Now I ask you, Mr. Speaker, did the same Minister of Finance have a choice when he could have cut the Prime Minister's unnecessary spending? He had a choice there, and in fact a very clear and a very easy choice, and I'm delighted the Conservative Member brought this to my attention. They could have easily cut spending there. They could have said: Enough of this wasting of taxpayers' money, enough of these photographs, enough of this arrogance—17 photographs in 16 pages—on the part of the Prime Minister.

M. Ricard: He's photogenic!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member on the far right, the Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) is telling the House the Prime Minister is photogenic! Well, I am sure at least the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) thinks so, even if nobody else does. He certainly has his picture taken pretty often at taxpayers's expense, at the expense of Canadian voters, the same voters who were promised by the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition and even before then, when he said in the book he wrote or claims to have written that the Canadian Government would have to set an example and that the Canadian Government should not waste taxpayers' money.

And the same Prime Minister who was indulging in that kind of abuse today. And the Hon. Member on the far right, the Hon. Member for Laval, did well to bring this to my attention, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank him for doing so.

In any case, since I don't want to take up too much of the time of the House, so as not to upset my good friend, the Hon.Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), I will conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I ask, as my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said with such eloquence, for the unanimous support of Parliament for adopting the Tenth Report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

• (1300)

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this report is a result of deliberations by the Public Accounts Committee which go back through much of this year. I had an opportunity to take part in that committee some time prior to the presentation of the tenth report on April 30 which is before the House at this time.

I agree with my colleagues from the Conservative Party and Liberal Party that this report should be concurred in unanimously. I certainly will ensure that my colleagues in the New Democratic Party will join in concurrence.

This report reflects the very serious concern of the Public Accounts Committee, upon reviewing the staffing actions and the role of the Public Service Commission, as well as upon reviewing the March, 1985 Auditor General's Report with respect to the actions of the Public Service Commission. Other concerns also arose. The delegation of staffing by the Public Service Commmission had been almost total. The monitoring of over-staffing activity by departments was minimal as far as the Public Service Commission was concerned.

We were concerned that the departments went to such length to ensure that all the proper procedures were followed in the case of an appeal on staffing to the Commission, that it resulted in a very lengthy and time-consuming process. The report indicates that it took between 130 and 160 days to staff a position. This is certainly undesirable in administrative terms, but it also means that fellow workers in a particular area have to cover for a vacant position for as much as half a year because of those delays in staffing. This does not lend itself to effective management, nor do I believe it is fair to the employees who are applicants for positions. They are forced to delay for a long time without knowing whether the position for which they applied will be available.

The report also addresses some general problems with the Public Service Commission. I am pleased that the Public Accounts Committee called for specific responses from the Public Service Commission by September 30, 1986. This is a better procedure than simply issuing recommendations or admonishing a department or agency for failure to comply with effective management, failure to be accountable, or failure to use government funds effectively. Increasingly, the Public Accounts Committee is asking the departments or agencies whose work it reviews to report back on how it is cleaning up its act. This is a better procedure than simply leaving those departments or agencies to make the same errors and develop the same problems in the future.

However, I believe the Public Service Commission has been less than vigorous in acting on one of the specific issues cited in this report with respect to workforce adjustment policy. The Public Service Commission will act within the deadline set by the committee.

One of the committee's major concerns with respect to the workforce adjustment policy was the use of the reverse order of merit procedure in determining which public servants will be laid off when a position is terminated for whatever reason. While no one likes cut-backs, unfortunately the Government wants to impose them so it can show some blood on the floor to the people of Canada as its idea of effective management.

For whatever reason cut-backs occur, the Government is not in a position to deal particularly fairly with employees who are affected. As a member from the National Capital Region, a substantial number of employees and groups of employees have come to me because of the unfair treatment they believe they have experienced as a result of the Government's cut-back procedure known as the reverse order of merit.

Let me explain the reverse order of merit. When a department is faced with eliminating a number of jobs it must evaluate the employees carrying out those duties and determine an order of merit for those positions. Let us assume half of the employees are to be laid off. Those on the bottom half of the merit list are dumped and put on the surplus list. They are automatically labelled as being less meritorious, or not very competent, when they look for jobs elsewhere in the Public Service during that year in which they are entitled to do so, rather than being dropped completely from the Government's responsibility.

When someone from within the Public Service applies and is considered for a new position, there is a rather complex and well-developed procedure by which staffing action is undertaken if that person is passed over. There is a staffing board, a group of people including some from outside the department, who interview the applicants on the short list of those who are not cut from the written applications. They determine which are the best applicants for a particular position. Furthermore, the staffing actions are subject to review by the Public Service Commission and about 10 per cent of staffing actions within the Public Service are appealed. Perhaps 10 per cent of the appeals that go to the Public Service Commission are accepted, which amounts to a very small proportion—perhaps 1 per cent—of staffing actions being subject to some change because of intervention by the Public Service Commission. This is a very valuable form of quality control in ensuring that the merit principle is being enforced as best as possible.

However, there are no such series of checks and balances with respect to the reverse order of merit. A manager can decide, perhaps very quickly, what the order of merit shall be and employees may find themselves dumped because they have been judged to be of lower merit. They are in a very difficult position because it is very hard to grieve. There is no established appeal process, nor has one been set up.

I hope the Public Service Commission will consider this matter which I have already spoken about to some extent during my remarks when the commission's estimates came before the Government Operations Committee some time late in the month of May.

In early 1986, or maybe late 1985, in response to representations that I and others made, the commission stated that it would issue guidelines to Departments in terms of giving them a directive as to how the reverse order of merit should apply. It was curious to me that those guidelines were not in fact developed until mid-May, a week or two before the commission went before a parliamentary committee to have its estimates considered. I do not have the guidelines in front of me because I did not expect this debate today but, while they have been communicated to Departments, they have been done in a way which does not indicate that the commission attaches any particular priority to this area. They have been done weakly, they have been done limply, and the message that goes out, in my opinion, is that the Public Service Commission does not really care about this question. It is just doing it because it was forced to do so by the Public Accounts Committee and pressure coming from Members like myself and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

The Public Service of Canada has grown pretty much steadily since the Second World War, up until the last few months. There have been one or two instances in which certain functions involving certain agencies have been cut back, but in general that has been within the context of a growing Public Service. This has meant that even people affected by reorganization in their particular Department, or by the elimination of a particular branch or agency, could fairly easily have a chance at finding employment elsewhere in the Government of Canada. A good example involves the actions of the former Government in chopping the secretariats for social and economic development. Very quickly, over the course of the few months of the Turner Government, the employees who were affected were found other positions, and very few of them had to go on to the workforce adjustment surplus list in order to survive. Now we are in a cut-back mold; we have many more cut-backs. It seems to me, if a well developed procedure exists for hiring and promoting people which protects the rights of public servants, that that should be the case as well when it comes to these cut-backs, but that is not yet the case. It is not good enough, in my opinion, to just send a message or a memorandum out to personnel directors in the Departments and say, "Will you please get it through to your people in whatever way you can?"

I recall, on a different issue, that the Public Service Commission was avid in its efforts to ensure that everyone knew what was the new policy. That was when it brought forward directives or guidelines in February of 1984 relative to political rights. There was a special issue of "Dialogue Express", which went to all of the Public Service; it was widely distributed to almost every employee's desk, so that they would know what the situation was.

Now, any employee can be affected by cut-backs, by a reverse order of merit ruling. Therefore, I believe that the information now developed by the commission should in fact by now been distributed to every employee. It should be widely distributed through the unions. There should be ample consultation with the unions to ensure that employees who are affected know the rules.

If I recall correctly, the rules themselves leave much to be desired. This should in fact be improved and tightened up to ensure that there is a process for appeal, so that something that has been put into employees' files some long time ago is not now used to kind of blackball them and put them low down on the order of merit.

Some guidance should be given to Departments as to whether academic qualifications, work experience, the level of performance on the job or years of experience should be the major factors in determining merit, if the system is to be used. It is my opinion, and I think that the unions representing employees and the government service would very strongly agree, that the Government is wrong to try to take something which can be and should be applied to hiring and use it for firing, as well. When one applies reverse order of merit, too often it leads to favouritism. Too often it leads to a situation where a manager decides that he or she will "get" certain employees who, for some reason, because of chemistry, or personality, do not get along particularly well with that certain manager. Therefore, the victim is someone who stands out, someone who has an unusual working style or who has perhaps shown up the boss because of being brighter or a bit more aggressive. All of these things will occur unless there is some kind of better protection for the employees.

If one is hiring or promoting it is possible to ask, "Out of a field of 100 or 10 or 5 people, which one or two are the best employees for a particular job". In other words, it is fairly easy to make a judgment call as to which one is the best. The differences between the employee who is hired and the two or three who are not, however, are often infinitesimal. In the end, it is a judgment call. One is almost flipping a coin. Anyone who has hired knows, as I do, that one often cannot say for sure that one's judgment is right. One must simply make the best judgment one can in terms of deciding who to hire and who not to hire.

However, when it comes to firing, one is making a decision which is much more crucial to the well-being, both economic and social, of the individual employee than when one comes to hiring. If one does not hire John Doe or Mary Smith for one job, then perhaps he or she has a chance at another one; if it concerns an internal situation then at least they have jobs already. If one fires John Doe or Mary Smith, however, he or she is out on the street, and it is a difficult job market. Here in the national capital, for example, we have an unemployment rate reaching 9 per cent. Federal employees in Montreal are facing a situation where the labour market is very clogged and the unemployment rate is over 10 per cent. These circumstances prevail in many parts of the country despite some general improvement in the employment situation in the last 10 or 12 months.

If one is down to deciding which 15 of 30 employees should be dumped, the differences between employee 15 who goes and employee 14 who stays are, in fact, impossible to discern. It is a totally arbitrary decision. I suggest that that would also be the case with employee 20 and employee 10. One might be able to determine which employee is the worst or next to worst and which employee is the best or the next to best. However, in between, it is much more difficult.

I therefore believe that if firings must take place, they should take place on the basis of seniority. That is the principle accepted in the private sector where a union contract prevails and where lay-offs occur. Perhaps there should be a formula brought forward which places the major emphasis on seniority, or perhaps one which only excludes, from determination by seniority, employees who have consistently shown a very marginal work performance as shown by a series of very negative performance reviews over the two or three years prior to the cuts being made. In other words, apart from those employees who are demonstrably very marginal, I believe that seniority should be the criterion which applies.

One might also, exempt from the cuts employees who have demonstrated outstanding performance. Again, maybe 5 per cent or 10 per cent of the employees in a particular branch or division might have demonstrated outstanding performance and have earned their right to stay even if they would not be able to stay by means of seniority. However, for the most part, one is dealing with employees who are equivalent, relatively speaking, within the Government of Canada, as anywhere else. One person may have better education but may not be quite such a good performer. Another employee may not be as brilliant but is there every morning at nine o'clock, not punching the clock at 5 p.m. but, rather, sticking around to see if there is work to be done. Such employees are steady, reliable, get the work done, and serve the Department or agency faithfully and loyally, through thick and thin, through long periods of time.

How does one make judgment calls about those kinds of things? It is very difficult and that is why seniority becomes a principle which is at least acceptable and can be understood by people. One might ask, "Why should I go while she stays?" and come to the conclusion, "Well, I guess it is because she joined the Department a week before I did. I guess I should not have taken a holiday before I began working with my Department". But at least such employees understand that the decision was made on a non-discriminatory principle.

I am making those representations because the committee has recommended that the guidelines be issued to the department and that they be enforced. Let us get to that. I say to the Public Service Commission through Hansard that by September there should be an indication as to what further steps have been taken to publicize its guidelines, and whether it has by then reviewed its guidelines to make them more effective.

I want to make a final point on this report. Your Honour might indicate how much time remains to me. I believe it to be about three or four minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Three minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: The point is that I think there is a serious problem concerning the accountability of the Public Service Commission to the Parliament of Canada. Perhaps I can in fact address these remarks to Your Honour because of your responsibility for this place. The commission is an agency of Parliament. The appointments are made by Order in Council. Unfortunately, the new provisions ensuring that Parliament can review the appointments effectively will amount to a dead letter for some time because the three existing commissioners, all of whom have 10-year terms, have only been appointed in the last two or three years. Two of them were appointed in the last six to eight months.

• (1320)

The mechanism for that accountability, however, has never been thought through and has never been adequately developed. The commission works in close conjunction with the Treasury Board to the point where the functions are almost indistinguishable. Therefore, employees of the commission may tend to assume, naturally, that they form just another government department.

The commissioners appear before the Government Operations Committee once a year to defend their Estimates. This year they appeared before the committee for between an hour and a half and three hours—a short period of time. There is no other means that has been used in the past by which Parliament has enforced any form of accountability on the commission. I recognize that under the new committee system the Government Operations Committee, or some other committee, could in fact call the commission to come forward for a series of more protracted hearings, perhaps in the fall of each year when the pressure of Estimates is not upon us. That is something that I would recommend as a stopgap measure at least. I think we should think it through.

I will give an example of what has disturbed me in particular. Some two and one-half years ago the commission issued a set of guidelines with respect to the political activity of public servants which was circulated throughout the Public Service. In the opinion of many people, myself included, these guidelines went substantially beyond the letter and spirit of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Public Service Employment Act, which Acts were meant to govern political activity. They were guidelines and not regulations. The committee of Parliament which deals with regulations issued a very stiff report that was severely critical of the Public Service Commission, in that it had not put this matter into a regulation which could then be considered by a committee of Parliament. However, the Public Service Commission did nothing about that. It did not honour Parliament's word when a parliamentary committee told it that it was out of court in terms of how it had acted. There was no action, and no apparent means for taking action, by any committee of this House, or by Parliament itself, to get the Public Service Commission to act in that particular way.

I know that my time has almost expired. I think that these are important questions. I hope that they can and will be pursued over the coming months, perhaps at a time when we have another report from the Public Accounts Committee relative to the September 30 deadline for reports back from the commission on this particular report.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to address some thoughts that have occurred to me over the past little while concerning the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I listened with interest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), with whom I have served on the Public Accounts Committee. Because of his constitutency he has a greater understanding than many Members of the House with respect to the workings of the Public Service Commission.

I remember taking a look at the remarks of the Auditor General and his comprehensive audit of the Public Service Commission. At that time I remember that the committee was concerned about the problems of staffing. As a committee we addressed our thoughts to what might be done to improve the staffing and a simplification and condensation of the rules and regulations as suggested by the Auditor General. Today I want to spend some time discussing the staffing points.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that the Auditor General pointed out in his report, and I think it was referred to in the report of the committee, that authority for 98 per cent of the appointments made in the federal Public Service has been delegated to the departments. In other words, the responsibility for implementing the staffing system has been delegated to the various departments. I am sure that all Members of the House would agree with me that there are very few managerial decisions which are as important to the effective functioning of a department as the question of selection of staff. The quality of the work of any department depends upon the quality of the members. For this reason alone I think that the managers have to devote a considerable amount of time to thinking through the selection process.

As an aside, we just concluded debate with respect to Bill C-45. I appeared before a committee in the other place just this morning on that Bill. It is a Bill which was supported by all Members of the House vis-à-vis the staff of the House of Commons, the Library of Parliament and the Senate. It is a Bill which was brought forward by the Government and worked on by members of all Parties. I pay particular tribute to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who made very viable contributions to the work of the committee.

What we were trying to do was take a hard look at the staffing of the House of Commons. We were trying to set in place a procedure by which there could be bargaining rights for the employees and by which they would have an opportunity to have grievance procedures and independent arbitration concerning matters that could not be settled on the way up.

That speaks to our concern not only as Members of Parliament vis-à-vis the employees on the Hill but vis-à-vis the different departments as regards the importance of the selection process for employees, the structuring of jobs, language requirements and the essential qualifications. The key to the efficient and effective staffing of any Public Service department is this initial planning and preparation. With respect to Bill C-45, we have built into it a year's grace provision, shall we say, to allow for the proper planning and preparation of the implementation of the classification system. I know that under any administration the Public Service managers take, and have taken seriously, the question of staffing. They are very much aware that to have proper employee morale and productivity they have to pay attention to that particular item. It is a complex matter. It is time consuming and has many well-defined steps which must be taken along the way. There is no question that there are still efforts required to streamline and improve the system to make it more flexible and responsive to Public Service needs.

I would like to quote, if I may, from the commission's annual report for 1985 which states in part:

> Throughout 1985, the Commission, mindful that restraint in the allocation and management of government resources has affected personnel administration, continued to explore the scope of possible changes to the Public Service Employment Act and Regulations. Many of these proposed changes have as a goal the simplification of the staffing process to make it more accessible to line managers, while respecting the basic principles of merit and equity.

I am interested in some of the comments of the Public Accounts Committee with respect to what has been implemented. I note that the Auditor General suggested that monitoring of the departmental staffing activities by the commission was practically non-existent. The commission agreed that its organization was not sufficient in this area, that it did not effectively integrate monitoring information gathered from the departments and that it made inadequate use of this information.

While we have a system in place, the Auditor General is telling us that there are problems with it. I am pleased that apparently before the committee the commission suggested it was taking remedial measures to augment and centralize its monitoring activities. There is no question that in a variety of government departments there has to be an ongoing effort made to review what standards are used in each department and ministry and to compare and to continue to try to get the very best system that we can.

That brings me to the importance of the merit principle. There is no question that the merit principle must be addressed and I may wish to return to that in a moment. However, if I may, I would like to move on to affirmative action.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, our Party is very strongly in favour of affirmative action. During this session we passed a Bill to implement affirmative action in employment. I am sure opposition Members felt that the Bill could be better, but there was no question that all Members of the House felt that this was a first step—perhaps not a big enough first step, but it was a first step toward implementing a very important principle.

By the same token, there has to be extensive and effective monitoring of the Departments' performance by the commission. In reading the report I noted with interest that the committee was not satisfied with the evidence the commission provided, and pointed out that progress in the hiring of women, visible minorities and the handicapped had been unacceptably slow and the monitoring procedures put in place by the commission did not appear to be adequate to the task. I know that no Hon. Member wants to accept the continuance of that particular problem.

While we may have some differences of opinion as to how to implement affirmative action, there is no question that we all stand for its progress. If that progress is not coming fast enough, the Public Service Commission must take a hard look at the recommendations of the committee, one of which was that by September 30 there will be a written report on the progress of the committee in improving its monitoring of Department staffing procedures.

One of the things to which the committee pointed that I noticed when I was on the Public Accounts Committee was a breakdown in the followup the Departments should do when looking at the recommendations of the Auditor General and consulting with his office. Recommendations were made by the Auditor General, but I often felt unsure that there was any consultation with his office to make sure that the problem would actually be corrected.

I am concerned about the part of the report which states that the committee was astounded when one government agency informed the committee that one of the most serious obstacles to good management is the current staffing system. I think that is a startling comment to make. It is a comment that does not speak to effective management. If we have that kind of a problem, I think it must be resolved.

The committee states that the average time it took to staff a position ranged from 136 to 160 days and the committee considers that this is far too long. There is absolutely no question that this is far too long a time to staff positions in any department of the Public Service. In departments where there have been administrative reforms, such as the Department of Agriculture, there are instances of staffing time being cut to 44 days. This was done in full compliance with the rules of the commission. I think that points out that it can be done. We have to urge that there be an action plan for the entire Public Service so that we can reduce in every department the average amount of time required to staff a position while taking care to ensure that we maintain the employees' legal rights.

I also wanted to point out that there are some problems in the division of responsibilities between the Treasury Board Secretariat and the commission. There was an earlier recommendation from July 30, 1982 that the Public Accounts Committee review this division of responsibilities between the Treasury Board Secretariat and the commission, and that these agencies resolve problems involving a lack of clarity and overlapping responsibilities. In this case the committee found that the agencies had failed to implement the recommendation in so far as the commission's auditing mandate is concerned. That is what I referred to earlier in my speech when I mentioned that recommendations of the committee are not implemented. I can say without hesitation on behalf of every Member who has ever served on the Public Accounts Committee, no matter of which Party, that that is very annoying.

The Public Accounts Committee reviews at length the reports of the Auditor General. Its members put a layman's imprint on it. We look at the comprehensive audit from the point of view of our constituents and ask how they would feel about it if they had to make recommendations. We put a lot of time and effort into these Public Accounts Committee reports, and if a recommendation is made the committee members feel that the Department involved ought to put a real effort into making sure the recommendation is followed. In its tenth report, the committee said that it expected the agencies to resolve this problem without further delay and ensure that a clear-cut division of responsibilities is established, and I endorse that position.

The Auditor General took a look at the Public Service Commission's program for audit staffing and was concerned about the methodology, the documentation, the supervision, the review of the audit work and the training of personnel. I know that quite an extensive effort is being made in the area of comprehensive auditing. The Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation is currently involved in a comprehensive study which is trying to find a better format for comprehensive auditing, a format which will not only help the Public Service but will also help Members of Parliament understand comprehensive auditing objectives, so they will be able to ensure that comprehensive audits result in products which are useful to everyone. That will involve reviews of this kind.

I endorse the recommendations of the committee. It has called for the commission to clarify its staffing audit mandate and report progress to the committee. It has called for the commission not only to report in 1986 but also to report again in 1987. As well, it has called for evidence of consultation with the Auditor General, the point to which I referred earlier being the very real importance of a consultation process with the Auditor General so that the commission will understand his directives.

• (1340)

I have had an opportunity to review the report and, in view of its importance, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell):

That the motion be amended by striking out all of the words after the word "That" and that the following be substituted therefor:

"the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be referred back to the committee to reconsider recommendations concerning monitoring of affirmative action programs."

Mr. Speaker: The amendment appears to be in order. Debate is now upon the amendment.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I guess the Government would like the committee to reconsider certain dispositions in its report. I took it that the Parliamentary Secretary was in accord with most of its recommendations but would like to have more information on the question of affirmative action. He wants the whole report to be sent back for the purpose of obtaining more information on the application and the workings of the affirmative action program.

I do not disagree with that. I think it is a good idea. However, we all know that the annual report of the commission was a good progress report. Indeed, if I had been give notice of this, I could debate it quite thoroughly. I do not intend to to do so. I think it is a valid point. We are all in favour of affirmative action, not as a matter of reporting only but as a matter of action and putting teeth into the legislation. If that is the purpose of the motion, I say put the question.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few points. I was a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts which produced this report. I am a little concerned that we are going through this process without really defining whether or not the effectiveness of the report will be carried out by the Public Service Commission.

Consequently, it becomes rather important to put before the House, and I suppose before the public, the real aims of the committee in providing the report. The aim of the committee was to ensure that fairness to employees of the Government prevailed at all times, that government policy be interpreted in a way which particularly protected employees, and that affirmative action be recognized and monitored effectively.

It is very interesting to look at what the Auditor General referred to as a contrived and curious system of personnel which has developed in the Government over many years. It is now in place in such a way that it is very easy for an individual to become lost in the system and never have his particular problem considered by the people in management positions. I suppose one of the Auditor General's concerns in covering this particular area was that over 90 per cent of the monitoring or control of staff was not within the Public Service Commission but was within Departments. Supposedly the Public Service Commission was the structure which monitored and ensured that all cases were handled adequately. Also the Auditor General indicated that the monitoring of departmental staffing activities was practically non-existent.

I suppose that could happen for many years without it becoming a major factor in the Government or in the image of the Government across the country. However, in the last couple of years there has been a real move to reduce the number of people working for the Government. Therefore, it has become very important that the monitoring system be in place and that we as parliamentarians be able to look thoroughly at what is going on, so that there are no unacceptable situations in the real world out there, let alone within the government structure. If we do not do that, we are apt to have various kinds of bureaucratic or even political patronage in the structure of the Public Service.

Consequently, it became obvious to the committee, in the process of making its recommendations, that there should be guidelines. Therefore, the committee made recommendations in various areas such as the need for monitoring of departmental staffing procedures, the need for the establishment of some kind of personnel management manual, and the need for some kind of monitoring of the affirmative action policy of the Government.

As I indicated earlier, the Auditor General made comments about the contrived and curious system of personnel. Therefore, the committee suggested strongly that the Public Service Commission should simplify its staffing procedures to a great extent and should ensure that the average amount of time required to fill a position was reduced considerably. In the process we required the Public Service Commission to reply to us by September 30, 1986. Consequently we hoped that it would make it possible for parliamentarians to feel a little more secure that the procedures in place were for the benefit of the Government as a whole and for Canada as a whole.

Motions

We may have gone many years without noticing the effect of the lack of cognizant procedures being in place. If you start to eliminate a lot of the process by which you choose which staff are not going to be in place, this becomes very important. The committee also made a number of recommendations about adjustment of the workforce, that is who should be kept on staff. Again, the danger of leaving too much discretion to managers, and in some cases too much discretion to some people who had influence in the Department, was a concern.

The committee made a number of recommendations which suggested that the Public Service Commission put in place guidelines for the Department so that the reverse order of merit, which theoretically was the base for people being laid off, be put in place so that we would have some idea of whether government policy was being implemented in the workforce adjustment. Just to make sure, we also suggested that there be quarterly reports regarding lay-offs within the Public Service, and that the commission report back again.

In each case, our aim goes back to the real definition of responsibility of the Public Service Commission and its need to know what is going on in all parts of the Public Service rather than just with the senior management positions. The latter seemed to be the emphasis of much of the commission's work in the past, leaving the rank and file clerical positions, which make up a large part of the Public Service, entirely the responsibility of the Department.

I always have a concern that a report is taken seriously and not put on the shelf to gather dust. This report is from the Public Accounts Committee and we specifically asked that it not be put on a shelf to gather dust.

I hope the Government will concur in the report. In the case of the referral, I hope that this procedure is not a procedure which will eliminate the possibility of effective use of this report in the improvement of the Public Service procedures. I hope that the motion before the House for the report to be referred back does not give the Public Service Commission an opportunity to ignore what is in the report because it is very important to the level of government efficiency in the filling of positions and in the establishment of a structure with which we can work for many years to come.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think the House has to give serious attention to the report of the committee. After all, if we find that there has not been sufficient monitoring activity by the commission, especially as it relates to the affirmative action program and the 98 per cent of staffing responsibilities that have been delegated to Departments, I say that we then expect the Government, and the House itself, to give serious attention to it.

We have concern that there are no guidelines in place for the application of the reverse order of merit in the system by the Public Service Commission with regard to lay-offs.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I think we have to take note of the evidence before the committee that the staffing process could be reduced to 44 days without prejudicing employees' rights.

Having said that, I do want to conclude my remarks by stressing the need to pay serious attention to these very significant recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES AND PROCEDURE

CONCURRENCE OF SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) gave notice earlier today that he wished to seek the consent of the House to move a motion.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King), that the second report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure, presented to the House earlier this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that as a committee we have been working on this subject for some time. We have had some difficulties in the last little while because of constraints on the committee's workload. We have asked for an extension of time to give us a chance to finish the report in the first part of the fall. This request has the unanimous agreement of the committee which has worked very well and effectively together.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a few brief remarks to make. First, I want to reiterate the words of the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper).

The committee has worked in close co-operation, and with unanimous consent we agreed earlier this week to ask the House for an extension of time to finish the report. The committee made considerable process in its study of the registration of paid lobbyists in Canada. The issue is important. Needless to say, initially the members of the committee were divided along Party lines. As time went by there was considerable progress and the committee acted in the spirit of reform which we established earlier this year. I believe that if the House gives us the additional time which we require we will produce a report which will demonstrate to all Members and the Canadian public that the spirit of reform has worked quite well.

• (1400)

I want to congratulate the Member for Peace River for the excellent way in which he has chaired our meetings. He did an excellent job. I think I speak for members of all political Parties when I say that he did a very good and non-partisan job, particularly at the time when our committee dealt with a controversy involving a Minister of the Crown. We had to interrupt our deliberations on the registration of paid lobbyists for two weeks to deal with that subject. It must have been a difficult time for the Chairman and the Clerk. In my view, they both did an excellent job. I would like to take this occasion to point that out to the House.

Unfortunately, one of the effects of that delay was that the schedule of the committee was delayed. The committee did examine the registration of lobbyists which now exists in the United States, but because of the delay which I just mentioned the preparation of our report has been delayed. I would like to echo the sentiments of the Chairman and ask Members on all sides of the House to concur in this report and give the committee the additional time it requires. I think the whole House will be pleased with the results which I am confident we will achieve.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 560, 573, 582 and 586.

[Text]

CFS INUVIK

Question No. 560—Mr. Parry:

1. Has the government offered any concrete benefits to the Town of Inuvik to compensate for the removal of some 25 per cent of its economic base by the closure of the Canadian Forces station?

2. Does the government plan to demand a market price for the transfer of base facilities to Arctic College and, if so, in what manner will that price be determined?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence, Employment and Immigration and Public Works as follows:

1. CFS Inuvik was added to the mandate of the Interdepartmental Committee that was established to deal with the CADIN/Pinetree closures. The goal of the Interdepartmental Committee is to provide maximum assistance to the affected employees and communities using existing federal programs. The focus of activities is at the local level, utilizing existing programs and sources such as the Relocation and Mobility Assistance Program and the Industrial Adjustment Services (IAS) provided by Employment and Immigration Canada.

On June 26, 1985, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission regional office in Alberta/N.W.T. signed an agreement establishing the Canadian Forces station Inuvik closure Industrial Adjustment Committee. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission provided $20,000 to assist the Committee in this task. Also, the complement of the Canadian Jobs Strategy programs is now and will continue to be available to the community of Inuvik upon closure of the Canadian Forces station this December.

2. Negotiations are currently under way with the Government of the Northwest Territories to dispose of CFS Inuvik at market value, for reuse by Arctic College. Current Government policy is to dispose of surplus property at market value, based upon a real estate appraisal which takes into account market conditions in the area, the attributes of the property and land tenure. In this case, an independent fee appraiser has been hired to complete the appraisal of Canadian Forces Station Inuvik.

PENSION PLANS IN PRIVATE SECTOR

Question No. 573—Mr. Gauthier:

1. To the knowledge of the Government, what is the most recent information available on the percentage of employees covered by pension plans in the private sector who belong to (a) non-contributory plans in which contributions for retirement benefits are provided entirely by employers (b) plans in which employers finance more than 50 per cent of required employer and employee contributions?

2. What is the average percentage of employers and employee contributions and payments made for retirement benefits in the private sector that is currently financed by employers?

Order Paper Questions

3. Since 1976, by year, what was the percentage of employer-employee contributions and payments for public Service Superannuation Act benefits and their indexing that were financed by the Government as the employer?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Insurance and the Treasury Board Secretariat as follows:

1. (a) Fifty-four per cent of pension plan members in the private sector are covered by non-contributory pension plans. There were 7,350 non-contributory private sector pension plans covering 1,378,258 members as at January 1, 1984. This is the latest date for which the information exists.

(b) No data available for plans in which employers finance more than 50 per cent of required employee and employer contributions.

2. Approximately 75 per cent of total annual contributions to private sector pension plans are made by employers.

Source of Information: Parts 1 & 2 Statistics Canada data bank used for publication Pension Plans in Canada.

3. The percentage of employer-employee contributions and payments for Public Service Superannuation Act benefits and their indexing that were financed by the Government as the employer.

SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNTS AND OTHER BENEFITS

Question No. 582—Mr. Gauthier:

1. As of March 31, 1985, what was the estimated balance of the (a) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) (b) Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) (c) Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) (d) Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account (SRBA)?

2. As of March 31 (a) 1990 (b) 1995 (c) 2000 (d) 2010 (e) 2020, on the basis of existing actuarial assumptions, what is the the estimated balance projected for the (i) CFSA (ii) PSSA (iii) RCMPSA (iv) (SRBA)?

3. What was the (a) total amount of the disability, survivor and retirement pensions that have been paid from the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA), the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) together with the amount of the special payments that have been made form the Consolidated revenue Fund for the indexing of these payments (b) total amount of interest earned by the CFSA, the PSSA, the RCMPSA, and the SRB Account for each fiscal year since the SRBA has been in effect?

4. Did annual Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) disability, survivor and retirement pension payments ever exceed annual RCMPSA interest earnings in the past and, if so, in which years did this occur?

5. Is it expected that annual RCMPSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments will exceed annual RCMPSA interest earnings (a) in the past (i) 5 (ii) 10 (iii) 20 (iv) 30 (v) 40 (vi) 50 years (b) ever and, if so, what is the year in which it is projected that this will first occur?

6. Did annual RCMPSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments plus the special payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund (CRF) for the indexing of these RCMPSA payments ever exceed the combined annual interest earnings of the RCMPSA and the SRB Account with respect to RCMPSA participants in the past and, if so, in which years did this occur?

7. Is it expected that the annual RCMPSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments plus the annual special payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund (CRF) to fully index these RCMPSA payments will exceed the combined annual interest earnings of the RCMPSA and the SRB Account with respect to RCMPSA participants (a) in the next (i) 5 (ii) 10 (iii) 20 (iv) 30 (v) 40 (vi) 50 years (b) ever and, if so, what is the year in which it is projected that this will first occur?

8. Would the answers to parts 2 and 4 be different and, if so, how would they differ, if the RCMP's Act were amended to provide that RCMPSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments made on and after January 1, 1986 be recalculated and determined on the basis of a RCMPSA contributor's best consecutive three-year average annual salary?

9. Did annual Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) disability, survivor and retirement pension payments ever exceed annual CFSA interest earnings in the past and, if so, in which years did this occur?

10. Is it expected that annual CFSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments will exceed annual CFSA interest earnings (a) in the next (i) 5 (ii) 10 (iii) 20 (iv) 30 (v) 40 (vi) 50 years (b) ever and, if so, what is the year in which it is projected that this will first occur?

11. Did annual CFSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments plus the special payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund (CRF) for the indexing of these CFSA payments ever exceed the combined annual interest earnings of the CFSA and the SRB Account with respect to CFSA participants in the past and, if so, in which years did this occur?

12. Is it expected that the annual CFSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments plus the annual special payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund (CRF) to fully index these CFSA payments will exceed the combined annual interest earnings of the CFSA and the SRB Account with respect to CFSA participants (a) in the next (i) 5 (ii) 10 (iii) 20 (iv) 30 (v) 40 (vi) 50 years (b) ever and, if so, what is the year in which it is projected that this will first occur?

13. Would the answers to parts 2 and 4 be different and, if so, how would they differ, if the CFS Act were amended to provide that CFSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments made on and after January 1, 1986 be recalculated and determined on the basis of a CFSA contributor's best consecutive three-year average annual salary?

14. Did annual Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) disability, survivor and retirement pension payments ever exceed annual PSSA interest earnings in the past and, if so, in which years did this occur?

15. Is it expected that annual PSSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments will exceed annual PSSA interest earnings (a) in the next (i) 5 (ii) 10 (iii) 20 (iv) 30 (v) 40 (vi) 50 years (b) ever and, if so, what is the year in which it is projected that this will first occur?

16. Did annual PSSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments plus the special payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund (CRF) for the indexing of these PSSA payments ever exceed the combined annual interest earnings of the PSSA and the SRB Account with respect to PSSA participants in the past and, if so, in which years did this occur?

17. Is it expected that the annual PSSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments plus the annual special payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund (CRF) to fully index these PSSA payments will exceed the combined annual interest earnings of the PSSA and the SRB Account with respect to PSSA participants (a) in the next (i) 5 (ii) 10 (iii) 20 (iv) 30 (v) 40 (vi) 50 years (b) ever and, if so, what is the year in which it is projected that this will first occur?

18. Would the answers to parts 2 and 4 be different and, if so, how would they differ, if the PSS Act were amended to provide that PSSA disability, survivor and retirement pension payments made on and after January 1, 1986 be recalculated and determined on the basis of a PSSA contributor's best consecutive three-year average annual salary?

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board):

1. Estimated Account Balance at March 31, 1985 (a) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA)—$13,352 million; (b) Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA)—$19,919 million; (c) Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA)—$1,828 million; (d) Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account (SRBA)—$2,417 million.

Questions 2, 5, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13, 15, 17 and 18, relate to long-term forecasts based on the present accounting system for public service pension plans. Given the intention to reform that system to conform with private sector practices, as assounced by the President of the Treasury Board in April, 1985, it would not be appropriate to provide such forecasts.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT RETIRING ALLOWANCES ACT

Question No. 586—Mr. McKinnon:

What is the projected date for completion and tabling of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act annual report for the fiscal year 1985-86?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): The projected date for completion of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act Annual Report for the fiscal year 1985-86 is March, 1987. It is expected that the report will be tabled shortly thereafter.

Reports are prepared by the Personnel Policy Branch of the Treasury Board Secretariat based on information compiled by the House of Commons District Services Office of Supply and Services in the case of the House of Commons and the Senate Finance Directorate in the case of the Senate. Reports are tabled in the House by the Minister of Finance.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the additional information to Question No. 552 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 552 supplementary be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Question No. 552—Mr. Robinson:

1. (a) As of August 31, 1984, by province, which law firms handled Federal Business Development Bank work (b) which firms are currently handling this work and on what date were they contracted (c) to date, what amount have these firms received?

2. What criteria were used for the selection of the firms and who was consulted on their appointments?

3. Were three law firms in North Vancouver, British Columbia doing FDBD work before the last election subsequently replaced by the firm of Stein and Lakes and, if so, for what reason?

Canada Shipping Act

4. To the knowledge of the government, is Mr. John Lakes Jr. a member of the firm Stein and Lakes and has he played an active role in the Progressive Conservative Party in British Columbia?

Return tabled.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I hate to be a spoil sport on the last sitting day before our adjournment. However, I must ask the Parliamentary Secretary if and when the Government intends to reply to Question No. 313 standing in my name which I put on the Order Paper on March 28, 1985. I recognize that that question was put on the Order Paper prior to our new rules, which means that the Government may require slightly longer than 45 days to respond. However, I am sure that you, Sir, would recognize that a year and a half is much longer than 45 days. I ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he would now table this reply because I feel it is important.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to advise the Member that the Thirty-second Parliament answered 68.9 per cent of the questions asked. The Thirty-third Parliament has answered 86.6 per cent of the questions asked. That is our record. I will give this matter due attention and we will put all the troops to work on it over the summer.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I cannot miss this occasion. After a year and a half the Parliamentary Secretary has answered one of my questions today. I thank him very much.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, June 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to resume the comments which I began 13 days ago in the House which were so rudely interrupted when I had barely begun to examine this Bill. I am pleased that the Government of Canada has such confidence in Bill C-75 and stands so proudly behind it that it has chosen, in its wisdom, to bring it before the House two hours and fifty-six minutes before the House rises for the summer recess.

If one were to listen to the Minister of Transport of Canada (Mr. Mazankowski), his Parliamentary Secretary and Conservative members of the Transport Committee serving in the Government of Canada, one would be led to believe by the power of their rhetoric that Bill C-75 is a sound Bill based on principles of fairness and equity which they are proud to stand behind. After listening to such comments one cannot help but wonder why, in the dying hours of the last day of the last week of the last month of this Parliament of Canada, the Government would bring forward this Bill which it says it is so proud to stand behind.

The tragedy of Bill C-75 is that it is fundamentally a sound Bill. The Canada Shipping Act has not been updated for decades. The Government wisely decided to update Bill C-75 to make it more relevant to the eighties. That decision was welcomed by everyone in the country who has any interest in Canada's shipping industry. It was welcomed because it made sense.

The public will wonder what the objection is to Bill C-75 as it has been presented to this Parliament. The objection is that above and beyond renewing and updating regulations pertaining to shipping the Government gave the Minister of Transport a brand new authority which has never before been seen in the history of the Shipping Act. That authority is contained in Clause 4. It is the equivalent of giving the Minister a gun and some ammunition without knowing who the Minister intends to shoot.

Clause 4 gives the Minister the power to impose charges or duties on shipping ranging from canoes to freighters which ply the Great Lakes. Such charges have heretofore never existed. Some members of the public are saying that it is not so unreasonable to apply charges for services provided by the Government of Canada. They do not appreciate that the authority which is being requested is a blank cheque. The Minister is asking Parliament to give him the authority to apply, at his whim, user charges to people in the shipping industry. However, in advance of being given this authority he will not tell us how much is to be raised, who the charges are to be applied to or what impact those charges will have on all these facets of Canada's shipping industry. He is asking for a blank cheque. He is asking Parliament to be deaf, dumb and blind, nothing more than a rubber stamp for the Minister of Transport and the Government. Those who have observed this Parliament with any degree of objectivity will know that the last thing it is—and it may be a lot of things, some good, some bad—is a rubber stamp for a Minister of the Crown.

• (1410)

Clause 4 of the Bill places an altogether festering sore on what otherwise would be a fairly sound Bill. That is the main objection I have to it. There is a secondary objection.

Mr. Skelly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, can I get clarification from the Chair? Is the Hon. Member asking us to believe that this Parliament is acting just like the last Parliament under a Liberal Government with respect to being a rubber stamp?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair must say that this is not point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the gentleman that because of the brevity of my remarks I appreciated that opportunity to catch my breath and collect my thoughts.

An Hon. Member: You don't have any to collect.

Mr. Tobin: I always attempt to respond to well-intentioned and intelligent questions, therefore I shall carry on with my speech.

The other fault with this Bill is what it does not contain. Members will recall, as will all Canadians, that in February of 1982 a great marine disaster struck this country some 200 miles off the shores of Newfoundland when the oil drigging rig Ocean Ranger went down and every man aboard was lost. The Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland responded to that disaster by appointing a royal commission of inquiry, headed by Newfoundland Supreme Court Justice Alex Hickman. That was done to ensure that we as parliamentarians, here and in Newfoundland, had done everything possible to prevent a recurrence of the tragic loss of life in that disaster. The royal commission functioned for nearly three years. It spent some $15 million of taxpayers' money. It travelled to nearly every part of the globe deemed appropriate. It heard from every witness with expert qualifications who could contribute something to the hearings.

After all those years of study, after countless thousands of hours of testimony, the most exhaustive study of its kind ever attempted in Canada, one of the major recommendations of that royal commission was that oil rigs operating off Canada's shores, primarily on the East Coast, but also on the West Coast if and when that occurs, should come under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act. There were other recommendations dealing with search and rescue and training, many of which have been implemented. I acknowledge that. However, the major recommendation has been blatantly ignored. It is not in the Bill. Therefore, it is not only a faulty document for what is contained within it, being Clause 4, a heretofore unheard of taxing power, but it is also insufficient because of what is not contained in it.

The real tragedy is that that major recommendation was not included, not because the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall), who is in the House today, opposes the recommendation or does not see the wisdom of it. The tragedy is not because the Minister of Transport does not agree with the wisdom of the recommendation of the royal commission, because he does. The tragedy is not because Members of Parliament, who made recommendations to the Government on changes to the Bill, did not say that rigs should be included under the Canada Shipping Act, because we did. The tragedy is that the Conservative majority, knowing better, feeling as strongly as I do about this question, nevertheless voted to ignore the recommendation because the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) currently has jurisdiction over oil rigs. There is this empire-building mentality around this place which says that a Minister with jurisdiction will not give to another Minister, in this case the Minister of Transport, his rightful responsibility because that might affect the size, shape and importance of her empire. That is the real tragedy. The House of Commons, the Parliament of Canada, and the Ministry were all unable to rise above this self-seeking empire-building mentality and accept quietly, and may I say humbly, the recommendation of those people who spent years of their lives and a great deal of the taxpayers' money coming to this conclusion.

Notwithstanding the compelling logic of accepting a recommendation which is indisputable in its clear and simple logic, the Government did not include rigs under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act and continues to treat them as the orphan of the shipping industry, off in limbo under the jurisdiction of a Minister and Department officials who know as much about ships and rigs as I know about green cheese on the moon. It occurred purely and simply because of a system which has been unable to respond to the needs of people working at sea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills, without amendment:

Bill C-88, an Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto;

Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977;

Bill C-111, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff;

Bill C-112, an Act to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto;

Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act;

Bill C-117, an Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors;

Bill C-128, an Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in relation to judicial matters;

Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses;

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, with respect I would like to know whether the Senate, in transmitting the information you just read to the House, had attached any comments relating to one of these Bills, and if so, could we perhaps hear these comments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To the Chair's knowledge, there were no comments relating to these Bills.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Artic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader is attempting to get me to answer a phone call. I do not know why. I am just trying to continue comments I started some two weeks ago and have only begun to make the case to Members opposite, who I know are always open to sincere suggestions being made by Members on this side of the House as to how they can improve their standing with the people in Canada.

I touched very briefly on the two major flaws in Bill C-75. That is Clause 4, which gives the Minister an enabling power which heretofore has never existed, and the failure on the part of the Government to include rigs as ships and put them under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act.

Now, having very briefly just alerted Members who are paying such close attention to my remarks, the main subject areas of my debate on this Bill will be to examine in more detail why Clause 4 is such a problem clause for the Government and, more important, for those people who will be affected by it.

There may be those Canadians who are listening, two or three who watch the parliamentary channel, who are wondering whether or not this notion that I have that Clause 4 is such a Draconian measure is something that I have dreamed up. They may be wondering whether I am slightly paranoid in the dying hours of Parliament. They may be wondering whether I am being negative for the sake of being negative or opposing for the sake of opposition.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Canadians will not know, but parliamentarians will know, that before this Bill ever reached this Chamber it was the subject of exhaustive study by a legislative committee, and as part of studying the legislation the legislative committee, of which I was a member, among other members, invited hundreds of organizations, which would be impacted by this legislation, to comment on it.

Almost without exception, in fact I cannot think of an exception, every single witness who came, be it the potato farmers in P.E.I,; be it the fishermen in Newfoundland, be it the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association based in Ottawa, be it the Quebec Metal Mining Association based in Montreal, be it the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia based in Vancouver, every single organization which came, said the Bill is not bad, but Clause 4 has to go.

I think I should remind Members of who some of the witnesses who came before the standing committee were and what they had to say. Before I do that, I cannot help but note this: does it not signify something to Members of Parliament when you can have a fisherman in Cape St. George sitting on a stage on top of his lobster pots staring off into the sunset waiting to go out and pull his pots saying the same thing about Clause 4 as the fellow who sits on the twentieth floor of a steel, glass and concrete tower in the City of Montreal? Both gentlemen, the fellow on his lobster pot and the fellow on the twentieth floor of the corporate boardroom of a large Canadian shipping company, are saying the same thing, that it is a bad Bill with Clause 4. Is it not a strange day in Canada when you can have the farmer, as represented by the National Farmers Union, out tilling the soil, doing battle with grasshoppers, trying to turn a dollar in a desperate year, saying the same thing about this Bill as the gentleman who looks out across Vancouver harbour and occupies the boardrooms of the Council of Forest Industries of British Columbia? Is that not mind boggling that that prairie farmer and that corporate executive in the forest industry are saying the same thing about this Bill?

It is a strange day when one can contemplate that a potato farmer in P.E.I., who is worried about the impact of Clause 4, who raises potatoes for 2 cents a pound less than he is able to sell them for, and therefore, is not able to bear the brunt of more user charges, he is saying the same thing about this Bill as the gentlemen who occupy the office that used to be occupied by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), that is the people who occupy the ivory towers of the iron ore mining business of this country. They and the potato farmer in P.E.I. are saying the same thing, that it is an unreasonable Bill.

I think that in itself should alert parliamentarians that we are not talking about a special interest group per se that is opposed to this Bill; we are talking about every primary producer in Canada who has a need for transportation services, seeing this Bill as an unreasonable, unfair, unresponsive and unrepresentative attack on their industry.

The history of the United States was profoundly changed because of this kind of attitude. Indeed, Members will recall the historic significance of the Boston Tea Party when people decided that the notion of taxation without representation or consultation was simply unacceptable and they tossed the tea over into the harbour. We know that a revolution followed shortly after the action taken by the American colonies.

I would suggest to the Government that the fact that it has earned a 211-seat majority at the election is no reason to treat Canada as a collection of colonies that shall be dictated to from on high by those who occupy the ivory towers of Ottawa. We ought to pay close attention to what the primary producers out there in the land are saying about this Bill.

Who are some of these primary producers that I am talking about? The Council of Boating Organizations of Canada says that "Clause 4 departs from the principle of cost recovery by Government, that principle being based on the theory of user payment. It is the council's contention that Parliament should not delegate a taxing power to the Canadian Coast Guard". Who are they? They represent tens of thousands of private non-commercial individuals who operate pleasure craft for the enjoyment of themselves and their families.

The Great Lakes Waterways Development Association says about Clause 4, "The clause as it stands is too broad in scope, and as a result has the potential of causing major disruption to the lake shipping industry, and shippers are left with no assurance that it will achieve the announced objective of deficit reduction".

Thirteen days ago we began the debate on this Bill and at that time the Parliamentary Secretary stood in his place and referred to the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association as an organization that supported Clause 4. The Parliamentary Secretary no doubt is by now aware that the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association a day after we began the debate 13 days ago, having heard of the Parliamentary Secretary's remarks, sent a telex to every single Member of this House saying that the Parliamentary Secretary is wrong, "We do not endorse Clause 4. We are opposed to it, and he has taken our comments out of context".

More to the point, Canada Steamship Lines, whom the Parliamentary Secretary also indicated was supportive of the Bill, also sent a telex to every single Member of Parliament, all 282 of us, and to Members of the Senate, saying that, "To the extent that the Parliamentary Secretary has suggested that our company is supportive of this Bill, we are not supportive of the Bill, we see it as a Draconian measure, an unrepresentative measure, one that we would like to see defeated".

I just take a moment to set the record straight, because I know that the Parliamentary Secretary, when he has the opportunity to have the floor again, would do so himself. Despite being given the burdensome responsibility of piloting this flawed and festering piece of legislation through the House, in the final analysis the Hon. Member is an honourable gentleman. Since I expect to speak for a few more minutes, I thought I would set the record straight for him. I know he appreciates it.

The St. Lawrence Shipowners' Association said about this Bill: "We do not agree that we should give the Government a blank cheque which would allow it to set up a fee system about which we know nothing at the present time."

Mr. Crosby: You want us to continue all of the subsidization—

Mr. Tobin: I hope I do not take the Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) out of context, but he is basically saying that he considers the shipping industry that is important to the vitality of the City of Montreal as people who want subsidies forever. He is saying that the shipping industry, which attended the Montreal Economic Summit, that attended the Sept Iles Economic Summit, is a parasitic bunch of people. I do not believe that Conservative cabinet Ministers nor Conservative Members from Quebec would agree that the shipping industry in the Province of Quebec is composed of nothing but parasites on the Treasury of Canada.

Mr. Crosby: Do not display your ignorance.

Mr. Tobin: I reject such disparaging remarks about the Province of Quebec by the Conservative Member in the presence of his own colleagues who try to represent their province. Is it any wonder that Quebec Members have no clout in Cabinet and are unable to stop Clause 4, which will so negatively impact the St. Lawrence Seaway and the City of Montreal? One of their own colleagues from Halifax is describing the Quebec industry as nothing but a bunch of parasites. I hope the people of Quebec are not made aware of this kind of scurrilous accusation being made against them.

Mr. Crosby: Name one container ship owned in Quebec.

Mr. Tobin: Quite frankly, I believe that Quebec has a role to play in this country and we should not underestimate the value and the importance of the St. Lawrence Seaway, not only to the Port of Montreal but to all regions of the country. Such dog in the manger attitude must simply come to an end.

Before I was so rudely interrupted, I was talking about the St. Lawrence Shipowners' Association who the Member for Halifax West believes are parasites. I do not consider them as parasites. I do not think that the fishermen who are opposed to this Bill are parasites. I do not believe that the potato farmers who are opposed to this Bill are parasites, nor the National Farmers' Union, nor the Council of Forest Industries in British Columbia who are opposed to this Bill. It is simple to put such a tag on people who would attempt to tell Parliament that it has moved without due consultation. Those groups are not parasitic at all. They have done their homework, which is more than can be said for the Government that has introduced this Bill.

The St. Lawrence Shipowners' Association said: "We do not agree that we should give the Government a blank cheque."

Canada Shipping Act

The Council of Forest Industries in British Columbia represents the number one industry in that province. That industry has just been devastated by the 35 per cent tariff imposed on cedar shakes and shingles. That industry is now on bended knee, waiting for the second blow as a result of the unanimous decision yesterday by the U.S. International Trade Commission that there is injury to the American industry as a result of Canadian softwood lumber exports into the United States. That industry is on bended knee, waiting for the sword to slice out its life blood.

That industry said about this Bill and this clause: "We urge the committee to consider the competitive position of exports and the port position. We can recover costs but we warn, we can also be out of business."

That is what the Council of Forest Industries in British Columbia is saying about this Draconian measure.

Earlier, I asked the House to imagine the lobster man on the bill of Cape St. George, sitting on his lobster pots; to imagine the gentleman sitting in the ivory tower of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, to imagine the gentleman overlooking Vancouver Island, representing the forest industry of British Columbia; and to imagine the farmers, all of whom are saying the same thing about this Bill. Yet even the Seafarers' International Union, along with management—employer and employee—are saying the same thing about this Bill. The Government has managed to get nearly every primary producer in Canada, along with management and union, to sing from the same song-book in opposing this Bill. I suggest it is a major accomplishment that everyone opposes the Bill and no one supports it.

The Seafarers' International Union says: "We cannot have full cost recovery if our Canadian marine industry is to survive. Canada and the U.S. are the only marine countries in the world that do not, in some form or another, subsidize the marine industry." It is thought-provoking to know that Canada and the United States do not, in some form or another, subsidize their marine industries. Despite the difficulty in competing with the rest of the world when other countries provide subsidies, the Government will turn around and impose an additional cost on our industry.

The Seafarers' International Union goes on to say: "Of course we will lose jobs. In certain cargoes, the lake companies will just not be able to compete. They will either go out of business or go under foreign flag and the jobs will be lost to Canada. Therefore, we will not have these cargoes. This Bill is very detrimental to our business." These workers are concerned with the movement of freight on the St. Lawrence Seaway.

The Government of Canada set up a five-member subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Transport to initiate a study into the conditions, viability and future of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The Government decided to ask for a subcommittee to study the Seaway because it discovered that the Seaway traffic is decreasing every year and is losing traffic to the Mississippi River system, which is causing a transfer of jobs from Canada. Furthermore, the international reputation of the St. Lawrence Seaway system has suffered because canal walls have collapsed and ships have been locked in due to ice. Therefore, the Government set up this subcommittee to study the St. Lawrence Seaway.

What is incredible, however, is that at the same time that the Government is setting up a subcommittee to discover why the Seaway is in such difficulty and what can be done to make it more economical, the Government introduces Clause 4 of Bill C-75, which every witnesses has said will contribute more to the destruction of the vitality of the Seaway than anything else.

This subcommittee had its first meeting in Thunder Bay only yesterday, two weeks since the Bill was introduced. During the course of those hearings it heard from Tony Kaplanis, Thunder Bay co-ordinator of the Western Grain Transportation Agency; Jack Masters of Thunder Bay; Jim Foulds, MPP; Doug Scott of the Thunder Bay Chamber of Commerce; Mr. Doherty of N.M. Patterson & Sons Ltd.; Jerry Cook of the Thunder Bay Harbour Commission, and others.

The vast majority of witnesses who appeared even yesterday indicated that their overwhelming concern was Clause 4 of Bill C-75. They were telling this subcommittee which the Government set up to determine how to prevent a continued erosion of Seaway traffic, that the first step it should take is to stop Bill C-75 and Clause 4 which is now before Parliament from receiving approval at third reading.

Although such representation was made only yesterday in Thunder Bay, the Government is prepared to approve third reading of this Bill. I must note that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) was indeed at the conference as well. I am told that he joined with all those who opposed Clause 4 of Bill C-75. It seems to me that when the left hand does not know what the right hand is doing, sometimes it is better to go back to the drawing-boards to do one's homework. This is clearly an illustration of the left hand not knowing what the right hand is doing at all. On the one hand, the Minister of Transport spends tens of thousands of taxpayers' dollars to send Members of Parliament around the country to investigate the current condition of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The Government indicates it is concerned, that it wants to restore the economic viability of that Seaway, but, on the other hand, proceeds this afternoon with a Bill which will cut the legs out from underneath the St. Lawrence Seaway, and Hon. Members opposite are prepared to pass it, prepared to sit silently on their hands and let it go through. Seldom has a more confusing Act been seen around this place.

• (1440)

Yesterday, in the Port of Thunder Bay hearings that took place with the subcommittee on the Great Lakes—St. Lawrence Seaway, the Thunder Bay Harbour Commission stated that the Seaway should be recognized as an international marine gateway to Canada, in competition and on an equal basing with Canada's other coasts and, therefore, that all charges related to the operation of the Seaway be considered together and from a global perspective, with the objective that federal charges be uniform in application from port to port and coast to coast, whether imposed by federal legislation, such as the proposed Clause 4 of Bill C-75, or initiated by a Crown corporation, such as tolls imposed by the Seaway Authority.

Of course, the brief makes it clear that simply introducing Clause 4 in Bill C-75 and giving it passage without prior consultation cannot ensure that no negative impact will befall our Great Lake shippers and, indeed, those people who use the Port of Thunder Bay.

The brief goes on to state that the Seaway system is in a crisis situation and may not survive, and that government-imposed and regulated charges now make it the most expensive waterway in North America, that is, those charges in place even before the passage of Bill C-75 and Clause 4. The future charges envisioned by planned programs of cost recovery may cause the demise of the St. Lawrence Seaway, indeed, by extrapolation, the demise of the current position of the Port of Montreal, as well. That is why one of the overwhelming preoccupations at the Montreal Economic Summit that was held last week, indeed, at the shipbuilders' the meeting that was held at Sept Iles, was Bill C-75 and the negative impacts of Clause 4 on the shipping industry.

I understand, as well, that yesterday the company, N.N. Patterson and Son, Limited, also made a submission to the subcommittee on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and it went on to state, "Of particular concern to us in this unhealthy circle of demise of the Seaway is Clause 4 of Bill C-75, enabling legislation for Coast Guard recovery, the implementation of which has not only potentially disastrous consequences for Great Lake seaway marine transportation but also for our home port of Thunder Bay, which is additionally of special concern to us.

While others may have sounded a middle-ground position on the proposed legislation, we want to go on record as being categorically opposed to Coast Guard user fees, and we strongly urge the Government to remove Clause 4 at the present time. In our view, it is not at all a question of obligation, any more than it is a matter of fairness". Let Hon. Members roll that word, "fairness" around in their minds and try to relate to it once again. They have been here too long, I submit. They have forgotten that basic concept of fairness. The company went on to state, "not only is it a matter of fairness but also a situation where additional charges in the face of our already burdensome and constantly rising cost infrastructure have pushed us to the limit of our competitive margin. In fact, there are many in our industry who believe we have already crossed the precarious threshold".

That is what those people who are out there employing Canadians, who are the engine of growth that makes this country go, who generate those new jobs about which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) likes to speak, what those in the private sector, free enterprise, innovators, risk-takers, are saying about this legislation. That is what those people who are not Crown corporations, who are not authorities, who are not associations, but, rather, individuals who are prepared to go out and compete in a fair environment, are saying about this legislation, that it will push them over the edge and destroy an industry that is currently existing at a precarious balance. Still, Hon. Members opposite, the moment I sit down, will be happy to see this Bill pass Parliament with all of the consequent negative implications for Candian citizens, primary producers and, indeed, shippers.

Algoma Steel, Stelco and Dofasco also went on record before the committee on Bill C-75 to oppose Clause 4. The Canadian Harbour Commission pointed out that there is great potential for discrimination in such open-ended legislation as that proposed in the new Clause 4 against Canadian ports. The International Association of Great Lakes Ports indicates it is opposed to Clause 4. It states that charges imposed as a result of Clause 4 will cause deterioration in an already risky sitution.

It is absolutely amazing. It must dumbfound Canadians to see that I can stand here and literally quote every single facet of the marine industry, every single potential user group, every single primary producer in Canada, to know that all of these people have come to the Government of Canada, have made their case and, notwithstanding the opinions that have been put forward, Bill C-75 is still before the House. It makes Canadians just a little bit suspicious, just a little bit reluctant to swallow, hook, line and sinker, the "brand-new day for Canada" vision that the Prime Minister held out for all of us during the summer of 1984. It makes Canadians doubt, just a little bit, that promise of a new era of consultation and co-operation with the people of Canada. It makes one just a little bit, only slightly, cynical about some of the pronouncements of the Prime Minister with respect to the nature of the administration he would lead in this country.

There are some Hon. Members from Quebec on the Government side of the House indeed, some Ministers, who attended the Montreal Economic Summit only last week, and they will not be surprised to know that the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, when it appeared before our committee, was not stating anything different than it was stating last week at the Economic Summit. It was stating, "Dump Clause 4. If it cannot be dumped, let us not have Bill C-75". Nevertheless, at the time it appeared before our committee—

Mr. Forrestall: Do you intend to let us have it today? Why don't you tell us that?

Mr. Tobin: Tell you what, my friend?

Mr. Forrestall: Do you intend to let us have it today or are you going to speak until five o'clock?

Mr. Tobin: The Montreal Chamber of Commerce was stating that in the case of Section 4 of Bill C-75, there has been no prior consultation with the shipping community or the business community in order to assess the economic and other impacts of the Bill. It is surprising that on every other aspect of Bill C-75, there has been extensive consultation with industry, but on Section 4, there has been no consultation whatsoever.

This is the brand new day the Prime Minister promised all of Canada. This is the brand new era. This is the day of consultation when we shall put an end to confrontation. Well, the Prime Minister was half right. There is no confrontation on Clause 4 because he did not tell anyone about it. He tried to sneak it in through the back door. He tried to slip it in at the last minute, have it passed and have people find out about it later. So, he is right. There is no confrontation because he simply does not tell people everything they should know and everything they want to know. It is like sneaking up behind a fellow with a baseball bat and hitting him over the head. It is a way of avoiding picking a fight. One just slugs him when he does not see it coming. That way one can never lay the claim that one did not consult him before one hit him. In fact, he will never know what hit him.

That is what the Government of Canada is attempting to do to the shipping industry of this country. That is what it is attempting to do to the Montreal Board of Trade and to the fishermen on Cape St. George who are sitting on their pots pondering the horizon and their futures in the face of this regressive legislation. That is what it is attempting to do to the forestry workers overlooking the shores of Vancouver harbour and to the farmers who are sitting on the Prairies battling the grasshoppers. That is what the Government is doing. It is sneaking up behind these people with a two-by-four. When their backs are turned, a mighty arc of the arm will come down crushing forever their hopes of remaining economically viable.

The Prime Minister should recall his own words. Several times he has stood in his place in this House and said: "You can blind-side me once, but don't try it a second time". I am here to advise the Prime Minister that he can attempt to blind-side the people of Canada once, but it will not work a second time. The Government should not expect to be surrounded by a swarm of applauding hands that applaud at every utterance the Prime Minister makes in the House of Commons when this type of legislation, notwithstanding the concerns of Canadians, is still before the House. The Prime Minister ought not to mistake the applause of his 211 Members for the approval of the people of Canada. While the applause is loud and even thunderous on some days in this place, out there in the land there is no applause. There is the dead cold silence that comes with the realization that the commitments that were made in the summer of 1984 were no more than that—passing, momentary, whimsical comments designed to attract a handful of votes for a point in time, but never intended as a road-map for an administration that would keep its word. The people of Canada have sobered up.

What do members of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild have to say about Bill C-75? It is a guild of a few words. They say that they are against Clause 4. In the end their concern is the loss of jobs. Canada Steamship Limited, a large Canadian shipping company, has this to say about Bill C-75 in Clause 4. It states that the Canadian shipping industry has carefully honed its competitive edge through continuous innovation and productivity and that additional costs will dull that edge, harming the shipping industry and many other important Canadian industries, including agriculture. It says that Clause 4 could attempt to achieve a system of cost recovery whereby the high operating budget of the Canadian Coast Guard may be recovered primarily from the Canadian shipping industry, which can ill afford additional charges at this time. Ultramar is opposed to Clause 4. The Petroleum Association for the Conservation of the Environment has trouble with the non-representative nature of the charges to be imposed as a result of Clause 4. The Canadian Shippers' Council states that user fees for Coast Guard services could result in some cargo being diverted through the U.S. transportation system and through U.S. ports. The Canadian Pulp and Paper Association says that its base business is export and cost increases can only reduce the very business that Government is trying to help.

For those who are living in the cities of this country who wonder whether or not they will be impacted by this Bill, and for all of you who live in the land of textile and high technology and go to work in the factories, I want to relate what the Canadian Manufacturers Association has stated. It has said that the enabling legislation on Coast Guard cost recovery is too open-ended and arbitrary. It states that there has been no shipper input, that little information has been received from Government and that there has been no indication of improved efficiency as an objective. It questions whether a public service such as the Coast Guard should be handled in this manner.

Even the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association is opposed to this clause. Can Hon. Members imagine an organization that does not even have a diesel or a gasoline engine behind it when it goes out on the water being opposed to this Bill? Its position is that the user fee for Coast Guard services should not be applied to Canadian rowing simply because rowing does not use the services of the Coast Guard. What type of legislation is this when those people who belong to an association, which allows them to go out on a Sunday afternoon with their wives in the front of the boat and Johnny and Annie in the middle of the boat, with a canteen with a bit of Kool-Aid and a few sandwiches, have to take the trouble to come before a legislative committee and point out that they, too, are concerned about the impact of Clause 4? Can Hon. Members imagine the fellow, who has a dory tucked away in his garage in the winter months and takes it out for a row around the lake on Sunday with his wife or girlfriend in tow, has to take the trouble to appear before a legislative committee to oppose Clause 4? The fellow with his row-boat, his two oars, no engine and a jug of wine, if it is a romantic trip, has discovered that he may be the victim of Coast Guard charges in the lusty pursuit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to balance the bottom line. The Government of Canada is now even interfering with the freedom of, dare I say it, young romantics to go out for a row on the lake in the evening with nothing more than their oars to keep them company. I cannot believe it. It is a shocking and insensitive Bill.

I have both oars in the water and I am barrelling straight ahead. The problem is that the Government of Canada obviously did not have its navigation straightened out when it decided to come to the House with this piece of legislation. It has no idea where it will end up.

The Prince Edward Island Potato Marketing Board also has something to say about the Bill. We now have the fellow who is going for a row with his wife in the evening and a bottle of wine upset about this Bill. The potato farmers of P.E.I. are upset about this Bill. The prairie farmers are upset about the Bill. The fishermen on the last bill of Cape St. George on the southwest coast of Newfoundland sitting on their lobster pots watching the sun go down are upset at the Government because of this Bill. The people in the steel and glass towers of the Iron Ore Company of Canada are upset about this Bill. The fellow who looks out across the Vancouver skyline at the tall trees that keep the engine and the economy of that province going is upset about this Bill. In the history of this Parliament could there possibly have been a piece of legislation that more negatively affected so many different Canadians from so many different parts of Canada in so many different circumstances who have all come to a unanimous conclusion about Clause 4 of Bill C-75?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Thank God!

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I need some clarification on the type of activity that is taking place in the House today. Would Your Honour make some judgment about the quality of the input today? We have heard about Johnny and the Kool-Aid. We have heard about all kinds of irrelevancies. There has been the odd solid point speaking out on behalf of the people of Canada. But did you not notice, Mr. Speaker, the irrelevancies in the speech and the tremendous abuse of Parliament that has been taking place until now? I realize that the previous speaker needed a breath of air. I wonder if Your Honour might make a judgment on the matter before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member does have unlimited time. The Chair finds that his speech is relevant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from the New Democratic Party for giving the Speaker an opportunity to express something that he could not otherwise express. Every Member of the House knows that the Speaker must be regarded as being strictly neutral. He has an obligation not to show partisanship in the House. He has an obligation to be a sphinx. He has to be like the great Tower of London that stands unmoved by the events that occur around it. The Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party has given the Speaker, who is from the great Province of Quebec, a chance to say what I know he has been dying to say. It gave him a chance to say: "I too, with all that is in me, am opposed to this Draconian piece of legislation". On your behalf, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party for giving you an opportunity to rise and say how much you oppose this legislation by indicating that what I am saying is rather—

• (1500)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that he should not bring the Speaker into the debate.

Mr. Tobin: That is okay, Mr. Speaker, you can thank me afterwards. There will be one Tory elected in Quebec and we will put him back in the chair after the next election.

The Great Lakes Commission has said the following about Clause 4 of Bill C-75:

> We are particularly concerned about possible compounding effects which may occur on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system.
> Simply put, when the costs, whether tolls or user fees, go up, some current business is always lost and some new business that would have been developed is not. So there is a potential double loss to the tax collector in this user fee due to these losses. The loss in production then translates into the loss of jobs for our binational region.

I cannot find anyone who has anything good to say about this Bill. The Economic Development Corporation of the St. Lawrence has also expressed its concern about the negative impact of Clause 4.

The National Farmers' Union, confronted as it is with the lowest wheat prices in 60 years, caught in the squeeze between the subsidies being paid wheat farmers in the United States and the subsidies being paid by the EEC, has had to rouse itself from the miserable battle for survival, which it is fighting with the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), to make a comment on Clause 4 of Bill C-75. Hon. Members will appreciate that most farmers' produce gets transported to market by ship and that anything that impacts on the cost of transporting by ship impacts on farmers' profits. What did the National Farmers' Union say? It said the following:

> In its preoccupation to trim the federal deficit, the Government is in effect telling farmers through this Bill that the national interest can best be served by still further increasing farm costs at a time when farmers are in very serious straits.

Let me repeat that because it bears repeating. This is what the farmers of Canada believe is the message they are receiving from the Government of Canada because of its callous introduction of Clause 4 in Bill C-75:

> In its preoccupation to trim the federal deficit, the Government is in effect telling farmers through this Bill that the national interest can best be served by still further increasing farm costs at a time when farmers are in very serious financial straits.

Mr. Gauthier: Can you make photocopies of that?

Mr. Tobin: I should make photocopies of that and send it around to all Hon. Members. I have a sneaking suspicion that over the next few days, Members of Parliament, because of the rumoured cabinet shuffle, will be standing by their telephones waiting for that telephone call which, for many of them, will not come. Instead, most of them will find, when they pick up their phones, that it will not be the Prime Minister with word of a new chauffeur, a chief of staff, a big budget and a $40,000 wage increase, but that it will be a farmer who will be saying: "In the name of God, man, why did you not rise in your place when you had the opportunity to do so and oppose the Draconian measures that are contained in Clause 4 of Bill C-75?"

Mr. Gormley: What have you ever done for farmers?

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member is suggesting that, because I am from the great and historic Province of Newfoundland, I have no right to speak on behalf of farmers. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I have within the confines of my riding some of the most vigorous farmers to be found anywhere in Canada. I will tell him something else. We in Newfoundland and we in the Liberal Party believe it is the obligation and indeed the responsibility of every Member of Parliament when he comes to this place not only to speak for his region and his constituents but to speak for Canada.

If Conservative Members of Parliament can find neither their backbones, their legs nor their tongues to stand and speak for Canadian farmers, then I, existing as I do on the edge of the Atlantic Ocean in an area of fisheries and not a great farming constituency, will stand to speak in their places. Farmers in Canada deserve the support in the debate on Bill C-75 that they are not getting from many of the Members they sent here to represent their interests. For that I make no apology.

Who else has been moved in desperation to address the legislative committee?

An Hon. Member: Get to the point.

Mr. Tobin: An Hon. Member over there is making some unintelligible noises. He is generally a well-meaning fellow and I know that he would be opposed to this Bill were it not for the vicious whip that is being cracked in the able hand of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), otherwise known as Velcro Lips, who has imposed a similar affliction on all Members opposite. He has imposed on all Members opposite an inability to find their tongues and is saying: "Do not do as I say, do as I do". Of course, what he does is zip up. Hon. Members opposite have now zipped up and they have zipped out of any chance of re-election in the process.

Before I was so rudely interrupted, I was about to say that the Minister of Highways and Transportation from the Province of Saskatchewan which, for those who do not know it, is run by a Conservative administration of the same colour, hue and shade as this one, has said about Clause 4 of Bill C-75 the following:

> Any increase in costs to users on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway System will result in producers looking for transport services which are cheaper. As a result, some traffic may be diverted to the U.S. transportation system causing loss of Canadian jobs.

A Progressive Conservative Minister of Transportation from the Province of Saskatchewan is saying to his Progressive Conservative brothers and sisters in Ottawa that they are going to transfer jobs from Canada south of the border. What does the Government of Canada do in response to that in this new age of consultation and co-operation? It proceeds to transfer jobs south of the border, totally ignoring the representations of that Progressive Conservative Government. Again, Canadians have to attach a degree of cynicism to the commitment of the Prime Minister to bring a brand new era to Canada.

To show that the Government's inability to listen is not partisan and that it does not treat its own Party colleagues any worse than others, the Minister of Transportation and Highways in the Province of Manitoba, who is a New Democrat, had the following to say about Clause 4:

> If this clause in the Bill is allowed to remain, it will lead to efforts towards full cost recovery which is beyond the limited financial capabilities of grain producers and other shippers and consumers.
> The continued pursuit of the "user pay" philosophy without regard for the ability of shippers and consumers to pay will inevitably cripple the flow of the nation's commerce.

A while ago, a Conservative administration was in power in Prince Edward Island, but it suffered the backlash of this Bill. Just before the former Minister of Fisheries from the Province of Prince Edward Island went to the guillotine that awaits all of those who endorse this legislation, with his dying political breath—the man is still healthy, of course—he had something to say about this Bill as he was going down the chute because of the efforts of this administration.

• (1510)

I should like to refer to what the Minister of Fisheries for the Province of Prince Edward Island had to say about this Bill. He said:

> fishermen, through the Fisheries Act, pay for right of access to the common property resource which they harvest through personal and vessel licence fees. It is my view that it is the responsibility of the licensing authority namely, the Government of Canada, to provide access to the resources for which fishermen are licensed.
> The imposition of user fees to the fishery as proposed by the legislation represents the possibility of further substantial costs to an industry which has been beset with so many problems in recent years.

It is incredible for one to look at the list of organizations, associations, politicians, user groups, and individual Canadians who are opposed to this legislation. They are not opposed to it for reasons of discomfort or inconvenience. They are opposed to it for fundamental reasons of survival. It is incredible that the Government of Canada still persists with the Utopian notion that all it is doing is trimming a bit of fat around the edges of the collective T-bone which is Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Government is not trimming a bit of fat. The Government has gone through the fat with its broadsword, has gone through the muscle, has glanced off bone, has gone deep into the bone, and has ruptured the spleen and marrow which are essential to the rejuvenation of any body.

Mr. Gormley: The champion of mixed metaphors!

Mr. Tobin: The Government has gone right to the core of the economy of all regions, that is, their ability to compete in the world market-place by moving goods and people to where markets are located. I fail to understand—

Mr. Gormley: You also failed English.

Mr. Tobin: We Newfoundlanders are known as people of few words. We are also known as people who lack the ability of some Hon. Members in the House to present our views in a manner consistent with the disciplines of the English language. We apologize for that. We are ever so humble in the House when we speak. We do our best. We try to make our case. We understand that not all Members have the same capacity or incapacity. We do the best we can, notwithstanding the normal high standard of debate by the Hon. Members of the House, many of whom are here today. However, let me just apologize and continue.

What did the Premier of Ontario have to say about Clause 4 of Bill C-75? He said that there was good reason for serious concern about the negative impact on Canada's transportation and shipping industries as a result of the Bill.

The Government of Canada is about to embark upon a great free trade experiment with the Government of the United States. It is gambling that it can negotiate a satisfactory arrangement on trade between the U.S. and Canada. It is betting that it can reach an agreement which will satisfy Canadians in all parts of the country. However, with Clause 4 of Bill C-75, it is moving unilaterally for the first time in 30 years of joint administration of the St. Lawrence Seaway system. The Seaway is jointly administered by a U.S. commission appointed by the U.S. Government and by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority appointed by the Canadian Government. They have jointly managed the Seaway for 30 years. Clause 4 represents the first time in the joint management of the Seaway that one of the two partners has acted arbitrarily and in isolation of the other. Indeed, the American commission wrote a letter to the Prime Minister pointing out that it was the first time in 30 years that Canada had acted unilaterally and arbitrarily, without consulting the American side, in imposing new user charges.

If we cannot even manage to stay the course or stay on track in the joint management of a system, for which we have had a joint management program for the last 30 years, why is it that Canadians should believe that we have the ability to initiate a new comprehensive free trade agreement representing all our sectors, not just particular segments such as the St. Lawrence Seaway system?

The Minister of Transport appointed a subcommittee to study the St. Lawrence Seaway and how best the Government of Canada could rescue that ailing system from apparent demise. Apparently it is suffering from a steady and progressive loss of traffic. Yesterday that subcommittee heard from the Thunder Bay Economic Development Corporation. It presented an excellent, well prepared brief. It was entitled "Canada's Third Coast—The Role of Thunder Bay in Future Canadian Export Trade". It almost put a question mark behind the word "Future" because the future of export trade is in doubt with the measures now being proposed by the Government. I commend to all Hon. Members this thorough brief as required reading for those who want to participate in a meaningful way in debate on transport policy.

In respect of the transportation system in the Port of Thunder Bay, the report indicated that in 1985 a number of factors, including grain production shortfalls, poor international sales performance, changing technology, continuing shifting grain traffic to federally assisted West Coast port facilities, and Seaway disruptions, resulted in the permanent loss of an estimated 500 direct jobs. It went on to indicate that higher Seaway and port user charges, as proposed in Clause 4 of Bill C-75, would have a dramatic, negative impact upon port and grain handling activities in Thunder Bay. Also its forecast indicated that unless these proposed cost increases were averted, its area of the transportation sector could permanently lose up to 1,500 direct jobs during the next five years.

The Thunder Bay Economic Development Corporation, having already suffered the loss of 500 permanent jobs and having noted the state of decline in traffic, went on to warn the Government that Clause 4 of the Bill, the user-pay clause, could result in the loss of an additional 1,500 jobs. That is just in the Port of Thunder Bay alone. We must understand that the potential job loss, direct and indirect, in the entire system could indeed amount to tens of thousands.

In dealing with Clause 4 the brief went on to indicate that the enormous economic and social costs of this potential dislocation should be carefully weighed against the very modest net benefits of all proposed cost recovery policies or measures under consideration by the federal Government. Also it indicated that when existing jobs were lost, experience has shown that they are far too difficult and expensive to replace, and that the significance of employment loss was far more acute in an already economically disadvantaged region like northwestern Ontario.

In the face of excellent work carried out by many organizations, several months ago when the Bill was before the legislative committee and as recently as yesterday when the subcommittee was in Thunder Bay, I do not know how the Government in good conscience could persist in bringing this Bill before Parliament.

It must be noted that many witnesses said they were not consulted about Clause 4, that it was a surprise. This indicates a sense that the Government was trying to slip something by them, something fundamental and important. I must note that the Government has tried to slip something important and fundamental through Parliament. It strikes me as being strange and perhaps somewhat devious that the Government would bring in this Bill in the last few hours of the last day in the last week of the last month of this Parliament, which has been in session for the better part of two years.

The Government has come with this Bill in the expectation that Members, with visions of summer holidays dancing in their heads, with visions of ties and suits flung in the closets, with visions of summer gear and being down on the trail with constituents, with visions of seeing their wives and families—and husbands in the case of our female colleagues—would cave in and allow this legislation to slip through so that we could more quickly pursue our own personal vacations and agendas.

I am one of those who would rather be on the way back home today. I am one of those who would like to be heading home to see my friends and my family, my children and my good wife who puts up with my absences, but I will not on principle allow this Bill to be slipped through at the last second with all the concurrent negative impacts on so many people in Canada just because the Government is counting on an opposition to be tired and so allow, in the pursuit of our own pleasures, this Bill to slip through today. No, Mr. Speaker, that will not happen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, 15 days ago I started my speech. Two days later, in the middle of it, the Government actually changed the order of business and buried this Bill. It is like a skeleton in the family closet. You try to bury it deep in the corner where no one will see or notice it, and then you slip it back out at the last second, expose it briefly to the light of day, and then whack it back into the closet again. That is what the Government has attempted to do with this Bill. It is bringing it forward in the dying minutes to have it slip through. I will not allow that to happen as long as my voice stands up.

The Thunder Bay Economic Development Corporation in its brief presented yesterday went on to say with respect to the proposed application of the user-pay concept that it is both inequitable and short-sighted, and the Corporation is strongly opposed to the application of a user-pay philosophy or cost recovery as proposed in Clause 4 of Bill C-75. It also stated that it believes these proposed charges, as well as the existing revenue recoveries levied against the seaway system, represent an unfair form of indirect taxation. Further, it believes that the future extent of all proposed user charges can be quantified and compared closely to all similar charges imposed on other major transportation modes.

In recent testimony before the Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, His Worship Jack Masters, a former Member of Parliament and, I must say he was an able Member of Parliament, a Liberal Member at that, stated that the City of Thunder Bay opposed Bill C-75. He further indicated: "Clause 4 of the legislation threatened 5,000 jobs in Thunder Bay" and said that "Clause 4 has the potential to greatly damage the economy of western Canada, the Great Lakes and Canada as a whole. Clause 4 should not be allowed to destroy our great inland waterway."

I think that sums up the brief presented by the Thunder Bay Economic Development Corporation.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member during his speech. I have been listening very attentively to it and he makes considerable sense. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has spoken for quite a length of time, and in view of the urgent nature of his submissions, could you seek the unanimous consent of the House to ask the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe some questions at this point.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nunziata: As I understand, the Hon. Member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I note there is not unanimous consent. Debate.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a rare day that a Member is prepared to stand and defend the logic of the arguments he puts forward on behalf of the citizens of Canada. Members of Parliament opposite are mumbling and grumbling under their breath and are grumbling to themselves. If they do not agree with the compelling logic of my remarks, why do they not take the occasion to give consent, stand on their feet to defend or to seek to destroy, if they can, the arguments I put forward and indeed the arguments of so many people in Canada who will be negatively affected by this Bill? Having noted the great confidence that Members have shown in their own Bill by their silence, having noted that they are obvious only by their silence, I shall continue. I have much to say about this Bill.

Just to keep Members of Parliament on the edge of their seats, as they have been for the last little while about this Bill, and to broaden their understanding of transportation and the implications of this Bill, I want to talk about the impact of the Bill as it affects oil rigs. This is just a little change of pace for Members for a short while, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous consent to the following. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or special order of this House, at 5 p.m. this day the sitting shall be suspended to the call of the Chair for the purpose of witnessing the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House at what time we can expect the messenger from the Senate to come in with Royal Assent? Does the Parliamentary Secretary have any idea?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the messenger will arrive at or about 5 p.m. What we are talking about is to avoid any technical problems. Royal Assent will take place very close to 5 p.m. I think this Order will take care of any technicalities.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. Just so I have a full understanding of what the Parliamentary Secretary is suggesting, is he suggesting that rather than adjourning at 5 p.m. that the House continue to sit?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nunziata: Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could explain exactly what he is proposing so we on this side of the House understand fully.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty in explaining the matter to the Hon. Member. It was worked out with Mr. Yanover of his Party to avoid any difficulty.

At 5 p.m. the sitting shall be suspended to the call of the Chair for the purpose of Royal Assent. There will be no further government business after 5 p.m.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is using the terminology "suspend". As I understand it the House would be adjourning—

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Nunziata: —for the summer recess. I would like a very clear and unequivocal explanation as to the distinction between the House suspending and the House adjourning. Are we adjourning at five o'clock or are we suspending?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, unaccustomed as I am to a great deal of debate on this particular matter, it seems to me that we would be suspending at 5 p.m. until Royal Assent is obtained and at that point we would return to the House and adjourn without any further business.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary understands that we will, I am sure, give consent. If, however, we were not to be co-operative, and I want to show that we can co-operate, we could say no at five o'clock. Everything would be over. We could refuse to stay and, therefore, there would be no Royal Assent, meaning that none of these Bills would get Royal Assent before some time in September. I do not think that is the mood of the House. Therefore, I think we will co-operate.

Canada Shipping Act

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion presented by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis). It requires unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, if the Parliamentary Secretary is willing to suspend the sentence which he is attempting to impose on the shipping industry of Canada and many primary producers, we would be glad to have Royal Assent right now. Otherwise, I will be more than happy to spend the next hour and a half educating Members as to the concerns of Canadians about Clause 4. If the Government prefers that I wait and educate Members in the fall, I will be glad to do that because I do not believe that you ought to cram too much down a student's throat in the final days before summer holidays. My friend, the Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Price) told me that. He was a teacher for many years. He said that minds are always much more receptive to new information in the fall of the year when school resumes. However, if the Parliamentary Secretary would like me to continue, I will. If he is not interested in my offer, that is fine. There is nothing I would rather do than educate Members.

Earlier in my remarks I indicated that I have two problems with Bill C-75. One is that it is flawed because of what is in it, that being Clause 4, and one is because it is flawed because of what is not in it, that is any provision to include oil rigs as ships to fall under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act.

I reminded Members that on February 15, 1982, the Ocean Ranger tragically went down off the shores of Newfoundland. There were 84 men on board. All lives were lost. Sixty-nine members of that crew were Canadians and 56 of them were Newfoundlanders. Flowing from that disaster was a royal commission report sponsored by both Governments which cost $15 million. Its major recommendation was that oil rigs operating off the East Coast of Canada ought to be included in the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act under the responsibility of the Minister of Transport of Canada. However, oil rigs are still the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources notwithstanding the work of the royal commission, a $15 million expenditure, and the thousands of expert witnesses who convinced Justice Allan Hickman to make this recommendation to the Government of Canada.

It is a tragedy of great proportion that the Government was not able to resolve the personality conflicts and the empire building mania in the mind of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. She would not allow this little piece of her empire to be placed under the responsibility of the Minsiter of Transport. The decision not to place oil rigs under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act flies in the face of at least three rulings of Canadian courts, all of which have concluded that rigs are ships and, henceforth, should be under the jurisdiction of the Act.

People ask what difference it makes whether the rigs are under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Energy. It makes a lot of difference. The royal commission on the Ocean Ranger disaster came to the conclusion that because of the inadequate command structure, because of the lack of regulatory procedure to be followed in terms of command structure, training procedures, and procedures followed in an emergency, and because of confusion during the disaster, lives were lost which might otherwise have been saved. The royal commission identifid specific problems as contributing to the disaster. Since rigs are not covered under the Canada Shipping Act, they are not required to have licensed captains on board. In fact, even today rigs offshore Newfoundland do not have qualified and licensed captains on board. I believe that one of six of them do. The other five do not because it is not required under the guidelines of the Minister of Energy.

The royal commission report said that the main contributing factors to the disaster were lack of proper procedures for emergency, lack of manuals and technical information relating to the ballast control console, lack of adequate training programs for key personnel, lack of knowledge of the vulnerability of the rig and its ballast system and human error which can be attributed to a lack of proper training. The report said that a mistake in reaction to the malfunction of the equipment led directly to the disaster as a conclusion. Closing the deadlights in the ballast control room before the storm intensified could clearly have prevented the loss. That was not done. Knowledgeable action by the crew in dealing with the effects of the seawater on the ballast control console would have averted the tragedy. The disaster could have been avoided or, in any event, prevented by competent and informed action by those on board. Because of inadequate training, lack of manuals and technical information, the crew failed to interact in the fatal chain of events which led to the eventual loss of the Ocean Ranger and, tragically, of the 84 men who were on that rig.

How could this have happened? How could a $1 billion piece of equipment with 84 human beings aboard be out in the roughest seas in the world, aside from those at the Cape of Good Hope, improperly equipped with an improperly trained crew? It happened because from a regulatory point of view, oil and gas rigs were perceived primarily as vehicles to extract oil from under the ocean floor. They were not perceived as ships or ocean-going vessels. They were not treated in a manner in which any vessel which operates 200 miles offshore in the Atlantic should be treated. More particularly, these rigs are not like ships. They are stationary and cannot roll with the punches in a storm. They must withstand the punches.

In 1982 there was not an appropriate appreciation of the fact that this was something more than a tool for extracting oil from the ocean floor, that it was a ship operating in some of the most severe conditions to be found in the world with 84 human beings aboard. After three years of evidence and $15 million of expenditure, the royal commission recommended that we must stop treating rigs as tools of extraction and start treating them as ships by bringing them under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act and the Minister of Transport.

I am incredibly disappointed that we have not done this for no other reason than that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not prepared to give up her jurisdiction over oil rigs which operate in the Atlantic Ocean because she does not want to give a piece of her empire to another Minister. It is tragic and sad that personal vanity can stand in the way of honestly made and sincerely held recommendations of a royal commission which spent a tremendous amount of time generating its recommendations for the Government of Canada.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-45, without amendment, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

27 June 1986

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 27th day of June, 1986, at 5:00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the message from the Senate accompanying Bill C-45 did not contain any comments. Since you did not read any. I suppose there are none.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! In the case of Bill C-45, as was the case for the other Bills we received today, there were no comments from the Senate.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying about the importance of including oil rigs under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act—

Mr. Boudria: Could you repeat some of that, I missed it?

Mr. Tobin: I would be glad to repeat it. You were not here.

As I was saying, it is time we started treating rigs as something more than just a means of exploring for and extracting oil from the sea bottom. We should treat them as vessels which hold the lives of men and women at sea. To do that adequately, those people have to be under a command structure and set of regulations which can be found only in the Canada Shipping Act. They should not be seen as simply a scenic point for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to visit once in a while by helicopter. The royal commission did not spend its time and our money making recommendations to have them ignored in a whimsical and flippant manner because of the frail vanities of Ministers of the Crown.

I get damn angry knowing that this Parliament has not had the ability to get its act together, be non-partisan, sensible and intelligent and accept the royal commission recommendation. It did not happen. There is not a Member of Parliament of any Party who knows a damn thing about this matter who will tell you that it was anything but foolish and irresponsible not to have included rigs under the Canada Shipping Act. I hope when we come back in the fall the Government will be prepared to accept an amendment to do the right and responsible thing.

Not only has the Government ignored the recommendations of the royal commission, it has ignored rulings of Canadian courts on this question. There are several Canadian and international decisions which support the argument in favour of defining oil rigs as ships. I want to cite a few of them. In the case involving the Seafarers' International Union and Crosbie Offshore Services of March 5, 1982, the Federal Court of Appeal was faced with the question of whether federal or Newfoundland legislation applied to the crew of supply boats working the rigs in the Hibernia field off Newfoundland. In the course of describing the nature of the services supplied by the boats to the rigs, the judge noted that supply ships are also ships. They have means of self-propulsion but, for one reason or another, may be towed to a drill site.

In the case of The Queen v. the Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydocks Company of July 7, 1981, the court considered whether a floating crane was a ship within the meaning of the federal definition. After reviewing the English cases on the point, the judge said that applying the law to the crane as described, he was of the opinion that the crane was a ship. While it appears that she was not capable of navigation herself and was not self-propelled, those facts did not detract from the fact that she was built to do something on water which required movement from place to place. Therefore, in his opinion the crane was a ship.

I have a third decision. This was rendered in the Exchequer Court, predecessor to the Federal Court of Canada established in 1971. In that case the judge decided, using the Canada Shipping Act definition, that a barge used for cargo was also a ship. The Canada Shipping Act covers barges. A garbage scow or transport barge, whether it has anyone on board, is a ship. A crane operating in a harbour or port is a ship. A supply vessel is a ship. However, an oil rig like the Ocean Ranger which went down in a violent Atlantic storm, with a crew which was, in the words of the royal commission, improperly trained, is not a ship. It does not have to be regulated under the Canada Shipping Act. The Minister of Transport is not responsible for the operation of that rig. It falls under the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who would not know navigation law from the laws of backgammon.

The Government is barging along, insensitive to the impact this Bill will have on Canadian citizens. It will cause waves right across the land as it moves like some monolithic object, unintelligent about its destination, simply determined to push ahead.

I would note here the representations made by the Ocean Ranger's Family Foundation. That was set up to assist those families who lost loved ones to get over the consequences of the loss of the bread-winner in the family. It also recommended to the Government of Canada, during the course of its appearance before the royal commission, that when it next reviews the Canada Shipping Act it should include under that jurisdiction the responsibility for monitoring and regulating oil rigs at sea. That recommendation was also ignored.

During the course of my remarks concerning the St. Lawrence Seaway, I gave an assessment and profile of the organizations opposed to Clause 4, the user-pay clause. It is the guillotine clause. It is the Seaway destroying and Montreal Chamber of Commerce and Port of Montreal bashing clause. It is the fishermen bashing clause, the potato farmer bashing clause. It is a forestry worker bashing clause. It is the Quebec Metal Mining Association bashing clause. In the course of talking to ordinary Canadians, both powerful and humble, they are opposed to this piece of legislation.

I mentioned as well that it struck me as being rather strange that a Government that claims it can negotiate a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States is moving unilaterally to impose user fees on the Seaway, which is jointly administered by both the Government of Canada and a U.S. appointed commission.

At that time I said that certain individuals, including U.S. Representatives and U.S. Senators, had written to the Prime Minister of Canada pointing out that after 30 years of joint management, 30 years of being able to agree on every single occasion to new rules, regulations or charges that would affect the authority, joint agreement, solidarity, harmony, happiness, blissful relationship between the American and Canadian administrations, for the first time we have Canada acting unilaterally. For the first time we have our U.S. partners moved to the embarrassing position of having to go past the Minister of Transport, to go past the good offices of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, to go past the good offices of the Canadian ambassador and to write directly to the Prime Minister of Canada asking the Government what it is doing. It takes two to manage the authority and this unilateral action the Government is taking with Clause 4 will destroy the joint nature of the management plan that has existed.

Just 24 days ago I received in my office a copy of a letter written by Mr. Donald Rothwell, President of the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) asking that the Leader of the Official Opposition contact his colleagues, the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe to take a second look at what it is the Government of Canada is attempting to finesse in the dying days of Parliament past the noses of parliamentarians and onto the backs of Canada's shippers.

It was a very good letter that he wrote to the Leader of the Opposition because it included some very interesting material. As well as outlining his objection to Bill C-75, Mr. Rothwell provided the Leader of the Opposition with some very interesting correspondence, including a letter to the Prime Minister by ULS International Inc., Toronto, Ontario. The letter is written to the Prime Minister of Canada, and obviously written by someone who knows him well because it starts, "Dear Brian". It says: "I would like to draw to your attention our concern over Clause 4 of Bill C-75. In its present form the authority it provides this and future Governments to charge for Coast Guard services is virtually unconstrained. As a result, potential for economic dislocation to the detriment of the lakes, St. Lawrence traffic is open ended."

He goes on to say: "I know it is unnecessary to recite recent stats to prove that utilization by both grain and iron ore was in free fall last year, culminating a downward trend that began in 1975."

He says to "Dear Brian": "Clause 4 requires a great deal of revision before it is ready to be passed into legislation."

I think we all know the "Dear Brian" referred to, the Prime Minister, went out shortly after this letter was received, and shortly after a meeting with the Premier of Quebec, and promised to have another look at Clause 4. We all know what happened. His commitment to have another look was like so many other commitments, like snow that melts in spring, when you turn around it is gone. Bill C-75, with all of its terible implications is still before the House.

There is another letter that I know Members would be most interested in hearing about. It is a more formal letter, more chilling.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, I guess it was two or three minutes ago, the Member referred to Crosbie Offshore. I am just wondering if he could inform the House as to whether this is the Crosbie Offshore of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, to that question which was not a point of order and which I therefore did not hear, it is one and the same family that is represented by a certain Hon. Member from St. John's West in this House. There is a second letter written to the Prime Minister. The first letter started off, "Dear Brian", it was warm, friendly, confident of being heard. The second letter is more formal, more chilling. This one is written, "Dear Mr. Prime Minister", no more "Dear Brian". It is from the Great Lakes Commission of Ann Arbour, Michigan. The Great Lakes Commission, for those who do not know, is the American institution that is the equivalent of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. The Great Lakes Commission is the American body that does the same job and that works hand in hand with our agency to manage the St. Lawrence Seaway. In their letter they say: "The Great Lakes Commission is deeply concerned about proposed Bill C-75, which would authorize the imposition of cost recovery for Canadian Coast Guard services. The Commission respects Canada's needs to raise additional revenues. The Commission accepts Canada's choice of user fees as one vehicle to accomplish that end. However, the Commission, as the only co-ordinating and advocacy agency established by the States and approved by Congress to provide a collective voice for the eight Great Lakes States on water resources and related issues, would be remiss if it did not express opposition to the current language of Bill C-75.

The Commission has monitored the progress of Bill C-75 in Parliament, has participated in regional discussions about potential impacts, the Coast Guard cost recovery provision, Clause 4. Commission testimony was presented to the Legislative Committee in Ottawa on February 13, 1986."

The Commission emphasized: "—four points believed to be necessary before a navigation cost recovery legislation can be successfully implemented. (1) federal user fees should be uniform in application from seaport to seaport and from coastal range to coastal range. Uniformity maintains the current competitive relationship amongst ports."

Concern number one is not met in this Bill. It continues: "(2) there must be a clear determination of the purpose for which fees are to be collected and the activities to which they are to be applied. This is critical to the ultimate acceptability of any system adopted."

Point number two is not met because the Minister is not going to tell anybody in advance of getting the authority to raise these fees, how much is to be raised, who is to be targetted, for how long fees are to be raised and at what rate they are to be raised.

It is the equivalent to giving a rogue a gun and a bullet without first assuring yourself that he is not going to point the gun and the bullet at you and do you great harm. The Government of Canada has raised up the barrel, has raised up the gun, has looked down the barrel, is squeezing the trigger and the bullet that it is going to use to do great damage to the Canadian shipping industry is this Bill. However, we will not give the Government the ammunition today. It will pull the trigger, only to find that it is firing blanks because we in the Opposition will not provide the Government with the ammunition that it seeks to do grave damage to the people of this country.

The Great Lakes Commission goes on to say that any user-fee proposal should involve thorough public consultation with all user groups, which should take place before initial application of fees and before any subsequent changes in the level of fees.

Mr. Boudria: Was that done?

Mr. Tobin: That was not done. In fact, every group has complained that they had no consultation prior to the introduction of Clause 4 in Bill C-75. The Great Lakes Commission is responsible, along with our authority, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, for managing the Seaway. That Commission wrote the Prime Minister in a desperate bid, after having gone through all other channels.

The Great Lakes Commission is saying that they have managed to co-operate successfully with the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to jointly manage the St. Lawrence Seaway, so why can they not co-operate in a joint fashion in the establishment of new fees? I find it strange, indeed ironic, that if the Government cannot keep its act together with respect to the St. Lawrence Seaway that has been successfully managed jointly with the Americans for 30 years, how can Canadians believe that the Government is competent or capable of negotiating a comprehensive free trade agreement with implications that are much more profound than those in Clause 4 of this Bill?

It strains Canadians' belief in the credibility of the Government that it can negotiate a comprehensive free trade agreement when it cannot even deal with the joint management of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

I want to bring to the attention of Canadians and Members of Parliament a second letter that was written to Canada's Ambassador, Allan Gotlieb. The letter states: "Dear Mr. Ambassador: We wish to thank you for your recent letter concerning legislative action in Clause 4 of Bill C-75, currently pending before the Canadian Parliament. It was reassuring for us to learn that Bill C-75 was before a special legislative committee of Parliament for detailed analysis, that the Minister of Transport would be establishing a committee to consider the views of all affected parties prior to any decision to implement Coast Guard user fees." Those people were falsely reassured because I was part of that special legislative committee and, despite the words of wisdom that were ushered in from every part of Canada in opposition to Clause 4, it is still retained in the legislation.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As you know, there are a precious 55 minutes left in this particular debate. I know that the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) is not yet half way through his submissions with respect to this legislation, specifically with regard to Clause 4. Once again, might there be unanimous consent in the House to permit me at this point to ask some questions of the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. Debate. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, again, Members opposite who profess to be ready and willing to stand on their feet only in the event that I shut up so this Bill can pass, do not have the courage or backbone to stand up and defend their silence. It is a strange place indeed, when the only time those Members opposite will be able to find their legs is to make a direct dart for the exit as they rush off on their holidays, having wreaked havoc on the Canadian shipping industry.

As I was saying, before my colleague, the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), attempted to put such a sensible suggestion before the House, the Great Lakes Commission wrote to the Prime Minister in opposition to the unilateral charges being applied to the St. Lawrence Seaway.

In addition, a coalition of Senators who represent Seaway or Great Lake states have written the Ambassador of Canada, complaining about the unilateral action that Canada has taken in Clause 4 of Bill C-75. They are the same Senators who were imposing tariffs on Canadian cedar shakes and shingles, the same Senators who nearly defeated free trade talks in the Senate Finance Committee. They are cynical about the Government's ability to deliver on free trade and are not much interested in free trade because they recognize that the Government of Canada cannot even deal effectively with the joint management of the Seaway Authority.

Those Senators who wrote Canada's Ambassador include Senator Alan J. Dixon, Senator John H. Glenn, Jr., Senator Levin, Senator Rudy Boschwitz, Senator Don Quayle, Senator William Proxmire, Senator David Durenberger, Senator Richard Lugar, Senator Bob Kasten, Senator Howard Metzenbaum and Senator Paul Simon. These Senators have taken the trouble to write the Prime Minister of Canada to express their amazement and shock that the Government of Canada, without consulting its partner in running the St. Lawrence Seaway, is about to impose a new set of user fees that will set up a two tier system on a Seaway that has been jointly managed by both nations for 30 years.

It is like Pavlov's dog in reverse. While Pavlov's dog was conditioned to go for a biscuit when a light flashed, Canada gives away another bargaining tool when the Americans impose a 35 per cent tariff on cedar shakes and shingles. That is Pavlov's experiment in reverse. The Government tells the Americans not to worry because it will not impose sanctions on any American products other than tea bags and oatmeal.

Yesterday, the United States brought down a unanimous ruling to seek to impose tariffs on our softwood lumber industry. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) stood in the House to table a Bill to increase the cost of generic drugs in this country—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to be more relevant to the Bill.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the reason I gave this example is that on the one hand, the Government of Canada is destroying a 30 year old working relationship with the American administration on the joint management of the St. Lawrence Seaway, while, on the other hand, it is making a mess of the comprehensive free trade negotiations.

• (1610)

During the course of the day, because I am a Member of Parliament from Newfoundland, and because I wanted to be sure that I was not parochial in my address, I spent a great deal of time speaking of the impact of this Bill and Clause 4 on the St. Lawrence Seaway, on the Port of Montreal, on the Port of Thunder Bay, the impact on farmers in the Prairies, on foresters in British Columbia, on miners in the Province of Quebec, on the Great Lakes—

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member during his excellent speech.

I certainly don't want to criticize our interpreters whose performance in interpreting the Hon. Member's eloquence, word for word, is quite remarkable, but while listening to the French translation, I missed part of the Hon. Member's comments referring to the objections of people from Montreal who took part in the Montreal economic summit and who are also opposed to this Bill.

I therefore want to make it quite clear that in opposing this bill, the Hon. Member was also speaking on their behalf.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure it is not the fault of the translators, either, that for some reason I find it difficult—

Mr. Gauthier: The interpreters.

Mr. Speaker: Or interpreters. I am sure that the point the Hon. member was raising became lost, as well.

Mr. Gauthier: It's the interpretation.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, lest there be any doubt on whose behalf I am speaking, let me list the kinds of people on whose behalf I speak.

An Hon. Member: All Canadians.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, all Canadians. However, I find it strange that the Government has managed to make so many different kinds of people mad at the Government at the same time. Let us look at who is made at the Government because of Clause 4. It is an incredible array of diverse backgrounds and various interests all coming to the same conclusion.

The loneliest fisherman on the bill of Cape St. George on the southwest coast of Newfoundland is opposed to the Bill. The President of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce is opposed to the Bill. The potato farmer in P.E.I., who is producing potatoes at two cents a pound less than he is receiving when he goes to market, is opposed to the Bill. People along the northern part of New Brunswick, many of whom have harbours that need to be dredged regularly, are opposed to the Bill. People involved in the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association in Ontario are opposed to the Bill. The farmer who is on the Prairies, confronted with the lowest wheat prices he has had in 60 years and battling off a plague of grasshoppers, is opposed to the Bill. People in the Port of Thunder Bay, where 500 permanent jobs have already been lost, with the threat of the loss of 1,500 more permanent jobs, are opposed to the Bill. In the great Province of Alberta, those people in the forest industry, to the extent it exists, knowing they must get their product to the market through the Great Lakes, are opposed to the Bill. The people who are employed in the forest industry of British Columbia, as represented by the Executive Director of the Council of Forestry Industries of British Columbia, are opposed to the Bill. All other Canadians who made representations before the committee were opposed to the Bill.

It is amazing that one Bill could bring so many Canadians from so many different backgrounds and interests together with a united voice, all singing a chorus from the same hymn book, "We are opposed to the Bill", yet the Government continues to feed up before this Parliament, in the dying days, in an attempt to sneak it through, this Draconian measure, this dastardly piece of legislation that would cause such ill effects throughout such a wide cross-section of Canadian society. It is beyond my comprehension that the 211 Members of the Government could have become so thick-calloused in so short a time.

An Hon. Member: Why are they so partisan?

Mr. Tobin: That is right, Mr. Speaker. Why are they so partisan? Having said that, I want to be a bit more parochial about the nature of the Bill. I think I have done my duty as a Member of Parliament for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: Very well.

Mr. Tobin: I am speaking on behalf of all Canadians, including people in the great City of Toronto, from where the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) comes. I hope Hon. Members do not mind if I become slightly more parochial and try to describe this from the point of view of some of my constituents from the great riding of Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe in western Newfoundland..

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I would like to explain why my constituents are opposed to the Bill, and in order for Hon. Members to appreciate why my constituents are opposed, I must draw a picture of a typical community on the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland, which received the first people who came from Europe to North America.

Mr. Nunziata: Johnny Cabot.

Mr. Tobin: The Hon. Member is absolutely wrong. John Cabot was recognized in the history books as the first person who landed in North America, in Newfoundland; along with Christopher Columbus, as claimed by the Americans. Actually, there has been a world heritage site declared on the great northern peninsula, in L'Anse Aux Meadows, as recognized in the special by National Geographic, where the Vikings came before John Cabot or Christopher Columbus. The Government of Canada has declared a world heritage site and this particular administration has put the finishing touch on a national park at that location.

In this land that received the first settlers to the new world, today, centuries later, there exists small communities of people who are close to the land and sea. These people have traditionally, for hundreds of years, made their living by going into the forests and cutting trees for the pulp and paper companies in the winter and by going to the water during the summer season and taking from the resources of the sea. These people are primary producers. They do not receive their salaries from the Government of Canada or from the Government of Newfoundland. They do not receive their salaries by working in office towers or in the service industries. They produce from the land. They ask nothing more of their country or society, being Canadians, other than the right to pursue this way of life that they have chosen. They have chosen not to be in Toronto, in the canyons of steel and glass and concrete. They have chosen not to be in Ottawa, surrounded by the ivory towers of centralized bureaucracy. They have chosen not to be on the farms in the Prairies. They have chosen to live on the rock, near the salt water, to make their living from the sea and from the forests.

How does Clause 4 affect my constituents? How does it affect the people of the communities of Port au Choix, Cook's Harbour, Trout River, Woody Point, L'Anse au Loup, on the side of the Prime Minister L'Anse Clair and L'Anse aux Meadows on my side? The Quebec north shore people are the same kind of people and have the same kind of lifestyle. How does it affect them?

This Bill will allow the Canadian Coast Guard to impose user-fees on fishermen. It will allow the Department of Transport to charge for navigational aids to fishermen. It will allow it to charge dredging fees to fishermen. The Kirby report, an exhaustive study conducted several years ago, stated concerning primary producers that even though their contribution to the GNP of this country is substantial, they, themselves, are among the lowest paid people of Canada, many living below the poverty line. How does this Bill affect them? It states to a fisherman who is at sea in his boat in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, taking on water with a crew of four and a 58-foot dragger, that if he calls the Coast Guard when he is in trouble, he will receive a bill.

Mr. Benjamin: It would be cheaper to sink.

Mr. Tobin: It says to him that the Government of Canada states, "If you are in trouble, we will help you, but we will send you a bill". It states to that fisherman who is barely able to make it from pillar to post, and to pay to keep a roof over his head or to put bread and butter on his table, that maybe he is better off taking the risk. Perhaps he would be better off waiting for someone else to come rescue him. Maybe he can get his motor to limp back to shore. Maybe he will make it. If he can then he will not have a Bill waiting for him from the Government of Canada for asking that someone assist him when his life was in danger. That is what this bill does to a fisherman in Atlantic Canada. That is what it does to a fisherman in Port Saunders or Port au Choix.

Canada Shipping Act

• (1620)

What else does this Bill say? What does it say to those people who live in parts of Canada where ice builds up starting in the month of December and continues through January, February and March so that by April there are mountains of ice some 15 to 40 feet high? Tons of ice build up in some areas of Canada which separates fishermen from their boats and from the water on which they make their living.

The Bill says that if one calls the Canadian Coast Guard to come and make one trip to break that ice to allow a fishermen, his colleagues, his neighbours, his friends, his brothers and family to go back to sea to make a living from it, that it will be glad to oblige providing the fisherman pays. That is what Clause 4 of Bill C-75 says to fishermen on the Great Northern Peninsula.

I see that a former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is in the House. During the time he was Minister, and insofar as fishermen are concerned, he earned a reputation, and rightly so, as one who would always err, if he erred, on the side of fishermen. He knows about what I am talking. He knows that the way of life that would see a man get up at five o'clock in the morning to go to sea in rain and snow and sleet and cold is not an easy one. He knows that fishermen, like farmers, miners and woodsmen, are our primary producers. They do not number among the wealthiest Canadians, but they are among the most efficient. They are among those who make the greatest contribution to this country. They are the people who will be negatively impacted as a result of this Bill.

What do we mean when we say "navigational aids"? We are talking about lights on harbour entrances that allow fishermen to come into harbour during severe weather or fog. The Government has now decided that it will provide navigational aids when and if local communities are prepared to pay for them, since they fall under the provisions of this Bill.

Canada is a marine nation. Perhaps there is no other nation in the world which has as much coastline, Atlantic, Pacific and Arctic, as does this great country of ours. Most countries develop policies to support their natural strengths, to recognize the realities of their environment. Can Hon. Members imagine Canada, which is the greatest marine nation in the world and with the largest coastline, developing a policy that would treat that intrinsic geographic nature of our being as something to be provided in the same manner as McDonald's sells hamburgers? That is to say, provide these services only when numbers warrant, only when the population is large enough to warrant it. Can Hon. Members imagine a nation which says to the people who live along the great coastlines, be they the coastlines of the Pacific, the Atlantic or the Arctic, those Canadians who by their presence guarantee our sovereignty, that they shall pay a penalty because of where they live?

Is it not insane to spend $500 million on an ice-breaker to go up in the Northwest Passage because the Americans sailed through with the Polar Sea? Is it not insane to spend that amount of money on an ice-breaker which is used to reassure our sovereignty when all we have to do is recognize the presence of our native peoples and others who choose to live in the North? They do not need these additional fees imposed upon them because of where they have chosen to live. If we are worried about sovereignty in the North, the best guarantee we have is the presence of our citizens. The best guarantee we have in terms of their presence is to treat them like decent human beings and not as another resource for the long pickpocket fingers of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who wants to yet again grab—

Mr. Nunziata: Are you calling him a thief?

Mr. Tobin: No. I would not call the Minister a thief. That would not cross my mind. I would call him a Scrooge.

Mr. Nunziata: What is the difference?

Mr. Tobin: A thief would come and take from one's pocket when one is not looking. The Minister of Finance would not do that. On the other hand a Scrooge would weasel, pound, twist, turn and squeeze every last ounce of blood out of one before letting go. It is the Scrooge-like mentality of the Government which I protest.

We are warning Canadians here and now that the long hand of the Government is aimed at their pockets. It is determined to rob from them their last pennies. It is determined in the case of fishermen and farmers, who are facing the worst crisis in decades in terms of prices, to take one more slice of bread off their plates in the mornings. The Government is determined to remove a few more potatoes from their pots in the evenings. Yes, it is even determined to take a few more bottles of Labatt's Blue out of the case at the end of a hard week when the fishermen look forward to a bit of relaxation. Why? Because the Government is imposing these additional charges on our farmers and our fishermen.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member in his flights. Obviously, his tank is still full. I wish to ask him a question. Would he not mind getting to some facts of the matter in terms of transportation and in terms of the Minister of Transport's commitment to transportation? Does the Hon. Member not realize that the Government and the Minister of Transport have cut off a grant of $48,000 to Transport 2000—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member has a speech he wants to make on the subject.

Mr. Benjamin: No. That is a question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that he is not raising a point of order. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, whether or not my colleague, with whom I have the pleasure of sitting on the Transport Committee, raised an appropriate point of order, he has raised a very good question. I wish to assure my colleague that having been here for but a few minutes, I have not quite settled in and got on track. I thank him for his assistance in helping me to get back on track.

The Hon. Member mentioned something that is terribly relevant to this debate today, Transport 2000, which is a non-governmental and non-political body. It does not carry any political stripes. It is an organization which has always provided the country with objective and useful commentary on government transportation policy. For the first time in many years it is being told by the Government that the funding which it received at arm's length with no strings attached is now being cut off. Some $48,000 was provided last year.

• (1630)

I suppose the objective and non-partisan assessment of Transport 2000 was not preaching the message according to the criteria that exists with respect to producing slick publications in Washington and making home movies for the Prime Minister. Transport 2000 has been told that because of its objective and honest critique of the Government's transport policy, the $48,000 grant which it has received for so many years is to be cut off next year. The Government is not interested in hearing non-partisan and objective comment on transport policy, and I find that to be tragic.

Indeed, I find it to be insufferable that the mere $48,000 which was providing such a benefit to all Canadians and an occasional sober slap to the Government is being cut off at a time when the Prime Minister and his entourage are spending $50,000 and $100,000 per day living like blue-eyed sheikhs in the cities of Paris, New York and Washington. I find it shocking that Transport 2000 should have its $48,000 yearly grant removed at a time when the Government is spending more than $50,000 per day to have a Hercules aircraft loaded up with two van loads of video equipment and technicians who chase the Prime Minister around the world making home video movies.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are not interested in a northern version of Bedtime for Bonzo nor in The Life of Brian as represented by the flights of fancy on which the Prime Minister takes himself during foreign travel. They are interested in objective comment and the expertise Transport 2000 has provided to the consumers of Canada for so many years, something which is now in doubt because the Government has decided that this organization is not toeing the line well enough. I think that is tragic.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member permit a question?

Mr. Tobin: Sure.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate his response regarding the matter of the grants for Transport 2000. Does the Hon. Member know that the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) retained Transport 2000 to do some work and has owed it $138.85 for the past year and a half? The Government has not only cut off its grant but it will not pay the bill. I would appreciate it if the hon. gentleman would expound on that for a moment.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member had an intervention to make. I appreciate again that it is not a point of order and I will not recognize it.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe it is appropriate on a point of order to ask a person who has the floor if he would permit a question. The hon. gentleman said he would, I asked him the question, what else do you need?

Mr. Speaker: You need a ruling of the House that allows that to be done.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is tragic enough to discover that the grant for this neutral organization has been cut off, but it is even more difficult to comprehend that this Bill has been outstanding for over a year. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing this matter to the attention of the House and indeed to the attention of the Minister. Apparently his Parliamentary Secretary is taking a break or is answering the phone. Perhaps as a result of the Hon. Member's intervention, this small injustice might be resolved as we attempt to bring to the attention of Canadians this larger injustice represented by Bill C-75, Clause 4.

When the Government brought this Bill before the House for third reading some two weeks ago, the Parliamentary Secretary indicated to Members of Parliament that a number of major shipping organizations in Canada endorsed the Government's initiative in Clause 4. He said that the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association was supportive of Clause 4. What do you think happened, Mr. Speaker? The next day, lo and behold, every single Member of Parliament and Senator received a telex from the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association. One might have expected that the telex would have said that the association endorsed the words of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall). Surprise of surprises, that is not what the telex said. The telex begins with the word "contrary". Do you know what that word means, Mr. Speaker? It means counter, contrary, the opposite of, counter to and contrary. The telex read: "Contrary to the impression possibly left by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association does not now nor never has supported Clause 4 of Bill C-75. Bill C-75 should be amended to delete Clause 4 at this time."

I think it is extremely important that the record be set straight because we would not want the House to inadvertently or accidentally get the impression that anyone in Canada is warped enough or misinformed enough to endorse Clause 4 of Bill C-75.

More to the point, during the course of his remarks, the Parliamentary Secretary left the impression that Canada Steamship Lines supported the Bill. He left the impression that that company, a major Canadian company, supported the Bill and that is one reason the House should pass the Bill. Lo and behold, the next day, a telex was sent to the Minister of Transport regarding Bill C-75. The telex read as follows:

"It has come to my attention that in third reading debate regarding Bill C-75 on Wednesday, June 11, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East, Nova Scotia, and your Parliamentary Secretary said that he was "encouraged by the positive response of Canada Steampship Lines Inc. amongst others to Section 4 of Bill C-75". That is a distortion of our position that I would like to correct. In our appearance before the legislative committee on this subject, we stated that the "concept of user fees exists and is accepted in the shipping industry today". However, we went on to list a number of serious objections to Clause 4. We were and remain concerned about the open-ended nature of the Section and the lack of reasonable limitations on this new cost-recovery mandate. In addition, with declining cargoes on the Seaway and a weakened competitive position, we consider the timing of these proposed new charges to be particularly poor. Our concerns regarding Section 4 are outlined in detail in the brief which we sent to you and presented to the legislative committee. I think it would be appropriate that the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East and your Department take a second look at that brief as well as those presented by the Dominion Marine Association, the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association and many others. It is our opinion that Section 4 of Bill C-75 will be a serious blow to the shipping industry and the industries and economies associated with it. Any other statement is a misrepresentation of CSL's position.

It is indeed a strange day when major Canadian shipping organizations and companies find it necessary to send a telex to every single Member of Parliament and Senator to indicate that their positions have been misrepresented by a representative of the Government in seeking support of Members of Parliament for this ill-conceived Bill C-75.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has been referring to a certain telex that was sent to Members of Parliament. I seek direction from Your Honour on whether it would be appropriate at this point to request that the document, to which the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) referred, be tabled in the House to enable all Canadians—

• (1640)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. Neither the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) nor the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) have the right to table such a document.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, are you suggesting that we table the document or not?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is well aware that he cannot table it, no matter what the Chair or he might want.

Mrs. Finestone: On a point of information, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing called a point of information in this House. There is in some other Houses but not in this one.

Mrs. Finestone: I was wondering whether we could have it appended to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have been very clear in what I just said. Neither the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) nor any other can have such a matter appended to Hansard, no matter how much they might want to.

Mr. Prud'homme: By unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Not even by unanimous consent.

Mr. Tobin: All I can say about the whole matter is that if the Government of Canada was as consistent in delivering on its commitments as is the Speaker in the interpretation of the rules of the House, we would not be here today discussing this dastardly Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I will be more than happy to make copies of these two telexes which indeed are damning. They point to the misinterpretation and perhaps inadvertent misleading of the House which has occurred in an attempt to try to garner support for this piece of legislation. I would be happy to send copies of them to all Members of Parliament, both in the House and in the Senate. I know they are waiting with bated breath to see the telexes which clearly indicate the Government's complicity in trying to mislead, inadvertently of course, Members of Parliament in respect of Bill C-75 in the support it receives or does not receive.

Mr. Benjamin: What kind of breath was it?

Mr. Tobin: It was a big one. It is beyond the comprehension of most Canadians. Indeed it is beyond the comprehension of most Members of Parliament who sit here, truly basking in the mood of reform which we thought permeated this place some months ago after the work of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the Hon. Member for Papineau, and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). They headed an all-Party committee on the reform of the House of Commons. Their good work appealed to the integrity in all of us. It also appealed to the lone individual in all of us to stand aside from Party consideration and Party lines occasionally and to exercise our individual conscience and judgment. Despite the appeal to make this place a better place and to make us true legislators in the true sense of the word, the Government has brought in Bill C-75. Notwithstanding the incredible, almost unanimous, well informed body of opinion about the negative consequences of Clause 4 of Bill C-75, the Government of Canada brought that same Bill before Parliament today.

I should like to refer to the stubbornness which is being demonstrated by the Minister of Transport. The Minister has earned—and to some extent he deserves it—a reputation as a fairly competent fellow. I think that reputation is going to his head in the same way as the Government's majority has gone to the head of the Prime Minister. Notwithstanding representations, he continues with Bill C-75. That stubborn streak ignores the views of the people of Canada and the views of parliamentarians in almost every Party. It is the same stubborn streak which has given rise to the situation within the shipping assets of the Government of Canada. Be they Coast Guard ships, DND ships, marine ships or freighters, there is a policy which says that employees on ships in Atlantic Canada should be paid less than those on the West Coast. I am referring to employees with the same job classification and doing exactly the same job. An employee in the same position in Atlantic Canada receives $4,000 to $5,000 less in salary than an individual in the same job, with the same classification, working on a ship along the West Coast of Canada. That situation exists today.

We have brought that discrepancy to the attention of the Minister. It is so ridiculous and so heart-rending that employees on the West Coast, from the great Province of British Columbia, who are recipients of the higher wages, joined with their brothers from Atlantic Canada in Ottawa to say that the discrepancy was unfair, unreasonable, and must be stopped. They displayed generosity, sincerity, and a desire to share in the carrying of each other's load. They were committed to the principle that we are our brother's keeper. Notwithstanding that, the Government of Canada turned a blind eye. The Government is saying that those ship employees who ply the Atlantic waters and work, by the admission of employees from western Canada, longer hours and in more difficult conditions are somehow, for some inexplicable reason, second-class citizens. All of us believe that our citizenship entitles us to exactly the same treatment no matter where we live.

It is that kind of stubbornness, pigheadedness, and insensitivity to the plight of our fellow Canadians which persists in Bill C-75. The inability to make things right when the solution is so obvious permeates the Government's mentality and, more important, the Minister of Transport who persists in putting this Bill before the House.

I should like to recapitulate what I said. This Bill has brought Canadians of diverse background and from different regions together as has no other Bill in the history of Parliament.

It is a rare day in Canada. Let me refer to the office vacated by the Prime Minister, that of the President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. It is a smaller office now because part of the operation was shut down by the previous occupant, the current Prime Minister. Huge chunks of Quebec and Labrador were shut down.

Mr. Nunziata: The cameras have been taken out.

Mr. Tobin: It is a smaller office, the cameras are gone, and the bathroom has shrunk in size. Nevertheless, the person who now occupies that office agrees with those people who are working their fields at two o'clock in the afternoon in Alberta. They are fighting desperately to save their crops at a time when prices are the lowest they have been in 60 years. They are battling not only international pressure and competition from the EEC and the United States, but they are battling as well a natural plague of grasshoppers.

The grasshopper is no more insidious than this Bill. While the farmer can look after the grasshopper with a squirt of poison—

Mr. Benjamin: No, he cannot.

Mr. Tobin: At least some of them.

Mr. Benjamin: It does not work any longer.

Mr. Tobin: I hear the Hon. Member telling me that poison does not work on the grasshopper any longer. In that case, the Bill and the grasshopper have an identical impact upon farmers. No matter how much they squirt at grasshoppers, they keep coming and ultimately destroy the crops; no matter how much farmers keep howling and Hon. Members keep talking, the Government keeps coming forward with this Bill. One way or another, be it the natural plague of grasshoppers or the plague of the Minister of Transport, farmers will get it.

It is a rare day when farmers and the fellow who occupies the IOCC office agree, when the industrialist and forester who lives in the little town of Smithers, a beautiful location on the coastline of northern British Columnbia, a little piece of heaven, agree.

• (1650)

The decision yesterday of the International Trading Commission was five to zero. The decision said that the Canadian product is causing injury to American products. The worker wonders whether he will have a job in six months. It is a strange day when the farmer and the forestry workers who are sitting just below the peaks of the beautiful mountains of British Columbia and the fellows sitting in the ivory tower of the corporate boardrooms would all have the same view about this Bill. It is a strange day when we know that the potato farmer in the riding of the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), who has made a submission before the legislative committee, has the same view as the President of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce about this Bill. Never has the Government succeeded in so uniting Canadians to sing from the same hymn book, Mr. Speaker.

It is a strange day indeed when we know that the poorest fisherman has the same view as the man who sits atop the heap in the corporate boardrooms of this country. Surely to goodness if Canadians are to believe that Members opposite are anything more than surfers—those who surfed in on this Tory wave are those who shall surf out on the Tory wave, temporary occupiers of the surfboard—then they would expect Members opposite to oppose this Dranconian brutal, callous, heartless, destructive piece of legislation that will destroy this country from one end of the land to the other.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are sitting quietly. They got over the nirvana and the euphoria of the summer of 1984. They are off the bandwagon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As Your Honour will recall, at the time when introduction of Bills took place during Routine Proceedings, we were to have called first reading of a Bill to amend the Patent Act. At that time the Table indicated to me that the Royal Recommendation had not yet been received. Under those circumstances I am appealing to you, in view of your observations at the time that that was the case, to revert to Introduction of Bills so that this Bill may be brought forward.

We, on the part of the Government, have complied entirely with all of the requirements for this Bill to be brought forward.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that that procedure can only take place with unanimous consent. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is, therefore, seeking unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Bills.

I have investigated this matter because it concerned me. I feel that I must say to the House that the Royal Recommendation left the House of Commons at 9.15 a.m. today. It was signed by Her Excellency at approximately eleven o'clock this morning. Thereafter, there was a series of errors that are administrative and partly as a result of my own administration's errors—people who work for me. I have to say that I cannot yet figure out and determine why the Royal Recommendation did not get here in time. I say that to the House because I think the House has a right to know.

I am putting to the House the request which has come through the Hon. President of the Privy Council which seems appropriate to the Chair, that unanimous consent be granted as it would normally be in other circumstances. Therefore, I seek unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it has not been my practice in any way to thwart the Government's right to bring forward its legislation in the past and neither would I do that today were it possible that the legislation might be dealt with in the immediate future. In five minutes or less the House will rise, and, therefore, the legislation will simply sit around.

We understand that the Bill could be introduced in September and will be at exactly the same point in the proceedings as it would be now if introduced. I have been instructed by my caucus and my colleagues to withhold the necessary unanimous consent.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is my impression that the Government had ample time to get its act together to make sure the Royal Recommendation was in the proper form so the Bill could be introduced.

Mr. Benjamin: The Liberals blew it several times.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is unfair, Herb.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): That not having taken place, again with the advice of my caucus I will not, on behalf of my caucus, grant unanimous consent to revert to the Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would have thought better of you, Herb. That is beneath contempt and you know that.

Mr. Speaker: Unanimous consent not being granted, we will resume debate.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude my remarks on Clause C-4 on Bill C-75.

Mr. Nunziata: Not yet.

Mr. Tobin: Just for today. I shall carry on in September. I want to acknowledge that the Royal Recommendation did not arrive in time for this Bill that would increase the cost of drugs for our senior citizens. It is an act of God.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: God interferes sometimes on behalf of the people of Canada. For that we give thanks.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I thought the Bill before the House was Bill C-75, which deals with ... and I just heard my hon. colleague talking about pharmaceutical products. I have some doubts as to the relevance of his speech. If he has nothing more to say, Mr. Speaker, I think he should sit down.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's point is well taken. The Member will bring his speech to relevance.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member permit one short question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Debate.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my opening remarks on my speech, which I hope to conclude later in September, by saying that if the Government of Canada thought the opposition Members were so eager to go on holidays that they could slip this lousy legislation through Parliament, it was wrong. We will be as vigorous as September as we are today. We will not allow this Draconian, heartless piece of legislation that will so negatively affect our constituents to pass Parliament today, tomorrow or next September. We know that any time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I want to thank my hon. colleague for the vigour of his comments and his desire to deal very extensively with his subject. I think this is what thousands of Quebecers want and what thousands of fishermen want and what thousands of small craft owners want. I urge him to keep up the good work.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I do not suppose I need to say that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that as a humble servant of the House of Newfoundland—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Can I keep going?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: In that case the Hon. Member will, I am sure, understand that I must call it five o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the Order adopted earlier this day, it being five o'clock the sitting is suspended to the call of the Chair.

Members will know that there is an important discussion that occurs between Members of Parliament usually at this time. Therefore, the seminar on adjournment will begin in Room 16 appropriately.

At 5 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

Royal Assent

SITTING RESUMED

At 5.04 p.m. the House resumed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1710)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-98, an Act to consolidate various enactments that provide for drawbacks, reductions, refunds and remissions of duties, other than export drawbacks for which provision is made in sections 82 to 87 of the Customs Act, to amend the Customs Tariff and to repeal or revoke the enactments so consolidated—Chapter No. 29.

Bill C-118, an Act to amend the Currency Act—Chapter No. 30.

Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity—Chapter No. 31.

Bill C-106, an Act to amend the Young Offenders Act, the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and the Prisons and Reformatories Act—Chapter No. 32.

Bill C-117, an Act to facilitate financial arrangements between farmers and their creditors—Chapter No. 33.

Bill C-96, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977—Chapter No. 34.

Bill C-128, an Act to amend the Judges Act and other Acts in relation to judicial matters—Chapter No. 35.

Bill C-88, an Act to authorize the acquisition of Marine Atlantic Inc. and to provide for other matters in relation thereto—Chapter No. 36.

Bill C-111, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff and to amend An Act to amend the Customs Tariff—Chapter No. 37.

Bill C-116, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan and the Federal Court Act—Chapter No. 38.

Bill C-112, an Act to amend the Energy Administration Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto—Chapter No. 39.

Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certian federal works, undertakings and businesses—Chapter No. 40.

Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament—Chapter No. 41.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would hate to break a long established practice of mine. On behalf of everyone here I would like to wish you a very good rest, a good summer, and I am sure everyone will join with me in asking you to give our best regards to Madam Bosley.

Royal Assent

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member and extend the same wishes to all Members.

It being after 5 p.m, the House stands adjourned until Monday, September 8, 1986, at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.19 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RECONVENING OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I inform the House that in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 5, having been satisfied after consultations with the Government that the public interest required that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, I caused to be published in an extra edition of The Canada Gazette dated July 23, 1986, a notice calling the House to meet this day. In addition, on the same date I sent telegrams and electronic mail to each Member of the House containing the substance of that notice.

I now lay upon the table the letter dated July 22, 1986 from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in relation to that notice.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, with an amendment, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

Also a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code, without amendment.

The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while thanking my hon. colleagues for that warm reception, I am under no illusion that the honeymoon will last very long.

There have been discussions with the opposition House Leaders, and I think Your Honour would find that there would be a willingness to allow the following motion to be put without debate or without amendment. The draft order which has been agreed to by my opposition counterparts reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House when the House reaches "Government Orders" this day, it shall proceed to the consideration of the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act;

That the provisions of Standing Orders 9(2), 19(4) in relation to Statements by Members and the Oral Question Period, and 55(1) shall be in force for the purposes of this Order;

That at 3 o'clock p.m. the House shall continue with consideration of the said Senate amendment to Bill C-67 until it has completed its consideration of the said amendment provided that Standing Order 9(1) shall be suspended for the purposes of this Order;

That when the House has completed its consideration of the said amendment the Speaker shall suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair for the purpose of witnessing the Royal Assent or for considering any subsequent proceeding in relation to the said Bill or amendment and that when the Royal Assent has been completed the Speaker shall adjourn the House until 11 o'clock a.m., Monday, September 8, 1986;

Provided, that at any time a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice, a motion to adjourn the House to a specific date, but in any case not later than September 8, 1986 and that the question on the same motion shall be put to the House without debate or amendment; and that, if necessary, on the request of a Minister of the Crown, the sitting may be resumed for this purpose.

I might also point out that it was generally agreed that we were here for the specific purpose of dealing with this particular piece of legislation and that no other matters would be considered.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, I want to say that we are willing to give our consent to this Order. However, I also want to say that in giving our consent I make clear that the taking of this step is not considered by the Official Opposition to be any kind of precedent. Especially, we do not consider to be a precedent for a government, which is not able to complete its program within the time set by the House under its rules, to have the House meet during the period set for adjournment. I say this, Mr. Speaker, because I think it was clear that when the House adopted these rules in the spirit of reform it was intended that the House sit within fixed periods. However, the rules do provide that when the House is adjourned, if the Speaker, after consultation, agrees with the Government that it is in the public interest to do so, he can issue a proclamation recalling the House. The intention, I think, was clear by the House when it adopted these rules that this authority was to be used very rarely, very sparingly and in very unusual circumstances.

• (1110)

We have not opposed the recalling of the House for the Bill that will be before us today, but I want to stress that in not opposing this step we do not consider that we are creating a precedent. Above all, the rules in the spirit of reform must prevail. I want to make that very clear on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, first on behalf of our House Leader, who cannot be here today, I want to congratulate the new Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and House Leader of the Government.

Second, I want to say that we also give our consent for the House Order today which basically says we are going to consider the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, have Oral Question Period and Statements by Members. If our understanding is correct, at three o'clock, if the debate is continuing, it will continue until completed, whatever hour that may be.

I want to say, as did the House Leader for the Official Opposition, that we do not consider the recall of Parliament at this time to be necessary. We do have a fixed parliamentary calendar, a fixed parliamentary schedule, and Standing Order 5 was there for an emergency. We now find ourselves back in the House because the Government did not complete its legislative agenda at the end of June in spite of the fact that we sat extended hours for a couple of weeks to do just that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this recall of Parliament should not constitute a precedent, especially within the context of our parliamentary reform. This recall of Parliament must not be allowed to become a precedent, because Members need the summer recess to do their work in their ridings.

[English]

With that, Mr. Speaker, we agree to the House order.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF NCC PARKLAND

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition signed by 52 residents of my riding and some from the National Capital Region who continue to express their opposition to the National Capital Commission's plan to destroy a piece of parkland in our region for the purpose of creating embassy sites.

CANADA POST—DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN NEW SUBDIVISIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of residents of the Orleans area of the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell asking for the Government of Canada to intervene in the arbitrary and unfair decision of the Canada Post Corporation not to have full door-to-door mail delivery service in new subdivisions in my riding and elsewhere.

PAROLE ACT AND PENITENTIARY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—SENATE AMENDMENT

The House proceeded to the consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to express my appreciation for the co-operation of my fellow Members of Parliament in returning to Ottawa for the special sitting of the House of Commons. I know that many Members have had to rearrange holiday and work schedules, and I want everyone to know that I appreciate the opportunity to proceed with the discussion of Bill C-67 today.

Mr. Benjamin: My wife is mad at you.

Mr. Kelleher: I am not going to get into domestic problems this morning, Mr. Speaker, I intend to stick to the Bill!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: Let me also say that I very much regret the necessity to recall the House. We are here today because Canada's appointed Senate acted at the last moment—indeed, after this House had risen for the summer—to impede a vital piece of legislation, Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act.

Bill C-67 had received a full and careful examination by the Members of this House and, of course, was accorded their final approval. A lot of time and effort went into the scrutiny of the Bill over the past year, and comments, suggestions and amendments by members of both Houses of Parliament were reflected in it by the time it received third and final reading.

The urgency of this Bill has been emphasized time and time again. No one pretends that its passage will end all senseless violence by released offenders. No one can guarantee that. There is only one guarantee I can offer, and that is that every further day of delay jeopardizes safety of law-abiding Canadians.

Critics have charged that the measures in this Bill will not increase the public safety, that extended detention will simply postpone the problem. If that argument is carried to its logical extention, Mr. Speaker, then offenders should never be incarcerated since continued incarceration of any length only postpones the problem.

For many offenders, their return to society is best achieved by serving the latter part of their sentence in the community under supervision. However, for a small number of offenders a six year sentence of imprisonment must mean six years of imprisonment and not four years; an eight year sentence in custody must mean eight years, not five and a half. The Correctional Service and the Parole Board must have at their disposal the extra measure of time to intervene with the few dangerous offenders and attempt to reduce the risk that they pose to society.

A lot of attention has been focused on how many inmates will be affected by these measures, Mr. Speaker. The number according to the best estimates of the correctional authorities, is between 100 and 150 inmates a year, and 40 within the next three months. But this is not a numbers game. Each of these inmates would pose a very real and very immediate threat to society if prematurely released. How real and how immediate? On the basis of past experience, more than half of them would be behind bars again within three months for committing new crimes of violence.

• (1120)

The House of Commons has accepted the measures that were put forward in Bill C-67 to address this problem. The Bill was before the parliamentary legislative committee for four months, between September 26 of last year and January 23 of this year. The former Solicitor General appeared before the committee five times and the Government received and considered dozens of amendments and suggestions, some of which were incorporated into the Bill and some of which were not.

In addition, we delayed action on the Bill to allow the Senate to conduct and complete a pre-study of the Bill so that their suggestions could also be considered prior to third reading. The chonology runs like this. The Senate authorized the pre-study December 17 of last year. The Senate Committee charged with the task, however, did not get started on it until February 23 of this year. It did not submit its first interim report until May 14, and it filed its second interim report on June 12. The Senate never did get around to submitting a final report on the Bill, despite the personal pleas of my predecessor, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), who appeared before them on two occasions to plead with them to get on with the Bill and their completion of the study. Because we wished to pass this Bill in this past session, it was necessary for us to go to third reading, which was accomplished on June 17, June 18 and June 26.

Let us look for a moment at the action the Senate finally took. Their amendment was not contained in either of their interim reports and no reference was made to it when I appeared as the newly appointed Solicitor General to give testimony before them.

The general question of using the courts rather than the National Parole Board to conduct the detention review process was raised in the interim Senate report and has been raised before in the House of Commons. It has been carefully studied by my Department and it has been firmly rejected by the Government and by this House.

All the Senate amendment did was to revive the issue from a different angle. Not a new angle, I should add, but an angle that had already been considered and rejected by this House.

The Senate amendment is identical to one put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on June 17 and ruled out of order by the Speaker. If I may quote from page 14543 of Hansard of that date, Mr. Speaker, the ruling was as follows:

Motion No. 15 tried to introduce a new concept into the Bill. While an inmate already has the right to appeal on the basis of law, granting him the right to appeal on any ground of law or fact or mixed law or fact is a new concept and clearly beyond the scope of the Bill as passed by the House at second reading.

The Senate amendment is no more acceptable today than it was then.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, the central question of using the courts rather than the Parole Board for detention decisions has been discussed on many occasions. The courts could obviously do the job if they had to, but the Government opted to leave the responsibility with the Parole Board because we believe the Board is better qualified to make detention decisions.

The reasoning is as follows. The length of a prisoner's sentence is clearly a decision for the courts. A detention decision on the other hand affects only the manner in which a sentence is served, whether all of it should be served in incarceration or the last part of it back out in society but under supervision. It is a decision based on risk assessment. It is, in other words, like a parole decision, and the National Parole Board makes thousands of these risk assessment decisions every year.

Moreover, the Bill provides for a comprehensive appeal structure, both within the Board itself and through the Federal Court. The internal appeal structure allows the inmate to request a re-examination of the facts on which the Board based its decision or, if warranted, a fresh examination of facts not known to the Board at the time of the hearing.

Paragraph 15.6 (1)(g) of Clause 5 of the Bill provides for the making of regulations and I quote:

(g) prescribing the time when and the manner in which an inmate may apply to the Board for a re-examination of the decision made in respect of the review of his case pursuant to Section 15.4, the manner in which the re-examination will be conducted and the time when and the manner in which the inmate will be informed of the decision rendered in connection therewith.

Regulations in this regard were prepared, Mr. Speaker, and are ready to be proclaimed in force at the same time as the measures contained in this Bill. These regulations will allow the inmate to appeal a detention order or a residency requirement within 30 days after it is imposed. The appeal shall be conducted by board members who did not participate in the original decision, and shall be conducted by way of a re-examination of the material in which the decision was rendered by the Board, together with any other relevant information that was not available at the time of that decision.

The inmate has the right to apply to the Federal Court for a review of this or any other Parole Board decision. Section 18 of the Federal Court Act provides that the Trial Division has exclusive jurisdiction to issue an injunction, writ of certiorari, writ of prohibition, writ of mandamus or writ of quo warranto or to grant declaratory relief against any federal board, commission or other tribunal. While the court will not second guess the tribunal with respect to the facts of the case, the court will closely examine the legal procedure that was followed and the exercise of the Board's jurisdiction. This is a right of appeal which exists now and which will continue to be available to those inmates subject to the detention process.

Inmates brought into the detention review process will be afforded the most thorough substantive and procedural safeguards possible at every stage of the process. The Government has listened to the suggestions of the many persons who have examined all provisions of this Bill, and the Government has given active consideration and thoughtful consideration to all of these suggestions. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it has adapted and adopted many of them.

This is not, in other words, a shotgun Bill. I am confident, and the Members of this House were confident when they approved the Bill on June 26, that the legislation presented to the Senate is reasonable, that it is well thought out, and that it balances the interests and concerns of the many divergent groups that will be affected by it. That includes the interests and concerns of Canadian society as a whole, the little guy, the man and woman in the street.

I urge my fellow Members of this House to continue their support for the much needed measures in this Bill. I urge their assistance in its passage without further delay. That is what we have come back to do. Let's do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1130)

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, because this House believes that the National Parole Board is better structured and experienced to deal with all matters of fact relating to the prediction of violent behaviour and that public safety is properly preserved through decision-making being kept with the Board.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Might I inquire whether there may be unanimous consent to put some questions to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher)?

Mr. Speaker: The Member is seeking a change in our procedures by unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has heard the answer to that request for a change in procedure. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? Debate.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would only suggest that if we were to take a vote right now, we would win it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the reason we are here today and that Your Honour accorded a special session to the House, for only the twelfth time since Confederation, has a good deal more to do with the attempt to salvage the reputation of the Government than to protect Canadians from violent criminals. The issue has a good deal more to do with the incompetence of the Government and the way it has handled this matter than it does with the constitutional and parliamentary role of the Senate.

The controversy over the Senate amendment to this Bill was created and fanned by the Government itself in inflammatory statements by the former Solicitor General, reinforced by the current Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) after his appointment, and then echoed and buttressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself.

At the outset I want to put some of these statements on the record because the rhetoric we have heard from the Government on this issue has been nothing short of extravagant, to say the least. Let us take the former Solicitor General, now the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), who is reported to have said in The Ottawa Citizen on July 4, presumably in Saskatoon:

> It's dangerous because it means for the next 2 1/2 months at least we'll be having a situation where dangerous criminals will be allowed out of prison before the expiry of their sentences. This will put the safety of innocent law-abiding Canadians in jeopardy.

On July 5, in the same newspaper, the Prime Minister is quoted as saying:

> We have criminals who will be out on the street when they ought not to be and that's the responsibility of those in the Senate who took this irresponsible action.

On July 3, before he had time to know better, the current Solicitor General said in the same newspaper:

> Every further day of delay jeopardizes innocent, law-abiding citizens and Canadians across the country.

This is some of the most hypocritical, cynical and self-serving nonsense I have ever heard, and I have heard a lot of it from the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If the issue was so crucial, why was it not handled by the Government early in its term? The Government has now sat for one year and ten months. The issue was apparent before the Government took office. It was dealt with by my colleague, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). The issue arose in 1981, after the Supreme Court held the so-called gating procedure unconstitutional. This issue has been before the country for a number of years, since the courts challenged the current legislation, and did not arise just over the summer period.

The sole issue is whether a convict who has earned his remission under the current law is entitled to automatically get that remission and that freedom after two-thirds of his term being served, or whether it should be reviewed. The Government says it should be reviewed by the National Parole Board. The Opposition says it should be reviewed by a court of competent jurisdiction. That is the issue. It does not prevent criminals from getting out of a penitentiary. In any event, when those convicts have served their time under the law they will again be free. The issue is whether there should be mandatory supervision and who should authorize the release under that remission. That is the issue.

The Government took office on September 17, 1984. The House began its sitting early in November, 1984. This Bill which had been thoroughly massaged by the previous Government and thoroughly discussed in the House and in the other place on other occasions, was only introduced on June 27, 1985. It languished in the committee until January 29, 1986. When the report was tabled in the House, concurrence was not asked for by the Government until five months later, on June 17, 1986. Third reading debate was not concluded until June 26, on the Thursday, and on the last sitting day it was sent to the other place. The only way it could have been passed was by unanimous consent, dissolving the usual rules of procedure that apply there and apply here, without due regard to the Senate's opportunity to look at the issue.

That is a course of conduct that does not show any concern for the safety of Canadian citizens or any concern that this issue be treated with its highest priority. Yet the Government, having allowed the whole matter to languish for a year and ten months, bringing it forward at the last possible opportunity and not allowing the Senate to discharge its obligations under its own rules, now claims that we have to be called back and tries to put the responsibility on the Opposition and the other place. We cannot accept that.

Let me be even more specific. The other place agreed on its own volition, after consulting with its members, to come back after we had risen. It came back for an extra week to deal with the issue. The new Solicitor General appeared before the Senate where he and the new Government Leader in the Senate, Senator Lowell Murray, were questioned by Senators. They said: "You know the House has to be called back in any event if this Bill is to pass because Royal Assent demands the presence of Members of the House of Commons." We had recessed. We had adjourned under our rules. You would have had to call us back, Your Honour, for Royal Assent if the Senate had passed the Bill, amendment or no amendment. The Senate asked the then Solicitor General and the Senate House Leader: "Do you intend to call the House back?" There was no undertaking given one way or the other. In those circumstances, Honourable Senators felt it perfectly in order to put their amendment because no delay could be occasioned. If the Government was not willing to call the House back for Royal Assent and was going to leave the Bill until September, putting an amendment by itself was not going to delay this issue at all.

Parole and Penitentiary Acts

• (1140)

The Solicitor General claims, of course, that he had to wait until the Senate report came down. But there is nothing under our rules forcing this House to slow down its judgment on an issue until the Senate has had a preview of a Bill. The House was free at all times to bring this matter forward as an issue of urgency. Nothing the other place did influenced the conduct of the Senate House Leader and the then Solicitor General in bringing this matter forward.

The position of the Senate and Senators on both sides of that House has been well known since 1983. In 1983 the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, made up of both Liberal and Conservative Senators, unanimously recommended that the courts, not the Parole Board, have the final say on the release of inmates, which is basically the position of the current amendment. That had been the position since 1983 of Senators on both sides of the House. The same recommendation was passed by the full Senate in Bill C-32 in June, 1983. As late as May 14 of this year the Senate Committee unanimously stated in an interim report:

> It is the opinion of the committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32 . . . namely, that the courts, rather than the National Parole Board, should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates who would otherwise be eligible for release on mandatory supervision.

Even the Conservative spokesman in the Senate, Senator Nurgitz, agreed that judicial review was crucial in 1983 when he was commenting on amendments to Bill S-32. He seems now to have changed his mind. Therefore, the then Solicitor General and the Senate House Leader knew full well the position of Senators on all sides of that House on this issue.

The Government now contends that the issue is one of such paramount importance so as to persuade Your Honour to convene this House once again. But the then Solicitor General and the Senate House Leader knew the Senate's depth of concern on a very important issue affecting individual rights. Once a prisoner has earned his remission, who should review it? The Senate and this side of the House felt the court should review it. That is not a frivolous issue. It is an issue of substance which affects civil rights, and even our prisoners have civil rights. To withhold presentation of the Bill until a very late stage of the sitting of this House and to withhold its transmission to the other place until the last sitting day is a matter almost approaching contempt of the views sincerely held and widely broadcast for a number of years.

[Translation]

For years, the Senate's position on the subject has been exactly the same as ours in the House, but the former Solicitor General and his successor have chosen to ignore this. The Government knew or at least should have known that the Bill could not be adopted in the Senate on the last sitting day of Parliament, and nor could it, as a result, receive royal assent before September. And I may remind the House that the Senate is only two steps away from this House.

[English]

It took the former Minister of Employment and Immigration about 90 days to receive a memorandum from her Deputy Minister and it took the Department of External Affairs a number of weeks to advise the Prime Minister that part of his expenses in Paris had been covered by the French Government, so I suppose it should not surprise us that there is very little communication among Government Members, particularly between the former House Leader and the former Solicitor General, the now Solicitor General and their leadership in the Senate. The views of the Senate were eminently well known to the Government. The new Solicitor General in assuming his very important responsibilities should have immediately been apprised of them. He was given an opportunity to have the Bill adopted in the Senate. He could have said: "The House will be called back. We consider it important enough". Perhaps the Solicitor General did not know Royal Assent was needed for the Bill to receive the sanction of the Crown. Perhaps he did not know that the House had to be called back in order to proceed with that Royal Assent and that regal sanction. If he did not, he was badly advised. The Bill could not have passed unless the House were called back. The Senate asked him in courtesy to his Bill if it could be advised. If the House were to be called back, the amendment could be dealt with. If the House were not going to be called back, the Bill would not have been delayed in any event. So this is an absolute sham, subterfuge and hypocrisy.

On the matter of substance of the amendment now before Your Honour, it was also indicated to the Senate committee and in other places by legal experts that the legislation as it now stands could be challenged under the terms of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms with regard particularly to its retroactive application and possibly on other grounds. It is still conceivable that the law could be struck down as unconstitutional if it is challenged. The Supreme Court has already ruled that the practice of "gating", that is the practice whereby offenders are immediately rearrested and put back into prison by the Parole Board, which practice this legislation in effect seeks to legalize, is unconstitutional. There is the question of what we are now doing eventually receiving the approbation of judicial review. We may today be involved in an emergency debate which will create an even greater emergency at some future point if the whole law were struck down, perhaps in the middle of next summer or at any other time when this House is not sitting.

[Translation]

Whether the Government agrees with the measure or not, the Parliament of Canada has given inmates the right to serve up to one third of their sentence under mandatory supervision. That is the law. It is part of our penal system. It is not a rule. It is part of our legislation and as such was introduced mainly to improve discipline and behaviour in our prisons and to provide an incentive for inmates to behave well, and generally speaking, it has been effective.

Since this particular legislation concerns human rights, the persons concerned must have access to the judicial system for protection of those rights. We should not leave the implementation of this legislation up to a board that does not observe the same rules of procedure and evidence as the courts that handed down the sentence in the first place.

[English]

Neither myself, members of our caucus, our Party, our Members in the Senate, nor anyone else, for that matter, is advocating or contemplating the abrupt release of dangerous and violent offenders into society. We deplore as much as anyone the fact that innocent people are injured or killed by wanton acts of violence.

It is argued by some that by denying mandatory supervision under the current law whereby it is automatic after two thirds of the term has been served, and holding certain prisoners for their full sentence, makes them a greater threat to society, largely because the individual goes abruptly from prison back into the world without supervision, without control and without a reporting procedure. The mandated supervision allows an easier re-entrance into society and gives the person released a better opportunity to adjust. It is felt that while mandatory supervision is not perfect, society is better protected with at least some control over the individual for that crucial initial period following release. Our argument is not about prisoners being released. Prisoners will be released when their term expires in any event no matter what crime they committed. We are talking about the earning of remission after serving two thirds of their sentence. Can that be reviewed? And if it should be reviewed, then who should do so, the Parole Board or the Court? We do not want to interrupt the regular procedure of our criminal justice.

[Translation]

In my opinion, if the Government really wanted to solve this problem and help reduce the danger of violent crime, it should take a more serious look at the whole area of how these crimes are dealt with instead of leaving it up to the courts, to the Parole Board and to various volunteer organizations. It should also look at how victims of violent crimes are treated. It is one thing to proclaim, as the Government has done, that it is against crime, and another thing altogether to sabotage the very measures which, according to that Government, were aimed at preventing violent crime, and to do so in such a clumsy, careless and arrogant manner.

[English]

In saying that the Opposition and the Senate are responsible for letting dangerous offenders out on to the streets over the summer, the Prime Minister, the current Solicitor General and his predecessor gave Canadians the distinct impression that the passing of this legislation would be some sort of guarantee that dangerous offenders would not be put out on the streets this summer. That is simply not the case. They know very well that the Bill gives that responsibility and that discretion to the Parole Board.

The Solicitor General was quite right when he said that this is not a numbers game. No matter how many inmates may be eligible, a review of the situation shows that a lesser number might in fact obtain their liberty. There is no automatic formula for keeping people in jail. We have accepted, and the Bill does not deny, the principle of earning remission for good conduct within prison walls. The Board is obliged to consider past violence and the potential for future violence. It does not automatically keep all inmates in jail. The question is who should review the situation.

In terms of violent offenders, various numbers have been bandied about by the former Minister and by the present Minister. The former Minister has said that 30 dangerous offenders will be let out if the Bill is not passed. How does he know? The current Minister has previously put the figure at somewhere between 54 and 75; yet he gave a more precise number this morning. This confusion raises two important issues. The first is why they do not know exactly. After all, do they not know how many of these people there are who will threaten our lives? Do they not know where they are going and what the conditions of their release might be?

The other question which is raised is that by selecting these individuals in this way, has the Minister not prejudged the outcome of any hearings that the Parole Board might hold concerning the suitability of certain individuals to be released or detained? By reciting these numbers has the Solicitor General not placed in jeopardy a right, probably reinforced by a constitutional obligation, for the Parole Board to look at these matters in a judicial way? Because we are so concerned about the issue and because it interferes with rights that have been earned under a statute of Canada, we believe that the courts should review it.

Let us not kid ourselves. The real reason we are here has nothing to do with the constitutional prerogative of the Senate. Senators did not retard the passage of this Bill since, in any event, Royal Assent would have required our return. The Government missed the boat because it did not bring this legislation in soon enough. The Government missed the boat because it allowed the Bill to languish on the Order Paper. It also allowed the report to languish. The Government brought the third reading process before Your Honour at a time that left the other place in a corner. Under the rules of the Senate it had not time to properly review the matter, the views of Senators having been well known by Members of this House and by members of the Government. Thus the real issue is the incompetence of the Government to handle legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have known the present Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) for a long time. In fact, I have known him since 1962. He is a person for whom I have high regard. He is quite right when he says that his honeymoon will be a short one. However, I know him well enough to suspect that there may be a diversionary tactic before us as well. The Government will do anything to try to divert the attention of the country away from what is going on, as reported on the front pages of our newspapers which reflect two major judicial inquiries.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) smiles. He knows that I have touched an extremely sore point. We intend to deal with this matter with proper dispatch. We will deal with it with all the seriousness it merits, despite the incompetence, the tardiness and the absolute sloppiness of the Government. We will exercise our responsibilities. I am sure the the Government House Leader would have enjoyed a filibuster with respect to this issue—anything to get some other topic on to the front pages of the newspapers of the country. I am sure that he would have done anything to get another scapegoat. He would just as soon turn on the Senate and the Opposition again.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is convoluted logic and you know it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Convoluted logic! Knowing the House Leader that is the type of logic that may have resulted in his decision to bring us back.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Any one of us who has had the honour to be elected to this place knows that the people are always right. I have admitted that on several occasions, and I firmly believe it. However, the people are not stupid. They are not gullible. They will not be taken in by the Prime Minister, by the Solicitor General or by his predecessor. They know what the real issues are. I do not think the ploy will work. I do not think this Chicken Little routine is very convincing. The people of the country will place the responsibility where is should be placed. Once again the Government did not get its act in order. Once again it did not communicate with its colleagues in the other place. Once again it put the country to an additional inconvenience and cost. That is why we are here. That is why, Mr. Speaker, in your current physical inconvenience you have had to come back from a well-earned rest to deal with a matter that this Government could have handled in the ordinary course of proceedings.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we are here today to deal with a matter that the Government tells us is an emergency. We have agreed to return because there is certainly a principle at stake. We do not like to see the Senate overturn the wishes of the House of Commons. We certainly hope that when we are in government the other Parties of the House will give us the same consideration to return to legislation should there be a Senate which thwarts the will of the duly elected House of Commons.

The Government is quite wrong in calling this situation an emergency. The idea that dangerous offenders are being or will be released if this Bill is not passed today and the idea that murders will be committed are extremely far-fetched. Dangerous offenders are being released. They have already been released. Dangerous offenders finish their sentences. We have laws that put an end to prison sentences. Even if we have some belief that a person might later commit an offence once his sentence is over he must be let out. People have been let out, and they will continue to be let out. The people who will be kept in prison as a result of this legislation once it is passed will be let out eventually. The figure given by the Government is that 54 of them are time bombs. The Government wishes us to believe that these are walking time bombs about to commit offences. Of this number 38 will be released in two years. Some will be out in a matter of a short number of months. If the Government had been so concerned about their release why did it not act earlier this year, after this Bill was reported back from committee in January? Why did the Government wait until well into June before it decided that it was sufficiently important to give it some time in the House? That is not my idea of an emergency.

With respect to the question of these emergency cases and how good the Government is at predicting what they are, we know that the previous Government made some assessments after the Supreme Court of Canada ordered an end to gating. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled that gating was illegal. The Government had its own list which set out 11 time bomb cases. In fact, because of the Supreme Court of Canada these people were released. We know what happened as a result. Four of the 11 were returned to prison. Three were returned as a result of the commission of non-violent offences. One was returned for a violent offence which took place well after the expiry date of the sentence. There is no way that gating would have prevented that person from committing the offence which was committed. We just cannot make these kind of predictions.

The Senate amendment to Bill C-67 is one which would improve a very bad Bill. We are opposed in principle to the contents of Bill C-67. However, the Senate initially had four amendments which it urged the Government to adopt. The Government did not adopt them. All four amendments would have moderated the Bill and made it somewhat less unacceptable. I do not want to suggest that we would have considered the Bill an acceptable one in any event.

• (1200)

Let us return to what the Senate said and the amendment it wants us to consider. The first issue deals with the question of which is the appropriate body to make decisions with respect to the detention of allegedly dangerous inmates beyond the date of eligibility for release on mandatory supervision. It was the opinion of the committee that the legislation should reflect the principle approved by the Senate when it adopted Bill S-32, an Act to amend the Penitentiary Act and the Parole Act, in 1983. That principle was that the courts rather than the National Parole Board should make decisions respecting the continued incarceration of inmates who would otherwise be eligible for release on mandatory supervision. This is primarily what we are here to discuss today. We are asking who should be making these decisions, the courts or the Parole Board.

The Senate committee members said that they had heard the comments of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) with respect to the appropriateness of the board taking on this responsibility and that they must disagree. The Solicitor General, however, has continued to take the same position. While recognizing that the legislation attempts to ensure that inmates are afforded the best procedural safeguards available to administrative tribunals, the Senate committee members are still of the view that such decisions, affecting as they do the liberty of individuals, are more appropriately addressed in a judicial rather than an administrative forum, where affected inmates would have recourse to all the procedural rights and protections available in the criminal courts as well as a distinct right of appeal. This is a very fundamental point, indeed a point treated in the Charter of Rights. Of course, one of our concerns is that the legislation, unamended, would be contrary to the Charter of Rights and would be subject to appeal on those grounds in due course.

The motion put before us today by the Solicitor General is a very boldly stated and confident motion. The Solicitor General seems to think that he knows what he is talking about, but I would like to contest the motion's substance very strenuously. The motion indicates that the House would disagree with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67 because the House believes that the National Parole Board is better structured and experienced to deal with all matters of fact relating to the prediction of violent behaviour and that public safety is properly preserved by having decision-making kept with the board.

Let us look at the first point, that the National Parole Board is better structured and experienced. Better than whom? What is the body of comparison? The motion reads that the National Parole Board is better structured to deal with all matters of fact relating to the prediction of violent behaviour. No one is good at predicting violent behaviour. National parole boards, provincial parole boards and the parole boards of other countries have been trying to do this for decades. There is a substantial body of academic literature which goes back a very long time indicating that parole boards are not good at predicting violent behaviour.

It is not that anyone else is any better at making that prediction. Psychiatrists have tried to do it. Objective tests developed by various kinds of social scientists have been developed to try to predict who will be a violent offender. We also know that we cannot predict violent behaviour based upon the conduct of the offender in prison. People who are not well behaved in prison may adjust quite adequately on the outside. Infractions in prison are not necessarily an indication that a person will be a violent offender outside prison.

We as human beings simply have to admit that we are not very good at predicting anything. We are not very good at predicting the weather, although improvements have been made. Human behaviour is considerably more difficult to predict than the weather. After decades and decades of attempts to predict violent behaviour, it becomes apparent that the statement made by the Solicitor General is simply not believable. He gives no basis for it, nor does his Department. The shelves of his Department are lined with studies showing that what he has said is untrue and that no one can predict violent behaviour.

The second part of the contention of the Solicitor General is that public safety is properly preserved by having decision-making kept with the board. What kind of public safety is he trying to provide us? Certainly the public would like to be safer and certainly we in this Party would support any reasonable measures designed to make the public safer. Unfortunately, all this motion will mean is that the public will have to pay higher costs to keep people in prison longer.

Public safety is not preserved by keeping people in prison longer. There is no evidence to suggest a violent person will become less violent after being kept in prison for an extra year. Indeed, this has been tried. The experience has proven faulty. Keeping people in prison does not improve their behaviour and, indeed, there is some reason to believe that mandatory supervision is a good thing.

It would seem to be more desirable for offenders who are going to be released in any event to be released with some form of supervision. After all, all of these 54 so-called time bomb offenders will be released. They are all serving fixed terms. They are not sentenced to life for which there is a minimum time to be served in prison of 25 years. These particular people are not murderers. Their sentences may be long, but at some point they will be released. We have no reason to believe that they will be released in better condition if they are kept in prison for an extra six months, one year, 18 months, two years or whatever the case may be.

The motion gives false hope to the Canadian public that safety will be preserved. I believe the statements made by cabinet Ministers and, indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are shameful. They have said that the safety of the public is at risk thanks to the actions of the Opposition and the Senate. That is scare-mongering, and I find it extremely sad to see that that is happening. People are quite rightly concerned about safety. Fortunately there is not a high rate of violent crime in Canada. Naturally we would like to see less of it and reasonable measures to ensure better safety would of course be very welcome.

In his remarks, the Solicitor General said that a four-year sentence ought to be a four-year sentence, that a six-year sentence ought to be a six-year sentence and that an eight-year sentence ought to be an eight-year sentence. That is a very simplistic approach, but it does have a ring of truth to it. Who can disagree that a four-year sentence ought to be a four-year sentence and that a person should not get out of prison early? However, there are reasons for letting people out of prison early. People are let out of prison if there is some reason to believe that that will make them better risks, and indeed that is the whole purpose behind mandatory supervision.

Let us look at the facts of the matter. In Canada, prisoners serve very long sentences and the sentences are getting even longer. Mandatory supervision is not something that has just occurred. This provision has existed for more than 100 years. There has always been time off for good behaviour. It offers an incentive for inmates to behave well in prison. It gives prisons something to hold out to inmates for co-operating. Judges know this and this is precisely why sentences have been getting longer.

Judges know that most inmates will get time off for good behaviour and they have been taking this into account. A four-year sentence is not simply a four-year sentence. A judge knows that four years means four years minus one-third and if the judge wants the prisoner to serve four years, he or she will impose a six-year sentence. That is how the system works and judges know that. They have been acting on that basis for a very long time.

There is no question that mandatory supervision shortens sentences, but sentences have been made longer with the knowledge that this happens. As it is, prisoners in Canada serve extremely long sentences. We have a European-style crime problem with American-style sentences. There is not much violent crime in Canada but people are put into prison for very long periods of time because we think we have a much more violent society than we do.

I shall now return to the question of the safeguards that are required and the faults of Bill C-67 along with the Senate's amendment. Of course, more amendments to Bill C-67 are needed in addition to the one proposed by the Senate. That amendment is directed toward addressing the fault in the legislation. It is a question of fundamental justice. A person who will not be released in effect will be getting an extra sentence. Who will be making that decision? In our view that question should be decided by the courts.

I should like to refer to the thrust of the Senate amendment. Of course it cannot alter the entire Bill. The initial decision could not be made by the courts, but an appeal could be made to the courts on fact and on law. This would bring the legislation somewhat more in line with the principles of fundamental justice which we adopted in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Let us look at the traditional safeguards provided to offenders by a court of law which the National Parole Board does not provide. Traditionally there would be the right to be represented by counsel. Also there would be the right of the person to be made aware of the case against him or her. There would be the right to a fair answer and defence, including the right to cross-examine the accusers. Of course this is absent from the provisions of the National Parole Board. The Board decides not only what information the inmate will be permitted to see regarding his or her case, but whether or not the person can have counsel or an advocate present at the hearing. If counsel is permitted to be present, they will be unable to cross-examine witnesses or to have access to relevant documents. Instead, they will only be permitted to make brief statements at the end of the hearings.

Under the new scheme proposed by the Government, there is no requirement for proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the allegations being used to justify the continued detention of the individual. We are going back to procedures in our criminal justice system which were removed a long time ago. People other than the courts will be making the decisions. The decisions will be made in respect of charges about which the accused person does not know very much, and no opportunity to cross-examine will be provided. In short, these provisions are not remotely the standard required in a court of law. However, the effect is the same as that decided by a court of law. It is a new sentence, and it could be a very substantial one. It could be a sentence of several years in addition if the Bill is passed and people are indeed prevented from receiving time off on mandatory supervision for good behaviour on the basis of future behaviour.

Since my time is nearly up, let me return to the fundamental issue here, that is, why people should be before the courts or before the National Parole Board at all. The issue here is a prediction of future behaviour. The idea of the Government is that people should spend time in prison, not for what they have already done, but for what they might do in the future, of course knowing that we cannot predict this very well. Even if we could predict it very well, is it correct to sentence a person to a period of incarceration on the basis of what the person might do in the future? Surely our system of criminal justice is based upon punishment for offences clearly committed, for which there is clear evidence and for which the person has had ample opportunity to reply to the charges.

The faults in Bill C-67 are fundamental. People will be denied the rights of fundamental justice, contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We certainly oppose Bill C-67 and Bill C-68.

Concerning the question before us today, we concur in the motion of the Senate. It would make the Bill a less evil piece of legislation. It would not make it a good piece of legislation, but it would provide some protection to accused persons in accordance with the principles of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We urge that the Government accept the amendment of the Senate as a very minimum commitment to observing the requirements of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and ensuring that fundamental justice is the right of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks today I should like to set the record straight for certain Opposition Members and certain editorial writers. After the ill-considered initiative taken by our colleagues in the other place, which was aimed at blocking this Government legislative measure, we were accused of unduly delaying the introduction of our Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am astonished that certain Members opposite blamed the Government of procrastinating to have this measure adopted since it had been on the Order Paper for over a year. On the contrary, I believe I will be able to prove that the Government has always been firmly committed to pass this legislation as soon as possible.

Opposition Members are being ridiculous when they claim to have been taken by surprise with respect to the intentions of the Government. In its first Speech from the Throne the Government did indicate it intended to act upon public concern over the Canadian penal justice system. We had promised we would do away with the deficiencies of this system so as to guarantee that Canadians would be better protected against criminal acts. Bill C-67 was our way to meet part of this commitment. We agree that Bill C-67 will not solve all problems, but still it is a major step in the right direction because it contains the urgent measures which are needed and which can be quickly implemented while we wait for the findings of certain wide-ranging studies undertaken by the Department of Justice and the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker, had Opposition Members gone to the trouble of reading the Speech from the Throne, they would they would have realized that the Government had given a clear indication of its intentions in that respect. No one who intelligently read the Speech from the Throne would express surprise about the importance given to this Bill by the Government.

True enough, over a year has gone by since Bill C-67 was read for the first time. On June 27, 1985 the then Solicitor General introduced in the House two Bills to empower the National Parole Board to change the proviusions concerning the mandatory supervision of parolees. Had Members opposite paid attention to the statements of the Solicitor General they would have understood that the Government was really intent on providing better protection for society by preventing the release of patently dangerous inmates.

Had Members been the least concerned about the safety of our fellow Canadians they would have learned that shortly after his appointment as Solicitor General the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) announced that he would introduce legislative measures to eliminate automatic release granting.

Some Members claim that if the Government had really been convinced about the appropriateness of Bill C-67 and the need for quick adoption it would have said so earlier and taken the steps required to push it through the various legislative stages earlier in the session.

Those who come up with this kind of argument simply like the sound of their own voices. Undoubtedly they are unaware of the fact that unfortunately the previous Government had tried to make the problem disappear by introducing its own Bills S-2 and C-35. Overly confident about its own genius and probably in a hurry to deal with the matter without having to hold meaningful consultations, the previous Government got stuck with its two Bills. This Government chose not to take the easy way out, knowing full well that this kind of legislations was a contentious issue. My colleagues lived up to their responsibilities and made sure they would achieve the broadest possible consensus with respect to these legislative provisions. My colleagues did not spare time and energy to speed up the legislative process.

Mr. Speaker, the Opposition has accused the Government of unduly delaying the adoption of Bill C-67.

In fact, the Opposition would have us responsible for the time it has taken this legislation to get through the various stages before its referral to the other place. The Opposition is mistaken. I suppose that, being unaccustomed to holding consultations and allowing all parties to express their points of view, it would have preferred us to ignore such procedures entirely. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that unlike our colleagues opposite, we do appreciate hearing the views expressed by various sides on our policies, even when they are negative.

If I may recall the various stages this Bill has gone through. I am sure you will agree that the delay for which we are being so unfairly criticized was due both to the fact that the Government gave various groups a chance to express their views and make a thorough and careful study of the matter, and to the dilatory tactics used by Members of the other Chamber and of the Opposition to delay adoption of the Bill.

First of all, the Bill was tabled in 1985, before the House adjourned for the summer recess. The Government deliberately chose that date, since during the summer, it wanted to obtain the views of provincial governments, private and public organizations and certain individuals. The early tabling of the Bill in June 1985 gave groups with an interest in correctional matters a chance to take a close look at the provisions of the Bill. During the study process in 1985, the press showed a great deal of interest in the legislation. The Bills were also sent to provincial departments responsible for correctional services, to private agencies and to lawyers, for comment.

Officials of the Department of the Solicitor General met with these various groups, while correspondence received by my colleagues also contained various views to be considered and carefully weighed. Generally speaking, the Bills were well received, especially at the provincial level and by victim assistance groups and the media. Following the Cabinet shuffle in the summer of 1985, the Solicitor General, realizing it was an initiative whose time had come, decided to concentrate on promoting this legislation. Subsequently, after Parliament resumed in September 1985, the Solicitor General moved second reading of the Bills in question. All parties had an opportunity to participate fully in the debate on second reading which took three days. The Bill was adopted on second reading receiving the support of several Opposition Members as well.

If we consider the referral to committee, we see that the Government certainly did not drag its feet. Three days after receiving its order of reference, the committee met to designate a steering committee and agree on procedural details. The committee started sitting about 18 days after that. They were held over a four-month period, including even the Christmas recess. The committee held 14 hearings and heard a great many witnesses.

Our colleague the Hon. Member for Wellington—Dufferin—Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) appeared as a witness before the committee on five occasions, and his Deputy Minister as well as other Departmental officials appeared on ten occasions. The Committee heard the views of many non-governmental groups such as the Société Saint-Léonard, the Queen University Group dealing with the parole bill, the Citizens United for Safety and Justice, the Ottawa-Hull Victims of Justice, the Association of Criminal Lawyers, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Association of Penal Justice, as well as the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry and John Howard Societies.

Is the Opposition suggesting that the time-frame to deal with Bill C-67 at the various stages could have been shortened had we chosen not to hear these groups and disregard their views? Yes, the Government had to spend a little time listening to the valid testimonies of these interest groups.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has fully cooperated with the Committee. In addition to the Minister, the Committee had the opportunity to question officials of Correctional Service Canada, the National Parole Board, and the Solicitor General Secretariat.

Moreover, the Government has demonstrated flexibility and good faith by moving six substantial amendments to this bill. I shall spare the House the many details of these amendments, while reminding Hon. Members that the Committee had concluded its work on January 23.

By contrast, when we see how things moved in the Senate, we realize that all along the Government has done its best to expedite matters, suggesting compromise and cooperate with a great deal of openmindedness. The Senate Committee on Constitutional and Legal Affairs had six months to deal with this Bill. Meanwhile, in its desire not to press our colleagues in the other place, the Government deemed it advisable to postpone the reference of this Bill at the report and third reading stages. We wanted to provide the Senate with an opportunity to propose constructive and creative suggestions which could have been incorporated in the bill at the final report stage.

Yet, it was only on May 14 that we received the first so-called interim report, at the urgent request of our colleague the Hon. Member for Wellington—Dufferin—Simcoe. Then we received on June 23 a second so-called interim report. However, no final report ever came to us. Yet, this pre-study had been most exhaustive, even exeeding the scope and subject matter of the Bill. This pre-study had even been marked by a series of visits to various penal institutions. In spite of all that, there were very few suggestions made to improve the Bill and most of those put forward by the Senate group had already been discussed or turned down before. Lacking somewhat in imagination, our Senate colleagues tried to recycle some of the worn-out ideas expressed by Hon. Members opposite. The Opposition should then have demonstrated its dissatisfaction. Was it sleeping while the Government was making new concessions to speed up the process? For instance, the guidelines concerning decision backing have become statutory rather than regulatory provisions. If there were undue delays, the Opposition should point their fingers elsewhere, because the Senate study turned into delaying tactics. If there were time overruns aimed at delaying this legislation, you should rather blame your august colleagues.

Finally, looking at the report and third reading stages, it will be found that they had to be hurried, because delays in the other House took almost all the time available. In the little time left to us, the Government made a point of disposing of some 34 New Democratic amendment motions, not to mention the avalanche of rhetoric from the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). The Bill went through third reading on June 26 and was referred to the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the Opposition over the last few weeks chose to blame the Government for giving little attention to the Bill over the last few months they asked why the sudden urgency to enact it. I want to put the record straight. I would invite Hon. Members opposite to read the evidence given by the Hon. Member for Wellington—Dufferin—Simcoe, as the then Solicitor General. When the Minister appeared for the first time before the Senate Committee, he insisted that the provisions in the Bill were urgent. He even recalled they had previously looked at similar provisions in Bill C-32 introduced by the previous Government.

During the seven other sittings of that Committee, senators launched into an analysis, not of the legislation itself but the penitentiary system, even indulging in a small tour of certain institutions, for the purpose of moving around the place, Mr. Speaker. Travelling has always been conducive to new experiences, but never reforms.

When he appeared before the Senate Committee on May 8, 1986, the Solicitor General again reminded Committee Members of the urgent need for the Bill. He also stressed how important it was for the Government to have it enacted before the Summer recess. After reviewing the various amendments introduced to incorporate the criticisms voiced, the Solicitor General urged members of the Senate Committee to concentrate on the Bill and make their amendments known as soon as possible. He was ready to consider any amendment consistent with the objectives stated in the Bill. However, having little or no concern for improving the provisions in the Bill, Committee Members resorted to delaying tactics that put Canadian public safety at risk.

Mr. Speaker, the facts I have just put before you, and I could go on, are ample proof that the criticism levelled by this Opposition and the Senate is groundless.

This Bill was supposed to be above party politics. It is regrettable that the Opposition and the other House did not understand earlier that this measure is necessary for the protection and the safety of our fellow citizens. The changes proposed in this Bill are obviously necessary and they have been requested for a long time by the police, by victim assistance associations, by many private and professional and organizations and by individuals.

Indeed, the Opposition has also failed to understand that this Government does not govern with a steem roller but through consultation and by trying to reconcile divergent views. This can cause delays when you try to bring about a consensus on a controversial issue. However, I prefer such delays to the dilatory tactics used by the Opposition Members and their august colleagues during the consideration of this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. There are no questions. Debate.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): As you know, Mr. Speaker, as the Solicitor General spokesman for the Official Opposition, I have already made lengthy submissions with regard to Bill C-67. Therefore, I do not intend to speak at length today.

It is obvious that the Conservative Government is deserving of some criticism for the fact that we are here today, for the fact that only for the twelfth time in Canadian parliamentary history a Parliament has been recalled in order to deal with a matter necessary to be considered by the House of Commons. In my respectful submission, we are here because of the reckless negligence, the reckless rhetoric of the Conservative Government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and his predecessor.

The facts speak for themselves with regard to this particular piece of legislation. As my leader pointed out, the legislation was introduced in this House over a year ago. Bill C-67 was introduced by the Conservative Government on June 27, 1985. At the time of introduction the then Solicitor General indicated that the Bill was urgent and that it should be passed as expeditiously as possible. The Official Opposition from the outset has indicated that we support in principle Bill C-67. I indicated the reasons why in my submissions of June 18 and June 26 of this year.

On September 12, 1985, the then Solicitor General indicated at page 6558 of Hansard, and I quote:

> Bill C-67 is not the total answer to that promise but it is a very important beginning. It contains measures which were urgently required and could be introduced quickly while awaiting the outcome of broader policy reviews currently under way in my Ministry and in the Department of Justice.

On September 12, 1985, the then Solicitor General indicated the urgency of this legislation. What happened, one asks, to this legislation over the course of the last year? If in fact, as the Government has indicated over the course of the last number of months, this Bill is so urgent, why then did the Government in its wisdom decide not to bring this legislation forward for expeditious passage by the House? It was introduced on June 27, 1985. Second reading began on September 12, 1985. It continued on September 23, 1985. The committee concluded consideration on January 29, 1986 and the report was concurred in on June 17, 1986.

The Government has procrastinated with regard to this legislation over five months, since the day it was reported out of committee. Was it because there was more urgent legislation that had to be dealt with by the House of Commons? Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that this particular legislation, Bill C-67, was considered by the Government to have less importance than other legislation that was given priority. For example, the Government gave priority to Bill C-87 which involved the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals. It gave priority to Bill C-107 which was an Act to implement the United Nations Convention on the recognition and enforcement of foreign arbitral awards. The Government gave priority to Bill C-95 which dealt with the Archives. It gave priority to Bill C-118 dealing with a dollar coin. Those are the facts. The Government in its wisdom decided to give priority to those Bills rather than bringing forward Bill C-67 in order for the Bill to be dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

It is obvious that society will always be at risk by those who decide to pursue deviant behaviour. There is no way of competely eliminating the risk of deviant behaviour, the risk of criminal behaviour in society. What is hoped for is to try to minimize the amount of criminality in society in order to ensure the safety of the public. We live in the safest country anywhere in the world. There is no question about that. Our crime rate is the lowest of any western industrialized nation. We have a lot to be proud of with regard to the safety of our streets, our families and our children. That is not to suggest that we should not attempt to increase that safety and to minimize the risk of future criminal activity. One recognizes, of course, that it is a difficult task in order to ensure complete safety of our citizenry.

There are rules and regulations in society. There are those who have shown disregard and contempt for the rule of law and it is necessary in some cases to incarcerate those individuals who are convicted of criminal offences. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in Canada we have one of the highest incarceration rates of any western industrialized nation. There are more people in prison per capita in Canada than in any other western industrialized nation.

If we do have the lowest crime rate and we have the highest incarceration rate, one could argue, of course, that one of the reasons why we have such a low crime rate is that we have such a high rate of incarceration. The facts would suggest otherwise. Generally, of course, we are a law-abiding nation.

The overwhelming majority of Canadians believe in and have respect for the rule of law. Sure there are those of us who at times do not come to a complete and full stop at a stop sign. There are those of us who perhaps tend to speed a little on the roadways. However, the overwhelming majority of us believe in criminal law. We believe that the laws are there in order to protect society.

The goal, of course, is to minimize the risk of danger to society. The intent behind this legislation is to protect society. One recognizes, of course, that of those who are incarcerated in federal institutions, a number of them will commit additional crimes, will become recidivists, if you will, will once again return to prison because they have decided to continue a life of deviant behaviour. A great number of them, after having served time in an institution, return to a normal law-abiding life from the day of their release onward. There is a core group in prisons who are beyond help. Regardless of programs or attempts to rehabilitate them, they will continue to lead a life of crime. When considering those who become eligible for mandatory supervision, we are dealing with those inmates who have shown to the authorities that they are not good risks to be released on parole. Every inmate, with the exception of those who are serving indeterminate sentences or serving life sentences, become eligible for parole after serving one-third of their sentence. The good risk inmates are released at the one-third stage or shortly thereafter. Those who are not considered good risks by the National Parole Board and have shown that they do not believe in rehabilitation are not granted parole. These are the individuals with whom we are dealing.

The current law allows an inmate to earn remission. It is an important concept in prisons for a number of obvious reasons. In order to give an inmate some hope, in order to ensure the safe running of the institution, and in order to guarantee some semblance of order in an institution, inmates must be given some hope that if they behave themselves while in prison they will earn some time off from their sentence. All those involved in the criminal justice system recognize that there is such a thing as mandatory supervision and earned remission, otherwise known as time off for good behaviour. When judges hand down sentences and when defence counsel and prosecution plea-bargain, they recognize fully that if an inmate behaves in an institution he or she will be able to earn some remission or time off for good behaviour. Without such earned remission there would not be that hope for an inmate and there would not be that incentive for an inmate to behave while incarcerated.

As a result of the earned remission process, an inmate is entitled to earn a third off his or her sentence. Bill C-67 says that if the National Parole Board, in its wisdom, decides that certain individuals who have been denied parole or certain individuals who are serving time in our federal penitentiaries for violent offences are likely to commit a further violent offence, then it can issue a detention order. In other words, it can keep an inmate incarcerated for a further year. It can continue to issue detention orders until warrant expiry, when the inmate has served his or her complete sentence.

While it sounds logical in terms of public safety to keep inmates incarcerated, it is obviously not the answer. Sooner or later these inmates have to be released, according to the law. As the Solicitor General indicated somewhat naively, a four-year sentence is a four-year sentence and a six-year sentence is a six-year sentence. I suppose we can excuse the Solicitor General for his apparent lack of understanding of correctional law and apparent lack of understanding of his department, since he is a new Solcitor General. One would hope that with the passage of time he will acquire some knowledge and expertise with respect to the role of his Department. I offer the assistance and constructive co-operation of the Official Opposition to permit him to fully understand the workings of his Department.

Sooner or later these inmates will have to be released. If they are kept incarcerated until warrant expiry and their sentence has been completed, what guarantee is there that the inmate will not commit a further criminal offence? There is no guarantee. If anything, by keeping these inmates incarcerated until the end of their sentence one is increasing the risk of future criminal activity and the risk of harm to society. As a result of these detention orders that may be issued over the course of a number of years, the inmate may build up more anger and more vindictiveness toward the system and society and in fact may have a predisposition to get even with society for depriving him or her of liberty.

There is also the problem of releasing these inmates into society without supervision. When we keep an inmate incarcerated until the completion of the sentence we are forced by law to release that inmate without any form of control or supervision. Mandatory supervision allows us to release an inmate one, two, or three years prior to the expiry of the sentence and exercise some form of control over the inmate. For example, the inmate could be required to reside in a particular community, not to consume alcohol or associate with certain individuals. The inmate could actually be required to report to the local police station on a weekly basis or reside in a half-way house. We could require an inmate to obtain some type of treatment. We can exercise control and ease that particular inmate into society. However, according to this legislation, theoretically an inmate would be released from maximum security custody into society with no right to exercise any type of control over the individual once he or she is released into society. It is obvious that mandatory supervision, or some form of supervision is necessary, not only for the inmates but for the general safety of society.

Of course, there are those who would argue that certain inmates should be incarcerated and the key thrown away. We do not have that type of society. There are those in society who commit serious offences such as murder. We have a very serious penalty for murder, life imprisonment with no parole for 25 years. However, we as a society do not believe in incarcerating individuals and literally throwing away the key, thereby giving the inmates no hope for the future of themselves or their family. That is the mark of a civilized society and every western civilized nation believes that there should be hope for inmates and that at some point they should have the opportunity to lead a law-abiding life.

Notwithstanding its negligence, its reckless rhetoric and its procrastination, the Government introduced a Bill a year ago. The Government has been in office for two years and it is interesting to note that in that period 3,000 inmates have been released on mandatory supervision. If the Government is so concerned, why did it not bring forward measures earlier? The Solicitor General, the Government House Leader, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the former Solicitor General have indicated that there are walking time bombs about to be released into society as the reason for calling back Parliament for the twelfth time in Canadian parliamentary history. They gave us a figure of 54 individuals who would be released between now and September or October. Who are these 54 so-called time bombs who are about to be released into society? Thirty-eight of the so-called time bombs have less than two years left of their sentences to serve. We can keep them incarcerated for another year, perhaps for two more years, but we are going to have to release 38 of the 54 individuals within two years. Is it not better to release them into society now and be able to exercise some control over them for the next two years as we ease them into society? Is it not preferable to do that now than to simply to open the prison gates in two years' time and say: "Fend for yourself"? It is obvious that we are increasing the risk to society. Twenty-one of the 54 so-called time bombs are serving sentences of five years or less. We cannot hold these individuals for more than another year. Seventeen individuals are serving sentences from five years to 10 years. Revoking their mandatory supervision will keep them incarcerated for an average of two more years.

The Government tells us there will be walking time bombs out here. If it is the case that there are walking time bombs about to be released into society, why has the Government not acted sooner? Why has it waited two years to resolve this so-called urgency? The reality is that mandatory supervision has been with us since 1970. Inmates have been released on mandatory supervision for the past 16 years. There are, of course, those individuals who are released on mandatory supervision who commit further crimes. We know of some of the more celebrated cases of those individuals who are released on mandatory supervision and who commit murders or rapes. But even those persons released on parole commit further crimes and it is a small percentage.

It would appear that there is a problem in this House with respect to what in fact is the actual experience with regard to the release of inmates. I would submit that the public is not well informed on crime and punishment. Canadians generally tend to exaggerate the rate of violent crime. One study indicated that a majority of Canadians thought that 50 per cent of murders in Canada were committed by parolees. The fact is that only 1 per cent of murders in Canada are committed by parolees. Another study showed that two thirds of those polled thought 90 per cent of all parolees commit further violent crimes. It is not 90 per cent, Mr. Speaker, it is 10 per cent.

I wish to indicate once again on behalf of the Official Opposition that we support the general thrust of the legislation. We support the Senate amendment. Unfortunately, I have not had the opportunity to address the amendment itself. It is a good amendment which gives authority to the courts to decide whether or not an inmate's liberty should be effected.

In closing, I would urge the Government to reconsider its position on the Senate amendment in order to make Bill C-67 a little more perfect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis).

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my hon. colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell—

Mr. Nunziata: York South—Weston!

Mrs. Duplessis: In any event, I disagree completely with the Hon. Member who has just concluded his speech. For my part, I believe that we would improve the general safety of Canadian society by accepting Bill C-67 as proposed originally without the amendment passed by the Senate. I have the impression that convicts and offenders will think twice before committing a crime if they know that they will have to remain in prison for the full term of their sentence.

I would like the Hon. Member to tell us whether or not he believes that the role of a Member of Parliament is indeed to defend the population in general rather than people on the fringe of society. As for him, he nearly always defends those on the fringe of society. I would like to remind him of a case 20 years ago—and I am now speaking for the fathers and mothers who went through these terrible events in my constituency, in Cap Rouge, when seven youths were sexually mutilated and then murdered. In this case, the criminal committed these acts after being released on parole and these murders would certainly not have been committed if he had remained in prison. I therefore would like to know how the Hon. Member sees his role and whether he does not think that he should defend society in general instead of those who refuse its rules. The prisons are made to keep the convicts under lock and key. I would like his opinion on this matter.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) like to entertain an answer to the question posed by the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis)?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to excuse the Hon. Member for confusing me with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I would like to indicate to her that I have much more hair than my colleague to the right.

Mr. Nystrom: How much more?

Mr. Nunziata: Fifteen more hairs.

On a serious note, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has obviously displayed a complete lack of understanding of prisons, inmates, criminology and public safety in Canada. For that reason I do not intend to be overly harsh. The Hon. Member asked who we purport to represent. We represent all Canadians. We represent the public at large. We are here as well to represent prison inmates. They are all human beings, my friend. They are all deserving of consideration by this Parliament. Regardless of what some people may think in this Parliament and elsewhere, we as a civilized and decent society must take into consideration even those of us who would pursue a life of deviant behaviour.

We are concerned, of course, with public safety and in considering the best interests of inmates we can consider the best interests and safety of society at the same time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF CARS FROM JAPAN AND KOREA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourned for the summer recess the former Minister for International Trade gave the impression that the Government would soon have the agreement of Japan and, perhaps, of Korea to restrain the number of cars they export to Canada. Many weeks have now gone by and there is still no agreement. The Korean Minister who recently visited Canada said that his country did not intend to restrain exports.

The Government must ensure that unless and until Japan and Korea meet the same standards with respect to Canadian content and production as do the North American manufacturers, they must expect restraints on the number of cars they export to this country. Failure to do this would harm jobs in Canada. Failure to do this would increase pressure by the Americans to have the Auto Pact placed on the free trade negotiating table. The Government must act now. Its lassitude and failure to bring about an agreement with the Koreans and the Japanese to restrain the number of cars imported into this country are putting jobs and the economy at risk.

ELECTIONS

SAINT-MAURICE CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, a great many Quebecers are wondering why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) waited five months before setting the date for a by-election in the Saint-Maurice constituency. The reasons are quite clear. The Prime Minister does not want to give Quebecers an opportunity to openly demonstrate their dissatisfaction with this Conservative Government.

This week, a Gallup Poll has indicated that 67 per cent of Quebec voters are not satisfied with its performance. The most recent polls indicate that in Quebec, the Progressive Conservative Party is now ranking third with 20 per cent of popular votes, and I am proud to say that 27 per cent of Quebecers would support the New Democratic Party in a Federal election, which certainly indicates that NDP Members will be representing Quebec to reflect the strong social and democratic tradition of that province and to look after the needs of ordinary Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the Government that the time has now come to hold a by-election in the Saint-Maurice riding.

THE SENATE

OPPORTUNITY TO REVIEW INSTITUTION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): If with your permission I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared this morning in Le Soleil newspaper under the heading "A blunder by the Liberal Senate", and I quote:

> Beyond the outcry over the waste of time and energy, it should be recognized for the sake of our political system that the Conservative Government was right to recall the Members of the House and to ask them to vote again on a bill which they approved as recently as last month.
> The Senate, packed solid with political friends of previous Prime Ministers, should not assume the role of defender of the oppressed or the weak within our society when it is its major parasite.
> The fact that Liberal senators, who also had to be recalled, have announced that they would not attempt again to oppose the will of the majority in the House, demonstrate their bad faith on this issue. In fact they have used an obsolete power both morally and politically to amend the substance of a bill which the House had adopted, and they are making all Canadians pay the price for their partisanship.

As suggested by several of my constituents, perhaps the time has come to reconsider the usefulness of the Senate as an institution.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

SOVIET UNION'S OFFER OF TESTS VERIFICATION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, for a generation the lack of a mutually acceptable verification agreement has made it impossible for the United States and the Soviets to agree to a long-term nuclear arms test ban or to significant nuclear weapons reduction. However, the recent statement by Chairman Gorbachev on verification means that the New World has a new possibility. It would ill behoove the United States to turn away from it without a thorough and honest search. A new leader in Moscow has declared a new policy on an old problem. It deserves a new response from Washington.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

HALIFAX HARBOUR POLLUTION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the municipalities of Halifax, Dartmouth, Bedford, and Halifax County are concerned about the gross sewage problems affecting the Halifax Harbour and are desirous of cleaning it up. The response of the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has been to abdicate any responsibility for this serious situation, and Nova Scotia's two federal cabinet Ministers have been conspicuous by their silence.

The federal Government ought to provide new moneys to assist immediately the cities and communities of Halifax and Sydney and other communities which have serious raw sewage problems. Instead of mouthing harsh criticisms against municipal leaders as the Minister of the Environment did in Halifax, he ought to take charge and introduce a national program to address these problems. Platitudes and statements of good intention are not helpful at all. The time for action to clean up this most serious environmental problem is now.

AGRICULTURE

FUTURE OF SOVIET MARKET FOR CANADIAN WHEAT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, during the past several weeks I have had occasion to visit a number of western farm communities in the company of the Leader of my Party. During that time we have ascertained the deep fear and anxiety felt by many farmers about the loss of markets and the low prices that are now being paid for the major agricultural exports of wheat and barley.

Recent reports from the United States point out that that country is intending to apply export subsidies under its Farm Bill on exports to Canada's best customer, the Soviet Union. If that takes place, the entire underpinning of the western grain economy will be wiped away. I call upon the Government to forget its down-on-the-knees attitude toward President Reagan and to make a strong and effective representation that an export subsidy cannot and should not be applied on exports to the Soviet Union, something which would take away Canada's best grain customer.

MIDDLE EAST—ISRAEL-MOROCCAN PEACE INITIATIVE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the Prime Minister of Israel paid a dramatic visit to Morocco in a bid to rekindle the dormant embers of peace in the Middle East. King Hasan, a leading Arab moderate who advocates harmony between the Moslem and Jewish communities, has taken an enormous risk in light of the reaction from several Arab states. Canada should use its goodwill acquired through its internationally recognized negotiating skills, contacts, and reputation for fairness, to make sure that this initiative does not die.

As parliamentarians it is our duty to use our influence in helping the Middle East become an area of stability, something which is crucial for world peace. The President of Israel and the King of Morocco need the support of all of us if they are to succeed in their mission of peace.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

LACK OF HOME DELIVERY SERVICE IN NEW SUBURBS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, do you get mail? Of course you do. We all do. At least we all should. My constituents in Emerald Woods, Chapel Hill, Greenboro and other newer neighbourhoods do not get mail—at least they do not get mail at their homes.

Why is it that new developments plan for water, electricity, telephones, roads, sewers, bus services, cable t.v., police and fire service, garbage collection, schools, stores and recreational areas, but no one seems to plan properly for mail service? Do we blame the unions? No. Do we blame the Government? No. Do we blame the management? No. Do we blame the developers? No. We blame them all for letting what I believe is an essential service evolve into an unfair, unequal, ineffective, expensive operation in the last 10 years.

I look forward to meeting the new President and Chief Executive Officer of the Canada Post Corporation some day, wherever he is, and I call upon the Government today to take action to deliver mail to all Canadians.

SITUATION OF INDIAN BANDS IN NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in northwestern Ontario there exists today a situation which typifies the long and too often frustrating history of the native people of Canada. Six native Bands recently recognized in northwestern Ontario have waited patiently for over a year for the Department of Indian Affairs to assist with community development. In remote, isolated communities far in the bush, they are forced to wait for the bureaucracy and now for a brand new Minister to come up with desperately needed funding so people can live in houses and children can go to school.

Close to Hudson Bay, winter is not too far off. When 200 people are living in tents, even black flies are more welcome than the snow. I call upon the Government to release immediately emergency housing funds to these Bands of the Nishnawbi Aski nation in order that they might face next winter with the dignity and warmth that we in this House and across the country are fortunate enough to be able to take for granted.

LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Statistics Canada issued a special report indicating that there has been a very considerable increase in the incidence of long-term unemployment. In 1982 during the recession, 4.8 per cent of the unemployed were out of work for more than one year. In 1985, 9.3 per cent of the unemployed were out of work for more than one year. In 1985 this rate was almost double what it was in 1982.

Over the past year I have brought this trend to the attention of the Government on several occasions and have asked the Government to address this problem specifically, always without response. There is now a new Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). If this shuffle of faces is not merely public relations, then we should expect the new Minister to address this problem quickly and to announce new policies designed to assist the long-term unemployed. Let us have action and not shell-game politics.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSION INDEXATION—PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) recently announced that in the autumn he would be introducing legislation that would continue the indexation of pensions of those public servants, members of the Armed Forces and RCMP who are already retired, together with a new approach to the pension programs for public servants.

• (1410)

I endorse this approach. I encouraged the Minister over many months to seek this type of resolution, partly because it was something we promised during the election campaign but, more important, because it was the fair, decent, and correct thing to do. These former public servants had entered into an agreement with their employer and had paid for the indexation of their pension plans.

This decision and the reforms being proposed for the Canada Pension Plan are part of the agenda of a sensitive, caring Government. They form part of a program to allow seniors, who have given so much to Canada, to live with confidence and comfort.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

CABOOSELESS TRAINS—CALL FOR HEARINGS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, as the Government has shown on two previous occasions, it is not interested in hearing from the people of Canada on various issues. Only three hearings under Freedom to Move or railway pensions were held in three locations. Now, with the issue of cabooseless trains, it has left out three provinces. There will be no hearings at all in the Province of Saskatchewan, where there are thousands of miles of track with no signal systems, so that communities and employees can make their views known. There will be no opportunity for those communities to present their case.

We call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to ensure that the Canadian Transport Commission holds hearings in Regina, Saskatoon, Moose Jaw, or Melville. Any two of those four will do.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEED FOR PUBLIC DISCUSSION OF ISSUES

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I note with some interest that the Department of National Defence has now decided to proceed with the first phase of the purchase of more conventional submarines.

This raises the issue once again of whether or not we will have a Green Paper, a White Paper, or any paper which will precipitate public discussion of important defence issues. It is time to take defence policy out of the closet.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

LOST CHILD'S DEATH IN FOREST—CALL FOR FULL INQUIRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, summertime usually means a happy vacation, but for a Hamilton East couple tragedy struck this summer when their young son, Andrew Warburton, became lost in the forest of Nova Scotia and subsequently died of exposure. As the Member of Parliament I was called upon to encourage the Canadian Armed Forces to assist in the search for Andrew. The family displayed uncommon courage in a time of great difficulty.

On their behalf I should like to recognize publicly the work done by the Emergency Measures Organization and thousands of volunteers. I should also like to thank the Chief Medical Examiner of Nova Scotia who decided to recommend a magisterial inquiry.

The family wants the inquiry, not to point fingers or to assess blame, but to ensure that a similar tragedy might be avoided in the future. Andy Warburton was a popular and well liked boy. His family and friends have rallied around his parents in this difficult time. It is the sincere wish of the family that a full inquiry will ensure that Andy's death provides us with lessons for the future.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

EFFECTS OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians are unaware of the major changes in the CPP which were introduced in Bill C-116 last month. Flexible retirement was introduced. Canadians can now begin drawing the CPP any time between the ages of 60 years and 70 years, instead of 65 years, with appropriate adjustments to the amount of the pension.

Disability benefits have been substantially increased for 140,000 disabled Canadians, and an additional 5,000 people will qualify. CPP survivor benefits will now continue after remarriage. Benefits will be restored to those who lost them. Benefits for children of a deceased or disabled contributor have been doubled in cases where both contributing parents die or are disabled.

These are just a few of the sensitive, caring, and far-reaching improvements which the Government has made for senior citizens. They have contributed much to this great country and are deserving of these increased benefits.

SPORTS

THE COMMONWEALTH GAMES—MINISTER'S REPORTED STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think I express the feeling of all Members of the House by saying that we are all pulling for the Member for Nickel Belt, who is ill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question, in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is for the Deputy Prime Minister whom I congratulate once again on his assumption of high office. It is great to have friends, I want to tell him, in high places.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think all fair-minded Canadians may share an honest difference on whether or not

Canada should be participating in the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh. All fair-minded Canadians, I believe, will condemn absolutely the completely irresponsible statement of the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport who last night, speaking presumably on behalf of the Government, in Edinburgh said that "We should punish financially those who would use the Commonwealth Games as a forum of protest."

Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Government favours punishing Antigua, Barbados, Jamaica, St. Lucia, and India for not participating in the Games? How does that kind of stupid policy help keep the Commonwealth together?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first, I am not sure whether I would want to comment on a so-called quote which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has read into the record. There are times when such quotations are taken out of context or prove to be erroneous. Suffice it to say that if there are any penalties, or if any action or punishment will be taken, it will be taken by the Commonwealth Games Federation. I think it is in the best position to make that judgment.

[Translation]

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) has stated categorically, and I am quoting his words, that Canada is in favour of punishing Third World countries which protested against apartheid in what they though was a moral way. This has been reported, it is up to the Government to deny or prove it.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Minister of State now wants to impose economic sanctions against Kenya, the Bahamas and Zimbabwe? Will the Minister of State be asked not to intervene in the external affairs of our country?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Canada has taken a position to compete in the Commonwealth Games. I think that is a position widely endorsed by all Canadians, particularly by the athletes. As well, if there are any sanctions, any penalties, or any punishment, a decision in that regard will be left to the Commonwealth Games Federation. It is in the best position to make that judgment.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, one final question for the Deputy Prime Minister. That is not what the Minister of Amateur Sport said. He is thinking of punishing Bangladesh where the annual income is $100 a person, or Sri Lanka where the average income is $230 a year. Will the Deputy Prime Minister contact the Prime Minister at his cottage—

Mr. Frith: During this emergency.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and ask him to instruct the Minister of Amateur Sport to stay on the track and stay out of foreign relations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the right hon. gentleman that I do not have to contact the Prime Minister wherever he is. I will undertake to ascertain the facts before I shoot from the hip like the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition just did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—POSITION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. We know that the Prime Minister contacted Mrs. Thatcher with regard to the imposition of economic sanctions against South Africa. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether the Prime Minister contacted President Reagan and attempted to convince him to impose tough economic sanctions against South Africa, or does the silence of the Government in the wake of the President's declaration the other night suggest that Canada finds the President's position acceptable?

● (1420)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where the Hon. Member has been for the last six months. This Government has not been silent on the issue. The position of the Prime Minister and the position of this Government has been clearly expressed. It has been expressed to Mrs. Thatcher. I can tell the Hon. Member that it has been expressed to President Reagan as well. Furthermore, the Prime Minister is at this present time wrestling with this very important issue. At the mini summit which will be held between August 3 and August 5, I am sure he will find that our Prime Minister will be taking a leading role at that conference. I hope that we have the endorsement and the backing of that Hon. Member and indeed of his Party, if they can stay together on that issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister can tell us in answer to my supplementary question whether the Government will therefore be making a public response to the President's declaration, which we have not yet heard. Moreover, if the Government is serious about imposing economic sanctions against South Africa, why is Eldorado Nuclear, the Crown corporation controlled by the Government, continuing to do business with that country?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the position of this Government has been clearly stated by the Prime Minister, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and will be reiterated at the mini summit on August 3 to August 5. I hope the Hon. Member can be patient enough to see it reiterated in forceful terms and working within the context of the Commonwealth.

THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF NEW SENATORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. I begin by saying that I speak I am sure not only for members of my caucus, but for all other Members in the House, when I say I wish him well in his new responsibilities. I say that genuinely.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Having said that, I now want to ask him to exercise the leadership for which he is well known. Today the House of Commons is meeting because of what another Minister has described as the irresponsible action taken by the Senate. Also, today at four o'clock the newest Senator, one Norm Atkins, the campaign director of the Conservative Party, is being sworn in as a new Senator.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: There is my answer. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this. When is the Government going to put an end to the hyprocrisy of criticizing the Senate for using its powers one day and naming new Senators to that body on the same day?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have been asked to respond to this question because of my wide experience with the Senate. In response to the question of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, when people of competence and great ability, people who have made a great contribution to Canada, are appointed to the Senate, it should be applauded universally in this Chamber and across the country. I want to reiterate to him—

Mr. Broadbent: There was not one bit of applause there. What happened?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is not a question here of us being back because of any appointments of competent people. It is because of the actions of the Senate which we think in this particular case were unwarranted, irresponsible, and out of character for that institution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR CURB OF SENATE'S POWERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Minister is continuing to try to have it both ways. They continue to appoint people to that non-elected body which the Americans had the good sense to put an end to 200 years ago. They put people in on the one hand, and criticize them when they use their powers on the other. Since the Government has named three new Senators since it last objected to the Senate using its powers, will the Minister live up to the commitment made by his predecessor and bring a Bill before Parliament that will put an end to this undemocratic power that the Senate now has?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we have been looking at the whole question of the powers of the Senate. I believe that the question of Senate reform is one on which there is consensus across the country, that it should be considered and dealt with. I suggest that reform of the Senate is completely unrelated to the proposition put forward in the Hon. Member's question. Putting competent people in the Senate has nothing to do with the powers of the Senate, how those are exercised, and whether or not the Leader of the Opposition has control over the Senators in his Party at this particular time.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Can the Minister give Canadians one reason for keeping a Senate which costs $28 million a year? Can he give one reason to keep such a Senate.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the position of the New Democratic Party is known. I think our record with respect to reform of the parliamentary institutions is well understood in the country. I was very pleased to take part in changing the rules in this House which have in fact substantially enhanced the role of the private Member in the House. I believe the Hon. Member would agree that these particular rules have been working out very well indeed.

The matter with respect to the whole question of reform in the Senate is under constant consideration by the Government and, when an announcement is made, it will be made in the usual course.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the conflict of interest guidelines which were introduced with such pride and promise by the Prime Minister. It does not concern the Stevens inquiry but whether the other Ministers in the Government are taking the guidelines seriously for themselves and their staffs. What new steps are being taken by the Government to ensure that the conflict of interest guidelines are being respected by Ministers and their staffs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the conflict of interest guidelines are in place and are expected to be complied with not only by Ministers but by the exempt staff and those associated with the Ministers' offices.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister telling us that the Government is satisfied with the way the guidelines have been enforced until now and that it is not prepared to do anything to make them more effective?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that there is a commission of inquiry currently taking place.

Mr. Kaplan: I am asking about other Ministers.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sure that the adequacy of the current conflict of interest guidelines will be the subject for examination and analysis. If there are any recommendations forthcoming, I am assuming that the Government will take them very seriously.

PARKER INQUIRY—WITNESS' EVIDENCE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It relates to what we are learning from the inquiry, particularly the news that the special assistant to the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, Ms. Walker, has admitted that she lied before the judicial inquiry, concealed documents and obstructed the work of the inquiry, as well as admitting that she was engaged in wholesale evasion—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —of her responsibility not to carry out commercial activities in conflict of interest with her government position. What action is the Government taking in view of this revealed evidence of conflict of interest and grave impropriety on the part of this particular government employee? In particular, will she be fired, or will the Government give a message to all ministerial staff that they can evade conflict of interest guidelines with no discipline at all?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will not exclude the question or rule it out of order, but I want to warn all Members, who are aware of the sub judice rule, of course. I am sure they would not in any way jeopardize the future of any possible witness in any case. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made some very serious charges. In fairness, I believe all Hon. Members would certainly not want me to make any comment upon testimony that is currently before a commission of inquiry, certainly not before the inquiry is concluded. I might mention in passing that there are three other inquiries into conflict of interest currently taking place. They involve two Liberals, namely, Elinor Caplan and René Fontaine, and a New Democrat by the name of Wildon Parasiuk. I would not want to comment on those either.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR DISCIPLINARY ACTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Is the Deputy Prime Minister not aware Mrs. Walker acknowledged publicly in the hearing this week that she had in fact given incorrect information, that she had lied, she had misled and had taken away documents which should have been given to the inquiry? Is that not sufficiently grave impropriety to cause the Government to act now in the case of a ministerial employee? Or is the Government saying to all employees of government Ministers that they can do anything they want and will not be disciplined by this Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may in an irresponsible way draw conclusions. I will choose not to do that. I will await the conclusions of the inquiry.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYMENT REPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure who is the new Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration so I will put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday Statistics Canada issued a special report indicating that long-term unemployment has increased 91.6 per cent over the last three years. Since none of the Government's present programs are adequate to deal with this problem, will the Minister, or someone on behalf of the Government, indicate today in specific terms what the Government intends to do about this very serious report?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the Hon. Member that the Acting Minister this day is the Minister of State for Immigration, a newly appointed Minister whom I am sure all Hon. Members would want to welcome.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I will indeed take note of the Hon. Member's question. I thank him for his representation and will assure him that the Minister on his return will address himself to the question.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the answer is not adequate. This issue has been around for quite a while now. I want to ask the Acting Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister a supplementary question. With unemployment hovering around 9.6 per cent for the last four months and when only 28 per cent of Canadians say they are happy with the Government's job-creation programs, what is the Government going to do which is new to help this group of unemployed Canadians today, not next week?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate across the country has fallen from 11.7 per cent to 9.5 per cent. Youth unemployment has fallen from 18.4 per cent to 14.8 per cent. That is a pretty good record.

STATISTICS CANADA REPORT—REGIONAL IMBALANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister as well. Statistics Canada this morning indicated long-term unemployment is up by some 91 per cent and that we indeed have two economies in Canada, a buoyant southern Ontario and a stagnant rest of the country. What specific steps is the Government planning to correct this very serious regional economic imbalance and to create long-term jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that the economic performance of the Government has been excellent. Unemployment has dropped. It is below 10 per cent. For the first time in eight years we have interest rates below 10 per cent. In fact interest rates are at the lowest level in eight and a half years. Inflation is down to 3.7 per cent. I think the record is very good.

That is not to suggest that we do not have some difficulties. We know there are problems in the agriculture sector and in the energy sector in western Canada. Those particular areas are being addressed and there will be new policies forthcoming in the future.

SITUATION IN WESTERN AND ATLANTIC REGIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Statistics Canada said almost a year ago that long-term regional unemployment was up in western Canada by over 800 per cent, and very much up in Atlantic Canada as well. Specifically, what will the Minister do to correct this very serious regional problem? Will he now, for example, keep the CN shops in Moncton open so we can at least keep those 250 jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is very much aware of the number of initiatives we have undertaken with respect to the agricultural industry in western Canada. We scrapped the NEP. There are still some remnants left which are still irritating some people out there, but that has certainly been a positive development. There is the Atlantic Enterprise Program in the Atlantic region. All of these things clearly recognize the commitment of the Government to regional development and economic growth opportunities right across the country.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX—REQUEST FOR COMPLETE REMOVAL

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Western Accord provided for the total elimination of the discriminatory Liberal Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax by 1988. Since the signing of the Western Accord, however, world oil prices have dropped 60 per cent. The resulting downturn in the economy in western Canada from low oil prices has translated into a loss in excess of 18,000 jobs in Alberta alone in the past four months. It is obvious—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please put a question to the Minister?

Oral Questions

Mr. Shields: Will the Minister be announcing the total, absolute and final removal of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax soon? And if not, why not?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister just said, we are very concerned about the implications of lower international energy prices in western Canada. This was the subject of the first trip by the new Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has had a number of discussions with other representatives of the industry. As soon as he has had a chance to canvass these views in full, we will be making some decisions known.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT'S FUTURE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In a CBC radio interview aired this morning, the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said he has no plans and no intentions of working toward the winding down of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Why has the Government decided to abandon the policy of implementing Indian self government?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in view of his question I think the Hon. Member should not draw some of the conclusions he has. He is well aware that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, now in his job for some weeks, has to be given the time to examine the Department. I think all of us recognize that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Then he shouldn't talk.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The objectives of the Government with respect to Indian Affairs have not been changed.

CONSULTATIONS WITH INDIAN LEADERS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, if I may. In that same CBC radio interview, the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said he does not plan to do much travelling across Canada in connection with the responsibilities of his portfolio. Why has the Prime Minister permitted the new Minister to abandon a long-standing practice of actively consulting with Indian leaders? Does the Deputy Prime Minister really believe it is enough for the Minister to stay in Ottawa and consult with himself?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised that the Hon. Member, for whom I have a lot of respect, would make such a suggestion. I happen to have heard that clip from the program this morning. What I heard the Minister say was that he did not plan to travel quite as much as the previous Minister.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF CROP YEAR

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for the Canadian Wheat Board. The current crop year expires on July 31 and many farmers cannot fill their quota of grain deliveries because country elevators are congested. Will the Minister extend the crop year so farmers can sell this year's crop at this year's prices and not have to accept an up to 30 per cent reduction by being forced to accept next year's prices?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very serious concern of many farmers in the prairie region. In the northern area of the prairies, especially, the harvest was difficult last fall and the resulting grade of grain is not of the top quality usually produced in Canada. I have raised this issue with the Board and have had conversations with the Hon. Member, as I have had with other Hon. Members on this side. The Hon. Member should know that the Board is doing everything possible to take delivery of the outstanding quotas which will be there at the end of the crop year, and hopefully by the end of the crop year everyone will have had a chance to deliver on the quotas which are presently in effect.

DELIVERY SYSTEM—EFFECT ON FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Does the Minister not think it is unfair for anyone who does not have an opportunity to deliver his full quota to receive a lower price, when his neighbour 10 or 15 miles away can get the full price, just because the system has broken down and he has not been able to deliver his crop?

• (1440)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not hear my answer to his question. The Canadian Wheat Board has been able to take delivery of three million additional tonnes this year, which number was not in the system last year. That is about a 15 per cent increase. The information I have is that we will have the lowest on-farm carry-over ever, something in the order of one million tonnes or less. The Wheat Board has given the assurance that it will do everything it can to take delivery of the quotas which are in effect for the end of the crop year.

If the Hon. Member has some concerns in some specific areas I would be more than happy to take them up in order to do what we can to ensure that the situation to which the Hon.

Member refers does not occur. I have already had conversations with the Hon. Member for Athabasca and the Hon. Member for Peace River.

DOMESTIC PRICE OF WHEAT

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since 80 per cent of Canadian wheat is exported, and an increase in the domestic price will offer only inadequate help to farmers, what alternatives to increasing the price of domestic wheat, and as a result the price of bread and pasta, will the Government consider as it endeavours to help wheat farmers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is considering many options. The Hon. Member will know that we have acted already on several. The Minister of Finance removed the tax on farm fuel, and we thank him for that. We have moved to limit transportation cost increases.

I am aware of the concerns that the Hon. Member has concerning jobs in his own area. He should know that what we are endeavouring to do is to be fair to everyone concerned. In this regard I refer to the consumer as well as to the industry in which there are jobs at stake. Above all, I refer to the producers who are being hurt by what I think is unfair competition from outside our borders and over which we have no control. I understand the situation in the Hon. Member's riding. We are cognizant of his concerns.

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPE OF FIVE INMATES FROM LAVAL PENITENTIARY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. First, I would like to congratulate him on his appointment and offer the constructive co-operation of the Opposition—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: —to remedy some of the serious problems facing his Ministry.

It is a strange coincidence and a strange irony indeed that we are here today to deal with the issue of keeping inmates in jail when five dangerous inmates were allowed to escape from Laval Penitentiary due to gross negligence. Is the Solicitor General in a position today to explain to the people of Canada how it was possible for these five dangerous inmates to literally go under the wall at Laval?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his good wishes. I certainly look forward to his co-operation with respect to the operation of my Ministry. There is an old saying, but I will not use it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: Needless to say I am aware of the escape which occurred at Laval. An internal investigation is presently being conducted. When I receive the report I will decide on what further action, if any, should be taken.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that an internal investigation is not enough. What is necessary is an external, independent and thorough investigation into the escape in order to assure Canadians of the security of our institutions. Will the Solicitor General immediately call for an independent inquiry into the escape in order to assure Canadians of the security of all federal penitentiaries?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member, all Members of the House and, indeed, all Canadians that I am concerned about the security of our institutions. Starting next week I will be undertaking a tour of the various penitentiaries and federal institutions. The first one I will visit is Laval, where I will be on Tuesday.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

PRICE OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, Canadians want to know how much more they can expect to pay for prescription drugs once the Government brings forward its proposal to amend the Patent Act with respect to generic drugs. Will the Minister instruct his departmental officials to release immediately all studies and information which they have with respect to projected price increases for prescription drugs once the Government brings forward this measure?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wants the best health care system but he does not want to produce it in Canada. He wants to buy the best drugs from outside Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The present Act has not allowed us to develop new drugs in Canada. The evidence is in in that regard. In fact the Hon. Member knows this as well as anyone else knows it. If we look back to insulin some 50 years ago we will see that that is the Canadian record in almost all cases in terms of new drugs. Canadians can do better. The new legislation will protect the aged, those who are on welfare, and those who are disabled. There is also a price review mechanism. Those are some of the protections which are in the Bill.

My suggestion to the Hon. Member is that he should get off the narrow view which he has so often expressed. He should expand his view and say that we can have the best health care system in order that some of our young kids, our new researchers, can get into that area.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PATENT ACT AMENDMENTS—COST IMPACT STUDIES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said previously that he wants a rational debate on his Government's proposal. I wish to ask the Minister, who was highly critical of me for simply asking for some basic information on which we can make a rational judgment, whether or not he still agrees with the advice he gave me in committee on May 27 when he said that his Department had done studies within the Department. At that time he said that he could not give me the cost impacts but that the Government would be prepared to give us that information once the Government had moved on the changes to the Patent Act, which it clearly has. What have you got to hide, Jake?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to do that. The reason I made the point was that the Party of the Hon. Member, without even having seen the Bill, has already made up its mind with respect to how it will react. It is against it. It is against any change. What I am saying to the Hon. Member is that, yes, when we introduce the legislation he will obviously receive the information for which he asked in committee. I will be glad to give it to him at that time. Perhaps today we will see a change in attitude and he would like to see the Bill.

FINANCE

PERSONAL AND CORPORATE TAXES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his May 1985 Budget and in this year's February Budget, the Minister provided for a very considerable increase in personal income tax. On the other hand, in his 1986 Budget he announced a reduction in corporate taxes.

Mr. Speaker, last week, the Minister gave a press conference which was a complete contradiction of his firt two Budgets. I would therefore like to ask the Minister whether he is aware of this contradiction and why he is now changing the course he announced in the House in his last two Budgets.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction whatsoever. We embarked on tax reform in our very first weeks in office. In October of 1984 we commenced the removal of some of the loopholes in the tax system, some of the abuses. I refer to the scientific research tax credit, limited partnerships, and other matters for which I am sure the Hon. Member applauds the Government. Since then we have introduced the minimum tax and phase one of the corporation tax which reduces not just the tax rates, as the Hon. Member points out, but also some of the exemptions that corporations have had. This ends up in the corporations paying somewhat more tax. We are continuing this process. That was the substance of my announcement last week. We will continue the process in the directions that I laid out in my announcement of last week.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WANTS TO WITHDRAW PROPOSALS TO INCREASE PERSONAL INCOME TAX AND REDUCE CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have the following supplementary for the Minister of Finance. If he is serious about what he just said and what he said last week, does he intend to withdraw the proposals for increases in personal income tax announced in his last Budget and withdraw as well the reduction in corporate taxes, in line with what he said at last week's press conference?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should recall that it was not an increase in tax rates but a temporary surtax put on to get us over a hurdle in the battle we are waging against the deficit problem that was left to us to deal with in September, 1984, by the Party the Hon. Member represents. We are continuing to fight that battle but we think we can do it in a more effective way by rationalizing the tax system and dealing with it in the way I set out last Friday.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REQUEST FOR BAN ON INVESTMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Over the last few weeks we have seen the insensitive intransigence of Maggie Thatcher, and now the President of the United States has announced a policy that can be regarded as not only morally bankrupt but exploitative of apartheid for the profit of American business. The Deputy Prime Minister has said that the Government has expressed its concern. I would hope that it has expressed its revulsion.

Is it not about time, as a counterpoint to what is going on in Great Britain and the United States, for the Government to express leadership to the Commonwealth by announcing now the imposition of a complete ban on investment in South Africa and an embargo on the importation of South African agricultural products?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the most appropriate time and place for the Government to show further leadership on this issue are at the Commonwealth mini-summit conference which is to take place in the next few days.

ECONOMIC SANCTIONS—REQUEST FOR AID FOR NEIGHBOURING STATES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Deputy Prime Minister is aware of what has been going on. The Commonwealth is falling apart around our ears.

The Prime Minister has indicated that if apartheid is not dealt with effectively by South Africa, a complete termination of all economic relations with South Africa will be imposed and a committee of the House of Commons has supported the Prime Minister in that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member to put a question, please?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, has the Government prepared a plan, either alone or in concert with other nations, to provide economic assistance to the frontline states which will be retaliated against by South Africa in the event of the imposition of those sanctions the Prime Minister has promised he would impose?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the Hon. Member is advocating the dismantlement of the Commonwealth. We take the very strong position that the Commonwealth is a very important institution and we will do everything we can to see that it flourishes and continues. It is within that context that the Prime Minister will be making his presentation and furthering the commitment of the Government, which has been so clearly expressed by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to pursue the kind of policies necessary to end apartheid in South Africa.

FINANCE

TAX REFORM PROPOSALS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I am sure all Canadians applaud him for his accelerated approach on tax reform and simplification. Has the Minister set a goal whereby, once all the changes are made, the system will be revenue neutral so that the changes will not be seen as being a tax grab?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the tax reform proposals I announced on Friday are designed to shift the burden of taxation. They are not designed to raise revenues in any way. We are trying to examine the balance between corporate income tax, personal income tax, and sales tax. In examining the balance between the various elements of the tax system, we want to ensure that there is a sufficient degree of incentive to encourage economic growth and job creation and to do it in a way that will keep the tax system competitive in view of the changes that are being considered in the United States.

IMMIGRATION

INTRODUCTION OF VISAS FOR PORTUGUESE VISITORS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration whom I congratulate on his new responsibilities. When his predecessor announced the new refugee policy back in May, the Government reversed itself on an earlier decision to apply visa restrictions to Portugal on the grounds that that was the incorrect mechanism to address refugee related matters. Why did the Minister suddenly slap visa restrictions on Portugal in the middle of the summer? Why did he not choose to prosecute the small number of immigration consultants and lawyers who are responsible for the majority of bogus claims and who are very well known to the Minister and his Department?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the visa was imposed in order to protect the credibility and integrity of the entire Canadian refugee and immigration policy. We did it regretfully. I have announced that it is a temporary measure. When my officials and myself determine that the situation has been normalized, we can deem that the visa restrictions be lifted.

REQUEST FOR REVOCATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, by imposing a visa restriction he is punishing the innocent and is allowing the guilty to get away. Since visas punish the more than 10,000 visitors from Portgual who come to Canada every year and unfairly and needlessly tarnish the reputations of the proud and hard-working Portuguese-Canadians, will the Minister not instead revoke the visa measures and concentrate fully on eliminating the flourishing white-collar crime committed by unscrupulous lawyers and consultants operating out of Toronto and Montreal?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the visa is a mechanism to provide access to those who should be legitimately seeking our shores. I sympathize, and I have said very clearly that it is my intention to go after, in a very heavy way, those consultants who have been causing innocent Portuguese citizens to make misleading statements. There is an RCMP investigation going on and it is not appropriate for me to comment on that investigation. I do not want to prejudice the investigation or the legitimate rights of all claimants to a fair and just hearing.

TARIFFS

BOOK AND MUSIC TARIFF

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns a new wrinkle in the Government's book tariffs which will now include a tariff on music at an even higher rate by making the base price the sales price even in the case of rented music. Will the Minister not agree to respond to Canadian music lovers and readers who have protested by the thousands this very misguided policy, and agree to revoke the tariff on both books and music?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member of the reasons we regretfully took that action. It was not an action taken against the book industry but it was an action taken to exercise our rights and demonstrate our concerns over the direction U.S. government policy was taking. I have met, as has had the Minister of Communications, with representatives of the book publishing industry. We have asked the industry for information. Once we receive that information, we will be able to chart our course from there.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister respond to legal opinions put forward indicating that the tariff on English-language books is discriminatory, that it violates provisions in the Charter designed to provide equal protection for both official languages, that it discriminates against English readers, and that it violates the provisions for freedom of expression, thought and exchange, by impeding the free flow of ideas? Will the Minister not agree that the Charter should be respected and that that tariff which is in violation of it should be withdrawn?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would know that one can get an opinion from a lawyer on both sides of that particular issue.

Mr. Broadbent: Of any issue.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the New Democratic Party, a noted legal scholar, is probably right. One can get an opinion from a lawyer on both sides of any issue. Given the circumstances, that is particularly so with this issue. We are reviewing the matter but, as I indicated, we have asked the industry for information and until that information is available it is difficult for us to proceed.

POINT OF ORDER

MINISTER'S REPLY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During Question Period I noted that the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) may have inadvertently misled the House when he told us that the Government had removed the fuel tax on farm fuel. I think it would have been more correct to use the word "reduced" rather than the word "removed". Accordingly, I ask that the record be corrected.

• (1500)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair must rule that that is not a point of order.

PAROLE ACT AND PENITENTIARY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—SENATE AMENDMENT

The House resumed consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act; and the motion (Mr. Kelleher) (p. 15013).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, five minutes were remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). Therefore, I recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a question or comment.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I should like to preface my question to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) by congratulating him on his fine remarks on the Bill earlier today. I am sure all Hon. Members of the House would agree that as usual they were very thoughtful and thought provoking remarks.

Is the Hon. Member of the opinion that the Government is misguided in its approach? Does he think, as I do, that it is actually using this issue as a ploy to divert attention from the other embarrassing situations with which it happens to be faced at the present time? Does he think that it used the guise of this Bill to reconvene the House for this very short session and in that way is attempting to divert the focus of public opinion from very serious problems at the present time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I know all Hon. Members are very happy to see each other back in the Chamber. It is nice to hear that camaraderie in the House. However, I would appreciate it if they would take their conversations behind the curtains so that we can hear the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by thanking my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), for his very generous comments.

It is obvious why we are here today, for only the twelfth time in Canadian parliamentary history that the House of Commons has been recalled. We are here because of the reckless negligence of the former Solicitor General, the reckless negligence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as well as the reckless rhetoric of the former Solicitor General. It is pure and simple politics. That is the reason we are back here dealing with this legislation.

We agree that the legislation is important. We agreed a year ago with the former Solicitor General that the legislation was important. Notwithstanding the fact that the legislation was of crucial interest to Canadians, as the Government has indicated, the Conservative Government of Canada had this legislation hanging around for a year before it called it back to the House for third reading. It is not the responsibility of the Senate to call the Bill back for third reading. It is not the responsibility of the Opposition. It is the responsibility of the Government, which failed miserably in its obligation and responsibility to call back this Bill at an early stage. If anyone is responsible for the year of living dangerously, it is the former Solicitor General.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member took great pains in his earlier remarks before lunch to explain that mandatory supervision really did not matter, that we were better off bringing them out in society where they could be watched, where they could be counselled, and where they could be under supervision, and that they would be let out in two years anyway. What would that Hon. Member say to the family of the 19 year old girl who was mutilated, raped, and strangled to death by someone who was released on mandatory supervision? How would he respond to that?

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the more irresponsible questions which has been asked in the House. It is indicative of the attitude of the Government.

It was the former Solicitor General, the current Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), who needlessly alarmed Canadians by indicating that there were 54 time bombs which were waiting to be released into society. He knew darn well that mandatory supervision had been with us for the last 16 years, and that over the course of the last two years since his Government came to office some 3,000 inmates in federal institutions had been released on mandatory supervision.

If the Conservative Government of Canada had been true to its word—and many Canadians would question that—it would have taken action two years ago rather than recalling Parliament. It is quite obvious that the Government of Canada and specifically the former Solicitor General have mastered the art of hypocrisy.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in the debate this afternoon to add my thoughts to the events which returned us to Ottawa on this very hot day. I have been taken away from my constituents and Lake Superior with its cool breezes and returned to Ottawa and its warm weather.

We are here because of two principles. The first principle is that it is up to the House and its Members, as newly elected representatives of Canadians, to decide what shall be the laws of the land. In this case we are here as an opposition Party reviewing government legislation to determine whether it is the most appropriate mechanism for the aims of the Bill. Ironically, I am not happy about the second principle, the one which allows the Senate, that unelected group in the other Chamber whose ranks will be swelled by one this afternoon, to make changes. I do not agree with the principle that the Senate should be making changes to a Bill. However, the amendment it proposed and sent back to us for consideration makes a lot of sense.

Our society believes in the right of appeal and in justice prevailing. We do not arbitrarily pick someone up off the street and throw him or her in jail. If we have duly tried and convicted individuals of certain crimes and have incarcerated them in one of our penitentiaries, they should have the same rights in terms of early release as they would have in the process of being found guilty. Even within our court system we have a series of appeals. The Supreme Court of Ontario can be overruled by the Supreme Court of Canada. We allow for benefit of the doubt. We allow an appeal for people who feel they have been wronged by the judiciary. In civil law we provide the right of appeal. We in the House have passed many pieces of legislation which give the right of appeal to Cabinet of decisions by Minister, of decisions by tribunals. This amendment by the other place would provide opportunity for those persons whose early release had been rejected by the National Parole Board. If they have just cause, if they have actually lived up to the rules of good behaviour, and if they have indicated quite clearly that they have learned from their experience behind bars, they can go to the next phase.

• (1510)

The next phase is the transition. If you are placed in confinement for a number of months or years you are no longer in touch with the real world. You are in a very artificial situation where you are told when to eat, when to sleep and when to watch television. To go from that environment into the real world where no one tells you what to do is a big change. All you have are vague laws that you are supposed to know and obey.

When you have such a cut and dried situation with no supervision, no parole and no assistance, people tend to run afoul of the law again or, in some cases, seek to go back inside because of the security it provides. We have seen that situation in northwestern Ontario where we have our "winterees" who come back each and every winter because of their economic situation.

The questions raised in this Bill are very important. Should a decision be up to the Parole Board. Should there be some other level of appeal? When someone is hoping to be released early under mandatory supervision they should have the right to be represented by counsel. This should not be a token representation with counsel sitting at the back of the room, making a statement at the end of the hearing. Counsel should participate fully. Whatever evidence is placed by officials from the penitentiary to justify why this individual should not be released should be verified. We should have a decision based on the feeling of the prison officials, because of attitude or what have you. We must ensure that the individual's rights are protected. Every person has the right to be made aware of the full case against him or her. Clearly nothing is more fundamental in our society than the right to defend yourself against allegations. One must have the right to cross examine those who accuse. Ask any Canadian whether he or she thinks that these rights are rights all Canadians should have. The answer would be yes.

If we as a society are going to change the rules and increase the amount of time an individual will spend incarcerated, and we do it at a point through the process other than at the time when the judge hands down the decision, based on the findings of a jury or his or her own findings, finding an individual guilty of the crimes charged, perhaps somewhere later in the process, two thirds into the sentence, we must still provide those protections, Mr. Speaker. If we are to judge ourselves a just society, we must treat those who we incarcerate in the same way we treat all citizens.

What about the question of who has the ability to judge what might happen? It is like the argument put to someone in a traffic accident, that if they had gone a little slower they would not have been at the intersection at the time, being told they were at fault even though the facts show that the other person was clearly at fault. The law rejects the what-if argument. Why should we play the what-if game with those who have been found guilty and sentenced both to a prison term and to a period of mandatory supervision?

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) pointed out this morning, when judges pass sentence they take into consideration the amount of time they feel is appropriate for the incarceration and also the amount of time that is appropriate for the mandatory supervision for easing back into society. That easing back is very important. We have heard time and time again over the years about how most of the people get their training in the joint. They have committed a crime, perhaps a consequential crime or one that is not so consequential, they are sent away and they get a graduate degree in our institutions, only to go back on the street and apply their trade.

If we are to provide for meaningful rehabilitation of those individuals, and I believe that the facts will bear out my suggestion that the majority are rehabilitated, that we do not see the kind of repeat offenders at the federal penal institutions we see at some of some of the small provincial ones, and if we are to ease them back into society, we must have that period of mandatory supervision where they have someone to report to, somebody who keeps an eye on them and where there are some rules over and above those that are assigned to the rest of us in society whereby infractions can put them back very quickly behind bars. We have to look at this very seriously, Mr. Speaker. We are supporting this amendment because of the possibilities of error. It is possible that the Parole Board may not make the best decision either for the benefit of the individual concerned or for society. We have to allow recourse to the courts.

When people ask me how I feel about coming back today I say it is like a truck from GM that has been recalled. You are not happy about it but it is something that has to be done. It takes time but it is our responsibility as the Parliament of Canada to make these kinds of decisions. It is not for the other House.

Let us look at the timetable. The Bill was tabled a year ago. It went to committee. The committee reported in January. When did we see the Bill? Did we see it in February, March, April or May? No. We saw it in the dying moments of this House when it was sent back to us. We have seen changes in the Cabinet. With the appointment of a new House Leader we have seen an indication that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was not satisfied with the manner in which business proceeded, and he has placed his trust in the new House Leader. I offer him my best wishes because I know he will put the same vigour to this task as he did to the Ministry of Transport.

There is no reason we should be back here. If these 54, 51 or 36 time bombs are a danger now, why were they not a danger in February or last fall? This is clearly an indication that the Government did not have its act together and at the last minute tried to put together a Bill in the way the Government would like it.

In the final moment or two of my allotted time I would like to reiterate the need to accept this amendment to ensure that all Canadians have the right of appeal, that those who have been incarcerated for a proven violation of a law have the right to appeal the decision not to let them out early. They should have the right to be represented by counsel, the right to be made aware of the case against them so they can rebut and challenge.

• (1520)

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your indulgence. I look forward to the remainder of the debate and the vote later this afternoon so that we can get back where we belong, namely, in our constituencies. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I would like to congratulate the previous speaker whose comments were more or less what mine would have been if I had spoken to this motion today.

I think he was right to analyze the situation the way he did, and I think his speech will be helpful to Canadians who are watching us on television and who wonder why Parliament was recalled today in such a hurry, to adopt a Bill that has been before Parliament for a number of months.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member would agree that the Government's decision to recall Parliament is unfounded or at least ill-founded, as well as costly and unnecessary.

I say ill-founded because I think we should not take the exceptional course of recalling Parliament unless there are issues that are particularly urgent or unless there is an overriding need to do so. I believe that the precedent created today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) is an ill-considered precedent. In my opinion, the reason given by the Conservatives for resorting to this exceptional measure does not justify a massive recall of Members to Parliament, the cost that entails and the incovenience to House of Commons employees and the entire parliamentary apparatus.

I feel that we are here today because of a mistake on the part of the Government. And I think this measure is unnecessary in any case, because, although the Prime Minister would have us believe that without this legislation, dangerous criminals might be released, what he is not saying is that every month, inmates who have served their sentence are being released from prison and returned to the community.

I think it is rather strange that all of a sudden, after nearly two years, after more than 20 months in power, this Government is getting worried about inmates who are released at the end of their sentence. I therefore wish to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke whether he could explain why it is the Government was unable to have the legislation adopted earlier in the year, if it was really so anxious to keep all inmates deemed to be dangerous inside our penitentiaries. In fact, in that case, this Bill should have been one of the first measures adopted by Parliament, and so I wonder why the Government waited until the last day of the session to have this Bill adopted by the House?

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). I appreciate his comment. I think it is interesting to note that this is the twelfth time since Confederation that this House has been recalled on an emergency. We have been recalled for matters such as the declaration of war against Germany, the Suez crisis, the Great Depression, sometimes to legislate men and women back to work, the Constitution of Canada. When I read that list and compare it to the reason we are here today, in order to right the incompetence of the Government in planning the business of this House, it is clear, and I think all Members of this House and those who are watching will agree, that this does not compare.

The Government has had over a year since the introduction of the Bill. It has had at least five months since it cleared committee, which is two points back from the final process. While I cannot give the Hon. Member any specifics, I know that we twiddled our thumbs in this House over the winter months. We talked and talked on legislation that was nowhere in the same vein as this Bill. That the affairs of this country could have been managed much better.

At the end of June we saw a lot of pressure by the Government to rush through legislation. The Hon. Member for Papineau will recall that his colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), made sure that one particular piece of legislation did not pass through this House. I am sure the Government House Leader will remember that measure as well. When we come back on September 8, and if the press reports that tell us there will be a Throne Speech on September 17 are true—I do not know if they are—we will see the Government try to cram through a lot more. This House has had enough of that kind of management. We expect to see legitimate debate, a full airing of issues so that the concerns of the people of Canada can be properly brought to the floor of this Chamber.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet):

Mr. Ouellet: A short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Hon. Member whether it is true that the argument to the effect that we in the Opposition and the senators who supported this amendment really want to let dangerous criminals loose in the streets is an argument or an accusation made by the Government appears to me to be dangerous and quite unfounded. I wish the Hon. Member who said he would support the amendment passed by the Senate—as we in the Liberal Party will also support the amendment—would reassure the people who are listening to us that indeed, by endorsing the amendment, we will not be doing anything at all to encourage or multiply the possibilities of having dangerous criminals roam the streets.

What we are proposing is that, in the case of an inmate who is about to finish serving his sentence and may be released after good behaviour, that if the authorities have decided that the inmate is dangerous and must remain behind bars, that the decision not be made by federal Government officials but by the courts because in fact an individual is sentenced and sent to prison by judges, by the Canadian courts. Therefore, the senators as well as the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, if I correctly understand the purpose of our motion, are saying that if it is decided that an inmate about to be released should remain in prison for a longer period of time, this decision should not be made by public servants but by the courts which sent the individual to prison in the first place.

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member for Papineau, I would like to state very clearly that regardless of whether this amendment passes or not, those individuals will be out on the street at some point. They will either be out at the end of their full sentence, as prescribed by law, or some time earlier. I do not believe that an extra six months in a jail somewhere is going to change the potential of an individual for committing another crime. I do believe that by providing them with an opportunity to ease back into society they will be less dangerous. In fact, society as a whole will be better protected by that kind of more humane approach.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak, not for 20 minutes, but for a few minutes only. I believe we should proceed fairly quickly to adopt this Bill and I will limit my comments to help achieve the objective which is to pass the legislation.

• (1530)

I am happy to assist in passing the legislation quickly because I believe it is important and will tend to support public safety.

This strange emergency presents me with the opportunity to rise and explain how this important piece of legislation became an emergency. Before doing so, let me say that I believe this legislation serves a purpose and should be defended.

I think the New Democratic Party is tortured with the question of whether this legislation will do any good. I suggest that it will. The NDP has advanced two reasons why they believe it will not be useful. First, NDP Members say it will not do any good because it is not possible to predict who will commit a violent crime even though a person may have committed one in the past. While that proposition is essentially true, one cannot always predict who will commit a violent crime. Yet there are a small number of cases where such violent crime can be predicted, and the whole premise of the Parole Board is based on the possibility of prediction.

If an inmate is behaving in a certain way and making threats, if psychologists who have been watching that inmate for years come to the conclusion that he is likely to commit an offence, I suggest that there is a possibility of prediction. We presently do not have the tools to keep such an offender in prison and he must be released on the date when mandatory supervision is reached. I reject the argument that one cannot predict violent crime as an across-the-board proposition.

Of course, it is not a premise of the Bill that each case can be predicted. The Bill is simply a tool that I hope will be used in the case of inmates with respect to whom prediction is possible, and it is on that premise that I believe it is a valid Bill.

The second argument made by the NDP against the Bill is that even when prediction is possible, there is no basis on which can it be said that keeping a person behind bars for a couple of months or years longer will rehabilitate him or her. Again, I believe that that NDP proposition is wrong.

While there may be some cases where an inmate may see the light by remaining incarcerated for an extra period rather than being put on the street, the point is that by keeping them behind the bars for that extra period of time at least provides a measure of extra public safety during that period.

What about those who are incurable and dangerous criminals? In our democracy we cannot keep them behind bars any longer than the warrant states. According to this Bill, at least those who we can predict will be dangerous offenders once on the street can be kept from being let loose for that much more time. That is a worthwhile measure which our Party supports. While this is only a slight improvement in most cases, it is better than nothing since it provides a little extra protection by virtue of that longer incarceration.

I also recognize that keeping someone behind bars until the end of his or her sentence is a trade-off against mandatory supervision.

As a result of my past experience as Solicitor General, I recognize that street supervision is sometimes more beneficial than incarceration. If someone is to be put on the street at a certain point in time, it is advantageous in some cases to be able to have the person spend that first few months or years on the street under supervision rather than being let loose at the end of the warrant without any right to impose any conditions.

Let us consider what type of conditions can be imposed on someone under mandatory supervision. They can be kept away from liquor and kept away from former associates. They can be told to live in a certain neighbourhood and be required to report weekly, if necessary, and even daily in an attempt to help them adjust during the difficult first days when they hit the street after being in prison for a long period of time.

I have seen and heard of cases where the supervisor or parole officer has told the inmate or the person under supervision to empty his pockets and put the contents on the table, then asked such questions as: "Where did this money come from? Whose phone number is that? What lock does that key fit?" This is possible when a person is under mandatory supervision. It can assist the person in re-entering society. This cannot be done with someone who has stayed behind bars until the full sentence has been served.

There is an advantage to mandatory supervision. However, the premise of the Bill is that there are also cases where there should be authority to deprive an individual of mandatory supervision. That is why we support the Bill.

As a matter of fact, the House will know that I introduced this Bill in 1983 after I tried but failed in court to deprive inmates of mandatory supervision in a few cases, using administrative means. Those administrative means did not work and the Supreme Court of Canada ordered us to release inmates whom we wanted to keep behind bars. Therefore, I had to come back to this legislation, which I took to the Senate. The Senate proposed amendments, to which I agreed since the election was forthcoming. I approached opposition Parties to see if they would give unanimous consent to pass the Bill in the dying hours of the last Parliament.

Let me report to the House that the Conservatives offered their unanimous consent in order to pass the legislation, but the NDP deprived us of unanimous consent in June, 1984. Therefore, we were unable, as a Government, to bring this legislation forward. After we were defeated and the new Parliament was called, I reminded the Conservatives that since they agreed to this important legislation when they were in opposition, it should be passed. The then Solicitor General said he would look into it, and his successor also said he would look into it. Now they tell us that we need to be called back from our summer break to deal with a problem that they identified as an emergency in the summer of 1984.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) tells us that 74 dangerous inmates to whom this Bill should be applied will come out in the next three months. I believe that that estimate is rather high and I hope the Bill will not affect such a large number of inmates. While I admit the possibility of prediction, I would be surprised if there are 300 inmates a year who can be predicted to be dangerous. After all, what is the difference between this three-month period this summer and the same period last summer? What is the difference between last summer and last fall or winter?

My point is that a certain number of inmates in this country are released under street supervision every day. For the Government to say suddenly that the ones who are coming out this summer are the reason we need the Bill is to falsify an emergency and create a sense that something we should have done years ago is an emergency. The Government is characterizing this as an emergency now in order to be able to Senate-bash and Liberal-bash. I cannot think of any other explanation, but if there is one, I would like to hear it. The Government, by calling this an emergency this summer, is attempting to blame Senators or Liberals because it could not get the Bill through the day it wanted rather than doing so two years ago when the same emergency existed and the legislation had the same importance as it has now. It may think the Canadian people are dumb enough to fall for the argument that this is suddenly an emergency, but I do not think the Canadian people are that stupid. I think those who are watching this debate, and not all of them are, will recognize what the Government is trying to create out of its own bad administration and delay—

Mr. Nunziata: And negligence.

Mr. Kaplan: And negligence, as the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) points out. It is the Government's negligence it is trying to cover up by calling this a summer emergency which is the fault of the Senate. I think the Canadian people will surprise the Government. It is true they voted the Conservatives in in September of 1984 but—

An Hon. Member: And they voted you out.

Mr. Kaplan: They did, and I think we have benefited from being in opposition. I do not believe the Conservatives have benefited from being in government. I do not think the Canadian people have benefited. I am looking forward to seeing their reaction to this false emergency called to get through some legislation which they believe at heart will do some good in supporting the public safety.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to say he supports this legislation, that it is important legislation which needs to be dealt with. I wonder why when he was in office the Government waited until the end of its term to bring forward legislation to deal with this matter. How can the Hon. Member justify criticizing the Conservatives for failing to act on this legislation for the last two years when his Government was in office for at least four years and did not act on it until the last minute?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that when I first observed the problem of people who were predictably dangerous getting out on mandatory supervision, I hoped the problem could be solved administratively. I thought we could take people who were earning mandatory supervision, let them march through the prison door, then turn them around and bring them back.

Mr. Prud'homme: Re-arrest them.

Mr. Kaplan: Re-arrest them. That is a very good way of putting it. In fact that solution was attempted. We took 15 inmates, one after the other, for a period of several months, inmates whom we thought to be dangerous and who should not be allowed out, and tried to bring them back. I want to level with the Hon. Member. We had legal advice from the law officers of the Crown that this was a legal thing to do and was not false imprisonment. Eventually a number of inmates took us to court, I think 11 inmates out of the 15, and we fought the case. We lost at the trial level. We appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, which took almost two years of the mandate.

We honestly did our best to try to make the administrative solution work, even going up to the level of the Supreme Court of Canada. Within weeks of the time that the Supreme Court found that the Solicitor General had no authority to cancel earned remission, we introduced legislation. I had a Bill which was going through the Senate at that time. I introduced an amendment to the Bill in late 1983. It was an addition to the Bill which was going through the Senate. The Senate had the same objections to my Bill as it has to the Bill now being brought forward by the Government. I went before the Senate, which took a couple of months. I argued with it against the amendments which it has now put to this Bill. It refused to change its mind.

Mr. Prud'homme: Both Parties.

Mr. Kaplan: Exactly, both Parties refused. I then agreed with the Senate's amendments because I could see that it was going to be the last session of Parliament and there was an election coming. So for the Hon. Member to suggest that I sat around for four years doing nothing with the problem I had identified is totally inconsistent with the facts. I did everything. I went to court. I tried a creative new solution for cancelling mandatory supervision. I hope the Hon. Member will withdraw any suggestion that I waited until the election to try to solve the problem.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, if this matter of the release of dangerous prisoners was a matter of such urgency, would my colleague tell me why he chose to follow doubtful legal advice and experiment with an administrative solution? Why did he not take expeditious and immediate legislative action?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, legislation was not exactly immediate in the last Parliament. We did not have 211 Members on the government side.

Mr. Keeper: You were the Government.

Mr. Kaplan: Yes, we were the Government but we had a Senate composed of Liberals who disagreed with my Bill. We had two opposition Parties which were being quite difficult until the end. I hope Hon. Members who were in that last Parliament will be honest enough, as I am sure they will, to agree with that. I had legal advice that we had an administrative solution. I put to the Hon. Member that we do not bring forward legislation, especially the Solicitor General, when we are receiving legal advice. We take the legal advice we are given. We are not in a position to be able to go against legal advice. I knew that these inmates who were about to be released should not be released. We just could not come up with overnight legislation in a controversial and difficult area such as this. The New Democratic Party may think we could, but members of the NDP do not have the kind of experience which should tell them that we cannot get legislation through that easily.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One further question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, granted that the former Minister had legal advice. However, he has just told the House that the matter was urgent. Surely, legal advice is not always on one side of the question. I am sure he would have wanted to act in a way that he would be sure would bring about the results he wanted. How can the Hon. Member now accuse the Conservatives of being tardy in legislative action when he himself took fully four years before he proposed to bring legislation before the House?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I do not have anything to add to the explanation I just gave. I hope that people who are interested in the issue will read what I just said.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I wish to pose a question to my hon. colleague. When the Hon. Member's amendments were introduced in the Senate, similar amendments which the majority of the Senate introduced to this Bill, did the two Parties represented in the Senate agree, voting together, to such amendments? Would my colleague confirm that Conservative Senator Nathan Nurgitz stated in the Senate that he was: "... more than satisfied with the amendment put forward by Robert Kaplan and this counts in the Senate's committee suggestion". Is that factual?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that that is factual.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further questions or comments? Debate.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the real reason we are back in Parliament in the middle of July is not that the Government is concerned with the safety of the Canadian people but that the Government has mismanaged the business of the House. This issue has been around since 1983 when the Supreme Court of Canada ruled the administrative measures introduced by the last Government unconstitutional. As the previous speaker pointed out, as soon as the Supreme Court ruled those measures unconstitutional, he, as Solicitor General at the time, introduced a Bill to deal with the problem. That Bill was in process when Parliament was dissolved for the election of 1984.

This Tory Government was elected in September, 1984. Parliament was called in November of 1984. But Bill C-67 which is before us now was not introduced until June of 1985. What kind of concern is that? The Government is calling Parliament back in the middle of the summer because it says it is very concerned about the early release of dangerous offenders from prison, but the Conservatives themselves, after the election, knowing the problem existed, did nothing about it from November of 1984, the first time Parliament met after the election, until June of 1985. That is quite a considerable period of time. It shows what a low priority members of the Government gave to this issue at that time.

If the Government was so concerned with public safety then why, after the hearings in committee on Bill C-67 were completed and after the Bill was returned to the House in January of 1986, did the Government let the Bill hang around on the Order Paper? It was not called for debate. It was left to sit on the Order Paper from January of 1986 until June of 1986. That is another considerable length of time. During those four or five months where was this great concern for the public safety? There was none at all. It is a phoney issue.

The Bill was left on the Order Paper for that length of time without debate. It was called before the summer adjournment at the end of June for report stage and third reading. On the last Friday of June it was sent to the Senate with the expectation that it would deal with the Bill at all stages on the same day and send it on for Royal Assent. To accuse the Senate of delaying the Bill because it amended it on that last day is also a phoney issue. If the Senate had dealt with the Bill at all stages in one day, on that last Friday in June, and if it had passed it without amendment, then the House would still have had to be recalled since a Bill does not become law without Royal Assent. In order to have Royal Assent Members of the House of Commons must be present in the Senate Chamber. So if the Government had wanted this Bill passed in the summer, without amendment, it would still have had to recall Parliament. Thus it is a phoney issue to accuse the Senate of being responsible for the recall of Parliament to deal with this Bill today. Parliament would have had to have been recalled in any event in order for Members of the House to be present for Royal Assent.

In the week following the passage of this Bill in the House the new Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) appeared before a Senate committee. Members of that committee asked him if he was planning to recall Parliament in the middle of the summer for Royal Assent in order to make the Bill law. He would not give them that commitment. That is on the record. They also asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would give a commitment that Parliament would be recalled for Royal Assent. He would not give that commitment. So there was no commitment at that time that the Government would recall Parliament to have this Bill become law.

It is necessary for the three levels to be present in order to pass a Bill into law. The monarchy must be represented, which is usually done by the Governor General. Members of the Senate and Members of the House of Commons must also be present. No piece of legislation can be made into law without these three parties being present. The House of Commons would have had to have been recalled whether or not there was an amendment made in the Senate. Clearly, the real reason we are sitting here today in the middle of summer is not that the Government has great concern for public safety. That is a phoney issue. It is also a phoney issue that we were obliged to be here because at the end of June the Senate proposed an amendment to the Bill we are debating today.

For a few moments I would like to discuss the substance of the Bill. What are we talking about here today? We are talking about the early release from prison of inmates as a result of earned remission under Section 23 of the Penitentiaries Act. Section 23 does not provide for automatic release from prison. It provides that an inmate can earn remission which will reduce his sentence. It provides that he can lose good time which will add on to his sentence. However, it is earned remission.

Before 1970, when an inmate earned remission he was automatically released from prison at the end of his sentence without any supervision whatsoever. This measure is unlike parole. Parole is granted by the Parole Board, and always has been, after one-third of a sentence has been served. Parole is granted because it is felt that an inmate can better serve his time outside prison. It is granted when the board feels that the inmate is no longer a danger to the public and that his rehabilitation process will be better carried out outside the prison. As a result of a decision of the Parole Board the inmate is released after having served one-third of his sentence. However, he is released under the supervision of a parole officer. He must report to a parole officer and there are conditions of parole. If the conditions are broken, the former inmate is returned to prison. If he commits another offence, even one of a minor nature, he is returned to prison. While these types of conditions applied to parole before 1970, they did not apply to release on earned remission. At that time we introduced mandatory supervision for inmates released on earned remission just as was the case with parole.

The question in this regard is the following one. Some of those who earned remission and were to be released because they had earned that remission, even under mandatory supervision, were still dangerous. That problem was recognized around 1981-82. The previous Liberal Government tried to do something about it through an administrative measure. This was done because administrative measures can be introduced quickly and without long debate in the House of Commons. The measure did not work. The Supreme Court of Canada ruled it unconstitutional. The Government then had to try to achieve the same results through legislation. It tried it near the end of the last Parliament. It did not work.

It is wrong for the Government to give the impression that this Bill will stop all sorts of dangerous people from being released into society. In the first place, the great majority of prisoners are in prison on limited sentences, not life sentences. They are serving sentences of three years, five years, seven years, et cetera. Even if there was not parole or earned remission, these prisoners would have to be released at the end of their sentences even if they were the worst actors in prison. If a man has received a five-year sentence and is a terrible actor he will not receive parole. His earned remission will be cancelled at the end of five years. At that time he must be released, dangerous as he may be. The police must look to him to commit another offence before they can arrest him and put him back in prison.

As a former Solicitor General I know that all those who work in the prison system know that people come to the end of their sentences and are not ready to go back into society. However, we have to return them to society because they were given a sentence of only a certain length of time. When that term is up, they must be released. Furthermore, even when an inmate has been released into society under mandatory supervision or parole to complete his sentence and he breaks the conditions of his parole or commits another type of offence, be it minor or major, his parole or mandatory supervision is cancelled. He is then put back into prison. This Bill does not change that procedure. It will remain in operation.

What we are discussing today, and what we as Liberals support, is legislation by which the administration of the prison system, the Parole Board, could cancel the earned remission of an inmate on the day he is to be released into society if it is felt that he is still dangerous. We support that measure. We differ from the Government in that we believe there should be an appeal from that decision to the courts and not simply to the Parole Board. Why do we suggest an appeal to the courts and not to the Parole Board? Because we are dealing with the question of civil liberties. We are dealing with the question of civil rights and responsibilities. The final decision in these matters should be taken by the courts where there is the right to cross-examine and where there are protections, not the more informal procedures which occur before the Parole Board.

This morning I listened to the Solicitor General. He said that the Parole Board is more properly equipped to deal with the factual matters of sentencing. He said that it is more equipped to do that than are the courts. It is the courts that must decide on sentences in the first place.

• (1600)

As we all know, the Criminal Code provides for a wide range of sentences for all offences. Judges hear representations from attorneys following convictions of offenders in order to decide whether they should impose full sentences, minimum sentences or suspended sentences. Judges now and for a long time have been deciding on sentences and have done a lot of work with respect to sentencing. It is not correct to say that the Parole Board is any better equipped to deal with sentencing and the shortening or lengthening of sentences than the courts. Protections exist in the courts. We support the Senate amendment which would provide for appeals from Parole Board decisions regarding the cancelling of earned remissions in the courts.

I would like to repeat what my hon. colleague has just said. When the Liberal Government introduced a similar Bill in the last Parliament, it contained no provision for appeal to the courts. When the Bill got to the Senate, it was amended to provide for an appeal to the courts. Finally, the Liberal Government used good sense and agreed to the amendment passed by the Senate. The Bill returned to the House and would have been passed if the election had not been called.

At that time, both Liberal and Conservative Senators unanimously agreed to the amendment. In 1983-84, Conservative Senators, who are still in the Senate now, agreed to the amendment that provided for final appeal in the courts, but today they are not agreeing to it. Of course this is for political reasons. They are following the instructions of the Conservative Government of the day and not what they believe to be right. If they did follow what they believed to be right, they would do the same thing they did when the Liberal Bill was before them. They would vote unanimously for appeal to the courts.

I would like to make it absolutely clear that we in the Liberal Party are opposed to the loose release of dangerous offenders, and there is a long line of legislation backing up that contention. We are in favour of parole and mandatory supervision. We believe that the best way for an inmate to be released into society is gradually and under supervision. It is a bad thing to keep a person in prison until the final day of his sentence and then release him into society without supervision.

With parole and mandatory supervision provisions, inmates can be released into society gradually and under the control and supervision of a parole officer. In the transition period, inmates have the support of the parole services while readapting to society. We are against the loose release of dangerous offenders, but we do support the gradual release of offenders into society through mandatory supervision and parole.

To conclude, I would like to repeat that the reason we are back here today in the House of Commons in the middle of July is not that the Government is concerned with the public safety of Canadians. If the Government had been concerned with the public safety of Canadians, it would have introduced this Bill in November, 1984. It did not do so until June, 1985. If it had been concerned with the public safety of Canadians, it would have moved report stage and third reading of the Bill in early February, 1986, but it did not do so until June, 1986. That shows that the Government was not really concerned with the public safety of Canadians as it maintains today that it is. In fact, that is the reason given for the recall of Parliament in the middle of summer.

The Government's accusation that the Senate is responsible for this recall is also phoney. The House would have had to be recalled if the Senate had made no amendments because we need the House of Commons in session for Royal Assent.

This is a phoney issue. We will vote against the measure put forward today because we believe that the provision of appeal to the courts is the correct provision. Tory Senators believed the same thing in 1983 and 1984.

Today's procedure indicates that the Government did not know how to manage the House in the last session. We hope for better things with a new House Leader. The Government badly managed the legislation it now claims is essential legislation.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have one short question to ask my friend opposite. I was quite sure that his seatmate, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), had indicated that the Liberal Party supported this proposal and was prepared to vote in favour of it. Can the Hon. Member inform me which is right?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we support the Bill as submitted by the Senate but we do not support the Bill without the amendment. We believe in the general principle of the Bill. There should be a procedure for cancelling early release on mandatory supervision. We do support the basic principle of the Bill, but we only support it with the Senate's amendment which provides that if there is a disagreement regarding early release, an appeal should be made to the courts.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my colleague made it clear that he and his Party support the principle of the legislation. Presumably the legislation is designed to try to protect the public from dangerous criminals. How does the Hon. Member come to the conclusion that letting a person out of prison without supervision, which is the impact of this legislation, will protect the public? How is it that it is better to have a dangerous person on the streets without supervision than it is to have a dangerous person on the streets in a supervised way?

Mr. Prud'homme: That's not what he said.

Mr. Keeper: That is the position of the Liberal Party and the position of this legislation. The legislation provides that a person is kept in prison for the entire term of his sentence and is then released on to the streets without supervision. How can that lead to safety in the streets?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member pretends that this Bill does away completely with parole and earned remission. It does not. It will still be possible under the Parole Act for inmates to be released after serving two-thirds of their sentences, and I support that. It will still be possible for inmates to be released on mandatory supervision as a result of earned remission.

The Hon. Member was pretending or suggesting that this Bill would end all mandatory supervision on early release. It does not. It simply gives the Parole Board with, we hope, the right to an appeal to the courts, the right to cancel early release in some cases. We would hope that the number of those cases would be very limited. According to what we have heard, there are now from 7 to 11 such cases in all of Canada. That means that the great majority of people who have earned remission would still go out on the streets under mandatory supervision.

We support the position of the Hon. Member but we also feel that there are exceptional cases in which it is fairly clear that inmates are dangerous. In those cases only, there should be a provision to cancel release on mandatory supervision.

We do agree with the general principle that it is better to enter society in a gradual way under supervision, and I said that during my remarks. However, we are not supporting a Bill that would cancel parole or earned remission and mandatory supervision altogether. The Bill only deals with exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear the Hon. Member indicate that he did not believe that we had returned today because of the actions of the Senate. I am sure the Hon. Member was present in the House on Friday, June 27. He will recall that a number of Bills were passed and went to the Senate that day. To the best of my knowledge, all of the Bills, with the exception of Bill C-67, received unanimous consent for passage in the Senate that day. One Senator withheld unanimous consent on Bill C-67, and that meant that if the Bill was to pass, the House would have to be recalled to deal with it. All of the other Bills which received the consent of the Senate that day returned to the House that day, were passed by the House and did become law that day. I am sure the Hon. Member would like to correct his remarks for the record.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will not correct my remarks at all. The Bills the Senate agreed to pass quickly were Bills to which it had no objection. The Government knew that the Senate objected to this Bill in its form because the Senate had amended the Liberal Government's Bill in that same form.

Mr. Redway: But it was just one Senator.

Mr. Allmand: No, it was not just one Senator. One Senator denied consent but he did it on behalf of a lot of others.

When it came to the vote on the Bill, all the Senators approved of the Bill, with the amendment that there must be an appeal to the courts. The Solicitor General knew that that sentiment existed in the Senate. The Bill was sent to the Senate on Friday afternoon, the last day, and the Senate was expected to pass the Bill with little or no debate and without that amendment, but the Government knew that the same Senators who had wanted that amendment in the past were still there.

• (1610)

By the way, in a previous Parliament Conservative Senators voted for that amendment. However, to send the Bill to the Senate on the last day, knowing that that objection existed in the Senate, was completely foolish and did not take account of that sentiment in the Senate. Knowing that that sentiment existed, the Government should have at least sent the Bill to the Senate in March or April, and it would have had time to deal with it without bringing us back in the middle of the summer. However, it did not do it.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity once again to make a few remarks in respect of Bill C-67. As Your Honour is quite aware, I have directed remarks in respect of the Bill on a good number of occasions in the past. First, I was a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which dealt with the Bill for many weeks in committee hearings. The committee pressed forward on the Bill with all possible haste and ensured that it got out of committee as quickly as possible, notwithstanding the fact that there were many motions moved by members of the Opposition and lengthy speeches made to those motions in an effort to slow down progress of the Bill. However, it went through committee expeditiously, bearing all that in mind.

I also participated in report stage debate when members of the New Democratic Party put forward some 33 separate amendments. They spoke to it in a very reasonable fashion and treated the amendments, as well as report stage and third reading debate, in a most responsible fashion. As we progressed from there, the Bill finally received third reading, went to the Senate, and here we are today.

We could spend a lot of time discussing and debating whose fault it was and whether someone is right and someone else is wrong. It seems clear from the remarks of all Members who have participated in the debate so far that it is quite clear everyone recognizes that the central issue in the debate is the protection of the public. All of us are interested in ensuring that the public is protected and in ensuring the passage of the Bill so that we can protect the public in every way possible.

As all of us are aware, the National Parole Board is required to release inmates who have been sentenced to prison after serving two-thirds of their sentence whether or not the board feels they are violent persons, whether or not it feels those persons will cause other problems for society or commit other crimes of a violent nature. Irrespective, the board is compelled under current legislation to release prisoners or inmates automatically after serving only two-thirds of their sentences. As the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) pointed out in his remarks earlier, if a prisoner is sentenced to a six year term by a judge, automatically the prisoner is released after four years. There is no way to keep that person in prison for the remaining two years, even if he or she is a violent offender. Also the Solicitor General pointed out that at the present time we are looking at an estimated 40 prisoners who are considered to be potentially violent offenders and will be released within the next six months unless legislation is passed to give the National Parole Board the authority and power to retain them in prison, not automatically to release them.

Regardless of who did what, whether it was the Government of the day, the last Government, the Official Opposition, or the NDP Opposition, surely we all agree that it is most important, if at all possible, to avoid having one more violent offender released to commit one more violent crime. As has been said many times in the debate, there is no guarantee that somebody will not be released who will commit a violent crime. However, if by the passage of this piece of legislation we can avoid one single solitary violent crime, surely we have accomplished something today and surely we have accomplished the purpose of recalling Parliament. It seems to me that that is what the debate is all about. If we clear away all the business about who is right, who is wrong, and whether or not it is important to be here today, surely it is important to avoid just one single solitary violent crime.

Many people have asked in this debate, in the press and in other media, what is the purpose of what we are doing today, because all violent offenders are in prison for a certain length of time and will be released at some time in the future? They have said that at some stage they will be out in society and will potentially cause problems, and that there is nothing we can do about it. If we follow that theory or philosophy, surely what they are saying is that there is no point in incarcerating anyone or sending anyone to prison in the first place because eventually they will get out and cause some other problems. I do not think anyone would quarrel that that is a potential difficulty or problem; there is no doubt about it. However, the reason the Parliament of Canada and the courts in their wisdom incarcerate people is that we feel the public must be protected.

That is one way of ensuring that the public is protected, at least for a limited period of time, from people who are potentially violent and commit criminal acts. We need to protect the public from such people, and that is the whole purpose of incarceration. No one guarantees forever and a day that they will not get out and cause other problems. However, if there is pretty good evidence that there will be problems, and a judge has said that a person has been sentenced to a fixed term, then it must be incumbent upon the rest of us to ensure that the person serves the full term. That should be the case if we have really good evidence and reason to believe that the person will commit some violent offence if let out early. That is what this debate is all about.

Other people have said that it is a mistake to let out people at the end of their sentences without having some sort of supervision tagged on at the end, without having some sort of control, without having some sort of conditions, without having other regulations to govern individual offenders when they are released. That may make a good deal of sense on the surface, but we must make sure that the system in place now is working.

The present system is called mandatory supervision. Supposedly, if we listen carefully to the term "mandatory supervision", on the surface it sounds as if someone will be following the released person all the time, that if the person commits an offence, such as crossing the street against a red light, a parole officer will be there to grab the person and say: "You are in breach of your mandatory supervision and we are going to take you back". We all know that that is not the case. We all know that mandatory supervision does not work like that. In fact, it does not really work at all. I could give a good many examples of that, but I choose to refer once again to a recent case dealing with this whole issue. I am referring to a classic case which took place in Metropolitan Toronto in March of this year, the case of one Leander Chesterfield Savoury. He was 21 years old but in October, 1984 he was released on mandatory supervision after serving two years of a four-year sentence for four convictions of armed robbery. The National Parole Board did not want to let Mr. Savoury out, but it had to do so because the legislation said that after serving two-thirds of a sentence there is no alternative, and so he was let out. In January of this year, at the inquest into the death of Mr. Savoury, the parole officer said that Mr. Savoury and he met once in January—remember he was released in October— and spoke twice on the telephone. The parole officer told Mr. Savoury that he wanted him to stay in regular contact.

• (1620)

During that period of time, from the beginning of November, 1984 to the end of January, 1985, three months, the coroner's jury found that Mr. Savoury had committed eight other armed robberies and had murdered a gas bar attendant in early or mid-January, 1985. He even admitted to one of his accomplices that he had murdered this other man.

The coroner's jury in considering all of these facts indicated that it felt Mr. Savoury's so-called mandatory supervision was grossly inadequate, and it did not believe this was an isolated case. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that it is not an isolated case. We hear of people being released on mandatory supervision all the time.

The coroner's jury also urged quick passage of Bill C-67 now before Parliament, which will give the National Parole Board the power to deny automatic release to dangerous offenders. That was a recommendation of a coroner's jury in the City of Toronto in March of this year as a result of the Leander Savoury case. By no means is that an isolated incident, Mr. Speaker.

The Senate has amended this Bill. The Senate said that having just the National Parole Board make the decision it is a bureaucratic act and that there is something wrong with it. It is contrary to civil rights and contrary to the protection of individual civil liberties. The Senate said that there should be an appeal to a superior court, but it did not set out anything relating to the appeal. The Senate said that there should be some sort of a right of appeal from the decision of the National Parole Board as to whether or not a person should have to serve his or her whole term as meted out previously by a judge in court.

Right away in saying that, we are saying that the judge of first instance and all of the courts that dealt with the sentence handed out by the trial judge made some sort of error that should have been corrected in the beginning. The judge handed out a sentence, a firm, definite term sentence. What the Parliament of Canada did in the legislation in 1970, which we are now trying to amend, was to say that regardless of the sentence handed out by a judge in court—even if the judge said a person should be put away for six years—we say that a person has to be released after serving only two thirds of a sentence. In other words, the sentence will be "four" years or a lesser amount than that stated. Unfortunately, the judge, in his or her wisdom, set a firm term as to how much time should be served. The Bill we are trying to amend today prevents the penal system from carrying out the original sentence meted out by a judge. Surely if we make sure by changing this legislation that the sentence handed out by the judge in the first place, which was subject to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, is served, then the course of justice is being served.

I could comment as well on some of the other aspects of the Senate amendment. I could suggest that it is vague and it implies that we may very well have to release a person on mandatory supervision pending a court decision on whether that person should be released on mandatory supervision, because a person would have the right of appeal if we agreed with the Senate amendment.

There are a number of problems with the amendment the Senate has put forward. What I am sayng this afternoon, as I have said all along in committee, at report stage debate and on a number of occasions during Question Period this year, is that we should be getting on with the legislation before us. It is not perfect. The former Solicitor General said it was not perfect. He was right. We need to take a look at the whole system of mandatory supervision. We need to take a complete look at the whole system of parole and sentencing. We have a sentencing commission which is now looking at the sentencing aspect. I believe that when a judge hands down a sentence, the public has the right to feel that that is the sentence a person is going to serve. Right now we have a very confused system. We should be putting in place a system that when a judge says that a person will serve so many years in prison, that is what it is. We may want to put in place after that some parole system, and we may want to put in place after that some mandatory supervision system. If we do, I hope we put in place a system that is much better than the one we have now because the one we have now does not work. If we are going to deal with these problems effectively, we have to change the system so that it does work. We should be changing the whole system, but that will take some time. We have to hear from the sentencing commission as well as have a lot of other studies. In the meantime, surely we can act on this Bill to make sure that the National Parole Board can insist on a person serving out the full sentence imposed by a court, which originally was subject to appeal all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada.

In my view, this is part of a move by our Government to change the swing in the pendulum, which has for many years been swinging exclusively in the direction of the civil rights and liberties of individuals. There is nothing wrong with that. They must be protected, but at the same time the public has to be protected too. A balance has to be struck. We have moved so far away from the balance of protecting the public that it is time we moved back. This Bill addressed that issue. This Bill brings us back to protecting the public and balancing that off with the rights of individuals. That is why we have to pass this Bill today in the form that it was passed by this House on June 27.

I urge all Members of this House to vote in favour of passing this Bill and to do so quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Parole and Penitentiary Acts

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that at last the cat is out of the bag. I was listening, and I think I did so with great respect, to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) whose final comments made clear what this Government really had in mind, and I want to thank him for that. I will comment further on this in my speech, but I want to thank the Hon. Member for shedding some light on the Government's true intentions. I think he is the only one who actually said what the real reason was for recalling Parliament today.

[English]

I have two questions. In 1982-83 there was a similar discussion in the Senate. As the Hon. Member knows, it was the unanimous conclusion of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, when it was considering Bill S-32—for those who may be listening, the S stands for Senate—that this view was incorporated in the Bill when it was passed by the Senate. It was passed by the Senate without a dissenting voice on June 9, 1983. This was the key recommendation contained in the unanimous Senate committee report on Bill C-67—C stands for Commons—dated May 14, 1986.

I ask the members of the Conservative Party, when were the Members of the other place wrong, then or now? On May 14, 1986, they agreed. Will my hon. colleague comment on the John Howard Society, which works very closely with released inmates? That society has expressed immense concern on what is going to take place in the jails if we go ahead today with the proposal that our colleague is asking us to vote for. The majority of witnesses who addressed this question while appearing before the Senate and the House of Commons agreed that jurisdiction should rest with the court.

Finally, does he not believe that the Parole Board would be placed in an untenable position if it were now expected to authorize the release on mandatory supervision when it found on earlier Parole Board hearings that there would be an "undue risk" to society? As my colleague knows, people who have been refused parole after one term may have to go through two terms of their sentences and will then have to be reviewed by the same parole officers. Does that not put them in an untenable situation? Why is it that my colleague is so opposed?

That is why we are here today. We are not here today because we think society is going to explode, as the former Solicitor General commented. Canada is not living with a time bomb. It is an extraordinary analogy, but it is not according to fact. Why is my colleague afraid of letting the judiciary decide on a decision taken by the Parole Board which may have already decided earlier to refuse release after one term?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has, I believe, put three questions to me. I hope I have them right. I will try to deal with each one of them.

The first one he dealt with was the question of the Senate and the Senate's position with respect to this matter. The Hon. Member is well aware, first of all, that between whatever happened in 1982 and 1983, there was a federal general election. There was a new Parliament elected, a new Government elected. In my view, at least in part one of the reasons for that was that the public felt it was time that there was more emphasis placed on the protection of the public than there had been in the past and that the criminal law, the judicial system and the legal system should be tightened up.

Regardless of what went on in the Senate and regardless of what went on in 1982 and 1983, in my view, what is going on today is a reflection of the views of the Canadian public that it is time that the judicial system, the legal system, was tightened up. That is what is taking place.

With regard to the fact that other bodies, other social service agencies, may feel that there should be an appeal to the courts from a decision of the National Parole Board, I indicated in my speech that in my view, the court has already had the opportunity to examine the issue and has made a decision. Every time a person is sentenced to prison, it is a judge in a court who does that. When the judge hands out a sentence, there can be an appeal of that sentence, usually to a provincial court of appeal and then there can be an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

There are at least three opportunities to pass judgment on the length of term that a person should serve in prison. Once that has been done, then there has been a decision. There has been a judicial review. The courts have made their determination of how long a person should stay in prison. What Parliament has been doing is artificially interfering with the term that has been imposed by the courts previously.

As far as the question of what we are here for today is concerned, in my view what we are here for today, and the whole purpose of bringing Parliament back, is to ensure that if we can stop just one more violent crime, this will be worthwhile. It will be a very, very beneficial effort that we have made. In my view, that is what it is all about. That is why I am here today. I hope that is why the Hon. Member is here today, to protect the Canadian people, the Canadian public and, if possible, to prevent just one violent crime.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague made his case for the legislation, in part at least, based upon the inadequacy of the present supervision system. If the Member is that much concerned about protecting the public, why is the Government not acting today in order to improve the quality of the supervision system that affects the vast majority of people who are coming out of prison and who will still continue to come out of prison even after this legislation is passed today?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member directed some questions previously to a former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). The questions that he directed were to the effect that why did the former Solicitor General not act more quickly in dealing with this problem. He is asking today why we do not slow down the process and not do anything until we have improved the mandatory supervision system.

Mr. Keeper: Why is the Hon. Member—

Mr. Redway: Will the Hon. Member just hold his horses and let me answer the question. I will be pleased to do that. Hopefully there will be a little more time and he can ask another question if he wants. As the Hon. Member knows, improving the system is not going to happen just like that. To the best of my knowledge, there has been nothing in the way of formal studies conducted other than perhaps by a professor of criminology here or a professor of criminology there, but there has been very little in the way of formal studies done in relation to our supervision system.

There is, as the Hon. Member knows, a sentencing commission that was put in place by the former Government. It was asked to examine the whole field of judicial sentences and asked to make recommendations so that the House could look at those recommendations and, hopefully, act on them. I hope it does. The Hon. Member knows that that commission was set up some years ago and it has not reported yet. Unfortunately, if we set up today some sort of a study to look at the mandatory release system, it would be a number of years down the line before there were any recommendations made or any improvements made.

• (1640)

What the Hon. Member is asking for in this House, as I understand it, is action and speed. That is what we are doing today. We are putting in place a protection mechanism that will protect the system until there is a chance to examine the entire system and allow these recommendations to come forth from the sentencing commission and wherever else so that we can make those changes that the Hon. Member would like to see. Hopefully they will be the same changes that I would like to see in the system, changes that would tighten it up so that at the same time that we are protecting individual rights we are also protecting society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdedo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we are here today to discuss the procedures by which mandatory supervision can be withheld from inmates. It is important to recognize that this is the basis of the debate, not necessarily the quality of the Bill which was passed by the House of Commons in June. While we believe that there were some inadequacies in the Bill, it was passed and assumed to be adequate by the House of Commons. In the process of considering this legislation, the Senate proposed an amendment.

By recalling the House to consider this Bill, the Government should recognize that this legislation could be passed just as quickly with the amendment in place as it would if this amendment were rejected. Therefore, it makes good sense not to consider the pros and cons or the quality of the Bill, but only to consider the pros and cons of the amendment.

The fundamental question is how we can successfully rehabilitate a truly violent offender at the same time that we provide adequate protection to the public. When the Bill was before the House we contended that it failed adequately to rehabilitate inmates who were moving out into society and at the same time failed in the attempt to protect society. Regardless of what the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) suggests, there have been numerous studies of the correctional system, all of which have highlighted the problem of supervision and training, not only within the institution but in the parole and mandatory supervision process after inmates have left the institution. The lack of meaningful training, educational treatment programs for prisoners, and the shortage of post-release assistance have been established by a number of studies as the basis for the inadequacy of our correctional system.

Therefore, today I am speaking not necessarily to the inadequacy of the Bill but to the inadequacy of the system as a whole. If such meaningful post-release assistance for mandatory supervision is not in place, then the mandatory supervision itself becomes inadequate. While the value of mandatory supervision can be easily demonstrated intellectually, it becomes very inadequate if nothing is done to make the program work.

When a judge sentences an individual to 15 years, the judge knows that five of those years will be under mandatory supervision and that the inmate will spend five years under some kind of meaningful program that will help him become a free member of society. In other words, the judge gives the correctional system five years in which to help the inmate adjust. The point which has been made many times today and has been repeated by all of those who work closely with the correctional system is that the parole supervision programs that are in place are inadequate.

Every time someone is released on parole or mandatory supervision, we save a considerable amount of money because that person is not in an institution. Therefore, it would be a much better expenditure of money to establish a supervisory or parole program that would give greater assurance that people who are released, either on mandatory supervision or at the end of their sentence, are given an even chance of making it in society.

I live in a constituency which has two correctional institutions that are run by the federal Government. There are a number of people who come through those institutions who have no recognition of what society is when they are released. They feel totally alienated, and the first thing they do is to return to the institution as quickly as possible. This can only be blamed on the inadequacy of the supervision and parole programs that are in place.

I suggest that we, as parliamentarians, have a responsibility not only to consider seriously this amendment before us today, but to consider whether it improves the Bill. I am surprised that members of the Government do not recognize that if they thought the Bill was already adequate it would be much better if they accepted this amendment. It would prove to Canadians that we in Parliament have some respect for the rights of individuals, no matter in what situation they find themselves.

This amendment attempts to improve the Bill by saying that if the inmate were able to take his rejection for mandatory supervision before a court, he would be able to defend himself and face his accuser. He would have the right to a fair defence and the right to cross-examine his accusers. If a judge, when handing down a 15-year sentence, applies a 10-year sentence plus five years under mandatory supervision, if the inmate must spend those five years of mandatory supervision in an institution, he should have the same kind of rights he had when he was originally sentenced. In other words, we are increasing his sentence. He was given a sentence of 10 years and then five years of mandatory supervision. If we are increasing his sentence, then he has the right to be represented by counsel and the right to be made aware of the case against him. He has the right to have a defence against his accusers. Those things are all being withheld by this Bill. The small amendment suggested by the Senate at least does something to put in place that kind of recognition of human rights, the kind of justice that we in Canada suggest is the right of every human being.

• (1650)

I want to suggest that we are being shortsighted if we do not accept a good amendment, even if it is being put before us by an institution which I myself would eliminate. I am in a position which I find a little uncertain because I recognize that this Bill was passed by elected representives of Parliament and was changed by non-elected representatives, which is what they call themselves, and sent back to us. That does not mean that what they thought of it was incorrect. It does not mean that they did not improve it. One does not have to be elected to be a good legislator. Regardless of what we think of the Senate, we have to recognize that the approach it has taken in this particular case is adequate and should be recognized as such.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will be brief. I want to deal with three subjects: first, the prerogative of the Senate, second, the rehabilitation of inmates and public protection and, third, the question which has already been asked by many before me, why are we here?

I would submit that the role performed by the Senate with respect to Bill C-67 was a proper one and within its constitutional prerogatives. It did what it was expected to do. It acted as a Chamber of second thought which examines Bills and improves them when it sees fit in what it considers to be the best interests of the country. I suspect, as has already been pointed out by other speakers, that this was not done unilaterally but was done in co-operation with Senators of both Parties who joined hands and produced the amendment to Bill C-67, keeping in mind what they understand are the basic principles which should guide those who would implement this piece of legislation once it is given Royal Assent.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Senate acted properly and within its constitutional mandate. In doing so, it did a service to the country as it has done on a number of other pieces of legislation which have, over the years, been amended in a number of ways, and these amendments have resulted in improvements to Canada's legislation.

The central question at the heart of the discussion today, and that which has motivated all the discussions surrounding Bill C-67 and its predecessors, is the matter of rehabilitation and protection of the public. I would be inclined to think that the two issues are not the subject of polarization or of a pendulum first swinging in favour of the individual's rights and then of public safety and protection. In my mind, they are one and the same. The better the rehabilitation and civil rights of the individuals affected by sentence, the better will be the protection of the public in both the short and the long term.

I would like to quote a few passages from a newsletter published by the Canadian Association of the Elizabeth Fry Society. It is Newsletter No. 16 of the summer of 1986. The Society analyses the Bill before us today and makes a relevant point about Bill C-67 by saying:

> We believe there are no measures in the proposals which give any assurance that the problem of violence is being addressed. The problem is simply being delayed. In short, these measures appear to be politically expedient, with severe repercussions for the over-all federal correctional system, and with little likelihood that they will increase the safety of the public.

It goes on to make another interesting point by stating:

> We are firmly opposed to any practice which removes fundamental criminal justice issues from Parliament as Bill C-67 seeks to do. Issues of liberty are of vital importance and ought not to be left to regulations. It is our view that all matters which affect the length of time a person spends in prison should be subject to the full scrutiny and agreement of Parliament, and be fully laid out in law.

The Society goes on to state:

> Indeed, one of the basic philosophical flaws of Bill C-67 is this refusal to recognize that locking people up damages them, and the longer we lock them up, the worse the damage gets.

That in the end affects the public interest and the protection of the public. The society goes on to state:

> We cannot afford to end the remission system for any prisoner. The concept of remission is almost as old as Canada itself, having been in practice since 1868.
>
> Remission is common to virtually all other jurisdictions in the western world. Indeed, some countries remit as much as one half of a sentence for good behaviour inside the institution.

The Society concludes by taking the position that:

> —the necessary powers to ensure the closest supervision of released prisoners, in order to prevent future incidents of violence as far as possible, already exist. Only 18 months ago, the Solicitor General amended the Parole Act regulations to provide for closer supervision of such offenders after release.

The Society expresses the hope that Parliament will decide not to proceed with this legislative package, namely, Bill C-67, because:

> —it cannot be expected to produce a genuine increase in the long-term safety of Canadian society. It will only exacerbate the misconceptions and problems it purports to address.

In the many interventions today, Hon. Members have tried to strengthen these misconceptions and problems the Bill purports to address. Finally, the Society makes quite an interesting policy statement which I am sure the new Solicitor General will want to consider. It proposes that instead of the superficial measures contained in the proposed legislation, qualitative change in programs and services within prison and in the community be introduced to address the fundamental problems which lead to violence and thereby generally provide greater safety for the public. These changes should be introduced as part of a full system-wide reform which would incorporate the recent, and as yet unfinished, work of the Canadian Sentencing Commission and the Correctional Law Project.

• (1700)

What I like about this newsletter is that it establishes a very lucid and important link between the question of rehabilitation and the protection of society at large. The society understands that rehabilitation depends very much on the way an individual is treated in prison. This is why the amendment proposed by the Senate is so important. It recognizes the civil rights of the individual in prison and gives to the courts, as opposed to a regulatory body, the onus of determining whether or not a certain release is to be permitted in relation to the freedom of that individual. It seems to me that because of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms this particular amendment is one which the Government should heed if it wants this piece of legislation not to be challenged once it is given Royal Assent, if it is given Royal Assent.

Finally, with respect to the question as to why we are here, it is quite clear. That has already been well established by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) and by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) in the course of this debate. I will deal only with the last few months preceding today's sitting. This Bill was introduced in June of 1985, and report stage was dealt with in January of this year. After being given third reading it could have been sent to the Senate, as is the custom with other Bills. However, it was not sent to the Senate. It did not go to the Senate until the last day of our sitting here. It reached the Senate with a number of other Bills. An assumption was made that this Bill would be accepted passively in the Senate and that it would be given the rubber stamp. In the knowledge of the fact that the Senate has been involved in matters of this type in preceding months and in preceding years, that was evidently the wrong assumption to make. The Government did not realize it was dealing with a number of Senators who feel very strongly and who profoundly understand this issue. They want to make a contribution to the quality of legislation which will eventually see the light of day in our country. It was this waiting for the last minute and this misreading of the attitude of the Senators that created the problem.

The House would have been called back to meet again as a result of the fact that the Senate wanted to debate this measure, even if it had not made an amendment to it, since at the end of the debate a week had elapsed and the House had adjourned for the summer. Therefore, the action of the Senate in terms of debating this Bill, which was fully within its constitutional prerogative, would have required our coming back in any event. We are here not because of the behaviour of Senators, which was quite proper, but because of the incompetence of the Government. It did not realize that a Bill given third reading should have been sent to the Senate at that time and not left until the last day before the House adjourned in June when there were a great many other Bills with which to deal. Therefore, this is not an issue of the powers of the Senate. It is an issue of the incompetence of the Government in dealing with its legislative timetable. It did not ensure that the Senate had enough time to deal with a measure of importance that was sent there for deliberation.

The principle of rehabilitation is one that attracts me to this Bill and which has prompted my intervention. It is fundamental for the individual who is serving a sentence in jail and for the safety of the community into which the individual will eventually re-enter. Of course, social programs that will improve the quality of community life from childhood to adulthood have an important and major role to play in this respect. However, that will obviously be the subject of another debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. He described the action of the Senate as appropriate. I am not quite sure of his exact words. However, I know that he used the word "legitimate" in describing its actions. While I support the amendment which is now before the House, I am wondering if the Hon. Member would like to balance his comments in recognition of the fact that the Senate is a non-elected body. Does his attitude that what the Senate has done is a perfectly legitimate action reflect the attitude of the Liberal Party? If by some accident the Liberals were to gain office again, would they take the attitude that the Senate is a legitimate body and that it is quite okay to fill it up with political appointees? Does the Hon. Member not have some concern about the legitimacy of the Senate in that it is a non-elected body?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I thought that my remarks were balanced. I do not know how I could improve on the sense of balance that I attempted to give to them. I remind the Hon. Member that so long as Canadians support our Constitution, which includes the existence of the Senate, the Senate has a role to play, whether or not the Hon. Member approves of it. It is a Chamber of sober second thought.

Mr. Keeper: Liberal hacks!

Mr. Caccia: It has served the country well. If Canadians exert pressure on the Government of the day—on any Government—in favour of removal of the Senate, I am sure the Government of the day would pay attention to that. However, I am not aware of any such pressures being exerted on removing the merits of a non-elected Chamber which performs the role that our present Senate performs.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) will deal in more detail with this particular matter.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just confirmed his attitude that the Senate is a perfectly legitimate body even though it is non-elected. Does his view reflect the attitude of his Party?

Mr. Prud'homme: This is not a debate on the Senate.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to understand why the Hon. Member becomes so upset with the fact that there is a non-elected body which performs a legitimate role. There are many non-elected bodies in this country which perform legitimate roles and which serve the public purpose very well. One day he may see the light and recognize the importance of the Senate in our system.

Mr. Keeper: Is that the Liberal policy?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) in favour of an elected Senate? If the Liberal Party were to come into power would it turn this situation around?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I think the question of the Senate has been debated at length. It is something which will be debated for another 100 years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments is now terminated. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act. In my view the first matter the House should address is why we are here this afternoon. Obviously, there are two schools of thought in this regard. I will outline them briefly. First, it is because of a strategy on the part of the Government, or because of its incompetence. It has nothing to do with the Senate. It has nothing to do with the Opposition. It has nothing to do with delaying tactics or any other issue. It is a government initiative, pure and simple.

Let me deal first with the issue of strategy. We know that the Tories are in trouble. Being the non-partisan person that you are, Mr. Speaker, I know that you have a full appreciation of the fact that the Tories are in serious trouble. They have fallen considerably in public opinion. Very few people will even admit today to voting Tory. Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? The odd person in the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell may have voted Tory and more numerous people voted Tory elsewhere, unfortunately, but these people rarely admit to having done so. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) who is sitting across the way knows that.

• (1710)

The Tories are in very serious trouble and we need only look at major newspapers to see that this is so. Just read the front page of this morning's Globe and Mail, Mr. Speaker. Need I enumerate the headings which describe some of the serious problems the Government is facing right now?

What is the Government's strategy? During recess, Governments usually tend to do better than the Opposition. When the House is in session, the Opposition holds the Government accountable, and that accountability process tends to weigh somewhat on the Government and tends to make the popularity and shine of the Government fade away somewhat. During recess when only cabinet Ministers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can get national coverage and make speeches and when there is no forum in which to have rebuttal from the Opposition, a Government usually looks better. This particular recess does not seem to be doing that for this Government.

What did the Tories do? They decided that although having the House in session is usually bad for the Government, it would actually be better than the present situation with scandals splashed across the front pages of newspapers. They decided to use this to take attention away from what we see in the newspapers. It may be that the Tories decided to recall Parliament as part of their strategy.

Perhaps you think some of the comments I am making are somewhat partisan, Mr. Speaker, as unlikely as that thought might be on your part. There is the odd Tory over there who thinks that way, so let me remind the House of an article in The Gazette of July 24 written by Don Braid who says that the recall of Parliament looks like a ploy to gain votes. I will read to the House some excerpts from the article. The article reads:

> First of all, the government did—or at least the cabinet changed after Mulroney's June 30 shuffle.

That is when this whole business got started. The article goes on:

> It immediately took on a more political look. This bunch is now ready to take advantage of any edge, including the public's fear of wandering criminal hordes.
>
> Deputy Prime Minister Don Mazankowski said Tuesday that public pressure prompted the recall. There was a fear that inmates would be released "who might pose a threat to society."
>
> NDP House Leader Ian Deans charged that Beatty caused this fear with "his attempt to create panic in the land by saying large numbers of unrepentant criminals were going to be charging around the streets murdering and pillaging."
>
> In other words, the Tories created their own market for recall, and then produced the goods. The trouble is there's no evidence that the object of all this fuss—the notorious gang of 54—is worth the trouble.
>
> The Ottawa Citizen revealed Wednesday that none of the 54 was convicted of murder, and that 38—

That was the other figure used by the previous Solicitor General. First he talked about 38 criminals to be released and subsequently he decided to colour it a little bit and call it 54. Nevertheless, let us return to the article. It continues:

—and that 38 have less than two years left on their sentences. Twenty-one are serving minor sentences of less than five years.

The 38 criminals about whom the previous Solicitor General spoke will be released shortly in any event. Need I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that when a person has completed serving his sentence, it is quite normal for him to be released. We are not discussing whether or not people who have committed crimes and served their sentences will be released. That usually happens anyway.

I will say this slowly so that the Hon. Member over there will understand me. We are deciding whether or not there will be a temporary transitional period with some form of supervision for the transfer of an inmate from an institutionalized life to a life on his own.

Where does this leave us? It leaves us with the possibility that this is a strategy to deal with what I consider, with all due respect, to be a phoney issue. I would be the last to accuse the Tories of being incompetent, but if one analyses this matter very carefully, one comes to the conclusion that it could very well be that there is at least an ingredient of incompetence in the Tory Government. Let me elaborate on that.

First, let us go over the history of this Bill. We should start by saying that mandatory supervision has existed in this country and in most countries for a very long time. Mandatory supervision is not a weird scheme that was invented by a Government a year or two ago. It is something that has existed in one form or another for 100 years. Of course, we know that the Government is a little slow, but after 100 years, even it should understand.

After 100 years, the Tories decided on June 27, 1985, to introduce this Bill which they now call very urgent. Do you know when the Bill was introduced for second reading, Mr. Speaker? It was not on June 28 or the day after that. June 27, 1985, was almost eight months after the Government was elected. The Government presented this emergency legislation for second reading on September 12.

Just in case there is the odd person out there who thinks the Opposition delayed the Bill at second reading stage, let me say that second reading stage ended on September 23. Counting weekends, that was only 11 days, and other Bills may have been discussed at the same time. That is good co-operation on the part of the Opposition, and I congratulate my colleagues, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), who are very good spokesmen on these issues, for dealing with the matter so expeditiously. I know that even Tory Members would want to do that.

This important and urgent legislation, as the Government now calls it, should have gone to committee on September 24 since debate ended on September 23. In the unfortunate event that there was a delay, it should have gone to committee on September 25. Do you know when it was referred to committee, Mr. Speaker? It was referred to committee after Christmas. The last committee meeting was held on January 23, 1986. That is the speed with which the Government deals with emergency legislation.

The committee tabled its report on January 29. Of course the committee wanted to be co-operative as well. Do you know when the Government called back the report for concurrence in the House, Mr. Speaker? It was on June 17. Is that the way to deal with emergency legislation?

[Translation]

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have to ask ourselves how sincere this Conservative Government is when it takes such an unconscionable amount of time to deal with legislation it has now qualified as urgent.

The debate on third reading of the Bill in question started in the House on June 18, 1986 and ended on June 26. Some Conservatives are accusing the other Chamber of dragging its feet. Here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. The Bill was presented in the other Chamber on June 27. Debate on second reading of the Bill started on July 2 and ended the same day. The third reading stage in the other Chamber also took place on July 2. How can the Government accuse others of wasting time when it has taken this Government nearly two years to get around to dealing with the issue through the normal process in the House of Commons?

[English]

I am sure I have convinced you, Mr. Speaker, and the majority of Canadians that indeed this is not a situation of the Opposition, the Senate or anyone else committing a mistake or lacking in respect for the authority of the one across the way who thinks he is almighty, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It is either total incompetence or part strategy; maybe it is both combined, maybe it is strategic incompetence.

• (1720)

In conclusion, I should like to refer to a report of May 14, 1986 which was made in the other House. I will not quote it verbatim because I know we are not supposed to do that in this Chamber, but in the opinion of the committee, legislation should reflect the principle in Bill S-32 that the courts rather than the Parole Board should make decisions respecting continued incarceration of inmates. Conservative and Liberal Members of the Senate unanimously indicated that they wanted the courts rather than the Parole Board to revoke the privileges of inmates who were to be released into society.

As the Hon. Member for York Centre and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) indicated so eloquently in the House earlier today, this Party is not saying that there are no cases in which prisoners should remain incarcerated for their full terms. As a matter of fact, the previous Liberal Government wanted to amend the law. What we are saying in the House today is that we should not deny anyone the privilege of appealing to the courts. What are they there for, except to administer justice? We are saying that the Parole Board should be able to make its decision and the individual should be able to appeal to the courts if he or she has a case. To do otherwise is a denial of natural justice. Everyone has said that in the past.

As a matter of fact, not long ago the Supreme Court of Canada addressed a similar issue. At that time it indicated that we should have a process whereby the courts would deal with the matter, and that the National Parole Board was acting outside its mandate when it acted differently.

In conclusion, my Liberal colleagues and I are not against the principles in Bill C-67. However, we want to state clearly that the process which the Senate brought to our attention, a process that was previously brought to the attention of the House and was supported at one time by the Tories, is the correct one. For the Government to pretend today that it needed to recall the House to deal with a Bill, which was only presented at the last minute and upon which the Government had sat for a year and a half, is a little less than honest. I wish all Hon. Members well in the remainder of the summer vacation after the conclusion of this debate.

• (1730)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin).

Mr. Gérin: Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague is confusing several principles in this particular matter. As a practising criminal lawyer for many years, I always had trouble explaining to the general public how someone who had been sentenced to six years in prison could be released after four years and be said to have served his full sentence. In Quebec not long ago we saw, for instance, the case of Captain Marchessault, a police officer sentenced to fourteen years in prison who was released under supervision after a year or a year and a half. And I think people would understand that judges who sentence someone to six years in prison expect inmates to serve the full six years.

So if it is a full six-year sentence and the National Parole Board examines the merits of the case, I can agree with that. What bothers me, Mr. Speaker, are these people who have received a sentence and serve their "full" time, as they say, in other words, four years out of six, when all of a sudden the rules are changed. This bothers me a little, not because of the principle but because of the practical implications. This does bother me a bit, Mr. Speaker. However, I still intend to vote against the Senate's proposal because I think that within our Canadian system, the Senate of Canada cannot ask for a referral of this kind.

I think that the Canadian people would agree that we would save a lot of money, Mr. Speaker, quite simply by abolishing the Senate or changing its vocation altogether. I fail to see what we are doing here when Members elected by the people unanimously endorsed the principles of this legislation which is not perfect—no legislation is ever perfect, but it does not justify recalling Parliament in summer and force it to take drastic steps. Notwithstanding what Liberal and NDP Members may say, I think we ought to consider whether there might not be other ways to take the money allotted to the Canadian Senate and use it for other expenditures which might be a lot more useful to the Canadian people.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will respond briefly to the Hon. Member. First of all, if he wants to abolish the Senate nothing prevents him today or some other day from introducing in this House a motion dealing with the issue. He is quite free to do so. Since it was not done today or until now I can only conclude that it is a new project of the Hon. Member. I am looking forward to the first sitting day in September when the Hon. Member, I am sure, will deal with the matter.

With respect to parole, I find interesting the fact that the Hon. Member would state that he is unable or has difficulty to explain to his constituents that we have a system under which an individual may be sentenced to six years and, for instance, serves only four years and his time is done, according to him. That is not quite right, but I will let it go at that. If he does not like the parole system, why did he not vote against this measure, or why did he not introduce a Bill to abolish parole? We all know that the system will still be there once Bill C-67 becomes law, and indeed I would suggest that all Parties in this House want the system to remain as is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to recall what I said yesterday on radio and television, because I want to make sure the version is the same. I said that if it were up to me, we would be sitting here for quite some time.

Mr. Bernier: You aren't married.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier)—Why these pointless remarks? Either we are here to work or we don't come at all. Our marital or personal status has nothing to do with recalling Parliament. I will go on, and if the Hon. Member wants to interrupt, I will go on that much longer. What brings me here, Mr. Speaker, is the Government's request to hurry things up, and you may have noticed the mood of agitation during this last hour in the House. Everybody is making gestures, cut here, cut there, sit down, stop talking, and this from all sides of the House!

We were called back because of a so-called emergency. What I want to move is that there is no emergency or if there was one, it should have been dealt with long ago. There are no two ways about it.

Second, there is some discussion about the Senate. This is not a debate on whether the Senate should or should not exist.

It is always either or, and I always liked logic. Some people say that we Francophones are not economic wizards, as a certain Minister said not long ago, but we, at least the people of my generation who did their "cours classique", have a reputation for logical reasoning. It is either or: either the Senate exists or it does not. Either we want to get rid of the Senate and we say so or the Senate exists and we let it do its work. My conclusion is that the Senate exists, because since the 21st of the twelfth month of 1984, in other words since December 21, one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight... Eight Conservative senators have been appointed by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and that is his prerogative, I do not dispute that.

So if we go on appointing senators, we also have to let them do their work.

My leader was eloquent on the subject this morning. What we would like the Senate to be is on the record. In any case, Mr. Speaker, it does not make sense for the Government to have this Bill before Parliament for a year and then wait until the very last minute, on June 27, 1986, to throw it at the Senate, as much as to say: Gentlemen, hurry up, we are leaving! Hurry this through tonight, because this is urgent, and in any case you don't count, even if we go on appointing senators, but we want this Bill just the same.

I say, and my leader says and he is right, that in cases where there is a difference of opinion between the Senate and the House, the views of elected representatives must prevail. That is obvious. We were elected. If we really want this Bill to be the way the Government wants it to be, and the way the Government wants to amend it, I think we are going to vote against the Bill, but if that is the position that is to prevail, the will of the elected majority... Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why we should prevent these people who have a lot more time than the Members of this House to think about all these matters... Some senators, and it is not my duty to defend them, but I think that to be perfectly fair, we have the right to say what goes on in both Chambers.

Some senators who have been dealing with the parole issue for years stated that this is not the way to proceed. They already did that in 1983. I will refrain from relating the background facts. It has been done eloquently by my other colleagues, two former Solicitors General, certainly one Solicitor-General-to-be in a future Liberal Government. I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that we must pay close attention to what those people in the Senate, those men and women in the Senate have asked us to do. What did they ask us? They did not ask us to let all prisoners go free, as some Members have so clearly suggested. Hardened criminals roaming the streets—I will get back to this issue in a few minutes if someone will remind me to talk about the former Solicitor General. But, Mr. Speaker, they introduced as most reasonable amendment. They said: We cannot expect Parole Board members who have already dealt with those inmates to deal again with them only to reject their parole application after they have served two thirds of their sentence, to decide whether they should be set free or not.

With respect to the mood of inmates it will be a tragedy. So the senators said: Of course it is a good Bill. Of course we must be strict. Of course we must protect the people, Of course, but we think it would be better if the Parole Board decision were subject to appeal to a judge. There is nothing complicated about appealing to a judge, Mr. Speaker.

Your Honour, your predecessors in the chair had us pass a Bill on parliamentary reform, on redistribution. What is included in redistribution? Provisions which state that the chief justice of each province may appoint a judge. He is the one who decides which judge will sit on each electoral commission. When somebody wants a search warrant—there are lots of them these days with respect to spying and security matters—a panel of judges may decide whether warrants should or should not be issued.

My hon. friend from Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), who is an excellent defence lawyer, is well acquainted with these matters and knows a lot more than I do since he practised law. So I don't see why it would be so terrible and difficult to ask judges in each province who are well-known in their field, whether or not release would be possible on final appeal. So we can either agree or disagree with the Senate.

[English]

You can agree or not with the Senate. That is totally irrelevant. What is relevant is whether it is intellectually acceptable. We say yes. Senators of the Conservative Party in 1983 said yes. Senator Nurgitz said yes to the same kind of argument. Why is it so wrong today, Mr. Speaker?

The Senate decided to make an amendment even though we sent the Bill there on the last day after having had the Bill before our eyes for one year. Why on earth call the House back in the summer, call the staff and call my hon. friend from Beauce who has a wife and children—that is the implication I overheard? Is this so urgent? Well—

[Translation]

This reminds me of the fable of the ant and the cricket. Where were you all this time? What were you doing all year long, if it was so urgent? Why didn't you call us back before? Why didn't you adopt this Bill? So I have to conclude, Mr. Speaker, that there must be—

[English]

There must be other motives, Mr. Speaker. I am allowed to believe that there may be other motives for being called back. I will come to that if someone reminds me. There are two things that I have to deal with: the ex-Solicitor General and the motives.

To be logical, the Senate has put forward an amendment. If it is the wish of this House not to accept amendments from the Senate, we will return the Bill, as you will do, Mr. Speaker, since the Bill is so urgent. Since the Senators are not elected, they should give in to the elected people. This is a very logical series of events that could take place. But as long as the Senate exists, let us stop dumping on it or expecting rubber stamps. Either you have the courage to say that we will abolish the Senate, or if the Senate exists—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): An elected Senate.

Mr. Prud'homme: —or if the Senate exists, the Senate is to work.

My Leader was asked by a member of the NDP where the Liberal Party stands on the question of the Senate. My Leader and the caucus is on record as believing that if the Senate is to exist, we would prefer an elected Senate. That is on record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: When there is a debate, if there is any, I will have certain views to express. I may not, however.

• (1740)

[Translation]

And now about the former Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Now I think it is really too bad— The people listening to us now and the reporters who are looking down are all wondering why we are here and who is right. Mr. Speaker, you know perfectly well, and I'm looking at the people listening to us in the gallery and I know what they are thinking. When a Government comes and says: we are going to clamp down on criminals; don't worry: we are going to take care of this country's security— It is a popular subject, no one will deny that. I see the Deputy Speaker of the House, an eminent criminal expert. I know and he knows that people like to gang up on the underdog and they like seeing criminals used to scare people. That is considered to be acceptable behaviour. I don't like that because I tend to be perfectly frank with my constituents. I tell them: listen, it's too easy to say: "You know, all these criminals who are going to be let loose on the community—", without further explanations. Mr. Speaker, I realize it's very popular to say that, but it is not the answer to the problem we are considering today.

The former Solicitor General has made a specialty of what we in Quebec call scarecrows. In fact, of using scare tactics. I think that is language we can all understand. So what did he say? I would like to recall two statements, one of which you may not remember. There was a time when here in Canada we had terrorism on the brain. It was terrorism here and terrorism everywhere. Remember when the former Solicitor General rose in the House and said: I want to say that starting next August—

[English]

It was last winter that the ex-Solicitor General said, "I want you to know that starting in August we will see about terrorism". My friend was with me in Mexico when we talked about terrorism. It was at the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union. He said then, "I want you to know that we will have a special squad in August". I could not do anything other than laugh. I thought it would be wiser for the then Solicitor General to get up one morning in August and say, "Oyez, oyez, people of the world, I want you to know that as of today we have a special squad to deal with terrorism" rather than give them a few months' notice, saying, "Hurry up, boys and girls, if you have something to do in Canada, you had better do it before August because in August we will have a special squad". I did not choose to go that way. He did. I thought he would learn his lesson. Now I realize that he wanted to become Minister of National Defence. It worked. He is now the Minister of National Defence. There will be no more problems. Terrorists will be dealt with because now we are in good hands with the ex-Solicitor General, now the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty).

What did he say recently? This is what has made me speak like this today. I am not known to be so aggressive. I thought it was the end of it when I heard the former Solicitor General say, "Any further delay endangers the safety and in some cases the lives of Canadians", and warn that, "we are sitting on time bombs ticking away". Canadians listening to that said, "My God, are we in good hands. He is going to do something about it".

The new House Leader is a good friend. I wish him good luck in his job. I will not back off on my friendship. However, I ask him what Canadians are thinking. We are called back here because we are living with a time bomb. If it is true, I am glad to be here and do my duty. This Bill was introduced in the House on June 27, 1985. The Bill was not dealt with until long after that. Suddenly the Government says, "Boys, quick, the Senate, hurry up boys". That was one year later to the day— June 27, 1985 to June 27, 1986.

An Hon. Member: Irresponsible.

Mr. Prud'homme: I do not know if it is irresponsible, but Canadians will judge. There will be many more occasions on which to talk about national defence. I am sure the former Solicitor General will admit that he was not careful when he announced many months ago that he would have a special squad in August. He must at least admit that it was not wise to say that. He should not have alerted the terrorists of the world. We do not want to see them in our land. He should not have said that we will not be able to cope with them until this coming August.

I believe it was wrong. I will let people judge whether he was right. I believe it was an honest mistake. I did not believe the second one, namely, to make people afraid and then say to Canadians, "Don't worry, big Daddy is here".

[Translation]

So, Mr. Speaker, I understand, I was never able to speak any other way than to speak with—When I believe—Do you see the difference between certain political men and women, my dear colleague, the new Quebec caucus president, elected in a very close vote but elected, so I congratulate you.

Mr. Rossi: A former Liberal candidate, a former Liberal candidate.

Mr. Prud'homme: But let us be elegant, I congratulate him—

Mr. Rossi: A former Liberal candidate.

Mr. Prud'homme: Let us be elegant, I wanted to congratulate him.

Mr. Rossi: A former Liberal candidate, they did not want you.

Mr. Prud'homme: Please. I was about to—

Mr. Rossi: They did not want you, you were not good enough for us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

[English]

Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor. He has another three or four minutes.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I was about to congratulate him. I am forced to conclude. What brought us back here this summer? So I thought about it, I thought about it. I said: It could have been done before. We scared the people, we showed we were tough—I am talking about the Government, I would not want to make a mistake. So I said: Well, now, there must be another reason. Quite obviously, Mr. Speaker, with a man as nice and charming as the new House leader, when we compare him—because you know everything is relative—to the one who was there before, he has to display not only a new face but also a new Government, a new mentality, something elegant, something soothing, so they said we will be back on September 8. But it does not make sense, we should not return with such a Bill which is awkward and embarrassing, because maybe my colleague from York North—Weston will decide—

An Hon. Member: York South—Weston.

Mr. Prud'homme: York South—Weston.

[English]

My colleague for York South—Weston—Mr. Nunziata—the time will come when we humanize this institution and refer to each other by name. It is ridiculous to call each other by the names of our constituencies. However, that is the rule. They knew that in September they would convince even me as well as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). They are lucky that today the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) and the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) did not participate in the debate. They expected that to take place in early September. Since they want a new order of the day, they had to get rid of that this summer. I believe that is the reason we are here.

The House would have been better ordained under the ex-leader of the House of Commons. We all know who he is. We hope he will relax now. He no longer has to do a hatchet job on everybody. If he would have ordered the House differently, that Bill would have been dealt with a long time ago. If this Bill is as important as the Government say it is, it would have been sent to the Senate. The Senate would have returned the Bill here with the amendment. We would have said that it is unacceptable to a majority of this House. The Bill would have been returned to the Senate, as it will be done today, with the message "Sorry, you are not elected, we are, we want that Bill".

This is useless. I have tried to put forwad the true reason. Let us not fall into the trap of saying that this Government cares more than we do about the protection of Canadians. We care just as much for the protection of Canadians.

An Hon. Member: We care more.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will not fall into the trap of saying we care more. We do care equally. We care for the protection of Canadians. We must not say to Canadians that people in the two Parties on the opposition side of the House care less than the Government. If the House business had been better ordered, we would have worked in a more orderly fashion and this would have been done a long time ago.

• (1750)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, like everybody else, I would have liked to take part in the debate, but considering that everyone says this is urgent . . . First of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on his exposé, and I think all my colleagues and my leader have clearly shown that we were called back today strictly in an attempt to save the face of the Prime Minister following a drop in the polls and to make public opinion forget all the scandals this Government is struggling with. However, I would appreciate some comments by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, in connection with his exposé on the former and the present Solicitor General, and his premise that they had tried to scare Canadians by alluding to the possibility that there were criminals that might be released without consent. So I would like to know what he thinks of the fact that at the very moment these two people were trying to scare Canadians, five recognized criminals in a Canadian penitentiary did not bother to wait for this legislation and escaped through the sewer mains, and that these two Solicitors General did nothing to try and reassure Canadians. So I would like to hear the Hon. Member's comments on the subject, namely whether what we have been doing today is just a whitewash, while the Government has failed to do anything about these real incidents.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is obviously right when he says that urgent measures should have been taken. And it would be interesting to know, and in fact a Member of the majority, and I don't want to embarrass him but he is from Quebec, from the Montreal area, and as I was saying, this Member asked or is going to ask the Solicitor General what measures he intends to take because this is very important. People are a lot more concerned about matters like these. These are the real issues. I want to thank you. This is an argument I completely forgot to bring up, but time is running out and I'm getting signals that we have to leave and that we have to hurry up. But I know one thing and that is that we all know what internal investigations are like. The important thing is that we know the facts. You are absolutely right. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who always goes straight to the practical aspect of an issue. He has an intuitive flair for this and I think he is right to believe the Solicitor General could have made some kind of announcement on this matter. It is too bad, but I would have liked the former Solicitor General, and it is too bad he is no longer our Solicitor General, but what worries me is that he is now Minister of National Defence. We will have to watch him, mark my words.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion in the name of the Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher).

Mr. Kelleher moved:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, because this House believes that the National Parole Board is better structured and experienced to deal with all matters of fact relating to the prediction of violent behaviour and that public safety is properly preserved through decision-making being kept with the Board.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Kelleher) which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Kelleher) agreed to.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to order made earlier this day, this sitting is suspended to the call of the Chair.

At 6.25 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 9.55 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate does not insist upon its amendment to Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, to which the House of Commons has disagreed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa,

24 July 1986

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 24th day of July, 1986, at 9.50 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to a number of Bills.

Yours sincerely,
A. P. Smyth,
Deputy Secretary,
Policy and Program.

Royal Assent

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable Deputy to Her Excellency, the Governor General, that this honourable House attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber.

Accordingly, the Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski) with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (2200)

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act—Chapter No. 42.

Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code—Chapter No. 43.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 10.07 o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order made earlier this day, the House stands adjourned until Monday, September 8, 1986, at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 10.07 p.m.

The Thirty-third Parliament was prorogued by Proclamation on Thursday, August 28, 1986.
