GENERAL NOTES AND NEWS

Chief of Police Stewart, of Hamilton has resigned.

A man recently asked in a drug store for a box of rough diamends, but the druggist knew no such remedy. After much parley the druggist found that his customer wanted Parsons' Purgative Pills. He says, "That's the only fit name for 'em."

A German judge is to be placed on trial for forging an election document.

BAIRD'S FRENCH OINTMENT cures Itching of the scalp, or any Eruptions thereon, it stimulates the growth of the hair, a small quantity applied to the head of children keeps them in a clean and healthy condition.

If your child is suffering from worms, we would recommend you to give at once Dr. McLeans Vegetable Worm Syrup, it is not only a safe and effectual remedy, an exceedingly pleasant one.

M. De Lesseps will attend the inauguration of the Bartholdi Statute in New York.

For the benefit of our readers we give this week a sure cure for colic or belly ache in horses. To one bottle Johnson's Anodyne Liniment add same quanity of molasses and same quanity of water, and pour down the horse's throat.

In Good Reputo

James McMurdock, writing from Kinsale; says: "B.B.B as a remedy for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, has an excellent reputation in this locality. I have used it, and speak from experience, as well as observation. It is the only medicine I want, and I advise others afflicted to try it."

Rochefort has finished a play founded upon a fanciful version of the Rossa invasion of Canada.

In a Dangerous Condition

Any man, woman or child is in a dangerous condition when neglecting a constipated state of the bowels. There can be no perfect health without a regular action of this function. Burdock Blood Bitters cure constipation by imparting a healthy tone to all the secretions.

The religious agitation between Hindus and Mohammedans, at Delhi, is daily gathering strength.

A Speedy Cure

As a speedy cure for Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Diarrhœa Colic, Cramps, Sick stomach, Canker of the stomach and the bowels, and all forms of Summer Complaints, there is no remedy more reliable than Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Dealers who sell it, and those who buy it are on mutual grounds in confidence of its merits.

France is said to be proposing a European conference for the purpose of ousting England from Egypt.

Fatal Attacks

Among the most prevalent fatal and sudden attacks of diseases, are those incident to the summer and fall, such as Cholera Morbus, Bilous Colic, Diarrhœa, Dysentery etc., that often prove fatal in a few hours. That ever reliable remedy Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, should be at hand, for use in emergency.

Highest Praise

The well known drug firm of N.C. Polson & Co., of Kingston, writes that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has long been considered the best remedy for Summer complaints in the market, and adds that their customers speak in the highest terms of its merits. Wild Strawberry is the best known remedy for Cholera Morbus, Dysentery and all Bowel complaints.

Three earthquake shocks occurred a Summerville last Thursday night and one at Charleston on Friday morning.

A Modern Miracle

In a recent letter from R.W. Dowton, of Deloraine, Ont., he states that he has recovered the worst form of Dyspepsia after suffering for fifteen years; and when a council of docters pronounced him incurable he tried Burdock Blood Bitters six bottles of which restored his health.

Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil, with Hypophosphites.

For Lung Troubles and Wasting Diseases. DR. J. SIMONAUD, New Orleans La., says: "Scott's Emulsion is the finest preparation of the kind ever brought to my notice. In the Protestant Episcopal General Convention in Chicago on Monday, at motion to change the name of the Church to "American Catholic Church" was lost by 143 to 94.

Liberal Meeting!

On Thursday evening next, 21st inst., there will be a public meeting in the Chatham Skating Rink, under the auspices of the Northumberland County Liberal Association. It will be addressed by Hon. L. H. Davies of Prince Edward Island, and also, it is hoped, by A. A. Stockton, Esq., M P P., Geo. V. McInerney, Esq. and others. Our people generally should not miss this opportunity of hearing able speakers on the political issues of the day.

The Franchise.

The Toronto Mail—which was, until a few weeks ago, the leading organ of the Conservatives and the chief press exponent and defender of Sir John A. Macdonald's protean policy—has of late become professedly independent. Among its other changes of base it is now in favor of 'manhood suffrage,' whatever that may mean in its dictionary of political definitions. Assuming that it means something which may remove from the statute book and memory of the country the complex iniquity known as the Dominion Franchise Act, which now disfigures the one and offends the other, it will not be amiss to enquire what sagacious spirit of progress, or perverse one of policy is inspiring the Mail to be wise after the event. Why did it and the other members of the Government orchestra, while playing to the tune of 'pap' not advise Sir John to distinguish his radical legislation on the franchise with the merit of manhood — and not indianhood—simplicity? The law that is now in force is crude, crooked and expensive to operate, while it is based on no principle of property, understanding or morality in man, woman or indian. Its eccentricities and artificial provisions only tend to make it an instrument of injustice, discrimination and oppression in the hands of bosses, managers and partizans, who thrive and find profit in proportion to the corruption of their surroundings.

If the privilege to vote were once for all and, without pretence, dropped to the line of essential manhood, and, for that matter, womanhood also, we would just know where we are and the exact nature of our anchorage. The simple conditions of being twenty-one years of age, not an alien, of at least one year's residence in the constituency, able to read and write—the proof of which being the personal writing and correct spelling, in a register beside the box, of the name under which the voter ballots—also providing that the voter has been previously registered in accordance with some unobstructed and rational mode of registration and, last, not least, that he has not, within a year been guilty of any punishable crime against society, been the inmate of a lunatic asylum or the recipient of what is called charity, would be intelligible and reasonable safeguards quite sufficient, vastly cheaper and more satisfactory than the present cumbersome Act. It would, besides, give us much purer and wiser constituencies. Simplicity in a law is prima facie evidence of its being workable and just; but when it is snaky, ingenious and construable this way and that at the option of interested, hungry or vindicative expediency, it becomes the spring of rebellion, even among the most loyal, and is as intolerable to common sense, as ignorance or a snob in office.

It is to be hoped that those who are soon to assume control of the affairs of the Dominion will, as one of their first acts, purge the statute book of the Franchise Act which has already, in its first year, cost the country over half a million dollars. Let the law which deals with so wide and general a matter as the franchise be got down to the "hard pan" of society, from which there can be no appeal. Let it be sealed with the seal of finality, at the same time that it ceases to be the resort of political "fads." The United States begun low, on the basal fact of respectable manhood and naturalization, and it is open to the people of that country to raise the scale should they find it desirable. But we began high—away up in family compacts and landed estates—and now, like the sniffling pharasee, are beginning to take the lowest seat at the political banquet, among Indians, Chinamen and the vicarious muster-roll invented at Ottawa as a substitute for what an honest policy would have provided and an honest administration accepted without fear. Our voters' lists, now, aside from the complexity on which they are based, present the appearance of Chinese puzzles, with their numerical references, addenda, corrections and obliterations. They look more like the parade-state of a decimated army than new registers of freshly organized battalions—like the expiring list of a Waterloo pension-roll, rather than the record of living men actively interested in the good government and future of the country.

Prospects of an Election.

An Ottawa despatch of Monday last to the St. John Globe says.—"There no longer remains a doubt that every preparation is being made for a general election. The Government candidates have been warned by Sir John to go to work in earnest, stump the several constituencies and those who are assured they are safe are to lend a hand in other counties. The next week or two will disclose some important news as regards the approaching campaign.

"While reports received from all parts of the Dominion are favorable to a grand liberal success, the party should not be any the less active on that account."

A New Home Rule Measure.

The London Daily News says it is enabled to state that the Committee of the Cabinet is preparing a Bill to establish four National Councils to represent the provinces of Ireland. The Bill differs from Mr. Gladstone's Bill chiefly in the omission of provision for a legislative body at Dublin. With this exception the Bill fully meets the aspiration of the Home Rulers in regard to transferring to local bodies the direction of Irish affairs not dealt with at Westminster. The Government has secured for this Bill the heavy support of Lord Hartington and Mr. Chamberlain. Mr. Gladstone was consulted in the matter. The News expresses the belief that Mr. Chamberlain is the real author of the scheme, and that the Parnellites will reject the Bill with contempt.

Commenting editorially on the Bill The News says:—"The Government are sanguine that they can carry it. It is possible that many Liberals will support the measure as a welcome instalment. If the Bill passes all the world will know that Ireland owes it to Mr. Gladstone's bold initiative, and to that alone."

A Political Bigot.

The Telegraph, referring to Hon. Thos White, Minister of the Interior and a charge recently made against him says.—He once admitted that "political exigencies" might furnish a ground of defence for untruthfulness, and the denial made by the minister in the matter of the Riel portrait seems to have been a case of "exigency." His denial of the facts was first contradicted by Father Bardau and others, but more recently a solemn declaration as to the occurrence has been made by Mr. W. T. Anthony, an elector of Haldimand. This solemn declaration was made and signed before James Mitchell, J. P. at Cayuga on 18th September, and sets out among other things that Mr. Anthony as an elector of Haldimand, and voted at the last election there, and has also voted at each election since confederation; that he is the owner of 125 acres of land near Cayuga; that he was present at the meeting held in Cayuaga court house and addressed by Hon. Thomas White on 31st August, 1886, and that at this meeting—

Hon. Thomas White, in the presence of all those there and then assembled, in the midst of his speech, did show a picture of Louis Riel with a rope around his neck, and did there and then say publicly:—

We leave our readers to judge for themselves of the motives which prompted Mr. White's incendiary act, and his subsequent denial of what he had done.

An Interesting Subject.

Perhaps only a few of our readers have read Count Tolstoi's book, "My Religion," so that it would be useless to review an unknown work of remarkable merit, in which the writer has taken the world into his confidence in a matter of deep and solemn importance and which is the most radical one of social and individual life.

The Toronto Mail discussed the book and its meaning some time ago, and now the New York Tribune treats the same subject in a sympathetic, yet dubious way.

It may be true that Count Tolstoi has erred in attempting to give outward and social effect to an inward and spiritual relation which can only be completed in another sphere. He has however, touched the hearts of thousands who are refreshed to think that the Sermon on the Mount has a meaning and that its doctrines are not visionary and the motive-power of an ideal state, but are essential to a Christianity that deserves the name. The Tribune's article is as follows:—

TOLSTOI'S EXPERIMENT.

Recent statements about Count Tolstoi are to the effect that in his efforts to put his life in accord with what he believes to be his duty as a Christian he has stripped himself of his fortune and reduced his scale of living to that of the peasants around him, occupying himself in common hard labor and tasting poverty and hardship in all things. It is no doubt a difficult and delicate undertaking to pass judgment on questions of individual duty. The course that a man determines upon must generally be aligned by the aid of his own lights, and the reasons which control him can for the most part be clearly perceived by him alone. But the case of Count Tolstoi is exceptional. He has taken the world into his confidence by his books, which comprise his autobiography and which furnish the history of his psychic development. In "My Religion" he has shown how strongly the Christian socialism of the early church has taken hold upon him. It is obvious that he is now trying to apply the ideas shown forth in that remarkable work. The question, however, is whether the renunciation he is attempting is not a renunciation rather of beneficient powers than of individual advantages; whether in fact his course is not calculated rather to deprive his followers of a valuable stimulus than to supply them with a worthy example.

As a writer Count Tolstoi has unquestionably been useful to his country and his time. His ingenuous, candid and penetrating self-examination has interested and moved the world strangely, the freshness and force of his humanitarianism have surprised an absorbed and busy generation into wholesome and pregnant reflections. By his revival of the spirit which prevailed in the dawn of Christianity he has forced attention to the startling divergences which have been made from the primitive faith and practice. The simplicity, earnestness and single-mindedness of his discussions have endowed them with a fascination quite unique. In a word, the author has become a real power, active for good, an intermediary between the dangerous extremists of the day, an advocate of a kind of fraternity involving no anarchy, a kind of social revolution requiring no blood-shed. The work to which he put his hand was a great one. It needed to be done, and there was no one else either able or willing to do it. Incalculable good might be produced by the publication of such books as "My Religion." What else was there for the reformer to do? A personal renunciation occurred to him, and it has seemingly determined his future. He will be no better off than his former serfs. He will share the life of the day laborers. Will he not in so determining reduce himself, from a position of positive usefulness, to one of relative impotence?

There is but one renunciation which is wholly justifiable, noble and great. It is that which sacrifices self for the good of humanity. The ascetic, the anchorite, reverse the true principle. They sacrifice humanity to self in harboring the delusion that safety can be guaranteed by the cultivation of egoism, no matter how disguised. Tolstoi as a teacher, employing his intellectual powers, his luminous analytic gift, the instructive experiences of his personal career, to guide and elevate and stimulate his fellow-countrymen, was an example of energy wisely applied and thoroughly utilized. He was then doing the best of which he was capable. He was emphatically the right man in the right place. But Tolstoi masquerading as a proletarian, suffering hunger and filth and exhausting menial labor, presents a painful, an irritating, an altogether unedifying picture. As a laborer, a mechanic, he has neither mission nor meaning, unless his significance be the melancholy one which attaches to all attempts to level down instead of leveling up. He has thrown away his advantages, his opportunities for usefulness. To satisfy a personal fantasy he has abdicated the office of a national benefactor. In permitting self-hood, under whatever plausible representations, to dominate his action, he has derogated from the broad and generous maxims which, when more clearly sighted, he derived from meditations upon the Founder of Christianity. Let us hope that his present illusion will fade and that he will return to literature. He is too good and valuable a man to adopt the "set gray life and pathetic end."

THE ST. JOHN "JURY" artist would be in danger of a broken head if Hon. A. G. Blair were a man to take offence at having a picture of John L. Sullivan printed as that of the "leader of the Local government, New Brunswick."

AT MONCTON, on Monday evening last, the conservatives and general public listened to speeches by Mr. Wood who represents Westmorland at Ottawa, and Hon. Messrs. White, Thompson and Foster—three members of the Dominion government—who endeavored to counteract the effect of the addresses recently delivered in the same place by Hon. Messrs. Pipes and Davies and Messrs. McInerney and Stockton. The Liberals are perfectly satisfied with the results all round and the Conservatives realise that their party is fighting a losing battle.

Education in Boston.

There is much sentimental talk on the eight hour question affecting strong, brawny, muscular men whose work is largely in the open air. Shall no sympathy be extended and no reform inaugurated in behalf of our children and youth with delicate organisms, shut up in heated rooms, and overtaxing their brains from ten to fourteen hours a day (including home study,) and who breathe pure oxygen but a few hours at the most, out of the twenty-four?

Recently, at a Boston dinner-table, a gentleman, talking on this subject, turned toward his boy (fourteen years old, but as small as many boys of ten) and said; "My boy is required, beyond his regular lessons to morrow, to give an intelligent idea of the tariff question, the Chinese question, the silver question and the slavery question. On the tariff question he is to tell when, and under what administration it was first discussed, and to give the date of every amendment to it, with some related facts. This is simply ridiculous," he added, "and these boys will go home from school at four o'clock, and instead of going out of doors to play, will be hunting up all these things. But what can we do? We must take them out of school or conform to the regulations,"

Now we say such intellectual crowding of children is not only ridiculous, for children could not digest such questions, but more than that, it is wicked. We hope that there may be repeated meetings of collegiate alumnæ, and those who have authority in the schools, not only discussing physical training in the schools, but out door exercise out of school, until so large an amount of common sense may be developed as to do away with much of the nonsense now in fashion.—Standard.

Crowfoot the Indian.

The great Blackfoot chief, Saponiaxo, alias Crowfoot, arrived at Montreal last week with his brother Nemokeslestamik, alias Three Bulls, and Mr. L'Heureux, of the Indian Department, who acted as their interpreter and the Rev. Father Lacombe who had met them at Ottawa. The chief was received by the Rev. Messrs. Primeau and Racicot. The visitors were immediately driven to the Richelieu Hotel. As the crowd were lifting their hats and cheering Crowfoot he felt perplexed and asked Father Lacombe how he was to return this novel compliment. The missionary told him to bow and take off his hat. This he did, his first attempt being rather awkward. His companion held a fan and saluted him by hiding his face behind it, giving

At the hotel the pressmen were introduced to Messrs. Crowfoot and Three Bulls. The two chiefs were then shown to the best room in the house, to prepare for breakfast. On entering the rich bedroom, elaborately upholstered, with fine carpet, rich furniture, large looking glass and a bed surmounted with a splendid crimson canopy, Crowfoot seemed somewhat amazed. He took to the looking-glass especially, and left it with much regret. A special table was prepared for Crowfoot, Three Bulls, Father Lacombe and Mr. L'Heureux. Judging by the way in which dish after dish was emptied, the redskins relished the ordinary hotel breakfast. After the first course, Crowfoot was somewhat surprised that something else followed—but went to work with a will, until finally he exclaimed,

"I AM TIRED!"

After breakfast, a Witness reporter had a short conversation with the chief in his room, Father Lacombe and Mr. L'Heureux acting as interpreters. Crowfoot said that he felt rather tired in his legs, having been sitting in the cars for such a long time. In telling the visitors he had been on the train during seven consecutive days and nights, he used as many signs as words, indicating the numbers with his fingers, showing the nights by resting his head on the sofa and the days by a movement of rotation with his hands, accompanied with the exclamation, 'Poof, poof!' The great chief expressed himself as quite enchanted with everything now before him, and said he was longing to see some more. Being asked by the reporter

WHAT HE THOUGHT OF THE REBELLION,

he said: "Having seen, years ago, what sufferings Sioux rebels on the American side had to undergo, I was not disposed to run the same risk for myself and the tribe. Moreover, I had no complaint to make against the white men, and I am glad that I promised them my friendship and kept it. The others tried hard to get me on their side, and they often sent me tobacco for that purpose, but I always returned their tobacco."

Father Lacombe here added: "You can safely say that there never was in the whole Dominion, as loyal an Indian as Crowfoot, or one more beloved by his subjects or who has rendered more valuable service to the white men."

The two Indians now expressed a desire to smoke, and the strangers took their leave, but not before a Caughnawaga Indian came in and shook hands with his brethren of the far North-west, whom, however, he could not understand. To describe him in brief, Crowfoot is a man of medium height, 58 years old, with dark, a well pronounced, aquiline nose, thin lips very prominent cheek bones, and long and heavy dark hair. His countenance is not fierce, but smiling and attractive, though determined. His dress is composed of a variety of garments, of various colors. In his principal cloak or scarf the blue tint predominates, there being various designs in needle and bead work. This garment is adorned with a large number of ermine tails, which are a special indication of his high dignity. His vest, or jacket, is made of the skin of an antelope, and his legs are, of course, encased in the traditional leggings. What distinguishes him especially, however, is a hawk's head which he always carries as the emblem of his dynasty. This he holds from his father, who himself received it from his ancestors, and thus it is to go from generation to generation. The great chief wears a slouch hat, on the top of which is a large feather, and a whistle and tooth-pick and held by the string which surrounds this hat.

PIERCING AND INTELLIGENT EYES,

AS A SCEPTRE,

Crowfoot carries a sheaf of sharp-pointed arrows, of which he seems to be extremely jealous, and also an eagle's wing. He wears a gold ring with an Australian diamond, given him by Lord Lansdowne. On his neck are three medals; the largest bears the date 1877, and was given to him on the occasion of his treaty with the Government. Another he holds from the Marquis of Lorne.

Three Bulls is 47 years old, and wears about the same dress as his brother, except that red predominates, and his headgear is a kind of fur cap surmounted with feathers,

Terrible Steamboat Disaster.

A St. Louis despatch of 6th says.—The steamer La Mascotte blew up and burned yesterday but it was impossible to obtain anything like a detailed story of the horrible affair until to-day, and even now half the horror cannot be described nor can a fully accurate list of the victims be given. Just how many lives were lost is not known, probably never will be known, as there is nothing of the boat's books and papers left by way of record. From the many and various stories told by those who were on the ill-fated steamboat, each contradicting the other in some material feature, due largely to the confusion inevitable on such a terrible occasion, your correspondent has condensed the following recital of the disaster:—

La Mascotte was a new boat, built this spring, at Evansville, Ind., where her owners, Messrs. Dowland & Perkins, reside. She was not a large boat, but was elegantly furnished and equipped, having been built purposely for the short packet trade between St. Louis and Cape Girardeau. She has been running in that trade ever since her completion, making tri-weekly trips, and literally coining money for her owners. She left here last Monday evening, and started from Cape Girardeau on the return trip about ten o'clock Tuesday morning. At that time there were on board about twenty-five passengers, nearly all of them living at Cape Girardeau or in the vicinity. The crew of the boat consisted of about forty persons, all told. There has never been the least defect descovered in the boat's machinery, and when she started up the river from Cape Girardeau there was not the least indication of anything wrong. She had proceeded up the river about twenty-five miles, and at noon landed at a point known as Neely's Landing. After about five minutes' stop she backed out from the landing and was just straightening up the river, both engines working and a full head of steam on, when there was an explosion.

THE EXPLOSION.

In strict steamboat parlance, she did not "blow up," as the explosion did not demolish the upper works; she simply collapsed a flue. Captain Thompson, the commander, was on the hurricane roof, and pilots, Gereau and J. G. Handlon, were in the pilot house at the time, Handlon at the wheel.

"A steam pipe has burst," shouted the Captain. "Run her to the bank." As he said this he sprang to the stairway to descend. By this time Pilot Geareau was by his side. The confusion below and the hiss of escaping steam and shrieks and cries of the injured and frightened people warned them that sometning worse than the bursting of a steam pipe occurred. Both men begun throwing life perservers, cork jackets and floats to the people, and shouting to them to put them on. This only added to the confusion. In fact from all statements obtainable, the terrible results of the disaster are due to the fact that there was no cool headed man to act right and promptly. The shout of "Fire!" and the appearance of smoke and flames five minutes after the first explosion increased the panic, and converted the seventy-five persons on board the vessel into so many howling maniacs. Meantime the collapsing of the flue had let the steam out of the boiler, and the boat was completely enveloped in a death laden cloud of vapor.

SCALDED AT THEIR POSTS.

Half the deck crew, including one mate, watchman, deckhands and roustabouts, were congregated on the forecastle, while the other half on watch were in the engine room in the rear of the boilers. The force of the explosion was backward, and the entire party in the deck rooms were prostrated and horribly scalded or blown overboard.

Meantime the wreck was drifting down stream completely at the mercy of the current. The Captain made an effort to lower the lifeboat, but fire had enveloped the afterpart of the boat and spread as far forward as midship, thus preventing the yawls or lifeboat being lowered.

ON A FLOAT.

The big "stage" plank was then launched and an effort made to put the women and children on it. The big "stage" would easily have held all of them had there been less confusion or had there been a few level-headed and clear minded men to direct things; but as it was many stepped off, while others were crowded off and sank to rise no more.

DROWNED OR BURNED.

A few clung to the float and were rescued by people who put out from shore with skiffs. Many jumped overboard from the boat and were drowned, while many others were so badly scalded as to be unable to escape the fire that consumed the after half of the boat, and thus met the most horrible of fates. The wreck drifted down about two miles and finally sank near the Illinois shore. Then the towboat Eagle, which was just below and in plain view, steamed up to the wreck and took on board as many as possible of the victims and conveyed them to Cape Girardeau, arriving about dark last night. The wounded were cared for and the dead were taken in charge by proper persons.

SUCCORING THE INJURED.

Rescuing parties were immediately formed, including doctors, and, equipped with things thought necessary to minister to any that might be found in the vicinity, started for the scene of the wreck.

Several of the crew and passengers of the boat were found in the houses of farmers residing along the river near where the accident occurred and their wants ministered to.

THIRTY-FIVE LIVES LOST.

It is still impossible to tell just how many lost their lives, but Captain Thompson says he thinks thirty-five. He makes his estimate after counting the passengers and crew known to be saved. Of those saved many are terribly injured and will die. Roy Perkins, the chief clerk of the boat, a brother of one of the owners, was seen to go to the office of the boat, take the contents of the safe, consisting of money and valuable papers, and secure them about his person and then jump overboard. He swam some distance, but had evidently inhaled scalding steam or received injuries some other way, for he was unable to reach shore, and after swimming around as though confused went down.

VICTIMS OF THE DISASTER.

A special despatch from Cape Girardeau says the explosion spent its force directly backward into the engine room, and the crew and roustabouts suffered from being scalded by the escaping steam. Eleven of the latter were so terribly burned that huge scales of flesh peeled from their bodies. Six of them have died.

There are in the hospital here fifteen persons all seriously scalded. Of these five must die and three others are beyond recovery.

After the bodies of the killed and injured had been brought ashore they were placed on the steamer Eagle, which brought them to Cape Girardeau, where local and visiting physicians are now caring for them. The register of the passengers was lost, and it is thought that some were drowned or killed whose bodies have not been recovered.

THE STEAMER DRIFTING HELPLESS.

The boat is said to have been under 150 pounds of steam, her usual amount, when the explosion suddenly occurred, blowing the fire in every direction. The utmost confusion prevailed. The pilot turned her toward the shore, but the flames caused him to abandon his post before the stage plank could be lowered. Subsequently the current turned the boat's bow out into the river again, while her stern swung close to the bank, which afforded a means of escape for several who were at that end of the boat, the pilot and one cabin boy getting ashore without injuries or even a wet foot. The stage plank was lowered and many were placed upon it, mostly women and children, who would have been saved had not the smokestack fallen squarely across it, and all who were not killed by it were drowned. Captain Thompson, after doing all in his power to save the passengers and crew, jumped overboard and swam ashore, the boat having by this time drifted fully two hundred yards out into the river. The steamer drifted over to the Illinois shore, opposite Williard's Landing, and sank, the only thing visible at present being her wheels.

SAVING LIVES ON THE LANDING PLANK.

Lew Graham, the second clerk tells the following story of the disaster:—"We had landed at Neeley's and were pulling out, and I walked up stairs and into my room, when I heard a small explosion like that of a sky rocket, and opened the door to the cabin and saw the steam coming into it from the barber shop. I saw the ladies in their cabin and called to them to come forward. I saw fire coming from under the boiler deck and I took the ladies forward to the boiler deck and started down stairs, where Pilot Graveau gave life preservers to them, telling them all to put them on immediately. I ordered the stage plank thrown overboard, which was promptly done, and we put all the ladies on the plank. The rigging broke and the plank swung out. Mrs. L. Seimers jumped into my arms and I landed her on the stage, while I was thrown into the river myself. I swam alongside of the stage and made the men get off so it would bear up the ladies. I then swam to a ledge of rocks and crawled ashore. A man from Illinois with a skiff took the people off the stage and also saved a number that were swimming, but I don't recollect the skiffman's name. He did some noble work, however."

A Lucky Student

Mr. Amaro Arango Bibeiro, who in the last drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery, held in New Orleans on the 14th ult., drew one-tenth of the capital prize of $150,000, is a senior in Tufts College, and resides at 17 Wellington street in this city. When visited by a Courier reporter last week Mr. Bibeiro was in a very happy frame of mind, and expressed himself as being much pleased at his good fortune, as even to a man in well to do circumstances the unexpected receipt from the Adams Express Company of £15,000 is an event that did not happen every day. Mr. Bibeiro is a native of St. Peaulo, Brazil; is about twenty-eight or thirty years of age, and first came to the United States in 1879. Some ten or eleven years ago he, together with his brother, inherited a small Brazilian coffee plantation, but this they soon disposed of and established themselves in their present business, that of railroad and commercial brokerage. His time in this country has been passed at Lehigh University, Penn., in New York city, and at Tufts College, where he is at present making a specialty of civil engineering, and from which he will graduate next June. He has always had great faith in the possibilities and fairness of the Louisiana State Lottery, and when in Lehigh, with a number of other students, was a constant purchaser of tickets, and was rewarded on one occasion while there by receiving a prize of $750. About a year and a half ago he again began investing two or three dollars a month in tickets as he says, he thought he might as well invest his money in that way as in any other. A few months ago he drew five dollars; and finally, on the 14th, a tenth of the capital prize. Mr. Bibeiro expresses himself as perfectly satisfied with his experience, and says the windfall is just what he needs to put into his business.—Boston (Mass.) Courier, October 3.

What was the Splendor of a September Day.

It was a bright day in New Orleans, La., on Tuesday, Sept. 14, 1886, the 196th Grand Monthly (the Quarterly Extraordinary) Drawing of the world-renowned Louisiana State Lottery, when some $522,000 was scattered to all quarters of the globe by the wheel of fortune under the sole care of Gen'ls G. T. Beauregard of La, and Jubal A. Early of Va. Every one wants to know all about it. No 31,583 drew the First Capital Prize of $150,000 (sold in tenths at $1 each;) one was paid through Clark County Bank of Osceola, La, to Geo. W. Fouch there; one to Sen. Amaro Arango Bibeiro, Boston, Mass; one to John Connor, care Cammack & Decker, 28th st., between I and K sts. N. W., Washington, D C; one to Paul Bunker, Oriental Warehouse, First and Brennan sts, San Francise, Cal; another was paid through Wells, Fargo & Co, Bank of San Frantisco, Cal; the others desired their names withheld from publicity. No 3,479 won the Second Capital Prize (also sold in tenths at $1 each;) one to L L Fosse, care of K B Olson & Co, 90 Superior st, Chicago, Ill; one to Mrs J C Sullivan, Chicago, Ill; one was paid to J G Lallande, the runner of N O National Bank for a depositor there; two others were paid to Exchange Bank of Dallas, Texas; the others are desirous of avoiding publicity. No 72,489 drew the Third Capital Prize $20,000; one-half of it ($10,000) was held by Messrs Eduardo Marquez del Pino and Lazaro Vila, No 322 East 13th st, New York city, and the other half by T R Ley, Philadelphia. Nos 58,613 and 72,983 drew the two Fourth Capital Prizes $10,000 each (sold in tenths at $1 each;) to parties residing in Cincinnati, O, Chicago, Ill, Louisville, Ky, and Portland, Dak, &c. &c. The rest went flying about; but the next drawing will occur on Tuesday, Nov 9th, when the Grand Prize of $75,000 may be had for $5. For full information apply to M. A. Dauphin, New Orleans, La.

A GOOD RUN.—Barque "C. S Parnell," Capt. Newman, arrived last week at Port Hawkesbury, N. S., from Glasgow. The run was made in 16 days.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING. — Harvest Thanksgiving Services will be held in St. Mary's and St. Paul's Churches on Sunday next, at the usual hours viz, in St. Mary's at 11 a. m. and 6.30 p. m. and in St. Paul's at 3. p. m. The offerings will be for the Parochial Fund.

FOR BLACKSMITHS, ETC.—Messrs. Vaughan & Bros., St. John, offer a very large and varied stock to the iron trade, including sled-shoe steel, refined iron, horse shoe iron and horse shoes of both summer and winter pattern—the latter being made to prevent snow from "balling" on the foot.

THE DRAMA.—The Pauline Markham Company opened with "Led Astray," at Masonic Hall last evening just as we were going to press. There was a good house and promise of a fine performance. The "Ticket of Leave Man" will be presented to-night and, judging the merits of Miss Markham and her Company in this piece by the flattering notices they have received from the Halifax papers a strong and attractive performance may be looked for.

QUADRILLE ASSEMBLIES.—The opening of the Citizens' quadrille Assemblies, on Tuesday evening, at Masonic Hall, Chatham, was a great success. The decorations of the hall were attractive, the music good, the dancing well sustained and heartily enjoyed and the refreshments entirely satisfactory. These fortnightly gatherings will, no doubt, be very enjoyable and popular.

AGENTS WANTED.—Clement & Co., of 48 Wellington Street East, Toronto, or 81 St. Francois-Xavier Street, Montreal, want a General Agent. They are the exclusive owners of the Schofield Patent Cake Griddle, the Celebrated Emery Knife Sharpener (known as the "Carver's Friend,") the Emery Scythe Sharpener, the Jay-Rye-See Wire Curry Comb, and other Specialities. If you want to make money, write to them at once for an outfit, and to secure what territory you can handle.

LOST IN THE WOODS.—A despatch of 7th inst. to the St. John Globe says,—A party of five men, with two horses, which left Fredericton the latter part of the previous week to go to work in the woods for Mr. Timothy Lynch on the Southwest Miramichi, became lost through leaving the road for a shorter path through the woods. Two of the party named Kincaid and Holmes, left the others when about two days lost, and on 6th struck the settlements, having had nothing but one partridge to eat for nearly four days. The others, with the horses, pushed on in what they thought was the original direction, and had not since been heard of. As they were without food for nearly three days when the other men separated from them, fears were entertained for their safety. Large numbers of men from the neighborhood of the Portage were searching for them, They were two brothers named Sproul and a man named Straight.

PARISH ELECTION.—We publish the cards of Councillors Flanagan and Smith of Chatham to-day, both of whom have decided to offer for re-election. We understand that Mr. Wm. Troy who, last week, announced himself as a candidate has assured Messrs. Flanagan and Smith that he wrote his card hastily and desired to withdraw the inferential charge that they had "axes to grind." His complaint is that the street Commissioner would not open a sewer to drain his tannery, but, for this he should not hold the councillors responsible, as they are not members of the Street and Fire Board, as they should be, and can only remedy the weak spots that may be found in that body each year. Mr. Troy will, no doubt, have his sewer attended to next season, whether he is elected or not. Messrs. Smith and Flanagan being experienced at the Council will be the safest men to sell their sewers, over which they, unfortunately, have little control, when opened, there are other matters of importance much so requiring Municipal attention and attention.

NEWCASTLE SAVINGS BANK.—Referring to the reported irregularities in the Newcastle Savings Bank the Advocate says,—

Owing to a shortage in the accounts of the Collector of Customs here he has been suspended from the duties of his office and an investigation of the books is being held. In the meantime the Customs Department is in charge of Mr. Thomas Crimmen of the Chatham Custom House, and the Savings' Bank department is in charge of the Assistant Inspector of the Finance Department, Ottawa. Mr. McLaren, the Customs Inspector, has been here and inspected his department and everything was found strictly correct. In the Savings Bank department depositors' pass books have been called in and the accounts are being examined to see where the shortage is and the amount, but nothing definite can be known until a final adjustment of the books has been made. Any deficiency will be fully covered, and the government secured against loss by guarantee Company of North America. The late collector is at present very ill at his residence. We think it unwise to make further comments until the investigation has been completed.

A Great Attraction.

The Court Musicians and Walter Pelham from London, England are to appear in Masonic Hall, Chatham under the auspices of No. 2 Division, 73d Battn. on Monday evening next. These performers have had the patronage of Her Majesty, the Queen, the Prince of Wales and others of the Royal Family and are undoubtedly at the head of their profession. We have some knowledge of Mr Pelham and can guarantee that he, alone, is able to keep an audience amused and at the same time profitably entertained for an evening He is a mimic and humorist of great talent and undoubted genius. The combination includes Mr Chas Abercrombie, solo tenor to Her Majesty and late of the Patti Italian Opera Company; Miss Annie Taunton, soprano, from the London Academy of Music Miss Letema, mezzo soprano; Mr Joseph Leach, basso cantante, and Mr H G Hopper, associated for twelve years with the late Sir Charles Benedict, pianist. The appearance of these celebrated artists will be the musical event of the season. Seats can be secured at MacKenzie's.

Chatham and Fredericton.

On the opening of direct telegraphic communication between Chatham and Fredericton Saturday last—the wire being completed along the whole line of the Northern and Western Railway on that day—the following message was transmitted

To His Worship the Mayor of Fredericton

Greetings and congratulations on the establishment of direct telegraphic communication between Chatham and Fredericton. We hail it as an additional tie uniting the north with the centre of the province and hope that it may especially promote the business and social relationships of the two places now so happily connected by rail and wire.

Teachers' Institute.

Northumberland County Teachers' Institute held its tenth Annual Meeting at the Grammar and High School building, Chatham, on Thursday and Friday of last week and we are partially indebted to a contemporary's report for the following notes of the various sessions.—

Mr. Philip Cox made a short address, congratulating the teachers on the educational progress that had been made in the county since he first came to it.

Mr C M Hutchison spoke in favor of taking steps to have a day set apart for tree planting.

Miss McLachlan read a thoughtful paper on "Bad Habits in reading and How to correct them."

Prof. Trembley, a teacher from another county, delivered an interesting address.

The members were enrolled, and then proceeded to the election of officers, with the following result: J. M. Palmer, President; Miss E Hickey, Vice-President; P. Cox, Secretary; Misses Baldwin and Hamilton, additional members of Managing Committee.

Speeches were made by the retiring President and his successor, and the Institute adjourned for dinner.

In the afternoon Vice President Hickey read an excellent paper on Arithmetic, explaining the proper steps for imparting it to the learner, so as to cultivate his intelligence by calling his reasoning powers into action. She laid stress on Analysis, and concluded by saying—"To ensure success we must drill, drill, drill."

Miss McLaughlan, Miss Ella Murphy, Mr. Hutchison, Mr. Anthony, Inspector Mersereau and Miss Millar discussed the subject dealing chiefly with the best way of teaching the child the reason for borrowing and carrying in substraction.

Miss Ida Haviland illustrated, with a class of little ones, her method of teaching A B C pupils to read. She showed them a picture, and then printed its name on the blackboard. After they had learned it she taught them the sounds of the letters of which it was formed, and then the names of the letters.

Inspector Mersereau, Miss Bessie Creighton, Mr. Hutchison, Mr. Cox, Miss McNeil and Mr. Anthony discussed the subject, each speaker throwing some new light on it.

Prof. Trembley, by invitation, addressed the Institute.

The following, which was moved by Mr. Hutchison, was carried unanimously:

Resolved, That in order to develop a taste for the beautiful, and encourage the ornamentation of school play grounds throughout the country, and thereby afford a day of profitable amusement and recreation to the pupils in attendance at said schools, this Institute memorialize the Board of Education to appoint an Arbor Day for this purpose.

Adjourned.

The usual public meeting was held on Thursday evening in Masonic Hall. There was a larger attendance of the general public than usual, as there were, among the speakers announced, a number of "laymen"—citizens of Chatham outside of the teaching profession.

F. E. Winslow, Esq. was called to the chair and briefly referred to the objects of the gathering, making special complimentary reference to the Chief Superintendent, Mr. Crocket, and also to Dr W Brydone Jack, late president of the N. B. University, both of whom were present.

Mr. Crocket was the first speaker of the evening and he opened by eulogising Dr. Jack, to whom, he said, the present Judge King—the father of our Common School Law—had given the credit of being his most valued adviser and assistant in the perfecting of that great measure and of the regulations thereunder. Mr. Crocket then proceeded to speak of the School law as being now established and consolidated, making reference to the improved School houses and appliances everywhere, to the Normal School in its present expanded sphere and surroundings, etc. He said no one complained of the expense save the bachelors and some others who could not, in any case, help grumbling about something. Pupils' school experiences, now and under the old system, modes of imparting instruction, etc, were rapidly and at times eloquently touched upon and a defence made against the cry that the more necessary and practical branches were sacrificed to the so-called scientific studies. Referring to complaints that industrial or technical instruction was not imparted in the schools he cited the fact that industrial drawing was taught, and said provisions were made for industrial instruction as far as the principle of the system would admit. Sewing and knitting, and the principles of domestic economy were provided for in the course, but advantage was not taken of this save in the cities and towns. The course, he admitted, needed some readjustment in this respect. He also expressed the hope that changes would be made in the Superior School course and organization to better adapt them to existing wants. He protested against efforts being made to promote technical at the expense of general education and said the trained hand must be had in order that the skilled hand might be secured. In closing he referred to the labors of the teachers and the necessity for cooperation and sympathy with and support of their important work.

G. A. Blair, Esq., was next called upon by the Chairman and paid a high tribute to the teaching profession. The teacher's vocation was equally important with that of parents and the clergy, for it had to do with moulding the character of the future men and women of the country. It was high-minded men and women who constituted the glory of the state and it was because the teachers had so much to do with the training of these that their vocation was of the highest importance and worthy of being held in the highest honor. He knew that our teachers were a credit to the community and worthy of the interests entrusted to them. He referred to the question of religious instruction in schools and while realising the divided state of religion, that it was unreasonable to expect that any particular doctrines or dogmas could be taught, he saw nothing to prevent teachers from instructing the young in their duty to God, the state, their neighbors and themselves, and the speaker gave a specific and categorical list of these duties which, to his mind, might properly constitute a a common school catechism. He urged liberality in dealing with teachers and said women should be paid as good salaries as men when the same work was required of them. He opposed flogging and thought it might be altogether abolished, but if it was to be administered it ought to be properly done, and not at the time the offence was committed or with any display of temper on the teacher's part. He condemned the present system of inspection, which was inefficient compared with that which preceded it. The inspectors of to-day were just as well qualified for the work, but they were given more work to do than they could be reasonably expected to perform, while the saving of expense effected by the change was only trifling and out of all proportion to the difference brought about in point of efficiency. He could see no improvement in the change by which only one grammer school inspector was provided for and hoped a change in the direction of the old system would be made.

Dr Jack, being called upon next, referred to old acquaintance with Chatham and the improvement in school affairs here, as elsewhere in the last twenty years. He said it was a pleasant and gratifying contrast. There was in the old time a training school in St. John which no teacher was obliged to attend. Teachers' interests were then individual and divided; there was no unity; now they were trained to realise that there was a common and noble purpose in their work and they met, as they were meeting here, with one mind and one purpose. He was glad to see the improvement that had been effected in educational matters in the province, not only in the methods of teaching but in school buildings and appliances. One of our needs, however, was a proper system of higher education leading up to the University and the matter had been proposed, Chatham being spoken of as the location of the school for the North Shore. He strongly urged that Chatham should make an effort to retain her present educational status and improve it, rather than assent to a retrograde policy, He hoped the grammar school would be retained, so that Chatham might not let go its privileges by which it ought to become the educational metropolis of the North Shore. With the teacher it had in its Grammar School and its special advantages in that connection he feared Chatham did not fully appreciate its privileges. Chatham had had a high class of teachers and it should endeavor to keep up its credit in that respect. He closed by complimentary references to the teachers as a body and said if they did their part nobly and well the country would respond to their efforts.

The Chairman next called on Rev. F. W. Harrison, who was seated among the audience, to address the meeting.

Mr Harrison said that unlike a speaker who had already addressed the Meeting, he had when requested to speak here to-night, declined to do so, because it was supposed that the gathering of teachers was like that of a mutual glorification society and if he were to say what he believed—and he wouldn't say anything else—he might not acquiesce in all the nice things said by former speakers. He honored all men for their work-sake. If he saw men in his own profession in love with their work he thought they could not be too highly esteemed or too well paid, and the same held good with regard to teachers. If a teacher was in earnest about and in love with his work he could not be too highly paid, but if he was in the profession merely to make a living out of it one half a teacher's salary was too much for him. He made humorous reference to the flogging question and said he was not a disbeliever in it—when it was judiciously laid on. We were living in an age of developement and he would like to enquire whether it was not possible to worship machinery rather than results. He did not think a boy of the present day had any more senses for the reception and analysis of instruction than the boy of his time yet he could not help thinking that our educationists thought he had, judging by the complicated machinery they operated him with. He introduced the metaphor of handmade shoes as superior to the machinery-produced article to illustrate the point that in many respects the abandonment of old methods for new and doubtful ones of producing the same article was not justified by results. People, he said could not all spare their children long enough at chool to go through the grades and the sources laid down as the machinery of the system and the child who could go to school only a few months of the year could not get what he wanted and what was a necessity of his condition in life. He believed the poor people of the country were not able to support the higher schools, which should be otherwise provided for and at the expense of those who required them.

Mr. J. L. Stewart defended the bachelors who had been charged by Mr. Crocket with grumbling. He hoped Dr. Jack would help Chatham to secure the proposed Academy and also to be made one school district. The union of the districts was essential to the securing of the Academy. He referred to the inferiority of the old system and of the school buildings even in St. John. He said when the Normal School was located there he attended it and obtained his certificate in three days and although he had not previously known anything of book-keeping he mastered all the necessary details in an hour or so and passed a successful examination in that branch. The course of instruction, under the present system, does not make necessary provision for those who have only a limited time to attend school. An objection urged was the multiplicity of studies, but those who made it had little idea of the mind of a child, as variety of studies promoted development. The glory of the present system was that it taught children to think. Teachers were underpaid in proportion to the work they had to do, and they should be appreciated more than those who simply worked with their hands.

Danl. Ferguson, Esq, Collector of Customs spoke in response to an invitation from the chair, saying he had, like Mr Harrison, declined to address the Meeting when asked beforehand to do so, but he would congratulate the Institute on the departure it had made in having outside speakers at the public meeting. It had the effect of attracting a larger attendance. He was not opposed to the use of the rod in the schools, for he must admit that a good deal had been impressed on his memory by it. He was much in favor of the present system, for he was convinced, in his experience, of its efficiency, especially in imparting a knowledge of the classics. There was little cause for the grumbling that had been referred to for the system was efficient and the law one of the best in existence, while with a few changes it could be made as near perfect as possible. After referring to the advantages of the Institute and the faithfulness of the teachers to their duties he said the objections against the prescribed course did not apply in country schools, where the course could be as simple as desired. It was only in the towns where the course must be adhered to. He closed by complimentary reference to the Chief Superintendent.

The Chairman next called for Mr D G Smith who was not on the programme of speakers, but Mr Tweedie, who was among those advertised, was in the audience, near the door and now came forward, regretting that Mr. Smith had been taken for him. He said this was neither the time or place to discuss the school law of the land, but it was a time to give encouragement to the teachers. The new system was much better than the old for everyone knew we had better buildings, better books and appliances and better teaching now then formerly. A good deal had been said of the three Rs, but he would much rather discuss the three Ss—Stumpage, Suffrage and Steamboat Subsidies. The subject, however, was education and he had pleasure in bearing testimony to the faithfulness of the teachers and also in saying he believed they deserved to be well paid. He thought teachers of the third class should not be required to go to the Normal School for a test of their qualification, because it was putting an unnecessary burden and inconvenience upon them, as they could have all the necessary training and examination at the high schools and through the Inspectors There should be something in the way of testing the faculties of teachers for imparting instruction. This did not seem to have sufficient attention from the Board of Education. It was well known that there were persons of excellent scholastic attainments who could not impart their knowledge to others, just as there were some judges who were eminent as lawyers and yet could not present a case so that a jury could understand it. He urged the desirability of the Institutes discussing proposed changes in the school law and regulations and dwelt upon the benefits and necessity of children being made the subjects of home-training as an aid to that in the schools. When home-training and discipline were neglected the school could never supply the deficiency. Parents and the public were too apt to act as if their duty ended when they sent their children to school and paid their tuition. He was a believer in the rod as well as in more gentle means of training. He hoped this meeting was an earnest of increasing interest in a very important subject, commended the general faithfulness and efficiency of our teachers, who seemed to feel great interest in those who were prepared by them for the duties of life and felt rewarded in their successes after they had passed beyond their control.

Mr Smith, in response to another call, spoke briefly, saying he had declined to address the meeting when asked to do so, one of his reasons being that his views were not unlike those of Mr Harrison. At the same time this meeting which was so well attended and the gathering together of so many teachers seemed to be evidence and a guarantee of intellectual progress in the community, and the differing views that had been expressed would, no doubt, be beneficial to those directly interested in working the system. He moved a vote of thanks to the chairman, and the meeting closed with brief remarks by that gentleman.

After the opening, Friday morning the President introduced the Chief Superintendent, who expressed his pleasure at meeting so many teachers who appeared to take a deep interest in education. Each teacher might have methods peculiar to himself, but there were great principles which must always be kept in view. He had profited by attending Institutes, and the public had begun to take more interest in them

After remarks on the arrangement of the manual work by the President, the Chief Superintendent and the Inspector, Miss Russell, Miss Quinlan and Mr. Covert were appointed a committee to attend to it. It was resolved, on motion of Inspector Mersereau, that an exhibition of manual work from all the schools of the county be made at each Institute.

Mr Cox introduced the subject of Physical Geography, explaining how to teach children the effects of water and water vapor, the influence of hills and mountains, the nature of salt lakes, and the causes of deserts. Messrs. Mersereau, Hutchison and Crocket endorsed the views of Mr. Cox, and it was resolved that Mr. Cox should write out the substance of his remarks for the Journal of Education.

Mr Carruthers read a good paper on History, explaining his method of teaching it. He would use the text books for his facts, but group the facts in the order he thought best for his pupils.

Dr. Jack, ex-President of the University of New Brunswick, was introduced, and made a pleasing speech.

Chief Superintendent Crocket advocated the study of history, and intimated that, as our histories are somewhat defective, the teacher should expand each subject and make the necessary additions

Mr. Hutchison pointed out the danger of allowing teachers to supplement the facts in the text or give reasons for events in regard to which parties differ. Miss Murphy, Miss Quinlan, Mr Cox, Miss Baldwin, Miss Mowatt, Mr Palmer and Dr Jack gave their views on the subject, the venerable Doctor congratulating the ladies on the intelligent interest they manifested,

The subject of Drawing was discussed by Miss Baldwin, Mr Palmer, Mr Anthony, Mr. Cox and Miss Hickey.

Recess.

In the afternoon Prof Tremblay rose to lecture on French pronunciation. He asked for the undivided attention of the Institute for half an hour, and declared that, if at the end of that time all of them were not able to pronounce French correctly, he would have no hesitation in pronouncing them block-heads. Mr. Trembley explained his system, illustrated it on the blackboard, and closed with a brilliant peroration.

A vote of thanks was passed to the learned Professor.

It was resolved, after discussion, that Paine's Lectures be procured by all the teachers and read during the year.

Votes of thanks were passed to the speakers at the public meeting, to the Trustees of No. 1 District, and to Dr. Jack, Mr Crocket and the editor of The World for the interest they had shown in the Institute.

The conduct of Mr. Waits in moderating in the call was sustained, and he was instructed to correspond with the Burnt Church section of the congregation to get their pledge to the guarantee of $450, as well as that of Tabusintac, already obtained. He was also empowered to make application to the Augmentation Committee for a grant of $300, to supplement the promised salary,

Mr. Brown gave notice of motion that at the next ordinary meeting of Presbytery he would move that all assessments be made on the total number of families reported.

It was resolved to have the next quarterly meeting at Campbellton on the third Thursday of January; that committee of supply for Nelson, Messrs, Aitken, McKay and Waits be continued, with power to effect a union between that congregation and Derby under the pastoral care of Rev, T. G. Johnstone; and that Douglastown be requested to send a commissioner or written communication to the meeting in January, stating what they have done and intend doing in future for supply.

CARD.

To the Electors of the Parish of Chatham.

Gentlemen:—At the solicitation of many friends I offer myself as a Candidate at the approaching Municipal Elections.

I have no special inducements to present to you in my card, as has always been the practice with Candidates seeking Municipal honors and I will leave you to form judgement as to my future by my past conduct, as I have had the honor of your confidence for the past four years. You all know that when any changes were necessary in the interest of the parish I was always ready and willing to make them. I do not expect to see you all before the coming election as the time is short, but I trust when you are polling your votes you will not forget those who have, to the best of their ability, endeavored to serve you faithfully.

I remain, Gentlemen, your ob't servant,

ROGER FLANAGAN.

CARD.

To the Ratepayers of the Parish of Chatham:—

Gentlemen: Many of you having requested me to again offer as a candidate for the representation of this important parish in the Municipal Council, I shall place myself in your hands for re-election on the 26th inst.

Since the time when I was first honored with your confidence my aim has been to so discharge my duties as to merit your approval, and while I may not have succeeded in realising all the expectations of my friends or myself, it has not been because of any want of loyalty to those duties or undervaluation of your interests.

The experience I have had as a councillor will—should I be re-elected—enable me to serve you the better, and if it is your pleasure to again return me with my present valued associate, we shall look forward to being able to accomplish more than could be reasonably hoped for from untried and inexperienced men.

My business engagements are such that I cannot visit many of you between now and polling day, but I hope that you will find in my course at the council sufficient merit to induce you to again elect me. I am, gentlemen, your ob't servant.

POOR COPY

A MODERN UNDINE.

'Aye, this is freedom!' exclaimed Tom Stapleton, involuntarily quoting, as he looked around after the tent had been erected and camp arrangements perfected. 'Here we are, and settled for a month's holiday, with none to molest or make us afraid.'

'Yes,' chimed in Floyd Rogers, 'the woods and the water are glorious, with plenty of game and fish, and not a woman within twenty miles. What more could a poor devil who has escaped from day-book, ledger—'

'Tiresome courts, clients, and dry law books—'

'And the chafing restrictions of 'our best society require to complete s happiness?'

'Absolutely nothing,' and Tom glanced complacently at his suit of blue flannel and laughed defiantly at starch, collars and cuffs.

Off for an outing they had selected a retired little lake far removed from the haunts of fashion, innocent of 'first-class hotel' and nondescript cottages, and, after dismissing the man who had brought their 'traps,' began settling down to easy enjoyment.

'This is something like comfort,s continued Tom (supper being over), ad he sat upon a stump near the shore any watched the rippling waters, faintlg tinged with silver by the just risin moon. 'And now to business, which, in this case—no reference to the 'shop' means fishing.'

Lines and bait were made ready, the light boat they had brought with them was launched, and very soon they were skimming along the almost smooth surface and trolling for the finny game.

'The best place I ever saw for bites,' growled Tom. 'I believe all the mosquitoes in the nniverse have met in convention and—'

'Great Scott!'

'What is the matter with you, Floyd? Got a bite?

'Millions of them; but hush!'

He had stopped paddling, bent low over the side of the boat, and, after cautiously peering into the distance, asked in the most cautious of whispers:

'Do you see that Tom?'

'See what, old fellow?'

'That black something bobbing up now and then above the water.'

'I certainly see 'something'' was the laughing response.

'It is an otter.'

You are way off. Most likely it is a loon that will senerade us every night as long as we remain.'

'If you are correct, I will put an end to diabolical music. Fortunately, I brought my gun, thinking we might find a belated duck.'

'You might as well fire at a flash of lightning as a loon. A pair of the cunning rascals are to be found in nearly every Northern Lake, and I have wasted powder and lead enough trying to kill them to have destroyed all the refactory Indians in the land.'

'We'll see about that, if I get a shot. But I remain firm in my first opinion that it is an otter, and I dont know. Forgive me, Tom, I couldn't help it, and I slipped out without my meaning to let it.'

'At all events,' answered his friend, wincing under the infliction, 'you stand no show at this distance. Paddle nearer, and we will see who is right.'

The boat was noislessly urged forward towards the object that had attracted their attention, and which seemed floating or swimming between them and the opposite shore, and very near to it. Very soon they became satisfied that it was living, was slowly and apparently carelessly moving along. A black-ball was all they could distinguish in the semi-light, and it was evident they were unnoticed.

'Softly,' whispered Tom.

'Softly it is, my boy. What do you say now? Loon or otter?'

'Can't decide.'

'I will soon give you a chance to do so. Let the boat drift slowly backward until I give the signal to stop. Confound the perplexing shadows of the trees!'

Stapleton did as requested, and there was absolute silence between them. The boat moved without sound, and the form of Floyd Rogers, crouched low, was as iron and his arms rigid as he braced for a shot, the boat having become motionless at his signal.

In almost breathless suspense Stapleton awaited the result. The distance was short, his friend skilful in the use of a rifle, and the life of a bird or a beast at which he aimed under such circumstances would be short indeed.

The waiting was brief. The report woke the slumbering echoes, the bullet cut the air with its peculiar "whizzing" sound, and a sharp, shrill, agonized cry followed that proved the aim had been true.

It was the cry not of a loon, of an otter, but of a woman!

"Great Heaven!" exclaimed Tom as he whirled the boat around and hurried in the direction of the terrable sound. 'What have you done?'

'Murder!' answered Floyd in shuddering accents, as the weapon dropped from his nerveless hands and he sank back with his face as white as moonlight that danced upon the bosom of the lake.

A few moments and they had reached the spot where the living target had been seen. The water yet revealed the marks of a struggle in the fast enlarging circles, and tiny wreaths of foam, but no woman's form could be found, nor trace of her discovered.

'She must have been instantly killed,' groaned the fatal marksman. 'You know her head alone was to be seen. The bullet must have pierced her brain, and she giving but one dying cry, sank to the muddy bottom.'

'And the water is particularly deep,' answered Tom, after having sounded with a heavily loaded line.

'In the name of Heaven, what are we to do?' questioned Floyd, frantic with fear and remorse.

'We have no grapples, the little there is of moonlight will soon be gone, it is fully twenty miles to the nearest settlement, and I can see nothing to be done but to wait until morning. Then we will try and find the body.'

'In the meantime I shall go mad,' and Floyd sank back in the boat and covered his face as if to shut out some horrid vision, while his comrade rowed back to the lonely camp.

A shrill quavering, unearthly cry, something between hysterical laughter and gurgling moans, rang from the very spot (as it seemed to the agitated men) where the terrible tragedy had been consummated; but nothing could be seen. The moon had sunk behind the tall tree-tops, the shadows had grown deep and weird, and they hurried to build a fire to dispel the gloom.

This they could do as far as the material was concerned; with the mental it was a most rank failure. All through the long night they sat talking over the fearful accident, and starting at every sound. The stealthy tread of one of the harmless wild beasts, the crackling of a dry branch, the wailing of the whippoorwill or the dismal hooting of an owl caused their flesh to creep.

'If I live a thousand years,' moaned Floyd, 'I shall never forget this night. Merciful Heaven! what must the feelings of a murderer be whose crime was premeditated?'

He bowed his aching head upon his clenched hands and silently prayed to be forgiven the shedding of human blood, unintentional though it had been.

At last, in the ghostly gray that precedes the rosy blush of morning, the self-convicted murderer arose and exclaimed:

'I can endure this no longer, Tom. Another hour like the last would cause me to commit suicide. Do what I might, the image of the poor, slaughtered girl or woman lying stark and stiff upon the muddy bottom of the lake has been before me, her eyes wide open, her long hair floating upward, and her white hands moving with the motion of the water.'

'It is horrible,' was answered compassionately; 'but the knowledge that you are innocent must be a great consolation.'

'Innocent or guilty, I shall be haunted to my grave. If I close my eyes I can see her face as distinctly as if a photograph was held before me. Come, I am going to the place of the murder, and shall not cease searching until I have rescued the body, found her friends if possible, and, if that cannot be, give her a fitting burial.'

'I am with you, my poor afflicted friend, for I am certainly particeps criminis.'

As guilty men escaping from avenging justice, they crept into the boat and stole, silent as shadows, across the lake, anxious to know and yet fearful of the knowledge.

A densely wooded point that shot out into the water concealed from them the end of their miserable journey. Before they had rounded it they heard the same semi-hysterical laughter that had startled them the previous night, and looked at each other anxiously, if not in alarm.

Slower, still slower, the boat crept along, and then, as an uninterrupted view was obtained, stopped altogether. The sight that met their eyes was not one to quiet their apprehensions or cause their nerves to remain unshaken.

A party of young men and women were in a boat anchored upon the very spot (as near as they could determine) they were searching for, intently looking into the water, while one appeared to be sounding the bottom with a long pole.

'They are searching for the body,' gasped Floyd. 'We had better escape before we are discovered and arrested for the murder.'

This might have been the result, had not the party in the other boat at that instant caught sight of them, as their pointing fingers proved.

'Too late,' said Tom, 'and now we must get out of this scrape as best we can.'

'Which means by being hung,' was the grim response.

Very soon the boats drew near to each other, but before they were within speaking distance Floyd Rogers, with a wonderfully changed face and tone, found time to whisper to his companion:

'Tom, we have been making confounded fools of ourselves. This is no funeral procession. Just listen to the merry peals of laughter. It is some school-girl picnic, and all the while we have been making ourselves wretched they have been having a glorious time. Confound girls anyhow!'

His conjectures proved true. Certainly they were very far from mourning for a murdered companion, and when (after informal introduction) the subject was mentioned, a black-eyed, black-haired, rosy-lipped divinity asked very pointedly:

'What did you think you were shooting at, Mr. Rogers?'

'It was a disputed question whether loon or otter.'

'How was it decided?'

'It never has been. A scream followed the shot. I believed I had killed a human being, and have been crushed with remorse ever since.'

'Had you been in my place you would have screamed as loudly.'

'Yours!'

'Yes. I was playing Undine for the amusement of my friends when your bullet came very near making a spirit of me in reality.'

'Were you wounded?' he questioned anxiously.

'No,' with a thankful smile, 'A life-preserver I was pushing ahead of me received the lead in place of my poor head. Yet, thinking another shot might be fatal, I sank, swam under the water to the shore, crept ignominously out, and we all scampered away as rapidly as possible,'

'I bless heaven you were not wounded.'

As they were rowing home, after a jolly breakfast with the gay party, he confessed to Tom he was wounded and badly; that he had never seen so beautiful and charming a girl, and that he would be willing to pass through another purgatory as that of the previous night to gain the paradise of her love!

If he had not succeeded, the fault would not have been his. But he did succeed. At last, when after a month of boating, fishing, picnic lunches and occasional en masse rehearsals of Undine, she asked the girl to become his wife, she flashed her black eyes up saucily as she laid her little hand in his and replied.

'Yes, Floyd, if you wish it. As I made you so miserable for one night, I know no good reason why I should not consent to do so for life.'

If the red lips paid the penalty there was no one but a loon that was rocking sleepily upon the lake to see. If he did, for once in his life he gave no warning cry of future storms.'
