FRIEND AHOY!

BY H. H.

"As ships meet at sea, a moment together, when words of greeting must be spoken, and then away into the deep, so men meet in this world; and I think we should cross no man's path without hailing him, and, if he needs, giving him supplies."—Henry Ward Beecher.

Friend ahoy! How many days
That thou been out? How many nights?
Did friends stand watching on thy ways?
Do lovers trim the lights?

Friend ahoy! Art thou in need
Of aught we carry? Make but sign
Which we across the waves may read,
And all our store is thine.

Friend ahoy! Draw near! draw near!
Let us, at least one short hour, sail
Close side by side. Let words of cheer
Over our griefs prevail.

Friend ahoy! The waves look white;
Rises the wind which parts us far;
We shall ride out the stormy night
By help of the self-same star.

Friend ahoy! Farewell! farewell!
Brief was our grief, joy unto joy,
Greeting and help the echoes tell
Faint, but eternal—Friend ahoy!

—Christian Union.

NOTES AND NEWS.

GENERAL.

Sections at some of the fashionable New York churches where music is the chief attraction on the Sabbath, are accused of accepting bribes for eligible seats. The accusations in some instances are true. Seats are sold for concerts on week days, say the people, and why not on Sundays?

The German Government has issued orders to put on an extraordinary pressure in the work of repairing the armaments for the troops. In June the whole infantry will be armed with the Menser rifle and cavalry with the Chassepôt. Ten thousand laborers are now at work at the arsenal at Strasburg and four thousand at Metz.

A woman with nine children starving in Centre street; a crone nearly 80 years old taking care of a crippled husband and two grand children in Mulberry street; a poor girl, who fell from exhaustion in West Broadway, was pronounced crazy by a police surgeon, and after sleeping in a cold cell all night, was taken to the Tombs without breakfast, and committed on a charge of insanity; such are mid-winter incidents in New York.

John Sheridan, one of the most noted and successful hotel thieves known, who distinguished himself a month ago by robbing the appartment of an English Lord at the Pacific Hotel, Chicago, and was arrested and released on bail, was captured Wednesday plundering a room in the Fifth House. After a smart resistance he surrendered and asked the officers to accompany him to his boarding-house, where he showed them a vault in which was a large quantity of diamonds and other stolen property. While they where examining it he drew a revolver and shot himself through the head, so that he will undoubtedly die. Sheridan was gentlemanly, accomplished, a short-hand reporter, and a graduate of the Commercial College.

Alexander of Russia has issued a ukas declaring every male liable to conscription to the army and repealing the ancient privilege of providing a substitute. The whole male population of Russia and Poland, on attaining the twentieth year of age, will be required to draw lots, the results of the drawing settling once for all, who is to be enlisted for active service and who is not. Those drafted into the army will be liable to fifteen years' service, but may be allowed to go home on furlough after six years, to be called out again when needed. Young men who have attended school will be allowed a reduction of their term of active service proportionate to what they have learned. This is the most revolting military law in the world. Russia is evidently a good place for soldiers.

In the Jesuits Church, Montreal, Rev. Father Dangouke said, in a recent discourse, that, notwithstanding that the Roman Catholic Church was the oldest church, as well as that of Jesus Christ, the Governments of Great Britain and the United States, and other powers all over the world, were at present opposed to the Catholic Church. The newspaper, cable, and other telegraphic reports bore evidence of this daily, and the chief cause of it was the determination of the only true church to put down secret societies. It had need proclaimed, and the order had gone forth from the lodge, that the Roman Catholic Church must be annihilated. The trowel of the Freemasons had been pointed at it, and they in particular, with other secret societies, were exerting all their power against the only true church.

The Irruptions of Vesuvius.

Rev. M. Harvey in the Maritime Monthly.

It is remarkable that before the Christian era, from the remotest period of which we have any tradition, Vesuvius would seem to have been entirely inactive. There is no record of any irruption having occurred previous to that in which Pompeii perished; and no suspicion was at the time entertained of the terrific forces which were imprisoned in the interior of the mountain. It is true the region around Naples and some of the neighbouring islands were known to be of volcanic character; and tradition handed down stories of igneous exhalations in the islands of Ischia and Procida, at the entrance of the Bay of Naples, by which Greek colonists who settled there, two or three centuries before the Christian era, had been compelled to fly. Traces of volcanic action were visible at several points all over this region; but the security enjoyed had been so long and unbroken, that no suspicion was entertained that the tranquillity of the lovely, fertile district would ever be disturbed, or that the extinguished fires would be re-kindled. These numerous traces of former volcanic action led the ancients to name the region around the shores of Naples, the Phalegraeli Campii or Burnt Fields; and they accounted for the traces of igneous action by the fabled battle between the giants and the gods, in which the former were cast down and destroyed by the thunderbolts of Jupiter. The scathed thunder-riven region, it was believed, bore enduring evidence of the power of these celestial bolts. One of the conquered giants named Typhon, who threw stones to Heaven with a loud noise, and from whose eyes and mouth fire proceeded, lay buried, as they fabled, under the neighboring island of Ischia. In this legend it is not difficult to trace the memory of some old volcanic eruption in that quarter. Similar in origin, probably, was the classic fable regarding Lake Avernus, near Vesuvius, which pictured it as the mouth of hell, over which no bird could complete its flight, but dropped overcome by the sulphurous exhalations. Sir Charles Lyell believes this lake to have been the crater of an extinct volcano, from which mephitic vapors exhaled for a long period after an eruption. Thus does science explode the poetical and superstitious fancies of the ages of ignorance, to replace them with the far more wonderful poetry of truth and facts far more wonderful than fiction.

Vesuvius must then have been an active volcano at some unknown period before the historic ages, and, must have given passage to streams of melted lava long before the year 79, when the volcanic fires were recalled to their old channel. Since that date, though long intervals of repose have occurred, numerous eruptions of the mountain have taken place during the last eighteen hundred years. The most celebrated since that which overwhelmed Pompeii, was that of 1779, in which white and sulphurous smoke rose above the summit to the height of twelve thousand feet; and at times a fountain of fire was hurled aloft, casting so bright a light that the smallest object could be clearly distinguished within six miles of Vesuvius. The liquid lava hitted with masses and scoria, after having mounted at least ten thousand feet, fell all around, still red-hot, and liquid, and with that issuing fresh from the crater, formed a complete body of fire two and a half miles in breadth, and casting an intense heat to the distance of seven miles. Another remarkable eruption occurred in 1793, after which the crater filled up by lava boiling from below, and instead of a cavity, became a rough and rocky plain; but in October of 1822, a violent eruption set in, which, in twenty days, blew out the whole accumulated mass, leaving an immense gulf, three miles in circumference, and more than fifteen hundred feet in depth. By this tremendous explosion, more than eight hundred feet of the cone was carried away, and the mountain reduced in height from four thousand two hundred feet to three thousand four hundred. The appearance of Vesuvius has not greatly altered since this eruption of 1822.

How Merriweather tried to Scare Mrs. Merriweather and Failed.

Merriweather lives in one of a row of houses which, as is generally the case in Philadelphia, are uniform. He thought the other night he would scare Mrs. Merriweather while she was in bed, so he rose, and, dressed in his night shirt, went upon the roof while she slept. He tied a nail to a piece of string, laydown on the cornice, leaned over and tapped the bed-room window with the nail. Mrs. Merriweather meanwhile was not asleep, but she followed him up, shut the trap door in the loft, and went back to bed. Merriweather concluded to give it up and turn in, but, to his dismay, the trap wouldn't open. To make matters worse, a policeman, who had been watching him, felt certain he was a burglar, and began to practice at him with his revolver. The manner in which that old man dodged about chimneys, clad in that simple robe of white, would have done credit to a performer on the flying trapeze. At last he came to his trap door, and finding that it had been opened he went down. On entering his bed-room he saw a man turning down the gas. As soon as he shouted "thieves!" she man also shouted, and the woman in the room gave a wild and awful yell. Then the man turned up the gas and seized a pistol, and as Merriweather dashed down stairs, he perceived that he had got into the wrong house. As he flew to the parlor and hid under the sofa, the other man woke the whole neighborhood with a rattle, and in ten minutes six policemen came in, and, after a search, dragged Merriweather out and marched him to the stationhouse. When he came out in the morning, he walked home in a pair of the turkey's pants, and began to eat his breakfast without asking a blessing; and when Mrs. Merriweather inquired if his muttered ejaculations, "Fool!" and "Idiot!" referred to her, he said she might wear them if they fitted her. He will probably not play any fresh practical jokes on Mrs. Merriweather soon again.

A Maine Murder Trial.

The trial of James M. Lowell, charged with the murder of his wife, Lizzie Lowell, in Lewiston, Me., is in progress, and excites a peculiar interest, owing to the circumstances attending the tragedy. In October last a man while cutting wood near a highway, a short distance from Lewiston, stumbled over a partially covered female skeleton. It was lying in a clump of dwarf evergreens, within a stone's toss of a much travelled road. There were remains of a black silk dress, of underclothing and of shoes, but the flesh had entirely disappeared, and identification seemed a hopeless problem. The physicians agreed that the date of death must have been two or three years ago, and inquiries were made at once whether any one had been missing. It was then remembered that Lowell's wife, with whom he had lived unhappily, mysteriously disappeared from her home a while ago, and after carefully working up the case sufficient evidence was obtained to satisfy the authorities that the remains were those of Mrs. Lowell and to warrant them in committing Lowell for trial. The evidence is altogether circumstantial, and whether it will be strong enough to lead to the prisoner's conviction remains to be seen. During the preliminary proceeding and the empanelling of the jury, Lowell manifested the greatest apparent indifference, and was the least interested spectator in the room. Four witnesses were called, their evidence relating to the identification of the black silk dress found around the skeleton, and of the gold chain which she wore; also as to Lowell and his wife starting to ride together on the night of Mrs. Lowell's disappearance, and that she was dressed in black silk at the time.
