

STUDY IN CANADA:

• FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS:

• How can I go to Canada to study?

There are several steps involved in going to Canada to study. First, you must have a strong academic background, solid financial support and very good English or French language skills. If you plan to apply for a Bachelor's degree program, you must have completed at least 12 years of primary and secondary school or the equivalent of an S.S.C. and H.S.C. in Bangladesh.

Next you must decide which colleges or universities you want to apply to. Your selection will probably be based on several factors : does the school offer a good degree program in your field, how competitive is it, how much does it cost, does it offer financial aid, how big is the school, where is it located?

After you have selected institutions that interest you, you should write/ email to each university requesting application forms and more information about admission requirements and the specific program you are interested in. This process should be started at least one year before you plan to enroll. Most students enter Canadian universities in September (Fall), some universities also admit students in January and March.

You will need to register for any examination the college or university may require. Eg: IELTS (International English Language Testing System), TOEFL (Test of English as a Foreign Language), GMAT etc.

Finally, after you have received information and application forms from the universities, you need to select a few institutions and officially apply to them. Send completed application forms, along with all other required documents, directly to the college or university. Be sure you know each school's application deadline date.

When you have submitted everything the school requires, you will eventually receive a letter from the college or university either accepting or rejecting your application. If you are accepted, the institution will send you a letter of acceptance called the ACCEPTANCE LETTER. You must have this letter before you can apply for a study permit (visa).
