THE favorable opinion I formerly entertained of the waters of the Caledonia Springs is MORE THAN CONFIRMED, as well from the benefits I personally derived from their use, as from what I observed of their effects on others. LINES

WRITTEN IN AN ALBUM AT THE FALLS OF NIAGARA

High on a rock that doth o'erhang the flood,
I sat me down to meditate.—
And here enshrouded in the mists
That for ages have risen to the skies—
And lent their fleecy forms as mirrors
To the rainbow which the God of day
Doth send down in admiration—
I sat and watched the mighty cataract,
That in terrific splendour foamed beneath my feet,
While strown around the green banks were
Forms and faces from earths remotest bounds;
Some high, some low,—some have come from
The pomp of palaces—some have left their
Smiling homes, embowered amid the vales
And woodlands green; and some have left their toils
And snatched a day of recreation
To view this wonderous spot.
Some are bright and joyful, and have tasted
Nought but the pure joys of hoyden youth,
While many in the thronging are far down
In the vale of years—and some are wrinkled
With the stern cares of a cold world.
All crowding round in listless wonder
And wrapt in the spell of this o'erpowering scene—
They all seem silly children.
So doth the works of mighty Nature enchain
Our hearts, and teach us all our littleness.

REFORM FOREVER!

How well it is the sun and moon
Are placed so very high,
That no presuming hand can reach,
To pluck them from the sky!

If 'twere not so, I do believe
That some reforming ass
Would soon attempt to take them down,
To light the world with gas!

REHEARSAL OF THE EGLINTON TOURNAMENT.—On Saturday, 20th July, there was a grand rehearsal, with tents and barriers, and the adjuncts of the lists. The knights first tilted at the quintain figure, and then at the heavy block figure. The tilting practice, during which the men were only partially in armour—only Lord Alford and Lord Glenlyon, to the best of our recollection, have worn helmets—was succeeded by jousts between two knights at a time, armed cap-à-pié, in full plate. The first succession of courses was between the Earl of Eglinton, the Lord of the tournay—and Lord Alford. The former was apparelled in a gorgeous suit of burnished brass, with the coronet of his degree on his helmet; his plume and housings being of the colours of his livery, blue and gold. The latter was in bright steel, bearing on his helmet the crest of his name, with plume and housings of his proper tinctures, blue and white. The success of the joust was with Lord Alford, who planted one more attaint on the shield of his adversary than he himself suffered. After this Lord Glenlyon and Mr. Gage entered the lists; but even the beautiful horsemanship of the latter was unable to bring his horse up to the charge. Nothing could induce the animal to face his opponent; and so much time was lost in the attempt, that the concluding joust between the Marquis of Waterford, and, we believe, Capt. Maynard, was of necessity postponed—it being then eight o'clock in the evening.

Lord William Bentwick has scarcely left his equal among the Liberal Aristocracy.—In varied and arduous situations at home and abroad, he "kept the whiteness of his soul." With opportunities of amassing wealth such as few have enjoyed, and the offer of that advancement in the ranks of the Peerage which his "order" so eagerly covet, he preferred to remain a man of the people, with a moderate fortune. There has been and are many more noisy professors of attachment to popular interests, but few have acted up to their principles as steadfastly as the late member for Glasgow. What he promised he performed. He held out no false expectations; and if his constituents were somewhat disappointed in his Parliamentary career, they will not fail to bear in mind, not only the moderation of his professions, but the unfortunate state of health which kept him back on many occasions when inclination might have prompted him to take an active part in the business of the House of Commons.
