WOLTER DIES TODAY FOR THE MURDER OF RUTH WHEELER

Ossington, N. Y., Jan. 29—Albert Wolter was put to death in the electric chair at Sing Sing prison at 5.41 o'clock for the murder of fifteen year old Ruth Wheeler nearly two years ago.

The girl went to Wolter's flat in New York in search of employment, and he killed her, after she had been mistreated. Wolter left a statement with Warden Kennedy, denying that he had committed the crime.

The state electrician said that Wolter showed less resistance to the electric current, than any murderer put to death by electricity at Sing Sing prison.

Quebec, Jan. 29—Hon. Mr. Devlin, minister of colonization, is ill, threatened with bronchial trouble. He has not been well since the beginning of the session.

NAUGHTY BOY OF ALL THE ARTS

Max Beerbohm's Latet Cartoons Poke Fun at Spelling Reform

LORD NORTHCLIFFE IS HIT

(Times' Special Correspondence)

London, Jan. 19—Max Beerbohm has been at it again, with his cartoons at the New English Art Club. It must be understood that, whenever "Max," as he is always called, choses to put forth a series of cartoons, the occasion is looked upon as something of an event in the English art world, for Max is a kind of naughty boy of all the arts, and the celebrities in all lines have to go around to the gallery to see if he has been having fun with them.

Max has no sympathy with anything that seems to him a fad or a pose or a ponderosity, and is particularly scornful of the Carnegie-Roosevelt plan for reform of spelling; so he has turned himself loose this year on a cartoon in which William Archer, the famous dramatic critic, who is its chief exponent in London, is forced to carry the principal burden.

Archer was vastly amused by Max's cartoon of him, which as it happens, he had not seen until your correspondent showed him a photograph of it. "It is a better resemblance than some of Max's caricatures," he said.

A Lord Northcliffe cartoon hits off a situation that some dramatist like Arnold Bennett ought to have dealt with before now. The Daily Mail, which made the bulk of the Harmsworth millions and passed its proprietor on from plain Alfred Harmsworth to Sir Alfred and then to Lord Northcliffe, is anathema to stiff British householders of the old school who would consider themselves eternally disgraced if they were seen reading it, and who swear by the Times—which is now chiefly owned by the same Lord Northcliffe who made the Daily Mail what it is.

But so far, the Times has managed to keep down to a three-line paragraph all personal news and sensational local happenings that gladden the hearts of the Mail's readers. Grave and reverend old gentlemen guard the awe-inspiring editorial sanctum in Printing House Square and the place is so solemn and serious that Lord Northcliffe has to flee from it in terror occasionally to the hurly-burly of the Mail offices five minutes away, and let loose his bottled-up spirits.

Play Writers, Too

As for Rostand and D'Annunzio, "Max" has seized on the marked characteristics of the leading literary dandies of France and Italy respectively—each as precious in the matter of verbal adornment as in personal adornment, and each rather contemptuous of the other's similar failing.

"Max" could poke fun at himself for that matter, on the same score, and in fact he has done so, for he has been declared by competent judges to be the official heir to the mantle of Beau Brummel. He is no slavish follower of fashion but a daring originator; probably the most-carefully-dressed man in London. Anyone who has ever tried white gloves for street wear in grimy London will understand what a strain on the intellect, the will and the purse it must be to appear in them always, day and night, and with those white gloves always spotlessly white. Presumably "Max" sets forth each day with a dozen new pairs and dodges into doorways to change them every hour or so.

Max's half-brother, Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, who takes himself seriously at times, has been the subject of a good many of Max's humors. On one occasion Max announced a series of cartoons on the brothers of great men—of which No. 1 was to depict Beerbohm Tree.

This versatile personage, who will not be 38 until next August, astonished the literary world some ten years ago by publishing a thin little volume of essays under the title "The Works of Max Beerbohm," and later on another volume equally thin, entitled "More." But anyone who might suppose him to be a poseur or some other sort of comic character, would make a grave mistake.

His dramatic criticisms in the Saturday Review, where he succeeded George Bernard Shaw, were models of their kind, written with the utmost care, distinction and discrimination. And the same can be said of all of his work. Lately he has published a fantastic novel under the title of "Zuleika Dobson," dealing with the adventures of a goddess who visited Oxford in term time. His little play, "The Happy Hypocrite,"— was an equally notable flight of fancy.

For the last few months the author-artist-critic has been living in Italy. Whether he is trying his hand at architecture, music, dancing or some new art of his own invention no one in London seems to know. But whatever mischief he is up to, it is certain that it will be interesting.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN'S TRYING EXPERIENCE

Geo. Chamberlain, baker at the Hygienic Bakery, in company with a fellow workman and another man, started on Saturday last to the mouth of Drury's Cove on the Kennebeccasis to fish. They walked to Brookville, drawing a small sledge. Mr. Chamberlain complained of the cold enroute and when they came to the ice at the head of the cove he suddenly dropped in a stupor. His companions had carried him up the bank and were making efforts to bring him to consciousness when Mr. Porter, who lives across on the island, happened along. He advised his removal to shelter at once.

It is said that shelter for him was refused at two houses and meanwhile his fingers became frozen.

"Come on," said Mr. Porter, "I know one Christian in this benighted land, the station agent's wife. So they hurried Mr. Chamberlain to the station, where Mr. McLaughlin, who lives at Brookville, assisted by Mr. Porter, worked over him half an hour and drew the frost from his hands. The three o'clock train then arrived and the man had somewhat revived but had not recovered consciousness, when he was put on board and sent to the city. Mr. Porter praises Mrs. Spite, who rendered every assistance in her power.

GOES TO OTTAWA.

Alfred Porter of Wm. Thomson & Co., left this evening for Montreal to join a delegation from the shipping federation to go to Ottawa to interview the government. The object is to present the objections of the shipping men to certain sections of the regulations regarding the inspection of steamers registered in Canada and steamers engaged in the coastal service. The regulations are more stringent than those of any other country, and the steamship men feel that they impose an unnecessary hardship on the owners.

A TIE-UP.

A message to George Carvill, of the I. C. R., today read as follows:—"Earl Grey, ex-Pictou, this morning, stuck in heavy ice six miles from Pictou wharf; steamer Minto, ex-Georgetown stuck in heavy ice off Cape Bear. Neither boat is expected to cross today.

NORTH, SOUTH, EAST AND WEST

They come from all quarters—Indiantown, Lower Cove, Crouchville, East St. John and Carleton, in the cars, in the automobiles as well as on their feet to Steel's shoe store Saturday to buy rubbers, overboots and the like at prices seldom offered to St. John people. Ladies' Rubbers thirty-five cents a pair.

DID JONAH SWALLOW A WHALE? OR DID A WHALE SWALLOW JONAH?

Anyway are there not more profitable themes for discussion than this? Every day subjects such as the value of a dollar and five cents which just at present will buy three pair of Ladies' Rubbers at Steel's shoe store, 519 Main street.

Our store will be closed at 7 p. m. but before that you will have lots of time to buy anything you want in the many snaps offered in Rubbers at Steel's shoe store.

ANOTHER RESIGNATION

One by one the people are learning they must give up trying to get better values than Steel's shoe store gives. Think of it, ladies, Plain or Storm Rubbers thirty-five cents a pair, but only four pair to a customer.

DO NOT BE LATE

Many people were late looking for the men's overboots we were selling. See you do not make this mistake about these Ladies' Rubbers at thirty-five cents a pair.
