RESPECT THEIR HORSES.

Englishmen Think That Some Good Ones Are in the Dwyer-Croker Lot.

Many interesting details concerning the horses shipped to England by Messrs. Croker and Dwyer reached here in yesterday's foreign mails. In addition to particulars already received by cable, London Sporting Life of Jan. 26 has the following:

"It is just 16 years since the Yankees sent us a batch of thoroughbreds, whose achievements will long live in the memories of those who witnessed their doings on the different racecourses of England. The first to claim the attention of the English sporting men was the brown gelding, Parole, who carried the cherry and black of Mr. Pierre Lorillard. This little 6-year-old animal won three of the principal handicap events of 1879. They were the City and Suburban, when carrying 8 stone 7 pounds; the Newmarket Handicap, carrying 8 stone 4 pounds; the Great Metropolitan, carrying 8 stone 12 pounds, and the gold cup at Epsom.

"The year afterwards (in 1880) the American 2-year-old Iroquois appeared on the scene and carried off the Chesterfield Stakes. This animal was also the property of Mr. Pierre Lorillard. It was as a 3-year-old, however, that Iroquois shone so brilliantly. During the season of 1881 the American won the Derby and St. Leger. He also won the Prince of Wales' Stakes at Ascot, with 9 stone 5 pounds up.

"It was in this same year that the white and blue spots of James R. Keene were seen on the English turf. His horse, Foxhall, as a 3-year-old, won the Cesarewitch, with 7 stone 12 pounds in the saddle. He carried two pounds more in the Cambridgeshire and won. The Grand Prix de Paris was also captured by Foxhall, and in 1882, as a 4-year-old, he carried off the gold cup at Ascot, with 9 stone on his back.

"This presentment ought to convince Englishmen that the Yankees never send a horse to this country unless they are morally sure that they have a good one—or what they term a world-beater. The consignment of 21 horses which Mr. Richard Croker and Michael F. Dwyer have sent us may not all be champions, but it is only fair to presume that there is a Parole, a Foxhall or an Iroquois among the parcel."

London, Feb. 4.—The Duke of Portland has bought the Australian racehorse Carbine for 13,000 guineas ($65,000).

Carbine, by Musket, out of Mersey, is the greatest racehorse ever bred in Australia, and certainly deserves to dispute with Ormonde, for whom $150,000 was paid, the title of being the horse of the century. His best performance, and one of the best performances ever made on the turf, was his victory in the Melbourne Cup of 1890, at two miles, in which he carried 145 pounds and ran the distance in 3.28 1-4, beating a field of 38 hrses.

This still remains the record for the race. To shw the merit of the performance it is only necessary to add that Ten Broeck, carrying 110 pounds, made the American record for 3.27 1-2 for the distance.

Mr. J. B. Haggin desired to buy Carbine, and undoubtedly would have paid a fancy price for him, but for the turn that racing affairs have taken here in the east. As a 2-year-old Carbine was owned by Daniel O'Brien, who paid 800 guineas for him.

He won five races as a 2-year-old. At 3 he was started for the Victorian Derby and would have won the race but for the carelessness of his jockey. He was beaten a head by Ensign, a son of Gladiateur. Shortly after this race he was bought by Donald Wallace—who sold him to the Duke Portland—for 13,000 guineas. Altogether, he started in 43 races, of which he won 33, was second in six, third in three and only once unplaced. The total value of his stake winnings was $147,380.

The Duke of Portland maintains two large stud establishments in England. He is the owner of St. Simon, who has stood at the head of the list of winning sires in England for the past two or three years.

The Ringers With Us.

It is thought that several ringers from the United States are doing the ice races in Canada, says The Buffalo Express. The horse carrying the name of Charley S. is thought to be the Central New York gelding Guess, 2.16 1-4, by Landmark. His color has been changed from a bay to an unnatural-looking chestnut, but, as he resembles Guess very closely in conformation, gait and action, and as that horse disappeared from Central New York very mysteriously last summer, the horsemen think he and Charley S. are one and the same horse. Another horse taking part in the Canadian meetings under the name of Joe R. caused so much talk concerning his identity that he was drawn from the last race in which he was booked tostart. Ringing is now an offence punishable by imprisonment in Canada, as dunless the men who attempt it are very careful, they may spend a few months in Canada in durance vile.

THEIR ANNUAL MEETING.

Toronto Athletic Club Shareholders' Flourishing Statement.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Toronto Athletic Club (Ltd.) was held yesterday afternoon at the club house. The T.A.C. has just completed the first year of its active existence, and it has a bright prospect for the future, as well as a prosperous retrospect for the past. Last year the club membership numbered 1100 paid-up members, and this year there is every indication of a large increase being made. At the annual meeting yesterday the Hon. John Beverely Robinson presided. Before any business was transacted a touching resolution of condolence was passed in regard to the death of their colleague, Mr. Emanuel Samuel.

The financial statement showed a good surplus of assets over liabilities. There had been an increase in stock subscriptions during the year of $6000, making the aggregate of the stock subscribed $91,650. In the month of May last, the report pointed out, the club's membership was only 882, but before December 31 the roll had swelled to 1100, and in spite of 47 resignations the membership now totals 1168. The running expenses of the club for the year had been $12,019, which amount, despite the unusual business depression, had, after allowing $1400 for preliminary expenses in opening the organization's magnificent headquarters, been fully met by the current receipts. An analysis of the receipts showed that the billiard tables had netted a profit of $1016, the refreshment room $160 and the bowling alleys of $82.

The gratifying information was given by the secretary that 668 members had already renewed their subscriptions for the current year, and in view of this fact it was decided to remit the 50 cents fine imposed upon all fees paid on or before March 1.

The following directors were electrd for the ensuing year: Hon. John Beverley Robinson, Messrs. John Massey, C. H. Nelson, John Henderson, Goldwin Smith, William Mackenzie, Charles Hunter, E. B. Ryckman, W. T. Jennings, Dr. J. F. W. Ross, Alexander Manning, J. P. Murray, H. M. Pellatt, W. A. H. Kerr.

At a subsequent meeting of the board, Hon. John Beverley Robinson was elected president and Messrs. C. H. Nelson and John Massey, vice-presidents. There was a unanimous desire on the part of the whole board to elect Prof. Goldwin Smith as their president, but the professor declined to serve in that capacity on account of other engagements.

The following directors were elected chairmen of the several sub-committees: House Committee, Dr. Ross chairman, J. P. Murray, vice-chairman, Charles Hunter and E. B. Ryckman; tennis, Prof. Goldwin Smith; billiards, C. H. Nelson; bowling, W. T. Jennings; gymnasium, John Henderson; bicycle, E. B. Ryckman; fencing, Major Peliatt; boxing, W. A. H. Kerr; rink, A. F. Webster; swimming, J. P. Murray; whist, W. T. Jennings.

The annual meeting of the members of the club, for the transaction of general business, will be held at the clubhouse this evening.

AN AWFUL BUTCHERY.

A German Newspaper's Description of an American Football Game.

Yale faculty has just made a translation of an article in a German newspaper, the Muenchener Neueste Nachrichten, on the Yale-Harvard game at Springfield. It is believed to have been written for the purpose of making unpopular the German Emperor's plans for introducing American sports into German universities.

In describing the game the German paper says:

"It turned into an awful butchery of 22 participants. Seven were so severely injured that they had to be carried from the field in a senseless condition. The vertebral column of one was put out of joint, a second one's nose was broken, a third lost an eye and a fourth broke his leg. The rest suffered severe internal injuries. The intention to injure each other in all their attacks was clearly evident, therefore there can be no question of accident.

"Furthermore, both teams appeared upon the field with a crowd of doctors, ambulances and attendants, which from the very start did not fail of producing a gruesome impression upon the spectators. Many ladies were present, who fainted away at the awful cries of the injured players.

"The indignation felt towards the brutality of the students was powerful, but terror so dominated the spectators that nobody dared to interfere."

STENOGRAPHY'S IMPORTANT PLACE.

Interesting Facts About the Business and the People Who Are In It.

Stenography is not a new invention, and a stenographer is not necessarily a pretty girl who invests $10 a week in caramels and crazy hats. Roman emperors reckoned shorthand one of their best accomplishments—that is, after they had properly learned something like 7,000 arbitrary hooks and crooks—and knowing people are pretty certain that it was a fad of Julius Cæsar's to carry on his intimate correspondence by this medium. Indeed, for five hundred years shorthand cut quite a figure in the upper world, and then fell wofully out of fashion for one thousand years. Since that time modern people have tried their wits at the invention of a system, and Russians, Germans and Frenchmen have had some success, but it was an Englishman who carried off the honors, in the person of a Bath schoolmaster, who gave the Pitman system to nearly the whole world.

There was a time, not so very long ago, when a public speaker who did not want to be reported could easily run away from his stenographic pursuers. Now stenographers can give orators odds. Chicago has the fastest stenographer in the world. His record is 397 words a minute, and his name is Isaac S. Dement.

If any one doubts that stenography is a great factor in modern affairs, that one must be ignorant that stenographers put in excess of $71,000,000 in their pockets annually. The introduction of stenography into business affairs has enormously increased correspondence, for dictation is as easy as rolling off a log. Much practice makes a poor dictator a good one, and skill, alas! turns the good one into the eloquent one. The average dictator is exhilarated and is in danger, like the skater in love with his own grace and freedom, of forgetting what he is going for and where. All mistakes and blunders are the stenographer's portion of the transaction, and she must not only be spelling and grammar perfect, but she must have a big lump of common sense and infinite tact to succeed. She is very lucky if she does not have to "wallow in words," as Dickens said of himself.

Stenography has not only doubled correspondence, but has raised its tone in courtesy at least 50 per cent.

This business has been so invaded by women that it seems to properly belong to them. There is no other calling where a woman can be fitted so quickly for paying work and that is so lucrative in all its grades. There are in the United States 120,000 women stenographers and typewriters. It is estimated that there are ten stenographers in this city to every position, but still they keep pouring in from pleasant country homes to try their hands at city life. An average girl fits herself for an average place in six months, but the clever ones now make themselves acquainted with bookkeeping, professional nursing, or some supplementary training.

To succeed in court stenography women must have strong mental fibre and superior physique. It takes not less than two years' preparation to acquire sufficient speed for court work, and to execute it requires a cast-iron nervous system and constitution. It is claimed that every tariff bill has cost the life of an official stenographer. One-fifth of the court stenographers of Chicago, none of whom are official, are women. They have fine offices, a clientele made up of some of the 3,000 lawyers of the city, and it is on the card that some of them make $3,000 a year. One young woman says she lives well and puts by the tidy sum of $1,500 every twelvemonth. These young women acquire a very liberal education in law as well as business.

One of them said of her work. "Court stenography is exhausting mentally and physically. Besides the unutterable fatigue of the body we have often to oppose our judgment no the the lawyers as to what is essental. We do not, of course, record what is know among us as the 'slop-over' of the court, but on the other hand we are responsible for everything material and it is this lightning sifting that makes or mars a stenographer's work. It happened to me once to insert in my notes half a dozen words from a torrent of talk which I was directed to pass. Shortly after one of these great lawyers pointed to the few little words which I had sneaked in and said: 'Miss ——, your judgment brought me $30,000. The case turned on that sentence.'"

The hotel stenographer thinks she has a very hard time in the demands made upon her sympathy, although otherwise well placed. She pays $50 a month office rent and makes easily enough $100 a month in excess of that. She has to have an all-around education and good address and must be equipped to shape anything from a sermon or scientific treatise to a sentimental letter. In addition to humoring the dictator in regard to taking his deposition in shorthand or rattling it off on the keyboard she is expected in most cases to listen gravely to explanations, confidences and even rhapsodies. A confidential chat with these clever and long suffering young women convinces one that the hotel guest are mostly great schoolboys with a piece to speak and a heart yearning for sympathy. Young and old men, the hotel stenographer laughing at you in her sleeve.

Two years ago some of the women stenographers and typewriters of this city formed an association. They were thirteen then; they are 150 now. They are known as the National Association of Women Stenographers, and are incorporated. Within a few weeks the arrangements and legal forms of a sick benefit have been completed, so that women who are alone in the world may count in case of sickness upon three months' financial support, and a womanly sympathy extending far beyond that limitation. Meetings are held every three months, and addresses have been made by Mrs. Charles Henrotin and Mrs. Henry Shepard. It is their intention to have lectures from time to time from women who can inspire them to broad and noble work. They have now begun—some three score of them—the study of parliamentary law at Central Music Hall, an earnest that the association is going to transact its business with vigor and legality.

Miss M. E. Orr, who holds the gold medal for the championship of the world for speed in typewriting, is an honorary member of the association. Their president is Miss Nettie McLaughlin a Chicago girl of considerable literary ability and marked executive force. She, with Miss Harriett Shinn, will go as delegatest to the National Council of Women to be hoal in Washington next month. This is the only body of business women in the country that belongs to the national Council. Miss Shinn will read a paper to open the discussion on "Woman as a Factor in the Modern Business World," Miss Shinn was the first president of the association and has a fine mind and broad sympathies. She is the daughter of a Methodist minister and is doing a noble womanly work outside the exactions of her profession.—Chicago Record.

THE NEW CZAR.

Personality of the Youth Who has Now Become Russia's Ruler.

The scientific training of the young prince was superintended by his governor and tutor, Gen. Danilovitch, a man keenly alive to a sense of duty, highly educated, and with a habit of looking at all things in a strictly gentlemanly manner, although of a somewhat dry temperament. He brought up his pupils free from prejudices of all kinds, and this was greatly to his credit, since this early education had to be carried out at a time when the hatred of Germany and Germans was at its height in Russia. The scientific education was excellent, but not after the fashion of a German gymnasium.

At the wish of the Czar more attention was given to modern sciences than to the classical work. Dead languages were not taught at all, and ancient history only up to a certain point, while, on the other hand, the records of recent centuries, especially so far as they bore upon Russia, were carefully read. At the same time a good deal of Muscovite history and much that pertained to the rise of his own family was kept back from the prince. The necessary amount of mathematics and a very thorough knowledge of geography was instilled into him, and particular attention was given to the language and literature of his own country and Germany, France and England. All these languages the Czarevitch speaks and writes fluently. He was also thoroughly instructed in constitutional history, law, the administration of the country, finance and political and social economy. The best masters were selected, and care was taken that their instruction should not be warped by political views.

He entered the army at eighteen, and was little more than a child as regards his way of looking upon life at that time. He abhorred the homage of court and official life, and was only really happy when he could frolic in an innocent fashion with his younger fellow-officers, when the elder ones, especially his tutor—for whom he has always entertained the greatest esteem—were out of the way. In this way his character became more independent. He became a good officer, and, although anything but a passionate soldier, he is in a position to recognize mistakes and to appreciate efficiency. He is devoted to duty, and does everything that he undertakes thoroughly.

In many ways he resembles his father, but is, in scientific knowledge, in advance of him and has this advantage over Alexander III that, from his earliest years, he has been brought up as the heir apparent, whereas the latter was twenty years of age when he came into that position. He has also, like his father, a certain shyness, which in his case also, has been mistaken for haughtiness. At home he was brought up in the most loving manner, like all the other children of the imperial family; but the consciousness of the dignity or the position of the czar was more deeply impressed upon him than upon his brothers. To him the Czar was higher than the father.

This is illustrated by the following anecdote: One day the Czarevitch, when a lieutenant, returned to Peterhof very tired after a long day's exercise with the troops, retired to his room, took off his uniform and boots and lay down on his bed to rest. As he was on the point of sleeping the Czar entered his room. Afterwards, when telling the story to his friends, he remarked: "You can imagine my terror when I saw the Czar before me and I had no boots on."

The youngest son, the Grand Duke Michael, was not troubled by any such sentiments of official respect. On one occasion, when ten years of age, he was taking a sea trip with his father. The latter was taking a nap in a net suspended on deck, and his wanton son amused himself by jumping over his father. The Czar finding that paternal remonstrances were of no avail, exclaimed solemnly, "The Czar orders you to desist!" The youag Grand Duke thought this such a joke that he burst out laughing.

These simple anecdotes are characteristic of the domestic education of the imperial princes. The relations that prvailed between the Czar and the Czarina themselves, and between them and their children, were admirable, and could with advantage be imitated by every family. The Czarevitch still sees everything through his father's eyes, and from him he has learned to look down upon all other countries and nations without exception.

In this respect the Czarevitch is noted for the harmless jokes he makes, especially about Germans. Germans are so utterly incapable, in society, of accommodating themselves to the manners and customs of the country they are residing in; they are stiff, have a high opinion of themselves, and ostentatiously display their astonishment abroad, especially in Russia, at all that seems grand to them. The young Czarevitch did not fail to notice this German weakness and just because he sometimes ridiculed it it has been rumored that he hated Germany. But this is not at all the case. Germans are just as indifferent to him as Frenchmen, Englishmen, or any other foreigner. He has never yet displayed an opinion contrary to that of his father, and it may be pretty positively affirmed that he will tread in his footsteps when he comes to the throne. But one must reckon with one factor—namely, the Czarevitch is very easily influenced, and there is a fear lest his younger counsellors, whom he will have to select later on, should not be inspired with such pacific intentions as the majority of the well-proved counsellors of Alexander III., in whom though unconsciously, the traditional friendly feeling with Germany still slumbers.
