Theft.

[illegible] Thursday morning, the chandelier, [illegible] in the dining room, on the floor, by the [illegible] Esq., in Gloucester Place, was found to be missing. It appeared that the servant had left the door open, and a thief had entered the house, and, notwithstanding the presence of the family, actually succeeded in carrying off the chandelier, which was of very considerable value. The alarm was immediately given to the police, and every exertion was made to trace the thief, but without success. The chandelier was composed of cut glass, and was very valuable. It was suspected that the robbery was committed by a person who had been employed in the house, and who had left the service a few days before the robbery was discovered. The chandelier was of very considerable value, and
