HELENE'S MARRIED LIFE

BY MAY CHRISTIE

Copyright, 1920, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate

CIV.—A Wedding Gift.

Sometimes I have wondered, in my up-and-down career, if it isn't a misfortune to be born a woman. Men seem to have so much the best of it in this rough world. Men can hit back—can get the better of Tony and his kind, for instance.

That Tony was at the bottom of Alice's information, I felt sure. In spite of all his misdeeds, I had no doubt they were good friends again. Alice has no real pride—or common sense. As long as her infatuation for a man lasted she would overlook endless snubs, insults, and deceitful actions.

Well, each to his—or her—own taste. And, anyhow, I had my Jim.

For our honeymoon we had decided to return to the quiet country cottage where the latter part of Jim's convalescence had taken place. It was quiet and secluded, and a veritable little spring-time paradise.

It then transpired that Mrs. St. Aubyns did not intend to accompany us.

"You dear, foolish children! As though I'd spoil your honeymoon! I wouldn't think of such a thing!" She patted me on the shoulder and flung an adoring look at her son. "Whoever heard of a mother-in-law playing gooseberry at such a time? I wouldn't do it for the world."

She had given all instructions to the housekeeper down there that Jim and I were to be well looked after. And she had also engaged a personal maid for myself.

"Young people in love don't think about these things. It's left to us older folks to be sensible," she said, laughingly, but with a glint of moisture in her kindly eyes. "And—Jim—I can trust you to Helene."

We found her wedding present waiting for us outside the restaurant. It was a big, low-hung car, painted a dark grey, a chauffeur at the wheel.

"When Jim's a little stronger he can drive it himself," she whispered in my ear. "Meantime, see that he gets lots of fresh air by going about the countryside. It will do you both the world of good."

Jim was delighted at the gift. And I, too, was delighted. I love to drive a car, and am rather proud of my skill in manipulating almost any kind of make. This was a type I loved. I realized that it must have cost a great deal of money, too.

"Helene's a first-class driver," announced my husband, beaming proudly on me. "We don't really need a chauffeur, mother."

"Oh, keep him a week or two. I've arranged for that, and arranged about his board, and everything. You'll find him very useful." She nodded gaily at us. "Now, suppose we all get inside, and you drop me at the house. I've a committee meeting at half-past two, and it's almost that already."

The new car was luxury itself. Mrs. St. Aubyns had forgotten nothing. Two heavy rugs, some cushions, a foot-warmer, and a carriage-clock were included in the scheme of things.

After we'd dropped her and the car was speeding smoothly toward the country I said to Jim:

"Your mother is the sweetest thing I've ever known—except yourself, dear! But isn't this rather an extravagant gift? It must have cost at least five thousand dollars—"

Tomorrow—A Memorable Drive.
