WEATHER LORE

It is universally recognized that a "high dawn" is the sign of a bad day, for it shows that the lower levels are thick with masses of vapor. A "low dawn," on the other hand, is a pretty sure pledge of a fine day. Gloom and storm are likely to follow a rainbow which appears in the morning, while a vivid straw-colored sunset foretells violent wind. Some folk say that when rain follows it kills the wind. Rain does not effect the wind. Wind will drive furiously when rain is coming down in torrents. It is simply a matter of squalls. When the barometer falls sharply you should prepare yourself for bad weather, for a gale will come sooner or later.
