PARSONS' PILLS

These pills were a wonderful discovery. No others like them in the world. Will positively cure or relieve all manner of disease. The information around each box is worth ten times the cost of a box of pills. Find out about them, and you will always be thankful. One pill a dose. Parsons' Pills contain nothing harmful, are easy to take, and cause no inconvenience. One box will do more to purify the blood and cure chronic ill health than $5 worth of any other remedy yet discovered. If people could be made to realize the marvelous power of these pills, they would walk 100 miles to get a box if they could not be had without. Sent by mail for 25 cents in stamps. Pamphlet pamphlet free, postpaid. Send for it; the information is very valuable. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., 22 Custom House Street, BOSTON, MASS.

MARGARET.

Continued.

Vincent Dare had given up Marguerite! Then indeed was the barrier between them insuperable, or the man's indomitable will, little scrupulous in attaining its end, would have held to its purpose. Vincent Dare give up the woman he loved! Had he actually done so?

Rosa Delmayne could hardly believe this possible. Was Marguerite, it vaguely crossed her, married? The idea seemed preposterous; moreover, the girl was too honorable to allow a man to waste his love upon her, knowing from the beginning that it was in vain.

Had Dare contracted some marriage abroad, which he had acknowledged to Marguerite? But that hypothesis Miss Delmayne rejected; Dare was not the man to let a mere infatuation—for it could have been no more than this—carry him the length of marriage. Nor would her, in any case, marry an inferior; and if his union had been with an equal, why not acknowledge it?

The old lady laid her hand tenderly on the bowed head.

My dear, she said, her eyes full of tears, I will not ask you any more, for it will only distress you, and you tell me I shall know soon. But I must hope that some way will be found out of this sorrow.

Marguerite rose slowly.

You are very, very good to me, she said. I shall always love you and be grateful to you.

You must not talk, Marguerite, as if I were never to see you again, said the old lady, chokingly. I cannot bear that!

Forgive me! But I must go abroad; I could not stay in England.

At that minute there was a knock at the door.

Come in, said Miss Delmayne, and Mrs. Brandon entered.

I beg your pardon, ma'am—Miss Lorrimore——

Am I wanted? said the girl, hastily.

Yes, miss, please; she's very queer—she frightens me.

Marguerite was off like a shot, up the stairs, along the corridor, through the long picture-gallery, and in the "haunted room."

Agitated though she was, her hand was quite steady as she opened the secret panel. She traversed swiftly the passage beyond, and in a minute was in the presence of Agnes Clavering.

CHAPTER XLI.

THE DAWN.

A startling change had come over the prisoner since Marguerite had seen her that morning, not two hours ago. Then she was quiet and passive, very gentle, talking rationally, the only ominous sign being that she kept putting up her hand to her head and saying:

I wish I could remember—I wish I could remember!

Now, she was pacing up and down, her eyes wild and restless, her hands clenching and unclenching, her lips muttering, her whole aspect that of a paroxysm of madness.

For a moment, Marguerite, as yet unseen by the poor creature, paused aghast. Was the work undone? Had Agnes suddenly relapsed into utter insanity, and that in a more hopeless form than before? Then came a flash of hope. Perhaps this was the last struggle, the last wild effort of the spirit to free itself from its hideous trammels; but would the struggle end in death, or in the triumph of reason?

Marguerite advanced a step, and with a passionate cry Agnes sprang forwards and threw herself at her friend's feet.

Save me! she gasped, save me! take me away! Teach me—help me—to remember. It is all here—here, clutching frantically at her heart, then her head, and I cannot remember!

Marguerite stooped, raised Agnes, and said very gently, but firmly:

You must not give way like this, dear. It will all come back to you by-and-by. Come with me, and sit down by me, and we can talk together about your trouble.

It was wonderful how instantaneous was the effect of Marguerite's influence. Agnes submitted at once; she let Marguerite lead her to the couch, and sate down without a word, nestling like a frightened child within the other's encircling arms.

I couldn't help it, she whispered, penitently. It came upon me in a rush—and I went mad again.

No, dear, you were not mad; you were only excited; but you will be quite yourself again soon; and we won't talk about memory, or anything of that kind until you are calmer. Then it will be easy to think.

Will it? The thoughts crowd so, and chase each other about, and so I can't lay hold of anything.

Well, I am going to sing to you now, and then we shall be able to talk.

Yes, go and sing; it soothes me. Marguerite, when I am quite well, you will have to come away with me, I can't live without you.

Marguerite felt herself grow white, but she said, watching Agnes keenly:

But you will have your husband you know, and you won't want me.

Yes, I shall have him, said Agnes, but still I shall want you; how do you think I could live without you?

Marguerite kissed the white forehead, and rose to go to the piano. That dream of Agnes' could never be realized. How could the woman who loved Vincent Dare live with those who must needs hold his very name in abhorrence?

She sate down and sang song after song, Agnes still begging for one more, till at last she could sing no more.

I must rest now, she said, smiling, and seeing how beneficial the music had been to Agnes. The wild look had quite left the blue eyes; the whole face was calmer—more composed. They sat down together again, and then Agnes asked, abruptly:

Where is Vincent Dare?

Marguerite started, but instantly recovered herself.

Why do you ask? she said. You do not want to see him?

I want to see him? What for? He has done me evil—deadly evil. Yes, he brought me here. Did I tell you that?

I don't think you did.

All! well, then I tell you now. You must not let him love you, Marguerite; he will destroy you. He loved me once, and you see what he has done to me.

But Amy, he——

Amy! interrupted Agnes. Why do you call me Amy?

It is your name, said Marguerite, who had purposely used it.

It is not my name I am Agnes.

Marguerite drew in her breath. Another stride towards the final consummation.

How do you know your name is Agnes she asked, gently.

How do I know it? cried the other, excitedly. How do I know it? How do you know your name is Marguerite? Do you think I am mad? Oh! no, I am not mad now!

She sprang to her feet. Marguerite rose also. Agnes went swiftly to the door, and tried to open it.

Let me out! she said. I am going home. I'll be a prisoner no longer!

Agnes my dear, listen to me!

No I won't. I'll get out and go home.

The old frenzy was returning. Marguerite tried to soothe and calm her brother's wife, but this time even her influence failed. Agnes tried wildly to open the door, which being locked, of course resisted all her efforts.

You have the key! she cried to Marguerite, and I mean to get out. I know it all—I remember—I'm not mad. Langton will forgive me! Langton Langton!

With a savage cry, she sprang upon Marguerite; but the latter had expected the onslaught, and was prepared for it. She seized Agnes's hands in a strong nervous grip, and, strive as she would, Agnes could not free herself.

The key; she grasped, the key!

ODDS AND ENDS.

Stripes are more than overfashionable and most of the ginghams are lace-striped.

THE TIME TO ACT.—If you are threatened with Headache, Constipation, Biliousness or weakness, procure at once a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and use it according to instructions. Prompt action is necessary in order that your trouble may be cured before it becomes chronic.

Col. Robert Ingersoll is one of the closest students of the Bible in the United States.

A POSTMASTER'S OPINION.—"I have great pleasure in certifying to the usefulness of Hagyard's Yellow Oil," writes D. Kavanagh Postmaster of Umfraville, Ont. "Having used it for soreness of the throat, colds, burns, etc., I find nothing equal to it."

Coat basques, with large, square pockets low upon the hips, are favored for house wear.

NOVA SCOTIA NEWS.—"I had Scrofula on my neck very bad for two years, had tried all remedies and doctors, but did not get any help until I got a bottle of your Burdock Blood Bitters which cured me of it entirely." James Cochrane, Fox River, Cumberland Co., N. S.

Gold-gimp and galloon are used to trim moss-green, Gobelin-blue and terra-cotta cloth gowns.

IT SELDOM FAILS.—J. D. Cameron, of Westlake, Ainslie Cape Breton, had inflammatory rheumatism which Hagyard's Yellow Oil cured after all other treatments had failed. Hagyard's Yellow Oil is sold by all dealers in medicine.

Otto, the poor mad king of Bavaria, is slowly dying, locked up in his solitary castle of Furstenried.

CANNOT BE EXCELLED.—I have the pleasure in saying that Hagyards Pectoral Balsam cannot be excelled for curing Coughs, Colds and Loss of Voice. It cured my brother completely. So says Ira McNead of Poplar Hill, Ont., regarding this popular remedy.

To keep silver pieces looking new do not rub them but pat them dry; this is on the authority of a manufacture.

MOST USEFUL.—L. A. Hanson, of Bowmanville, Ont., says he has found Burdock Blood Bitters to be a good medicine for Liver Complaint, Dizziness, Headache and Dimness of vision. B B. B. improves the appetite, aids digestion and gives renewed strength to the worn out system.

Half a teaspoonful of common salt dissolved in a little water and drink will instantly relieve heartburn.

Almost a Panic.

An examination of the weekly reports of deaths for the past month in Boston and other towns and cities in the country, reveals an alarming condition, owing to the great increase of deaths from Pneumonia as compared with previous years.

If this increase continues as it has for the last few weeks, a panic will certainly result. For example, the weeks ending January, 14 and 21, one-fifth of the deaths in Boston from all causes were the results of pneumonia. More than one hundred people died of this dreadful disease in that short time, and the mortality all over the country seems rather to be increasing than abating. Is it possible that medical skill and science can find no means to baffle and cure this terrible plague? Physicians seem powerless, and all theories regarding the disease, and the persons most liable to an attack, are broken down by its universal ravages. Neither old, middle age, or young persons are exempt. Tendency to lung trouble used to be considered a predisposing cause for pneumonia. But this season the strongest and most healthy lungs in men and women seem to be no safe-guard. We believe, however, that it is possible to prevent the disease if not cure it, and that, too, by a simple remedy within the reach of all. We read lately in a pamphlet published by Dr. I. S. Johnson & Co. Boston, Mass., a method of treating pneumonia by the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

Certainly the remedy is simple, and can be obtained almost anywhere. It is an absolute fact that remedy known will break up and cure a cold so quickly as this old-fashioned household medicine. And a severe cold is always without exception the first stage of pneumonia.

Johnson & Co. will send a copy of this pamphlet to any person free. The direction given in the pamphlet for preventing pneumonia are based on sound and common sense, and, without a shadow of doubt, would succeed nine times in ten.

Lawyer.—I wouldn't believe Blinks under oath. Col. Tragedy Walker moved to take from the table the following resolution:

"Resolved, Dat de washin' machine is a greater public benefactor dan de railroad."

Samuel Shin supported the motion, but Brother Gardner passed it by and asked:

"Brudder Walker, didn't you start fur Toledo a few days ago?"

"Yes, sah."

"Started to go on de railroad kyars?"

"Yes, sah."

"You was put off bekase you couldn't pay yer fare?"

"I was put off bekase I'd forgot my money, sah."

"Exactly; an' dis resolushun is in de way of revenge?"

"Y-yes, sah."

"De object ar' to weaken confidence in railroads?"

"Y-yes, sah."

"An' build up a feeling of security in de washin' machine, which nebber jumps de track or goes frew a bridge?"

"Dat's it, sah."

"Well, de resolushun will be tooken from de table an' placed in de stove. If you want to be revenged on de railroads you mus' lie in ambush an' lick a conductor. No man kin use dis club to grind his private axes."—Lime Kiln Club in Detroit Free Press.

No Chance with the Small Boy.

One way to worship Buddha in the temple of Kiota, Japan, is to chew "prayer paper," and when soft throw it in the form of a pellet at the god through a wire screen. If it goes through and sticks on the god the prayer will be answered; if it hits on the screen it is no good. The American school boy, who can hit a mark on the ceiling every time with a paper ball would never miss having his prayer answered in the temple at Kiota; nor would it be so difficult to persuade him to "engage in prayer" in that country. The god would have to hump himself to answer all the prayers.—Norristown Herald.

Too Much to Stand.

American (in Canada)—As I was coming along the street I saw Mr. De Thief, the great American embezzler, being taken to the police station.

Canadian—Yes, Mr. De Thief is a very valuable addition to our society as he spends his money freely, but he must learn to obey our laws even if he is rich and generous.

"Eh? What has he been doing?"

"Driving faster than a walk on Sunday."—Omaha World.

Real Estate Deal.

Dairyman—Got any dairy farms for rent?

Agent—No, but I have a few acres which might do for one.

"Grass on it?"

"No, nothing but clay."

"Humph! Hasn't it ever been cultivated?"

"No; it used to be a brickyard."

"What is there on it, anything at all?"

"It has a never failing spring."

"I'll take it."—Omaha World.

The Prodigal Father.

"Have you strawberries?" he asked.

"Yes," said the dealer, with a shudder. He had invested his all in the mad speculation and two pint and two half pint baskets.

"Go me one, please; that red berry on top, if you will. It's my little girl's birthday, and I promised her something choice." And he laid down a shining piece of gold.—New York Sun.

Liberal.

"What do you want?" he inquired of the man who held the subscription book.

"One dollar."

"And what for?"

"To bury a policeman."

The sport fished out a $5 bill and handed it to the man.

"Bury five," he said.—Chicago News.

Hardly a Decent Burial.

Smith—Yes; buried in thought.

Jones—Mighty shallow grave, ain't it?—Washington Critic.

A Delicate Compliment.

Miss Clara—Young Mr. Sampson paid me such a pleasant compliment last evening, Ethel.

Miss Ethel—Oh, did he?

Miss Clara—Yes; I was complaining about being compelled to do some shopping in that dreadful rain storm yesterday. He thought I must have found it delightful because it was such fine weather for ducks. He has such a delicate way of putting things.—The Epoch.

Preferred Plugs.

Two ladies sitting in a street car were talking about dogs.

"I don't know one kind of a dog from another," remarked one. "They are all either little or big dogs to me, but if I have a preference it is for one of those noble mustangs that are such fine watch dogs."

"While I prefer an English plug," said the other lady. "It is the only dog that interests me."—Youth's Companion.

His Contribution to "The Century."

The young man who aspires to be a journalist came around last night and announced complacently: "I've just had one of my contributions accepted by The Century." When closely questioned he acknowledged that the contribution was $3 for a year's subscription to the magazine.—Buffalo Courier.
