The Mother's Question.

O. I. Ward.

I'v a darling girl and a pr cious boy,
And side by side,
My joy and my pride,
They stand. I look at them both, and then—
Ah, how can I choose
Which of the two
Shall be the more pure!
I cannot, I'm sure. Can you?

My boy and my girl go out in the world;
I bid my boy shun
The temptations of rum.
But my girl—Ah, she must be pure
(The world says so,)
As the falling snow;
But why purer than he
Ought my girl to be? Tell me.

The same home nest, the same sweet love,
The tenderest care,
Together shared
While they, my helpless babes;
Now, as they grow,
Should I bestow
Less thought that he
Be pure as she? Tell me.

Ah! tell me—tell me, ye who can,
Just when and where
Being more care
For my darling girl, than for my boy?
When he may be
Less pure in thought,
Less blamed than she
For mischief wrought? Tell me.

Great God! These boys, these precious boys—
We pray Thee sanctify
Their lives to purify!
Their parents we, help us to ne'er forget
That our dear boys
Should seek to be
As pure as girls,
From stain as free—
Why should they not? Tell me—Tell me.

DRIVEN INSANE.

A Beautiful Girl and Her Cruel Father—Tragic Ending of What Promised to be a Happy Marriage.

NETHERWOOD, Pa., Dec. 8—Miss Amanda Hasson has been adjudged hopelessly insane, as a result of her father's opposition to her lover, whom she had expected to marry before Christmas. Miss Hasson is the daughter of Charles Hasson, a wealthy resident of Netherwood, where also resides her betrothed, Howard Masterson, the son of wealthy parents. Preparations were in progress for the wedding, which attracted much attention on account of the popularity of the young couple. Two weeks ago, however, it was reported that the harmonious relations between the Hasson family and Mr Masterson had been disturbed, owing to the circulation of a story about Masterson detrimental to his character, Young Masterson bore in Netherwood a spotless reputation, but he made frequent trips from home in the interest of his father's business. It was on one of those occasions he was charged with frequenting a place of questionable character, and Mr Hasson thereupon forbade him paying further attention to his daughter, even though the day of their marriage had been made public.

Amanda was deeply grieved over the charges against her lover, which she characterized as false, and the creation of malicious people who envied her happiness. She tried to reason with her father, but to no purpose. Mr. Hasson was resolute, and asserted that he had the most convincing proof of Masterson's guilt. Under pain of severe punishment he forbade her ever to be again seen in his company or to have any communication with the man who had thus insulted her.

Amanda closely confined herself to her room, making frequent appeals to her father to permit one interview with Masterson in order to satisfy herself of his guilt or innocence, but he was unrelenting. He would never permit him to cross his threshhold no matter what the result would be. Meanwhile Masterson was doing stratagem to communicate with her, but every means of doing was cut off. He at length wrote the following note, which failed to reach her, and instead fell into the hands of her father, who, from that time, did not permit Amanda to see anyone unaccompanied by some member of the family:

"SATURDAY NOON.

"DEAREST AMANDA: The false accusations that have been hurled against me by malicious people, which, of course, ere this have reached your ears, and the ungentlemanly and tyrannical spirit of your father, have made me the most miserable of all living creatures. The charges are false, and I hereby challenge either your father or those from whom he received his information to prove the truth of them. The law presumes that a man is innocent until he is proven guilty. Your father in this case has acted the part of judge and jury, pronouncing sentence of guilt before a single word could be said either in the way of a denial or explanation.

"If you believe me innocent, as I think you do, I appeal to you in Heaven's name to make one final effort to leave the house to morrow night by the safest means you can employ, and I will meet you near the lower gate at any hour between eight o'clock that night and four in the morning. I implore and beseech you to obey my command. Once away our marriage can soon be arranged, after which we have nothing to fear. Any display under the circumstances can very readily be dispensed with.

"Faithfully, HOWARD."

This letter was conclusive evidence that Masterson would resort to desperate means to accomplish his ends, and for the purpose of creating an unfavorable impression against the man who proposed an elopement, Mr Hasson read the contents of the letter to Amanda. Its effect, however, was the contrary. She demanded to hear his story of the charges against him, but he positively declined.

Amanda became ill, refused to be seen or see anyone, even the members of the family. Her condition rapidly grew worse, and yesterday morning she was declared hopelessly insane by the physicians who were summoned to attend her. Miss Hasson is 23 years of age, accomplished, vivacious and handsome. Mr. Masterson is 25 years of age, a gentleman of culture and refinement, who, it is now believed, is innocent of the reports circulated against him. The tragic end, however, of what was to be a magnificent wedding, creates the deepest sorrow, the entire responsibility of which seems to be placed upon the unfortunate girl's father, who is almost crazed with grief because of his refusal to listen to her appeals.

GLADSTONE AND IRELAND.

Rev. Dr. Parker Pays a High Tribute to "the Grand Old Man."

Rev. Dr. Parker delivered his lecture on Gladstone to a delighted audience of fully 2,500 at Chicago on Monday evening, 22nd ult. In closing he said:—

"The last instance of Gladstone's progressiveness is seen in his treatment of the Irish question. (Applause.) The Irish question can never recede or retreat from the lines laid down by Mr. Gladstone. Some gentlemen—the Liberal-Unionists"—would give Ireland "a large measure of local self government." They would let Ireland empty out her own ashes, and do her own scrubbing and cleaning, but she couldn't be trusted with a key to her own front door. Ireland was proud and declined, thank you. "Ireland has national aspirations, and they will presently be satisfied." (Applause.) The speaker had once spoken to Mr. Gladstone about the fears of Irish Protestant, and Mr. Gladstone replied that the greatest opponents to his measures were among the Roman Catholics of England, and Gladstone opposed Home Rule when he believed Home Rule was demanded only by a faction, but when the general election showed that Ireland wanted it he was in favor of it. Parliament, said Gladstone, exists for the country, not the country for Parliament. 'Gladstone has been consistent all through,' said Dr. Parker. 'He is ready to concede a great measure of self-government. I hope he will succeed. I know he will. (Applause.) Every election is helping him. The feeling is increasing that he has laid down the only lines on which we can expect the pacification, the tranquility and the prosperity of Ireland.' The Liberal-Unionists were of little importance. Gladstone's progress might be slow because his sweep was vast.

"Salisbury has handcuffs for Ireland; Gladstone has great proposals of pacification. This is the man for whose life we daily pray—the man who will confer on England immortal fame—

"'Like some tall cliff that rears its awful form,
Swells from the vale and midway meets the storm;
Though rolling clouds around its base may spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head.'"

Nearest to the Pole.

The point farthest north reached by any exploring party is 260 miles from the north pole. Beyond this are ice gorges insurmountable, and frost so severe that no human ingenuity has yet constructed any appliance to withstand its cold. It blisters the skin like extreme heat. The greatest progress ever made across this desolate wilderness was at the rate of six miles a day, the explorers often resting as many days as they had journeyed miles in a single day.

She Was Poor, but She Was Happy.

She was only a poor scrub woman. Her hair was unkempt, her face was unconventional as to soap and water, and her clothing was scant, of meanest quality, and worn and ragged. But she wore a bustle—not one of your home-made affairs, but a real store bustle; a bustle not of cotton and starch, but a bustle composed of wires and springs and tapes; nay, more, it was a bustle reinforced by reeds whose outlines stood out frankly beneath the scant drapery which served but to make its exterior framework visible. How contentedly did she ply her brush upon the marble steps! She was poor; she was meanly clad: her occupation was menial. But she bore herself happily—nay, jauntily—in the proud consciousness of the bustle, which made up for all deficiencies and obliterated all sorrow and sadness, all grief and gloom. Vive la tournure!

Thought He Was Boulanger.

A garden laborer entered the courtyard of the police station of the 1st district of the city of Brussels the other day toward sundown, and began commanding an invisible army in a loud voice. At the same time he flourished a hazel switch like a sword, and marched to and fro, as if going up and down the front of a line of soldiers. To an officer accosting him he said: "I am the general, Boulanger, and we are marching against the Germans now." The officer coaxed him into the office, and the police doctor examined the self-styled general, and pronounced him insane. He was taken to the asylum

Suicide of a Demented Girl.

An English family having placed a daughter, whose mind was slightly deranged, at a private asylum in Germany, went at the beginning of this month to see after her, and took her with them to return home. They went aboard the steamer Norwich at Antwerp to pass across to Harwich, England. When the steamer was clear out of the harbor and in the centre of the river the girl, who was far from complete recovery, took advantage of a moment when she was not watched and jumped overboard. She disappeared immediately, and the body has not been recovered.

The President's Staff.

The president of the United States is allowed the following named corps of assistance: A private secretary at a salary of $3,250: an assistant private secretary at $2,250, a stenographer at $1,800; five messengers at $1,200 each; a steward; two doorkeepers at $1,200 each; two ushers at $1,400 and $1,200; a watchman at $900; telegraph operators and minor clerks. Then he has for incidental expenses, $8,000; for White House repairs, carpets, etc., $12,500, fuel, $2,500; a greenhouse, $4,000; gas, matches, livery, $15,000.

A Suspicious Circumstance.

Father—What's that noise in the next room?

Mother—It's Bobby singing "I want to be an Angel," dear little fellow.

Father—Well, you had better go and see what he is up to.

BLACKVILLE.

Indiantown Branch Inspected—Big Milling Business—In the Lumber Woods.

BLACKVILLE, Dec. 5.—Thos. Rideout, Dominion government engineer, on Tuesday last, inspected the extension of the Indiantown Branch. He was accompanied by Engineer Straton and Trackmaster Scott, to whom he expressed himself well pleased with the improvements that have recently been made by the N & W Railway Company on this portion of their road. Our people hope soon to see regular trains run direct to Newcastle over this railway.

Two of our leading mechanics have each imported a breech-loading rifle of the latest make and are daily at practice back of the grist mill. A stranger would think we had a rifle company practising for a match. An empty flask—not emptied by them though—at which they perseveringly blazed away for several afternoons is said to be no more.

Fairley's grist mill has been leased for the season by Messrs. J & W McConnell, who are doing a rushing business. Since they began grinding on Sept. 20th, they have put through about 1,000 bushels of wheat and 4,000 bushels of buckwheat and expect to be kept busy all winter. Only one set of stones is run at a time as the mill has but one cleanser.

In the saw mill clapboards of a superior quality are now being sawn.

The I C R people are building a much needed tank at Indiantown to supply water for locomotives there.

Mr Bowser has completed the painting, etc., of the Presbyterian church which looks much better.

Mr E W Gaynor, lumber scaler, returned Saturday from a cruise among Mr Fairley's camps on Bartholomew river He reports the snow there sufficient for "good doings" and partridge abundant. During the winter he will make weekly trips to these camps, 13 in number, taking the N & W to Boiestown.

The river was found closed over here on Friday morning and the first crossing on the ice for the season was made that day about 3 miles above the bridge. The ice has probably come to stay this time.

GRAND FALLS.

New Buildings at the Falls—The Hotel Business.

GRAND FALLS, Dec. 9th.—Mr. Mayberry proprietor of the Grand Falls hotel, is doing a rushing business this winter. Mr. William Tidlie, the old time lumberman makes his headquarters at this hotel.

Mr. Archibald Hallet, the N. B. railway agent, has just completed a large and handsome residence near the station; and will now furnish the weary traveller with all the comforts to be had in a mod-

Mr. Siros, has just completed a handsome two story building on the corner opposite the "Forbes House," the lower flat of which is being used as a store. The second flat has been fitted up for a hall.

SOUTHAMPTON.

Doings in the Upper Part of the County.

SOUTHAMPTON, Dec. 7.—During service on Sunday there was quite a panic in the church for a short time caused by Master Will Oldham's colt getting loose and wandering around among the other horses there tied. No damage was done save the upsetting of one buggy.

The death is announced of Mrs. Hatherine Bartlett, relict of the late Charles Bartlett, of Upper Southampton. Deceased was a consistant member of the Free Christian Baptist church here, and by her death the church and parish have lost a steady member and a mild and sympathetic friend. The funeral was held on Wednesday and was largely attended.

Another family, that of Mr. John Farnham removed from here during the past week, and have taken up their abode in Temperonce Vale.

Some cold weather last week, beginning on Tuesday. The ice in the river came to a standstill on Friday, and on Saturday and Sunday quite a few took advantage of the temporary bridge—temporary because to-day it is running, and all indications point to a big thaw. It is perhaps as well that it should be so, as somebody said that there would be an notion entered against Mr. Hatfield or somebody else if the ferry had to stop just at this time.

That was a very unsavory parcel found on the road by those two young men on their homeward way Sunday night.

Mr. Hull is working extra time in his tannery to get off his fall stock of leather.

HAYNESVILLE.

Work of the Farmers and Lumbermen—Other Notes.

HAYNESVILLE, Dec. 8th.—Weather very fine as usual, a little snow fell but not enough to make sleding.

Lumbering is being carried on quite extensively in these parts this winter Messrs Wiggins & Hill are lumbering on the head waters of Carville Brook. We expect to have some wealthy men in our midst next summer.

People are now getting their fall thrashing done. Messrs Trice & Tucker are doing great work. They have got a Little Giant, Small and Fisher's make.

One day last week the school was shut down for the want of wood it is not known why the wood was not got before.

BEAR ISLAND.

A Big Budget of Interesting Notes from up Along the River.

BEAR ISLAND, Dec 7.—We have no snow here yet, although we have had several flurries.

The ground is frozen quite hard and roads very rough. There is not much travelling unless it is somebody that has to go to Fredericton with something to market.

The farmers are fixing up for winter, hauling out manure, removing and building fences, killing their poultry and hogs, etc. Byron McNally killed twelve hogs and pigs yesterday, but I have not as yet learnt the weight of them.

Mr. Phillips, the mail carrier, has made very good time, considering the traveling and weather.

A week ago to-day Sanford Burden was buried in Lower Prince William in the old burying ground, where about all of the Burden family who have died in this part of the province are buried. The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev Mr Ross, of Prince William, assisted by Rev Gideon Swim. Although it was uncertain when the corpse would get here the house was full, the day being cold and windy a good many were deterred from crossing the river.

Most of the young men of this neighborhood are away this winter in the lumber woods. Most of them are over in Maine as wages are higher there than here; but a good many have gone with Kilburn and the Gilmans, Brown & Burden in the Province of Quebec. George Burden returned Wednesday to the Quebec lumber woods.
