Successful Farming.

In a recent interview with Mr. Ernest Neily, of Brooklyn, near Middleton, we learned certain facts in connection with his experience as a farmer which we think will be of interest to our readers. A few years ago, Mr. Neily, who is the youngest son of the late Parker Neily, found himself in possession of a farm not exactly run down or worn out, it is true, but in a state of productiveness far from being satisfactory. He mowed over seventy acres of ground, which averaged one-half ton to the acre, giving him a yield of about thirty-five tons of hay per year. His other crop yield was in about the same proportion. He had been farming in this way for several years, following the methods and in pretty much the same ruts as his father and grandfather before him, with very indifferent success, feeling thankful if at the end of the year his income was sufficient to meet expenses. With him farm life was not as described by Horace Greely—"the ceaseless moil of a galley slave;" it was just the same as that of the average farmer who is "land poor," and who has not yet woke to the fact that farming requires thought, intelligence and enterprise, just as much as any other occupation or profession.

Being a young man of more than the average enterprise and intelligence, and noticing the results of some of our small fruit growers by pursuing modern and scientific methods, Mr. Neily argued that the same methods applied to mixed farming would produce the same satisfactory results. So he began experimenting. He at first plowed about 18 acres of his hay land, treated it with a chemical fertilizer, sowed oats, and seeded it with grass. The first year he had an abundant crop of oats and straw, and the second and succeeding years he has had an average of from 2 to 2½ tons of hay per acre. He has now been doing this for the fourth year, and the net result for the present year will give an idea of his success. Besides now having 35 tons of hay in his barn, the amount he would have had under his old method of farming, he has pressed and sent to Halifax market 61 tons of hay, which netted him $9 per ton, and 10 tons of straw which cleared $5 per ton. There is a clear profit of $800 from the two articles of hay and straw alone. This year he treated 15 acres, from which he raised 700 bushels of oats. Counting these at 40 cents per bushel they will pay for fertilizer, labor and seed, and leave a net profit of something like $100 besides, while next year the same ground will give 25 or 30 tons extra of hay. It will thus be seen that his method while requiring some outlay at the start, pays its way as its goes, and yields a much greater net profit from year to year than the old one. What Mr. Neily has done in the way of increasing the yield of hay and grain he has also done to an even greater extent in his orchard. By the use of a sprayer he has completely exterminated the caterpillar and cankerworm, which until recently made life a burden to him during the month of June, and by the judicious use of certain fruit fertilizers he has increased many times the output of his orchard.

Mr. Neily has directed us to say, in conclusion, that he received his inspiration, so to speak, from Middleton's well-known fruit-grower, G. C. Miller, who has been his faithful friend and counsellor through all his experimenting. The fertilizers used were of Mr. Miller's own make, and the result seems to be as gratifying to the latter gentleman as to Mr. Neily himself. Both these gentlemen are enthusiastic farmers, and are delighted with the results of their efforts, the one in the line of small fruit and the other in that of mixed farming. Mr. Miller has made ten acres of land produce $2000 worth of fruit in one year, after a few years of preparation. In a short time Mr. Neily will be able to show equally profitable results from mixed farming. And while this can be done who is going to say that farming does not pay in this country? Or why should our agriculturists complain of hard times? The fact of the matter is, there is just as much money to be made in farming to-day as ever there was at any time in our history, but it is not by following in the same rut as our fathers and grandfathers. The times have changed since then, and those of us who do not change with them will find ourselves left behind in the race.

The MONITOR extends its most hearty congratulations to the two gentlemen mentioned above, and wishes them the most unqualified success in their future efforts. They are doing an important work, which is calculated to be of great benefit to their brother farmers as well as to themselves. If he is a benefactor to the race who makes two blades of grass grow where but one has grown before, how much more so is he who increases the productiveness of the soil by five or ten fold, and almost literally makes the wilderness blossom as the rose.

—In the death of Jay Gould, which occured at his house in New York on the 2nd inst., one of the richest, and in many respects, most remarkable, men of the nineteenth century, has passed off the stage of action. Born in New York state in 1836, he is now at the time of his death but 55 years of age, just in the prime of life. His has been a remarkable career. Beginning life as a poor boy he has been successively a surveyor, publisher, bank manager, railroad magnate and stock speculator generally, until at the time of his death he controlled about 14,000 miles of railway. The one object of his life seems to have been to accumulate wealth, and in this one object he has been abundantly successful. Jay Gould was one of the richest men of the present century, but when we say that what else can we say in his favor. He stopped at nothing that stood in his way. He was treacherous, base, intriguing; he regarded not the widow's tears nor the orphan's cry, the suicide's grave nor the pauper homes he caused. When Jim Fisk died, or rather was assassinated, he was generally supposed to be a millionaire. To-day Fisk's widow is living in poverty and obscurity in a small cottage in South Boston. By the most barefaced fraud and rascality Jay Gould got all of Fisk's property into his possession and has held it ever since. Gould had few friends when living and few will mourn him when dead. He was as a sponge which absorbs everything and gives back nothing in return. He created no benevolent or philanthropic institutions as a lasting monument to his name. He did nothing for education, nothing for christianity, nothing for suffering humanity. The magnificent opportunities he had of leaving those behind him who would rise up and call him blessed have all been disregarded. He was simply Jay Gould, the pirate of Wall street, the financial wrecker of the United States. And then he died and left $100,000,000 or more. Yes, he left it, because he couldn't take it with him.

Any man can be rich who chooses to pay the price for it that Gould did. But who would wish to do so? Where now are his bonds and his mortgages, his stocks and his securities; where is his gold and his silver? And what do all these things amount to anyhow, "when nature has paid her just debt?"

—Good Fresh Bread at G. H. Dixon's.

Bridgetown's Sash and Door Factory.

Among the business changes which have recently taken place in town is the removal of the above enterprise from the J. B. Reed & Sons property on Granville street to the building now on School street, formerly the old Baptist church. Within the past few months the premises have been put in convenient shape for the business now being carried on, and having a ground floor of 60x40 ft., with a second floor of equal capacity, offers every advantage for the speedy execution of all orders both from abroad and at home. The plant, consisting of circular saws, moulders, planers, jointers, tenoning, mortising, and lathe machines are of the most approved types and from the best manufacturers, and in a few days other additions of important machines will be made. The power is furnished by one of Leonard's boilers and an upright engine, of 25 and 20 horse power, respectively, while the belt shifting is done with the Fisher & Kinney belt-shifting device, an improvement for saving power far superior to anything yet known, and for which the genius of the inventor was rewarded last year by a very handsome medal. We may add that within a few weeks the firm has become even more strengthened by admitting Mr. J. Henry Morris as a partner, being now known as Shaw, Fisher, and Morris. The outlook for the future success of the enterprise is most encouraging, as the ordersheet is constantly being replenished by patrons along the line from Yarmouth to Canning.

Valley Telephone Company.

From day to day the line of The Valley Telephone Company is becoming more popular with the general public, and instruments are being called for all along its length by doctors, lawyers, merchants, hotel proprietors, and the business offices of other important enterprises as well as many private residences,—the number already placed and in operation being far beyond the anticipated requirements of the projectors. The people of Wolfville have taken hold of the enterprise with more than commendable spirit, as at the present writing not less than forty-one telephones are connected with the central office of the town, the circuit taking in Horton Landing, Grand Pre, Gaspereaux and White Rock Mills, with Port Williams to be added in the near future. The central office at Middleton is also another of great importance, connecting as it does with Margaretville, Spa Springs, Kingston, Wilmot, South Farmington, Torbrook, the Iron Mines, etc., making a total of twenty-six. Berwick has also some twelve instruments leading from its central and has recently been extended to Somerset. Annapolis has some twelve attached to its central and Granville Ferry seven, with more being called for; while Kentville and Bridgetown each have thirteen connected with their centrals. The following is a list of the names with the corresponding numbers for this circuit:—

DURLING—STODDART.

The residence of Mr. John Stoddart, Stoddartville, was the scene of a large and pleasant gathering on Tuesday, Nov. 29th, at 2. o'clock, p.m., the occasion being the marriage of his daughter Ada Stoddart, to Mr. Isaac Durling. The bride was tastefully attired in a rich brown travelling suit, and carried a beautiful bouquet of white chrysanthemums, her little neice Miss Nora Stoddart acting as maid of honor. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. B. Hemmeon, assisted by Revs. J. R. Downing and S. Langille. After congratulations, a sumptuous repast was served. The guests then accompanied the happy couple to the depot, where, amid showers of rice, followed by the good wishes of their friends, they took their departure for a short tour before returning to their home at Lawrencetown. The number of useful and costly presents received by the bride shows the high esteem in which she was held by her large circle of friends.

Launch of a Very Fine Vessel.

There was launched from the shipyard of Messrs. S. Harris & Son, at Margaretville, on Saturday morning last, a very handsome three-masted schooner of some 300 tons, named the Elmo. She was constructed under the supervision of the veteran master-builder, Mr. James Martin, and be it said to his credit, that the Elmo is admitted to be one of the finest ever launched along the Bay of Fundy shore. Her dimensions are: Length of keel, 116 ft.; breadth of beam, 31 ft.; depth of hold, 11½ ft. The workmanship is superior in every respect, and no pains or expense were spared in the construction. The Elmo, under the command of Capt. Simeon Baker, left immediately for Cunard, at which port she will load potatoes for Havana.

DEATH OF HANDLEY BISHOP.—The sad announcement of the death of Mr. Handley Bishop reached here on Wednesday afternoon last. The deceased lived on the Waldeck Line near Bear River, and a few minutes before his death complained of not feeling well. Heart disease, from which he had suffered considerably of late was the cause of his death. Mr. Bishop had reached the age of fifty, was a man of large and powerful physique, and from outward appearances looked hale and hearty. At the last session of the Municipal Council he was appointed special constable for enforcing the Scott Act prosecutions, an office he filled in an unflinching and energetic manner. He leaves a widow and family besides many relatives and friends to mourn the sudden and unexpected demise.
