The Great O'Donoghue.

Knights and ladies pressed around them to offer greetings. The noble ladies brought Mary to a seat in their midst whilst the Knights besieged MacCarthy with questions about Sarsfield and the Irish in the service of foreign powers. The exciting scene was brought to a close by the assembled guests being summoned to supper. O'Donoghue had laid aside his armor and now appeared at the head of the table, attired in a costume similar to the others. Our travellers were seated at the left hand of the chieftain and were treated with marked courtesy. When the repast was finished the bards struck up hymns in praise of the chieftain and the ancient heroes of Ireland. The ladies were toasted in flowing goblets and then all retired for the night. Mary and her father were conducted to spacious sleeping apartments adjoining each other and left to retire. As both were worn out it was not long before they were fast asleep, and day-light was streaming in the windows before they awoke. They arose and ate sparingly of a breakfast which a servant brought into the father's room. Hardly had they finished when a knock was heard and the O'Donoghue entered the room.

'I bid you good morrow,' he said, 'and trust you have rested well.'

'Well, indeed, Sir Knight, and to thee we return thanks for thy generous hospital,' replied MacCarthy.

'Nay, nay,' exclaimed the knight, it is but the duty of every Irish knight to shelter and freed the weary traveler. But it is not for this I came hither. The horses that brought ye here await ye at the gate. There also ye will find two equerries, each of whom carries a thousand pounds of gold at his saddle bow. Out of this sum you can pay the knavish claim of your cousin and the balance will support you until your crops are grown.'

MacCarthy and his daughter were overcome with emotion at the knight's generosity and fain would have refused so munificent a gift, but the knight said with a smile.

'To refuse this is to wound me. As for thy villainous cousin, I will take care that the money does him no good. You can repay me by extending the hospitality of your house to the traveler and helping the friendless."

He conducted them to the courtyard where the horses awaited them and when they were mounted he walked as far as the outer gate to bid them farewell. Thanks to the noble animals on which they were mounted, our travelers were soon far on their way, and before the sun was in his noontide glory they drew rein at the paternal home of MacCarthy More. In answer to their summons a servant came out to meet them:—

'Tell thy master the MacCarthy More and his daughter are here to meet him,' commanded MacCarthy.

The servant went into the house and in a short space of time his master came out, and laying his hand on his sword said:

"What! Art thou here again, beggar? If thou thinkest thy soft words and the pretty face of your pauper jade, thy daughter, will help thy claim, thou are mistaken. A thousand pounds in yellow gold must though bring if thou wouldst have this noble house and those broad acres.'

'Curb thy tongue, good cousin,' sternly replied the MacCarthy More. A thousand pounds in gold do I bring thee. Send for the notary and give me a full receipt for the money, and for all claims on me and mine.'

When the churlish cousin saw the heavily laden saddle bags of the two attendants his manner changed. The gates were opened and his party entered. MacCarthy assisted his daughter to alight and celling on the attendants to follow him, entered the house and proceeded at once to the drawing-room. In a short time a notary entered. The gold was paid over and a receipt made out and handed to the MacCarthy More, who in the presence of all the tenantry, who had been called in, formally took possession of the place.

His cousin lost no time in getting away from the house with the gold across his saddle. His intention was to go to Tralee and deposit his money there, getting a letter of credit on bankers in London, his ultimate destination. He reached Tralee the next morning and proceeded at once to the bank, where on opening the bags, to his horror and dismay, he found the coins had turned into ginger-bread cakes. There they lay, instead of the shining gold, and every one of them had the king's stamp on it as before its metamorphosis. He raved and swore until he was black in the face. His servant, who was standing by, almost paralyzed with astonishment, tried to comfort him, but the infuriated man drew his sword and attacked him. To save himself the servant drew his own sword, ran his master through the body and jumping on his horse made his escape.

MacCarthy More and his daughter were soon settled in their new home and had the love and esteem of all. The two servants given to them by the O'Donoghue disappeared the very night they took possession of the old manor and were never seen again.

About two years afterwards, the MacCarthy More having saved up sufficient money to pay back the sum given him by the O'Donoghue, started out with a couple of attendants to find the knight's castle. They searched in vain, however and were obliged to return home with the money. On their way home, tradition says, their ears were greeted with the loveliest music ever heard by mortal men.

The beautiful Mary married one of the O'Briens, and their descendants have faithfully kept the pledge given by the MacCarthy More to the O'Donoghue, by entertaining the belated traveler as well as the friend with genuine Irish hospitality.

Indeed, as the veteran Major Haverty once told the writer, after a visit to his friend William O'Brien, 'He's the sort of a fellow that never does things by halves. You'll never get punch at his home mixed with hot water. He boils the whiskey.'—[Union and Times.

Miramichi Advance.

Beginning with the issue of November 6th, 1890, when the ADVANCE entered upon its Seventeenth Year of Publication!

The publisher made an important change in the terms on which the paper isfurnished to Subscribers. These include

1st. Strict adherence to the system of cash in advance for all subscriptions.

2nd. The reduction of the price of the paper to

One Dollar a Year!

It is to be particularly understood that all outstanding subscription accounts due after November 6th, 1890, are to be settled on the old terms, viz., $2 per year, the advertised credit rate.

I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE for two reasons.

The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is necessary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the ADVANCE to those non-paying subscribers.

The second reason is, that I wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local paper like the ADVANCE, the type of which must be set up especially for it.

Having now published the ADVANCE for nearly 19 years, and endeavored to make it a creditable representative of Miramichi and North Shore enterprise—a paper which may be taken into any household without fear that it has catered to sensationalism at the sacrifice of that cleanliness of matter, which is too often neglected by the press of the day—I have reason to hope the foregoing announcement will meet with general approval and be the means of largely increasing the circulation and influence of the paper.
