To the list of American papers published in Ontario may fairly be added the name of The Montreal Daily Witness, published in Montreal and pushed into circulation in this province with a persistency that would indicate some ulterior purpose of larger import than any mere financial benefit to the journal's private exchequer. If we are justified in calling The Mail and Globe American papers from their attitude on the question of commercial union with the United States, involving as it necessarily does political union more or less at first, but decidedly more as the years go on, a newspaper of which an edition is issued both at Montreal and New York is a fortiori a Yankee organ, and its utterances are liable to the suspicion that they are inspired by promoters on the southern side of the boundary line. We are doing no injustice to these papers when we say that the general impression among their journalistic brethren is that they are all in the same swim, subsidized to undermine our national independence. How otherwise can their extraordinary agreement be accounted for? Whether fomenting trouble in Manitoba over the disallowance question, or fostering the cause of annexation, their unanimity is wonderful, and all undoubtedly are tarred with the same stick.

In its issue of Tuesday last the special organ of peace and good will surpasses itself in the insidious effort to play the role of "There is a horse-pond close by, but pray don't duck him in it!" "The Dominion Government has entered on a course," says The Witness, "which if persisted in must inevitably end in an attempt to bring the volunteers of Ontario and Quebec face to face with the volunteers of Manitoba." Stuff and nonsense! It reads like a paragraph from a half-informed New York paper, unacquainted with our mode of Government. The equipment and organization of the militia in the several provinces, as well as their command and mobilization, are controlled from the Department of Militia at Ottawa; and only a desire to encourage civil war, ending, as a hope, in a disruption of Confederation — the precipitation of Manitoba into the American Union, could have prompted a sentence as wicked as it is ridiculous. If a rebellion against constituted authority were to break out in Manitoba the volunteers of the province as such could not be engaged in it. It is reasonable to suppose that as private individuals some are on one side and some on the other of the question; but a resort to arms is a settlement of the vexed question of disallowance which only the brain of an American enthusiast can harbor.

"It is certain that the people of Manitoba will appeal to force rather than submit." Thus speaks the missionary of the Gospel of Peace. The Covenanters of old would break a cavalier's head and hypocritically ask God's blessing on the deed, and it is among professional advocates of religion that the worst and bitterest feelings of the human race too often find a congenial lodgment. It is the duty of the respectable press to quiet rather than inflame the passions of the contending parties. The party of law and order in Manitoba comprises thousands of respectable citizens who deprecate violence, be their opinion of disallowance what it may. It is but the other day that journals of The Witness stripe had a lesson taught them in Toronto, which they would appear to have forgotten. On both sides of the Atlantic, and in Canada as well as the States, inflammatory articles appeared encouraging the visit of O'Brien "to beard Lord Lansdowne at his palace gates." And what was the result? The great unreckoned body of the people, sick of Irish disturbances, incensed against disloyalty and true to the national spirit, rose in their might, rallied round His Excellency, and so to speak wiped out O'Brien, The Globe and the political trimmers in our Canadian Legislature, as they would a dirty spot on a window pane—and all was clear and serene again in a moment.

On the questions of disallowance in Manitoba and of commercial union the advance guard of flappers are awhile having it all their own way. By and bye the public will take a hand in, and the flappers will fall prostrate, with clipped wings, never to rise from the Serbonian bog into which they have been decoyed by self-interested leaders. All countries contain a class of professional agitators, who do not succeed unless the great mass of respectable and educated people are with them, and never unless the inherent spirit of nationalism is awakened. Mr. Wiman knows that in no country are they more rigorously squelched than in the States. We have dealt with the absurdities of commercial union for months past almost ad nauseam. We have shown the equitable rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the matter of competing railways in the Prairie Province, built with the avowed object of diverting their trade. If the country has made a bad barzain it must get out of it as other losing contracts are avoided: by compensation duly awarded. But Kent and Sussex might as reasonably find fault with the British Parliament for disallowing the Channel Tunnel on national grounds as can Manitoba howl over a course adopted for the general good of the Dominion and the security of an important link in Confederation.

Both of these burning questions find the national party, comprising the men who are first Canadian and then seekers for the best living they can find in Canada, on the side of things as they are. The agitators counsel a new departure and a break in the adopted and traditional policy of the country. The great underlying strength of Canada is on the side of progress and patriotism, but opposed to internal disturbance. If a few hot-headed fire-brands, encouraged by The Witness and papers equally reckless and unprincipled, have recourse to violence they will at once be put down, and the Americans have taught us how to do it. In the United States no thin end of the wedge is allowed to penetrate. The man who would disrupt is speedily brought to his senses. There seems to us no good reason why the annexationist and secessionist treason writers in Canada should receive gentler treatment here than would be accorded to them in the country to which they belong, or of which they are the subsidized agents, and into [illegible] they desire us to fall. When for[illegible] any longer to be a virtue, the [illegible]ning counter to the national [illegible]ountry will be sorry that [illegible]adian lion. They will be [illegible]ence.

Next?

[illegible]innipeg received to-day [illegible] city the statement is [illegible]d to be first-class evi[illegible]uay has been able to [illegible]d River Railway by drawing on the following named provincial resources:

First, $80,000, Contractor Ryan's certified check, being 10 per cent. on the contract money.

Second, $50,000, advanced by the Nuns on the Premier's order for that sum on the Finance Minister, forestalling the Provincial subsidy.

Third, $55,000, representing that amount in the Government's hands, as infancy and trust funds lying in court and under their control.

Is this thing possible?

"No man will come back to a land of empty warehouses and closed workshops." This sound sentiment was uttered by The World the other day, but has been unwittingly credited by The Buffalo Times to The Globe. Our Buffalo contemporary seems disposed to flatter the good Deacon, whose paper has never been known to say anything so shortly and so well as to make the saying worth repeating.

Apropos of commercial union The Pittsburg Times says: "There has been a state of things leading up to such a union, and were that to come about it would not be taking an extremely long look ahead to predict that the breaking down of all barriers would ultimately follow in a 'more perfect union' of the two countries." Which is to say that commercial annexation means political annexation, and that before long. Were the Canadian organs of the propaganda as candid as are its American organs they would tell the truth oftener than they now do.

Responding to the remarks of a United States contemporary, the Kingston Whig asks: "And does the Canadian ballot system ensure purity?" The Whig correctly answers in the negative, but fails to qualify with the undoubted truth, that the present system is an improvement upon the old system, and a thousand miles ahead of the United States system. One more query—does the Ontario ballot system ensure secrecy—if not, who is to blame?

According to the annexationist catechism Canadian monopolists are horrible fellows who ought to be put down by process of legislation, but according to the same catechism American monopolists, such as Messrs. Gould and Wiman, are benefactors to be welcomed with open arms. It is the same with the American coal, sugar, oil and other rings. They are all right, because they are "American, you know."

Hamilton Spectator: "Hamilton seldom asks anything from the Government, but she does ask just now for a clock in the Post-office." The World gladly endorses Hamilton's modest demand. Every solid Conservative constituency, such as Hamilton is, ought to be enabled to find clock in Government buildings.

La Minerve warns the commercial annexationists that they need expect no aid or comfort from those who have so long and so successfully carried the N.P. banner in Canadian election campaigns. The esteemed Mail will of course construe this to mean that the Syllabus is antagonistic to annexation.

Mr. Wharton Barker of Philadelphia, from whom Mr. Wiman is alleged to have borrowed his notion of commercially annexing Canada to the United States, is chief of the syndicate which claims to have obtained railway and other concessions from China worth many millions. This American syndicate claims to have secured a monopoly of the Chinese concessions, but the cable despatches intimate that a British syndicate claims to have also obtained similar concessions. As the Polish adventurer who acted as Wharton Barker's agent in China is openly denounced by the New York press as a thief and an impostor, it is probable that he has fooled the Americans more than he has the Chinese, who are not much given to taking stock in foreign confidence games. Any people approached by the agents of New York syndicates do well to think several times before entering into any engagements with the latter.

The Detroit Journal has a despatch from Ottawa headed: "Looks like war—troops held in readiness for another Northwest rebellion." In the body of the despatch occurs this sample passage: "In the event of any trouble Premier Torquay, who is a halfbreed, would have at his back both the halfbreeds and Indians who took part in the rebellion of 1885." How Riel and some more of them are going to get there is not explained. But "Premier Torquay" is good. And yet Detroit is connected with Canada via a ferry boat.

The Waterloo C.U. Meeting.

Editor World: In your comments on the recent commercial union picnic held in this county you attempt to pooh-pooh the affair as "non-political" and "no party" on the ground that the chairman was "an ex-party newspaper organist" and "an Ontario official," and that "among his chief supporters was a lawyer" who is "a political partisan of the rankest type." "Annexationists," "party politicians of the lower grades," "underlings," "tools," etc., are a few of the other choice epithets that are hurled by you at those who, with myself, attended the meeting.

Permit me to say that, in this as in most of your diatribes on commercial union, you are barking up the wrong tree. Commercial union, so far at least, is simply a business and commercial question, and is fairly open to discussion by Ontario officials, lawyers, editorial slangwhangers and everybody else. The chairman of our mass-picnic is an old-time chairman of the Woolwich people at all sorts of non-political gatherings, and has, I believe, no decided opinion on C.U. one way or the other. He certainly expressed none at the meeting. He has been out of politics for a quarter of a century, and had as much to do with originating the picnic as either The World or myself. It is true he was once a journalist. Twenty-five years ago he was the editor of a Liberal newspaper which has been consistently Liberal ever since, neither on the fence nor under the fence, and which, unlike The World, has not lost its influence by boxing the compass on all sorts of questions, and being "everything by turns and nothing long." No "supporters," in the sense implied by your article, were required by the meeting. The Managing Committee was composed of men of both political parties; the meeting itself was attended by hundreds of persons of all shades of political opinion; and would have been attended by many hundreds more had the weather been favorable. As it was the excellent addresses of Prof. Goldwin Smith, Hon. William McDougall and Mr. Alfred Jury were listened to with the greatest interest and warmly applauded, amidst a drenching rain that would have dispersed any less earnest assemblage of people. What is more, the meeting was a fair reflex of the public opinion of the county. Whatever may be said against it—and as yet little worth speaking of has been said—the feeling in favor of commercial reciprocity is, I believe, universal amongst the intelligent farmers and a large and influential section of the manufacturers of Waterloo. Some of the small industries are perhaps hostile; and, if C.U. came in, these would probably go out with the receding tide of the N.P. But in the towns of Galt, Berlin and Waterloo there are established industries, small as well as large, that would welcome unrestricted reciprocity as a real boon. It will take something more than coarse personal abuse of the leading advocates of C.U. to make our people content with a trade policy that is against the laws of nature, and is already doomed. The truth is the agitation has got far beyond that stage, and The World will never properly discharge its duties as an organ of the trade rings and combinations until it recognizes that fact and deals with the subject on its merits, apart from personal vilification of its friends and supporters. Vilification is not the kind of argument to convince or persuade, and it never made a convert worth having. Let me add that, although an independent supporter of the Mowat Government, the "good game" said to be drawn by me as Crown Counsel might be much more "goodly" than they are. Whatever favorites the Government may have, I am not one of them. Goodness in fencing counsel is not an attribute of Reform Governments in this country; the counsel who would thrive on revenues from such a source has not yet been born. You may call me politically what you like, but please don't romance about the foes.

PATRON'S DAY OF DEFEAT.

CLINGSTONE WINS THE SPECIAL $3000 PURSE AT CLEVELAND.

He Takes Two Heats and Does a Walk-over—Toronto Red Hot After the International Pennant—A Coming Fresh Water Yachting Event—Spots of Sport.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 15.—Two of the most noted trotting horses in the world were booked to go at the fall meeting of the Driving Park Association this afternoon. They were Patron, the 2.14¼ sensation of the year, and Clingstone, Clingstone, in his great contest with Edwin Thorne several years ago, reduced his record to 2.14. There was a great crowd at the park and had weather not up from thousands of spectators when Patron came down the stretch. Then Clingstone appeared and the demonstration was repeated. Clingstone came on the track looking in fit condition for his race, but there was every confidence in Patron. He had met and defeated all comers without doing his best. He was a great favorite and sold in pools on big odds. First it was $12 to $30 on Patron, then $25 on Patron and $7 on Clingstone, but finally the tide turned and Clingstone was the favorite, selling at $25 to $10.

However great the confidence Patron could not win to-day. The cause of his defeat is a subject for much speculation. The time was slow, whereas the weather was fine and the track fast. Mr. Emery, his owner, says the horse was off physically. There were rumors after the race that Patron had been drugged, but they were discredited generally.

The race was for a purse of $300 offered by the Cleveland Driving Park Company. After Patron had lost two heats and won one he belt rang for the fourth heat, but Mr. Emery refused to allow his horse to start again, because of his condition and the darkness, whereupon the judges sent Clingstone a walk-over mile and a-weight into the stretch.

In the first heat Clingstone had the best of the send off, but Patron passed him at the half. Clingstone trotted a great city there and would have won the heat, but broke and Patron went under the wire in 2.17. The pools at this point sold at 25 to 7 in Patron's favor.

Clingstone got the start in the second heat, but was soon lapped by Patron, who broke badly, and when he was brought down he was 100 yards in the rear. He went at it again, and came into the home stretch hugging Clingstone's wheel. The pace was too great, however, and the demon took the heat in 2.19. Still Patron was the favorite in the betting.

Patron passed Clingstone in the third heat at the half. At the three-quarters he ledgby two lengths. On the home-stretch Clingstone was given the whip and came under the wire seven lengths in the lead, in 2.19. The pools now sold $25 to $12 on Clingstone.

It was late and darkness was coming, and to the surprise of everyone Mr. Emery, Patron's owner, refused to bring his horse out. Clingstone was, therefore, driven over the course in slow time and thus won the contest. Mr. Emery declared that Patron was sick and that it was too dark to trot.

Toronto 4, Beavers 2.

WOODSTOCK, Sept. 15.—The lacrosse match played here to-day between the Beavers of Woodstock and the Torontos was won by the latter by four goals to two. The Beavers took the first two games in sixteen and one minutes respectively. The Toronto took the next four, three of them being won in less than four minutes. The fifth game was an excellent exhibition of lacrosse and was only won after thirty-nine minutes' play. The match was not by any means a one-sided affair. The best of order prevailed.

TORONTO NEAR THE TOP.

The Home Club Wins from Newark by 12 to 6—Games to Play.

Three thousand spectators witnessed the Toronto-Newark game yesterday afternoon, cheered the good plays made by both teams, and left the grounds fully satisfied with the result. It was not a brilliantly played game, costly errors being made by both teams. Toronto's victory was of course hailed with delight, as it places the home team in dangerous proximity to the leadership in the pennant race, which it will assume if it wins the next game with the visitors to-morrow afternoon. Though Crane only pitched a fairly good game, it was evident that he had the opposing batsmen at his mercy, and at critical points was effective. Thanks to Umpire McLean's bad judgment, six of the visitors were given their bases on balls, leaving their actual hits at eight, which, with costly errors, enabled them to score six runs. Hughes was in the box for the visitors and was hit hard, which, with the poor support given him, allowed the Torontos to score a comparatively easy victory. McLaughlin and Smith effected some clever fielding work, and Walker attended to Hughes' delivery in commendable style.

Newark got two men on the bases in the first and second innings with no one out, but was prevented from scoring. In the sixth they tallied three runs on Faatz's failure to stop Irwin's grounder, which allowed that runner to reach second. Fields' out at first, Hughes' phantom, McLaughlin's hit to centre field and McCormack's muff of Smith's fly. In the eighth they added three more runs after two men were out, when Walker hit safely to centre and scored on Crane's overthrow to first of Coogan's slow grounder, the Newark fielder going to third on the play. Then Oldfield let Casey's fourth strike out by him and Coogan scored.

Toronto succeeded in scoring three runs in the fifth, inning after two men were out, on Oldfield's single to right field, Albert's phantom, Casey's excusable muff of Slattery's fly and Decker's single. In the sixth two runs were made on Faatz hard hit, which McLaughlin failed to field, Crane's triple to left field and McCormack's out at first. In the seventh a quartet of runners crossed the plate, Oldfield getting a phantom, Hughes' low throw to McLaughlin of Albert's hit, Slattery's single to right field, Walker's low throw to second, Faatz hit by pitcher and errors by Smith and McLaughlin. In the eighth the home team got a run on Rickley's single, a passed ball and Kearns' double. In the ninth two runs were made on Faatz's phantom, a passed ball, Crane's hard hit to Irwin and Rickley's triple
