

inae and Matchadash.—Attack on the post of Prairie du Chien.—Attack on and destruction of the Nancy at Nottawasaga.—Naval proceedings.—Decatur's cruise in the United States, with the Macedonian and Sloop Hornet.—Attempt to blow up the Ramilies at Fisher Island.—American boastings in reference to the President.—Cruise of the Essex.

CHAPTER XIX.

Captain David Porter as a writer of despatches.—Fifth invasion of Canada by a United States' army. General Brown's proclamation or general order.—General Brown's force.—Surrender of Fort Erie.—General Brown's Despatch.—Movements of the American army.—Gen. Brown's inaction and timidity.—Brown's letter to Chauncey.

CHAPTER XX.

The battle of Bridgewater, or Lundy's Lane, and its results.—Destruction of stores and baggage.—General order issued by Lieut.-General Drummond.—Fort Erie.—General Drummond's despatch.—The repulse at Conjocta Creek.—Outrage at Port Talbot, on Lake Erie.

CHAPTER XXI.

The fortifications at Fort Erie repaired.—General Brown's boasts of victory.—Skirmish at Lyon's Creek.—Armstrong and Ingersol on General Izard.—Passamaquoddy Bay and the events in that quarter.

CHAPTER XXII.

New England feeling towards Great Britain.—Capture of Washington and destruction of public buildings.—Preparations made by United States Government.—General observations on the expedition.—General Winder's despatch.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Attack on Alexandria.—Sir P. Parker's death. Captain Gordon's terms.—Ingersol on Madison and Armstrong.—Demonstration against Baltimore.—General Smith's despatch.—Opinions of the American writers on the descent on Baltimore.—Plattsburgh.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The attack on Plattsburgh, its failure and its consequences.—Expedition to New Orleans.—The gain to be expected from the expedition.—Lafitte, the chief of the Banatarian pirates.—Attack on Fort Bowyer, and defeat of the British.—Preparations for the attack and defence of New Orleans.—Defence of the gun boats.—Discrepancies in account of the gun-boat action.—Commodore Patterson's attempt to gain information by spies.—Advance of the British.—Fighting on the 23rd and 24th.—Arrival of reinforcements.—Comparative strength of the armies.—Retreat of the British.—Behaviour of the troops.—Lawrence's despatch to General Jackson.—Concluding naval events of the war.—Treaty of Peace.

APPENDIX.

From Captain Stewart to the American Secretary of the Navy.—American Minutes of the chase of the U. S. frigate Constitution, by an English squadron of three ships, from out of the harbour of Port Praya, Island of St. Jago.—Extract from the Pique's Log-Book.—From Lieutenant Boyce to the Secretary of the East India Company's Marine Board.—Evidence of Mr. Macgregor.—From Captain Warrington to the American Secretary of the Navy.—Treaty of Peace.—Total British and American Cruisers captured or destroyed, excluding those recaptured during the War.—List of British and American national cruisers, captured at Sea, which the opposite party succeeded in getting into port.