30 HOURS WITHOUT FOOD

And the Weather Below Zero, St. John Sailors Survive.

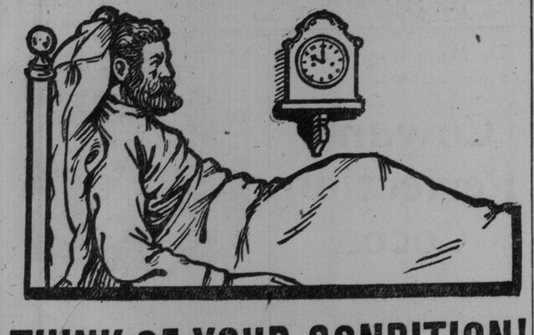
Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 6.—The experiences of Capt. J. B. Seabean of the British schooner Ayr, and his crew of four, who were brought in here to-day by the fishing schooner Jennie B. Hodgson, after having been rescued from their wrecked vessel off Cape Cod, were pronounced by the fishermen of this port to be among the worst ever heard of at Gloucester. Capt. Parkman Hodgson of the fishing schooner, when about ten miles off Cape Cod yesterday, sighted the dismasted Ayr.

On boarding her he found the five men on board practically frozen to the deck and almost at the point of death. With great difficulty the helpless seamen were taken to the fishing schooner, where they were partly revived. They had been for thirty hours without food or water, with the thermometer far below zero, and were continually washed by tremendous waves. The rescued men are Capt. J. A. Seabean of St. John, N.B., Mate Joseph Vitner, Cook William Bell of St. John and Seamen John Ellison and Hans Petersen.

The Ayr was bound from St. John for New York with lumber.

CONSUMPTIVES

Sufferers with La Grippe, Bronchitis, Pneumonia and Pleurisy



THINK OF YOUR CONDITION!

When you are left to yourself, if you will only take time to consider your condition of health there is hope for you. Many people to-day are lying on beds of sickness and facing a condition of things which you to-day may prevent.

Dr. Slocum declares:

"I have passed the greater part of my life in endeavoring to get people to think. If a man or woman will only stop to think, take into account their various symptoms, and begin the battle against disease there is a bright hope and a permanent recovery is certain.

One great drawback in dealing with La Grippe, Pneumonia, Bronchitis or Consumption is the reluctance of people to admit that they have disease. Reader! Have you an obstinate cough that nothing will stop? Has your system been run down or weakened with exposure, overwork or disease? Are you weak, nervous, bilious, or anything wrong with your lungs? Do you have chills and fever or night sweats? Do you feel with each round of the clock that your strength is flagging? Do you feel languid and tired? Have you pains in the limbs or between shoulders? Are you less able to stand the strain of daily toil? Or are you entirely incapacitated from work? Perhaps you have been on your back for months with hopes bolstered up with common remedies or by doctors not conversant with the Slocum Treatment.

If so, Dr. Slocum, the eminent lung specialist, gives you his word that "Psychine" will again fit you for the duties of life.

Dr. Slocum desires it to be plainly understood that Psychine must not be confused with common cure-alls and cheap nostrums. "Psychine" is a specialist's prescription that cures throat and lung diseases.

WHAT A TRIFLING COLD MEANS.

A trifling cold and the beginning of consumption are alike as twin babies. The cough, the slight fever with it, the spitting of blood and loss of appetite are noticeable in both. The cold sticks. In the morning you feel chilly, at night a fever. Perhaps night sweats. Get up tired and played out. The moment you step out in the air the cold sets you coughing. In the cold that leads to consumption the membrane is inflamed the air passages partly closed. The phlegm streaked with blood or of greenish color. Thus, the tentacles of consumption close about you slowly but steadily. Night sweats and bleeding from the lungs hasten the disease.

YOUR HOPE IS IN "PSYCHINE."

Suppose you have consumption! You are not, therefore, condemned to die of it. You are in danger—possibly in great danger—but that is another thing. Take the proper remedy and you will baffle the disease. Dr. Slocum says: "I will guarantee that my remedy 'Pyschine' will cure or benefit the sufferer in 90 per cent. of all cases." It is not a new product. Not an untried medicine. No medicine ever compounded has received the hearty endorsation of physicians and people in all parts of the world as "Psychine." For the simple reason that it is a scientific preparation and prescription of the world's most famous specialist, physicians endorse and commend it because they know with what they are dealing. The wonderful powers and marvelous record of cures it has established in all sections of the Dominion place "Psychine" far and above any other medicine offered to the public.

The testimony appearing daily in the press proclaiming the virtues of "Psychine" is from as honest men and women as ever drew breath, who, while naturally shrinking from public prints, allow their testimony to be published that other people suffering as they did may be cured.

A Toronto Business Man Speaks. Psychine Saved Him From Consumption.

Mr. George Smith, residing at 29 Lakeview-avenue, a prominent wool merchant, a resident of Toronto for 35 years, tells of his recovery. A host of friends who live in that vicinity corroborate Mr. Smith's statements:

Smith Wool Stock Co., 219 Front-street E.,
Toronto, Nov. 17th, 1903.

Dr. T. A. Slocum:

I and numbers of my friends take pleasure in testifying to the wonderful merits of "Psychine" for Throat and Lung Troubles and Wasting Conditions. In my own case, after suffering very severely from Chronic Bronchini and Lung Trouble, and finding no relief with ordinary remedies or doctors' prescriptions, I tried "Pyschine." A complete cure was speedily effected. My cough ceased and my throat and lungs were entirely freed from disease. In spite of the fact that I work in an unfavorable atmosphere, necessitated by the business in which I am engaged, my throat trouble has not returned. "Psychine" is a wonderful medicine. It accomplishes all that is claimed for it and more. It undoubtedly has saved me from consumption.

Yours truly,
GEORGE H. SMITH.

PSYCHINE is pronounced SI-KEEN.

Sold by all druggists in two sizes, or can be obtained from Dr. Slocum's Offices and Laboratory, 179 King-street West, Toronto, Canada.

TARTE WILL FOUND A CANADIAN CLUB

read some verses, which he thought expressed their sentiments:

Your glass may be purple and mine may be blue,
But while they are filled from the same bright bowl,
The fool that would quarrel for difference of hue
Deserves not the credit they shed in the soul.

Shall I ask the brave soldier who fights by my side,
In the cause of mankind, if our creeds agree?
Shall I give up a friend I have valued and tried,
If he kneel not before the same altar with me?

From the heretic goal of my soul should I fly,
To seek somewhere else a more orthodox kiss?
No! Perish the hearts and the laws that would try,
Truth, valor or love by a standard like this.

We're Young, Energetic, Ambitious

Mr. Tarte proceeded with his address. "We are a young, energetic and ambitious nation," he said. "We are free. I do not know of any who are freer. We have the right to administer our affairs as we like, even to making tariffs against England. A hundred millions will eventually find their homes on our soil. We shall soon be able to supply England with all her wheat and flour. Racial prejudices are becoming more every day—and let us thank God for it—things of the past. We are on the shortest line of traffic between East and West and are destined to become the great trade route of the future. Will you permit me to ask you if it would not be as well to grapple with great questions of this nature rather than to deal with paltry parish politics? You have invited me to speak of our relations with the Motherland, and more especially so because of my French-Canadian origin. I am French-Canadian from bottom to top. There is no doubt about that. And I am an advocate of closer relations between the British colonies and the British empire.

"In a long public career, I have been branded with many marks. In the last few weeks I have been branded as the valet or servant of Joseph Chamberlain. That is because it had come to my mind as a member of the government that it would be no great harm to get some return from England for what we had done. I do not think these questions should be discussed on personal grounds. Mr. Chamberlain is only a man, and in a few years will have disappeared from the earth. The questions of Imperial relations and colonial progress will remain. I might ask our friends to dismiss from their minds Mr. Chamberlain's personality.

As With the United States.

"We have not charge of Mr. Chamberlain's future, but we have charge of the future of Canada. As the leading colony, we must take the lead in questions concerning colonial relations with the empire. To the south of us are some living souls, a small nation of eighty-two millions. We are here; they are there. They are there to stay, and I hope we are here to stay also. Those of us who have been ministers of the Crown—and who may be again—are in a position to tell you more of the United States than you are aware. My friend, Mr. Foster, can bear me out in this. Men in high places in the United States have in their minds that the Stars and Stripes will yet float over the Dominion. You say never. Yes, never if we make up our minds that it will be never. It is big enough for us, and it is big enough for them. Whatever my mistakes, one of my ambitions has always been to make our country independent of the United States.

"We are not prepared to be an independent nation. There is across the ocean the European equilibrium, the smaller nations being protected by the larger. Were we independent the United States would find means to repeat the Panama methods of revolution. We do not want to be annexed. The Province of Quebec is just as firmly and strongly opposed to annexation as yourselves. There is just one policy that forces itself on thinking minds in this country.

Every Reason for Close Relations.

"We must arrange to continue our relations with the old land. We wish to keep all the liberty we enjoy now. There are some who believe there is danger in closer relations. I claim in speaking the full freedom of a citizen of Toronto to-night. There are some who think closer relations will involve us in England's complications. Commercially, we have every interest to engage us in closer relations. We are sending large quantities of produce to England now. We have a great market there of our own for our staples. Of what, then, have we to complain? The tie that binds us to the empire is a tie of silk. We are free. But if we had not the British prestige and strength to help us thru, what would we do? We complain of not being as successful as we hoped in several things. Would we have been better had we been alone? I am a strong advocate of a closer British connection, for if England did not take interest in us we should be left in the cold more in the future than we have been in the past.

"The time has come to set our house in order. There are here men of all sides in politics. You come here to discuss all questions freely. Unless we can discuss the question I put freely, we may have some bad accidents.

"Let us improve the means of transportation so as to bring England nearer and nearer. I will not speak of the tariff, but we must make ourselves more and more independent in every possible way of our neighbors. My motto is: 'Business is business,' and it is the motto of Quebec also. We wish to cooperate with you in building up a nation—English, French, Irish, Catholic and Protestant. We are all of the same idea in that.

If We Agree —

"If we can agree we have a great future. We have only to develop what has been given us, and it would be a calamity if we failed. Let me assure you from the bottom of my heart, and out of years of experience and thoro knowledge of French-Canadians, that they are soul to soul with you in this great work.

"In minor details we may differ. Little differences will occur. Canada is not the only country in the world where such small accidents happen. These cannot prevent the sun from shining or Canada from forging ahead. It is not bad that we sometimes make fools of ourselves since we become wise by being childish.

"I find Canadian sentiment growing stronger every day. Our people are learning to know their country better. I had been a newspaper man 25 years, but found I knew nothing of Canada till I traveled thru it. Mr. Foster would reproach me for traveling too much. I have not traveled enough. By my travels, comparing our national equipment with that of our neighbors, I learned that if we wanted to get along we must do what we have not done in the past. Let me ask those here to make up their minds that their duty is to take a leaf from the book our neighbors have written. You may have visited their harbors. We are not in it with them. We could divert much of their business, and we should develop our canal system.

"I am a strong man on one point—Canada for the Canadians. I am addressing young men and wish I was as young as they are. I congratulate you on the wise move you have taken. I will itell my young friends in Quebec what you are doing. We should have Canadian clubs in Quebec as you have here.

"I make this promise, that I will establish a Canadian club in Montreal in a week. I wish you to take part in the general election with the calmness and wisdom that citizens should display when they take into consideration the interests of a great nation."

Great and prolonged applause greeted the close of Mr. Tarte's 40-minute address.

Presented With Constitution.

President Parker presented a copy of the constitution of the club for use in Quebec, and Mr. Sturrock sang dramatically and powerfully, and was rewarded with an insistent encore.

H. J. Wickham wished to enter a mild protest against the suggestion that the preference to be offered by England is a bribe for our loyalty. Such an idea should not appear in the press. Mr. Wickham would be the last to throw cold water on sentimental loyalty. But we might get ahead faster if we followed business lines. The ability to go everywhere and to carry anything anywhere is the real secret of a maritime policy.

Mr. Foster Patriotically Optimistic

Hon. George E. Foster spoke most amusingly and created much laughter. He thought the Canadian Club had learned the secret of oratory in not feeding their guests too heavily. Large, portly men like himself and his friend might be tempted to over-indulgence and one could not speak so well in that event. He was glad to hear his friend—never his enemy. When he was traveling so much he was not sure that he would not have liked him to travel farther. Mr. Foster thought we made too much of the racial question. The remarks of individuals are taken to represent general sentiment, which they do not. An insignificant man expressing a sensational opinion gets an undue importance. Young men should get the statistics of the United States in 1800, their territory, population, wealth, etc., and then put Canadian statistics down for 1900 for the same matters. Put behind the United States the moral and scientific equipment of 1800, and note what they are now. Put behind Canada in 1900 her scientific, educational, moral equipment, and ask what a century will do. There is no reason in the world why Canada will not stand farther ahead in every respect than the United States does now after a century's growth.

He was proud, hopeful, yes, but more than all, serious, when he thought of that development. So many rejoice in the promise of the future. They see rainbows arching one over the other. Responsibility is what we must think of. If we are not prepared and ready for it the future will be a failure. We cannot solve these questions unless we have the spirit of stern civic warriors.

Mr. Foster then indulged in a very amusing piece of badinage at Mr. Tarte's expense. Young Germans were accustomed to have one, two or three years of wandering, observing, learning, always coming back to their fatherland to do better than ever. He asked, was it necessary to make the application, amid great laughter. They had a wise man with them that night, wiser than he had been ten years before. He comes back—"how far I don't know." But he came back a stronger man than ever before. He represented the French and he stood beside him representing the English with the one purpose, to build up a great country under the aegis of British rule. We should have one stable policy and presentment for every section of the country, and he knew Mr. Tarte had the same things to say in Quebec as he said here. There was something in the air now that he was glad of. It was the desire of young men to take on citizenship. They were all grateful to Mr. Tarte for the light of his countenance and the strong expression of his heart.

His Lesson From Sir John.

Mr. Tarte responded and said he had been brought up in a school where his friend had always been a shining light. But there are other lights. He wished no young man to think that there was good only in one party. Why not discuss questions and not merely party lines? He preached to his countrymen the great advantages of belonging to the British empire. He was not talking party politics but Imperial and Canadian business. His first leader was Sir John A. Macdonald, and a greater leader he never had in his life, and he learned from Sir John to love this country.

On the motion of George C. Campbell, a vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Tarte, who acknowledged it by calling for "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" for President Parker.
