JUDGMENTS IN FIDDICK CASE

of fact presented for their determination. It is only when those officers have misconstrued the law applicable to the case as established before the department, and thus denied to parties rights which, upon a correct construction, would have been conceded to from, or where misrepresentation and fraud have been practiced necessarily affecting their judgment, that the courts can in a proper proceeding interfere and refuse to give effect to their action."

Quinby v. Conlan, 104, U. S. Rep., 426.

It is not incumbent, even if it were competent, for us in the present case as launched to examine into the various steps leading to the issue of the patent. Presumably all the prerequisites have been complied with.

I would dismiss the appeal.

IS ANDRE'S BALLOON IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

North Pole Controversy Revives Story of Years Ago.

The controversy between the friends of Commander Peary and Dr. Cook as to which of the two discovered the North Pole has awakened public interest in former attempts to reach the pole. Sir John Franklin's effort in 1846 in two warships, detached by the Admiralty for the purposes of the expedition, had most deplorable and disastrous results. Both ships were lost in the ice and several expeditions sent to ascertain the fate of the explorers failed to discover any traces, until after several years the remains of a few of the officers and crew were discovered beneath cairns. Scientific instruments and the log of one of the ships were recovered from the Esquimaux, but every man belonging to the expedition had perished, including the intrepid commander (whose remains were never found), and all his staff.

Amongst the most recent and pathetic failures was that of Lieut. Andre, who selected a huge balloon fitted with every conceivable facility then known to science and art in the wrok of discovery.

Lieut. Andre left Danes Island, 617 miles from the pole, on the 17th July, 1896. He was accompanied by Dr. Strindberg and Frauzell. His departure was watched by a few English friends, who accompanied him to the starting point, and a number of natives. The airship rose majestically and sailed away with a fair wind and was soon lost to sight.

None of the party was ever seen again by mortal eyes.

Some days later, about the 25th of July, the wife of a Cariboo miner who lived in a cabin near Quesnel Forks, was engaged in hanging out some clothes, when three Indians ran up the gulch and shouted, pointing as they ran toward the sky. In broken English the natives exclaimed that a great monster had passed high above their heads. The woman gazed intently in the direction pointed out, and soon descried a large balloon. It was high in the heavens and sailed swiftly in a northerly direction. It was in full view for at least ten minutes. The woman ran as rapidly as possible to the works of the hydraulic company, managed by J. B. Hobson of this city, and told that gentleman of the strange sight. Mr. Hobson hurried out of his office and gazed heavenward, but by that time the visitor had hurried beyond the range of his vision and he saw nothing but the blue sky. The woman and the Indians stoutly maintained that the object had passed over their heads, and they had had a good look at a basket or boat which hung below the balloon and which seemed to be empty, at least no person was visible and no signals were made. The remarkable story was sent to London at the time and was commented upon by the English press as presumptive evidence that the huge balloon, having lost the human cargo, was wandering like a vagrant to and fro through the upper currents and its voyage did not end until the buoyancy was exhausted and it alighted like a tired bird somewhere in the wilds of western British Columbia, where its remains may some day be found.
