Poetry.

The Quarter-Master's Yarn.

(Henry Newboll, in Windsor Magazine.)

Founded on fragmentry lines communicated to the author by Admiral Sir William Hornby, K. C. B., who served under Hardy, in 1827.

"We lay at St. Helene, and easy she rode,
With one anchor catted, and fresh water stowed;
When the barge came alongside like bullocks we roared,
For we knew what we carried with Nelson aboard.

Our Captain was Hardy, the pride of us all;
I'll ask for none better when danger shall call,
He was hardy by nature, and Hardy by name,
And soon by his conduct to honor he came.

The third day, the Lizard was under our lee,
When the "Ajax" and 'Thunderer" found us at sea;
But what with foul weather and tacking about,
When we sighted the fleet, we were thirteen days out.

The captains they all came aboard quick enough,
But the news that they brought was as heavy as "duff,"
So backward an enemy never was seen,
They were harder to come at than 'Cheeks the Marine."

The lubber's had hare's lugs, when seamen had ears,
So we stowed all saluting, and smothered our cheers;
And to humor their stomachs and tempt them to dine,
In the offing we showed them but six of the line.

One morning the Topmen reported below
The old Agamemnon escaped from the foe,
Says Nelson: "My lads there'll be honor for some.
For we're sure of a battle now Berry has come."

"Up hammocks!" at last cried the bo'sun at dawn;
The guns were cast loose, and the Tompions drawn;
The gunner was bustling the shot racks to fill,
And "All hands to quarter," was piped with a will.

We now saw the enemy bearing ahead,
And to cast of them Cape Trafalgar, it was said;
"'Tis a name we remember from father to son,"
That the days of old England may never be done.

To the cockpit in silence they carried him past,
And sad were the looks that were after him cast;
His face with a kerchief he tried to conceal,
But we knew him too well from the truck to the keel.

When the Captain reported a victory won,
"Thank God," he kept saying, "my duty I've done!"
At last came the moment to kiss him good-bye,
And the captain for once had the salt in his eye.

"Now anchor dear Hardy," the Admiral cried;
But before we could make it, he fainted and died.
All night in the trough of the sea we were tossed,
And for want of ground tackle, good prizes were lost.

Then we hauled down the flag—at the fore it was red—
And blue at the mizzen was hoisted instead;
By Nelson's famed Captain, the pride of each tar,
Who fought in the victory of Cape Trafalgar.

The "Victory" led—to her flag it was due,
Tho' the "Temeraire's" thought themselves Admirals, too;
But Lord Nelson he hailed them with masterful grace—
"Cap'n Harvey, I'll thank you to keep in your place."

To begin with we closed the Bucentaure alone
An eighty-gun ship, and their Admiral's own;
We raked her but once, and the rest of the day
Like a hospital hulk on the water she lay.

To our battering next the Redoubtable struck,
But her sharpshooters gave us the worst of the luck;
Lord Nelson was wounded, most cruel to tell,
"They've done for me, Hardy!" he cried as he fell.

Cook's Penetrating Plasters.

Lawyer Steals $1,000,000.

Had Robert Louis Stevenson lived he would have seen last week one of his countrymen give a dramatic reality to his "Jekyil and Hyde" creation. James Colquhoun, city treasurer of Glasgow, deacon of the Free Church and representative of the city corporation on the University court, is now in gaol in his native city, charged with defalcations which a moderate estimate puts at a million dollars of trust moneys confided to him for investment.

Colquhoun is a workingman's son, born 59 years ago in Glasgow. He industriously used Scotland's educational system until he qualified as a lawyer. He rapidly became one of the most trusted members of his profession, and his prosperity was due to his almost oppressively model life. He was active on the committee of the Free Church and on the platforms of temperance meetings. He was never personally genial or popular, but raised himself to a pedestal of reputed integrity until he was the favorite model of Glasgow Sunday school teachers in showing pupils an instance of how to become a perfect citizen.

In outword appearance Colquhoun realized the idea. He was always carefully but extravagantly dressed. He was cold and serious in manner, and seemed the type of severe integrity, rewarded by the highest honors his fellow-citizens could give, until last week, when he abruptly resigned his public office and was sent to an insane asylum.

A statement authorfzed that he was suffering from temporary breakdown, owing to business anxieties, but the medical authorities refused to confirm the detention and a criminal warrant was executed charging him wtih embezzling £5,500 of his clients' money intrusted to him for investment. Other embezzling bring the total up to £200,000, and it is believed that this will be extended.

For several years Colquhoun had been concealing his defalcations by paying interest on alleged investments which he never made. Many widows had entrusted their entire property to him, because of his high public position. His fellow-councillors at first thought of suscribing the amount to conceal the scandal until they learned the vastness of Colquhoun's embezzlements and the wreckage of his fortune. He has a wife and family.

It is stated that some years ago he won £2,000 at Monte Carlo, and since then gave way to the gambling mania. He secretly and repeatedly visited the Continental resorts, especially Ostend, and played for the highest stakes that the rules permitted. The case is expected to be one of the most remarkable criminal trials in Scotland for a generation.

Seven Babies at a Birth.

PITTSBURG, July 29.—What is said to be an authentic report comes from Brownsville to-night to the effect that Mrs. Geo. Hackett, colored, of that place, gave birth this afternoon to seven babies, four girls and three boys. They were all alive when born, but tenight all are dead but one. The report says they were all small, but well formed.

The parents are poor, the father being a miner. He is about 25 years old. The mother is a yonng woman and had two children before. She is said to be as well as can be expected and that the one child will probably live.

He who has never tried green feed for the chicks and ducklings, does not appreciate its advantage. The amount of green food that young ducks will dispose of, when given all they want, is wonderful. If the reader has never tried green stuff for his young stock, it will pay to go feeding it as soon as possible. Care should be observed to start moderately at first so as not to overdo the matter.

Dealers are reporting from every section of the United States that they find it extremely difficult to meet the demands of their purchasers, especially for good-sized horses. Here is one fact, and another still more important is that the supply will be less next year and the year after. There is no hope for an increase within five years, but rather the certainty of a steady decrease in numbers. This means that either the desire for horses must fall off or the demand will be sharper and prices higher

There are seventeen new private residences now in erection in Sussex with more to follow.

At Blackville, North. Co., Wednesday, Isaac Stewart, fourteen years old, a son of G. D. Stewart, butcher, was accidentally drowned while bathing.

In Germany they have invented a machine for milking the cow, and it is now in successful operation. The principle of the machine is merely suction through long tubes. The advantages of it are saving of expense and the greatly increased cleanliness due to the fact that human hands do not have to come in contact with the cow or the milk.
