SECOND VICTIM BURIED

Funeral of Baggageman Alex. Wiley at St. Thomas.

The funeral of Mr. Alex. Wiley, the second victim of Friday's Wabash-C. P. R. collision at St. Thomas, took place at that city yesterday afternoon, and it proved to be one of the largest witnessed there for some time. Not only did the trainmen of the C. P. R., the M. C. R., and the Pere Marquette, turn out in numbers to pay their last respects, but very many friends were also in attendance from London, St. Thomas, and the surrounding district.

The deceased was a member of the Order of Railway Conductors, and members of the order were present, not only from St. Thomas, but from London as well. The Brotherhood of Railway Engineers and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen of London and St. Thomas were also represented, the total number who preceded the cortege on foot being in the neighborhood of a hundred. The London delegation numbered 40, and it included employes of the Grand Trunk, the C. P. R., the Pere Marquette, and the M. C. R., on each of which the deceased had been employed.

A brief funeral service was held at the family residence, after which the remains were conveyed to Grace Methodist Church, on Balaclava street, where a public service was held. The edifice was crowded to the doors. The pastor, Rev. J. R. Gundy, was in charge, and he was assisted by Rev. William Kettlewell, of St. Thomas, and Rev. Robert McIntyre, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Tempo, an old friend of the deceased. Mr. Wiley had been an active worker at Grace Church, and in the course of a short address, Mr. Gundy made a fitting reference to the good accomplished by him.

At the grave a brief service was conducted by Rev. Messrs. Gundy and McIntyre, and the burial service of the Order of Railway Conductors was read. The band of the Salvation Army was present, and played "The Glory Song," which was a particular favorite with the deceased. Mr. Wiley had been a friend of the army for some years, and it was by its own request that the band assisted. The pallbearers were chosen from the railway conductors of London and St. Thomas.

The floral offerings came from friends in this city, St. Thomas, and several other places, and included designs sent by the conductors, engineers and trainmen, and one from the Forest City Quoiting Club, sent by the members as a mark of sympathy with the brother of the deceased, Mr. William Wiley, who is the president of the organization.

NEARED CENTURY MARK

Late Mrs. Wilson, of Mosa, Reached Age of 96 Years.

In the recent death of Mrs. Wilson, relict of the late Gilbert Wilson, there passed away one of the oldest settlers of Mosa. Deceased was born at Sunless Hill, on Jedwater (a small stream near Jedburgh, flowing into the River Tweed, Roxburgh, Scotland, on Aug. 26, 1810, the same day as the present Duke of Roxburgh's grandfather first saw the light of day. Mrs. Wilson's maiden name was Christian Middlemiss. She was the daughter of James and Helen Middlemiss. Her father was a shepherd and tended his flocks on the hills adjacent to the historic old Jedburgh, so renowned in the history of Scotland, and associated with the memories of the Black Douglas. She was married at Stamford, England, to Gilbert Wilson, in 1841. Mr. Wilson was also of Scotch descent, he being a native of Ayrshire. The couple lived for a number of years at Stamford, where Mr. Wilson traveled for a dry-goods firm. However, in 1856, actuated no doubt by the spirit of the times, Mr. Wilson, accompanied by his brothers, Thomas and Adam, decided to try his fortune in the new world. Early in 1856 they sailed from Liverpool, and arriving in this country they located near Hamilton. Next year Mr. Wilson was joined by his wife and family of small children. Ten years later the family moved onto the farm in Mosa, where the deceased resided until her death. Here pioneer life began again in earnest, for land in Mosa at that time was covered with forest. Deceased's husband died 17 years ago. This was a sad blow to Mrs. Wilson, yet she bore it patiently and continued her good work. She had a kind word or smile for all, and ever sought to aid those who needed help, and ministered to the wants of the sick or afflicted. She was a consistent member of the Newbury Presbyterian Church, taking a deep interest in the work. She faithfully attended the church till a few years ago, when the infirmities of age crept upon her. Although she had reached the ripe age of 96 years, she retained nearly all her faculties to the last. She lived to see and enjoy many gandchildren and several great-grandchildren, all of whom with the bereaved children mourn her loss. The funeral, which was largely attended, despite the inclemency of the weather, was conducted by Rev. Mr. Jamieson, of Newbury. Interment was in the family plot at Cameron Church graveyard, Euphemia. The pallbearers were James Douglas, John Telfer, Duncan MacNaughton, Isaac Abbott, Thomas Clements and James Donay.

NO WHISKERS IN CROWD

Vanguard of Bryan Admirers from Nebraska Reaches New York.

New York, Aug. 28. — About 120 of "Bryan's Nebraska home folks" arrived in this city tonight. It is the vanguard of the crowd that will pour into the city in the next few days to welcome Bryan home.

The Nebraskans traveled in a special train made up of six Pullman cars, a baggage car, and smoker. They left Omaha on Friday night and came straight through, with the exception of a short stop in Chicago and at Niagara Falls. The train was due in Jersey City at 6 o'clock over the Lehigh Valley, but was about three hours late. When it did arrive there was nobody at the station to meet the visitors, and they were obliged to shift for themselves in the best way they could.

Those who expected to see a lot of long, gray beards of the Populist type were disappointed. There was not a single whisker in the crowd. Like their peerless leader, nearly every one of the westerners were clean shaven.

In the party were seven Nebraska mayors, the secretary of the Democratic state committees, S. H. Daniels, and the Democratic nominee for lieutenant-governor, W. H. Green, of Creighton. Only one man from Bryan's home town was in the party. He was J. W. Cutright, who acted as Bryan's secretary when he was in New York in his last presidential campaign.

Most of the Nebraskans have not visited New York before, and they have come prepared to do a little sight-seeing in addition to giving their leader a rousing welcome.

SIGNING PLAYERS IN BUNCHES NOW

Major League Teams Are Picking Many Youngsters for Next Season.

Baseball players galore are being signed in larger numbers than ever and undoubtedly in sufficient numbers to equip several nines. There is no doubt at all that there is no idea at all of using some of these players. Evidently, many are of the opinion that there is virtue in numbers, and that a few good ones may be secured of the number signed, but it does look as if some clubs would take great chances indeed in the number secured.

The Boston Americans have made very little improvement of late. They showed to better advantage against Detroit than against any other club, and though no less a personage than President Ban Johnson declared they made the best showing in the last western trip of any of the eastern teams; but it must be remembered that every eastern team was in bad shape. Washington was without Lave Cross, the Athletics have been badly crippled, while New York has been in a slump for some time.

The ginger, the snap, the go, have been entirely lacking in the team. The change in the outfield has not helped the team one bit. Selbach did not show up very well at the bat, but he was a great fielder. Right field has been played in such an easy manner as to be almost a joke. If a player cannot hustle in the field or on the bases and has not learned to run to first on any kind of a hit, he ought to be relegated to a kindergarten. There should be some way to keep a man in condition. Look at the race horse condition of the St. Louis Browns—what three men have Boston that can vie in speed with Niles, Hemphill and Stone or in any other respect for that matter.

The club now has its pitching veterans Young, Dineen, Tannehill and Winter, and four men ought to be enough for any club, barring accidents. Thus far Oberlin and Goodwin have been secured from Milwaukee for the team of next season, and Pruitt from St. Paul. They may prove all right, but it is one thing to pitch in minor league company and another in major league.

Cleveland hasn't succeeded in developing a good pitcher in several seasons. Griffith has worked on that line and has not secured a man. Connie Mack, too, has not been very successful in that line. Even McGraw with all his resources has been in a hole owing to his pitching department and Pittsburg has been weak in the box for several seasons.

It is wholly on account of their fine pitching departments that the Chicago clubs have been so prominent this season. If the White Sox had not done so very much hitting they have prevented the other chaps from hitting. The Chicago Nationals have a better array of batsmen than the White Sox but are no better off in pitchers at the present time. Kling and Sullivan are in the very front rank of catchers and go in every day as a matter of course. Chance and Donohue are both great first basemen, fast in every department of the game.

One man has been secured for the outfield for next season by Cleveland, by purchase, Sullivan, of Minneapolis.

MESSENGER STARTED THE HARNESS GAME

History of the Trotting Horse Begins With His Importation.

When Messenger landed in this country on May 16, 1788, the history of the trotting horse began. A flame was kindled that has never gone out. Messenger's light will never fade away, and any facts connected with the horse are always interesting to most horsemen.

For many years there was a doubt about the place where Messenger was landed in this country. It was claimed by some that he was landed in New Jersey, others insisted that New York was the place where the horse first set foot on American soil, while others claimed that Philadelphia was the city in which he landed.

From a systematic search of the Congressional Library, made by George P. Floyd, a prominent turf writer, he states that he found a volume of the Pennsylvania Packet and Advertiser for the years 1788-89, which was published in Philadelphia.

In the issue of May 17, 1788, was found a notice of the arrival at Philadelphia of the brig Dove (the vessel docked at the foot of Market street), with assorted cargo and the stallions Messenger and Governor, from Liverpool. There was where Messenger was landed in this country.

In a copy of the same paper, June 15, 1788, was found an advertisement of a stallion bill, stating that the gray stallion Imported Messenger would stand for service during the season of 1788 at the Black Horse Tavern stable, on Market street, near where Twelfth street is now, at a fee of $10 the season and $1 each for the groom. In 1789 the same paper contained an ad. that the horse would stand at William Cook's stable, on Lombard street, Philadelphia, at the same terms. The third season, 1790, the horse was at Cooper's Point, N. J., opposite Philadelphia.

The fourth season he was at Neshaminy Bridge, near Bristol, Pa.; his fee was $15. From 1791 until 1808 he was kept at various places in the State of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York. The seasons of 1798, 1805, and 1806 he stood at Oyster Bay, Long Island, at Townshend Cock's farm. His fee had been raised to $45. In 1807 he was at a farm near where High Bridge is now. The fall of 1807 the horse was taken to Oyster Bay.

Jan. 28, 1808, Messenger was found dead in his barn. Doubtless he died from old age, he then being 28 years old. Such was the estimation in which the horse was held that the news of his death spread like wildfire throughout that part of the country. Hundreds flocked to see the last of the great hero. His grave was made under a large chestnut tree; the grave lined with cedar plank. The great sire was dressed in his holiday attire. He was loaded on a stone cart, and six of his sons, all gray, with a black body blanket, were hitched to the stone drag.

A military company with a band of music and hundreds of people formed a procession, and followed the monarch of all sires to his last resting-place, where he was buried with military honors, and volley after volley of musketry was fired over his grave. A headstone was placed on his grave with the inscription: "Messenger, Monarch of Sires. Foaled 1780. Died Jan. 28, 1808."

Messenger was a dapple gray, 15.3 hands high, large bony head, with large ears, a splendid hazel eye, short thick neck; his nostrils were twice the size of any ordinary horse, very powerful loins and quarter, very large hocks, and knees, perfect clean legs. Whether in motion or at rest, always in perfect position. His mane was sparse, but he had a splendid flowing tail. He was sired by Mambrino.

His pedigree, as it is given, traces through the famous Flying Childers directly to Darly Arabian. He was imported to this country on account of his value as a running horse, and for the improvement of running stock in this country. Where Messenger got his trotting instinct from is to some a hard problem to solve, while others seem to have struck the keynote. Engineer was by Samson, a thick, heavy-made horse, with large bony legs, heavy mane and tail, with shaggy fetlocks, a big head and rough-coated; so much was he like a cart-horse that many doubted his being sired by Bass, who was a fine-made clean horse. His propensity to trot was very strong. He would always start off on a trot, and trot quite fast; he was obliged to be whipped hard, to induce him to change his trot into a run. These facts are proved in the old turf papers and books of that day.

Although Engineer or Mambrino showed no inclination to trot, perhaps it was because they had no chance to do so. The instinct to trot and sire trotters cropped out in Messenger and probably started in Samson.

Messenger had no great reputation while in England, and his star did not commence to shine in this country for some years after he came here. Messenger had been in this country but a short time when the Pennsylvania Legislature passed a law prohibiting racing. That compelled those owing horses to keep them for road purposes. About that time the country roads, growing better, and road wagons made lighter, trotting came into fashion, and the wonderful trotting speed of the Messenger family was discovered. It seems to have been more a matter of accident than anything else that Messenger was found to be a great sire of trotters.

BASEBALL.

GRIMSHAW LEADS HIS TEAM.

Grimshaw still leads the Boston Americans in batting, with a slightly better showing that he had last week. He is the only .300 batsman on the team.

NEWBURY WINS.

Newbury defeated Rodney Monday in an exciting game of ball by a score of 8 to 7. The feature of the game was the pitching of Batchelor, for the Newbury nine. He had fourteen strike-outs. He was well supported by Tootle Jeffries, of the London Stars.
