JUDGE LOCKED IN COURT THREE HOURS.

Police Chief Goes Away With Prisoner, Leaving His Honor Prisoner Too.

WINSTED, Conn., March 31.—Judge Hugh Young of the Enfield Town Court was an unwilling prisoner in his own court for nearly two hours. After a court session the judge became interested in a newspaper and when he had finished reading discovered that the door leading to the police station was heavily barred.

He hastened upstairs to the office of Chief Kallahan, and for the next half hour 'Central' was kept busy in an endeavor to locate the chief, who had since departed for Hartford, with a prisoner on whom Judge Young had passed sencence.

One of the village's three patrolmen was finally found and he freed His Hon.or.

Judge Young's predecessor, Judge Morrison, was once locked in the buildingalmost a whole day by mistake.

REFLECTION OF TRUE BRITISH SPIRIT

Of his great leader and of all the members of the expedition Commander Evans spoke in terms of the highest admiration and esteem. Captain Scott, he said, was the brains of the party. He directed the work of each department in a manner that left no doubt as to his ability. The fullest scope was allowed to each department, and the records, both scientific and photographic, ably reflected the good work that was done throughout the journeys of the various parties. The motor sledges were, the speaker explained, a failure. At the most unexpected, and therefore most inopportune times, they would stop, and while the mechanics were tinkering around with the engine, the waiting men would be frozen. The ponies were also much more trouble than the dogs. Whenever a halt was made it was necessary to build a protective wall for the ponies to shiver behind, whereas the dogs at the end of a march would curl themselves up and keep warm. The dog teams were altogether the most satisfactory. An amusing story of the Norwegian skiing expert was told. He and the speaker had returned after a particularly trying march, and the Norwegian said to Evans: "What would you give for a pint of champagne?"

With vague ideas of ever seeing the luxury, the speaker promised five pounds, to be paid on the return of the expedition to England. The Norwegian disappeared and returned with the champagne, which he had kept by him. They thawed it out and partook. The sequel provides a smile. While Commander Evans was lecturing in Christiania, the Norwegian was a member of his audience, and Evans, remembering the champagne, asked him the equivalent of five pounds of Norwegian money. "Never mind that' said the champagne provider, "I'll give a little dinner to-night, which you can pay for.' 'And he did' said the commander, 'and it cost me $270.' Returning to the departure of the party southward. As the party progressed towards the pole, so the supporting parties here dropped off, until but two parties remained, that under Captain Scott, and that under Commander Evans, eight men in all. It was agreed that Evans should sacrifice one of his men, who would join Scott. The choice fell to Lieutenant Bowers, who joined Captain Scott, thus making the polar party: Captain Scott, Lieutenant Bowers, Dr. Wilson, Captain Oates and Petty Officer Evans. Those returning with Commander Evans were Crean and Sashby.

When about 150 miles from the pole Commander Evans and his two companions left the polar party. "On the morning of our parting," said the speaker, "we travelled on with them for three miles, to see that everything was all right. We then stopped and shook hands all round, and parted—never to see each other again. We watched that small band gradually disappear from sight, until they were a black speck on the horizon. Then we turned and commenced the homeward march." The narrow escape of the speaker from death, and the devotion of his companions,Crean and Sashby, was vividly described. Stricken with scurvy, the commander was at last unable to proceed further, and lay in his sleeping bag in the snow unable to move. He commanded his two companions to go on, but for once they disobeyed, and, strapping him to a sleigh they dragged him on. Sashby was left in a tent to nurse him, while Crean made a dash to the base for help, not one of the three ever expected to live through it; but luck was with them, and Crean reached the base after a great struggle, and brought Dr. Atkinson to the rescue of the stricken commander and his nurse. "They were both brave men, to whom I owe my life,' he said. "Sashby was the oldest man in the party, being 44, and a lifelong teetotaler, and non smoker.

"He had the finest physique of the party, excepting Crean, who was never a teetotaler nor a non smoker. Crean, who was an Irishman with a true Irishman's wit, was the original lucky man of the party. During the homeward march of the three, an opportunity occurred when tobaganning could be done, and during the act Crean tore his trousers to ribbons. As luck would have it, he was the only man in the whole expedition who had brought a second pair of trousers.' Returning to the polar party, the speaker then described their arrival at the pole, and their finding of Amundsen's flag. "There is no doubt that they were disappointed," said Commander Evans, "but with true British spirit, not an uncharitable word was said against the brave Norseman, nor did they begrudge him his victory." The ill-fated return journey of the polar party, and their tragic end, were touched upon, and tributes were paid to the heroes, who lost their lives. "Oates" he said, quoting Captain Scott's diary, "died like a soldier and an English gentleman, walking out into the blizzard when he could go no further." Bowers was described as the hardiest and smallest member of the expedition. "He was the pet of all," said the commander.

The concluding part of the lecture was taken up with moving picture views of Captain Scott and his companions, and the lives and habits of the seals and penguins and other life in the Antarctic.

THE SPORT OF TUNA FISHING

Santa Catalina is famous for its Tuna fishing, and the same big gamey fish frequent the waters of Cape Breton, and attain from two to three times the size, strength and speed of the well known California specie. Any man who lands a Cape Breton Tuna by the sole aid of a long line, a good reel, and a strong rod, and a steady nerve, may justly claim to belong to the real aristocracy of fishermen and will be given a high seat in the council of good sportsmen the world over, for his was a conquest gained only by much labor, skill and courage. In describing his experience, the well known fisherman, Mr. J. K. L. Ross of serts as his belief that a Cape Bre- Montreal, who holds the world record for landing the biggest fish, aston Tuna can be landed when fairly hooked, two out of three times, provided that the tackle is in perfact order and that the fish is played without any mistake. He also recommends St. Ann's Bay as good fishing waters, preferredly from the 20th August until the end of September, when these great fish rise readily to the bait. Incidentally be prepared for a long fight, for it required four long hours and forty-five minutes to land Mr. Ross' 680 pound Tuna.

NEW C. P. R. STATION IN MONTREAL

While the large bulk of the new Windsor station and offices of the Canadian Pacific at Montreal has been complete for some time past, there has ben much work to do in the way of putting the finishing touches here and there, to give completeness and perfection to the ensemble. On the main floor it was necessary to lay down new flooring, open up an information bureau, a nursery, a luncheon and dining room where not merely the employees but the general public can be sure of appetizing dishes at moderate prices. Part of the plan was to incorporate the old front entrance on Osborne street with the great concourse and give a new entrance on the corner, with modern and rapid elevators. This work, which did not make bulk, but was most important, and which has been carried on for many months, is now completed, and three new elevators in the northeast corner of the old building, facing at once on Windsor and Osborne streets have been opened to the public. The old luncheon room—for that is the space used—is now beautifully tiled and wainscotted with marble, delicately veined, and exquisite in polish and color, while the elevators express the latest word in speed, comfort and reliability. The whole space, which was devoted to the public, the ticket offices, and which went the length of the whole building, will now be taken over by or incorporated with the new concourse, which, large and dignified as it is, will be considerably augmented, thus giving it a sense of impressiveness and space, which will be much appreciated by the travelling public. With a new entrance, new elevators, a big clock facing the public, the improvements and renovation will give to the old building a new and desirable character in keeping with that which the great station and office building presents to the eye from Osborne to St. Antoine street, and which on St. Antoine street will, with completed buildings, soon extend to Mountain street, thus forming in one great and dignified whole the finest terminal, almost, it might be said, on this continent. Illuminated at night with the myriad office lights, reaching to the sixteenth storey, each quivering point becoming more tenuous as the altitude becomes more marked, and enswathed by the white and softening glow of the great arcs outside, the monstrous bulk gives to the eye of the visitor the sense of power and vastness modulated by the fairy-like illumination which claims the admiring regard.
