MEN AND THINGS AT OTTAWA.

The Last Days of the Session—How the Country Honors its Illustrious Dead—The Last Fight—Sir George Wins a Victory after Death—Maritime Men and Measures.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

OTTAWA, May 24.

"OUR HOUSE IS LEFT UNTO US DESOLATE."

All gone—members, pages, clerks, reporters. The long Parliament is ended—at least this long session is. Yesterday 65 Representatives, of the 200, alone remained to write out the last chapter and put "Finis" to the somewhat eventful history of the session, the first of the second Parliament of Canada. The proceedings were much quieter than those of former occasions. The sad fact of Sir George Cartier's death seemed to have thrown an abiding solemnity over the House; and members walked about with a quieter step than usual, and spoke in subdued voices, as men do in a sick chamber, or in the presence of death. As you are aware, not very much business remained to be done. A few bills were completed, a few questions answered, some additional appropriations made; and then off to the Senate Chamber, where without any parade or ceremony His Excellency assents to the bills, the Senate adjourns, and the Commons return to their own place and do likewise. Strange to say the last party struggle of the session took place over the distant and dead statesman

SIR GEORGE ETIENNE CARTIER.

Three thousand miles away from his own loved Canada, pulseless and voiceless he lies locked in the icy arms of death; while in the Canadian House of Commons—where many men were proud to be guided by the utterances of the now silent voice,—his old friends and his old foes have a farewell fight as to whether the country shall do him a last sad honor, and pay a national tribute of respect to him whose name has now been added to the roll of Canada's illustrious dead.

From Sir George's old seat in the House, his life long friend and colleague, the Right Hon Sir John A. Macdonald, rises to make a motion respecting the disposal of the remains of his ally. Sir John's pale face is now paler than ever, and even his strong will cannot control the tremulous lips. With a voice struggling to reach the surface of a great soul's supreme sorrow he addresses the House. He does not look around as is his wont. His head is not erect. What if it be bowed to hide the unbidden tears? Unsurpassed in intellect, as he is on this continent, those silent witnesses show that after all Sir John's heart is greater than his head.

After a very brief tribute to the public and private life of the absent dead, Sir John moves "that an humble address be presented to His Excellency, praying that he would be graciously pleased to give directions that the remains of Sir George E. Cartier be interred at the public expense, and to the memory of that excellent statesman, with an inscription expressive of the public sense of so great and irreparable a loss, and to assure His Excellency that this House will make good the expenses attending the same."

Mr. Mackenzie regrets exceedingly that this motion has been brought forward. He cannot agree that Sir George's political life has been beneficial to the country; and then he has the unsurpassable bad taste, the soulless audacity to sneer at the dead man's defeat during the late elections, and to insinuate that his being a member of a Government charged with selling their country were additional reasons why this tribute of respect should not be given.

Holton follows in the same strain, only in the way of insult he uses his superior natural qualifications to "go one better" than his worthy colleague from Lambton, which he does by saying that "Lafontaine was a much greater man than the one now deceased, and no monument had been erected to his memory."

No one can deny the right of Messrs. Mackenzie and Holton to oppose and vote down any proposition they deem wrong; and if it be unwise to establish the precedent of thus honoring the memory of our departed national guides, let them argue against the principle, but let the person alone. They ought to be the last men in Canada to taunt a man with defeat. Holton's public life has been a succession of defeats, and to-day there isn't a worse beaten man in the country than Alexander Mackenzie. True he is the nominal leader of a combination of factions which some imaginative men call a party; but from the very threshold of success he has, during the session, led that "party" from one defeat to the other; his one lone victory being the worst disaster of them all, when trampling under foot the expressed principles of a life-time—he linked his fortunes with advocates of religious rule, and led his revolutionary followers to a visionary victory through the breach made in our constitution by the motion overriding the proud rights of the people of New Brunswick.

Hon. Dr. Tupper calmly rebukes the mistaken manner in which these men meet the proposition of the Prime Minister; and after some further debate Sir John's motion is carried by a majority of sixteen, the last vote of the session being exactly the same as the first. In a full House, however, the proportionate majority would have been 35.

One of the most affecting incidents of the debate was the reading by Sir John of portions of a letter just received from Sir George Cartier, written a few days before his death, in which he expressed himself as feeling much better in health, and looking forward hopefully to soon rejoin Sir John and the Government in their duties. In one part of the letter occurs the sentence, "I had decided to sail for Canada on the 22nd * * * but have postponed it till the 29th."

Alas for human hopes. On the 22nd the swift winged electricity bore to these shores the sad news that the spirit of the sanguine statesman had gone on another journey, to that mysterious land over whose shadowy shores the immortal of our friends forever disappears, leaving to our touch and tears but the cold unsympathizing clay.

Sir George's words were strangely, solemnly prophetic. All that is mortal of him will leave England on the 29th. Heedless of the unresting billows, of the angry shriek of the storm, he will calmly be borne across the sea, and the land which he dignified and ennobled in his life, will open its bosom to give him an honored resting place in death. Requiescat in Pace.

which has just closed will be remarkable in many respects. There will be recognized in it the fact of the unprecedently prominent position which the Maritime Provinces have occupied from the start. The position taken by Mr. Tilley as the second Minister of the Crown he has splendidly maintained. In the readjustment of the public debt, the New Brunswick export duty, the terms of union with Prince Edward Island, readjustment of salaries, votes for public works, etc., you can see that the amount of "Financiering" done this session has been almost without parallel since the Union, and yet Mr. Tilley has "stood up to his work like a man," astonishing his enemies and more than justifying the earnest hopes of his most ardent friends.

has taken a leading position in the Commons, and secured an amount of most important legislation, which no man without his peculiar energy and uncontrollable perseverance could accomplish.

Dr. Tupper, too, has done good service this session. Besides introducing measures regulating in many ways the commerce of the whole country, he has given valuable assistance to Sir John in the party conflicts of the session. In most cases he has borne the brunt of Opposition attacks, leaving Sir John fresh for the final victorious charge. Among the "full privates" from our own Province, Burpee, of St. John, Palmer, Costigan and Domville have each taken prominent parts in some way. Others, like "honest John" McAdam, have fulfilled their mission quietly, but efficiently, and their counties will practically feel the result of their labors.

BILLS INTRODUCED BY MARITIME

members are at the beginning and the end of the list. When His Excellency assented to a number of bills a few weeks ago, the first on the list was one regulating the appointment of harbor masters, and the last one affecting some other Maritime ports; while of the many bills assented to yesterday, the first was Mitchell's bill for keeping order on board passenger steamers, the middle one was his "Act respecting wreck and salvage," and the last on the list was another of the same Minister's "little bills" for preventing the desertion of seamen.

Among the important

PUBLIC BILLS

may be mentioned the weights and measures bill, the deck-load law, the incorporation of the Canada Cable Company, the registration of ships bill, the incorporation of the Canada and West India Mail Steamship Company, the pilotage bill, the readjustment of the public debt, and finally the bill for the admission of P. E. Island into the Union, leaving only one other colony to complete and crown the great Canadian Confederation. Among the political events of this session the most unprecedent and startling of all was the now celebrated "Huntington charges." H.
