Recovery of Nearly a Quarter of a Million of Dollars Obtained by the Bank of England Forgers.

The recovery of nearly a quarter of a million dollars of United States bonds, which had been obtained by McDonald, alias Bidwell, and associates, in the late Bank of England forgeries, was made Tuesday. The facts are as follows: On the 5th of March a trunk, said to contain wearing apparel, old and in use, was delivered at the office of the North Atlantic Express Company, 4 Margate street, London, by a person calling himself C. Lossing of Tunbridge Wells, England, and addressed to Major George Matthews, New York, to be kept in bond at the express office, 71 Broadway, New York, until called for. The trunk was duly forwarded by the express company, and reached New York by the steamship Cuba, which arrived there March 20th, and was kept in bond by the company, as per instruction, until Saturday last, when a woman, calling herself Mrs. George Matthews, presented an order for its delivery at the express office, duly signed by Geo. Matthews. Meantime counsel for the Bank of England had received some information in regard to the trunk, which led to its detention by the company, until Tuesday, when it was taken possession of, under an order of the Supreme Court, by Nathaniel Jarvis, Esq., receiver in the Bank of England forgery case, and on being opened and examined was found to contain a quantity of wearing apparel, old and in use, two gold watches, several miscellaneous articles, and three packages of United States 5-20 and 10-40 bonds, rolled up in soiled linen, amounting in all to $220,950. The bonds were found to be identical in class, amounts and numbers with those advertised by the Bank of England to have been obtained by the Bidwell forgers. In the trunk were found cards and a card plate with the name of George Bidwell, a quantity of memoranda, bills, etc., showing conclusively that it had been shipped by and belonged to him. Out of the $300,000 obtained from the Bank of England by these forgeries, all but about $50,000 have now been recovered.

Murdered on a Locomotive.

A crime, astonishing in its details, is reported to have been recently committed in Ireland. A goods train starting out from Limerick just before dusk had proceeded but a few miles when it came to a full stop. The astonished guard jumped from his box and ran up to the engine, but when he arrived neither fireman nor driver was visible. The light of his lamp, however, revealed traces of blood and hair. He at once searched the line on the back track, and thus discovered first the driver's hat, and next his dead body lying on the sleepers. Taking the train on to the next station he reported the facts to the police, who set on foot a search after the missing fireman. They found him the next morning in a cabin not far from the railway, and got possession of his clothes, which were stained with evidences of guilt. Overcome by his sudden discovery he referred the death of his comrade to a sudden quarrel caused by the driver's violence towards him. Justice may find out the facts; but, however the final strife arose, the incident is one that fastens upon the imagination, and must take its place among the most remarkable class of crimes. Here, on an engine speeding through the darkness, two men suddenly fall into deadly feud, and one, quickly murdered, is cast forth upon the rails, while the other, stopping the train, flies for his life.

Vigorous Old Men.

President Thiers has celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday, and among the many compliments which he received on the occasion was that conferred by the Prussian Commandant at Nancy in giving a public dinner in honor of the veteran. The fact that at seventy-six the historian of the first Empire and the head of the government which supplanted the last Empire should be so hearty, active, courageous and ready for all emergencies, is something worthy of comment. Thiers is not one of those men "who lag, superfluous, on the stage," by any means, but seems determined to make the closing chapters of his life fuller of events and deeds than any of its predecessors. He is as vigorous and impetuous now as he was a generation ago.

It seems somewhat strange that in these modern times old men hold so many positions of high trust. An arbitrary, irascible and active old man rules Germany with a steady hand. The chief of his armies is paunchy seventy. In England the present government is made up of younger men than are found in like places elsewhere, but the head of the opposition is seventy years old and would to-morrow undertake to form a new government with as much courage and activity as he showed when he first became Premier. In fact, most of the ablest members of Parliament are over sixty-five, and are apparently as equal to hard work as they ever were.

All over the Continent old men are not only eminent but active in politics, science, art and religious discussions, and some of the best work that is done is the product of brains which have been disciplined by a long lifetime of labor and of hearts that have neither been discouraged nor hardened by the lessons of experience. In such cases the closing years of life seem, on the whole, the happiest, for they witness the full "fruition of function," and the gathering in of long accumulating results.

Don Carlos.

The Bourbon Prince, Don Carlos, has allowed a New York Herald interviewer to give him a midnight audience, at an isolated chateau in the south of France. The impression produced by the Prince's presence is described as agreeable. He is tall and slim in person, with a remarkably handsome face. The first pleasing impression is rather weakened as he speaks. He is slightly effeminate in his address, and his manner and delivery are not in harmony with his energetic, manly physical appearance. Lighting a fragrant cigarette, and offering one to the interviewer, Don Carlos replied to inquiries concerning the political future of Spain. Concerning the campaign of the Carlists he wished his critics to remember that censure was easy but art is difficult. In view of the almost insuperable obstacles they had met he thought their record a glorious one, and well calculated to encourage the friends of their cause. His advisers had kept him like a prisoner of State and assured him that his entrance into Spain would do harm only. Don Carlos justifies his present course by saying the act by which the throne of Spain was given to Isabella was in violation of the organic law of the Kingdom, therefore illegal, and he proposed to continue the fight for the rights of his house. His programme of government is that everything shall be done through a free Cortes, and there shall be a complete decentralization in everything but general politics. In relation to Castelar and Figueras, the Prince said that he considered them men of great ability, but not great statesmen. He believed them to be men of integrity, but having dishonest followers. Of Thiers, Don Carlos says he has not much reason to fear his intrigues or hostility, and he knows that he does not dare to recognize the Spanish Republic. As to Cuba he holds the abolition of slavery to be indispensable but gradual, not at the expense of the proprietors. No Government, however, dare allude in Spain to the alienation of Cuba.

The Fate of an Umbrella Fiend.

A writer in the St. Louis Globe thus pays his compliments to the ubiquitous wretch whom all pedestrians hate: The man who walks the streets carrying an umbrella under his arm, was at the corner of Fifth and Vine this morning. He stopped suddenly to speak with a friend, and a man behind him nearly broke the point of the umbrella off by running his eyes against it. The man swore, and the umbrella chap wheeled suddenly, tearing off a young lady's back hair. He turned to apologize, and jabbed the end of the umbrella into a very tall policeman's stomach. Policeman administered a jerk and the umbrella point tore off a portion of a small boy's ear, and immediately after carried the starboard corner of a man's mouth up into his hair. Stepping back in dismay at what he had done, he rammed the umbrella down a bystander's throat, and at the same time he fastened the hook handle (the probabilities are that the handle was not only hooked, but that he hooked the whole umbrella) into a colored citizen's wool. In his efforts to get his umbrella loose, the unfortunate owner of it upset a fruit and candy stand, and plunged head foremost into one of Squire's plate glass windows. In the excitement and confusion that ensued, the umbrella was put into a hack and driven to the hospital, and the man was taken to an umbrella store to undergo repairs.

A GREAT LIFE.
GLADSTONE'S "LIFE OF FARADAY." Michael Faraday. By J. H. Gladstone, Ph.D. F. R. S. 16mo, Cloth, 90 cents
It is founded mainly on the personal reminiscences of the writer. Mr. Gladstone is master of an easy and graceful narrative style. His memoir is written with warm personal feeling, no less than with a just appreciation of the position of Faraday as a man of science. It is intended for popular reading, and aims to do justice to the admirable personal qualities of the subject, which are quite as remarkable as his philosophical discoveries.—[N. Y. Tribune.

HOME TESTIMONY.
ST. JOHN, N. B., March 26, 1873.
Messrs. R. C. MARGESON & Co.—Gentlemen: I have been afflicted with gravel and stone upwards of a year and a half—tried everything I could hear of for its relief, without avail; saw your advertisement of CALCULIFUGE in the Halifax papers—took three bottles according to directions, and in the short space of four weeks was entirely cured. I willingly add my testimony to its value, and heartily recommend it to all afflicted as I have been.

TESTIMONIAL.—I have been very much pleased with your (Mason & Hamlin) American Organs on all occasions. Their tone is remarkably pure and free from readiness, and their touch is all that could be desired.
The Henry F. Miller Piano is used at the New England Conservatory of Music, Young Men's Christian Union, Boston, and by the schools and public institutions generally. ap 14
