Old Sayings in a Rhyme.

As poor as a church mouse;
As thin as a rail;
As fat as a porpoise,
As rough as a gale;
As brave as a lion,
As spry as a cat;
As bright as a sixpence,
As weak as a rat.

As proud as a peacock,
As sly as a fox;
As mad as a march hare,
As strong as an ox;
As fain as a lily;
As empty as air;
As rich as a Cressus,
As cross as a bear.

As pure as an angel,
As neat as a pin;
As smart as a steel trap,
As ugly as sin;
As dead as a door nail,
As white as a sheet;
As flat as a pancake,
As red as a beet.

As round as an apple,
As black as a hat;
As brown as a berry;
As blind as a bat;
As mean as a miser;
As full as a tick;
As plump as a partridge,
As sharp as a stick.

As clean as a penny,
As dark as a pall;
As hard as a millstone,
As bitter as gall;
As fine as a fiddle,
As clear as a bell;
As dry as a herring;
As deep as a well.

As light as a feather,
As hard as a rock;
As stiff as a poker,
As calm as a clock;
As green as a gosling,
As brisk as a bee;—
And now let me stop,
Lest you weary of me.

CHAPTER VI.

A WIFE NOT A LUXURY—BRIGHAM'S SERAGLIO—UNIQUE WALL—IN THE TABERNACLE—THE FASHIONS—THE PROPHET AS HE APPEARS, (AS HE IS, NEXT WEEK.)

The prudent man, who contemplates entering on the estate of matrimony, will, perforce, cast his eyes about him in search of a temple, in which to enshrine the prospective deity. If, in this matter, his desires take a wide range, the accommodation will have to be ample. A large domicile may, by judicious division and forbearance on the part of the inmates, be found, sufficient for three women, who one and all claim the rank of wives; but if we increase this number, we will also have to increase the number of our possessions, in the shape of houses. The necessities of the polygamist in this respect, may be looked on, as a part of the punishment, which always attends an infraction of nature's laws. It has never been contended that the man who takes unto himself a wife, is indulging in the luxuries of life, except, in very rare instances, although it turns out that she fulfils all the conditions, necessary to make her such; when, however, he adds to the divinely ordained number, he brings on himself, all the pains and penalties, attendant on a course of life, at once luxurious and sensuous. The man whose dinner is incomplete without the addition of his pint of Port, or Sherry, will find, at the end of the year, that this unnatural indulgence, has cost him dearly, both in health and purse. Even if within his means, a marked derangement of the system, is the direct result, with irritableness and consequent family jars, as side effects; he has, therefore, endangered his financial standing, and ruined his domestic peace, for something at once fanciful and unnecessary. So it is with our Mormon brother. He should be content with the necessaries of life, even with the example of so good a man as David before him.

I have been led into this train of thought by an inspection of the premises of that married man Brigham Young. At the upper end of the City, we are confronted by a walled enclosure of some sixty acres. This wall is massive, about seven and a half feet high, and seemingly one huge solid, which is, owing to the peculiar formation of the material used, a pebbly rock found in Echo canon, (canyon). For a considerable distance it is seen to cap the frowning precipice and lies in huge masses at the base, where it had taken a mad leap at the bidding of some awful convulsion. Imagine a sea beach strewn with shells and pebbles, black, brown, grey and crystal; suppose this distribution to be uniform to a certain depth and that finally the whole solidifies, you have then a perfect conception of the material of which the Prophet has chosen to erect a barrier between his wives and the vices and gaities of a wicked world. The reducing of this rock to an even surface has not been attempted, as it would be both impossible and undesirable. In certain things none but a fool will try to improve on nature and this is one of them. Having secured by the use of the hammer a general approximation to straight lines the different segments are set in a pebbly mortar assimilating so closely to them that no trace of a joint can be discerned, except by the closest inspection. Every ten feet or so the wall, which narrows as it rises, swells out in the shape of pillars, giving an impression of strength and having a pleasing effect at the same time. As we proceed with our inspection—like the pages of a book—new combinations are continually unfolding themselves. Around the case of an antediluvian bivalve, is a setting of many coloured pebbles so fancifully and beautifully disposed, that we at once concede, the art of man cannot compete with the works of nature. Further on we find a piece of fossil wood which, in fracturing, exhibits the colour, growth
