"THANKS FROM SIR EDWARD.—

Mayor Stevenson has received a copy of a letter sent out by Sir Edward Carson, head of the admiralty, expressing his thanks to London and other municipalities for their generous support given to the fund for British sailors' relief. The communication was sent to W. G. Ross, Montreal, head of the Canadian organization, and copies were forwarded to London and other municipalities.

Defaulting appears to have become so general that "all combined to give Canadian credit such an unfavorable reputation in the British money market that a whole generation of British money-lenders had to die out Canadian offerings could find a friendly careful from the Canadian offerings could find a friendly freeption at the central money market of the world."

This was not because I felt myself qualified for the task, but because I was consumed by curiosity to know just what these city men were proposing. what these city men were proposing men that they want to send on the need men who will help you with the what these city men were proposing to do. I knew what a good many farmers thought of this movement, so far as they had been able to learn of it, and I felt that if I went down I could be a good deal "sassier" than old form. Moreover, the men who will need men who will nelp you with the farms are men who will be competent to do farm work, even though shocking grain and hauling in, you can get them for a few weeks at a need a few days to get back to their old form. Moreover, the men who any solid and responsible farmer will do this will be men who are in- more than they are worth, or to keep would dare to be. Frankly, it looked spired by a patriotic purpose. For two days I have been associated with the men ing their country and humanity. They will have every motive for giving the farmer who employs them ing the farmer who employs them charity, and you are not asked to have been associated with the men who are back of this movement, and the best of service, and they will be charitably give them work. They I want to tell you what I found, just as frankly as I told them what I thought of some features of their work. I found a body of men that are sincerely, earnestly, eagerly trying to meet a great crisis, and who are diligently seeking to find what every farmer who is able to extend experience needed to direct their they can possibly do to help. It would be impossible to doubt their sincerity. Many of them are men whose already made great sacrifices for the ducing profitably for himself. The your profits. Finding them so earnest and so eager to be of assistance, I could do nothing else but enter into the spirit of their work. I knew how the spirit of their work. I knew how hard it is for the farmers to change nized that this shortage cannot be their plans so late in the season, and

But the result of meeting these men but the result of meeting these men at the problem of the will to work. There may be mistakes, and some who are inefficient may go to the farms, but I am convinced that here is one case where the men of the cities want to pose to take part in it with a sponsor. But the result of meeting these men in this way was, that they explained their purposes to me in detail, and I found their purposes much better than any impression of them that has been given by either advertisements or newspaper reports.

I am convinced that here is one case where the men of the cities want to help their country and humanity generously and unselfishly. If you find that you can employ a man in such a way as to increase the products that will justify a proper fight with the profiteers, and I propose to take part in it with a spontaneous and carefree ferocity.
