nothing to propose, but will merely give it as their private opinion that unconditional submission, abolition of slavery, destruction of the confederate government, army, and debt, might still save us from utter annihilation. That Lincoln is full of compassion and loving kindness, having no pleasure in the death even of rebels, and that true repentance and amendment of life may still move him to spare our lives, or at least some of our lives, not that they can promise anything."

Pursuing Raiders.

It is quite clear that under certain circumstances the law of nations allows a country to enter the territory of another, with whom they are at peace, in pursuit of an enemy. Two of the English authorities on the subject are quoted below:

Dr. Philmore, in volume 1, page 227, on his valuable work on International Law, says: "A rebellion or a civil commotion, it may happen, agitates a nation; while the authorities are engaged in repressing it, bands of rebels pass the frontier to shelter themselves under the protection of another conterminous State, and from thence with restored strength and fresh appliances, renew their invasion upon the State from which they have escaped. The invaded States remonstrate. The remonstrance, whether from favor to rebels or feebleness of the executive, is unheeded, or, at least, the evil complained of remains unredressed. In this state of things the invaded State is warranted by International law in crossing the frontier, and in taking the necessary means for her safety, whether these be the capture or dispersion of the rebels or the destruction of their stronghold, as the exigencies of the case may require."

The authority deriv d from the latest and best British writer on the law of nations, is certainly conclusive. But Vattel says the same thing. "If his neighbor," he says, "affords a refuge to his enemies, enabling them to recruit and attack him at leisure, he must either prevent them from so doing, or else they may be sought and fought on his territory." "This," adds Vattel, "is what shall happen to those nations who are not in a condition to make their territories respected. Very soon the theatre of war will be established there. There they shall march, there they shall fight as in a country open to all comers."

GETTING USED TO IT.—An enthusiastic volunteer officer of this town has been seasoning himself for some time past in anticipation of the hardships of a soldier's life, which he expects soon to be undergoing in the defence of his country. The object is a good one, and well worthy the imitation of all gentlemen similarly situated, who have any doubts of their powers of physical endurance. The mode he has adopted is eminently calculated to accomplish the object aimed at, and as it may be of benefit to others we will describe it as near as our limited acquaintance with military movements will permit. On particularly cold nights he gets up about twelve or one o'clock, and donning a private soldier's uniform, shoulders a rifle and walks past in front of his own house for three or four hours. When the time for relieving guard arrives, he grounds arms and calls out "Who comes there?" "Relief?" answered in an undertone to himself. "Advance relief and give the countersign!" The relief thus challenged is supposed to advance and give the word "cold night." "Cold night it is," answers the vigilant and hardy hero, who instantly marches off to renew his disturbed slumbers. —Perth Courier.
