Claude Macdonell was received with veciferous applause, which was repeated when he announced the nomination of Mr. Foy in South Toronto. He said there was no doubt of the election of both Foy and Crawford, but it seemed a necessary that they should poll two votes to their opponent's one before attaining nower. There was a kick in the old horse yet, and they must see that it was given its quietus on Jan, 25. The urged the necessity for attending to the work of registration, which was more important than the election, and pressed on all the necessity of using their best efforts for a return of constitutional government in Ontario. Other sneakers were Ald, Dunn, A. J. Weeler, William Kerr, M. Parkinson, Oavid Weismiller, Ald, Woods, Harry a Simpson and Dr. Ott. The chairman said that Mr. Crawford meant that he would have to go out into the province to assist Mr. Whitney, so that they would need to do his work for him. After the sneeches, the work of organization was started for the campaign.
