WEATHER IS FAVORABLE FOR GROWING CROP

Price Current Says Oats Seeding is Progressing Favorably—Chicago Firmer, Liverpool Easy.

World Office.
Thursday Evening, April 2.

Liverpool wheat futures closed to-day ¼d to ½d lower than yesterday, and corn futures ¼d lower.

At Chicago May wheat closed ½c higher than yesterday; May corn ⅛c lower, and May oats ⅛c higher.

Winnipeg car lots to-day: Wheat, 104; year ago, 130.

Northwest cars to-day, 229; week ago, 207; year ago, 465.

Argentine estimates: Wheat, this week, 6,400,000; last week, 6,248,000; last year, 3,656,000. Corn, this week, 160,000; last week, 24,000; last year, nothing.

Price Current says: Favorable weather for agricultural interests has continued to prevail in the central regions thruout the week just closed. Winter wheat has improved in appearance under the genial conditions, and the outlook is increasingly encouraging with the progress of spring thus far. This satisfactory development of the plant is reported with uniformity in practically all of the central regions. Moisture would be beneficial in some western localities, but the ground has not yet become too dry to be harmful. There is practically an absence of reports reflecting apprehension of damage from insect pests, and, taken as a whole, the promises may be regarded with much of hopefulness. Considerable progress has been made in the sowing of oats the past week, but in some localities excessive rain is delaying the prosecution of this work. In most instances where sowing has been accomplished the ground has been reported in excellent condition to receive the grain. Corn ground is being broken and spring work is generally under way.

Chicago Gossip.

Marshall, Spader & Co. wired to J. G. Beaty at the close:

Wheat—The market has shown a hesitating response to somewhat less favorable conditions prevailing in Nebraska and Kansas, where low temperatures and winds have caused some uneasiness. The northwest also has wintry conditions, which may delay seeding of spring wheat somewhat. Aside from these influences, general news was of a bearish sort. Argentine promises 6,400,000 bush. wheat again to-morrow, while expectations have pointed to a falling off. Crop news as a whole are excellent. We are inclined to think that there may be some rally ahead of wheat, and are disposed to await this development rather than being actively bearish on these breaks, and, should this expected advance come, a short position will be much safer and more profitable than by taking a chance at the present levels.

Corn—Very dull; fluctuations narrow, and trade very light. There was some improvement in the tone of the cash market; sample prices steady to ¼ higher. The situation, speculatively, is unchanged.

Ennis & Stoppani wired to J. L. Mitchell at the close:

Wheat—The market has shown a firm undertone this morning, but trade has been of small proportion, and range of prices under one cent, with final figures the best of the day. There was a little buying by local bulls and some buying of May by a prominent elevator house. The strength was due to complaints from Kansas and Nebraska, and cold weather in the winter wheat belt, but the forecast, however, is for warmer weather all over.

Corn—The market ruled exceedingly dull, with only a small local trade. There was no feature whatever to the trade.

Oats were a little higher on fair scattered demand from commission houses. Offerings were light and the buying is thought to be for the leading longs. Reports are current that oats have been closely marketed and receipts will continue to be small.

Provisions eased off on selling by commission houses. Packers were not in the market to-day to any extent.

J. R. Heintz & Co. wired R. B. Holden:

Wheat—Market has shown a little more strength to-day. The local crowd all got short on yesterday's break as usual, and, finding the offerings light, covered considerable wheat. We believe that most of the long wheat has been liquidated, and the proper thing to do is to buy on all these set-backs.

Corn—Trade light. Fluctuations narrow. The bull leaders are doing very little. We feel that corn is a purchase on all dips for a moderate profit.

Oats—Nothing new in this market. Trade is very small.

Provisions—The market has been a little nervous and prices lower. There has been considerable profit-taking. The present values will end to check consumption and cause freer marketing of hogs. We believe that short sales will prove profitable. Those who have profits should secure them.

A Vanderbilt Divorce Suit.

NEW YORK, April 2.—The papers in the Vanderbilt divorce case, which were filed in the county clerk's office to-day, show that every effort is being made to conceal the real nature of the suit.

There is nothing to show whether the contemplated action is for a separation or divorce. It is generally believed, however, that an absolute divorce will be asked by Mrs. Vanderbilt.

NEW YORK STATE'S QUEER LAW

The Absurdity of Passing Laws for a Fat Standard for Milk.

Nature has decreed that cows shall put varying percentages of fat and non-fat solids into their milk, according to their breeds, their feeds, their ages, their lactation dates, their moods, their conditions and their environments. The natural range of butter fat is from 1.5 per cent. up to 10 per cent. The lawmakers of New York, says an exchange, thru some unexplained and inexplicable beclouding of their intellectuals, have decreed that the cows, when they put less than three per cent. of butterfat into their milk are law-breakers and "adulterate" their product. The same law makes the owner of the cow an "adulterator" if he offers their milk for sale just as they give it. To "adulterate" means to put in foreign substances. Nothing in this way is done by either the cow or her owner. Of course, if milk, as the cows give it, with less than three per cent. of butterfat is "adulterated" by analogy all milk with more than three per cent. of butterfat is "adulterated." The "state standard" should work both ways, but in this case it does not. The standard has only forbearance, and comfort, and profit and legal safeguarding for middlemen, who, because of the standard, are at perfect liberty to insist that the milk producers shall hand over to them at two or three cents a quart, milk that contains from four to six per cent. of butterfat, which they, the middlemen, are permitted to standardize, that is, to skim down to the standard of three per cent., and then sell it at 8 to 12 cents a quart, while the removed butterfat is sold at cream prices. No "adulteration" there, of course.

Outrages Common Sense.

It is "adulteration" when the producer's cows give milk below the standard. It is not "adulteration" when the middleman skims out one to three per cent. of butterfat and sells the skim milk at full-milk prices. Was there ever a more monstrous absurdity than the "standard for milk"? It robs the producer. It ignores nature. It outrages common sense. It protects the middleman in his exactions from the producer and his extortions from the consumer. The middleman can test a producer's milk, find it below the standard, accuse him of a crime and have him punished.

The middleman can take milk above the standard and rob it down to the standard, and sell it as whole milk to the consumer, and neither the producer nor the consumer can have the middleman punished, because he keeps in line with the unjust and absurd standard which simply sets the limit for the middleman's wrongdoing and protects him in the injustice he practices daily. It would be interesting to see some expert attempt to justify the milk standard. The state can regulate the sale of milk equitably in just one way, and that way is to legislate and provide for the sale of milk on its percentage of fat and other solid contents. This method would mean a sliding scale of prices, such as a price for skim milk, other prices for one per cent. up to six per cent. fat, contents of from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. total solids in the milk. Then the consumer would get exactly what he wishes and would pay for what he gets. Then the producer would get the real market value of his milk. Then the middleman would have to deal honestly.

GREENHOUSE ETHICS.

Preparations for Spring Should Now Go on—How to Get Good Soil.

Spring time brings around the old question of planting and plant growing. A successful plant-grower must be well informed as to the most suitable soils for different classes of plants and especially if the roots are confined in flower pots. When a plant is growing out in the garden, the roots ramble deeply into the soil and consequently have a better chance of choosing what is most necessary for the plant's welfare than would be the case if the same roots were confined within the narrow limits of a flower pot.

All vegetable matter which has been collected during last summer-time will now have decayed and formed leaf mould. A similar substance will also be procurable in woods and shrubberies where fallen leaves have accumulated for some time on the surface of the ground. If this decaying vegetable matter is passed thru a sieve and freed from sticks and stones, it forms a most useful material for promoting root action, and especially where large numbers of soft-wooded cuttings have to be induced to root quickly. It is also useful, when mixed with other soils, for raising large numbers of seedling plants for the decoration of the greenhouse or the flower garden. Leaf soil is one of the chief sources from which humus originates, and without humus it is difficult to obtain fertility.

Best Quality of Loam.

Loam is also needed in most instances where plants are cultivated in pots, and by this term it is generally understood that good garden or field soil, containing a certain amount of clay, is meant. The best quality of loam may be obtained by cutting sods from an old [illegible] stacking them in a heap for [illegible] ths or so, and then pulling [illegible] ces before using the shredd[illegible]ns in conjunction with other soils. After sods have been cut they should be stacked up in the open, and with the grassy sides downward. In about six months' time the stack is ready for use.

An equal mixture of leaf-mould, loam and sharp silver sand will make a good light soil; more loam and less leaf-mould will make a heavier soil; and an addition of more or less well-decayed stable manure will make mixtures of different grades of fertility or richness. Thus it will be seen that the soil one uses may be perfectly under control. After a crop of mushrooms has been produced on a bed of manure, this material is in excellent condition for mixing with potting soil as a fertiliser, or even as a substitute for leaf-mould.

Selection of Cuttings.

If equal quantities of loam, leaf-mould and silver sand have been well mixed together and sifted there need be little difficulty in inducing cuttings of fuchsias, heliotrope, geraniums, iresine, lemon-scented verbena and coleus to root quickly. When cuttings are to be made pieces of stem, or small branches, should be selected, and these should not be too soft or too hard. If sappy shoots are used they will be liable to damp off or decay, and particularly if the temperature of the greenhouse or propagating pit is insufficiently warm.

In selecting a shoot to be made into a cutting a few leaves are left at the top, and the stem is severed below a joint, the whole of the cutting measuring from 2in. to 4in. in length. In making a soft wooded cutting it is a mistake to remove more leaves than is necessary for its insertion in the soil, as the foliage helps the cutting to retain its sap or vitality.

A propagating case is an extremely useful contrivance, where many cuttings have to be struck or seedling plants raised, and failing this the reader cannot do better than place a box on the hot-water pipes in the greenhouse, fill it three-parts full of damp cocoanut fibre, and then cover it with a large pane of glass. Cuttings will strike readily if inserted in pots of sandy soil plunged in the fibre, and the most tender seedlings, such as cucumbers and melons, may be raised with alacrity by means of such a contrivance. Many plants which are used to produce a subtropical appearance in the flower garden could also be raised in the same way, and among these may be named cannas, solanums, eucalyptus, grevilleas and castor oil plants.
