A BRUTAL ASSAULT ON THE MARSH ROAD

Story of a Serious Case Which May Have Its Sequel in the Police Court.

A brutal assault was committed on the road near Torriburn on Friday night last which may yet have its sequel in the police court. It appears that the victim of the assault while intoxicated was driving in the direction of the city, with a horse and wagon when he met a team containing four coachmen, who passed several insulting remarks and were he replied they threw him out of the vehicle striking on his head, and then kicked the man who was lying prostrate on the roadway. The horse which the man had hired, became frightened by the man's cries and bolted continuing its flight until it reached the stableman's barn.

The injuries received by the victim are very serious, although he is convalescent at present and include a bruised head, sore ribs and body, numerous abrasions and cuts on the face and a badly injured eye. As a climax he was compelled to walk seven miles to the city. It is unlikely that he may be deprived of the sight of an eye and if so he intends to bring civil and criminal suits against the men who are rather notorious. They were also under the influence of liquor when the incident occurred.
