THE FIRST LABOR DAY.

The celebration of Labor Day was generally observed in this city yesterday, and it has every prospect of becoming a permanent institution. The working people of Canada owe the existence of this holiday in great measure to Sir John Thompson, who carried the bill through Parliament, and who personally feels a deep interest in its realization.

As far as the celebration in Toronto is concerned, on the Island yesterday, it has one or two significant features, and the first and most important of these is that in the Island the people of Toronto, the workingmen of Toronto possess what is bound to become a most beautiful and at the same time ought to be the most productive single asset owned by any city on the North American Continent. That being the case, it ought to be maintained forever as the property of the people, and under no pretext ought the proprietorship to be alienated. But acceptance of this principle does not prevent but rather points to the creation of a certain number of monopolies in connection therewith. For instance, the ferry business to and from the Island ought to be monopolized, and a regular percentage of the revenue accrue to the City Treasury. In the next place, if ever a street railway franchise is granted on the Island, it ought to be on the same basis as the City Railway. The building sites ought never to be sold, but leased on terms not exceeding 21 years, and in other ways the productive features of the Island, whatever they may be, should be let to private parties or to companies on the understanding that a regular rental of some kind or other is to be paid into the city. In this way a fund can be created for reclaiming the marshes, for beautifying the land and for making it still more a source of pleasure and profit to the people.

To extend this principle of a monopoly from the Island to a wider sphere, working men should take a special interest in the creation of many other municipal monopolies. The World is in favor of the lighting business of the city being made a monopoly, either controlled by the city or sublet to a corporation that would agree to divide with the municipality. Were the city to embark into a general electric lighting business it could in a very short time reduce the cost of gas that now obtains in Toronto, could light the streets at a much cheaper rate than that paid to the company that now has the contract, and could supply, not only incandescent lighting to private concerns, but power also for manufacturing purposes. Such municipal monopolies have been created in other cities, both in England and America, and the result has been a great and substantial benefit to the people themselves. Municipal monopolies are directly in harmony with labor politics.

Another thing in which labor politics ought to join hands is the regulation of the rates of travel on railways. In Austria-Hungary the State owns the railways and has within the last few years carried out an extensive reduction in the price of railway travel with the result that the earnings of the roads have marvelously increased, and the conveniences of travel to the public have been improved almost a hundredfold. One reason given by the Government of Austria for this change was that cheap railway fares enabled labor to go wherever there was a demand for it. In other words, workmen rapidly and easily adjusted themselves to the supply of work. It is a well-known fact that what prevents workingmen in America from getting to where work is to be had is the expense of getting to that point, as the prevalent fare seems to be three cents a mile. Labor men and labor politicians ought to be found almost unanimously on the side of Parliamentary regulation of railway passenger rates in this country. Parliament has the power to do it and ought to do it, especially if it can be shown, as we believe it can be shown, that the result will be increased earnings for the railways with greater convenience to the people.

If workingmen, therefore, wish to attach a genuine significance to Labor Day they will recognize the principle of the creation of municipal monopolies and the regulation of railroads in the matter of transportation rates both for passengers and freight by the State.

These are two important questions to occupy us all for some time to come.

PROTECTION IN THEORY AND PRACTICE.

The Canadian maker cannot, according to The World, supply with profit when only able to secure 20 per cent. on ordinary prices. For our contemporary twice asserts that the factories would not have been established under a 20 per cent. protection. This claim about the establishment of the factories is open to doubt. The only certainty is that, if they could not be profitably operated with a 20 per cent. protection, they require more than a 20 per cent. advance on natural prices to be made profitable. —Globe of Yesterday.

The other day we pointed out that a duty of 20 per cent. on stereotype plates had proved ineffectual in establishing a stereotype plate business in Canada, while a duty of 100 per cent. had resulted in establishing three factories, and in relieving Canadian publishers from paying one cent of duty to the Government, while they get plates at the same prices as obtained in the country from which they formerly imported them. Furthermore, by the establishment of the Canadian factories they secure a variety which before their establishment was impossible. Yesterday The Globe attempted to unfold the fallacy of our argument, but The Globe's reasoning fails to convince us, and we believe it would fail to convince any impartial arbiter. The Globe will never be able to appreciate the protection argument until it disabuses its mind of the theory that duties are imposed in order to allow home manufacturers to charge more than foreign manufacturers for their products. In some cases, especially during the first year or two after a protective duty has been imposed, the home manufacturer is in a position to charge more than the foreigner, but this state of things is only temporary, and the duty was not designed to bring it about. It is purely incidental. The real object of protection is to give the home manufacturer a larger market so that he can produce his wares economically. Two merchants are doing business in the same city. One sells one hundred thousand dollars worth of goods in the year. The other sells but thirty thousand. The former sells cheaper because he handles more goods. If the latter can get a monopoly of the other's customers he will be able to sell equally as cheap. The object of protection is to give the home manufacturer a monopoly of the home market, and thereby enable him to sell as cheaply as the larger foreign producer. We will see how this theory works out in the stereotype plate business. There are perhaps 30 factories in the United States where these plates are made, or one factory to each two millions of population. If a manufacturer in Toronto were able to secure as many contracts for plates as the manufacturer in Detroit, he would be able to sell his product just as cheaply as the latter. The only question that bothers him is the securing of the contracts. We will presume that the Detroit manufacturer has these contracts and the Toronto man makes an effort to get them. If the Government imposes a 20 per cent. duty he will get a market for a certain amount of plates, but not sufficient to enable him to produce as economically as his rival. The latter can still do business in Canada, even if he pays the 20 per cent. duty himself. But if the Government increases the duty to 100 per cent. what follows? The Toronto manufacturer gets all the Canadian business, and that is sufficient to enable him to produce stereotype plates as cheaply as they can be made in the United States. If the Toronto plates are as good as the Detroit article, the Government has done no injustice to the publishers of Canada in forcing them to buy from the Canadian manufacturer. Protection may be styled a system of enforcing patriotism. The forces which would support a manufactory in Canada are scattered and dissipated through various channels. It is difficult for the manufacturer, unaided, to assemble them. The Government patriotically comes to his assistance, and by driving off foreigners unites these forces into a compact body of co-operators, working in the interests of their own country. That is just what the Government has done in the plate business. It has driven off the foreign manufacturers and united the Canadian publishers into a co-operation that deals exclusively with Canadian manufacturers. That this forced co-operative system has been successful, the facts that we adduced the other day fully prove. The "natural" price of an article is, we suppose, the price at which it will sell when it is made under the average favorable conditions. As far as Canada is concerned the "natural" price of plates is the price at which they sell in the United States, where they are made under economical conditions. According to The Globe's theory, Canada cannot impose a duty on plates without raising the price of these articles above the "natural" price. We have theoretically showed the fallacy of this argument. The practice agrees with our theory. The price list of the American firm doing business in Canada is exactly the same as its price list for the United States, while the price list of the two Canadian firms is less than that of the American. Hundreds of publishers in Canada know that what we state is a fact.

There is another feature in this business that we have not yet mentioned. We have already showed how the publishers, under a prohibitory tariff, are saved some $8000 a year, which they would have to pay under a free trade tariff. We forgot to mention that the American firm doing business in Canada pays to the Canadian Government $80 weekly as duty on the moulds for making the plates. The American manufacturer pays that out of his own pocket and he doesn't charge it back in any shape or form against the Canadian publisher. In regard to this particular industry, we claim that the high protective duty relieves publishers from paying duty of any kind whatever, gives the country three factories which it otherwise would not have, and makes a foreign firm contribute $4000 a year towards the expenses of governing the country. This is the way the Government's policy works out in practice.

Col. Dawson's New Place of Business.

For over 24 years Col. Dawson has been identified with the Bodega, the restaurant, the bar and the wholesale and retail wine and spirit business connected therewith. The Bodega in that long period has entwined itself with the history of Leader-lane. Col. Dawson has sold the bar and restaurant and has bought the wine and liquor business in King-street west so long conducted by Quetton St. George and latterly by Mr. Gianelli, and to that stock he has added the entire contents of the Bodega's cellar.

Interesting Facts About Whisky.

Visitors to the Exhibition and the public in general are reminded that Dewar's celebrated Old Highland whisky can be had from all first-class wine and liquor dealers. Amongst the first to handle this brand in Toronto in the retail trade were Messrs. Mickie & Co., Caldwell & Hodgins, Lockhart & Co., the Walker House and Queen's Hotel. Should your wholesale dealer not have the whisky in stock, Messrs. R. H. Howard & Co., of Front-street, can supply you. All over the world the name of John Dewar is a synonym for fine old Scotch. Remarkably palatable, being of delicious flavor, yet containing all the characteristics pertaining to the "ancient spirit of Caledonia." No better whisky can be distilled.

The firm of John Dewar & Sons was established in 1846, holds 23 gold and prize medals, and has the distinctive honor of being by appointment purveyors to Her Majesty Queen Victoria. If you drink whisky, drink it good. Give Dewar a trial.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhea, and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops are taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced. d
