ORIGINAL LINES. There is a smile that wrack's the heart,
The laughter of a burning brain:
I wear it now, it doth impart
A shew of joy where all is pain!
"Tis like the lightning's vivid glare
That plays around the shatter'd bark—
A smile that fain would hide despair,
A meteor's flash where all is dark.

To watch the icy hand of Death
Sealing the brow of those we love—
To view the last, the quivering breath
That wafts the fleeting soul above,
Were sorrows I have early known;
But yielding tears brought sweet relief,
And hope ferbade me long to mourn
Or waste youth's transient hours in grief.

But now, a deep and living woe
Has piere'd each fibre of my soul:
The voice of hope no more I know—
The burning tear has ceased to roll.
To bleeding bosoms, such as mine,
The grave shall prove a resting place:
O death! I worship at thy shrine,
Since thou alone canst lead to peace! St. John, 15th Feb. 1830.

POETS, BEWARE! BY T. H. BAYLEY.
From the Musical Bijou, for 1830.

Profit the musical Bijot, for 1830.

Poets, beware! never compare

Woman with aught on earth or in air,
Earth may be bright, air may be light,
But brightness and lightness in woman unite.
Can you suppose eyes are like sloes,
Or that her blushes resemble the rose?—

Where shall we seek for sloes that can speak,
Or roses that rival an eloquent cheek? Surely you never saw lilies so fair,
As the forehead that peeps
Through the curls of her hair;
Surely her lip's red rubies eslipse
The coral she wears, and the nectar she sips!
Birds in the spring awaetly may sing,
But woman sings better than birds on the wing—
Then, Poets, beware! never compare
Woman with aught on earth or in air!

THE TOILETTE.—An excellent line engra ving by Romney, has just been published, from Farrier's pretty painting on the subject of a cottage belle, lingering at her glass on a Sunday morning, while the chimes are calling her to church.

"The Sabbath bells have ceased—and yet she lin To take a last, last look." [get Nothing can be prettier or more natural, for the most part, than the manner in which this motto is illustrated. A new tie must be given to the simple hat of the conscious beauty, while her mother is adjusting the Sunday shawl, and her younger sister (not come to years of coquetry) is waiting patiently with the great prayer-book. There is much skill displayed in the latter figure—the intent yet patient look of whose face may be gathered, though not a vestage of it can actually be seen. The engraving is very carefully, and in many parts very delicately executed

Among the letters now lying at the Post Office, which cannot be delivered because the residence of the party to whom they are directed is not known, is one addressed, "Samuel Johnson, L.L.D. Author of a Dictionary;" and it would appear that the Postman has been sent son, LL.D. Author of a Dictionary;" and it would appear that the Postman has been sent to a house in the city, in search of the Doctor, who has been dead a few days more than 45 years !- London Courier.

AD WRITING .- In al gible writing, so much of which it is our fate to encounter, Sir William Jones, in a letter to Dr. Parr, says "either you can write better, or you cannot : if you can, you ought to write better; if not, you ought to learn."
