TRUTH.

Friend, Truth is best of all. It is the land
Where verdure ever must spring, till Time's last doom;
Where every knight and holiest thought is fired,
Where flowers from gain its strength, and Life its bloom.

As white as Charity is single Truth,
Like Western calm, like honour without end;
And Love doth lean on it in age and youth
And courage is twice arm'd with Truth its Friend.

Oh! who could face the Blame of just men's eyes,
And bear the taunt of falsehood and his dart,
And wear out a cursed life with useless sighs,
Which still the shifting quivering look betrays.

For what is Hope if Truth is not its star?
And what is Love if Truth be not its light?
And what is Life without its soul—its bliss,
Ready to quench its stars in endless night?

THE BIBLE SHIP.

"O! I could weep, if you knew how I am [illegible] among the wicked Christians in America, to remember [illegible] to carry the Bible to the ends of the earth. It [illegible] Commerce, from Christ, [illegible] the ocean, [illegible] Bible ship, sailing the ocean [illegible] Nothing every shore, which should [illegible] the Bible ship, [illegible] the Christian shore, [illegible] to man the sacred memorials of his Maker. [illegible] from the Savior of the world!"

Life for Africa, by Mrs. Morrison of China.

Bring out your banners to the breeze!
Let every soul be moved!
Our ship must cleave the darkest seas,
And search out a benighted world.

Pipe up all hands!—the Bible's cry
Does never, never, never die;
We're off!—we proudly dash on high,
And stoop to no delays.

Speed on!—We steer for lovely Isles,
Where Sin is rife and the vile;
And some retreats, where souls
Look glorious as the sun, but mute.

And Africa, the Shine of night—
And Sampson, by Delaware bold,
Shall [illegible] Light—
The prisoners [illegible] out.

Speed on the Ruler's dominion of ship!
She seeks and rows [illegible]
Nor [illegible] the vessel [illegible]—
The lost, the [illegible] found!

Speed on! speed on!—a thousand sail
Await Pilot to the mast,
For [illegible] to land the gale,
Heads Bible there to cast.

Speed on! speed on!—the broad blue deeps
Shall listening hearts [illegible]
The very [illegible], where weeps
A soul in sin's despair.

Oh God, to see [illegible] spark
Like birds, the distant seas!
Oh God! to see [illegible]
Delivered [illegible] the feet of these!

From the Montreal Gazette.

Our readers will [illegible] perusal with much interest the correspondence which has taken place between the Governor in Chief and the Attorney General, since Mr. Stuart's return from England.

Letter from His Excellency Lord Aylmer to James Stuart, Esquire.

Castle of St. Lewis,
Quebec, Dec. 10, 1834.

Sir,—The public papers of this Province have [illegible] to me a letter dated, "London, Downing Street, 27th January, 1834," addressed to you by Viscount Goderich, late Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, in which the following extraordinary [illegible] Attorney-General of this Province, [illegible] a singular misapprehension of his duty, and of [illegible] upon grounds, of which he (the Colonial Secretary) ought to have known the [illegible] Attorney-General, &c.

The [illegible] which I have treated the accusations of those individuals, who in discussing my administration of the government of this Province, [illegible] proof of my guilt in encouraging the exercise of the powers of sundry [illegible] have their [illegible] although [illegible] expressions, [illegible] they are [illegible] to my judicial character [illegible] I cannot refuse to pass [illegible] that [illegible] upon which I acted were, in fact, [illegible] I should not have considered myself [illegible] upon to contradict such positive assertions [illegible] even admitting it, for the sake of argument, to have been perfectly true, my relations with society would not have been thereby injuriously affected. The recollection of my judgment in [illegible] perhaps have been called in question, but not the integrity of my character, that which I do now most decidedly protest, is this, that in inverting to an act, performed in the discharge of my public duty, as Governor of this Province, you should have gone out of your way to assail my private character; for, if it were true that I were capable of lending to misapprehension of my duty, or of acting upon grounds, the insufficiency of which I was acquainted with, for the accomplishment of any, no matter what purpose, I must not only be unworthy to associate with men of honour, but I must, in that case, be so totally devoid even of common honesty, as to deserve to be banished from society altogether. I feel, therefore, I must myself to doubt that, upon a fair review of the expression quoted above from your letter to Viscount Goderich, you will expunge this [illegible] of the extraordinary imputations, affecting my character as a member of society, which the sentiments contain; and, accordingly, I abstain from all further remarks upon them, and subscribe myself,

Sir,
Your obedient, humble servant,
(Signed) AYLMER.

James Stuart, Esq.

Letter from James Stuart, Esquire, to His Excellency Lord Aylmer.

Quebec, 21st Nov. 1834.

My Lord,—A letter from your Lordship, addressed to me, dated the 14th December, 1834, was put into my hands, on the occasion of a visit, [illegible] since, to Montreal; and I now avail myself of the first moment of leisure, since my return, to convey to you my answer. Your Lordship professes to have taken umbrage at a passage in a letter from me to Viscount Goderich, to whom, in the copies of it circulated in the newspapers of this Province, the date of January, 1832, was given, but of which the real date was the 20th February, 1833. Where a tortuous, deceptive course of action is pursued, in a highly excited situation, persons of [illegible] are not likely to mistake its character. I never entertained a doubt of the motives by which you were induced to [illegible] me from office; and if I conducted, in my communications to Lord Goderich, previous to the time mentioned, towards your Lordship, [illegible] from the consideration that the motives I [illegible] it was due to me, on the ground of the [illegible] and injustice of the measure, whatever might be your real motives for it, [illegible] from a sense of propriety, I observed silence. But when I addressed to Lord Goderich the letter above mentioned, the circumstances in which I had been placed were totally changed. Instead of the ground on which you [illegible] recovered, when that measure was [illegible] Viscount Goderich, who had [illegible] in the [illegible] of the government, and [illegible] most perfectly [illegible] the [illegible] of a new set of grounds, but so [illegible] Lord Goderich's letter of the 27th November, 1833, [illegible] year [illegible] by repeated fictitious motives, [illegible] [illegible] capable of making [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
