MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND
ADELE GARRISON'S NEW PHASE OF REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

What Mr. Prentiss Came To Announce.

"Ah! Ladies, good morning. This is a terrible thing for the Bayview schools, an awful thing, a horrible thing."

Mr. William Prentiss, senior member of the Bayview school board, appeared to run out of breath and adjectives at the same moment. To bridge the gap he took off his hat, which he had not troubled himself to remove at his entrance, and wiped his perceptibly moist forehead with a large, white, silk handkerchief with a border of purple butterflies.

Mr. Prentiss is an unusually large man, and his face was mottled from the heat of his walk. The combination of his red perspiring face drawn into the lugubrious lines which he thought befitting for the occasion, and his fantastic handkerchief were almost too much for my risibles. But I realized that Alice Holcombe was under a greater nervous strain than I, knew that she would like to have me take the burden of the conversation upon myself, so I straightened my lips into an answering dolefulness and answered with resigned meekness.

"Yes indeed, it is, Mr. Prentiss. We came early because we thought we might be needed. Of course, the pupils will be much upset today."

"Of course, of course, Mrs. Graham. Yes, yes." Mr. Prentiss has an annoying habit of emphasizing his observations by repeating them. "That is what I have come for. The school board held a special meeting very late last night, and decided to close the schools until after the funeral. You know Mrs. Stockbridge was the daughter of one of the board, and we think it is only fitting under the circumstances that the schools be closed as a mark of respect to her memory."

Alice Holcombe Interrupts.

"That ought to be most gratifying to her family." I murmured smoothly.

"Yes, yes," he returned absently, then cleared his throat in embarrassed fashion. I decided that the most important part of his errand had not yet been told.

"Mr. Stockbridge tells me that you two ladies"—Mr. Prentiss is the type of man who abhors the word "woman"—"have joint authority when he is absent. He as
