In the last issue of the Fort Fairfield Review appears the following: James L. McNulty, 116 Brussels street, St. John (N. B.), is in a very combative mood as far as baseball games are concerned, and is issuing a challenge to any team in Maine to play a series of games, either in St. John or Maine, and defies any team in this state to take one game in three from the team that he has organized in St. John. Mr. McNulty says he has played on the Houlton team, and that he now has a team that he and his friends will back up with money or in any other way. If any Maine managers are anxious for ball games, this seems to be their opportunity.
