HASH.

I've eaten much in fine hotels, where foreign cooks were wearing bells, and I have seen the waiters bring grand dishes that would tempt a king; yea, often they have seen me pounce on grub whose name I can't pronounce have paid five bucks or more rituals famed in tavern lore, by a master chef from France, Italy or Spain, perchance. And I plied my fork and knife, and and ate, to save my life, I thought give a wad of cash to have a of grandma's hash." I say it shy and in fear; I know my friends will jeer when I I'd rather eat an old-time of spuds and meat, with onion as a base, than feed my chaste tful face with kitchen tri- they'd applaud, compiled by from abroad. The good old my grandma made! New cooks out, their triumphs fade; no in memory can bear the strong of their bill of fare; the cost longer in the mind than does fish, sublime, refined; but who when old and frayed, the hash that grandma made? I the price, and I can buy the can- the new-laid pies for long had my money's worth of all the on earth; but I'm best com- and stayed by such good hash grandma made.
