SUDDEN death.—On Saturday morning last Mr. Jas. Beedle, who has been bus-driver ever since the opening of the C. S. Mr. McLaurin of the Baptist Church. on Thursday, April 29, 1880, at 12 o'clock sharp, a valuable lot of Farm stock and implements. J. T. Coffey, Auctioneer.

TABLEAUX VIVANTS.—S. S. No. 3, otherwise known as the Slabtown school, two miles west of Troy, will give a concert and several excellent Tableaux to-morrow (Friday) night. A mammoth programme, in which the very best local talent will take part.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Robert Dunn, formerly of Ridgetown, better known as Reddy, was lately a brakesman on the C. S. R. A short time ago he had his hand crushed, and in order to save the hand, it was not at once amputated; but beginning to mortify it was necessary to amputate the arm at the elbow. The operation was however too late, and he died recently in Leamington.

EIGHT CHILDREN AT A BIRTH.—On the 2nd of August, Mrs. Timothy Bradlect of Trimbull country, Ohio, gave birth to eight children—three boys and five girls. They are living and healthy, but quite small. Mrs. Bradlee was married six years ago to Conrier Mowary, who weighed two hundred and seventy three pounds on the day of his marriage. She has given birth to two pairs of twins and now eight more, making twelve children in five years. Mrs. Bradlee was a triplet, her mother and father both being twins, and her grandmother one of five pairs of twins.—Cincinnati Leader.

TANDY BAND.—Those who did not attend the concert at the Opera House on Monday evening, missed a rare treat. These gentlemen certainly merit the high encomiums they have everywhere received in both Canada and the United States, as vocalists of the highest order. Though owing to the small audience, the effect was not as good as it would otherwise have been, they well exhibited their talents in the selections. The solo, "Ship on fire" by William Tandy and "The Mariners," a trio, were particularly excellent. "I Pescatori" and "I heard a voice," as well as several other solos and duets received hearty applause and encores. They were assisted by amateurs in vocal and instrumental pieces. Miss Bertha Dodge taking the soprano in "The Mariners," and singing a solo "Silver Moon" which received an encore. The piano solo of Miss Smith and the accompaniments of Miss Constable and Miss Mallory were deservedly appreciated. The latter also gave a beautiful piano solo and received a recall.

THE BEST THING YET.—The Farmer's Review comes regularly to hand. A glance at its clear type, typography and fine paper folded into a neat 16-page form, with leaves all cut and pasted like a book, filled as it is with the very choicest agricultural and family literature from home and foreign sources, makes one actually wonder how it can all be afforded for one dollar per year, which is the subscription price. The Farmers' Review Co. must be possessed of more than ordinary nerve to embark in an enterprise of such magnitude, especially in the face of the rapidly increasing cost of paper, printing material and labor. Starting out with a subscription list of 25,000 names and a handsomely paying advertising patronage, it is likely that there is money in it. The Review has more vigor and originality about it than any agricultural journal that we know of. We will send it and our own paper one year for $2.27.

A Good Account.

"To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total, $1,200—all which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since without the loss of a day and I want everybody to know of it for their benefit." "JOHN WEEKS, Butler, New York.

City Jottings.

From our own Correspondent.

Detroit, April 13, '80.

For nearly a month past Mr. C. H. Vandepole has successfully illuminated Campus Martius and the facade of the Detroit Opera House, with two small electric sparks, apparently no larger each than a full grown marrow-fat pea. Each light is enveloped by a transparent glass globe, with reflectors behind. They emit a clear, steady, bluish flame, quite agreeable to the sight. The gas jets in its vicinity, pale their ineffectual fires in the brilliancy of this artificial lightning, presenting a sickly yellowish hue, in comparison. About half the capacity of a six-horse power engine is used to keep the dynamo-machine in motion for generating the electricity, which is communicated to the carbon points by wires running through the building. The points are positive and negative, arranged on the principle of the Voltaic arc, with a resistance of about .20 Ohm. to the lamp. These two lights are equal to 3,200 candles—and cost about twenty-five cents an hour, or seventy-five cents a night. There are 126 gas jets in the front of the Opera House. They afford the light of 1,200 candles, and cost $5 per night. The inventor of this system has made an agreement to light the auditorium and stage—producing scenic effects as with gas. He has the apparatus in process of completion for distributing and controlling the light as desired. The cost of lighting on the plan will not exceed $5 per night—which now amounts to $15. This estimate is exclusive of engine, generator, conductors and lamps. The plant would be an insignificant item when employed as a means of generating power for elevators, and steam to heat the rooms.

Mr. Vandepole's system is the completest and most perfect of the three or four in practical use—of which the Brush Light has thus far taken the lead in its application. There are (1) the Voltaic arc, controlled by automatic regulators; (2) the Voltaic arc, without the aid of regulators; (3) incandescence. They are, respectively, the Brush, Jablochoff, Sawyer, Mann, and Edison systems.

The Voltaic arc is, not only the simplest, but it is also the cheapest; the difference between the Brush light and Vandepole's, is decidedly in favor of the latter, on account of its regularity. In the first the regulator is a defect—in the latter it is as faultless as can be desired. It saves what Forcault's, Joblockoff's, Staite's and the Brush lights all require, namely, a competent attendant to keep them in working order.

In 1877, Joblockoff was the first to introduce the parallel carbon points, the slight space between being filled with plaster of paris, or some other refractory substance. In this case, what was gained by doing away with costly lamps, was lost by the more expensive attendance required. A light carbon bridge was necessary, or an equivalent conductor between the tips of the points, to complete the circuit. The instantaneous destruction of the bridge, left the current to pass over the intervening substance, thus consuming the carbon and the refractory material at the same time. Once these candles were extinguished the circuit was destroyed, and the remaining ones must be relighted by hand. This defect involved a loss of carbon, exceeding double the amount used with the automatic regulator, and the light had a ghostly purplish hue. Mr. Vandepole knew of these difficulties by experiments made two years before, in '75, and abandoned the plans for something better.

If lighting by incandescence could be economized it would soon be adopted, on account of its adaptability to domestic use. It is produced by the passing of the current through carbon, platinum, or other resistance, requiring an increase of power according to the ratio of resistance. It requires exclusion from the air, and sometimes the hermetically sealed tubes are filled with a non-combustible gas. With these precautions the resistance is easily destroyed by the incandescent heat, making new combinations which result in combustion. Mr. Vandepole tried this plan also in a series of exhaustive experiments, discovering it about the time other experimenters commenced. His last resort was to return to Nature's own system, and his recent successes only prove the achievements of patient scientific research.

Mr. Vandepole is a Belgian, not yet in the prime of life. He is as retiscent as he is modest and retiring. A profound Electrician—he has pursued his studies in the intervals of an occupation, entirely alien to his inclinations and tastes. For every dollar earned over and above expenses incurred in his pursuit as a maker of church furniture, one half has been paid out in the last five years to perfect his electric light. He is confident of having succeeded when all others have failed in a system that applies at perfectly to a subdivision for general purposes as it does to halls, railway offices, theatres, churches and other large buildings, and in illuminating streets. In the course of a week or two he intends to light the interior of the Detroit Opera House, at a reduction of 20 per cent. off the present cost.

The recent failure of Edison's carbon loops, has left the field to our Detroit electrician. His lamp is possibly the Aladdin's of our day, more wonderful in its varied results, than anything pictured in the Arabian story.

Saturday last, the distinguished President of Princeton College, James McCosh, D. D., L. L. D., was given a reception at the residence of Hon. Jacob S. Farrand, two hundred guests being present by invitation, representing many of the first families and the leading professions. He captivated his audience by his unassuming manners, giving a brief sketch, in a colloquial style of specks of the grand work he had partially been instrumental in accomplishing within the sixteen years of his presidency. His homely Scottish accent made his conversation more easy than any report would appear, the substance of which he furnished in manuscript to the papers. The learned Dr. preached Sunday on the "Atonement," at Dr. Baker's Church—the First Presbyterian. He is on his way to attend a meeting and Banquet of the alumni of Princeton College Cincinnati.

Sunday was given to the commemoration of the Channing Centennial, so grandly celebrate in this country, and in Europe. On Thursday, of last week, Rev. W. R. Alger, of Chicago, delivered the memorial sermon in the morning in the Unitarian church, the subject being the precepts and example of the illustrious poet, philosopher, and divine, whom the speaker charterized as as the best type of the divine man the American civilization had as yet produced. Mr. Alger read his discourse, but the application of his theme to the subject was an extempore effort rarely surpassed in pulpit eloquence. Channing's life, he said, was devoted to the pursuit of truth, independent of national authority to love of humanity as exemplified in unselfish aims, and to a broad philanthropy, in which the divine self stood as an emblem of all other beings. He recognized in all others a relationship to himself and to God, and therefore he could not find it in his heart to inflict an injury on any one of the human family. God requires, Mr. Alger declared, "Truth in the inward parts." The subject of his lecture is "The mission of Genius, and how to distinguish between the true and the false."

The funeral of Gov. Howard, of Dakota Territory, takes place to-day. Deceased, was a noted politician, and, at one time, associated with Hon. Levi. Bishop, in Law. Mr. Bishop is still in the vigor of life, although past sixty. He is well known as the author of "Teuchsa Grondis,"—the legendary Indian name of Detroit—a poem which Martin Farquahar Tupper has felicitously styled in a recent autograph letter to the author, as a key to Longfellows Hiawatha, and Catlin's prose contributions on American aboriginal life and customs.

The political atmosphere is foggy and thick with all arts of rumor—among which is the reported withdrawal of Tilden and Grant from the list of probable candidates. N'importe.
