

(4) The habit of stating and solving a problem as a means of solving or explaining difficulties and of giving facilities with the results involved in the subject studied.

(5) The habit of persistently seeking the difficulties that necessarily occur in any subject, until they are clearly understood.

(6) The habit of carefully reviewing all work done, and testing it, regarding it as completed, comparing it in another context, and classifying it.

On M
H
T
P
T
T
S
T
T