MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 18.

No Alternative New.

Stronger efforts than ever are being made to oppose the means by which it is hoped to maintain the Canadian divisions in France at full strength, and obviate the alternative of having them dwindle away until they pass out of sight on the war records. This is the real object of the struggle going on at present, so far as Canada is concerned, to bring our young men, eligible for army service, to a sense of national responsibility, of their duty to the nation, of the existence and purposes of that nation itself. In the last two years and ten months millions of articles have been written with this design. It is a testimony to their ineffectiveness or to the denseness or selfishness of thousands of young men who came under the influences these millions of articles represent, that the voluntary system, upon which Canada has prided itself, has failed at the critical moment.

Opponents of conscription say that the voluntary method has not been exhausted. It certainly has not exhausted the number of eligible young men who ought to be helping their fellow-Canadians and comrades in France and Belgium. If there be any new way of appealing to these young men we shall be glad to hear it. We have tried every method except vituperation, and we have even been reproached for having adopted that. We know no other method that has not been tried except one. That method is the bounty, and it would have made the raising of many battalions an easier and less costly matter than the results attained in most cases show. Some battalions spent up to $1300 a man obtained, it is said. A bounty of $100 even yet, we believe, would obtain large numbers, but they would probably be subjected to the taunt of being mercenaries. If they do not balk at being conscripts they would not mind being bounty men.

This, however, would entail further delay, and time is the essence of the present difficulty. The ranks are being thinned daily at the front. It is necessary that they be replenished. Conscription is the only way to get the men. Those who prefer voluntaryism have had at least a year's warning, and they have neglected or failed to produce results. Hence the necessity for a conscription measure.

For the same lack of time there is little use in indulging in recriminations of what might, should, or could have been done had a better Canadian spirit prevailed in the politics of the country. The World has nothing to reproach itself with in this respect. We have urged the claims of the war from the beginning. We have supported every effort that meant more men for the front. We have been friendly to every advocate of the energetic prosecution of the war. What is past is past, and those who have failed, or who are failing or who may fail in this duty will be judged by the country by the high standard of the nation's destiny.

What is needed now are great hearts, noble minds, to carry the war to a conclusion, and to bring home to the eligible manhood of Canada that it can have neither part nor lot in the future of the country if it fails in the hour of trial.

The men who have fought at St. Julien, at Ypres, at Hill 60, at Courcelette, at Vimy, Arleux and Fresnoy, are too good to be associated with conscripts, say some. Well, then, let those who are good enough to match the heroes at the front stand to the colors. If they fail we must conclude that they are of a less noble breed.

Coal and Much Else.

A correspondent writes to assure us that the price of coal is readily ascertainable by those in authority. He states that nut coal is only $3.65 per ton free on board at Black Rock and stove coal is $3.75. The rate from Black Rock to Toronto is 38 cents per ton, and that, at present prices in the city, allowing for all legitimate charges and reasonable profits, there is a "rake-off" of about $3 a ton going out of the pockets of the public into the pockets of the profiteers. It is to verify (or otherwise) statements like these that the fuel controller, Mr. Magrath, largely exists.

If these things are facts, we do not need to go far to understand the protests of socialists and other agents of revolt against existing social conditions. The nation is not doing its national duty that permits such things to happen, whatever the political economists may say. Political economy may declare that "the weaker goes to the wall." If we adopted this principle in the family and allowed the baby to suffer because it is helpless, or the child, because it is ignorant, we should have the humane societies in action. The nation itself needs a humane society to undertake the duty of seeing that the helpless or ignorant in the nation are not neglected nor put upon. We admit the principle in regard to infants and children. We admit it in the case of oppressed nations like Belgium and Serbia. Why are we not logical and consistent, and admit the principle and apply it to the weaker and poorer members of society?

These things count for more than is generally appreciated. A good deal of the outcry against conscription is traceable to those who contend that the nation is not so entirely considerate of their interests as to be worth fighting for. The infant makes a tremendous outcry when the bottle is not forthcoming in due season. It is possible to fool the infant with a "comforter," and to injure its health at the same time, tho the poor little thing is not aware of this till afterwards. But the weaker members of society are not to be put off with "comforters," whether commissioners, controllers or any other kind.

We have not the slightest desire to do injustice to the coal dealers, but they must see that coal is a necessity of existence in a climate like ours, and that they have a vital responsibility in connection with their duty and privilege of supplying fuel to the public. Our political economy and laws of supply and demand have afforded opportunity to ignore all this for a long time past and make a convenient excuse when little children or old persons are frozen to death. All the same, the political economy and the laws of supply and demand which permit little children or old persons to freeze to death are inefficient and do not serve their purpose.

The war has altered the views of many people about these things, and it appears obvious that if we can spend billions for killing men, we should be prepared to spend millions for keeping them alive. The coal situation is only one of several problems that threaten to become acute at any moment. Action now may save much trouble later on.

If the coal dealers are misrepresented in the statements made about their figures and prices they can easily prove their position. And we might suggest that the days of secret diplomacy have gone past. It would be well to get all the cards on the table and convince the public that they are getting a square deal.

POLITICAL OUTLOOK AND CONSCRIPTION

more or less annoyed a number of Liberal M. P.'s at Ottawa; there are some critics who say that if he had gone to Ottawa and talked it over with his friends a way might have been found, might even yet be found, for a line of action based on co-operation on the part of the great bulk of the English-speaking Liberals in favor of conscription. The Toronto Star, which speaks for a large body of Liberals, has done its best to try and bring such an arrangement about and to persuade Mr. Rowell and the Liberal party generally, and especially Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to try and get a united nation in favor of conscription.

What the country, therefore, will await after the speech of Sir Wilfrid today, is the development of fracture marks and distinct groups in the Liberal party. And, in all likelihood, there will be equally distinct marks of fracture in the Conservative party, insofar as the French-Canadian support is concerned. A number of French-Canadian Conservatives will declare themselves and vote with Sir Wilfrid. These fractures are very much to be regretted, but whether we regret them or not, we will have to face it and, at the same time, try and find a way of keeping the country from being disrupted, avoid a struggle between the two races and their respective sympathizers.

It may be that a way will yet be found before the bill goes thru, for obtaining national unity on the question; but The World confesses that it sees no promising signs in this direction at this moment. The country will have to sit down and await the unfolding of the scroll. But, come what will, we believe that conscription will pass thru both houses by a substantial majority and time will yet find a way to cure the breach that its passage may bring about. The best opinion at this moment is that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has made up his mind to go ahead with his opposition to conscription and has determined also to take the consequences, no matter what effect it may have on the solidarity of his party.

Ottawa, June 16—(Special to Montreal Star).—Next Monday, when the bill comes up for second reading, the centre of interest will return to the chamber and will stay there until conscription in Canada becomes a reality. The bill will pass, as even its most bitter opponents admit. All the agitation this week has been on the other side of the house, among the Liberals. The net result of the opposition conferences of the week appears to be that the party will not, as a united party, oppose the conscription bill. It will be a "free-for-all," altho that title has not been officially used very much by members of the party.

Those Liberals who want conscription will vote for conscription. To get over the party difficulty, and preserve a semblance of united policy on war questions, a resolution has been prepared and will be presented by Hon. George P. Graham at the first possible opportunity. It is somewhat vague in its terms, as it naturally advocates "conscription of wealth" and organization of national resources to win the war. But it will serve.

There is even more expectancy shown hereabouts regarding Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech on second reading than there was for Sir Robert Borden's speech of Monday last. The prime minister's policy was known before hand, but nobody professes to know just how the astute Liberal leader will outline his position, or what amendment to the Military Service Act he will propose.

He will probably demand a referendum. There will, it is expected, be a number of other considerations entailed as well. That the speech will be a great one is a foregone conclusion. That it will be such as to unite the entire Liberal party on a policy of opposition to the conscription bill nobody believes for a moment. It is generally looked upon as Sir Wilfrid's "swan" song as leader of a Canada-wide party.

The most pessimistic prophecy of the lot, the one that gives the opposition every handicap imaginable over the government, awards Sir Robert a majority of 12 votes, on a division of 97 to 85. This outline concedes that eleven French-speaking Conservatives, including Hon. E. L. Patenaude, will vote against the bill, and gives the government but three Liberal votes, those of Dr. Michael Clark of Red Deer, Gilbert Champagne of Battleford, and Gen. Hugh MacLean of Sudbury and Queens. It is likely, however, that the Government's plan will be supported by at least a score of Liberals.

Five members of French extraction, including Mr. Champagne, are expected to vote with the government. The others are Hon. P. E. Blondin, Hon. Albert Sevigny, J. H. Rainville of Chambly and Verchères, and F. J. Robidoux of Kent, N.B. This is assurdly a conservative estimate.

There has been a great deal said and written during the week regarding the internal affairs of the Liberal block, but much of it has been extravagant. There is no doubt that many members on the opposition side have been talking tactics a little too much, and rather losing sight of the real needs of the war situation. But in a general way it may be said that the Liberals who fought gallantly, if in vain, to bring about coalition, will fight equally stubbornly to pass the measure on which the coalition scheme was based. These men have thrown political tactics to the winds on the present issue. There are perhaps ten of them in the house, and F. F. Pardee of West Lambton, chief whip of his party, is one of them. Hugh Guthrie of South Wellington is another, and F. B. Carvell a third.

There are four western members in the roster: W. A. Buchanan of Lethbridge, Robert Cruise of Dauphin, George E. McCraney of Saskatoon, and Dr. D. B. Neely of Humboldt.

Hon. George P. Graham has been a worker for coalition, and there are still others from Ontario and Nova Scotia.

So the die is cast at last. On Monday will come Sir Wilfrid, and after Sir Wilfrid will come Sir Sam Hughes, and after Sir Sam will come all the rest of them. It is expected, however, that a big part of the debate will be couched in the French language.

BRITISH PRISONERS REMOVED FROM FRONT

Germans Announce Withdrawing of These Thirty Kilometres, in Ungracious Statement.

Berlin, via London, June 17.—The following official communication was issued today:

"As the British Government has complied with the German demand and declared the withdrawal of all German prisoners of war to thirty kilometres behind the front to be now completed, the German army organization has had all British prisoners of war withdrawn to at least thirty kilometres behind the front."

The evening official statement issued from German headquarters merely says that nothing of importance has occurred.

ARTILLERY FIGHTING UPON ITALIAN FRONT

Heavy Austrian Bombardments Develop Near Carna From Medium Guns.

Rome, via Paris, June 17.—The war office communication issued today says:

"The artillery was more active than usual yesterday on the Carna front, where enemy batteries of medium calibre repeatedly directed their fire on our positions in the Val Piccolo and the Val Grande. At various points on the front, our reconnoitring parties inflicted losses on the enemy and brought in prisoners.

"This morning hostile aircraft bombarded Gorizia and other inhabited localities in the plain. There were no casualties and no damage."

THE FIRST THOUSAND

Russell Sage amassed a large amount of wealth. It was a saying of his that after a man had saved a thousand dollars the hardest part of the financial battle was over, and that the accumulation of money afterwards was comparatively easy. The force of this will be apparent to anyone who gives any thought to the subject.

The object to be attained is surely worth the necessary effort. The easiest and only sure way to that "first thousand" is by regular systematic saving. Save the small sums. Save a certain fixed portion of your weekly or monthly income. If deposited with us the THREE AND ONE-HALF PER CENT. compound interest we add assists materially.

FAIRBANKS AT REGENT.

That tremendously popular screen favorite, Douglas Fairbanks, will be seen at the Regent all this week. "In Again—Out Again" is the title of his initial release. Staged under the direction of John Emerson this photoplay outshines any of his previous efforts. All the comedy, all the thrills, all the novelty possessed by Douglas Fairbanks' pictures of the past are incorporated in "In Again—Out Again." Filled to the brim with big surprises and bigger laughs this feature is without exception the best that Fairbanks has yet appeared in. In addition to the feature there will be added novelties and the first showing of the Canadian Topical Review, devoted to exclusive events of interest to Canadians.
