Everything for Your Christmas Cakes and Puddings.

Our main show window is highly suggestive of Christmas preparation time. There is hardly a housekeeper who is not thinking of getting ready to bake her Christmas cakes and to make her Christmas puddings. These preparations usually make a big hole in a number of soliar bills, and one is always attracted by anything which points in the direction of outling down expenses as low as is possible, consistent with quality which one should demand when it comes to eatables. Gathered from the four corners of the earth is such a selection of materials for cake and pudding making as will delight the most careful housekeeper or cook. Nothing but the best has been purchased—and these at the most advantageous prices. Here are some of the prices:—

GOING BACK FOR GOLD.

Col. MacGregor Will Look Up Long

Neglected Field.

About thirty-five years ago a party of prospectors, while exploring the north-western slope of the Rocky Mountains in British Columbia, came upon promising indications in a secluded valley hidden in the denths of what was then the great wilderness beyond the divide. They had panned out gold along the Cariboo, and from there had pushed on in the hope of finding new fields. They were interested for a time in a gravel tank on a tributary of the Omineca River, where one hundred dollars a day were secured for every man working on the bank.

Pushing on, the party came to the valley in which they found most promising indications; but the season was far advanced, the supplies were running short, and the party was obliged to leave the valley before thoroughly testing its worth. Returning to camp, the men separated; and of that party, only one member is alive to-day—Colonel Donald MacGregor, of Williamstown, Glengarry, Ont. He knows the location of the valley where gold was found, but which was left unexplored, and he has now under consideration an expedition to the distant place among the still unexplored wilds of the western slope of the Rockies.

Col. MacGregor was in British Columbia in the early days when gold mining outranked all other occupations, and later, when the wealth of the forests began to be turned to account. Much later, and when the Klondike was the latest El Dorado, he spent ten years in the Yukon, principally at Dawson City, where be was chairman of the celebrated Citizens' Committee that brought about reform in the government of the famous mining camp. He now thinks of making one more trip to reform in the government of the famous mining camp. He now thinks of making one more trip to the West, revisiting the valley found many years ago, and robbing it of the secret of its hidden wealth.

Double-Faced George. Capt. Bellairs, formerly of The London Times, who is now traveling in Western Canada, told a good story at the Rideau Club the other day about Sir George Reid, the High Commissioner for Australia in London the Commissioner for Australia in London to the Commissioner for Australia in London to the Commissioner for Australia in London the Commissioner for Australia don. Reid, when in active politics in Australia, had earned the sobriin Australia, had earned the sobriquet, whether justifiable or not, of "Two-faced George" or "Double-faced George." It was a reference to his alleged agility to always be on the side of the winners. Addressing a crowded meeting in Sydney Town Hall, during the heat of a political campaign. Sir George was frequently interrupted, one man in the front row of the first sallery being persistent in of the first gallery being persistent in his calls of "Two-faced George." Reid stood it for a little while, and then stood it for a little while, and then turned upon his tormentor. "I notice," he said, pointing to the gallery, "that a gentleman has frequently interrupted me and called me 'two-faced George.' Will he permit me to ask him a question?" "Certainly I will," replied the man, Reid thereupon remarked: "May I ask if the gentleman in the gallery has two faces?" "Not on your tin type," same the quick reply. "I might have known that," Reid shot back, "otherwise you would Reid shot back, "otherwise you would have left that face at home." The cheers and laughter which followed lasted fully five minutes, during which the interrupter made a quiet departure from the building.

Wives and Kiddies Coming. It speaks well for Ontario, that of the new arrivals from Great Britain and Europe fully 50 per cent. are wives and children coming to join the husband and father, who came ahead and "made good." The number of newcomers is also swelled by the ar-vivel of brothers sisters and relatives. rival of brothers, sisters, and relatives rival of brothers, sisters, and relatives of those who came before. Then, again, the young immigrant, finding conditions better than those in the old land, does not forget friends at home, and a series of encouraging letters are often followed by friends coming out to join them here.

The two classes which the Government is striving to obtain are the agricultural workers and domestics. The artisan class, which all too frequently but serves to swell the ranks of the unemployed in the cities, is not encouraged by the authorities, and,

Then came a great challenge drums, and the parson was in his sad dle and the horses off on the three mile course, my eyes following them into the dust clouded distance and see into the dust clouded distance and seeing the parson come riting in ahead to the winning post, with that curious uncertainty as to the reality which had been upon me all the morning—that is, of the uncertainty of aught save my shameful abiding in the stocks.

"As I said before, it was a hot day, and all around the field waved fruit boughs nearly past their bloom, with the green of new leaves overcoming the white and red, and the air was heavy with honcy-sweet, and, as steady as a clock tick, through all the roaring of the merrymakers came the hum of the hees and the calls of the birds. This New Issue.

Only by the best-directed effort of its management, and the most-loyal co-operation of its employees, could the Nova Scotia Underwear Company turn out the orders book-ed for delivery during the ten months ending September 30th, last,

For seven months of the ten the Company's mills at Rureka had to be worked day and night shifts to overtake the underwear business on hand. The outcut for these ten months EXCEEDED the total production for the preceding TWELVE months by upwards of 10,000 dozen.

And the outlook for 1914 assures no stay in this rapid growth. Already 65 p. c. of the mills' output for 1914 is sold and the remainder will be readily booked before the end of this year.

Hence the need for more machinery to properly take care of this expansion, and consequently this additional issuance of 7 p. c. Cumulative Preferred Stock—obtainable now on a 7s p. c. baste.

Name....

Ladies' DENVER, Col., Nov. 21.—Caught in his own bear trap while on a shooting trip in the mountains near Embndo, N. M., Henry Severeor, sixty-fve, formerly of Denver, for several days fought a futile fight against death by starvation and thirst, or being killed by wild animals.

News of the finding of his body, torn into shreds by the claws of mountain lions and wildcate, has just been received here by friends. His identification is made complete by papers found in a pocket of his coat. Buttoned Boots. $3.50.

and wildcate, has just been received here by friends. His identification is made complete by papers found in a pocket of his coat.

Mr. Severson was wealthy and had many friends in Denver, especially among the mining men and the early settlers. He was an eccentric chavacter, living more the life of a hermit than anything else. About sighteen months ago, anable to withstand the call of the wild, he went into the hills from Embudo, and often returned to that point for supplies. The last seen of him was on one of his trips to Embudo more than two months ago.

A few days ago a party of sportsmen stumbled across the body of a man in the woods, stripped of the flesh to the bones. Closer inspection showed that his two arms were saught in a bear trap and that he had been unable to extricate himself.

The ground immediately surgrounding the spot where the body was found tells a pitiful story. While it is felt certain that he carried some food in his clothing, which he was unable to reach with the tips of his fingers, the person who discovered the body believe that he was forced to eat the badt he had brought along for the traps. Shrubbery for several feet around the trap had been guawed almost to the ground and there were indications that Mr. Severson attempted to chew the bark from a nearby tree, which he was able to reach only after a desperate struggle in moving the trap and the heavy chain. Cicely Hyde, like two bridesmaids, came my love, Mary Cavendish. And while I shrank back, thinking that here was the worst sting of all, like the sting of death, that she should see me thus, straight up to the stocks she came and gathering her blue and silver gown about her made her way in to my side and sat there, thrusting her two tiny feet, in their dainty shoes, through the apertures next mine, for the stocks were made to accommodate

And then I looked at her and would have besought her to go, but the words died on my lips, for in that minute I knew what love was and how it could triumph over not only the tragedy, but that which is more cruel, the comedy, there beside me, with such an exaltation of love which made it like the face of an angel. Not one word she said, but looked at me, and I knew that after that she was mine forever, in life of my love which would fain oite of my love, which would fain shield her from me lest I be for her harm, and I realized that love, when it is at its best, is past the consideration of any harm, being sufficient unto itself for its own bliss and glory.

But presently I, looking at her, felt my strength failing me again, and her face grew dim and she drew my head to her shoulder and sat so facing the multitude, and such a shout went up as never was.

And first it was half derision, and Catherine and Cicely Hyde stood near us like bridesmaids, and my brother John kept his place. Then came Madam Judith Cavendish in a chair, and she was borne close to us through the throng and was looking forth with the tears running over her old cheeks and extending her hands as if in blessing, and she never after made any opposi-

Then came blustering up Parson Downs and Ralph Drake, who after-ward wedded Cicely Hyde, and the two Barrys, who had braved leaving hiding, and the two black wenches who dwelt with them, one with a great white bandage swathing her head, and Sir Humphrey Hyde, who had just been released and who, while I think of it, wedded a most amiable daughter of one of the burgesses within a year. And Madam Tabitha Story, with that mourning patch upon her forehead, was there, and Margery Key, with—marvelous to relate in that crowd-the white cat following at heel, and Mis-tresses Allgood and Longman with their husbands in tow. All these, with others whom I will not mention, who were friendly, gathered around me, the while Mary Cavendish sat there beside me, and again that half derisive shout of the multitude went up.

Limited, d But in a trice it all changed, for the temper of a mob is as subject to unexplained changes as the wind, and it was a great shout of sympathy and triumph instead of derision. Then they tore off the oak sprigs with which they had be-decked themselves in honor of the day, and by 80 doing showed disloyalty to the king, and the militia making no resistance, and, indeed, I have always suspected, secretly rejoicing at it, they had me released in a twinkling, and foremost among those who wrenched open the stocks was Captain Calvin Tabor. Then Mary Cavendish and I stood together there before them all. It was all many years ago, but never hath my love for her dimmed, and it shall live after Jamestown is again in ashes, when the sea birds are calling over the sunset waste, when the reeds are tall in the gardens, when even the tombs are crumbling, and maybe here and mine among them, when the sea gates are down and the water washing over the sites of the homes of the cava-liers. For I have learned that the biazon of love is the only one which holds good forever through all the wilderness of history, and the path of love is the only one which those that may come after us can safely follow unto the end of the world.
