NEW SHIP.—The steamer Herald, which arrived on Saturday from Halifax, brought in tow from Little Passage, a new ship of 316 tons, built by Messrs. Jones & Ruggles, for Mr. Thos Wallace of this city.—Courier.

MESMERISM.—Last evening Mr. Robinson gave a lecture on this subject to a crowded house. At the conclusion the lecturer performed numerous experiments on two boys. These, with the lecture, gave more general satisfaction than any hitherto given in St. John on this subject. Mr. R. was loudly applauded by the audience, who left the building apparently well satisfied both with the lecturer and the result of the experiments. The subject will be resumed on Thursday evening next, when new patients and experiments will be brought forward, which no doubt will prove highly interesting.

WE have heard, with regret, that DR. BAYARD has resigned his office as President of the Mechanics' Institute, in consequence, it is said, of the Directors having come to the conclusion of allowing a course of Lectures on MESMERISM to be given in the Hall. Such an arbitrary course of proceeding on the part of a gentleman so profoundly learned, was little to be expected, and we think he may take some advice from the following remarks in a late number of the London Medical Times, by the Editor:—

DR. CARPENTER ON MESMERISM.—[The following letter, addressed first to the Bristol Mercury, and which, it is well understood, is from the pen of Dr. Carpenter, the eminent physiologist, was occasioned by the clever lectures of Mr. H. Brookes, at the Bristol Institution. The writer is more cautious, perhaps, in his admission of the facts of Mesmerism, than Cloquet, Elliotson, Ferrier, Neil, Arnott, Hollard, Jussieu, Cuvier, Broussais, Le Pure, Keil, Oliver, Gregget, Rouse, Sigmond, Herbert, Mayo, Gregory of Edinburgh, Braid, Edwin Lee, and others, but he more than adopts the opinions which we alone, of British Medical Journals, have been in habit of announcing, viz, that Mesmerism has, for various reasons, very strong claims on the medical man's reason; that the excitement it has created, and the belief it has won, constitute great moral facts, demanding a rigid investigation of the physical phenomena so leading or misleading the public mind; that it is our place to conduct that investigation, so that if Mesmerism be all "an immense hoax," as some think, we may do good service in laying, as vehemently can, the impostors here before the world; that if it be true, we may do, by ourselves honour, and science a service, by singling out whatever it holds, much or little, of psychical or physiological virtue, and adding to the never perishing accumulation of mankind's recognised and legitimate knowledge. We have always felt that all attempts to stifle discussion or enquiry on such subjects at this, is an error of judgment, or defect in morality. Not to allow an alleged imposture the benefit of a fair trial is a proof that we have much doubt of our cleverness, or many fears of the accused's innocence. There is a triumph in the detection of deception, especially of that kind, which is at once extravagant and ingenious, which men do not easily forego. The person who off handedly cries "humbug," but will not take the trouble to enquire for himself because such an one proved that such another was deceived or deceiving, is just as foolish as the man who will believe the most extreme marvels of Mesmerism—because somebody else have seen them. In both cases the chance of his being right, depends on that of somebody else being right, and right, not only in judgment, but in intention.—ED.)

The last Liverpool Mail contains a "Grand Illustrated Supplement" comprising the proposed suspension Bridge across the River Mersey, connecting Liverpool with the Cheshire shore, which if ever accomplished will be a stupendous work of art, of 1350 yards in length; and plates of the Birkenhead Festivities, commemorative of the laying the foundation stone of Docks to be built at that place.—The ceremonies were of the most extensive and imposing description. A Grand Banquet was given after the business of the morning, at which over 500 gentlemen were present, and the speeches on the occasion were of the most animating description. To close the festive scene, a ball was given at night, where all the fashionables both of Birkenhead and the neighbourhood assembled to celebrate the undertaking, which is got up on a most magnificent scale, and is correspondingly creditable to the people of the place.—The vastness of the work, and the rapid rise of the town, may be gathered from a part of Sir PHILIP EGERTON's speech on laying the first stone:—

"The works to be executed under this act are of a magnitude wholly unparalleled, I believe, in works of a similar description. They will comprise, in the first instance, a small tidal harbor of about forty acres, with sufficient water to admit vessels at all times of the tide at which they can cross the Victoria Bar—(hear.) Then there will be a harbour of refuge of 10 acres, with beaching ground of four or five acres extent devoted to the use of the trading craft of the river. Also a dock applied to the present uses and purposes of the town of Birkenhead. If these were the only objects in view, they would be most valuable and important. But there is to be an opening out of the tidal harbour by gates of vast extent, into a floating pool of one hundred and thirty acres, throughout the whole of which the water will be of such level, that the banks comprehending nearly 8,000 lineal yards, will be applicable to the purposes of wharfs and yards, landing-places, graving docks, warehouses, and all other accommodations necessary for a great mercantile harbour. When I contemplate the extent of these works—when I consider the important ulterior consequences which may result from this first initiatory measure—above all when I look at the extent of building which now clothes the banks of this pool around me and compare them with what the state of Birkenhead formerly was, I can scarcely believe myself to be in the land of reality. I have been told that about a century ago, at the time my worthy ancestor occupied the mansion now so worthily occupied by Sir Edward Cust, it was proved in a court of law that Birkenhead was not entitled to the name of village, town, or even hamlet, as it did not contain three inhabited houses. Whether this be true or not, this I know from the census presented to parliament, that in 1801, the number of houses only amounted to 16—that at the next census, in 1811, the number was increased by only one—that in 1821, that number was increased by three, only by three—that in the next ten years, to 1831, the increase was 409—that in 1841, the number of houses was 1500, and now, I am informed, they amount to 2000—(hear, hear)—occupying an extent of street exceeding thirty miles. (Hear and cheers.) This I look upon as a case wholly unparalled in the annals of this country; and if among the number of persons whom I now address I see a citizen of the United States of America—that country so famous for raising rapid towns—I might even challenge him to bring any analogous instance from her annals."

TORONTO, Nov. 12.—The most awful thunder storm we have ever experienced here, occurred on Monday morning about one o'clock. It was really terrific, and the citizens were greatly disturbed and alarmed by the suddenness and violence of the visitation. The rain fell in torrents, and considerable damage has been done by the lightning. The Pleasant Inn, on Queen street, kept by Mr. McCallum, was struck by the lightning and consumed, along with one or two other houses adjoining. We shall probably hear of further damage having been done on this occasion, in other parts of the country.

WELLAND CANAL.—This work has been continued with the usual vigour, and it may now be pronounced out of danger—the hollow coins are laid on every lock, ready for the reception of the gates, which will be hung this winter, and the navigation opened in the spring for the passage of all vessels from lake to lake of 26 feet beam and 224 in length from tuffrail to knightheads.

We are happy to record another act of liberality in his Grace the Duke of Wellington, who has authorised the sale of his stock in the Welland canal, with the proceeds of which he intends to found a scholarship in King's college, Toronto.—St. Catharine's Journal.

The Millerites.—We learn that a body of Millerites encamped on Monday, in the vicinity of Phœnixville, and remained there during the nights of Monday and Tuesday, exposed to all the inclemency of the weather. The scenes at time was frightful. The shouts and screams of the women and children, together with the groans, lamentations and exclamations of the men—were calculated to excite feelings of deep commiseration for the wretched objects of delusion. Yesterday morning, two little children were found in the encampment, perfectly cold, stiff and dead. Many grown persons were also suffering severely, and the persons who reside in the neighbourhood, absolutely forced some of the females into their houses, with the object of saving their lives. Much misery and poverty will no doubt be the result of this delusion.

We learn also that large parties of these insane people were, during Monday and Tuesday, encamped in a field on the Darby Road—at several points on the shores of the Schuylkill, on the banks of the Wissahiccon, and at other places near the city. In some cases they were without adequate provisions, while in most, they were without sufficient clothing. We are glad to learn, however, that in a number of instances, the delusion has partially subsided, and that the misguided victims have returned to their homes and places of business. It is hoped that any new attempt to mislead and deceive them, will be promptly checked by the authorities. The great body are no doubt sincere—but is it impossible that some rogues may have been among them, taking advantage of their weakness.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

John LaBontillier, Esq., of Peru, was declared on the 2nd inst. duly elected for Bonaventure.—The opposition majority in his favor was 11 over his opponent Mr. Hamilton, but the real majority is said to be 103, deducting Indians and other bad votes that had been polled.—Quebec Gazette.

HONEST SIGNS.—The Christian Witness (Boston) gives some interesting facts, in illustration of the silent but progressive influence of the Church upon surrounding sects in New England, as seen in the remarkable changes within the last few years in their mode of conducting public worship.

"It is now no uncommon thing," it says, "to see forms of prayer put forth by Presbyterians; while many Orthodox Congregational ministers are in the habit of occasionally incorporating some of the prayers from the Prayer Book into their public devotional exercises. Several societies of Unitarians now use a Liturgy; and we understand that one society of Congregationalists have signified to their minister their willingness that he should make use of such a Liturgy as he may think proper. We have been told, moreover, that an eminent Baptist clergyman has recently preached a sermon, wherein he recommended a responsive service. Now all this marvellous change is taking place in New England; the last place in our whole country where we should naturally expect to see such an evident inclination towards the services of the Episcopal Church."

Our contemporary mentions some other points in which the change has become even more general and not less striking. Thus, "clerical vestments are now worn by multitudes of non-Episcopal ministers;"—a better change still is, that "it is by no means uncommon to hear portions of both Old and New Testaments read each morning and noon;"—that "the Psalms of David are chanted by some of the denominations around us, with all precision and taste that distinguished the music in the Episcopal service." But what would most of all have checked their pious forefathers, is the information that these sons of the Pilgrims are introducing "the largest and most extensive organs!"

We unite in the hope expressed by the Witness, that these changes so recently and so suspiciously commenced, may continue until all 'meeting houses' become Churches; all the services of public worship become liturgical; all ministers become episcopalic in doctrine, and practice, and in authority; and all the people to whom they minister, good Christians and good churchmen."—Banner of the Cross.

Great Foot Race at New York.—There was much excitement in New York last week, in consequence of the great foot race, in which two celebrated English runners were to take part. About two o'clock the men who had entered for the three miles race, ranged themselves in front of the judges' stand.—They were four in number: Edwin Brown, Ambrose Jackson, [an English runner,] Fowl and Myers. The race was won by Jackson, in 16m. 16s. The purse in this race was $200—$50 to be given to the second man. Fowl received the $50.

At the expiration of half an hour, preparations were made for the grand race. The distance to be run was ten miles—$1200, thus divided: $750 to the first man in; $250 to the second; $150 to the third; $75 to the fourth, and 25 to the fifth.

Twelve runners started. Barlow, one of the English pedestrains came in first, receiving the first prize: Steeprock, the Indian, second; Greenhalgh, another of the English pedestrains, third; Gilderslieve, fourth. Barlow ran the ten miles in 54 minutes and 21 seconds, which is said to be the shortest time in which distance has ever been accomplished by the limbs of man. The Indian, Steeprock, ran most gallantly and was not more than 80 or 100 yards behind Barlow when the latter reached the winning post. During the running of the last three miles, the Indian gained at least 150 yards upon Barlow, and had the race been extended another mile would probably have been the winner. Greenhalgh ran in about 60 yards behind the Indian and about the same distance ahead of Gilderslieve.

Lord Normandy's Gun.—A correspondent 'down east,' has promised us a communication, for next week's publication, describing the great secret of Lord Normandy's Pneumatic and spring non-recoil Gun,—exhibited, experimented with, and of which a drawing and a few particulars are given in the "Illustrated London News" of the 26th Oct. last.
