THE HORSEMAN

A good many blacksmiths over the country are experimenting shoeing with aluminum, which weighs only about one-third as much as steel.

* * *

Diseases may be in the feed troughs that have contacted in them. Clean everything out of them after each meal if there is any danger of fermentation.

* * *

The tender muscles and soft bones of the young horses cannot stand the same amount of work that those of the mature horses can. Don't kill the colts before they become profitable.

* * *

Better things add more to the value of a horse than blanket upon the market, that a good long tail and flowing mane. They are evidences of stamina and endurance and other indicate poor breeding.

* * *

Horses are shod in Spain without the application of nails, and very few horses shoeing there have pulleys or forges in their shops. They also make their shoes without the aid of fires, a fact largely due to the pure, soft, ductile iron primarily manufactured with wood and charcoal.

* * *

The first three years make the framework of the colt. Whether that framework be large or small depends upon two things—the breed and the feed. If the breed is large the colt when reared will have the large frame, but if food of sufficient quantity and of the right quality is withheld, nature begins at once to contract the frame to suit the feed. The weaning colt should have four quarts of oats every day. The yearling should have as much and the 2-year-old more, if it is desired to make heavy weights and produce a horse that will sell well, and all this in addition to all the hay and grass it will eat.

* * *

For horses of 1,100 pounds weight, and with well-shaped, upright feet, the fore shoes should weigh about one pound each, and the hind ones twelve ounces. If four ounces are added to each shoe, it is see what a difference it will make. In plowing, cultivating, mowing, reaping, and many other farm operations, a horse will walk from ten to twenty miles a day and advance about four feet at each step. At each step the horse lifts a half pound, equal to two tons in 800 pounds in every mile, in a day's work of fifteen miles, the horse would lift 24,000 pounds extra, or nearly two tons. If the force required to lift this two tons of iron could be expended in the work the horse is doing, much more could be accomplished. In the hands of these latter a many wonder that when young horses begin to wear shoes, they soon grow leg-weary, have their steps shortened, and acquire a slower walking gait.

* * *

When a horse is sold we sell three things: feed, care and skill. The first two every farmer furnishes, but skill is never possessed by the indifferent breeder, still it is the measure of our success. It costs as much to raise a $100 horse as one worth $500, but the skill which costs little or nothing brings the extra $400, which is mostly profit. More intelligence is needed to make breeding profitable. How shall we acquire this knowledge? Learn all you can from successful horsemen; read papers and books pertaining to the horse business; make a science of it. Persistent painstaking and study will bring success. The successful breeder must be a student, and he can never exhaust the subject. There is money in breeding pure horses of any kind.

THE BOND OF LANGUAGE.

English a Hundred Years Hence Will Be Universally Spoken.

Robert Johnson, director of the Colonial College, London, has been making this prophecy about the English race:

"Looking forward but a few short years, is not the following a probable forecast? Can we not see the great English family occupying the whole of North America, Australia, New Zealand, a great part of South Africa, and many other parts of the world as well? In America, Canada and the United States, hand joined in hand, command alike the Atlantic and Pacific. The United States of Australia and New Zealand and the United States of South Africa command the Indian and Southern seas, while all are united in a firm and inalienable alliance with the motherland from which they sprang, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

"The activity of the great English-speaking family throughout the world is immense, and is spreading with an ever-increasing rapidity. But great as it is now, it will be incomparably greater in that future time when America shall have reached an advanced stage of development, and shall find it necessary to obtain employment for her energies in all remote parts of the world. In America, within 200 years, we shall have 500,000,000 of people speaking the English language. Long before that time that language will have gained so much over every other as to be practically the one language of the world. The commercial energy of the race, emanating then far chiefly from England, is carrying the language and planting it everywhere; but the time will come when the United States will be the head and source of this species of conquest.

"History proves that language is the great bond among men. It acts in motion forces that triumph over differences of situation and distinctions of race; it endures, through progress of time, the most diverse elements of population into homogeneous conditions and relations. One hundred years hence the man who would be a citizen of the world must know English; culture and business will not be possible without it. The language will spread everywhere among people of intelligence and commercial activity, and will be universally used among those who are fixed and provincial in their ways, have little or no intercourse with the world and are quite unprogressive. The spread of the language world-wide will, moreover, create an alliance among men stronger than any bond of international treaties. Wars between peoples speaking the same language are not impossible, but they are rare, and the interests of commerce, and feelings of kinship that language creates, will make them rarer. The civil wars in England and our own civil war do not contradict the position, because these wars were incidents in the evolution of the super life of nations with each other.—Portland Oregonian.

No Apology Necessary.

"No," said the housemaid, "I don't apologize to a man when I throw a bucket of water down the front steps to wash 'em, and he comes along and gets drenched. I'm quiet enough, but I've found there's nothing you can say to a man will satisfy him."

C. A. Barrington, Engineer and General Smith, Sydney, Australia, writes: "August Flower has effected a complete cure in my case. It acted like a miracle."

Gen. Geneo Cornith, Miss., writes: "I consider your August Flower the best remedy in the world for Dyspepsia. I was almost beat with that disease, but used several bottles of August Flower, and now consider myself a well man. I sincerely recommend this medicine to suffering humanity the world over."
