VIENNA NEWSPAPER SAYS PEACE TERMS ARE UNACCEPTABLE

Opinion Is, However, That Austria Will Not Decline to Sign.

NEW YORK, June 4.—The Associated Press tonight issues the following review of the international situation:

Like the German Government, the Austrian Government is said to be dissatisfied with the peace terms of the Allied and associated powers, which are declared by one of the responsible newspapers of Vienna to be unacceptable.

Unlike the German populace at large, however, the Austrian people apparently are apathetic, having expected no easy terms, and are willing, even anxious, to accept the conditions as laid down, and thus bring peace to the sorely stricken former empire, which is rendered by the treaty virtually an inland state of small territorial proportions. Nevertheless, the general opinion among the Austrians seems that the terms are based on might, and not on President Wilson's fourteen points.

Ministers Caught Housebreaking at Goderich Session

Several Got Lost After Night Meeting—Doors Were Locked.

GODERICH, June 4.—A great deal of amusement was created here when it was learned that Rev. J. E. Holmes, the president, and a large number of his associates of the stationing committee were unable to find their way to the Sunset Hotel after a protracted night session.

Two others were in a still greater predicament, when they were caught in the act of house-breaking. Their excuse was that all the doors were locked. It is rumored that "Brother" Holmes will be asked to explain at the first meeting of the conference.

ADVOCATE INDEPENDENCE.

Paris, June 5.—A deputation of eight members of the Nationalist party in South Africa called upon Premier Lloyd George today. Their call was in advocacy of the independence of the Union of South Africa.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

ADELE GARRISON'S NEW PHASE OF

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

The Words Madge and Dicky Overheard.

Every word of Milly Stockbridge's heartless give at her husband's lameness came distinctly to us. Fortunately the orchestra was making so much noise that I don't think the other guests of the cafe understood what she said even if they heard her. But she was facing our table as she spoke, and we could not help being unwilling auditors of her vulgar cruelty.

To all appearances her husband had not heard her. Not a facial muscle changed, and as for his pallor, it could not have been more pronounced than it had been when he entered the cafe. But there came a simultaneous low protest from his wife's relatives, to which she at once made a vixenish reply.

"Oh, you all make me tired!" she snapped. "It's Milly, how can you?" and Milly, how do you? to say nothing of your favorite refrain—'Milly, you ought to be ashamed of yourself!' I tell you I'm sick of the whole business and all of you. Some day I'm going to beat it to the other world by the quickest route, and I don't want any of you snivelling around me, either.

"I don't care what I find on the other side, it can't be worse than what I endure here every day. Just look at everyone of you now, for instance. You know how faint I always am after a long ride, yet not one of you has asked me yet anything about my order. I might starve to death for all any of you care."

Held in Subjection.

The orchestra ceased suddenly, and the last words sounded clearly through the room. Every head was turned toward the Stockbridge table, but to my surprise Milly Stockbridge was clever enough to force a laugh and say in a milder though still petulant tone:

"I tell you, if you don't hurry up and order I shall starve to death."

Her elder sister, a dark, slender woman, with a tired, sensitive face, took up the menu card, glanced over it hurriedly.

"The lobster is said to be very nice here, Milly," she ventured timidly.

"No doubt," her sister returned capriciously. "Things are always said to be nice about these new places. Just wait a few weeks till they get their patrons well hooked. Then you'll see how they'll sting you."

"Would you rather have something else, Milly?" her mother asked nervously. It was plainly to be seen that that the whole family were held in subjection by the neurotic woman's vagaries.

"Oh, Dicky, Don't!"

"Haven't you a tongue in your head?" Milly Stockbridge turned impatiently upon her husband. "You're the one that suggested this hole, now suppose you demonstrate what it's good for."

"Would you like me to order for you?" Kenneth Stockbridge's voice was calmly courteous, though there was an infinite weariness in its tones.

"I know what I'd order for her if she belonged to me," Dicky muttered viciously to the rest of us. "A nice stiff dose of rough on rats. I had no idea from talking with the lady the other evening that she was a proposition like this. By George, if ever a man was justified in committing murder that man is. If I were on a jury, I'd acquit him if he boiled her in oil."

"Oh, Dicky, don't!" I said nervously. I couldn't help the exclamation. I felt chilled to the marrow at the vision called up by my husband's morbidly jesting words.

"What's the matter?" my husband looked over at me teasingly. "Didn't know you had such a blood-thirsty wretch for a husband, did you? Well, I give you fair warning, if ever you do develop symptoms of emulating that female at the next table I shall act immediately and without mercy. Just listen to her, will you?"

There was no need of the injunction. Indeed, we could do nothing else, save obey, so strident and compelling were her tones.

"Aha. I've just caught on!" she shrilled. "I wondered why you were so anxious to come here. I should think you'd see enough of that woman at school every day without trailing her here."

COUSIN BRUIN'S CATCH.

Cousin Bruin's way of catching a frog was to suddenly thrust out his huge paw, strike like lightning, and throw the frog on the bank, some feet from where he had been struck.

But this time, when Jimmy Coon thought he was helping, he just made Cousin Bruin nervous. When he planned to strike Mr. Jeremiah Bullfrog, Mr. Frog was a bit nervous too, and prepared to jump quicker than usual, or Cousin Bruin was a second too slow, for when the great moment came and his lightning stroke was made, Mr. Jeremiah Bullfrog had jumped first, and he went into the pond with a splash, head first. Mrs. Sally Bullfrog jumped at the very same minute, and all of the orchestra, too, and you would have thought they had all had intensive training for weeks, to jump so exactly at the same time.

And what a big splash it made! Teddy Possum and Billy Skunk, who were hiding very near the bank, got their eyes and ears full of water, and they began to sputter and to choke. Jimmy Coon was pretty wet, too. And what was Cousin Bruin doing?

The very next instant another mighty splash was heard, and Cousin Bruin had jumped right in after that orchestra. It was Mr. Bullfrog who made him so angry, and he thought it was disgusting that Mr. Bullfrog should play him such a low trick, and not wait to be properly caught, according to the regular bear way of catching frogs ever since Murmuring Brook ran into Silver Pond.

And what do you think? Was Mr. Jeremiah Bullfrog caught or Mrs. Sally, or any of that orchestra? Not at all. They were all safe and sound, and Cousin Bruin had to swim to shore.

Mrs. Sally Bullfrog jumped at the very same minute, and all of the orchestra, too.

When Cousin Bruin jumped into that pond after Mr. Jeremiah the water splashed twenty feet, and what do you think became of Teddy Possum and Bobby Skunk? If they were wet through when the whole orchestra jumped in, they were nearly drowned when Cousin Bruin made such a splash, nearly drowned. But do you think they made a word of complaint when Cousin Bruin came out dripping on the bank? Not one single groan did they make, and Teddy Possum was mad enough to eat nails, but he said, "Cousin Bruin, that is all right; I do not mind getting wet at all."

Little Peter Rabbit had to come out of the bushes and wipe the water out of their eyes and help dry their fur coats.

To-morrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kamble

FRIDAY, JUNE 6.

The sidereal influences for this day are operating powerfully for success, prosperity and advantage in many ways, but certain figures warn against law, disputes, quarrels, accidents or rash or impetuous actions. With these tendencies well under control there is every prospect of benefit, gain, pleasure and satisfaction both in business and domestic, social and affectional matters. As regards the latter, engagements and matrimony are fostered. Also there should be advantage from associations with elderly persons and long-established institutions.

Those whose birthday it is should have a happy, pleasant and prosperous year, but should avoid law, quarrels and accidents. A child born on this day will be artistic, affectionate, but may be indiscreet in speech, given to argument, yet will be successful in life.
