THE COMET COMING CLOSER.

Now It Can be Seen With the Naked Eye—Shall We Get a "Swish" With Its Tail?

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—The comet is coming nearer the earth and is now double the size it was when first discovered. It occupies thirteen minutes of the arc of which it at first sight occupied only five. Prof. Pickering so informed a reporter who questioned him about the new wanderer. He said it had been photographed several times nightly, but these photographs, when shown to the reporter, looked like mere black dots on the negative glass, surrounded by a fainter brownish hand.

The fact that the comet is headed almost directly this way is sufficient explanation why only the head can be seen. The general opinion is that the comet is becoming fainter, its light more diffusive; in fact, that it is scattering. This may be in part caused by its nearing the sun.

Prof. Pickering, on being asked if he had yet been able to make an estimate as to how near the earth it would come, which question also involved another, as to when it would turn in its path around the sun, replied that its orbit could not yet be estimated.

No computations have been made here, for as yet not enough of its arc has been revealed. The comet is now visible to the naked eye in the constellation Andromeda. With a good glass the sight is very good.

WILL THE EARTH BE ITS BACKSTOP.

DETROIT, Nov. 20.—"Comet No. 6, which is now approaching the earth, will, without doubt, be the most remarkable phenomenon in its line that this generation has ever witnessed," said E. O. Cartwright the Detroit astronomer, yesterday. "The comet is easily seen without optical aid. It is just now situated in the constellation of Andromeda, a little to the southwest of the great Nebula—about a degree and a half. The constellation comes to the meridian about 10 o'clock, when the comet can be observed as a faint nebulous mass, a little south of the zenith. In the course of a week or ten days it will have grown so bright as to attract universal attention, and from then until it encounters the orbit of the earth its increase in size and brightness can be marked night after night. About Nov. 27 the comet and the earth will occupy about the same place, when the chances are that the earth may become submerged in the tail, but without serious results to either. The phenomenon will be an interesting one to the astronomers, for if there is ever to be an opportunity when the astronomers will be able to solve that great mystery, the composition of a comet's tail, it strikes me that this will be their opportunity."

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE CELESTIAL VISITOR.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 20.—Calculations made by the Dudley Observatory by Prof. Lewis Boss indicate clearly that the Holmes comet is not identical with the comet of Biela, and that it will not come near the earth. A week ago the comet had almost exactly the position which Biela's comet would have had if it had been seen coming on its accustomed track. The Holmes comet also appeared to be moving across the face of the sky in nearly the same direction that Biela's comet would have moved had it returned to view at this time. But with the lapse of time through exact observations the motion of the Holmes comet appears to be inconsistent with the idea that it is identical with Biela's. The difference of motion is not great, but it is enough. A slightest deviation in the accuracy of observations changes the computed position of the comet in space by enormous intervals. Weeks must elapse before reliable results can be obtained. By one calculation the distance of the comet comes out greater than 200,000,000 miles; on the second the distance appears to be about 150,000,000. While these figures are liable to be very greatly modified hereafter there appears to be every probability that the Holmes comet is very far beyond the orbit of the comet of Biela. It also appears almost certain that the distance of the Holmes comet from the earth is increasing rather than diminishing. Why it was not discovered weeks or months ago is a mystery, for it should have been brighter in October than it now is. The ascertained facts in regard to this comet will cause a collapse of public interest in its future, but to astronomers it will continue to be of great interest since its presents problems of much interest, both from the mathematical and physical point of view.
