some six or seven hundred dollars for the man who employed him as a clerk. His employer failed, and French was compelled to pay the amount for which he was bound. This reduced him, as he pretended to poverty, and his friends were applied to for aid in his behalf. The Lehigh Coal Company took him into its employ for a time as a clerk, paying him moderate wages, and afterwards furnishing him with a house rent free. Two friends paid him each 25 cents per week, and the Overseers of the Poor allowed him fifty cents more, to defray the expences of himself and wife. A little more than a year ago, he came to this city to collect a small debt, and during his stay was charitably entertained by the friend who tells us the story. He professed to be very low spirited, and used to mourn piteously over the unfortunate circumstances which had reduced him, as he pretended, to poverty. A short time since he died, when it appeared that he was worth upwards of $30,000, and had pretended to be poor in order to gratify a miserly disposition.

Make Ready.—We understand that orders have been received by the Ordnance Department, for a rigid inspection of the state of the powder in the various magazines—and that a board of survey is now being held upon this munition of war, every barrel of which is carefully examined.—Halifax Times.

United States Senate.—Mr. Hannegan in offering his resolutions, and in answer to Mr. Calhoun's pacific speech, said—"Now, if the adoption of the resolutions, which contained immutable principles of truth, should bring war on us, let war come. What American was there, for fear of war, who would hesitate to declare the truth in this chamber? He was for peace too; he shrunk from the thought of war as much as could the senator from south Carolina. He loved peace; but if it were only to be maintained by degrading and dishonorable terms, war, even of extermination, would be far preferable. The senator spoke of war ensuing by the adoption of the resolutions, which could only be settled by arbitration at the cannon's mouth. He (Mr H) proclaimed if war with Great Britain arose, he for one, wished never to see it settled by arbitration, and we arbitrate it ourselves, and at the cannon's mouth dictated the terms of peace. The senator said, or implied, that by the course we are pursuing or by the course which he (Mr. H.) pursued, we are to be plunged rashly into war. If it was rashness in the representatives of the people, to assert the rights of the country and if the rashness should produce war, and for which we should be held responsible, he, for one, did not fear the responsibility. * * * He never would consent to a surrender of any portion of the country north of 49, not one foot, by treaty or otherwise, under 54° 40.

Mr. Calhoun—

The vote on these resolutions would draw a broad line, which could not be misunderstood, between those who were in favour of a settlement of this question by an appeal to arms, and those who were favorable to a more pacific course. He was in favour of a pacific course—if possible, by negociation, and under this impression he had a series of resolutions, asserting opposite principles from those of the Senator from Indiana, which he proposed to move as an amendment, and that they be printed for the use of the Senate. He took the occasion to show the course which he should pursue. He was for peace, if it could be honorably preserved. He was in favour of adjustment by negotiation, if it could be settled by negociation. If it could not be adjusted by negociation, he was in favour of such a course as shall throw the onus of war from our shoulders to those of Great Britain. He approved of the course of the administration in offering to adjust the question on the parallel of forty-nine degrees, under all the circumstances; for peace, if peace can be honourably preserved. If peace cannot be preserved, and if we are to have a war he would never be found antagonistic to our country. Even if an improper course should produce war, when a different one would preserve peace, still he would not hesitate to take part with America, his country. The war would be one of no ordinary character; and while he gave every support to it, he would hold these responsible who rashly rushed into it. He hoped, whatever opinion may have been heretofore entertained, that the question would be discussed in the calmest manner, when fully understood. If war could be averted, it should be done but if war should ensue he trusted we would be united as one man.

John, N.B. with timber water logged; took off the crew, 33 in number; the barque was full of water, fore and mizzenmast gone, and main topmast off the cap; the cabin and forecastle were entirely washed away and the whole ship's company were living in the long boat. At 4 p. m. we had succeeded in getting all the crew on board, half of them disabled, and saved most of their clothing. We left the wreck in a sinking condition. On the 26th, at night, standing to the westward, under double reefed topsails, wind N.N.W., came in contact with a brig on the opposite tack, struck us in the lee gangway, and carried away her bowsprit. We hailed to know if she wanted any assistance, the reply was no.—Did not learn her name.

Barque Johann George, at New York from Bremen, reports that on the 3d December, lat. 46. long. 32, passed barque Barbadoes, of London, G. Brig Yucatan, from St. John N.B. for Philadelphia, with plaster and laths, went ashore on Black Ditch Bar, opposite Port Penn, previous to 26th Dec. Two attempts had been made to go to her from Port Penn, but did not succeed on account of the heavy ice.

Put into Margaret's Bay, (N S.) 5th Dec. brig Deveron, Paterson, of Newcastle, 70 days from Liverpool, for St. John—short of provision.

Loss of the Laurel.—We have seen Mr. Dennis Glynn the pilot who took down the Laurel who has furnished us with the following particulars of her shipwreck, &c.—Quebec Gazette.

The Laurel left Quebec with a fair wind on Saturday morning the 28th ult.,—she could not leave on Friday as it was impossible to set her fore-topsail, and the pilot wished to have her sails manageable before starting,—the weather at the time being thick and when off the Quarantine Ground she was under full canvass. She passed six or seven sail, from Quebec before she left, at anchor off Crane Island, and 8 o'clock the same night got through the Traverse. At ten. p. m., she fell in with ice off Cape Devlin. There being a stiff breeze at the time, and the brig under full sail she broke through the ice and reached Hare Island at midnight. She was then jammed in among the ice, on the flood tide—got under weigh at 3, a. m., on Sunday. A bark at this time close by the island—all but on shore—strove to get under weigh but could not. She was taken up by the ice and was out of sight the same evening.

The Laurel let go her anchor off Cacouna and veered away 90 fathoms of cable. Large sheets of ice now came athwart of her and she drove with them, nearly broadside on. This was about 2 p.m. the Universe was in the ice with her, and about this hour sunk alongside; the crew left in two boats half an hour before she went down. All hands were now employed forward, with studding sail booms, breaking the ice that the vessel might now drive. When the ebb tide came away on Sunday night she drove away before it, anchor and all, on to the body of Green island—all sails set during this time. About six o'clock they had to slip, thinking she would roll over with the jamming of the ice; the wind about s.s.e., light air. Got past Green Island about midnight, through the ice, from which she got clear in about two hours afterwards, but subsequently fell in with, but avoided large fields of ice. A strong breeze from the s.e., with thick weather, sprung up—nothing could be seen from the ship—carried on until 7 a.m. on Monday, when the wind chopped round to the eastward blowing heavy. Shortened sail. Reached Bic by 1, p.m., got the ship under double reefed topsails—wind round to the s.e., blowing hard, much ice which nearly cut through her bow. This was the third day, and all hands had been employed night and day. Coupled with this exhaustion some of them were frozen so that it became necessary to wear ship, they were utterly incompetent to discharge the needed duties; hardship had worn them out. She squared away under bare poles to save life and property, about half past 3, p.m., a furious gale blowing, so thick could not see her whole length, and at a quarter to 6 she struck on the east end of Green Island; the sea made a clear breach over her carrying with it large pieces of ice. To ease the hull, as she lifted and pitched so heavy (it was thought she would each moment have gone to pieces) the weather rigging was cut away, and the mast went by the board. The pilot's boat was carried away from the quarter davits, the windlass went over the bows.

Next morning the two boats were launched, and with difficulty all hands landed through the breakers.

Most of the crew have their hands and feet severely frost bitten; they remain at the Light-House Capt. Knarston remains by the wreck. The Laurel will in all probability remain where she now lies throughout the winter.

Mr. Glynn left Green Island on Thursday last, and arrived here yesterday afternoon, having been six days on his way up, owing to the state of the roads. He speaks of the Captain and crew in the highest terms; he represents them to be in the fullest sense of the term thorough bred British sailors—clinging to their duty despite of peril and intense bodily suffering, which will perhaps be remembered by some to the end of their days.
