JOHN MACDONALD & CO.

A Visit to Their Warehouse on Front and Wellington Streets, Toronto.

In to-day's issue of the ADVERTISER, on page 7, their advertisement appears, giving a partial list of the articles shown in each department and also a cordial invitation to buyers to visit their warehouses.

The completion of the important changes and alterations in the arrangement of departments forms a fitting occasion for a short resume of the career and characteristics of one of the most popular and progressive wholesale houses in the Dominion. Founded over 40 years ago, the business early attracted the attention of the trade by the efficient manner in which the wants of the trade were catered for, and also by the activity with which the business was pushed in the entire Dominion. The early prosperity and rapid progress of the firm was certainly due to the business energy and acumen of the late Hon. John Macdonald. The members of the firm at present are John K. Macdonald, Paul Campbell and James Fraser Macdonald, men who are well known for their sterling qualities and energy, and who are maintaining the enterprise and prestige of their predecessor, to which we have above referred. A brief survey of the warehouses and departments will give some idea of this "grand old house." Passing through the Wellington street entrance to the first floor and stepping on to the hydraulic hoist, we are soon "rising in the world." Arrived at the top or fifth floor, which is flooded with light on every side, we find ourselves in the carpet department, which is the largest of its kind in the Dominion; here are all the newest designs and latest colorings in Brussels, tapestry, wool and hemp carpets, all sizes and qualities of mats and rugs, artistic designs and colorings in piano and table coverings, all widths and patterns in oilcloths in linoleums, magnificent lace and other material in curtains, comfortable-looking bedspreads and quilts and a variety of other house furnishings. The fourth floor, to which we now descend, is occupied by the gents' furnishings department on the left wing, and the haberdashery on the right. In the gents' furnishings department are exhibited everything that a man could desire in underwear, shirts, braces, ties, handkerchiefs, cuffs, collars, umbrellas, rubber goods, etc., etc. In the haberdashery department its stock includes everything which has any apology for coming under the heading of haberdashery. To refer to its multitudinous details is, of course, impracticable; its main features are good selections and value in the medium to best qualities.

The silk and dress department occupies all the third floor, and is one of the most important. At present the stock of silks is replete with all the current novelties and standard makes, both in black and colored sections. Ribbons in staple lines occupy a unique position for the care in selection and value therein offered. Velvets, satins and plushes in all qualities and shades. Dress goods contain the pick of the products of the looms of Britain and the European continent. In this department are also shown children's, misses' and lad
