SEWAGE AND SEWERAGE.

Editor World: As I am more interested in seeing the city kept clean than I am in getting up a reputation for facetiousness, kindly allow me space to make my position so clear that even Mr. McDougall will not misunderstand it. I state it in this categorical way:

1. I believe that a trunk sewer from west to east is an absolute necessity, and that such a sewer ought to be low enough down the city front to intercept all the sewage if such a scheme is feasible. I never intended it to be understood that I consider a trunk sewer useless unless it runs along the water level or below it; I merely pointed out that some of the objections to such a trunk sewer as Mr. Phipps advocates lie against one constructed in any other way.

2. Possibly it might be found advantageous to have a second trunk sewer across the city, say at Gerrard street, in order (1) to lessen the absolutely necessary capacity of the one along the city front, and (2) to increase the efficiency of the Don as a means of discharging the filth of the city into the lake. If all the water distributed through the upper part of the city, together with the rainfall of the same area, were turned into the Don at Gerrard street the stream from that point to its mouth would be kept in a state of artificial freshet.

3. Whether the sewage of the city is conveyed into the Don or not, the diversion of that river into the lake is an absolute sanitary necessity, as any one can ascertain by rowing up it. If there were no other filth poured through the river than the soakage from even 400 farms, the eastern end of the bay would become on the completion of the breakwater a filthy, because a stagnant pool. Close observers are well aware that the stoppage of the circulation of water be ween Ashbridge's bay and the harbor by the construction of the eastern breakwater has already caused a sensible deterioration of the water around the mouth of the Don.

4. The diversion of the river to the open lake by means of a continuation of the present cut through the marsh would afford a means of draining the great east end cattle feeding establishments. It would be quite reasonable and proper to ask the proprietors to drain into the Don if that stream did not flow into the harbor. If all this local filth is not carried off in this way, what is to be done with it?

5. I do not see any reason to believe that the Don, if forced out of its present channel into a cut across the marsh to the open lake, would not keep itself clear by "scouring," even if the current were not confined by sheet piling. The short cut has not yet filled up, though it has been several years in existence, without any current to scour it.

6. It is frequently objected to this way of disposing of our sewage, that it would contaminate the source of our water supply. If Mr. McDougall had ever heard of this objection, my reference to eastern storms would have been intelligible to him, and he would not have been tempted to let us know that he had read at least one of Horace's poems. Eminent sanitary authorities tell us that sewage rapidly becomes comparatively innocuous if the water diluting it is kept in constant agitation. My contention is, that when there is a westerly wind, or no wind at all, the current of the St. Lawrence will keep the sewage away from the lake end of the water supply pipe, and that when an easterly storm tends to drive the sewage up to that point the excessive agitation of the water which such a storm produces will prevent it from doing any perceptible injury. After taking water for years from the bay, contaminated as it is by the inflow of all the filth from both the city and the Don, we have little reason to fear that any bad result will follow the diversion of the whole of it into the open lake three miles or more below the end of the pipe.

I notice that Mr. Frank Turner, whose eminence as a civil engineer is beyond question, in a letter in to-day's Mail, speaks somewhat impatiently of those who are urging the city council to take up promptly this question of the final disposition of our sewage. With all deference to his professional status, I cannot but regard his protest as less creditable to him than would have been a course similar to that taken by Mr. John Turner in going before a committee of the city council to advocate immediate action. The latter is not now in public life, and as he is not an engineer he cannot be suspected of having taken the question up from any motive of self-interest except such as should prompt all who have the good of the city at heart to second his efforts. It is not surprising that the city council should be reluctant to undertake so costly a work, but the best way to overcome the reluctance is to show that the people are in earnest in the matter. And there is much need that they should be so if Toronto is to remain even comparatively uninjured by the cholera and smallpox epidemics that now threaten her, not to mention the various zymotic diseases which, like the poor, we have always with us.

Unharmed by Thronging Sharks.

Trinidad Letter to the Pittsburg Dispatch.

When a whale is captured off the Bocas, the blowing of horns heralds its approach to one of the whaling stations in the island of the Bocas. We at once determined to follow the whaling boat, which we soon saw rounding a point, rowed by eight vigorous whalemen and towing a huge, shapeless mass. The capture of a whale off the coast of Trinidad is altogether different from an occurrence of the same kind in northern and arctic regions, owing to the swarming of countless sharks about the defunct monster and their ferocious attacks on his carcass. We followed in the wake of the whaleboat and quite close to the whale. Already the sharks, with an instinct rivaling that of the carrion birds, were gathering round their prey, increasing in numbers every moment. We reached Monos, another island in the Bocas, and there at the whaling station, situated at a flat point on shallow water, the lifeless whale was hauled in close to the shore. Now began the work of cutting up the whale and carrying the blubber masses to the caldrons. At this stage the sharks actually grew frantic, and would jump out of the water to seize on some piece of blubber they thought within their reach: These otherwise dangerous fishes are, on an occasion of this kind, perfectly harmless to man, and this is well known to the whalemen. One of them, having dropped his knife in the water, dived to recover it in the shallow water, and was left unmolested by the swarming monsters, which he almost touched at every moment. Numbers of sharks are also harpooned with the greatest facility on these occasions, and the oil which is obtained from their livers is said to be superior to cod liver oil in therapeutic properties.

A Corner in Capri Girls.

Rome Letter to Paris Register.

It has become very common for American and English artists to fall captive to the charms of dark eyed Capri maidens, and within a few years some ten or twelve have married their models, till, at last, to marry an artist has come to be regarded by a pretty Capri as her manifest destiny, and it is somewhat difficult to procure a model otherwise than by marrying her. Last year an artist saw a beautiful Capriote, with her mother, carrying stones on her head for the use of wall-makers. She was just suited for the picture the painter had in hand. He found by inquiry that she and her mother received exactly a franc and a half a piece for carrying their stone burden from morning till night. It seemed a wretched business, than which anything would be better. He offered the girl ten francs a day to come and sit for him as a model. She coyly refused. He thought she might dislike to come without her mother, so he proposed to hire the mother also. Not at all. He was delicately informed that the only way to secure the model would be to marry her. The case was not desperate enough for that, and the fair Capriote goes on with her stone carrying, pending the arrival of a more susceptible artist.

—Orpha M. Hodge, Battle Creek, Mich., writes: I upset a tea kettle of boiling hot water on my hand. I at once applied Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, and the effect was to immediately allay the pain. I was cured in three days.

An Allegory.

From the Chicago News.

A charming little Lie approached the old showman.

"Mr. Barnum, can you give me anything to do this season?"

"I don't know. You're rather an interesting looking little fellow. Sit down and wait till the agent of the associated press comes up for the particulars of Jumbo's death. May be between us we can give you a job."

That night the little Lie was set at work, and next morning all the papers told how Jumbo was killed while valiantly trying to save the baby elephant Tom Thumb.

—A lady writes: "I was enabled to remove the corns, root and branch, by the use of Holloway's Corn Cure." Others who have tried it have the same experience.

Making a Holy War Against Cholera.

From the London Standard.

The inhabitants of Tafalla tried a novel preventive against cholera. One morning, about the middle of August, just after daybreak, all the faithful assembled in the principal church and in the street outside. The church was brilliantly illuminated, a high mass was sung and then a stately procession was formed in which all classes took part. The priests were preceded by choristers, by children of both sexes, nuns and Capuchin friars, and the local authorities, civil guards and soldiers added to the splendor of the singular ceremony. The fifteen banners representing the fifteen Mysteries of the holy rosary were carried by wealthy residents, and the banner of the town council and the image of St. Sebastian, patron saint of the district, were also borne aloft, and more than 2000 persons followed, carrying tapers and candles lighted and burning away. The most curious feature of the procession was the holy wax, 2500 metres of which were used to make a cordon, which the priests placed around Tafalla, across roads, fields and gardens, to keep away the dreaded plague. Some unbelieving hand must have cut this barrier, for the cholera has appeared.

Novel Dinner-Table Notions

From the Queen.

The fashion of shortening dinners is a reasonable one, and one that emanates from high quarters, as H. R. H. the Prince of Wales sets his face against the absurdly long dinners which a few years ago were customary. With the return of hot weather cold entrees have again made their appearance, and at many dinners this season the second fish has been served cold. Two entrees are as much as are now generally handed, and one of these is usually cold. Ris de veau a la Cardinal is a delicious and uncommon way of cooking sweet bread. Cold dishes, however, do not find so much favor with the gentlemen as with the ladies, the former having a strong predilection for everything hot at a dinner. Many people copy our French neighbors, and put the piece de resistance after the fish, and it is an arrangement that has its merits. Certainly, after a series of the stereotyped dinners, which one gets repeated ad finitum, only varied by the good or bad way in which they are cooked and served, a departure from the monotonous routine has its charms, even if the new way is not in every respect a decided improvement.

There has not been much that is new in menu cards; a card folded like an envelope, with a foreign stamp in the corner and the name of the guest where the address should be put, to answer as the name card, and with the dinner printed on the inner side, or a card with a back to it like an easel, being among the newest. But plain white cards with a gilt edge, the menu simply printed in black, are decidedly the best style, and are most used at the best houses.

The flower baskets have not been generally a success; they have had far too many flowers crowded into them, and their size, being gigantic, prevents people seeing their opposite neighbor. A dinner table decorated with these large baskets of flowers is not half so pleasing in effect as the low masses of ferns and flowers that people still adhere to, and owing to the difficulty of arranging flowers in these baskets they look heavy and overcrowded, and show to little advantage.

—Mr. John Anderson, Grassmere, Ont., writes: "The Vegetable Discovery you sent me is all gone, and I am glad to say that it has greatly benefited those who have used it. One man in particular says it has made him a new man, and he cannot say too much for its cleansing and curative qualities."

By any Other Name Would Sound as Sweet.

From the New York Commercial Advertiser.

The earliest use of the word "pianoforte," so far as is known, was in a playbill dated May 16, 1761. The piece announced was the "Beggar's Opera." The bill read: "Miss Buckler will sing a song from Judith, accompanied by Mr Dibdin upon a new instrument called 'pianoforte.'"

—Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is prepared from drugs known to the profession as thoroughly reliable for the cure of cholera, dysentery, diarrhœa, griping pains and summer complaints. It has been used successfully by medical practitioners for a number of years with gratifying results. If suffering from any summer complaint it is just the medicine that will cure you. Try a bottle. It sells for 25 cents.

—The success attending my improvement in silk and pull over hats by using the patent steel wire in the brim shows that the hat-wearer appreciates a light weight hat when it ensures him equal durability with his heavy one, saves him many headaches and lessens his chances of being prematurely bald. STORTH, the hatter, over Corrigan's, 122 Yonge street.

—Worms derange the whole system. Mother Graves's Worm Exterminator derranges worms, and gives rest to the sufferer. It only costs twenty-five cents to try it and be convinced.

—If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and use it according to directions. It acts with wonderful rapidity in subduing that dreadful disease that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and delicate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly, and never fails to effect a thorough cure.

A Cure for Drunkenness.

—Opium, morphine and kindred habits. Valuable treatise sent free. The medicine may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, and without the knowledge of the person taking it, if so desired. Send two 3c. stamps for full particulars and testimonials of those who have been cured. Address M. V. Luban, agency, 47 Wellington street east, Toronto, Canada. ed

—West Toronto Junction is within a few minutes walk of the Union station by the trains of either the Ontario and Quebec and the Grand Trunk or the Northern. To Dyspeptics.

The most common signs of Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, are an oppression at the stomach, nausea, flatulency, water-brash, heart-burn, vomiting, loss of appetite, and constipation. Dyspeptic patients suffer untold miseries, bodily and mental. They should stimulate the digestion, and secure regular daily action of the bowels, by the use of moderate doses of Ayer's Pills.

After the bowels are regulated, one of these Pills, taken each day after dinner, is usually all that is required to complete the cure.

AYER'S PILLS are sugar-coated and purely vegetable—a pleasant, entirely safe, and reliable medicine for the cure of all disorders of the stomach and bowels. They are the best of all purgatives for family use.
