of Charlotte county, and Councillor Kelley, of St. John county. All the speakers seemed to realize that they were on dangerous ground and their addresses were marked by the care with which they avoided anything that might be regarded as party politics.

Roads Matters.

Councillor Kelley offered a series of resolutions that called for:

1. The appointment of an expert to have complete control over roadmaking in New Brunswick and give his whole time to the business.

2. The amendment of the highway act so as to provide for a system of highway patrol, the same as is maintained by the big railways.

3. That in the opinion of the Union of New Brunswick Municipalities a system of trunk roads should be established between Maine, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec.

These were all adopted.

Councillors Siddall and Stirling offered a resolution that a committee of three be appointed to meet the provincial government and discuss with them the question of establishing a system of permanent roads.

This also was adopted and Councillors Siddall, Stirling and Kelley were appointed such committee.

Councillor Siddall offered a resolution, That in the opinion of the convention eight hours should constitute a day's labor on all government work.

President Farrell showed his familiarity with the duties of a presiding officer by his decision that a resolution of such wide reaching effect should first go before the executive committee.

Councillor Siddall, while strongly endorsing the principal of his resolution, recognized the wisdom of the chair's decision and amended his proposition to be a notice of a resolution to be considered by the next convention.

Councillor Kelley had another resolution to offer, but learned wisdom from Mr. Siddall's experience and offered as a notice of motion at the next convention, a resolution that statute labor be abolished as far as possible.

Dr. Kierstead and Dr. MacLaren were made honorary members of the union and each expressed his appreciation of the honor conferred.

Votes of Thanks.

The closing hour had arrived, and votes of thanks were extended to the town of St. Stephen for its hospitality, the press for its careful attention, Ganong Bros. and the New Brunswick Telephone Company for courtesies extended.

Coun. Ganong replied for the town of St. Stephen and expressed regret that the briefness of the stay of the delegates had made impossible better entertainment. He hoped that they would return to St. Stephen when they could spend a longer time here and be given a better reception.

The convention was closed with the singing of the National Anthem and its rendition developed the fact that there were singers as well as talkers in the Union of New Brunswick Municipalities.

"I recommend also the establishment of land-mortgage banks under state charters, and the formation of co-operative mortgage-bonded societies along the lines of the Landschaften societies of Germany, provided that uniform state legislation can be secured to govern their organization and operation.

"As a later step, I favor the enactment of laws by Congress permitting the organization of national land-mortgage banks, to be operated under strict government supervision with the power to guarantee and market the guaranteed debenture bonds of the state land-mortgage banks or co-operative societies.

President Taft strongly deprecates any idea of establishing co-operative credit in the United States through the support of government subsidies.

"We must establish a credit system of, for and by the farmers of the United States," he writes.

M. SAZONOFF SEEKS BRITISH SUPPORT OF RUSSIA'S PROGRAMME

Relations of Two Powers Have Reached a Critical Phase in Far and Near East —Visit Seems Timely.

London, Oct. 18.—The visit of M. Sazonoff to London though perhaps more intimately connected with the position of affairs in the middle east than elsewhere, has fallen at a moment when the relations of the United Kingdom and Russia, not only in the near east but in the far east, have reached a critical phase.

Sir Edward Grey.

The policy of Sir Edward Grey has not given satisfaction to his own party. There can hardly be a question that if his retention of the foreign office could be subjected to a division he would only be maintained there by the Opposition vote. Even the Opposition vote would not be solidly given for him. On the question of Persia he would have to face the determined criticism of Lord Curzon, and those who think with him.

It is not, in short, his advocacy of the Russian entente so much as his policy towards Germany that has won him the Unionist support. A year ago, at the crisis of the Morocco negotiations, Mr. Lloyd George and Ramsay MacDonald made common cause with him, the one in his famous address to the London Bankers, the other in his hardly less important speech in the House of Commons. Immediately that danger was weathered, however, the Labor party made the uncompromising announcement that "Grey must go." Grey has not gone, but the foreign problem has been complicated by the conduct of Russia in northern Persia and by the realization of the Russo-Japanese agreement with respect to the far east.

All these questions have no doubt come up in the deliberations between Sir Edward Grey and M. Sazonoff and the knowledge of the former that he does not possess the confidence of his own party can scarcely have strengthened his hand.

The Near East.

In spite of all the alarmist telegrams the position in the near east is nothing like as dangerous as has been made out. The storm center just for tangled is the skein of European politics that it is distinctly to the interests of Germany and of the powers usually most opposed to her, France and the United Kingdom, that the status quo in the near east should be preserved, while Austria and Italy and the remaining power of the triple entente, Russia, hope each for great territorial gains from its destruction.

The Middle East.

Much more critical, at the moment, however, are the relation of Russia and the United Kingdom in the middle east. Sir Edward Grey has permitted Russia to assume a position in northern Persia which is very little short of annexation. The result is that the moment has been reached when Russian diplomatists cynically demand the partition of the country.

The United Kingdom may appropriate the southern zone, in any case Russia will permanently occupy its zone, and in the most casual way the Russian press explains that this is inevitable, though, as the Novoye Vremya bluntly points out: "The British people must learn to realize the simple truth that Teheran is in the Russian zone." Of course the partition of Persia would be a piece of buccaneering the moment, is not so much Constantinople as Sophia. On the decision of the Bulgarians as to their future action rests the decision of peace or war. It is not likely that it will be for war, if for no other reason than the fact that such a decision would almost inevitably bring Austria, Russia and Italy in collision.

Albania has been earmarked by both Rome and Vienna as necessary to their development, and if Turkey in Europe were at the present moment thrown into the melting pot, it is absolutely impossible to foresee what the result would be. Almost certainly Russia and Austria would come in contact, and it is difficult to see how Italy and Austria could remain at one.

The United Kingdom, as the great Muhammadan power of the world, and France, as the possessor of a vast Muhammadan empire, have a very vital, though indirect, stake in the question. M. Saxonoff must inevitably have discussed with Sir Edward Grey the attitude of Downing street toward a Russian advance upon the Dardanelles and it is not likely, although Sir Edward has agreed to most things Russia has demanded, that it would find him sympathetic on this point. So pure and simple. To be absolutely candid the United Kingdom does not want her share, and this fact may be unhesitatingly accepted for the simple reason that it is not in accordance with what she considers her best interests. If, however, Russia seizes the northern zone British influence will have to be permanently established in the southern zone.

There remains the gulf zone, which will make a very poor substitute as a buffer state for a united Persia with its southern boundaries marching with those of Afghanistan and Baluchistan. Nor is it quite certain that even the gulf zone will be left. Already the claim is being made in England that if Teheran is to be given to Russia, Isfahan, the ancient capital, must come to the United Kingdom. As Isfahan is at the edge of the Russian zone, such a partition would mean bringing the respective spheres of influence, or to put it more bluntly, the frontiers of Russia and England at last contiguous to one another in western Asia.

The member of the Persian committee who greeted M. Sazonoff on the platform at Victoria with a huge placard, announcing "Russia must evacuate Persia if she wishes for England's friendship," was expressing the feelings of a large section of his fellow-countrymen, whatever the views of the foreign office may be. The cartoonist who drew the picture of M. Sazonoff sitting under the tree in the wilderness, with Sir Edward Grey beside him, and put into his mouth the famous quatrain from Omar Khayyam:

"Here with a Loaf of Bread beneath the Bough,
A Flask of Wine, a Book of Verse—and Thou
Beside me Singing in the Wilderness—
And Wilderness is Paradise enow," summed up the situation in a way perhaps more accurate than complimentary to the foreign secretary.

The Far East.

There remains the far east, and in the land of Ah Sin there is another politician engaged in taking a hand—the Japanese Prince Katsura. Katsura is perhaps the most powerful statesman that Japan has produced. A combination of circumstances has placed in his hands an influence beyond anything ever known to Count Ito, and the whole trend of politics is daily strengthening his position and tending to establish him as the virtual ruler of the country at the present crisis.

It need not be repeated that Russia and Japan have come to terms for the present with respect to China. Russia in Mongolia, Japan in Manchuria are already engaging in strengthening their respective influences. It is their intention to repeat there what Russia has accomplished in northern Persia, and, if none of the great powers interfere, in due course Mongolia will become a Russian province, with Russian custom houses, and Manchuria a Japanese province with Japanese custom houses.

Beyond everything Japan aims at the closing of the open door, first in Manchuria and afterwards wherever it may be possible. With that calm cynicism which is so characteristic of Russian diplomacy, her late enemy has struck a bargain with her, well knowing that both of them have every intention of expelling the other, in a year or a thousand years, just as apportunity may offer.

The date of the final settlement between the two is of no particular interest to the other powers. What is of interest to them is the maintenance of the open door. If they will not permit the prejudice of the situation in Europe to create for them worse conditions in Asia, the Russo-Japanese scheme will fall to pieces, since it is at its best the application of the theory of the identity of contraries to diplomacy.

At present it is the business of Prince Katsura and M. Sazonoff to obtain the support of Sir Edward Grey, and not the least interesting feature of the Balmoral interviews will be the measure of their failure or success.
