Baseball

Minor Brown

Miner Brown, the once pitcher of the Cubs, has become a bone of contention. Manager Tinker wants him for the Cincinnati Reds, and Owner Murphy, of the Cubs does not. Meanwhile, Jack Hayden, manager of the Louisville American Association club, which present owns Brown's contract, declares that he has no idea of allowing the Canadian boxman to get away.

"Brown is not through as a pitcher," says the Louisville man. "I believe that his arm will permit him to play many games for us next season. His injured knee has mended, I understand, which will put him back on his pins as fit as a fiddle. He ought to last as a big association pitchers by a mile."

Chance in Each.

Hank O'Day is wintering in Chicago. He has received offers to umpire in the big leagues, but he is not in a hurry to make a decision. O'Day says he may take some money in a minor league club, solely for the purpose of showing that he is not a failure as a manager. O'Day is bitter in his feelings toward persons in Cincinnati who, he says, unjustly scored the handling of the Reds last season.

"I had no pitching corps at all," says O'Day, "yet I landed the Reds in fourth place. If the grand stand managers in Cincinnati will let Joe Tinker alone they may pull the Reds up nearer the top, but if Tinker doesn't get away to a flying start, as we did last season, good night."

He Wants $10,000.

James Archer, probably the best catcher in the National League, sends the following New Year's greeting to Owner Murphy of the Cubs:

"My contract for 1913 will call for $10,000 in salary, not a penny less. If I don't get this much money, the Cubs can look for another catcher, for I will retire and go into business. I'm not busted and I mean business. Come across with the $10,000 or say good-by forever!"

Murphy jocularly announces that he may send Archer a contract for $15,000, but not for a single season. Manager Evers, after Murphy received the Archer ultimatum, was called up by Murphy on the long distance 'phone, Chicago to Troy, but just what Evers advised Murphy to do remains a secret.

Diamond Sparkles.

Jimmy Callahan, the White Sox leader, has stirred up a hornets' nest in Cleveland with the odd statement that Joe Jackson bats .800 at home and .100 on the road. Callahan's assertion reflects upon the squareness of the Cleveland club's official scorer and President Somers of the Naps may ask Cal. for an explanation.

"If I had been allowed to have my own way I would not have mentioned the sale of Red Corridon," said Hugh Jennings, manager of the Detroit "Corridon, in my opinion, will make good with the Cubs. He is a great hustler and will have a fair chance in Chicago."

Back to Rochester.

New York, Dec. 31—Frank Farrell, president of the New York American League team has ordered shortstop Tommy McMillan back to Rochester and recalled Jack Martin, who was sold to Rochester in the deal. There was some dispute over the deal.

BAR ALL DIVORCED FROM AUDIENCE WITH THE POPE

Philadelphia, Dec. 30—The Vatican is barred to all divorced persons, and no audiences for them will be arranged with the Pope, according to Bishop Kennedy, rector of the American College at Rome, who is here visiting his parents in Germantown. He was intermediary between American visitors and the Pope, he said.

Under no circumstances will arrange an audience with the Pope for any divorced persons.

Acting in the capacity of the person who arranges all audiences between the Holy Father, and all Americans I have always made it a point to refuse entrance to the Vatican to any whom I knew to be divorced, and I propose to follow this custom.

Palace of Beauty Being Designed For Marchioness of Anglesey by Her Sister, Lady Diana Manners—Canadians in Old Country

(Times Special Correspondence.)

London, Dec. 19.—A huge case of presents and seasonable delicacies was sent to Ottawa for the Duke of Connaught and family. Queen Mary maintain that no plum puddings and mince pies excel those made in the royal kitchen from her own recipe, and had a good-sized slice of these toothsome delights packed.

Lady Anglesey, with the assistance of her sister, Lady Diana Manners, "house decorator and fitter in ordinary to the upper ten," as she calls herself, is sometimes playfully call her, is immersed in plans for her new house, No. 12 Grosvenor Square, which promises to be a palace of rare beauty when the time it is finished. You remember, perhaps, that Lady Diana performed the useful office for her other sister, now Lady Violet Charteris, for whom she created an exquisite blush rose room, she is starting at the floor with the faintest pink and "blushing" in their ascent till they finish a warm rose at the ceiling. Lady Diana has designed for Lady Anglesey a most charming "grey" bedroom, calculated in its quiet tones, to suggest refinement. The note of the color is taken from a piece of grey polished sycamore wood of an exquisitely soft shade. The carpet will match it exactly, and the walls will be hung with the softest grey brocade. The bed to go with this is of oxidised silver, and the ornaments on the dressing table are of grey enamel with silver inits and cut glass with silver tops. Then to avoid anything like dulness, the bed is covered with a satin eiderdown, with pink roses, and over the head there is a large painting of La France a damask roses. The electric light fittings are oxidised silver are hung with parchment shades painted with roses, and in a corner of the room is a large standard lamp of the same with a big empire shade, which looks as if it had been turned upside down, as the opening is at the top.

It is a cunning device of Lady Diana's, however, for over this large opening is a soft pink gauze, which diffuses the prettiest and most becoming light in the room. In another corner of this pretty room is a most exquisite jug and basin of Italian ruby glass, the latest extravagance among the exquisites of the day, and curiously enough, by Queen Mary, who is generally given to extravagances herself. But it possesses a quality that recommended it to her housewifely soul: it can be most carefully polished, it will show every speck, even the tiniest bit of fluff on a towel. Even the bell-pushes in the house have not been forgotten. They are gray enamel, decorated with a tiny wreath of pink roses, the "push" or "switch" as the case may be, being of mother-of-pearl.

Women's Sales

Speech recently made by high Imperial sentiment was at the Canada Club dinner last week when Col. Brown, who presided, gave an eye-note, and was followed by Sir Whitney, Hon. A. L. Sifton, Percy Walter Long, M. P., and Homar Greenwood, K. C., M. P.

Many Canadian ladies resident in London, feel that the time might come when there might be organization for women here analagous to the Canadian Club. They believe that there is valuable work for the dominion could be done through a medium of this nature considering the fact that in Canada there are so many organizations which owe their origin to Canadian women, it is rather strange that we have practically not any of this kind here.

Lord Dillon, who is to resign charge of the king's armour in the Tower of London at the end of the year, is married to a Canadian. Lady Dillon was the eldest daughter of the late Isaac Brock Stanton of Ottawa, and the marriage took place in that city, when the present holder of the title was a lieutenant of the Rifle Brigade. Lord Dillon is learned in mediaeval law, and an authority on antiques, particularly on armour and costumes. Indeed these studies are his recreations.

His contributions to archaeological and antiquarian journals have been many. As chairman of the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, he is recognized authority on art, and it is that his collection of paintings by Sir Lely and Holbein embrace the best examples of the work of the artists. Lord and Lady Dillon reside at Pitchley, Enstone, where they delight in entertaining their Canadian friends.

Another Canadian who married an English peer is Audrey, Lady Grey, who has just succeeded in her own right, on behalf of her twelve-year-old daughter, Lady Mary Frances Katherine Petre, to the Furnivall barony. Lady Petre is a daughter of Dr. William Robinson Clarke of Toronto. Another of Doctor Clarke's daughters married into the Petre family, becoming the wife of Hon. Albert Petre.

The Furnivall barony is one of the oldest in the United Kingdom, and the commissioners for privileges, giving particular attention to the question of precedence, fixed the date of creation from the year 1295.

"OLD MASTER" AN IMITATION

Rome, Dec. 30—Signor Cavenaghi, the greatest Italian authority on old paintings, has discovered that the painting attributed to Ruysdael, which was purchased by the state for $2,000, is but a clever modern imitation.
