SIX TIMES MARRIED.

The Extraordinary Marital Experiences of a Country Landlord's Daughter.

BRADFORD, Pa., Nov. 15.—Ten years ago the little tavern at Emerson's Mills, in the Pine Run lumber region, was kept by a noted character, Elias Benton. He had a very pretty daughter, named Betty. Her mother was dead, and she looked after the household affairs of the tavern. She was 16 years old, and Edward Shott, a bark contractor, young and well to do, was in love with her and wanted to marry her. Betty wanted to marry young Shott, but her father had other plans, and she was compelled to obey him. He chose for her husband a man three times her age, who owned a large pine tract in the neighborhood, a valuable property that Landlord Benton was anxious to possess. He compelled his 16-year-old daughter to marry this man, Aulds by name. He only lived 6 months, and left his young widow the pine land, which her father sold and appropriated the proceeds to his own use. You Shott had in the meantime closed out his contracts and gone away. One year after the death of her husband, young Mrs. Aulds married, entirely to spite her father, John Grover, a sawyer. He was killed in his employer's mill one month later.

The landlord's daughter was now twice a widow, although she was not yet 18 years old. Two months after her second husband's death Edward Shott returned to Emerson's Mills, and on her 18th birthday young Widow Grover, who had grown defiant of her father, married her old-time lover. The couple lived happy for a year, and one child was born. The child was not two weeks old when the father was crushed to death by a falling tree in the woods. Widowed now for the third time, the landlord's daughter mourned her third husband sincerely for two years. Then her father died.

At the age of 21 she made what was regarded as a most fortunate marriage, her fourth husband being Elmer James, a young Warren county lawyer. James turned out to be a drunkard. He abused his wife and her child so shamefully that she had no difficulty in obtaining a divorce, which was granted four months after she became Mrs. James. She remained a widow until she was 23, when she married George Rhone, a widower of 50. He was a prominent man in the locality. Before they were married a year Rhone died with the smallpox. His young wife nursed him all through the course of the dreadful disease, escaping without taking it herself. Rhone left his widow $10,000 in cash. She was then not yet 24 years old. Not long after her last husband's death she took her child and went to Ohio, where she had relatives living. This was one year ago. Last Tuesday she wrote to a friend in this city that she was to be married the next day in Covington, Ky., to a young man named Charles Green, a farmer.

THE CITY TEACHERS.

Interesting Discussion and Some New Points Regarding Their Work—Semi-Annual Meeting—Officers Elected.

The London Teachers' Association met as arranged by the Management Committee at 9 a.m. yesterday at Colborne street school, President R. M. Graham presiding. On the calling of the roll about eleven teachers were absent.

Mr. Althouse then introduced his subject of "How to Teach the Parts of Speech." This was done by a class, to which he gave simple sentences exhibiting his method. In these he plainly showed that pupils, by being asked to speak of things around them, and by comparing these things with others they met or heard, or by changing these words, could be shown that name-words or nouns could be readily found out. In the same way they could be made to distinguished other words. The words "saw" and "lies" being specially used as examples of name-words and words that tell something.

Miss Cannell then followed by showing "How to Classify These Parts," illustrating her method by examples and making her points clear by showing a change of construction. This change of construction she found to be very helpful in teaching composition, showing also the fact that these changes tend to help to form complex sentences, also complex ideas, also complex parts as subject and verb or object, i.e., simply nouns may be whole sentences. She emphasized very forcibly the thought of using special adjectives before certain nouns for sake of elegance.

Mr. McQueen then followed, continuing the same subject by taking up "Inflections of these parts of speech." He taught number first, illustrated by the sentence, "That boy obeys the teacher," for "boy" he now writes "boys", and then goes on to show other changes must be made in the sentence, simply because the subject changed extending the sentence to could to further clear up his point. The next inflexion was the tense of the verb, illustrated by the foregoing sentence. The inflection was that of degree, using illustration, "That man is wise," emphasizing wise to show degrees of wisdom. Next inflection, the possessive form of names, then the inflections, tense and number of the verb; also inflections of pronouns to show case. All these points were fully explained and illustrated by a multiplicity of examples.

The subject was discussed then at some length, the principal remarks hinging on the term clause, by Messrs. Graham, Stewart, Eckert, McQueen, Althouse and Misses Simpson, Boon and Millar, and Mr. Graham. The discussion was closed by Mr. Carson, showing that it must be proper to determine one part of speech in the way, i. e., by the use, and another word in another word by its connection with the name instead of by the use.

The afternoon session was opened by a report of the Library Committee presented by A. C. Stewart, as follows:

That immediate steps be taken by appointing a committee to secure a library and reading-room for the use of teachers of this association, and that the Board of Education be asked to contribute a limited amount towards helping to defray the expenses of such a place.

This provoked a lengthy discussion.

Miss Geeson then was introduced, and presented the result to her of a review of Col. Parker's work on "How to Study Geography." The essayist did not fully agree with all Col. Parker's ideas, inasmuch as it seemed an utter impossibility to present the earth to the ordinary mind on such a graphic or such a gigantic scale. The distribution of soils depended much on the slopes of the earth's surface; also the differences of temperature resulted from a similar cause. Parker divided the study of geography into eight divisions, somewhat similar to our system of grading at present: 1. Teach color, size, shape. 2. Teach positions of objects in or near the school. 3. Locate places in the history of Esquimaux. 4. Different forms of land as islands, capes, mountains. 5. Structure of North America in particular. 6. Structure of slopes and basins. 7. Structure of the Eastern Hemisphere. 8. Distribution of heat, cold, soils, vapor, also products and distribution of man.

Mr. R. F. Wilson then introduced the subject of literature, and in a concise manner illustrated his method by using a small portion of his class, the better to make his methods clear to the meeting, the subject used as a lesson being entitled "The Song of the Shirt." The lesson displayed the fact that the children were taught to discriminate, to criticise, to use discernment and examine very minutely every peculiar phase of the ideas contained therein.

Mr. Carson was then called and introduced his subject, "Methods." We reason inductively in four different methods, viz., by similarity, differences, residues, compounds and variation. The instance of sameness was shown that the same land that produces large trees also produces good crops of grain or other crops. The instance of differences was shown by referring to a troublesome boy who was detected simply by asking him to leave the room for a day and take a higher class, also by coming back next day when the noise that stopped while the boy was in another room again was observed to be in the room. Order and law was the cause, also the design which brought every object into existence and not chance. The same similarities and defects existed and now exist in places at great distances that exist here. We do all things according to law, or sameness, or similarity
